THIS History of Lancaster County is presented by the publishers with full confidence that the verdict of its patrons will be one of approval. We feel thus confident, because, having employed faithful and experienced writers upon the work, and having spared no necessary expense in any department or particular of its preparation, we believe we have fully accomplished the object which has been steadily kept in view from the beginning of the enterprise, viz.: to make the work as complete and accurate as possible; to produce an exhaustive and truthful narrative of events of importance or general interest which have occurred within the territory now embraced in the county of Lancaster, or in which any of its former or present inhabitants were, or have been, actors; to embody all obtainable facts worthy of mention in such a work, but to exclude everything of doubtful authenticity from the narrative, and to confine it as closely as possible to the limits of the county; mentioning no outside matters except such as could not properly be omitted, because of their close connection with the history of the region which is especially referred to.

The work embraces a general history of the county, followed by separate histories of Lancaster City and the several boroughs and townships. It is unnecessary here to give a further outline, or to recite the authorities on which the general history is based. The township histories are largely made up of accounts of pioneer settlers, and the families descended from them. In this connection, it is proper to remark that the family names of many of the pioneers and later residents of Lancaster County have been found spelled differently (and some of them in as many as four or five different ways) in the county, township, and church records, and for that reason it has often been found impossible to decide with any degree of certainty on the correct orthography, if, indeed, there is any choice as to correctness, where, as is not infrequently the case in this county, different members of the same family spell their surname variously, each in his own way. An instance of this is found in the case of one of the oldest of the Lancaster County families, different members and branches of which have spelled their name Bare, Bair, Baer, and Bear; and there are found a great number of other similar instances, which however it is not necessary to mention in detail. Under such circumstances, it cannot be regarded as a matter of surprise if the writers of the county and township histories, often finding themselves wholly at a loss to know which manner of spelling to adopt, have sometimes chosen one which may be thought incorrect by some who bear the name.

The matter of biographies, portraits, and other illustrations not immediately connected with the historical character of the work, is a feature which is sometimes made the subject of thoughtless criticism, yet the publishers believe that it should not be omitted. The work is intended to indicate, to some extent, the present development of the county, side by side with its century and a half of history, and under this view it is obvious that after the lapse of twenty, thirty, or fifty years, this very feature of the work—presenting portraits and biographical sketches of a few of the representative men of each condition of life, as well as illustrations of their homes and surroundings, giving an idea of the county as it is in the year 1883—will have become a matter of exceeding interest and importance. Time will ly place this feature in its true light, and silence all objections.

In the preparation of this work for the press, a large number of writers have been employed. For several years, Samuel Evans, Esq., of Columbia, has been engaged from time to time in collecting historical facts and data concerning Lancaster County, and the material so gathered by Mr. Evans has been used in the proper places in this work. He has also furnished for the general history of the county, the chapters relating to the Indian Occupation, Indian Traders, Pioneer Settlements, Slavery, Iron and Iron Manufacture, and Public Internal Improvements. The chapters on Topography and Agriculture were written by Simon P. Eby; on Geology by Dr. Persifer Frazer; on the erection of the county, the establishment of the county-seat, the French and Indian War, the Revolution, the War of 1812-15, the Mexican War, the County Buildings and Lands, and the Churches of the Mennonites, Dunkers, New Mennonites, River Brethren, and Amish, by Franklin Ellis; the War of the Rebellion by Dr. Thomas Cushing; the Lancaster County Civil List by A. N. Hungerford; the Bench and Bar by William Leaman; Medicine and Medical Men in Lancaster County by Dr. H. B. Stehman; the Mennonites by E. K. Martin; Tobacco Culture in Lancaster County by Frank R. Diffenderffer.

The history of Lancaster City has been gathered and written by A. N. Hungerford and Alfred Mathews; Columbia and Marietta boroughs, and the townships of Lancaster, East and West Donegal, and East and West Hempfield, by Samuel Evans; the townships of Bart, Conoy, Eden, and Sadsbury, by Dr. Thomas Cushing; the townships of Manheim and Mount Joy, and the boroughs of Mount Joy and Elizabethtown, by Alfred Mathews; the township of Warwick and the borough of Manheim, by Willis J. Wells; the township and borough of Strasburg, by H. G. Book; the township of Manor and borough of Washington, by I. S. Clare; the borough of Adamstown by Hon. E. Billingsfelt; Caernarvon township by Mrs. Martha Jenkins Nevin; Brecknock township by John B. Good; Pequea by W. H. Shaw; Elizabeth by Jacob H. Mace and E. B. Brubaker; Earl, East Earl, and West Earl, by Frank R. Diffenderffer and A. N. Hungerford; East Cocalico by Cyrus Ream; West Cocalico by Milton E. Shirk; Colerain by Annie M. Barnett; Clay by Samuel Nissly; Conestoga by Peter C. Hiller; Drumore by William Chandler; Ephrata by S. L. Fry and A. N. Hungerford; Fulton and Little Britain by John C. Lewis; East Lampeter by Frances Gibbons; West Lampeter by H. W. Miller; Leacock by W. Kennedy; Upper Leacock by R. R. Pleam; Martic by S. C. Stevenson; Paradise by Dr. A. H. Smith; Penn by Israel G. Erb; Providence by Dr. A. H. Helm; Rapho by T. H. Hershey; and Salisbury by John C. Linvill.

To those who have kindly given their aid in the collection of material for the work, we desire to express our thanks; and among these, we would mention in general the pastors, rectors, and bishops of the churches and religious districts of the county, the editors of the various journals, and the county and township officers. We are also under special obligations to the following gentlemen (and others throughout the county) for courtesies and favors extended to our historians, and for valuable information, both oral and written: George Plumer Smith, of Philadelphia; Gilbert Cope, of West Chester, Pa.; Luther Richards, William Amwegg, William A. Atlee, H. E. Slaymaker, of Lancaster City; Robert Dysart, Alexander Dysart, Dr. J. L. Ziegler, and James A. Patterson, of Mount Joy borough; B. F. Baer, of Elizabethtown; J. M. Ensminger and C. J. Mengle, of Manheim borough; Henry Shroiner, Esq., and John Miller, of Manheim; Joseph McClure, of Bart; George D. Hensel, of Eden; Samuel Slokom and Isaac Walker, of Sadsbury; and Samuel Hackenberger, of Conoy.

CHAPTER I.

TOPOGRAPHY AND GEOLOGY OF THE COUNTY.

Topography.<sup>1</sup>—In the southeastern part of the map of Pennsylvania is seen a four-sided space, shaped not unlike a boy's old-fashioned kite, with its western corner somewhat extended, and its lower point slightly flattened on the Maryland line. This represents Lancaster County, resting with its entire southwestern border against the river Susquehanna, in which it has secured from its opposite neighbor, York County, most of the islands which dot the channel of that picturesque stream. Wedged in on the east by Chester County, and abutting on the north and northeast on Dauphin, Lebanon, and Berks, it projects the apex, or what may be considered the top of the kite, into a corner between the two last-named counties. From this extreme north point to the Maryland line it is a little over forty-one miles in width, and its greatest length from east to west is about forty-five miles in a direct line, the whole comprising an area of over nine hundred and sixty square miles, or six hundred and twenty thousand acres of land.<sup>2</sup>

The interior of the county may be compared to a great basin, having an undulating surface inclining towards the south, rimmed in by hills and intersected by smaller ridges. Along its northern boundary lies the South Mountain; on the east, and projecting somewhat into the interior, is the Welsh Mountain; in the southeast is the Mine Ridge; in the south, the Octorara and Martic Hills; on the southwest, the York and River Hills; and on the extreme northwest are the hills of the Conewago. Outside the county line, towards the north and west, are the Blue Ridge and Alleghenies, which serve to break and neutralize the injurious effects of the winds of winter, and the great waves of cold that sweep periodically eastward from the Upper Mississippi and the great plains beyond.

The lesser ridges, which extend into and through different parts of the interior, generally from west to east, are broken by frequent depressions, through which the numerous streams that water the county find their way southward to the Susquehanna. The principal of these are the Conestoga, which, with its main branches, Muddy Creek, Cocalico, Middle Creek, Hammer Creek, Mill Creek, and lesser tributaries, drain the central portion of its territory from north to southwest, while that on the east is drained by the Octorara and Pequea, and that on the west by Big and Little Chikis and Conewago. A great number of dams have been built in all these water-courses from one end to the other, which, in addition to furnishing water-power, serve in a great measure to check the sudden and rapid flow of heavy rains and thaws, and prevent destructive freshets.

To this sheltered situation of the county may be added its timely rainfalls, uniform temperature, fertile soil, fine timber-lands, numerous springs of pure water, good water-power, and abundance of stone and brick-clay for building purposes,—advantages which, no doubt, in the first place attracted the early settlers hither, and have induced many of their descendants to remain, cultivating their ancestral acres, improving their farms, and adding to the comforts of their homes, until the county has deservedly received the title of the "Garden of Pennsylvania."

Within the memory of its oldest inhabitant (and the county has quite a number of octogenarians) there has been no entire failure of all its crops. And it now contains four hundred and sixty-three thousand acres, in round numbers, of farm-land of different soils, all highly tilled and bearing generous crops, comprising six-sevenths of its entire area, being made up of farms ranging from thirty to one hundred acres, alongside each other, extending over the hilltops, and reaching down to the edges of the streams, with neatly-kept division-fences, immense Swisser barns, and elegant homes, embowered among fruit- and shade-trees, between fields of fragrant grass and clover and bending grain far as the eye can reach; a picture at the approach of harvest-time that may well gladden the heart of the husbandman and awaken the admiration of the passing stranger.

Geology.<sup>1</sup>—There are a great many ages represented by the rocks which form the crust of the earth. Geologists have been able to show a long succession of events, which have left their traces on these rocks during the many millions of years of their formation. It is not the purpose here to refer further to these events; nor to the reasoning by which geologists have connected them with one period or another of the earth's history; nor to the names by which the subdivisions of the natural record are known, except in so far as the following statement may do this. Neglecting altogether the minor details, it will be convenient to carry in the memory the names of the four great and comprehensive divisions under which all the objects of the earth, viewed simply as matter, are classed.

First is the great mass of rocks belonging to an age once called "Azoic" (or without life or evidences of life), but now more generally and properly called "Eozoic" (or early life), because most geologists believe that evidences of life exist in some of the very oldest of these rocks.

This earliest is, without doubt, the largest of the four divisions in thickness of the rocks which it includes, and the time consumed in its completion is almost without question vastly longer than the time required for the production of all the rest. But we have no idea of how much of the rocks of the Eozoic are hidden from us, and the above estimate is based only upon the upper fraction of it which we can see. Speaking in general terms, the Eozoic rocks differ from those of later formations, in exhibiting signs of a physical change in the material from the condition in which it was laid down. This change consists principally in the existence of countless small bodies of definite geometrical form and chemical composition known as crystallized minerals in the place of simply coarse or fine aggregates of matter such as arise from the hardening of mud or sand, or the evaporation of solutions such as sea-water, etc. These rocks are often spoken of as the crystalline or metamorphic rocks, the latter designation implying change of form; and referring to the production of beautiful crystals of feldspar, mica, and the like, from the muddy or sandy sediments of the waters of an ocean or lake through the agency of chemical activity set up among the particles.

It cannot be said that crystallization and metamorphism are exclusively found in the Eozoic rocks, but the latter are more generally observed with these characteristics than any other series. They are found in the southern part of Lancaster County, occupying about one-third of a line drawn from the extreme southern to the northernmost point of the county.

The other three divisions can be disposed of in a few words.

The Palaeozoic rocks are those in which the remains of various animals and plants are well known to exist and are usually abundant. The name implies "old life" (or forms of life). They cover the greater part of Pennsylvania, and more of the area of the United States than any other of the divisions.

The Mesozoic (or middle life) rocks are represented quite largely in northern Lancaster.

Finally, the Cainozoic (or new life) rocks, including under that term all deposits up to the present day, are only sparsely represented in Lancaster County; and chiefly by the muds and gravels of the rivers and streams.

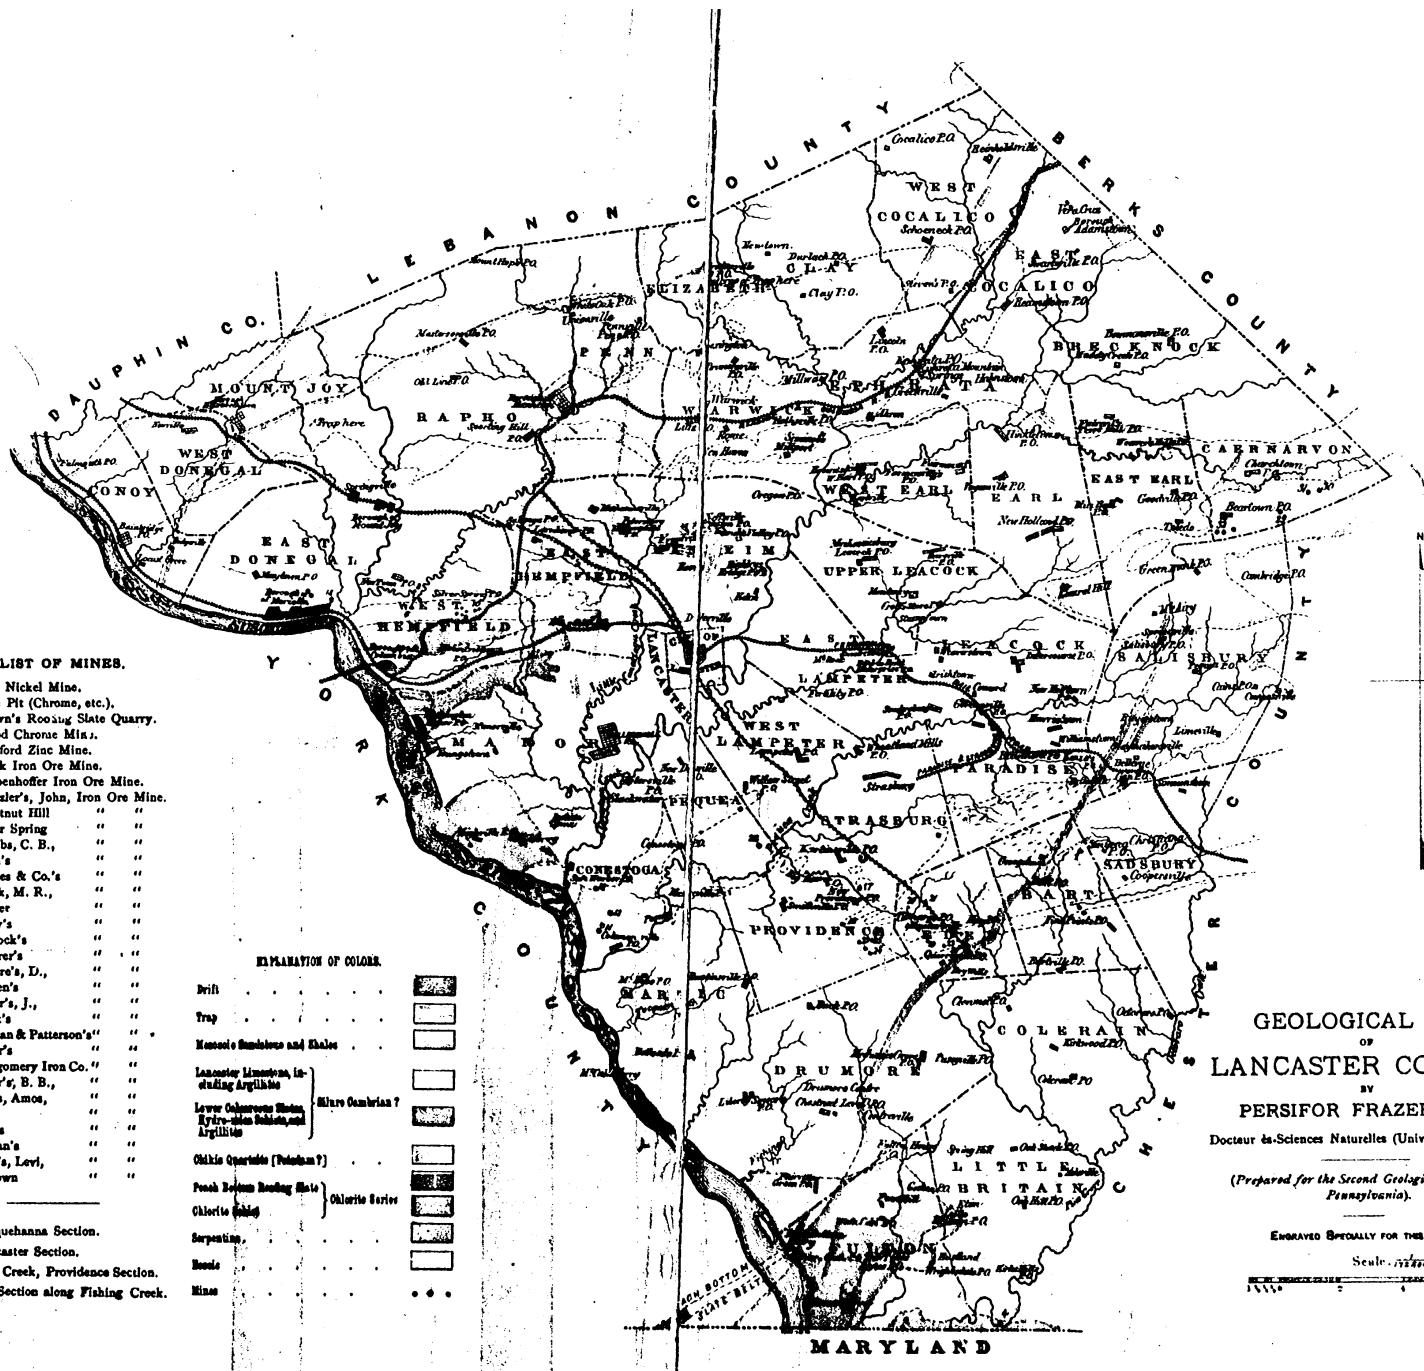

If one looks at a map of the United States, colored to represent these four grand divisions, it will be at once noticed that the greater part of the Western States, from a line passing through New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, and Montana to the Pacific Ocean, is composed of Eozoic rocks. Similarly the northern border of the United States, with the exception of that portion which serves as boundary to Dakota, and part of that of Montana, is composed of Eozoic rocks. Again, a narrow strip of these rocks commences in northeastern Maine, and defines the Atlantic coast-line approximately until it passes through the southeastern corner of Pennsylvania, where the present coast-line deflects from it to the eastward as far as Hatteras, while the Eozoic belt continues in a perfectly straight line through Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia, to the middle of Alabama, where its superficial exhibitions terminate. Of course, in this general description minor occurrences of other formations, alternating with those of the Eozoic, are neglected. But it is patent to the most inexperienced eye that the country called the United States, the broadest in extent between meridian circles inhabited by people speaking one tongue, resembles a great basin nearly bounded on all sides but the south by the oldest rocks, and containing within it, whether we proceed from the east westward or vice versa, or from the north southward, Eozoic, Palaeozoic, Mesozoic, and Cainozoic, and in the above order.

It is with a small, detached, outlying strip of the narrow eastern Eozoic belt that the description of the geology of Lancaster County shall begin. The main part of that belt forms the South Mountain. It lies to the northwest of the Eozoic measures forming the southern point of Lancaster, and separated from it by a few miles of Palaeozoic limestone and Mesozoic shales.

We choose here the historical rather than the geographical order, and shall begin with the lowest,—i. e., the oldest rocks known within the limits of the county.

The Eozoic in Lancaster County.—Whatever else may be uncertain it would seem that no doubt could exist.

as to which are the oldest rocks in the county, or where they are situated. About three miles up the Susquehanna from McCall's Ferry is the mouth of a small stream called the Tocquan Creek. This little stream, while very meandering in its lower course, heads up towards Rawlins' Post-Office in a general east-by-north direction, passing about midway between Mount Nebo and Bethesda Post-Offices. This direction marks an anticlinal or median line of a flat arch of rocks which forms by far the most important structural feature in the geology of this part of Pennsylvania, and, indeed, if it be continued, as is suggested here, to Canada one might say even, of the Atlantic border of the Northern United States. It is so important because the flatness of the arch precludes the possibility of the rocks being otherwise than in their natural order, while successive strata to an enormous thickness overlie the central part of the arch with the regularity of courses of masonry, to a point beyond Safe Harbor to the northwest, and almost to Fishing Creek towards the southeast. This arch continues southwestward through York County to the Maryland line, in which part of its course, however, it is much obscured by the decomposed rock which covers it, and northeastward through Chester, Montgomery, and Bucks into and across the State of New Jersey. Its limits have never been defined.<sup>1</sup> The character of the rocks and other features can be learned in Report CCC, of the Reports of the Second Geological Survey, page 129, etc. At the central point on the river they are mica schists with some chlorite, and, if one may judge by the direction of the dips on either side, the prolongation of the axis of this anticlinal would pass a little to the southeast of the Chester Valley, and perhaps join that of the Buck Ridge which crosses the Schuylkill River near Conshohocken.<sup>2</sup> Even supposing the slates at Peach Bottom to be the upper portions of the Eozoic series (a point not at all certain, because the structure at and below Fishing Creek is very puzzling), there were deposited as sediments by the slow and imperceptible attrition of the then exposed rocks and their spreading out by the waves and currents of a sea, no less than fourteen thousand four hundred feet (2.7 miles or 4.3 kilometers) on top of the central part of the Tocquan anticlinal before the Peach Bottom slates were laid down. Let those who wish to form an idea of the periods of time indicated by geological phenomena stand on the sea-shore and observe the rapidity with which the waves accumulate sand on the beach, and try to conceive the time required to accumulate 2.7 miles of it. Yet it is almost certain that a vastly greater thickness of sea deposits underlies the Tocquan rocks. This anticlinal shows indications of sinking to the southwest,—that is to say, the farther one proceeds southwestward the newer are the rocks which form the mantle conformable to the structure of this arch. Conversely, at least so far as the writer has observed, the anticlinal seems to rise to the northeast, and its upper layers seem to have been denuded by atmospheric agencies to greater depths, exposing (if the conjecture in regard to the relation of the Buck Ridge be correct) some of the oldest rocks of the globe.

These Eozoic rocks, as far as yet known, appear to consist of the following divisions, the lowest being at the bottom of the column:<sup>3</sup>

- VI. Keweenawian.
- V. Taconian.
- IV. Mont Alban.
- III. Huronian.
- II. Norian.
- I. Laurentian.

When it is understood that the entire section along the Susquehanna, described above, lies within the Huronian (i.e., fourteen thousand four hundred feet perpendicular thickness), clearer impressions of its extent can be formed.

The Martic Hills and the Welsh Mountain are formed by these Eozoic measures; the nickel, chrome, magnesia, and serpentine deposits are within them, and, besides the iron ores which properly belong to them, a large amount has been superficially deposited upon them from subsequent action along their boundary with the newer palæozoic strata. Thus, while this most ancient series occupies less area than the two following, it is the most important of all, and furnished the material of which the others are composed.

The Palæozoic Rocks of Lancaster County.—The lowest of these in this region, and therefore the first in order according to the system here pursued, is a formation to which American geologists generally give the name of Potsdam, from a locality in New York where it was studied many years ago.

The Potsdam or Chikis Quartzite.—The distinguished geologist, Professor Henry D. Rogers, in his final report on the geology of Pennsylvania, conceived this formation to consist of three series of rocks, of which the upper and lower were called "talcosc schists," and the middle member primal sandstone, or quartzite. The name "talcosc," which was given because it was then thought that these schists contained "talc" (one of the hydrous silicates of magnesia), has since been abandoned by the best authorities, because these rocks very seldom, if ever, contain talc or any large quantity of magnesia, and the name "hydro-mica," proposed by Dana, or "nacreous schist," by Hunt, has been substituted. Independently of this, it is more than doubtful if the tripartite division has more than a local value in the region under consideration. It is true that hydro-mica schists appear to belong to the formation, and are seen to occur above, below, and between two layers of quartzite at Chikis Rock, but there are reasons to believe that the lower schists are neither extensive nor continuous, and that the upper schists belong to the next succeeding formation, the limestone. There are a few localities between Peter's Creek and the Maryland line where these beds of quartzite occur, but their relations are doubtful, though a very plausible construction of the plications along the great river would bring them in at the place where the Potsdam, if present, ought to appear. The only two principal localities of Lancaster County where the Potsdam occurs in mass are, first, the narrow ridge which is prolonged at Chikis from a larger triangular mass in York County due east to Hempfield Post-office, and, secondly, the northwestern slope of the Welsh Mountain in Sadsbury, Salisbury, Leacock, East Earl, and Caernarvon townships. Besides these, loose fragments are scattered over the Eozoic measures of Eden and Bart townships, but the quartzite is nowhere there "in place." The iron ores of Chestnut Hill and of other places—hydrrous oxides partly decomposed from pyrites in situ and partly deposited from solutions long after the end of the Potsdam period—have been ascribed to this formation; but there seems good reason for assigning this horizon of iron ores to the lower part of the next following, or limestone, period. Its relative position between the quartzite remains the same, however, whichever hypothesis be received.

<sup>2</sup> The dips vary very much near the axis of the anticlinal, but if the average dip be supposed to be N. 16° W.—S. 16° E., the latter would pass up from the mouth of Tocquan Creek a very little south of Quarryville. If E. 30° N. be supposed to represent the average direction, the axis would pass from the same starting point to the upper part of the village of New Providence.

The Auroral Limestone.—This very thick calcareous deposit with intercalated beds of hydro-mica schist was called as above by Professor H. D. Rogers, because he imagined that it was laid down nearly at the dawn of life on this planet. The lower part of the formation wherever well exhibited proves to consist of more or less calcareous beds of hydro-mica schists. In general terms, the lower in the formation these beds are found the more crystals or casts of iron pyrites they contain, and this fact serves in part to explain why the margins of this great limestone (its lower edge), from Canada to Alabama, is dotted all along by mines of the hydrrous oxides of iron. The great Chestnut Hill iron-ore mines, a short distance east of the town of Columbia, are located in these schists, and in one place at a depth of seventy feet the quartzite of Chikis (the Potsdam) was reached. A careful section made by the writer to ascertain the thickness of this limestone and its underlying hydro-mica schists, near the city of Lancaster, established the fact that both together measured three thousand four hundred feet perpendicularly, of which the lower twelve hundred feet were composed of more or less pyritiferous hydro-mica schists, and the upper two thousand two hundred feet chiefly of magnesian limestone (dolomite), containing, however, numerous beds of inter-calated argillite. (See Lancaster Section, Report CCC. Description, p. 145.)

It would be improper to close this short sketch of the Auroral limestone without mention of the very remarkable deposit within it of carbonate of zinc which (as elsewhere) was long mistaken for a part of itself.<sup>1</sup> One important discovery of the recent survey in Lancaster County is the physical connection between the great Lancaster limestone (identical in age with that of the Great Valley) and the Chester Valley limestone at Quarryville. This connection is proved by several circumstances. Taken in connection with what has been said of the Tocquan anticlinal, it exposes to our view a flat arch consisting of a number of superimposed sheathings of rock which have been more and more stripped off on its north side as one goes eastward, while by a fault or break on the south side of the limestone mass just north of and running nearly parallel to the axis of the arch the lower rocks in that quarter have been brought up level with the upper or limestone series. Erosion stripped off the limestone between Downingtown and Churchtown, while the straight southern edge of the Chester Valley was made by an up-throw.

The Mesozoic or New Red Sandstone.—This formation suggests more, as yet, unanswerable questions than any other in the State. It is characterized everywhere over the world by the predominance of red in the coloration of the strata composing it. Its rocks are generally of the nature of more or less baked clays or sands, and when they contain crystallized rocks such as mica or feldspar, it is always as adventitious components. This formation, or those immediately above and below it, with which it is often confounded in this country, contains in certain localities (as in Colorado) oil, very frequently salt, and salt springs, and also coal.<sup>2</sup> These dykes or thin veins of igneous rock are almost invariably observed cutting through the Mesozoic beds, whence they frequently pass outwards into the adjacent formations whether younger or older. Sometimes several of them seem to radiate from a common point outwards. Frequently a large superficial mass is formed by the pouring out from a single vent of a large quantity of the molten material which accumulated on the then surface, forming "mesas," as they are called in the West. It is not to be understood that these dykes never occur except in the Mesozoic measures. In Pennsylvania, dolerite is the species of rock most commonly forming them, but it is also observed in dykes which cut the formations adjacent to the Mesozoic. As a rule, however, they do not occur at very great distances from the present area of the Mesozoic, and in most cases where these dykes of dolerite are found traversing formations older than the Mesozoic, it is not improbable that the latter may have once covered these localities.<sup>1</sup> The portion of the Mesozoic measures which lie on the older Huronian schists (as do those of the northern edge of the belt we are considering, in Adams and York, and possibly Dauphin and Lebanon Counties) is also characterized by its contents of both copper and iron salts. The lower (southern) margin of the Mesozoic is irregular, and is indented by numerous bays and almost inclosed lakes of limestone.<sup>2</sup> These irregularities of the margin are probably caused by the erosive action of frost, wind, and water, since the beds were formed. This action has uncovered the underlying limestone in proportion to the varying force which it has exerted in different localities, and to the power of resisting erosion which the rocks of those localities may have possessed. It is worthy of notice that the breadth of the Mesozoic formation is reduced where it crosses the Susquehanna River.

The Cainozoic Formations of Lancaster County.—It has been stated that the widest meaning is given to the word Cainozoic. Its meaning ("new life, or forms of life") is applied here to all the successive forms which have succeeded the Cretaceous. The Tertiary period has no representative rocks in Lancaster County which are known to the writer. For the purposes of this very brief and imperfect sketch the Cainozoic may be extended to include not only the fluvial gravels and alluvium, but the graphic and other records of man himself, of which many examples are found in Lancaster County, and especially along the borders of the Susquehanna, or "River of Islands."<sup>3</sup>

Many very interesting collections of stone implements, fashioned by the early inhabitants of the shores of the Susquehanna, have been made by various citizens of the county, notably by the writer's honored friend, the late Professor S. S. Haldeman, and Dr. C. H. Stubbs, of Fulton township. This subject more properly belongs to the archæology of Lancaster County.

<sup>1</sup> From what has been said above of the thickness of the strata under the Mesozoic, one of the difficulties in explaining the phenomena which this formation presents will be apparent; for if (as appears to be the case) these dykes of trap cleave not only the Mesozoic rocks but also those on which the latter lies, why are they so seldom found out of the Mesozoic area? However many thousand feet in thickness we are at liberty to give to the rocks of the geological Middle Age, its strata would be to those under it but as a coat of paint.

<sup>3</sup> The reader is referred to Report CCO of the Second Geological Survey of Pennsylvania for illustrations of the Indian hieroglyphs which still abound on the islands in the southern part of the river, though the natural erosion of the latter, assisted by the wanton destructiveness of some who visit these interesting relics, are fast causing them to disappear.

Analyses of Ores, etc.—The following analyses of rocks and minerals in Lancaster County, made at the request of the writer, may prove of interest to the reader. They are quoted from Chap. VI. of Vol. CCC, of the "Second Geological Survey of Pennsylvania."

1. This analysis of the Peach Bottom slates which cross a portion of Lancaster and York Counties was made by Mr. Andrew S. McCreath, chemist of the Survey. The specimen was from J. Humphrey & Co.'s quarry, half a mile east of Delta, York Co.:

Apparently no Millerite is represented in these analyses.

THE INDIAN OCCUPATION.

It is not proposed to speculate upon the origin of the aboriginal tribes who may have had a settlement within the present limits of the county centuries before the white man landed upon the shores of the Delaware. This ground has been gone over by historians again and again, but they have failed to throw much light upon the subject. Rather have they bewildered the minds of their readers by their persistent speculative theories, yet they have led many persons to believe that the traditions which they have fostered or invented are history.

The Indians were essentially a nomadic race, and Gen. Clark, of New York, who has given this subject his whole study for some years, has come to the conclusion that not a single tribe ever had a permanent location for a period of fifty years in one place. If there was an exception to this rule, it was probably the old Indian town in Manor township, where the Susquehannocks flourished in 1608, when the famous Capt. John Smith entered the mouth of the Susquehanna River.

The Shawanese belonged to the Algonquin family, and, like the Arabs, wandered from place to place. They were a warlike and brave people, but a perfidious and treacherous nation, and their base conduct towards other tribes, and towards the white people, made them despised and hated wherever they went. They moved from the Ohio to Alabama, and from there to Georgia, where they were soon embroiled in a war with the Catawbias and Cherokees. They held their own for some years, but were finally compelled to move farther north to save the remnants of their several tribes. They came as far as the Potomac. From thence they sent some of their chiefs to the Susquehannock Indians and to Philadelphia to get permission from Penn to locate near the former. The Susquehannocks became responsible for their good behavior. Sixty families came from the Potomac in 1697, and from that time greater numbers followed at intervals of a year or less. They located near the mouth of Pequea Creek, where their principal town remained for thirty-four years, and where their king, Opessah, and his successors resided. These gipsy Indians were not satisfied to remain together in one place, but, true to their character, they split into fragments. We find a Shawannah town in Sadsbury township, where the New Castle Road crossed the Octorara, about two miles above Christiana. They also had a town ten or twelve miles farther down the same stream, where the Charlestown and Conestoga road crossed. These two points were doubtless chosen because game and fish were plenty, with which they were ready to barter with the emigrants passing over these two routes for merchandise or other articles. They also had a town along Shawanese Run, at Columbia, and did not leave that vicinity until several years after the arrival of the white settlers,—Barber, Wright, and Blunston.

During the summer months hunting parties pitched their tents along the banks of the Conestoga, Pequea, and Mill Creeks, but changed their location frequently when they found game scarce or poor fishing.

Their usual mode to catch the latter was to gig or strike them with a spear at night, the fish being attracted by a fire made with faggots.

They mingled with the early settlers, and outwardly were on the best of terms with every one. But it is known that small war parties sneaked away at night and traveled hundreds of miles to strike an enemy in the far South. They seldom returned empty-handed, and if they could get nothing else, they would induce some of the negro slaves in Virginia to come with them. When questioned by the Governor or Council or the Conestoga Indians as to their conduct, they professed to be very innocent, and assured them that they had kept all their covenants with "Onas" (Penn) and their cousins, the Delawares and Conestogas. The colonial authorities and the neighboring tribes of Indians professed to believe what they said while in their presence, but they were not able to conceal their fears when their backs were turned. It cost the proprietors large sums in their efforts to placate and attach them to their cause, which they after all failed to do. No amount of cajolery, or promises of land, or the constant giving of goods was sufficient to bring these wayward and treacherous children of the forest to a true sense of their obligations to the government. Many years of valuable time were frittered away upon them, even after they destroyed the lives of many of the frontier settlers.

Martin Chartière, a French-Indian trader, took up his abode with the Shawanese Indians at Pequea, as did also Joseph Jessup, another French-Indian trader. The latter remained among them but a few years, when he removed a hundred or more miles farther up the river. A few families of this tribe of Indians moved to the same place about the same time. Jessup spoke the Shawanese and Delaware language, and was frequently chosen as interpreter at councils when treaties were made with these Indians. Chartière married an Indian squaw, probably a member of this tribe. Several years before his death, which occurred in 1708, he removed his trading post to a point about a mile above the "Indian Fort" in Manor township. His son, Peter Chartière, married a Shawanese squaw, and took the most warlike section of the tribe over to the French interests in the war of 1755-58.

On June 27, 1707, Governor John Evans, with Messrs. French, Mitchel, Bizailon, Gray, and four servants, started from New Castle, Del., and on the next morning arrived on the Octorara, where the Shawanese met them and presented the Governor with some skins, and the same night the party arrived at Pequehan, the Indian town, and was received at Martin Chartière's by Opessah, their king, and some chiefs, who conducted them to their town, and upon entering were received with a salute of fire-arms. From thence the Governor and his party, on Monday, proceeded to the Susquehanna Indian town, where they met delegations or representatives of the Shawanese, Senegois, Ganawese or Canoise, and Nanticokes. These Shawanese were not from the town at Pequea, but belonged to two or three other towns, at the mouth of the Juniata, and farther up the river. Of these tribes, the Nanticokes understood the English language.

On the 30th day of June the Governor returned to Pequehan, where Opessah received him, and spoke in behalf of the youth of the town. The Governor remained there a few days, during which time there arrived several families of Shawanese from Carolina, where four hundred and fifty Flat-head Indians had besieged their town. Peter Bizailon, who was present, informed the Governor that the Shawanese in the South had killed several white people.

On July 1st the Governor and party went to Conestoga and remained there all night. From thence, the next day, they went to within three miles of Paxtang village. Martin Chartière, who went along with the party, went into the town and brought Joseph Jessup and James Le Tort back with him. It was then and there that Nichole Godin, an Indian trader who had no license, was arrested and taken thence to Philadelphia.

In June, 1709, the Governor offered each of the young Shawanese braves a gun if they would join an expedition then about to start against the French in Canada. The Shawanese declined the proffered inducements, and refused to risk themselves in a conflict where they were likely to get the worst of it.

In 1711 King Opessah absented himself from his tribe, and remained away for more than three years. During that time he pretended to have been hunting for game in the woods, but it was generally supposed at the time that his absence was due to his attachment to a Delaware squaw, as it was known that he spent much of his time among the Delawares, then located along the Brandywine. In October, 1714, the Shawanese elected a new king in place of Opessah; called "Cakundawanna."

On the 22d day of June, 1715, Opessah appeared before the Governor and Council in behalf of his tribe. He never was reinstated, however, in his old position in the tribe, and gradually went out of notice.

His speeches and bearing at several treaties indicate that he was no ordinary man. He was frank in speech and outwardly friendly to the whites, but he unquestionably gave bad advice to his tribe, who were doubtless ever ready to be at some mischief.

In 1715, Thomas Chalkley, a prominent speaker of the Friends, visited the Shawanese and Conestoga towns and preached to the Indians at both places. Governor William Keith visited the Shawanese and held a conference with them and other Indians at Conestoga July 18, 1717, and again in June, 1722. James Logan also held a conference at the same place in 1720, and he was particularly severe upon the French Jesuits, and blamed them for getting the Indians to take sides against the English. Bizailon, Le Tort, Chartière, and Jessup, Canada French-Indian traders, fell under suspicion, and they were arrested and thrown into jail, but subsequently were released upon giving bail for their good behavior.

The Governor of Virginia complained frequently to Governor Keith about the Shawanese for harboring slaves. They became more restless, and chafed under the restraints laid upon them by the Governor and the Conestogas, who became answerable for their good conduct. In May, 1728, they killed two of the Conestogas. In 1731 that portion of the tribe who lived within the present limits of this county suddenly gathered up their movables and moved away at night without asking permission from the Governor or the Conestogas. They crossed the mountains and pitched their tents along the Allegheny. The Governor and Council and Conestoga Indians became very much alarmed, and took immediate measures to coax them back. Samuel Blunston and John Wright were sent to Cumberland Valley to survey and lay out a reservation for them in 1732, and as an additional inducement told them that no one was to live among them but Peter Chartière, whose wife was a Shawanese. Finding that they could not be coaxed back, the colonial authorities undertook to prevent the Indian traders from crossing the mountains and bartering with them upon the Allegheny. This was about as difficult an undertaking as getting the Indians back. In 1735 the Six Nations of Indians, who compelled the Shawanese many years before this time to behave themselves along the Allegheny or leave that hunting-ground, tried to persuade them to return east of the mountains, but they refused. The Six Nations not being satisfied with them, they sent out a chief to talk to them. One of their tribes, consisting of thirty young and ten old men, and several women and children, murdered this chief and fled to the South, the place from whence they moved to the Potomac. A few of the Shawanese returned to Cumberland Valley. In 1787 there were one hundred and thirty Shawanese living along the Susquohanna.

For more than forty years the Shawanese along the Ohio were in an almost perpetual state of war with America, either as British colonies or as independent States. They were the most active allies of the French during the Seven Years' war, and after the conquest of Canada continued in concert with the Delawares in their hostilities, which were only terminated after the successful campaign of Gen. Bouquet. The settlers who crossed the mountains and were pushing their way to the Ohio had to fight this treacherous and perfidious tribe at every step. Western annals are full of descriptions of their atrocities. When the tribe became greatly diminished in numbers by reason of their wars, the places of their dead were more than made good by recruits from other hostile tribes. Many valuable lives were sacrificed through the imbecility of the colonial authorities in their treatment of, and tampering with, these wretches.

No tribe of Indians has given its name to so many places in the United States as the Shawanese, and, perhaps, no other was ever split into so many fragments or changed their place of abode so frequently or deserved to go down through the pages of history as the most perfidious of all the savage tribes.

The Ganawese moved from Piscataway to an island in the Potomac River. From thence their king and chiefs went to Philadelphia to see William Penn in 1698, and get permission to settle in his province, which was readily granted. They returned and brought their whole tribe with them to Conejohala, where the borough of Washington now stands. There they built a town upon the land now owned by Mr. Staman. They remained at that place two or three years, when they asked permission to move farther up the river. They selected a spot upon the land now owned by John Haldeman, a mile or two below the mouth of Canoy Creek. This tribe were also called and better known as Canoise, from whom the stream took its name. They were also called Nanticokes. They were probably an offshoot from the Nanticokes, and came from the eastern part of Maryland. The tribe was small, and under the control of the Six Nations. They were not a vicious people, and gave but little trouble. They were entirely surrounded by Indian traders, who found it profitable to barter with them. They, like the Shawanese, were mere tenants at will, and as game began to get scarce, and the settlers in Donegal township encroached upon their hunting-ground, they became dissatisfied, and asked permission to move farther up the river. In 1748 they removed to Shamokin, now Sunbury, and had the impudence afterwards to ask the proprietors to pay them for the land they vacated at Canoy. Although treaties were held in their town, and their chiefs presented themselves at treaties held at Conestoga, Lancaster, and Philadelphia, the tribe never had much influence, and sank into obscurity, and the name has disappeared from current history.

The Delawares for many years carried on a sanguinary war with the Iroquois, or Six Nations, but after a bloody struggle they were conquered and subjugated, and became dependents of the Six Nations, who selected one of their own chiefs to rule over them, the greatest of whom was the Cayuga chief Shikellimy, the father of Logan, the famous chief in the West. He was a person of great ability, and remained true in his fidelity to the whites until his death. He was not, however, able to control the entire tribe, and they became very troublesome. Penn purchased all their lands, but they acted as though they wanted to regain them and retain their presents also. They were constantly asking for more. Pemberton, and a few other Quakers, listened to their lies, and gave the proprietors no little trouble. Their dealings with the Connecticut people brought forth a brood of troubles for all parties concerned. The Six Nations treated them as women, and gave them no voice in their councils. A portion of this tribe settled along the Brandywine, from whence small parties found their way to the streams in this county, where they remained a few years, after which they found congenial spirits in villainy and murder among the Shawanese, near whom they settled, and traveled on the same war-path. They called themselves Lenni Lenape, or the Original People.

The Nanticokes settled upon the eastern shore of the Chesapeake Bay. They were quite numerous, but could not hold their own against the Six Nations, and were compelled to submit to that confederation, and become their vassals. They obtained permission to move to Tulpehocken Valley, where they remained until 1721, when the large settlement of Germans which came from New York and located near them made them restless, and a large portion of them moved east into Cocalico township, and settled along "Indian River." This place was known as "Indian Town" as late as 1758, when there were still a few scattered families living along the little streams and springs in the vicinity. The town embraced five hundred acres, which came into the possession of John Wistar and Henry Carpenter. Another portion of this tribe had also a town upon the land now owned by Levi S. Reist, called "Lehoy." That land was also purchased from the proprietors by John Wistar. As this tribe understood the English language, they mingled and were on good terms with the white settlers. They also moved up to the West Branch of the Susquehanna. The Nanticokes and Ganaweso spoke a kindred tongue. When these tribes were in the height of their power, they were constantly thrown upon their defense by their more powerful neighbors, the Susquehannocks, alias Minquas, alias Conestogas, who sent out small war parties to pick off the hunters of these tribes whom they found in the woods away from their principal towns.

The Susquehannocks were at one time the most powerful and aggressive of all the tribes along the Susquehanna River and Chesapeake Bay. They were able to subdue their weaker brethren, but they did not absorb or form a confederation like the Six Nations of New York, and compel their conquered enemies to pay tribute every year or furnish young men to swell their war parties. They were strictly a warlike and hunting nation. After an intercourse of more than one hundred and fifty years with the white settlers, they failed to adapt themselves to agricultural pursuits. Penn, in the goodness of his heart, gave to the remnant of this tribe, whom he called Conestogas, five hundred acres of land, the finest farm within his province, to which they moved from their old stockaded town along the river shore. The Proprietors were compelled to furnish a person to manage and have a portion of the land cultivated until the remnant of this tribe was extinguished. This tract of land was a source of expense and trouble to the Proprietors while they owned it.

On the 2d day of June, 1608, Capt. John Smith left Jamestown, on the James River, with a company of fourteen persons, in an open barge of three tons burthen, and sailed up along the eastern shore of the Chesapeake Bay on a voyage of exploration. The party returned to Jamestown on the 21st day of July, and on the 24th of that month, Smith again started down the river and up the bay to finish their discoveries, taking this time twelve men with him.

SUSQUEHANNOCK INDIAN.

After an absence of seven weeks, he returned on the 7th day of September, 1608. When Capt. Smith arrived at the head of the bay, he met a hunting party of Susquehannocks. From his description they were evidently more muscular and larger in stature than other Indians, of whom he saw a great many. Capt. Smith prepared a map of the shores of the Chesapeake Bay and the streams entering into it, and also drew a picture of a Susquehannock chief, of which the above is a fac-simile.

Historians have ridiculed Smith, and looked upon his Indian race of giants as existing only in his fertile imagination. Subsequent discoveries, however, would seem to corroborate or give color to his statement. When the Columbia and Port Deposit Railroad was being constructed, and the foundations of the bridge which spans the Octorara were being excavated, human skeletons were found, which indicated that they belonged to persons of extraordinary size. At this point this tribe had a small stockade, to afford protection to their hunting parties who went to the head of the bay. Bones were also excavated at or near where their town and fort stood, and where their king lived (a short distance below Washington borough), which indicated that they were the remains of persons above the average height. They were doubtless an athletic and manly race. Knowing their superiority over adjacent tribes, they doubtless upon every occasion displayed an aggressive disposition, and assumed postures and a voice calculated to intimidate strangers, and give them an idea of extraordinary powers which they did not possess.

At this time the tribe could turn out six hundred warriors. They had a stockaded fort, which stood upon what is now John H. Wittmer's land, about midway between Wittmer's Mill and Strickler's Run, at the foot of Turkey Hill. This was large enough to not only protect the warriors, but the whole population also. Bastions were subsequently erected at each of the four corners, where small cannon were placed to protect and rake the sides. It is probable that the fort at first was a plain parallelogram, and that the bastions were added after the implements of civilized warfare were introduced by the Dutch Swedes and the Marylanders.

At what particular period they erected this fort is hard to determine. As they penetrated the forest as far north as the St. Lawrence River and Lake Champlain, and had many a skirmish with the Iroquois, who had their towns protected by stockades, they doubtless copied from their enemies. Some writers have asserted that this tribe belonged to Iroquois stock. This must be a mistake, for it is known that they were at war for at least one hundred years with them. After they were conquered and dismembered by the Cayugas and Onondas, members of the confederated Six Nations, they spoke the Mingo language and were reckoned as a branch of that stock, which also belonged to the Six Nations. This can be accounted for by the fact that it was the policy of the Iroquois, when they conquered a tribe, to send their chiefs away, and select one from the confederated nations to rule over them, and in this instance they may have selected a Mingo.

Smith, in his mention of the chief whom he met at the head of Chosapeake Bay, described the "calves of his legs" as being "three-quarters of a yard about, and all the rest of his limbs so answerable to that proportion, and he seemed the goodliest man I ever saw." They met them with skins, bows, arrows, targets, beads, swords, and tobacco-pipes for presents. "They seemed like giants, and were the strangest people in all these countries, both in language and attire; their language well becomes their proportions; sounding from them as a voice in a vault. Their attire is the skins of bears and wolves, some have cassocks made of bears' heads, and skins that a man's head goes through the skin's neck, and the ears of the bear fastened to his shoulder, the nose and teeth hanging down his breast, another bear's face split behind him, and at the end of the nose hung a paw, the half-sleeves coming to the elbows, where the neck of bears and the arms through the mouth, with paws hanging at their noses. One had the head of a wolf hanging in a chain for a jewel, his tobacco-pipe, three-quarters of a yard long, prettily carved, with a bird, a deer, or some such device at the great end sufficient to beat out one's brains, with bows, arrows, and clubs suitable to their greatness."

This description accords very well with the illustrated specimen of the chief.

The Massawomekes, a war-like tribe, were located along Bush River, and were enemies of the Susquehannocks. Not only this, but all the tribes on both sides of the bay lived in towns, around which they had palisades. This system of civilized means of defense among these several tribes was in existence before the arrival of Smith in James River, or the Dutch or Swedes in the Delaware.

The fact that the Susquehannocks ceded to the English all the land on the Eastern Shore of Maryland and about the head of the bay would seem to indicate that they had subjugated the tribes living there.

The fur trade with the Susquehannocks at the mouth of the river became so great and profitable (according to John Pory, secretary of the Virginia Company) that one hundred English settled on Kent Island, at the mouth of the river. (This number is probably an exaggeration.) Those that were there hoped to reap a rich harvest from the Indians, and to control the entire trade at a very small outlay. The Susquehannocks were quick-witted, and soon discovered that these people were too avaricious to be honest. Hence they refused to trade with them, and broke up their settlement.

A few years later (in 1680) William Claibourne, a member of the Virginia Council, effected a settlement upon the same island, and established a trading-post, which he surrounded with a stockade for protection. He was apparently firmly established, and a bold freebooter, ready to maintain his foothold upon the island by force of arms. Not long afterwards a body of men, called the "Pilgrims," offered the king fifty pounds for this island. They came in the "Ark and Dove." This was anterior to the date of the arrival of Lord Baltimore and his colonists. After the arrival of George Calvert, the first baron of Baltimore, who was the founder of Maryland, he undertook to dispossess Claibourne, which led to what is called in Maryland history "Claibourne's Rebellion."

On the 27th day of March, 1634, the Pilgrims found the Yoacomacoes Indians, from whom they purchased the land upon which they made their settlement, in great dread of the Susquehannocks, who were their mortal enemies, who never ceased to make war upon them and ravage their country.

Claibourne saw in this Pilgrim settlement a lurking danger, which might any moment dispel his sanguine hopes of a peaceful possession of his island. He stirred up hostilities between the settlers and the Indians. The former concluded that they would have no peace while Claibourne was free to get the Indians to do the fighting, and they made war upon him. He was not subdued until 1637, when his property was confiscated and himself arrested and attainted of high treason. In 1642 he and Richard Ingle, who was called a pirate and rebel, and a few others from Virginia, recaptured Kent Island, invaded the western shore of Maryland, and forced Leonard Calvert, the Lieutenant-Governor, to seek safety in flight to Virginia. Whether Claibourne's object was the overthrow of Baltimore's government, or to compel him to acknowledge his right to the possession of Kent Island, from which he had been ejected, is not known.

The Susquehannocks continued to give the Pilgrim settlers at Saint Mary's a great deal of trouble, and in May, 1639, the Council resolved to invade that country upon the eastern shore of the bay. An expedition was planned against them, but was abandoned upon receipt of the intelligence that the Susquehannocks were supplied with fire-arms. The Indians of that tribe continued to harass the settlers, and we are not aware that a successful resistance was made to them or their country along the Susquehanna invaded by the Marylanders. But the fire in the rear from the Iroquois became so hot that the Susquehannocks concluded to form an alliance, aggressive and defensive, with the whites. On the 5th of July, 1652, a treaty was made with them at the river of Severn, where Annapolis, the present capital of Maryland, stands. At this treaty the Susquehannocks ceded all the land from Pautuxet River to Palmer's (or Kent) Island, on the western side of Chesapeake Bay, "and from the Choptank River to the northeast branch, which lyes to the northward of Elke River, on the eastern side of said bay, the island of Kent and Palmer's, which belongs to Capt. Claibourne, excepted."

But in this treaty it was provided that both parties were to be permitted "to build a house or forte for trade on Palmer's Island." This treaty indicates the extent of the jurisdiction of the Susquehannocks along the shores of the bay, and also that Claibourne had made his peace with Baltimore and regained possession of his island. This treaty provided for a peace between the parties "which was to endure forever, to the end of the world;" and yet there was a clause inserted which allowed either party, if they grew weary of the terms of the treaty, by giving twenty days' notice, to annul the same. This treaty was signed by Richard Bennett, Edward Floyd, Thomas Marsh, William Fuller, and Leonard Strong, commissioners on the part of the Marylanders, and on the part of the Susquehannocks by Sawahegeh, Ameghtarogh, Scarhuhadig, Ruthelogah, Nathhel-diauch, war captains and councilors appointed and sent to represent the nation.

In April, 1661, the Susquehannocks, as was then supposed, went to Gunpowder River and plundered the settlers, and killed the wife of Robert Gorsuch (ancestor of the one who was killed by his own slave near Christiansa, in this county, in 1851), and a few days later killed John Foustler, and wounded William Wigwell. The Indians went upon a marauding expedition, and meant only to plunder the settlers, but meeting with some resistance, a general flight resulted and several were killed on both sides. Only a few Indians were engaged in this affair, and they probably acted without the consent of their own tribe. A short time after this a small party of Delaware Indians came to Bush River and killed several of the settlers. The latter, however, rallied and killed some Indians. The settlers came to the conclusion that the first murders were committed by Delawares and not by the Susquehannocks. The Indians gave the latter name to mislead the whites, so that the real murderers might escape a just retribution.

At a meeting of the Maryland Council on Spoutin Island in May, 1661, Capt. John Oldber was authorized to take command of fifty soldiers and march to the fort of the Susquehannocks at or near the mouth of the Octorara. This was but a small stockade, and only used to protect hunting parties. He was instructed to "choose some fit place either within or without the fort, which he was to fortify for his own security, and to demand the assistance of the Susquehannocks to fetch timber and other necessaries for the fortification according to articles now concluded between them; and further to cause some spurs and flankers to be laid out for the defense of the Indian fort, whom he was upon all occasions to assist against the assaults of their enemies. Upon his arrival at the fort he was to press the Susquehannocks to appoint one of their great men to assist him, and through whom he was to communicate his wishes to this tribe. He was cautioned to keep his eye upon the Dutch who might come to the fort." These warlike preparations were aimed against the Senecas and other New York Indians who were expected to attack their old enemies and the white settlers.

On the 12th day of October, 1661, Capt. Oldber appeared before the Council at St. Mary's, and when asked why he came down from his expedition without orders, replied that the Susquehannocks could not compel their men to furnish the soldiers with provisions, etc. The fact was the captain and his men were cowards, and had never been as far up as the fort.

At this period the Susquehannocks were at war with the Senecas, who crossed the river many miles above the former's fort and penetrated to the head of the bay, where they robbed the settlers. Several of the whites were killed. In June, 1664, one of the Senecas was captured, and at his trial forty of the Susquehannock warriors were present, among whom were two of Capt. Civility's uncles. They wanted the Indian burned, as they well knew him and his bloodthirsty character.

In 1664 the Senecas came again to the Chesapeake and killed several of the settlers and some stray Susquehannocks, whom they caught hunting. There were one hundred warriors in this raid. In June of the same year, the Marylanders declared war against the Senecas, and appointed Col. Lewis Stockett in command of the forces.

In 1665 preparations were again made to go to war with them, and Col. William Burgess was placed in command, and marched his troops to the frontiers, did not come in contact with the Senecas, who were then on the war-path against the Susquehannocks.

In June, 1666, three of the Susquehannock war captains appeared before the Maryland Council, which met at St. John's, in St. Mary's County. They stated that the Senecas had taken a number of their men at the head of the Patapsco and Bush River, and that they (the Senecas) intended to storm their fort in August next, and if successful would also fall upon the English settlers and exterminate them. The Senecas failed to make the attack upon the fort at the time stated, but they came in the spring of 1667. On Feb. 8, 1667, the Maryland Council ordered an expedition to be fitted out immediately and march against the Senecas. This expedition proved, like those that preceded it, to be a total failure. When they arrived at a point where there was a probability of meeting the Indians their courage failed them, and they returned to their homes.

In August, 1667, the Susquehannocks sent for assistance and ammunition to fight the Senecas. The Indians had been skirmishing for some time. When the Marylanders agreed to send some troops up to assist their friends, as usual, they did not go up the river, but left the Susquehannocks to carry on the war single-handed. Matters grew worse and worse, until the Marylanders became greatly alarmed for their own safety, and they renewed their efforts to raise troops to go and help the Susquehannocks. They selected Col. Ninian Beall to command the troops. At last a commander was chosen who was no coward. He marched with his forces up the left bank of the Susquehanna River to the town and fort, which stood, as before stated, on what is now Mr. Wittmer's farm. Col. Beall took several small cannon with him. The exact date of this march and the time when the sanguinary battle was fought at the fort is not given, but it must have been in the year 1675-76. Mr. Johnston, in his "History of Cecil County," places the period about the year 1682. Evans, in his "Analysis" (2d ed., 1755), says that Bell (Beall), in the service of Maryland at the fort (remains of which were still standing in 1755 on the east side of the Susquehanna, about three miles below Wright's Ferry), by the defeat of many hundreds, gave them a blow that they (the Five Nations) never recovered of. This victory was followed in two or three years by defeat, and the dismemberment of the Susquehannocks by the Cayugas and Senecas, which occurred previous to the arrival of William Penn in the province in 1682. In the following year Penn visited the Susquehannocks at their fort. Col. Talbot, the freebooter, who lived on the eastern side of Chesapeake Bay, heard that Penn was about to make this visit, and he proposed to capture him and his party. No mention has been made by Penn or his Council of any battle being fought by these Indians after his arrival in the province, and it is not likely an event of so much importance occurred in his time, or there would have been some negotiations with the Five Nations in relation thereto. Penn was particularly cautious in not giving offense to the Indians or allowing them to quarrel among themselves, and every event which was likely to cause trouble was inquired into, and the proceedings thereon had was duly recorded in the Council minute-book. In the absence of any mention of a battle, it is presumed that none took place after 1682. After their defeat the old men, women, and children, and a few warriors that survived the general disaster, left their old fort upon the banks of the river and located upon Turkey Hill, four miles east of the place they left. There was an abundance of spring water there, and Penn gave them a reservation of five hundred acres.

In the year 1699, on the 22d day of July, the Maryland Legislature passed an act, entitled "An Act of Gratitude to Col. Ninian Beall, viz., for his services upon all incursions and disturbances of the neighboring Indians seventy-five pounds sterling, to be laid out for three serviceable negroes to him and his wife during their lives, and afterwards to their children. The said negroes and their increase not to be subject to any executions or judgments during the life of Col. Beall or his wife." (Vide chap. xx., Bacon's Laws, 1699.)

Although the military power of the tribe was completely broken when they had to succumb to superior numbers, their influence with surrounding tribes and the colonial authorities did not cease until the remnant of that once powerful tribe ended their existence in blood.

After this tribe located upon Turkey Hill, they were called Conestogoes, and always retained that name. Governors Evans, Gookin, Keith, and Logan, held conferences with the Indians in that place, and Penn again visited them in 1700. In 1710 the tribe was ruled by a queen. The tribe afterwards lived a vagabond life, and begged from farm-house to farm-house. The only articles of barter they had were willow-baskets and brooms. If they received any money they spent it for "fire-water." They were constantly begging the colonial authorities for clothing and moccasins. They traveled through the community bare-footed, and many of them had no clothing but a breechclout, and it is stated that many went to Philadelphia naked. To keep them from starving or freezing, James Wright (who lived in the stone house on Second Street, Columbia) was appointed by the Governor to furnish them with clothing and food, which he did faithfully. The clothing he procured in Philadelphia, and the flour he provided was made at the "little stone mill" on Shawanese Run, which was torn down many years ago.

"Bill Sock" and one or two more of these Indians were in the habit of going up to Shamokin to hunt with the Shawanese. When the French and Indian war was impending, in 1754, their absence from Conestoga was frequent and long, and it was the general impression among the frontier settlers that they were secretly aiding the Indians who sided with the French. They were closely watched, and whenever a family along the border was cut off by the Indians the indignation against this tribe ran very high. When the inhabitants along the Upper Susquehanna had to flee to this county and the city of Philadelphia, in 1755, for safety, the lives of this tribe were imperiled. The atrocities committed upon the settlers along the border blunted the conscience of a heretofore peaceful people, and they no longer looked on in horror at the death of an Indian, or shrank back in dismay when a proposition was made to take the law in their own hands and retaliate upon their copper-colored brothers. James Wright wrote to the Governor during this war that these Indians were afraid to go out to hunt anywhere except around his house and his brother's, who lived on the west side of the river. In the spring of 1758 these Indians begged to be allowed to go up to Shamokin and build some cabins and live there, but the request was not granted. They were regarded as the "pets" of the Quakers, but they never showed any gratitude to their benefactors, nor were they of the slightest service to the Proprietors. After this once powerful tribe was defeated and broken, henceforth their career was downward, and a strange fatality seemed to guide them on and on to their final doom. The following copy of a letter of Jacob Taylor, the surveyor for Chester County, was written to the Proprietors:

"May it please the Proprietor.

"This bearer, Michael Baughman (being apprehensive that he can agree with ye Indians to remove from Conestogoe Manor), desires to purchase the spot where the old Indian town stands, with the whole vacancy between ye lines of Henry Bostler and Michael Moyer, James Logan, John Carlidge, and Peter Leman and to extend towards Susquehanna as far as may be not to incommode the other land, the quantity that may be regularly taken there will be, I think, about 850 A<sup>c</sup>.

"Thy Servant,

"J. T.

"Dec. 8, 1739."

These Indians, although worthless vagabonds, became attached to their home, and could not be persuaded to leave it. Although they cultivated but little, if any, of this land, they frequently complained that some of their white neighbors cultivated hemp upon certain parties, and sometimes grain, without remunerating them for the use of the land.

After the termination of the French and Indian war, in 1758, another war was commenced by the famous Indian chief Pontiac in 1763, and before they were conquered by Gen. Bouquet, in 1764, the destruction of the border settlers was terrible. Some of the Indians who were on familiar terms with the whites declared to them that "Bill Sock," of Conestoga, had committed two or three murders. These reports, whether true or false, had a tendency to exasperate the border settlers against the whole tribe. Under the state of public sentiment then prevailing among the people, this feeling was but natural. Of course there are not included in this class, Quakers and Mennonites, for they believed that no provocation justified the taking of a human life. Nor is it proposed to justify the killing of these Indians, for it was an act wholly indefensible. Had the "Paxton Boys," under a competent leader like Col. Armstrong, instead of attacking these few Indians in the heart of a white settlement, gone to some of the Indian towns over the mountains and destroyed every living thing in them, they would have been regarded as heroes.

On the 18th day of December, A.D. 1763, a company of associators, commanded by Capt. Lazarus Stewart, and made up from the settlers in Paxtang, Hanover, and Donegal, started in the direction of Conestoga Indian town, to destroy the place and its people. It was a cold and blustery day, and before they arrived at the place of their destination it began to snow and sleet, and they were compelled to stop at the dwelling of a German farmer to warm themselves before they commenced their bloody work. In the morning before the break of day the town was surrounded, and the following-named Indians were shot and scalped, viz.: "Sheehays," "George," "Harry," a son of Sheehays, "Sally," an old woman, and another woman, making six victims. The buildings were all burned. A boy made his escape, and ran to the place of Capt. Thomas McKee, who lived near Lancaster borough, and was the manager of the "Indian furni," and gave the first alarm of the tragedy.

Matthias Slough selected the following-named jurors, and hastened to the scene on the morning of Dec. 14, 1763: Matthias Dehuffe, John Dehuffe, John Miller, Anthony Snyder, George Strickler, Wilton Atkinson, Christopher Crawford, Christian Wertz, Andrew Graffe, John Hambright, John Barr, Frederick Stone, James Ralph, Patrick Work.

The day before this affair Bill Sock and several other Indians went to Thomas Smith's Iron-Works in Martic township to sell baskets and brooms, and did not return to their town, and the Indians, John Smith and Peggy, his wife, and their child, and young Joe Hays were at Peter Swarr's, about two miles and a half northwest from Lancaster, and near the present Harrisburg turnpike. These Indians were greatly alarmed for their safety, and hastened to Lancaster, where they were placed in the work-house (attached to the jail) for safety.

The German with whom the "Paxton Boys" stopped to warm themselves did not suspect the nature of their mission. He went to his neighbor, Robert Barber, who resided in the brick house now used as an office by the Susquehanna Rolling-Mill, in the southeastern part of the borough of Columbia, and complained that some robbers had been at his house and melted some powder plates upon the stove, which they ran into bullets. He wanted Barber to go with him in pursuit of them. The latter only laughed at the German, and told him that they were only on a foolish frolic, and advised him to take no notice of the matter. He was scarcely gone when five or six men came into the house, leaving their guns outside. They were very cold, their coats covered with snow and sleet. Barber made up the fire, and gave them the customary morning refreshments. While they were in the house two of Barber's sons, aged ten and twelve years respectively, went out to look at their horses, which were hitched in a shed near the door.

After these strangers left these boys told their parents that there were tomahawks tied to their saddles, and they were all bloody, and that they had a small gun belonging to a little Indian named "Christy," who they well knew and were much attached to. He was their playmate, and participated in all their boyish sports. An hour later Mr. Herr, who resided in the Manor, brought the news of the dreadful deed. As the news spread over the eastern part of the province it caused great excitement among the Quakers and the colonial authorities. At this time it was the general opinion that the violence displayed by the "Paxton Boys" had spent its force, and that they would not dare to repeat or wreak their vengeance upon those who survived the massacre. It was little known how terribly in earnest these bordermen were, who had suffered the horrors of Indian warfare in all its phases. They did not disband, and as soon as they heard that their work was not completed, they made preparations to go to Lancaster, storm the jail, and wipe out of existence the remnant of the tribe that at one time held complete sway over numerous other tribes in Eastern Pennsylvania and Maryland. They were doomed, and the end was near.

Robert Beatty and John Miller, who resided in the Manor, were appointed by the Proprietors to "oversee" the Indian town and the lands belonging to the Indians. After the killing of the six Indians on the 14th of December, they gathered up the remnants of the tribe to the number of fourteen and placed them, as before stated, in the "work-house." John Hay, who was sheriff at that time, gave a list of the Indians in jail who were killed, to wit:

Captain John, Betty (his wife), Bill Sock, Molly (his wife), John Smith, Peggy (his wife), Little John (Captain John's son), Jacob, Christy, and Little Peter, boys, and Molly, Peggy, and another little girl, name not given. These were the English names as given by Peggy, wife of John Smith, and taken down by Sheriff Hay, who wrote to Governor John Penn on Dec. 27, 1768, stating that fifty or sixty men, armed with rifles and tomahawks, made their appearance suddenly in the town about two o'clock in the afternoon, and went immediately to the "work-house," and after a feeble resistance by the sheriff and coroner and a number of others, broke open the "work-house" and killed the fourteen Indians named.

They returned by the way they came. They were compelled to stand together in self-defense. They had the sympathy of the entire community along the border townships to sustain and encourage them. One of the strangest and most peculiar features which grew out of these transactions indicates in some measure the motives which governed and impelled the "Paxton Boys" to carry out to the bloody end their terrible work of annihilation. Some of them had been reading, no doubt, the laws of nations and the history of European conquests. The men who participated in these affairs were among the first to strike off the shackles of allegiance to the British crown and proclaim entire independence.

In the spring of 1764 a number of the Paxton Boys came down to Turkey Hill, took possession of the Indian farm and erected a number of log cabins, and made preparations to stay; and as they claimed to own the land by right of conquest, it was some time before they were dispossessed of this land by the Governor's orders, after which the Governor appointed Jacob Whisler, who lived in the neighborhood, overseer of the farm for five years.

On the 18th day of December, 1770, the Rev. Thomas Barton, the Episcopal minister in Lancaster, wrote to Edmund Physick, in Philadelphia (Penn's agent), to appoint him overseer of the farm for five or more years, with permission to plant or sow grain in some of the land for his own use. He stated that there were fifty acres which had been cleared for thirty years. When Barton took possession the fences had gone to decay, it had neither house, barn, or stable, except two cabins erected by the Paxton people. Mr. Barton built a commodious frame barn, lined with boards, and planted a small orchard of fifty grafted apple-trees, and fenced in a small garden. The Penns did not dispose of their interest in this farm until after the Revolutionary war.

CHAPTER III.

INDIAN TRADERS.

LANCASTER COUNTY was a prolific field for the operations of that adventurous class of people known as Indian traders. They formed what might be termed the picket line along the borders of civilization, and during the colonial period their influence was, in proportion to their numbers, greater than that of any other class in moulding public sentiment among the frontier settlers. The region of country which became Donegal township was the nursery of a large majority of traders, who were generally Scotch-Irish, and Presbyterian settlers of this nationality formed the skirmish line, which kept following up the traders and forced the savages beyond the mountains and the Allegheny. The right flank of this line was protected and supported by the Lutherans and German Presbyterians from Big Chikis Creek, where it entered Lebanon township. The left flank crossed the Susquehanna and moved as far south as the Maryland line. When the traders moved their stations to the Yellow Breeches Creek and Conococheague this skirmish line of Scotch-Irish moved forward and took possession of the Cumberland Valley.

The pioneer Indian traders in the territory now embraced in this county were Canadian Frenchmen, who first located along the Schuylkill and Brandywine. One of the most noted of them, Martin Chartière, married an Indian squaw. When the Shawanese came from the South and settled at Pequa Creek, he moved there and made his permanent residence among them. He spoke the Delaware language fluently, and acquired great influence with these Indians. The chief Logan was anxious to be upon good terms with him, and took especial pains to cultivate his friendship. The loan commissioners, who were the Penns' agents for the sale of their lands, gave him a large tract, extending from the mouth of Conestoga Creek several miles up the Susquehanna. He built his trading-post, and finally settled upon the farm afterwards owned by the Stehmans, at or near where they built a saw-mill in Washington borough. He died at this place in 1708. A message announcing his death was sent to Logan, who attended his funeral. He left all his property to his only son, Peter Chartière, who married a Shawanese squaw. Peter sold his farm in Manor to Stephen Atkinson in 1727, and moved to the mouth of Yellow Breeches Creek, and thence to Conococheague, thence to the Ohio. With the Shawanese Indians he went over to the French in the war of 1755-58. He was a source of great trouble to the Proprietors and to the English as long as he lived.

Peter Bazillion, who was also a French Canadian, settled near the Schuylkill, where he established a trading-post. He did not remain there long, but moved to East Caln township, in Chester County, and made his permanent home a few miles east of St. John's Episcopal Church, which was built principally by his wife Martha. He did not have his trading-post at his permanent place of residence, but his headquarters was among the Paxtang Indians. In 1719 a patent was granted to his wife Martha for seven hundred acres of land in Donegal township, a short distance below Canoy Creek, and adjoining the Canoy Indian town. She sold this land to the Brennemans and Hess. Peter Bazillion died at a great age in 1740, and was buried at St. John's Church, as was also his wife, who survived him several years. Both were members of the Church of England. They left no children.

James Le Tort was also a French Canadian. He located on the Brandywine, and from there he moved to Canoy Indian town, where he made his headquarters. His wife, Anno, took up nine hundred acres of land in Donegal, at Sparks' Mill, which afterwards came into possession of the Groves, Zieglers, Stehmans. Le Tort moved to the spring which bears his name near Carlisle, in Cumberland County. From there he moved to the forks of the North and West Branches of the Susquehanna River, where he established a store. Both he and Bazillion traveled frequently to the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, on which trading trips they were sometimes absent for a year or two. He was one of the few traders who kept a store in connection with his Indian trade near their field of operations.

Edmund Cartledge and his brother John were the only Quakers who embarked in trade with the Indians. Edmund was a justice of the peace for Chester County several years before Lancaster County was organized. He settled on the west side of the Conestoga Creek near its mouth, and a mile or two from the Conestoga Indian town. Several Indian conferences were held at his house. His brother John settled a few miles east of the Conestoga. When they were at the Monocacy, in Maryland, a drunken Indian came into their tent and wanted more "fire-water," which they refused to give him. Upon this he became very abusive and made an attack upon them, when they killed him. They were thrown into prison for this affair, but were finally released, and nothing further was done with them. The Indians themselves interceded in their behalf. Their intercourse with the Indians and border settlers seems to have led them astray from their early precepts. They never entirely recovered the public confidence after this affair, but they remained at the Conestoga for twenty years. None of their descendants now live in the county.

James Patterson located in 1717 about a mile back of Martin Chartière, along the northern boundary of Conestoga Manor. Here he had his trading post. He also took up several hundred acres of land opposite to this point in Conejohera Valley, on the west side of the Susquehanna River, where he kept the pack-horses which he used to bring the peltries which he purchased from the Indians along the Potomac River. A portion of this land was cleared for grazing purposes, a part only being inclosed with a fence.

When Col. Thomas Cresap came up from Maryland in 1730, he established a ferry and built his cabin near Patterson's land. The object of the Marylanders in sending Cresap and those who accompanied him to this point was to drive out all settlers under Penn and take possession of the land. They commenced operations by shooting several of Mr. Patterson's horses. As soon as Patterson heard of this he went to Justices John Wright and Samuel Blunston, at "Wright's Ferry," and procured a warrant for the arrest of a man named Lowe, who belonged to Cresap's party. Constable Jones, of Hempfield, Mr. Patterson and his son James, and several others went over the river and arrested Lowe in his house at night, forced him over the river on the ice, and took him to prison in Lancaster, where he was afterwards rescued from jail by a party of Marylanders. This was the commencement of the border troubles, sometimes called "Cresap's war." These troubles between the Marylanders and the Pennsylvanians increased, and entirely broke up Patterson's Indian trade on the west side of the river, and entailed great loss to him. His son James was taken prisoner and confined in "Cresap's Fort" for a short time.

In 1735, before the termination of these troubles, Mr. Patterson died at his home in the Manor. To his son James he gave three hundred acres of land along the Conococheague in Cumberland Valley, and he removed there immediately after his father's death. He was the father of Col. William Patterson, who settled on the Juniata, at Lewistown, and became a prominent officer in the French and Indian and Revolutionary wars. William's son, Robert, married Sarah Shippen, daughter of Robert Shippen. Mr. Patterson, superintendent of the Safe Harbor Iron-Works, is a descendant of Robert Patterson. James Patterson left another son, Thomas (who died in his minority), also three daughters, Susanna, married James Lowry, an Indian trader, who lived in Donegal; Sarah, married Benjamin Chambers, who settled at Chambersburg, Pa.; Rebecca, married John Keagy, who purchased the interest of her mother and sisters in the old mansion farm.

Peter Allen, another Indian trader, settled on the north side of Chikis Creek in 1718. He remained there trading with the Indians for several years, when he sold his land to Rev. James Anderson, who sold it to William Wilkins, an Indian trader, and who moved to the eastern base of the mountains above Harrisburg.

Jonas Davenport located at Canoy Creek in 1718. He was one of the first three English Indian traders who crossed the Allegheny Mountains to trade with the Indians at the Ohio. He met with many losses from hostile Indians. His ill treatment of a runaway apprentice alienated a number of his old friends. He finally lost the whole of his property, and died poor at Patrick Campbell's tavern, which stood near the dwelling of Simon Engle, near Canoy Creek.

Robert Wilkins, a trader with the Indians, first settled along the Conestoga Creek, upon land adjoining that of Richard Carter, who afterwards moved farther up the creek. In 1718, Wilkins took up two hundred acres of land along the Susquehanna River, which he sold, in 1727, to the Rev. James Anderson, whose descendants laid out the town of Marietta upon it.

William Wilkins was first "bound out" to the trader Edmond Carlidge. He was present when the Indian was killed by Carlidge at the Monocacy. Not long afterwards he purchased the Allen tract near Chikis, and commenced trading for himself. His principal trade was with the Indians of the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia. He moved to Peters township, in Cumberland County, where he died, leaving three sons,—James, Robert, and William. Janet, the widow of William Wilkins, afterwards married her first husband's administrator, Nathaniel Lytle, by whom she had a son, John. Lytle undertook to convey the Wilkins property to his son John. The heirs of William Wilkins contested the matter in the courts many years after their father's death, and Lytle was compelled to pay James Wilkins, the oldest son of William, to obtain his release. An act of Assembly was passed authorizing and legalizing a sale made by John Lytle to Andrew Hershey. John Lytle removed, in 1772, to Upper Paxtang, where he established a ferry across the Susquehanna River.

Thomas Wilkins took up one hundred and fifty acres on the north side of Robert Wilkins' tract (at Marietta) in 1718. This land was afterwards purchased by John Lowry, also an Indian trader. Thomas Wilkins, son of Robert, moved back several miles from the river and settled near Donegal Church. He died in 1746 and left children,—Andrew, John, Mary, and Elizabeth.

John, another son of Robert Wilkins, took up several hundred acres of land adjoining Gordon Howard's, now in Mount Joy township, where Nissley's mill is. He was one of the first persons who went with the sheriff's posse to arrest Col. Thomas Cresap. He was afterwards arrested by Cresap, who took him to Annapolis, where he was imprisoned. He traded with the Indians along the Ohio, and died in 1741, leaving children, Rachel and John, the latter of whom was born in Donegal in 1733. He was also an Indian trader, and removed to Carlisle in 1763, where he opened a store in the Indian trade. He was appointed county lieutenant for Cumberland during the Revolutionary war. In 1788 he removed to Pittsburgh, where he died in 1810. Peter Wilkins, with whom his father, Robert, lived, died in 1748, and left children,—William, James, and Margaret.

Isaac Miranda, a Huguenot Frenchman and an Indian trader, settled on the east bank of Canoy Creek, below Bridgeville, in 1715. He died in November, 1732. To his son George (who was also an Indian trader) he left a large tract of land along the Rahway River in New Jersey. To his son Samuel he gave five hundred acres of land in Donegal. To his daughter Mary he left several houses in Philadelphia, and to James Hamilton, Esq., who laid out Lancaster town, he gave several thousand acres of land in New Jersey and a large amount of personal property, provided he married his daughter Mary. At the time of his death he had upon his land at Canoy eight breeding mares and four horses, which he used for pack-horses in the Indian trade. His brother Joseph was steward to the Duke of Tuscany.

Henry Bealey was one of the first English Indian traders who crossed the mountains (in 1727) to trade with the Indians at the Ohio. He died in 1745.

John Burt first located near the Indian town in Manor, and took out a license to trade in 1726, but had been trading several years before that time. From there he moved to Snaketown (Harrisburg), where he established a post and store. On Monday, Sept. 11, 1727, a number of Indians had collected about his store, and he had sold them rum until they were in a state of boisterous drunkenness. A white man named Thomas Wright was as drunk as the Indians and was dancing with them, when Burt, the trader, exasperated them in the highest degree by throwing some filth among them. Wright, drunk as he was, took the alarm and fled; but he was too late,—the Indians pursued and killed him, though it does not appear that he had done anything to offend them. This is said to have been the first time the Indians had murdered a white man in Pennsylvania. Burt escaped, though he alone had caused the trouble by his wanton abuse of the Indians, whom he had brought to a state of frenzy by selling them too much rum, an offense for which he had been complained of often before. He became intemperate himself, and soon afterwards left his trading-post on the Susquehanna and removed to the Ohio.

Samuel Smith, Indian trader, also lived at Canoy, adjoining Miranda. He was a son of James Smith. He sold his property to Patrick Campbell.

Moses Combs, brother of Martha Bazaillon, had a trading-post near Canoy. He owned several hundred acres of land along the river. He died near St. John's Church, in East Caln, and was buried by the side of his sister Martha.

John Boggs, son of Andrew, commenced trading with the Indians in 1763. He traded along the Allegheny and Ohio. In 1784-85 he and Col. Alexander Lowry were chosen to bring the Indians to Fort McIntosh. He moved to Cumberland Valley, and became a prominent citizen there.

Lazarus Lowry came from the north of Ireland and settled in Donegal in 1729. He took up three hundred and thirty-three acres of land, now owned by the Hon. J. D. Cameron, about two miles from Marietta. He established a trading-post, and in 1730 took out a license to trade and also to sell liquor "by the small." His dwelling is still standing. He was remarkable for his energy, industry, and courage. He made frequent trips to the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, taking his sons, James, John, Daniel, and Alexander, with him. He owned several small farms adjoining his first purchase. His second marriage was to the widow of Thomas Edwards. He died in Philadelphia in 1755, leaving Lazarus, Thomas, Benjamin, William, and Martha, children by her.

John Lowry traded with his father, Lazarus, among the Indians west of the mountains before 1740. He owned four hundred acres of land along the Susquehanna, which now embraces the farms owned by Col. James Duffy and Benjamin F. Hiestand, the upper part of Marietta, and the land north of the Maytown turnpike. He also owned in connection with his father the land extending from Maytown to the Colebrook road. In 1750 he purchased from David Magaw some three hundred acres of land at Carlisle, where he intended to remove to and establish a store. This purchase was made while he was on his way to the Ohio to trade with the Indians. When he arrived at his destination he found that the Shawanese and Delaware Indians were inclined to adhere to the French interest and were clearly hostile to the English. While he was seated near a keg of powder an Indian applied a match, and an explosion followed which killed him. He left a wife, Elizabeth, but no children. A curious incident grew out of this affair. On the 18th of August, 1750, Capt. William Trent wrote a letter to the Lieutenant-Governor, dated at Lancaster, in which he says, "A few days ago some of Lowry's traders came in from the woods. They had a Frenchman in company who says he was a French trader, and was put in irons and confined for disobeying the orders of the commander of the fort where he traded. He made his escape to the Picts, who were friends of the English. Some wanted to put him to death for a spy, others wanted him delivered to James Lowry, to be kept till the man that killed his brother John was given up. He's in Lowry's possession now." He was held as a hostage by Mr. Lowry in Donegal for some weeks, but when he found that keeping him in captivity would not compel the French to surrender the Indian who killed his brother John, he set the savage free.

James Lowry, son of Lazarus, married Susanna, daughter of James Patterson, the Indian trader. He bought several hundred acres of land along the Susquehanna River from James Logan, which was a part of James Le Tort's tract of nine hundred acres, a few miles above Marietta. He had great influence with the Indians along the Ohio, and he and George Croghan prevented some of the tribes from going over to the French. The French commander at Detroit offered a large reward for the arrest of those two traders. Lowry was compelled to abandon that field, and transfer his trade to the Catawbas, in Carolina. On the 26th day of January, 1753, when Daniel Hendricks, Jacob Evans, William Powell, Thomas Hyde, Alexander Maginty, and James Lowry were on their return from a trading journey among the Catawbas, and were encamped on the south bank of Kentucky River, about twenty miles from Blue Lick town, with a large stock of goods, skins, and furs, they were attacked by the French Caughnawaga Indians, and were taken prisoners. A few were wounded on both sides. While these prisoners were on their way to Detroit, Lowry made his escape, and returned to his home in Donegal. The others were not so lucky. Jacob Evans and Thomas Hyde were sold to Monsieur Celeron, the French commander at Detroit; the others were taken to Montreal. Jacob Evans and Thomas Hyde were sent prisoners to France. Powell, Jabez Evans, and Maginty were distributed among the Indians in the northern part of New York. Maginty communicated these facts to the Governor and Council of Pennsylvania, who sent Conrad Weiser to Albany to inquire about the matter, and if possible procure the release of the captive traders, all of whom belonged to Lancaster County. Weiser found that Jabez Evans was adopted by a squaw, and had some difficulty to get him away. All these traders except Lowry were financially ruined by their misfortunes. Maginty afterwards became prominent in Cumberland Valley.

In a letter which Capt. Stobo wrote when a prisoner at Fort Duquesno, dated July 29, 1754, he says that the Indians under John, a Mingo Indian, made an attack upon Lowry's traders at Gist's, and took Andrew McBrier, Nehemiah Stevens, John Kennedy, and Elizabeth Williams prisoners. Several persons were killed. Kennedy was shot through the leg, and was left at Fort Duquesno until he was able to be moved; the others were sent to Canada. The Indians demanded a ransom of forty pistoles for each. They were employed by James, Daniel, and Alexander Lowry. Their goods were all destroyed. These frequent losses were too much for James Lowry. He sold his land in Donegal, and moved away about the year 1758.

Daniel Lowry owned three hundred acres of land adjoining Hon. Simon Cameron's farm on the north. He afterwards sold this farm and purchased the one previously owned by his brother, John, who was then dead. His losses were very heavy in the West. When Col. James Burd had command of Fort Augusta (Sunbury), in 1757-58, Daniel Lowry had a fleet of bateaux, and supplied the soldiers with provisions. His brother Alexander purchased his farm on the 5th day of June, 1759. He moved to the Juniata. The late John G. Lowry, of Centre County, was his son.

Alexander Lowry was the most prominent of these brothers. He commenced to trade with the Indians about the year 1744. He had made frequent trips to the Indian country for his father and brothers before this and when yet a minor. He acquired the Indian language readily, and could speak the tongue of several tribes. He at once became a great favorite with the Indians, and participated with them in their sports, and hunted and trapped with them. He established trading stations at Forts Pitt and Carlisle, and employed men to visit various tribes and trade for him. He went as far west as Kaskaskia and Fort Chartres, on the Mississippi. Although he frequently went among hostile tribes, he never was molested but once by Indians, and then he only saved his life by his courage and fleetness of foot. After his father's death he purchased his mansion, farm, and other property belonging to his estate, and from that period accumulated large tracts of land, and notwithstanding his great losses by the Indians at "Bloody Run" in 1763, he steadily added to his wealth. His losses alone at Bloody Run amounted to over eight thousand pounds, and his subsequent heavy losses grow out of this affair by reason of money advanced to some of the other sufferers, and money expended to establish a title and get possession of certain large tracts of land in Virginia. He followed the Indian trade for more than forty years, and was much of this time interested with his life-long friend, Joseph Simons, an Indian trader, who resided in Lancaster. When these two men had passed their threescore and ten, they selected three friends, among whom was the late Adam Reigart, to settle their transactions, which had run through this long period. When they came before these friends they stated verbally (for neither had a written account) all of their transactions with each other. There was no dispute or difference between them, and then and there they made an arrangement of their affairs that could not be disturbed by their heirs had they been disposed to do so.

Col. James Hamilton, of Lencock township, opened a trading-post at Canawago, where he owned a farm and a large island opposite to it, which is now owned by Col. James Duffy. He carried on his trade with the Indians at and in the vicinity of the Forks of the Ohio, where he established a store.

Joseph Simons was one of the richest and most prominent Indian traders in the province. He came to Lancaster about the year 1740, and at once embarked in the Indian trade. He also established a store at the southeast corner of Penn Square, and subsequently another one on the southwest corner. He made frequent trips to the Ohio and Illinois country. He also had an interest in several other stores in the Indian territory in connection with Gratz, Frank, Eiting, Callender, Trent, and others. His real estate transactions were on a grand scale, and at one time he owned many thousands of acres of land. He was one of the twenty-two Indian traders who were attacked by the Indians at Bloody Run in 1763, and lost a large amount of goods. He died in Lancaster in 1804.

Thomas Harris established a trading-post at Conewago Creek, at a point where the Paxtang and Conestoga road crossed. He became one of the wealthiest of the Indian traders. He left Donegal and removed to Harford County, Md., before the Revolution, and from thence he went to Baltimore. He had several sons, who became eminent physicians, one of whom remained in Baltimore, another removed to Philadelphia, another to New Brunswick. Some of them were prominent officers in the Revolutionary army.

Barnabas Hughes, who kept tavern at Canoy Creek (now Elizabethtown), was also an Indian trader.

John Galbraith, son of James Galbraith, Jr., located at the mouth of Canoy Creek, where he had an Indian trading-post as early as 1760. He removed to Cumberland Valley. James Galbraith, father of the above, was also an Indian trader, but did not follow the business for any length of time.

Col. John Gibson removed to the Forks of the Ohio before the Revolutionary war. He was an Indian fighter as well as an Indian trader. He was born in Lancaster borough. It has been said that it was to him that the chief Logan delivered his famous speech on the murder of his relatives. Gibson and Logan were intimate and warm friends. He had great influence with the Indians, but knew how to punish them when they misbehaved. Col. Gibson's field of operations during the Revolutionary war was with the Western army.

Col. George Gibson, brother of John, was also born in Lancaster, and became an Indian trader and fighter. He married a daughter of Francis West, and settled at Shearman's Creek, in Perry County. He commanded a regiment during the Revolutionary war, and was in a number of battles. He was killed at "St. Clair's defeat." He was the father of John Bannister Gibson, chief justice of the State.

John Kennedy, who had been trading for Lazarus Lowry for some years, became a trader on his own account. He purchased the farm upon which Maytown is built, from Lazarus Lowry. After being wounded and captured by the Indians he raised a company and fought through the Indian wars.

Dennis Sullivan owned at one time the farm sold to John Kennedy. He traded on the Ohio, and lost everything by the Indians.

James Harris, an Indian trader, had his post near James Le Tort's, about two miles west from Maytown.

Gordon Howard was one of the earliest and most prominent of the Indian traders. He lived on and owned the farm now owned by Mr. Hershey, two miles west from Mount Joy.

Simon Girty, the notorious renegade, was an Indian trader, located at one time in Lancaster County, having his post on the Conowago. From there he moved to Shearman's Creek, and thence to the theatre of his later infamy in the territory beyond the Ohio.

CHAPTER IV.

PIONEER SETTLEMENTS—ERECTOR OF THE COUNTY —ESTABLISHMENT OF THE COUNTY-SEAT.

THE earliest white settlements within the territory now embraced in the county of Lancaster were made by people called (on account of their religious belief) Mennonites, who had emigrated to America from Switzerland and the Palatinate. The first of these who settled here came in 1709, and they were followed in the next and succeeding years by others of the same people. They were not only the first, but were also more numerous than any other class of the pioneer settlers in this region. Their earliest settlements were made along Little Beaver Creek, and where the city of Lancaster now stands, from which localities they afterwards spread over other parts of the county.

Next after the Mennonites came a number of French Huguenots from the departments of Alsace and Lorraine. These settled in Pequea Valley. During the then pending struggle between England and Catholic France these French-speaking people (as also the Mennonite settlers, in less degree) were, on account of their language, suspected by the colonial authorities of sympathy, if not complicity, with the French. For this reason they were compelled to take the oath of allegiance to the king of Great Britain, and to submit to other restrictions which were somewhat unpleasant to them. The suspicions against them (which afterwards proved to be wholly unfounded and unjust) were increased by the fact that upon their arrival in this country they made little if any stop in Philadelphia, but in their eagerness to secure homes pressed on without delay towards the frontier, and not infrequently took up lands without the proper authority for doing so.

The Scotch-Irish people who came to Pennsylvania on the invitation of the first Proprietary first entered this region in 1715, and pushing on past the Mennonite and Huguenot settlements, located themselves on Chikis Creek, along which stream they soon after spread themselves for a distance of eight or nine miles from its mouth. A few years later a cordon of settlements of these people (who were all Presbyterians) had been made and extended along Octopara Creek from Sadsbury to the Susquehanna, and thence along the river to the Conestoga. These people had been encouraged by the authorities to settle near the disputed boundary line between Maryland and Pennsylvania, because it was believed they would be more disposed and better able to defend the settlements against the Catholic Marylanders than would either the Huguenots, the Friends, or the Mennonites.

Nearly simultaneously with the coming of the first Scotch-Irish immigrants to this region, a number of English Quaker families settled in Salisbury and Sadsbury townships. They were followed, about 1717, by a body of Welsh Episcopalians, who settled in what is now Caernarvon township.

All the settlements above mentioned were made within the jurisdiction of the original county of Chester,<sup>1</sup> which then comprehended all of the present county of Lancaster, and extended thence indefinitely west and northwest. In 1718 a part of that county was laid off and erected into Conestoga<sup>2</sup> township, embracing all that portion lying west of Octorara Creek, and extending northward to and including the Welsh settlements along the eastern branch of the Conestoga. The first assessment in Conestoga township was made in 1718, and shows approximately the names of the heads of families and single men who were then living in what is now the county of Lancaster:

<sup>1</sup> The boundaries of this old township were not clearly defined, but it included the settlements along Pequea Creek and its branches (now in Salisbury township). It is not to be identified in any way with the present township of the same name, which was erected more than one hundred and thirty years later.

During this period settlers, as soon as they arrived at Philadelphia, hurried forward to the forests along Conestoga, Pequea, Beaver, and Mill Creeks, where the earliest settlers located, and each commenced to battle with the forest and clear a small piece of land for cultivation. The German settlers invariably followed the streams, large and small. It was always a struggle with the pioneers of these settlements to build homes and secure subsistence. One of the first things they did was to erect along these streams at convenient distances grist- and saw-mills, and occasionally we find a fulling-mill, an oil-mill, and hemp-mill. All was peace and quiet, and every one was earnestly engaged in securing a comfortable home. These little communities were generally made up of persons professing some form of the religious belief of Protestants. They were distinct in manners and customs. Members of the Lutheran and German Reformed Churches formed a general community, and when their respective congregations were few in numbers and poor in worldly goods, they worshiped alternately in the same meeting-house.

As the white settlements increased in number and extent the old Indian villages became surrounded, their hunting-grounds circumscribed, and game comparatively scarce. This had the effect to create great dissatisfaction among the sons of the forest. They gradually ceased to hunt for game in this region and became persistent beggars among the settlers. They made brooms and willow baskets, which they bartered for food and fire-water, but they depended upon the colonial authorities to furnish them with what little clothing they had or needed. This restlessness among the Indians and the settlers, who were constantly pushing farther back into the forests, was destined in a few years to give the Proprietors of the province a great deal of trouble. It must not be forgotten that during the period in question, and while this was a part of Chester County, the Proprietors had not purchased from the Indians the lands on the west side of the Susquehanna River, and in accordance with their earliest compacts with them they did not sell or permit settlers to locate upon the land until they had first purchased it from the savages. One of the most difficult problems the Penns had to deal with was to hold back or prevent persons from locating upon these lands, and in this attempt they were only partially and temporarily successful.

Occasionally a settler crossed to the west side of the river to hunt for game, and when they returned to their homes on the east side they ever set longing eyes upon the land on the west side of the river. Among these was a person named John Grist, who went over the river to Conejehela Valley and built a cabin. Several others followed, and they became very abusive to the Indians who went there to hunt. The Indians made complaint to the Governor and Council, who took immediate measures to dispossess them. About the same time it came to the knowledge of the Governor that the Marylanders intended to settle upon the land upon the west side of the river, and many miles above the division line. With the consent of the Indians, immediate measures were taken to lay out the land in dispute upon the west side of the river into a manor. The object of this was to give the Penns a prior claim, and to prevent settlers from going there. No person who settled upon any of the Proprietors' manors could procure a title to their land without first obtaining their consent. Governor Keith took the surveyor-general with him and hastened to the Susquehanna. On the 4th of April, 1722, they crossed the river and surveyed five hundred acres for Governor Keith's own use, near Codonus Creek. They returned and met the Indians at Conestoga, and told them what they had done. The Indians became alarmed at the encroachments of the Marylanders, and a council was held with the Indians at Conestoga, June 15, 1722. In pursuance thereof, Governor Keith issued an order to Col. John French, Francis Worley, and James Mitchell (June 20, 1722), directing them to proceed to the west side of the river and lay out a tract of land containing about seventy thousand acres, to be called "Springett Manor."

In the year 1723 a number of Germans, who came from Schoharie, N. Y., settled along Tulpehocken Creek, upon lands not yet purchased from the Indians. They soon received the attention of the Proprietors. Most of these Germans were Lutherans, and members of the German Reformed Church, and there were with them a few Jews. They were industrious and not disposed to antagonize the Proprietors' interests, and hence they gave them but little trouble. The land they settled upon was laid out into a manor, and after the title from the Indians was purchased it was divided into small tracts and sold to the settlers upon very reasonable terms.

A few years later a large number of German emigrants, who landed in Philadelphia, traveled to the Susquehanna, crossed the river, and took up the land in the valley extending to Codom's Creek at York. They knew they had no right to settle there without the consent of the Proprietors of Pennsylvania, but they did not seek their consent nor ask for warrants of survey, but went to Maryland and obtained patents upon very liberal terms, which the agents of Lord Baltimore were very willing to grant for lands that lay many miles above the northern boundary of Maryland.

When the Proprietors found that these Germans had acknowledged the jurisdiction of Lord Baltimore over these lands by paying quit-rents to his Lieutenant-Governor, they took measures to prevent the Marylanders from getting a foothold in the valley. This movement alarmed the Germans, and many of them renounced allegiance to Maryland and sought protection from Pennsylvania. The land commissioners refused to issue any patents for land to them for reasons heretofore stated, but the Proprietors directed Samuel Blunston, Esq., who resided at Wright's Ferry (now Columbia), to give actual settlers tickets, which authorized the commissioners to issue to the holder a patent for the land when it could properly be placed in the market for sale. This change in the German movement soon led to a conflict between the Marylanders and the Pennsylvanians, and culminated in what is known as Cresap's war. The Germans suffered in person and estate, but they alone were to blame for it by their vacillating conduct.

The Proprietors found a harder problem to solve in the Scotch-Irish who settled in Donegal. They took up the land, and refused to apply for, or take out, warrants, nor would they consent to pay any quit-rents, although they paid the provincial and county taxes readily. It was fifteen or more years before these differences were amicably adjusted.

Up to the period when the county was organized, there was no white settlement which assumed the dignity of a town or village. The settlers went many miles to church, where once a week the neighbors met to worship and to greet each other. They were in constant dread of attacks from the wild beasts of the forest, which prowled around their log cabins at night and destroyed or carried away their fowls and domestic animals.

It has always been the policy of the courts to offer bounties for the scalps of wild animals which disturb new settlements, in the hope that these inducements will stimulate the hunters to destroy them. The following copy of receipts for scalps indicates the kind of animals which disturbed the slumbers of the early settlers here:

"CHESTER, 22.

"CONESTOGA, January ye 1st, 1722.

"Rec<sup>d</sup> then of Nathaniel Christophers one wolfe's head fresh killed by ye same hee says hee himself killed in ye Inhabitable part of ye sd county to pay him for ye same as ye law directs, as witness my hand the day afores<sup>d</sup>.

"JOHN CARTLIDGE."

"August ye 12th, 1722.

"Then Received of Joseph Hickman a wolf which was coat near Pecquay and therefor disers his pay according to law.

"FRANCIS MORLEY."

Cartlidge and Morley were both justices, and lived on or near the Conestoga.

There was paid to Stephen Atkinson, who had a fulling-mill upon the Conestoga a few miles below Lancaster, two pounds "for two wolfs, 5 mo. 30, 1722." There was paid from March 10, to July 20, 1722, fifty-nine pounds ten shillings, for the scalps of wolves, some of them being young ones at half price, or ten shillings. More than half the payments were to Indians. During the same period there was paid for foxes at the rate of two shillings for old and one shilling for young ones, five pounds fourteen shillings. After the organization of the county, the bounties paid for wolves, fox, and squirrel scalps increased largely, and became rather a burden upon the taxpayers. About the period of the Revolutionary war wolves within the present limits of the county were nearly exterminated. Occasionally a stray one wandered in from a neighboring district, but he was soon dispatched by the settlers.

In and after the year 1725 the settlements within the present territory of Lancaster County increased and spread with much more rapidity than before, but up to the year named, and for four years afterwards, there were (as has already been mentioned) no towns or villages built or laid out; and the most important, as also the most widely-known, points were those where taverns (or "ordinaries," as they were then often called) had been opened, to meet the requirements of ever-increasing volumes of immigration and travel, along the routes of which they were generally located. One of these was kept by John Postlethwait at a point on Conestoga Creek, near Rockville, in Conestoga township. This was at that time one of the best known and most important places west of the Octorara, and was soon afterwards strongly recommended as the most proper and eligible site for the seat of justice of Lancaster County. There was a public-house kept by Francis Jones at the Gap; another by Wendell Bowman in what is now Strasburg township. In Beaver Valley, in the same township, Samuel Taylor had a tavern and a grist-mill. Mary Denny kept an "ordinary" in Donegal township, near Chikis Creek. There were three or four taverns along the old Peters' road. John Galbreath was located near Chikis; Samuel Smith kept public-house at Canoy; Jacob Bear lived and kept tavern near where the old Peters' road crossed the Horse-shoe road. Christian Stoneman lived in Hempfield township, where he had a public-house, and a mill on the Little Conestoga. The grist-mills were places of note fully as widely known as the taverns, and much more useful to the community than the latter. Both were places where the settlers in the new country met and intermingled more freely and generally than anywhere also excepting only the places of public religious worship. Of church edifices, or "meeting-houses," as they were called, few, if any, had been built in this region at the time referred to, the services of the different denominations being held at the dwellings of settlers centrally and conveniently located.

Erection of the County.—In 1728 the project of forming a new county from the western part of Chester began to be warmly discussed and urged. The principal reason why this was regarded as necessary, was that the settlements had been extended to parts of the county very remote from the seat of justice. And the inconveniences and hardships to which the inhabitants of the western part of the county were subjected from this cause were set forth and explained in the "Petition of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of y<sup>e</sup> Upper Parts of Chester County," presented before Lieutenant-Governor Patrick Gordon, and the Council at Philadelphia, on the 6th of February, 1729, as follows: "That by reason of their great distance from y<sup>e</sup> County Town, where Courts are held; Offices are kept and annual elections made, they lie under very great Inconveniences, being obliged in the recovery of their just Debts to travel near One Hundred Miles to obtain a Writ; that for want of a sufficient number of Justices, Constables, and other Officers in those parts, no care is taken of y<sup>e</sup> highways; Townships are not laid out nor bridges built when there is an apparent Necessity for them; and further, that for want of a Gaol there several Vagabonds and other Dissolute people harbour among them, thinking themselves safe from Justice in so remote a Place." For which reasons the petitioners prayed for the partition of Chester County, and the erection of a new county from the upper part of it.

Upon this petition the board resolved "that, as well for the reasons set forth in said petition as the security, peace, and good order of the whole government, there doth appear a real necessity that a new county should be erected according to the prayer of said petition, and although the power of erecting counties is wholly vested in the Proprietary, and therefore in the Governor as his Lieutenant, yet, inasmuch as this will require the establishment of Courts of Judicature, with other alterations for which a due provision will best be made by a law, it may be convenient that the Governor should acquaint the House of Representatives, now sitting, with the application made to him, that the same may be carried on with and strengthened by the joint and unanimous concurrence of the whole Legislature." Accordingly, the Governor "acquainted the House of Representatives with his intention to erect the upper part of the county of Chester into a separate county." The House concurred, and desired the Governor to appoint a commission to run a division line to be described in the proposed act of erection. Therefore the Governor and Council appointed twelve commissioners, who were to be assisted in running the line by John Taylor, Esq., surveyor of Chester County. The commissioners so appointed were Henry Hayes, Samuel Nutt, Samuel Hollingsworth, Phillip Taylor, Elisha Gatchel, James James, John Wright, Tobias Hendricks, Samuel Blunston, Andrew Cornish, Thomas Edwards, and John Musgrave, the last-named six being residents within the territory of the proposed new county, and the others citizens of that part of Chester lying east of the Octorara. The Governor could not have made a better selection of men to compose the commission. Several of them were practical land-surveyors, and nearly all of them were in commission as justices of the peace. Some of them were members of the Legislature, and each and every one was an honest and reputable citizen.

The commissioners proceeded to perform the duty assigned them, and on the 2d of May, 1729, presented to the Governor and Council a report (signed by all of them except Samuel Nutt), setting forth that they had "met together on the 17th day of March, 1728-9, near the head of the Northern Branch of Octoraro Creek, and with the assistance of John Taylor, surveyor of the county of Chester, run a line from the said branch to the river Schuylkill according to the courses following, viz.: Beginning on a corner marked white-oak, standing on the eastern side of the said branch, on the land of John Minshall; thence" (here reciting a number of courses and distances) "to a corner marked white-oak, standing by the said river Schuylkill, about three-quarters of a mile below the house of John Burroughs."

The report was laid before the House of Representatives, and on the 10th of May, 1729, "An Act for erecting the Upper Parts of the Province of Pennsylvania, lying towards Susquehanna, Conestogoe, Dunnegal, etc., into a county" was passed into a law of the province "by the Honourable Patrick Gordon, Esq., Governour of the Province of Pennsylvania, etc., by and with the advice and consent of the Freeman of the said Province, in General Assembly met, and by the Authority of the same." This act provided and declared "that all and singular, the lands within the Province of Pennsylvania lying to the Northward of Octoraro Creek, and to the Westward of a line of marked trees running from the North Branch of the said Octoraro Creek northeasterly to the River Schuylkill, be erected into a county, and the same is hereby erected into a county, named and from henceforth to be called LANCASTER COUNTY;<sup>1</sup> and the said Octoraro Creek, the line of marked trees, and the river Schuylkill aforesaid, shall be the Boundary Line or Division between the said County and the counties of Chester and Philadelphia."

years from the time of its erection, embraced a vast territory, extending south and west as far as the limits of the province of Pennsylvania. The first reduction of its immense area was made by the erection of York County from a part of its territory Aug. 19, 1749. Again, Jan. 27, 1750, it was diminished by the erection of Cumberland County. Two years later Berks County was erected (March 11, 1752), from parts of the counties of Philadelphia and Bucks and the northern and northeastern portions of Lancaster. Its area was further diminished by the erection (March 21, 1772) of Northumberland County from parts of Lancaster, Cumberland, Berks, Bedford, and Northampton. Another part of its territory was taken to form the county of Dauphin, March 4, 1785; and finally by the erection of Lebanon County, Feb. 16, 1813, from parts of Dauphin and Lancaster, the latter county was reduced to its present limits.

Immediately after the erection of the new county the following-named persons were appointed magistrates, viz., John Wright, Samuel Blunston, Tobias Hendricks, Andrew Cornish, Thomas Edwards, Caleb Pearce, Thomas Reid, Samuel Jones. These magistrates at once proceeded to call a public meeting of the most prominent inhabitants, who met at the tavern of John Postlethwait, near Conestoga Creek, in Conestoga township, on the 9th day of June, 1729, to agree upon the names of townships, and define their respective boundaries. The magistrates' court met at Postlethwait's on the 5th day August, 1729, and duly confirmed the report of the meeting of June 9th, which was as follows:

"Boundaries of the Townships in Lancaster County, as they were settled and agreed upon by the Magistrates and Inhabitants of the said county on the 9th day of June, and confirmed by the Court of Quarter Sessions the First of August ensuing, Anno Domini, 1729:

"1. DRUMORE.—The township of Drumore, beginning at the south line of Sadsbury by Octoraro, thence down the said creek to the province line towards Maryland, thence up the Sasquehanah to the mouth of Muddy Run, thence by the said run to Richard Becson's land, and from thence on a direct course to the southwest corner of John Keyl's land on Sadsbury line, and by the said line to the place of beginning.

"2. SADBURY.—The township of Sadsbury beginning by the county line at the mountain which divides Octoraro and Pequea, thence westerly along the said mountain to the northwest corner of John Keyl's land, thence by said land to the southwest corner, and from thence south 200 perches, thence east to Octoraro, thence up the said county line, and along the said line to said place of beginning.

"3. MARTOCK.—The township of Martock, beginning at the mouth of Muddy run, thence up Sasquehanah to Pequea, thence up Pequea to the mouth of Great Beaver creek, thence up the said creek to Sadsbury line, then by the said line to John Keyl's corner aforesaid, thence by Drumore township to the place of beginning.

"4. CONESTOGA.—The township of Conestoga, beginning at the mouth of Pequea, thence up Sasquehanah to Chickasalunge, thence up the said creek to Peters' Road by the Log Cabins, thence to Little Conestoga, and down the same to the Manor line, and thence down the same line to Great Conestoga, and down the same to the place of beginning.

"5. HEMPFIELD.—The township of Hempfield, beginning at the mouth of Conestoga, thence up Sasquehanah to Chickasalunge, thence up the said creek to Peters' Road by the Log Cabins, thence to Little Conestoga, and down the same to the Manor line, and thence down the same line to Great Conestoga, and down the same to the place of beginning.

"6. DONEGAL.—The township of Donegal, beginning at the mouth of the Chickasalunge, thence up the East Branch to Peters' Road, thence (taking in the present inhabitants) on a northerly course to Conewago, thence by the same and the said river to the place of beginning.

"7. DERRY.—The township of Derry, beginning at the mouth of Conewago, thence up Sasquehanah to the mouth of Suataaro, thence up Suataaro to the mouth of Quetopohello, thence south on a direct line to Conewago, and down the same to the place of beginning<sup>1</sup>

"8. PESHTANE.—The township of Peshtank,<sup>2</sup> beginning at the mouth of Suataaro, thence up the river to Kehtohtoning hill above Peter Allens, thence eastward by the south side of said hill to the meridian of Quetopohello mouth, thence on a south course to the mouth of the same at Suataaro, and down Suataaro to the beginning.

"9. LEBANON.—Lebanon<sup>2</sup> township, beginning under the aforesaid hill at the northeast corner of Peshtank, thence by the said hill easterly to the meridian of the west line of Tolpehockan manor, thence southerly and by the said line to the hills bounding Warwick township, thence by the said hills and township westerly to the corner of Derry on Conewago, thence northerly by Derry and Peshtank to the place of beginning.

"10. EARL.—Earl township, beginning at Peters' Road by Conestoga creek, being a corner of Leacock township, thence up Conestoga creek and up Muddy creek to the Indian Path, thence along the southern branch of said creek to the brow of Turkey Hill, thence southerly in a direct course to the northeast corner of Thomas Edwards' land, and by the said land southerly over Conestoga creek to another corner of said land, thence on a direct course to the corner of the west line of Nathan Evans' land, then by the said land and along southerly to the top of the mountain, thence westerly along the said mountain by Salisbury line to David Cowen's west corner, thence to Peters' Road and along the same to the place of beginning.

"11. WARWICK.—Warwick township, beginning by Conestoga creek at a corner of Manheim township by Peters' Road, thence up by the west side of Conestoga to Hans Graff's mill, thence up a northerly branch to David Pries's mill, thence westerly along the hills by Lebanon township to Derry, thence southerly to Donegal to the aforesaid road, thence along the said road easterly to the place of beginning.

"12. MANHEIM.—Manheim township, beginning by Peters' Road at a corner of Donegal and Warwick townships near the head of Little Conestoga, thence along the said road by Warwick township to Conestoga creek, thence down the said creek to the Old Doctor's Ford, thence westerly by Lancaster township on a direct line to Little Conestoga at the upper side of Peter Bomgarner's land, thence up the said creek to the place of beginning.

"13. LANCASTER.—Lancaster township, beginning at the Old Doctor's Ford, thence down the west side of Conestoga to the Manor line, thence by the said line to Little Conestoga, thence up the said creek by Hempfield township to Manheim township, thence by the said township to the place of beginning.

"14. LEACOCK.—Leacock township, beginning at the mouth of Beaver creek, thence up the east side of Pequea to Philip Fairo's lower corner, thence west by Lampeter township to Conestoga creek at the upper corner of George Baud's land, thence up the said creek to Peters' Road, thence easterly along the said road by Earl township to David Cowen's land, thence southerly and westerly by Salisbury, Sadsbury and Martock townships to the place of beginning.

"15. LAMPETER.—Lampeter township, beginning at the mouth of Mill creek at a corner of Conestoga township, thence up the east side of Conestoga creek to Leacock township, thence easterly by the said township to Pequea, thence down Pequea by the said township to Beaver creek, thence by Conestoga township to the place of beginning.

"16. SALISBURY.—Salisbury township, beginning at the county line at the northeasterly corner of Sadsbury township, thence northerly along the said line to the mountain at Brandywine head, thence westerly by Caernarvon township along the said mountain to a corner of Leacock township by David Cowin, thence by the said township southerly to the east lino of Thomas Story's land, thence continuing by the said township along another mountain to Sadsbury line, thence by the said line easterly to the place of beginning.

"17. CAERNARVON.—Caernarvon township, beginning at the county line at a corner of Salisbury on the mountain, thence northerly along the said line to the northeast corner of Cadwaleder Elis's land, thence westerly by — township along a ridge of mountains to Earl township at the northeast corner of Thomas Edwards' land, thence southerly by the said township to the corner of Leacock and Salisbury township, thence easterly by Salisbury and along the said mountain to the place of beginning."

This list is the only one on record of the first divisions of the county. It is not full and complete, but is only the result of the deliberations of the June meeting. No mention is made of Robinson, Berne, and Tulpehocken townships, which were erected before the county was set off, and are now in Berks County. Conestoga, Donegal, and Pequea had also been previously erected as townships of Chester County. The first two were reduced in area, and continued as townships of Lancaster County. The territory of Pequea was absorbed chiefly in Salisbury, and the name ceased to exist among those of the townships of the county until 1853, when the new township of Pequea was erected.

Cocalico township was erected in the fall of 1729, but there seems to be no record of the fact upon the Quarter Session minutes. There is, however, abundant evidence that it was in existence then, for in 1729 the magistrate appointed a constable and overseers of the poor for Cocalico township. In naming the townships, the magistrates generally selected names of places where they, or any considerable number of the settlers, came from in the British empire or Germany. Some, however, took their names from local circumstances.

Robert Barber, who resided near Wright's Ferry, was appointed sheriff until the election, which was to take place the first week in the ensuing month of October. Andrew Galbraith, who lived about one-fourth of a mile east from Donegal Church, was appointed coroner. Oct. 4, 1729, Robert Barber and John Galbraith were returned for sheriff. The former was commissioned on the same day. Joshua Lowe, of Hempfield township, was elected and commissioned coroner.

The commissioners elected in October, 1729, were John Postlethwait, Conestoga; John Davis, Caernarvon; Andrew Cornish, Conestoga; George Stewart, Donegal. The first person named was selected president of the county board.

One of the most important offices held was that of assessor. They were elected upon a general ticket with other officers. The very best citizens were selected for this office. They laid the assessments and placed a valuation upon the land. The board of assessors for a few years sat only in Lancaster borough, but as the settlements extended, appeals were held at some convenient place in the respective townships by one or more of their members. The first appeal was held at the house of Jacob Funks, Jan. 13, 1730.

The assessors for 1729 were: Patrick Campbell, Donegal; Joshua Lowe, Hempfield; Richard Huff, John Dearer, John Callwell, Isaac Robinson, Salisbury. The assessment and valuation of property for 1729 amounted to £201 9s. 4d.

The first clerk to the board of commissioners and assessors was Richard Marsden. The first grand jury drawn were: James Mitchell, Donegal; George Stewart, Donegal; Edward Smout, Hempfield; Edmund Cartlidge, Conestoga; Andrew Galbraith, Donegal; Thomas Baldwin, Conestoga; John Hendricks, Hempfield; James Hendricks, Hempfield; Francis Jones, Sadsbury; Samuel Taylor, Strasburg; James Roddy, Donegal; Patrick Campbell, Donegal; William Hay, Paxtang; John Galbraith, Donegal; Matthew Atkinson, Conestoga; Ephraim Moore, Donegal. Only four of this number were members of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, whose principles sat lightly upon their shoulders. They were all disowned or "read out" of the Society afterwards, generally for some trivial offense. The name of any German does not appear in this list. It is presumed that the Mennonites declined to serve as jurors.

There were Lutherans and members of the Reformed Church living in the northern section of the county who did not have any scruples against serving as jurors, but on account, probably, of their living many miles away from the place where the court was held they were not summoned. The duties and responsibilities of this body devolved upon the Scotch-Irish.

The first case tried in Lancaster County before a petit jury was that of Morris Cannady, against whom a true bill was found for larceny. The jurors called to try this case were John Lawrence (Paxtang), Robert Blackshaw, Thomas Gale (Lampeter), John Mitchell (Donegal), Joseph Burton, Edward Dougherty, Richard Hough, Joshua Minshall (Hempfield), Richard Carter (Warwick), Joseph Worke (Donegal), David Jones (Conestoga), Lawrence Bankson.

The defendant had stolen fourteen pounds seven shillings from Daniel Cookson, who owned a mill at the head of Pequea Creek in Salisbury township. Cannady was convicted, and was ordered to restore the amount stolen, to pay an equal amount in fine for the support of government, also the costs of prosecution, "with two pounds eighteen shillings by the court allowed the said Daniel Cookson for his loss of time, charges and disbursements in the apprehending and prosecuting the said Morris Cannady, and that the said Morris stand committed to the custody of the sheriff of this county until he make satisfaction for the sums aforesaid by the court in manner aforesaid adjudged;" besides which he was sentenced to be publicly whipped "on his bare back with twenty-one stripes well laid on." He received the whipping, and restored the amount stolen, but being wholly unable to pay the fines and costs, remained in jail for about one year, at the end of which time the court ordered the sheriff to sell him, the said Morris, "to the highest bidder for any term not exceeding six years; and that the money thence arising be applied for or towards payment of the fine and costs aforesaid." Accordingly he was sold by the sheriff for six years to John Lawrence, of Peshtank, for sixteen pounds, of which sum, however, only fourteen pounds five shillings was collected.

At November court, 1730, the following-named persons petitioned the court to recommend them to the Governor (who issued licenses) to trade with the Indians, viz.: James Patterson (who had been a trader for thirteen years), Edmond Cartlidge (a trader for thirteen years), Peter Chartière (an old Indian trader), John Lawrence (old trader), Jonas Davenport (old trader), Oliver Wallis, Patrick Boyd, Lazarus Lowry, William Dunlap (old trader), William Beswick, John Wilkins (old trader), Thomas Perrin, John Harris (old trader).

In October, 1730, John Davis, of Caernarvon, was elected county commissioner, and Joshua Lowe (Hempfield), Emanuel Carpenter (Cocalico), Walter Denny, John Caldwell, Gabriel Davies (Earl), and Thomas Wilkins (Donegal), were elected assessors. For the year 1730, John Postlethwait was elected treasurer of the county, and in that year he paid £71 6s. bounties "for sixty-three old wolves heads and sixteen young wolves heads."

Establishment of the County-Seat.—By the act erecting the county of Lancaster (Section v.) it was provided: "That it shall and may be lawful to and for Caleb Pierce, John Wright, Thomas Edwards, and James Mitchell, or any three of them, to purchase, and take assurance to them and their Heirs, of a Piece of land situate in some convenient place in the said county, to be approved of by the Governor in Trust, and for the use of the said County, and thereon to erect and build, or cause to be erected and built, a Court House and Prison sufficient to accommodate the public service of the said County, for the ease and conveniency of the Inhabitants."

There were three principal points whose claims and advantages were each vigorously urged in the selection of a county-seat. One of these was at "Gibson's Pasture" (the site of the present city of Lancaster), another was Postlethwait's, a point some seven or eight miles southwesterly from Gibson's, it being the place where John Postlethwait kept an ordinary or tavern in Conestoga township, on or near Conestoga Creek. The third was Wright's Ferry (now Columbia), on the Susquehanna. The claims and advantages of this last-named point were strongly urged and advocated by Robert Barber (first sheriff of the county), John Wright (first presiding magistrate), and Samuel Blunston, all of whom resided and owned land there. Postlethwait's, however, was at first regarded most favorably; the first courts were held (in temporary quarters) there, and it was generally thought to be the place most likely to be selected as the seat of justice. But a more powerful influence favored the site at Gibson's (Lancaster), and after an extended and deliberate examination the last-named site was selected and agreed on by the Commissioners, who, in their report to the Governor in February, 1730, said, "We, the subscribers, after much pains and diligent search for a proper place for the aforesaid use (the building of a court-house and county prison) for the ease and accommodation of the majority of the inhabitants, have agreed upon a certain lot of land lying on or near a small run of water, between the plantations of Rudy Mire, Michael Shank, and Jacob Imble, and being about ten miles from the Susquehanna River, which we conceive the most convenient for the use aforesaid. And we pray the Governor would please to approve and confirm the same, that we may proceed to purchase and build as the said law directs."

The report was signed by Pierce, Wright, and Mitchell, but not by the other member of the commission, Thomas Edwards, who was a justice of the peace, and resided on the Conestoga, two or three miles east of Hinkletown. Whether he withheld his signature and assent to the report because favoring the location of a site at or nearer his own residence does not appear.

The report was approved by the Governor Feb. 17, 1730, but on the 19th of the same month he laid before the Council the fact that the commissioners had certified to him their selection of the site as described, and "the Governor therefore referred the matter to the consideration of the board, whether the situation of the place those gentlemen had pitched on for a town might be fit to be confirmed, and that a town should accordingly be fixed there. But the question being asked, to whom the land they had made choice of now belongs, and who has the property of it, because it may be in such hands as will not part with it, or at least on reasonable terms, for that use, and this not being known by any at the board, it was deferred till such time as that point could be ascertained. But as it is presumed, for anything that is yet known, to be unsurveyed land, and that the right is only in the Proprietor, it is the opinion of the board that it is more proper to be granted by the Proprietor for such uses than by any other person." The matter of the ownership of the land being afterwards inquired into, and "the Governor having understood that the right to the land pitched upon for the townstead of Lancaster remains yet in the Proprietaries, was advised to approve of the place agreed on by Messrs. Wright, Pierce, and Mitchell, and the same was confirmed accordingly by a writing dated May 1, 1730."<sup>1</sup>

In point of fact, however, the Governor had been misinformed as to the ownership of the land, as it had passed from the Proprietors to the hands of Andrew Hamilton. Meanwhile, under authority of the Governor's approval of the commissioners' report, on the 17th of February they had made arrangements for the purchase of the land, and on the 15th of May, 1730, Andrew Hamilton and his wife, Ann Hamilton, conveyed by deed, for the consideration of five shillings, two lots of land for the use and service of the county,—viz., one for a court-house site, and the other for the erection of a county prison. At the same time they also conveyed a lot one hundred and twenty feet square as a site for a public market-house for the (then newly laid out) town of Lancaster, which then, in the manner above narrated, became the seat of justice of Lancaster County. The court-house lot, sixty-six feet square, was located in the centre of the Centre Square of the town; the prison lot was on the north side of King Street, extending from Prince to Water Streets. The erection of county buildings on these lots will be especially and fully noticed in a chapter devoted to that subject.

CHAPTER V.

THE FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR.

Beginning of the War in Pennsylvania—Braddock's Defeat—Indian Massacres in the Susquehanna Valley and Elsewhere on the Frontier—Expeditions of Armstrong, Forbes, and Bouquet—Peace with the Indians—Lancaster County Officers in the War.

THE French and Indian war, as it has usually been termed, commenced in 1754. For ten years prior to that time war had existed between England and France, but the American colonies felt none of its effects until the month of May in the year named, when Col. George Washington, then a youth of twenty-two years, in command of a small body of Virginia troops, attacked a party of Frenchmen and Indians led by M. de Jumonville, in a ravine of the Laurel Hill, in the present county of Fayette, Pa. This affair, in which the French leader and a number of his party were killed, was the opening fight of the French and Indian war, as it was also the first battle of the man who afterwards became commander-in-chief of the patriot armies of America.

Immediately afterwards the French commandant at Fort Duquesne, M. de Contrecoeur, marched at the head of a much stronger party of French and Indians to attack Washington, who in the mean time had erected a slight defensive work which he called Fort Necessity, located at the Great Meadows, a short distance from the scene of his attack on Jumonville. The work was invested by the French, and a battle ensued, resulting in Washington's surrender of the fort to Contrecoeur, and its evacuation (July 4, 1754) by the colonial troops, who were allowed by the victorious French commander to march away without further molestation to Fort Cumberland, at the place where Cumberland, Md., now stands.

In the following year Maj.-Gen. Edward Braddock was sent from England to lead a formidable force against the French at Fort Duquesne. He brought with him two veteran regiments of British regulars. Arriving at Alexandria, Va., they marched thence to Fort Cumberland, where they were joined by the colonial troops destined for the expedition. The army having been organized at Fort Cumberland, marched thence under command of Gen. Braddock across the Alleghenies and the Laurel Hill to the Monongahela River, where, on the 9th of July, 1755, in a forest defile near the north bank of the stream, the proud army of Braddock fought the bloody battle and sustained the historic defeat, of which the dismal story has been too often told to need repetition here. The rash but heroic general, mortally wounded, was borne back by his faithful followers to the Laurel Hill, where he died four days after, and where his bones still repose. The remnant of the army, disorganized and panic-stricken, made a precipitate retreat to Fort Cumberland, leaving the French and their Indian allies in complete possession of the country from the Ohio to the eastern base of the Alleghenies.

Soon after the French had succeeded in expelling the English forces from the region of country west of the Alleghenies, and establishing themselves in the absolute possession of that territory, they reduced their force at Fort Duquesne, sending a part of it to Venango and other northern posts, and many of their Indian allies scattered and returned to their homes, being in a state of discontent and incipient disaffection, though still holding to their French allegiance. But it soon became apparent that they had no intention to be at peace with the English, for within a little more than two months from the time of Braddock's defeat the Shawanese and the Delawares under King Shingis had advanced eastward to the Alleghenies, and made incursions beyond that range. About the 25th of September a body of one hundred and sixty Indians (afterwards found to be Shawanese and Delawares under command of Shingis) set out from Fort Duquesne and its vicinity on an expedition against the English, and a few days later they burst upon the defenseless people of the Maryland and Virginia settlements. On the 4th of October, Capt. William Trent wrote Col. James Burd, at Shippensburg: "Last night came to the mill at Wolgomoth's an express going to the Governor of Maryland with an account of the inhabitants being out on Patterson's Creek; and about the Fort (Cumberland), the express says, there is forty killed and taken, and that one whole family was burnt to death in an house. The Indians destroy all before them, firing houses, barns, stack-yards, and everything that will burn." A week later Governor Sharpe, of Maryland, wrote the Governor of Pennsylvania: "Within a few days I have received several letters by express from Capt. Dagworthy, who commands the garrison consisting of one hundred and thirty-seven men at Fort Cumberland, and from some other people, advising me that the Indians have, since the 1st instant, cut off a great many families who lived near Fort Cumberland, and on both sides of Powtownmack, some miles eastward of the fort. It is supposed that near one hundred persons have been murdered or carried away prisoners by these barbarians, who have burnt the houses and ravaged all the plantations in that part of the country. Parties of the enemy appear within sight of Fort Cumberland every day, and frequently in greater numbers than the garrison consists of. As I presume it will not be long before these people pay a visit to your borders, I take this opportunity of intimating what I think may be expected."

The first blow struck by the Indians within the bounds of Pennsylvania was on the 18th of October, when they attacked the settlements on Mahanoy or John Penn's Creek, that flows into the Susquehanna about five miles below the confluence of the North and West Branches. Information of this incursion was sent to Governor Morris on the 22d by Conrad Weiser. "I take this opportunity," he said, "to inform you I received news from Shamokin that six families have been murdered on John Penn's Creek, on the west side of Susquehanna, about four miles from that river; several people have been found scalped, and twenty-eight are missing; the people are in a great consternation, and are coming down, leaving the plantations and corn behind them."

On the 23d of October a party of white settlers (forty-nine in number, among whom were John Harris, of Paxtang, Justice Forster, and Capt. Thomas McKee), who had been to Shamokin to ascertain if possible where the party came from who did the murderous work on John Penn's Creek, were on their return fired on from an ambush, and four killed, four drowned in attempting to swim the river, and the rest put to flight. Upon this "all the settlements between Shamokin and Hunter's Mill, for the space of fifty miles along the River Susquehannah, were deserted." Adam Terrence, one of the white party who were fired on, said, "As I understood the Delaware tongue, I heard several of the Indians that were engaged against us speak a good many words in that tongue during the action." The savages who attacked were supposed to be a part of a force mentioned by Governor Morris in a letter to the Governor of Virginia, dated October 29th. He said, "I have received Intelligence that a large body of French and Indians were seen to pass the Allegheny Mountains moving towards the Inhabitants of this Province, and that a party of them have since passed the Susquehannah, and killed all before them, and were within five miles of Harris' Ferry [Harrisburg]. The people are mostly without arms, and struck with such a panick that they flee as fast as they can from their habitations." On the same date, John Harris, of Paxtang, said in a letter to Edward Shippen, of Lancaster, "The Indians is cutting us off every day, and I had a certain account [from Andrew Montour] of about fifteen hundred Indians beside French being on their march against us and Virginia, and now close to our borders, their Scouts Scalping our Families on our Frontiers daily. . . . I am informed that a French officer was expected at Shamokin this week with a party of Delawares and Shawanese, no doubt to take possession of our River; and as to the suite of the Susquehannah Indians, a great part of them is actually in the French Interest."

In a letter written about this time by Conrad Weiser to Governor Morris, narrating how he had marched with a party of about three hundred men in pursuit of the savages who committed the atrocities on the Susquehanna, from Hunter's Mills to John Penn's Creek, but found that the enemy had withdrawn from that region, the writer continued: "Upon this we had a consultation, and as we did not come up to serve as guards to the Paxtang people, but to fight the enemy, if they were come so far, as we first heard, we thought best to return and take care of our own townships. After I had given the necessary caution to the people to hold themselves in readiness, as the enemy was certainly in the country, to keep their arms in good order, and so on, and then discharged them, and we marched back, with the approbation of Mr. Reed.<sup>1</sup> By the way we were alarmed by a report that five hundred Indians had come over the mountains at Tolheo to this side, and had already killed a number of people. We stopped and sent a few men to discover the enemy, but, on their return, it proved to be a false alarm, occasioned by a company that I had sent that way the day before, whose guns getting wet, they fired them off, which was the cause of alarm; this not only had alarmed the company, but whole townships through which they marched. In going back I met messengers from other townships about Conestoga, who came for intelligence, and to ask me where their assistance was necessary, promising that they would come to the place where I should direct."

In the morning of Sunday, the 2d of November, the Indian allies of the French attacked the Great Cove settlement, in Cumberland County, killed six persons, and carried away seventeen prisoners. On the same day Benjamin Chambers wrote from Fallow Spring:<sup>2</sup>

"To the Inhabitants of the Lower Part of the County of Cumberland. If you intend to go to the assistance of your neighbours, you need not wait any longer for the Certainty of News. The Great Cove is destroyed. James Campoll left this Company last night and went to the Fort at Mr. Steel's Meeting-House, and there saw some of the Inhabitants of the Great Cove, who gave this account, that as they came over the Hill they saw their houses in flames. The messenger says there is but one hundred, and that they divided into two parts, the one part to go against the Cove, and the other against the Conolloways, and that there are no French among them. They are Delawares and Shawanese. The part that came against the Cove are under the command of Shingis, the Delaware King. The people of the Cove that came off saw several men lying dead; they heard the murder shout and the firing of Guns, and saw the Indians going into the Houses that they had come out of before they left sight of the Cove. I have sent express to Marsh Creek at the same time that I send this, so I expect there will be a good Company from there this day, and as there is but one hundred of the Enemy, I think it is in our power (if God permit) to put them to flight if you turn out well from your parts."

On the day following the massacre and burning at Great Cove the settlements at Little Cove and Conolloways were attacked, all the houses burned, and several persons carried away as prisoners. Mr. Potter, sheriff of Cumberland County, reported "that of ninety-three families which were settled in the two Coves and the Conolloways forty-seven were either killed or taken and the rest deserted."

On Sunday, the 16th of November, the Indians, having penetrated Berks County, attacked the settlements only a few miles from the town of Reading, murdering and burning as before. A letter dated at Reading on that day, written by Edward Biddle to his father in Philadelphia, said, "I am in so much horror and confusion I scarce know what I am writing. The drum is beating to arms, and bells ringing, and all the people under arms. Within these two hours we have had different though too uncertain accounts, all corroborating each other, and this moment is an express arrived, dispatch from Michael Reis at Tulpehoccon, eighteen miles above this town, who left about thirty of their people engaged with about an equal number of Indians at the said Reis'. This night we expect an attack, and truly alarming is our situation. . . . I have rather lessened than exaggerated our melancholy account." On the 18th the Governor notified the mayor and corporation of Philadelphia as follows: "I have received intelligence that the Indians have fallen upon the settlements at Tulpehoccon; that they had slaughtered many of the inhabitants and laid waste the country, and were moving towards the Town of Reading, which is within Sixty Miles of this city; and though I am in hopes their cruel progress will be stopped long before they can come hither, yet as I can get no certain intelligence of their strength, or of the number of Frenchmen that are among them, I think it my duty to take every cautionary measure in my power for the preservation and safety of the people and the province."

Passing on from Berks into Northampton County, the French and Indian force on the 21st of November attacked the Moravian settlement of Gnadenhutten, on the Lehigh. "Six of the Moravians were killed, and their dwelling-houses, meeting-house, and all their outhouses burnt to ashes, with all their Grain, Hay, Horses, and upwards of forty head of fat cattle that were under cover." On the 11th of December the enemy, about two hundred strong, attacked Brodhead's plantation and other settlements in the vicinity of the Delaware Water Gap, killed several families, and laid the country waste. On the 29th the secretary of the Council presented to that body an account of Indian outrages committed since the first outbreak east of the mountains on the 18th of October. In the closing part of this account he said, "During all this Month [December] the Indians have been burning and destroying all before them in the county of Northampton, and have already burned fifty houses here, murdered above one hundred persons, and are still continuing their ravages, murders, and devastations, and have actually overrun and laid waste a great part of that County, even as far as within twenty miles of Easton, its chief town. And a large body of Indians, under French officers, have fixed their headquarters within the borders of that county, for the better security of their prisoners and plunder.

. . . All our frontier country, which extends from the River Patowmac to the River Delaware, not less than one hundred and fifty miles in length and between twenty and thirty in breadth, but not fully settled, has been entirely deserted, the houses and improvements reduced to ashes, the cattle, horses, grain, goods, and effects of the inhabitants either destroyed, burned, or carried off by the Indians.

"All our accounts agree in this, that the French, since the defeat of Gen. Braddock, have gained over to their interest the Delawares, Shawanese, and many other Indian nations formerly in our alliance, and on whom, through fear and their large promises of rewards for scalps, and assurances of reinstating them in the possession of the lands they have sold to the English, they have prevailed to take up arms against us, and to join heartily with them in the execution of the ground they have been long meditating, the possession of all the country between the river Ohio and the river Susquehanna, and to secure that possession by building a strong fort at Shamokin, which, by its so advantageous situation at the conflux of the two main branches of Susquehanna (one whereof interlocks with the waters of the Ohio and the other heads in the centre of the country of the Six Nations) will command, and make the French entire masters of all that extensive, rich, and fertile country, and of all the trade with the Indians, and from whence they can at pleasure enter and annoy our territories, and put an effectual stop to the future extension of our settlement on that quarter, not to mention the many other obvious mischiefs and fatal consequences that must attend their having a fort at Shamokin. Note.—Some Fachines have lately been discovered floating down the river Susquehanna, a little below Shamokin, by which, as the Indians were never known to use Fachines, it is conjectured the French have begun, and are actually building a fort at that most important place."

All the horrors of these Indian massacres and outrages failed to move the Assembly from their position of antagonism to the Governor, or to cause them to take adequate measures for the defense of the settlements, and their course at this alarming crisis awoke the deepest indignation among the people. Public meetings were held in various parts of Lancaster and in the frontier counties, at which it was resolved that they would "repair to Philadelphia and compel the provincial authorities to pass proper laws to defend the country and oppose the enemy." In addition, the dead bodies of some of the murdered and mangled were sent to that city and hauled about the streets, with placards announcing that these were victims of the Quaker policy of non-resistance. A large and threatening mob surrounded the House of Assembly, placed the dead bodies in the doorway, and demanded immediate relief for the people of the frontiers. In this situation of affairs and in deference to the demands of the people of this region, the Governor of Pennsylvania, with the advice and consent of the Council, issued on the 14th of April a proclamation,<sup>1</sup> declaring war against the Delaware nation and offering rewards for scalps and prisoners, as follows: "For every male Indian enemy over twelve years of age as prisoner, one hundred and fifty Spanish dollars or Pieces of Eight; for the Scalp of any such, one hundred and thirty Spanish dollars or Pieces of eight; for every female Indian prisoner, and for every male Indian prisoner under twelve years, one hundred and thirty Pieces of Eight; for the scalp of every Indian woman, produced as evidence of being killed, fifty pieces of Eight; and for every English subject that has been taken and carried from this Province into captivity, and recovered and brought to Philadelphia to the Governor, one hundred and fifty Pieces of Eight, but nothing for their scalps;" these rewards to be paid out of the appropriation of sixty thousand pounds then recently granted by the Assembly for the use of His Majesty, and which was placed at the Governor's disposal for that and other purposes of defense. This offering of bounties for scalps may at the present day seem barbarous, but it was then regarded as purely a measure of necessity and of self-defense; and it is said that under it no Indian was ever wantonly murdered for the sake of the reward.

In the spring of 1756 the enemy continued their depredations. McCord's block-house, on Conococheague, was attacked and burned by savages, and twenty-seven persons killed or captured. The marauding party was pursued and a part of it overtaken at Sideling Hill, where a fight ensued and the whites were repulsed with severe loss. About the 1st of April a party of French and Indians, discovered in the vicinity of Fort Cumberland, were attacked by a party from the fort, and the French commander was killed and scalped.

In July the Indians in strong force, headed by King Shingis, appeared at Fort Granville<sup>2</sup> (near the present site of Lewistown), stormed it, killed several whites, and took a number of prisoners, whom they carried to Kittaning, an Indian village on the Allegheny, at or near the site of the present town of the same name in Armstrong County. This Indian Kittaning was at that time the residence of King Shingis, as also of the redoubtable Delaware chief, Captain Jacob, both of whom had been among the most prominent of the Indian leaders of murdering parties in this and the preceding year. To this place the French sent ammunition and supplies for their savage allies, and it was a principal rendezvous from which Indian war parties made their bloody forays into the settlements. For these reasons it was decided to send an expedition against the Delaware stronghold to destroy it if possible; and Lieut.-Col. John Armstrong, who commanded the eight companies of the Second Pennsylvania Battalion stationed west of the Susquehanna, was designated as the commander for the campaign.

<sup>1</sup> The Delawares had long been friends of the English, and continued to be so regarded up to the commencement of the murderous outrages committed by them under lead of their king, Shingis. The Shawanees were regarded as enemies without any formal declaration to that effect.

<sup>2</sup> To afford some degree of security against the incursions of the French and Indians, the province of Pennsylvania built, at a total expense of £85,000, a chain of forts and block-houses, extending across the province from the Delaware to the Maryland line, commanding the principal passes of the mountains. On the east side of the Susquehanna, and extending to the Delaware, were Forts Dupui, Lehigh, Allen, Everitt, Williams, Henry, Swatara, Hunter, Halifax, and Augusta. West of the Susquehanna were Fort Louthor, at Carlisle; Forts Morris and Franklin, at Shippensburg; Fort Granville; Fort Shirley, on a branch of the Juniata; Fort Lyttleton; and Fort Loudoun, on Conococheague Creek. Lieut. Col. John Armstrong, with eight companies of Pennsylvania troops, was stationed on the west side of the Susquehanna.

Col. Armstrong accordingly marched from Fort Shirley (in what is now Huntingdon County) on the 30th of August with a force of three hundred and seven men, of whom about one hundred were sent some distance in advance as scouts. The force reached Kittaning in the night of the 7th of September "a little before the setting of the moon," and early on the following morning attacked the town and totally destroyed it by fire, though nearly all the Indians escaped. The results of the campaign were the destruction of the Indian rendezvous of Kittaning, with large quantities of ammunition and stores, the release of eleven English prisoners who had been captured east of the mountains by Shingis' and Jacob's bands. The destruction of the savage stronghold caused great rejoicing in the settlements, and corresponding depression and dismay among the hostile Indians. To them it was a severe blow. They were amazed to find that the white settlers, whom they had supposed to be cowering behind their stockades east of the mountains, had suddenly and boldly advanced into the wilderness and destroyed the Indian town, with all its accumulated supplies and munitions of war.

After the burning of old Kittaning the French used every means in their power to goad the Indians to further bloodshed and hostility against the English, to avenge the destruction of their principal town, and the killing of their kindred; but they did not readily respond to these appeals, and for a long time they refused to go out in parties against the Eastern settlements, fearing that another blow might fall on their villages during their absence. "Such of them as belonged to Kittaning and had escaped the carnage refused to settle again on the east of Fort Duquesne, and very wisely resolved to place that fortress and the French garrison between them and the English." They had also begun to show no little dissatisfaction with the French, on account of the meagre return which they were receiving for their services on the war-path, and symptoms of open disaffection were becoming apparent.

The accounts which came to Philadelphia of disaffection among the Indians towards the French, and an apparent inclination to make peace with the English, caused the Governor and Council to declare on the 10th of September a suspension of hostilities against the Delawares and Shawanese, and in January, 1757, this was extended for a further period of fifty days. Finally, on the 4th of August, at a treaty council held at Easton, Pa., with Teedyuscung, the king of the Eastern Delawares, a peace was concluded, and messengers were at once sent by the king to proclaim it to the Delawares at the head of the Ohio. These professed to receive the news favorably, and returned a message to that effect, acknowledging that they had been deluded by the French. King Shingis, however, did not return any such assurances, but remained hostile, and held a large body of the Delawares with him. The Shawanese also continued hostile, and acted with the French, though considerably disaffected. Several Indian forays were made in the region bordering the Susquehanna in the summer and fall of 1757, and also in the following year, as late as the 9th of June, when the savages burned the house of John Krantz, and carried him with his wife and three children into captivity. But the people of the frontier settlements had by this time become better armed and organized than before, keeping out parties of scouts along the border to guard against surprise, so that the savages did not succeed in repeating the scenes of widespread devastation and massacre which they had enacted in 1755-56.

In 1758 the English ministry planned and sent forward an expedition much more formidable than that placed under Braddock, three years before, for the capture of Fort Duquesne. Gen. Abercrombie, who had been appointed commander-in-chief of His Majesty's forces in North America, assigned the command of this new expedition to Brig.-Gen. John Forbes. His force (of which the rendezvous was appointed at Raystown, now Bedford, Pa.) was composed of three hundred and fifty Royal American troops, twelve hundred Scotch Highlanders, sixteen hundred Virginians, and two thousand seven hundred Pennsylvania provincials, two hundred and fifty men from Maryland, one hundred and fifty from North Carolina, and one hundred from "the lower counties on Delaware," a total of six thousand three hundred and fifty effective men, besides one thousand wagoners and laborers. Gen. Forbes with the main body of his army left Raystown in October, and arrived at Loyahanna early in November. A council of war was held, at which it was decided that on account of the lateness of the season and approach of winter (the ground being already covered with snow) it was "unadvisable, if not impracticable, to prosecute the campaign any further till the next season, and that a winter encampment among the mountains or a retreat to the frontier settlements was the only alternative that remained." But immediately afterwards a scouting party brought in some prisoners, from whom it was learned that the garrison of Fort Duquesne was weak, and the Indian allies of the French considerably disaffected. Thereupon the decision of the council of war was reversed, and the army again put in motion. When within about twelve miles of the fort word was brought to Forbes that it was being evacuated by the French, but he remembered the lesson taught by Braddock's rashness, and treated the report with suspicion, continuing the march with the greatest caution, and withholding from the troops the intelligence he had received. But on the 25th of November, on arriving within sight of the fort, it was found to be indeed evacuated and in flames, and the last of the boats in which its garrison had embarked were seen in the distance on their way down the Ohio. Forbes took immediate possession, and thus after repeated attempts, each ending in blood and disaster, the English standard was firmly planted at the head of the Ohio, and the French power there overthrown forever.

The Indians had become greatly dissatisfied with the French, and had entirely ceased acting with them against the English. Gen. Forbes, in his report to Governor Denny, dated November 26th, after announcing the capture of the fort, said that the French were "abandoned, or at least not seconded, by their friends the Indians, whom we had previously engaged to act a neutral part, and who now seem all willing to embrace His Majesty's most gracious protection." On the capture of the fort the Delawares sued for peace, which was granted to them at a treaty conference held with them at the fort immediately after it came into possession of the English forces.

When the "Pontiac war" broke out in 1763 the Indians in Pennsylvania, like those in all parts of the West, became actively hostile. They made their first demonstrations about the 1st of June in that year, in the neighborhood of Fort Pitt, then moved across the Alleghenies, and again committed fearful havoc in the settlements of the same region which they had ravaged from the fall of 1755 to 1757. A large body of savages also besieged Fort Pitt, cutting off all supplies and communication. No information could be obtained as to the situation at the fort, and great alarm was felt for the safety of the garrison. At this crisis Col. Bouquet was ordered forward to its relief with a force composed of a body of colonial troops and the remnants of the Forty-second and Seventy-seventh Royal Regiments. At Bushy Run, near the Monongahela, his force was attacked by a greatly superior number of Indians, and a fierce battle ensued, in which Forbes completely routed the savages, and then pushed on to the relief of the fort. The Indians retreated to the wilderness, thoroughly humbled and cowed for the time, but they were not yet sufficiently punished to insure peace to the settlements. In the following year (1764) Bouquet was sent out with another expedition, composed of the same Highland regiments who fought at Bushy Run, with Pennsylvania and Virginia provincial troops, amounting in all to nearly two thousand men. Leaving Fort Pitt on the 3d of October, he marched to the Muskingum River, in the present State of Ohio, where the Delawares and Shawanese met him in council and asked for peace. Bouquet treated the Indians sternly, telling them he would yield nothing to them, and distrusted their protestations. Whichever they wanted, peace or war, he was prepared to give them. If it was peace then they must deliver up all their white prisoners, and each tribe give hostages to vouch for their good faith. The savages could do nothing but accede to the terms offered them, though they did so with a bad grace. The treaty was concluded with the Delaware chiefs on the 7th of November, and with the Shawanese on the 12th of the same month. They gave hostages for their future good behavior, and delivered up all their white prisoners (amounting in all to about three hundred), many of whom had been taken from the settlements in the Susquehanna Valley.

It had been made a part of Bouquet's agreement with the Indians on the Muskingum that they should go to Sir William Johnson, on the Mohawk, to subscribe to a formal treaty of peace. This they did according to agreement, and a treaty was concluded May 8, 1765. From the time of Bouquet's march to the Muskingum, the people of the interior and eastern parts of Pennsylvania felt no more of the horrors of Indian warfare until the Senecas and Cayugas were incited to massacre by British emissaries in the time of the Revolution.

Many of the savage atrocities of the French and Indian war were committed within what was then Lancaster County, though none were perpetrated within its present limits. But the alarm was general in the lower, as well as in the upper, parts of the county, and all the people (non-resistants excepted) rallied under arms for the general defense, and performed their tours of duty on the border, and many of them served as officers and soldiers in the battalions which marched with Forbes and Bouquet to the Ohio, and from time to time garrisoned the frontier forts from the North Branch of the Susquehanna to the Potomac. Rolls of companies cannot be given here, but the following is a list<sup>1</sup> of Lancaster

"A list of officers of the three battalions of the Pennsylvania regiment who served in the former war against the French and Indians on the western frontier, in conjunction with the British and regular forces of Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware government, and between the years 1760 and 1763, and who were entitled to a grant of crown lands in America in virtue of the King of England's proclamation of October, 1763." The residence of nearly every officer is given in the original list, and on the back is the following certification:

"The list of the officers of the three battalions of the Pennsylvania regiment of last wars, as they stand on this and the other side, is just & true, to the best of my knowledge, as witness my hand this 1st October, 1783. "JAMES BURD."

CHAPTER VI.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE REVOLUTION.

Opening of the War—Meetings at Lancaster—Prompt Measures of Resistance—Relief sent to Boston—Election of Committee of Observation—News of Lexington Battle and Organization of Associates—Raising of Military Companies—Lancaster County Companies in the Rifle Battalion—Campaigns of Boston and Quebec—Lancaster Companies in the First Continental Regiment of Pennsylvania.

In the great Revolutionary struggle for independence an earnest and patriotic part was taken from first to last by the inhabitants of the county of Lancaster. They heard as from afar off the mutterings of discontent which arose at the passage of the oppressive Stamp Act of 1765 and the more ominous rumblings of incipient rebellion occasioned by the "Boston Massacre" and the forced importation of tea,—a tone of warning which deepened into the unmistakable roar of revolution as it rolled away to the west and south from Lexington and Bunker Hill. Then the patriotic flame burst forth in all the colonies, and nowhere in the province of Pennsylvania did it burn brighter or more steadily than among the hills and valleys of Lancaster County, though her boundaries embrace no historic battle-fields, nor any spot of ground that was ever pressed by the foot of a foreign invader.

The passage of the odious and oppressive "Boston Port Bill" in the British Parliament (in March, 1774) evoked in all the American colonies a patriotic indignation, which found expression at meetings held for the purpose at nearly every county town. In Lancaster County the first public Revolutionary demonstration was a meeting of the inhabitants of the borough of Lancaster (sufficient time not being given for the circulation of a general notice to the people of the outlying townships), held at the court-house, on Wednesday the 15th of June, 1774, in pursuance of a call made by the Committee of Correspondence of the city of Philadelphia, transmitted by their clerk, Charles Thompson, Esq., to William Atlee, of Lancaster, and promulgated by him to his fellow-townsmen. At that meeting it was "Agreed—that to preserve the constitutional rights of the inhabitants of America, it is incumbent on every Colony to unite and use the most effectual means to procure a repeal of the late Act of Parliament against the Town of Boston.—That the Act of Parliament for blocking up the Port and harbour of Boston, is an Invasion of the rights of the said Town, as subjects of the crown of Great Britain.—That it is the opinion of the Inhabitants at this meeting, that the most proper and effectual means to be used to obtain a repeal of the said Act, will be to put an immediate stop to all imports and exports to and from Great Britain until the same Act is repealed.

"That the traders and inhabitants of this Town will join and concur with the patriotic Merchants, Manufacturers, Tradesmen, and Freeholders of the City and County of Philadelphia, and other parts of this Province, in an Association or Solemn agreement to this purpose, if the same shall by them be thought necessary.

"That Edward Shippen, Esq., George Ross, Esq., Jasper Yeates, Esq., Matthias Slough, Esq., James Webb, Esq., William Atlee, Esq., William Henry, Esq., Mr. Ludwig Lauman, Mr. William Bausman, and Mr. Charles Hall be a Committee to correspond with the General Committee of Philadelphia; and that these sentiments be immediately forwarded to the Committee of Correspondence at Philadelphia."

The resolutions of the meeting were forwarded to Charles Thompson, Esq., clerk of the Philadelphia Committee, by Eberhardt Michael, clerk of the Lancaster Committee, with the following letter, signed by all the members of that committee except George Ross and Jasper Yeates, viz.:

"LANCASTER, the 15th June, 1774.

"SIR,—Agreeable to the request of the Committee of Correspondence for the City of Philadelphia, signified to some of the Inhabitants here by your Letter, We have this evening had a Meeting of the Inhabitants of this Town (at which a very great number attended) at the Court-House, and unanimously gave their assent to the Resolves or Agreement inclosed. As taking the sentiments of the County could not be so expeditiously done by having a general Meeting of the Inhabitants, we thought best to give you those of the Town, and have the pleasure now to assure you that the Inhabitants of the county in general Legly to entertain similar opinions within as to this matter,—and no doubt will heartily concur in them at a Meeting which we shall endeavor as soon as possible to have with them. We hope you will give us intelligence of any matters worthy of notice, and be assured we shall do everything in our power to promote the General Interest."

On Saturday, June 18th, a large number of "the freeholders and freemen" of Philadelphia held a meeting in the State-House Square in that city, at which time and place the proposition for the convening of a general congress was discussed and a number of resolutions adopted, among which was one requesting the Philadelphia Committee of Correspondence "to determine on the most proper mode of collecting the sense of this province in the present critical situation of our affairs, and appointing deputies to attend the proposed congress," pursuant to which resolution the committee, through its chairman, Thomas Willing, Esq., addressed a communication (June 28th) to the Lancaster Committee, embracing the following propositions which had been determined on by the Philadelphia Committee, viz.:

"First. That the Speaker of the honorable House of Representatives be desired to write to the several members of Assembly in this Province, requesting them to meet in this city as soon as possible, but no later than the 1st of August next, to take into their consideration our very alarming situation.

"Second. That letters be written to proper persons in each county, recommending it to them to get committees appointed to their respective counties, and that the said committees, or such a number of them as may be thought proper, may meet at Philadelphia at the time the representatives are convened, in order to consult and advise on the most expedient mode of appointing deputies for the general Congress, and to give their weight to such as may be appointed.

"The Speaker of the Assembly [continued the committee in their letter to the Lancaster committee], in a very obliging and ready manner, had agreed to comply with the request in the former of those propositions; but we are now informed that, on account of the Indian disturbances [meaning Duumore's war against the savages in the Ohio valley], the Governor has found it necessary to call the Assembly to meet in their Legislative capacity, on Monday the 18th of July, being about the same time the Speaker would probably have invited them to a conference or convention in their private capacity.

"What we have, therefore, to request is that if you approve of the mode expressed in the second proposition, the whole or part of the committee appointed, or to be appointed for your county, will meet the committees from the other counties at Philadelphia on Friday the fifteenth of July, in order to assist in framing instructions, and preparing such matter as may be proper to recommend to our representatives at their meeting the Monday following. . . ."

In accordance with the request embodied in the preceding communication, the Lancaster committee met in the borough on the 2d of July, and adopted the following resolutions, viz.:

"Resolved, That they do most heartily concur with their brethren of Philadelphia, in the mode proposed for taking the sentiments of the good people of this province, on the present alarming and critical situation of the American Colonies; therefore,

"Resolved, That notice be given to the freemen and inhabitants of this county with the utmost expedition, to choose a committee to join with the committees of the other counties of this province to meet at Philadelphia for the very great and useful purposes mentioned in the said resolves and circular letters; and therefore,

"Resolved, That the freemen and inhabitants of this county be requested to meet on Saturday the 9th day of this instant at two o'clock in the afternoon, at the court-house in Lancaster for the purposes aforesaid."

These resolves of the committee, signed by Edward Shippen, Esq., chairman, were printed in Lancaster, and copies were sent out and posted at all the public places in the county. In accordance with the call, a general meeting of the inhabitants of the county was held the 9th of July, at the court-house in Lancaster. George Ross, Esq., was chosen chairman, and the meeting unanimously adopted the following declaration:

"1. We do sincerely profess and declare that his most gracious Majesty, King George the Third, is our rightful and lawful sovereign; and that we will support and defend him to the utmost of our power with our lives and fortunes against his enemies.

"2. We do further declare that no power is constitutionally lodged in the hands of any body of men to give and grant our money, save only our representatives in Assembly, who have at all times cheerfully granted aid to his Majesty whenever he has made requisition upon them.

"3. That the acts of the British Parliament for directing us of such right, and assuming such power themselves, are unconstitutional, unjust, and oppressive.

"4. That it is an indispensable duty we owe to ourselves and posterity to oppose, with decency and firmness, every measure tending to deprive us of our just rights and privileges.

"5. That a close union of the Colonies, and their faithfully adhering to such measures as a general Congress shall judge proper, are the most likely means to procure redress of American grievances, and settle the rights of the Colonies on a permanent basis.

"6. That it is highly expedient to appoint a committee to meet the committees of the other colonies of this Province at Philadelphia on the 15th instant, to confer with them on the important matters mentioned in the letter from the chairman of the committee of Philadelphia.

"7. That we will sincerely and heartily agree to and abide by the measures which shall be adopted by the members of the General Congress of the Colonies.

"8. That we tenderly sympathize with our brethren of Boston who are suffering in the American cause by an unconstitutional and oppressive act of the British Parliament, called the Boston Port Bill.

"9. That a subscription be opened for the relief of our suffering brethren there.

"10. That the subscription be put into the hands of the committee of this county, to be by them laid out in the purchase of provisions and sent to Boston towards the relief of their distresses.

"11. That the committee for the borough of Lancaster, already appointed, be a committee of correspondence, and that George Ross, James Webb, Matthias Slough, Joseph Ferree, Emanuel Carpenter, and William Atlee, Esqrs., Mr. Alexander Lowry, and Mr. Moses Irwin, be a committee to meet and consult with the committees of the other counties of this province at Philadelphia, the 15th instant, and also to join with the committee of correspondence in receiving subscriptions for the relief of our Boston brethren."

Subscriptions for the purpose mentioned were commenced even while the meeting was in session, and were immediately afterwards circulated in the borough of Lancaster and through the several townships of the county. The sum thus obtained in the borough was one hundred and fifty-three pounds, fifteen shillings, and two pence; the amount raised in the townships has not been ascertained, but it is mentioned as very considerable, and the whole was remitted by Edward Shippen, chairman of the Lancaster committee, to John Nixon, treasurer of the city and county of Philadelphia, and afterwards forwarded to Boston with the other contributions from the province of Pennsylvania.

The Lancaster County deputies (appointed by the meeting held at the court-house on the 9th of July, as before mentioned), viz., Messrs. Ross, Webb, Ferree, Slough, Carpenter, Atlee, Lowry, and Irwin, met the deputies of Philadelphia, Bucks, Chester, York, Cumberland, Berks, Northampton, Northumberland, Bedford, and Westmoreland in convention at Philadelphia on the 15th of July. Their sessions were continued from day to day until the 21st, during which sessions they passed a number of resolutions, including the following: "That there is an absolute necessity that a Congress of Deputies from the several colonies be immediately assembled, to consult together and form a general plan of conduct to be observed by all the Colonies for the purposes of procuring relief for our grievances, preventing future dissensions, firmly establishing our rights, and restoring harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies, on a constitutional foundation." And, for the promotion of the objects referred to in the foregoing resolution, the convention adopted a long and elaborate draft of instructions (prepared by a committee, of which William Atlee, of Lancaster, was one) to the Representatives, then soon to meet in General Assembly, directing them, among other things, "to appoint a proper number of persons to attend a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies, at such time and place as may be agreed on, to effect one general plan of conduct for attaining the ninth resolve," meaning the one above quoted. The Assembly did so appoint deputies, and they, with the delegates from the other colonies, assembled in Continental Congress at Carpenters' Hall, Philadelphia, on the 4th of September, 1774, organized on the 5th, with Peyton Randolph, of Virginia, as President, and continued in session until the 25th of October following; among the business of the session being the adoption of a memorial to the inhabitants of the American Colonies, recommending the non-importation of British goods into this country and the non-exportation of American produce to Great Britain; an address to the people of Great Britain, a list of grievances, with a petition to the King for their redress, and a proposition for another Congress to convene on the 10th of May following, unless such redress should be afforded in the mean time.

The patriotic people of Lancaster were very much in earnest in the determination expressed in their resolves at the before-mentioned meeting at the court-house on the 15th of June,—viz., that the proper and most effectual means to be used for obtaining a repeal of the Boston Port Bill would be "to put an immediate stop to all imports and exports to and from Great Britain until the same act be repealed," and that the traders and inhabitants of Lancaster would join in an association and agreement with those of Philadelphia and other parts of Pennsylvania for this purpose; one of the chief means of accomplishing which was to be abstaining from the use and prohibiting the sale of articles (especially tea) on which the duty imposed by Parliament had been paid. A case of supposed violation of this "association" or agreement by two merchants of Lancaster was brought to the notice of the committee, to be by them dealt with and punished. The record touching the matter is as follows:

"At a meeting of the committee August 11th, they were informed that Josiah and Robert Lockhart, of this borough, shopkeepers, had brought to this town a quantity of Tea that hath paid duty under the late Act of Parliament. A note was therefore sent to them by the committee, requiring their immediate attendance. In consequence thereof one of the partners called on the committee, but denied their having received any tea; but as this account by no means appeared satisfactory from several matters which escaped the partner attending, the Committee did inspect their shop, and with some difficulty learned of a chest of Bohem tea, weight, 349 neat weight, which they had bought from a certain merchant in Philadelphia. The Committee, taking an account of all the marks of the case in which it was packed, removed the Tea, and wrote to the committee of Philadelphia, who examined the matter, and it appeareth that this Tea never had paid any Duty, but was part of a seizure made by the Custom house, and was afterwards purchased at Public Sale by the original owner of it, as by a letter from the committee of Philadelphia, dated August 25th, wrote and signed by the Honourable Thomas Willing, the chairman, directed to this Committee, appears; upon which the said Teas were returned again, and the said Lockharts were acquitted."

The Continental Congress, which sat at Carpenters' Hall, Philadelphia, from the 4th of September to the 25th of October, as before mentioned, had, in addition to its other business, formed and adopted an Association, the articles of which were signed Oct. 20, 1774, by all the members present. The object of the Association was mutually to promote the safety and success of the several colonies in their resistance to the oppressions of the British ministry; and by one of its articles it was required that a Committee of Observation "be chosen in every county, city, and town, by those who are qualified to vote for Representatives in the Legislature." In accordance with this requirement the Lancaster committee, at a meeting held on the 22d of November, prepared and published the following call, viz.:

"To the freeholders and electors of the county of Lancaster:

"The committee for the borough of Lancaster, taking in their consideration the resolves and recommendations of the American Continental Congress, request that the freeholders and others qualified to vote for Representatives in Assembly for the county of Lancaster, would meet at the Court-house in Lancaster, on Thursday the fifteenth day of December next, to choose by ballot sixty proper persons for a committee, to observe the conduct of all persons touching the general Association of the general Congress; which committee, it is proposed, when elected, shall divide the county into different districts, and appoint members of the committee to superintend each district, and any six of the members so appointed for a district to be a quorum for transacting business.

"It will be necessary, previous to the general election, that each township shall elect a proper person to act as Inspector, and receive the tickets of the electors on that day."

The foregoing, printed in the form of a hand-bill, was distributed through the county, and posted in all the public places. Pursuant to this notice an election was held for the county at the time and place designated. The following-named were elected members of the committee for the borough and townships comprised in the present territory of Lancaster County:

Lancaster borough.—Edward Shippen, George Ross, James Webb, Adam S. Kuhn, Jasper Yeates, William Atlee, Adam Reigart, William Bausman, Christian Voght, Eberhardt Michael, Charles Hall, Casper Shaffner.

Hempfield township.—Val. Breneman.

Manheim township.—Samuel Bear, Sebastian Graff.

Mount Joy township.—James Cunningham,* Abraham Frederick.

Rapho township.—Jacob Erisman, Patrick Hay.

Donegal township.—Bartram Galbraith, Alexander Lowry, Frederick Mummart.

Warwick township.—Jacob Erb, Peter Grubb.

Cocalico township.—John Jones.

Brecknock township.—Benjamin Lessley.

Caernarvon township.—David Jenkins.

Leacock township.—David Watson, Nathaniel Lightner.

Strasburg township.—Eberhart Gruber, Michael Witter.

Lampeter township.—John Witmer, Jr.

Sadsbury township.—Robert Bailly.

Little Britain township.—John Allton, Thomas Whitesides.

Bart township.—Jacob Bare, Hieronymus Hickman.

Colerain township.—Joshua Anderson.

Martie township.—John Snodgrass.

Twenty-one other persons were elected members of the committee for townships then belonging to Lancaster County, but not now embraced in its limits. Why the number of members elected was so largely in excess of the number contemplated (sixty) is not explained. The duties of this committee of Observation and Correspondence were, by the eleventh article of the Association adopted by the Congress, declared to be "attentively to observe the conduct of all persons touching this Association; and when it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of a majority of any such committee, that any person within the limits of their appointment has violated this Association (by buying, selling, or using imported articles which had paid a duty to the British government, or by opposing in any way the efforts of the patriotic colonists to free themselves from the oppression of the Parliament and Ministry) that such majority do forthwith cause the truth of the case to be published . . . to the end that all such foes to the rights of British America may be publicly known and universally contemned as the enemies of American liberty; and thenceforth we, respectively will break off all dealings with him or her." The line of duty indicated as above, in the articles of Association, was rigorously pursued by the committee<sup>2</sup> and people of <sup>2</sup> On the 30th of March, 1775, a complaint was made before the committee, then in session at the house of Adam Reigart, in Lancaster borough, that Charles Hamilton, a merchant of the borough, had sold tea contrary to the articles of association of the Continental Congress. Thereupon Mr. Hamilton was summoned by the committee, as follows:

"SIR,—You are charged before the committee of this county of having reuded a quantity of tea since the first instant, contrary to the association of the Continental Congress. The committee are now sitting at Mr. Adam Reigart's, and desire your attendance to answer to this charge.

GEORGE ROSS, JUN., Clerk.

Lancaster County, and in no part of Pennsylvania or of the other colonies were suspected persons more closely watched, or enemies of the patriot cause more severely dealt with than here.

The Committee of Observation and Inspection for Lancaster County met at the court-house in Lancaster on the 14th of January, 1775, pursuant to a request sent by the Philadelphia committee (in a circular letter to the several county committees of the province) that deputies should be appointed in each county, to meet in a general Provincial Convention at Philadelphia on the 23d of the same month. Edward Shippen, Esq., was chosen chairman of the meeting. The communication from the Philadelphia committee was read, also a letter from the Committee of Correspondence of Berks County, stating that deputies had already been appointed to represent that county in the proposed convention, and urging that the same be done in Lancaster County.

The question of appointing deputies was brought to a vote, decided in the affirmative, and the following-named persons appointed, viz.: Adam Simon Kuhn, James Burd, James Clemson, Esq., Peter Grubb, Sebastian Graff, David Jenkins, and Bartram Galbraith, who (or any five of them) were authorized, on behalf of the county of Lancaster, to attend the Provincial Convention, the holding of which was proposed, as stated by the Philadelphia committee in their letter, before referred to, because of "the obvious necessity of giving an immediate consideration to many matters of the greatest importance to the general welfare, . . . and that the measures to be taken thereupon may be the result of the united wisdom of the colony." The Berks County committee, in their communication urging their brethren of Lancaster to appoint deputies to the convention, said, "When we consider that our disputes are drawing fast to a crisis, and that the most cordial unanimity is absolutely necessary for our preservation, we cannot doubt that your respectable committee will, without hesitation, appoint deputies to attend the Provincial Congress. The neglect of any one county may have the most fatal consequences. And we well know the pleasure it would give our enemies to see even the appearance of a disunion at this very important time." Evidently all understood that a dangerous crisis was near at hand, but they could then hardly have realized how near they stood to the event of actual war.

Hamilton appeared, and made his statement, viz., that the tea had been sold by the clerk, John Taylor, during his (Hamilton's) absence in Philadelphia, and contrary to his express orders. This statement being substantiated by the clerk, Taylor, under oath, the committee acquitted Hamilton of the charge upon his signing the following declaration:

"I, Charles Hamilton, of the borough of Lancaster, shopkeeper, do hereby declare and assert that I utterly disapprove of the sales of any tea in my store since the first day of March instant; and it is, and always hath been my fixed intention and determination to adhere inviolably to the association of the American Continental Congress, being fully convinced that the measures proposed thereby are the only probable modes of rescuing America from British Parliamentary despotism. Witness my hand this thirtieth day of March, A.D. one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five.

On the morning of Wednesday, the 19th of April, 1775, a detachment of British regular troops that had been sent out from Boston to the town of Concord met and fired upon a body of armed but unorganized and undisciplined farmers and mechanics who had collected at Lexington Common. The volley of the regulars told with an effect fatal to some of the provincials, and this was the first blood shed in the war of the Revolution. It has been called the battle of Lexington. Before the crack of the yeomen's rifles had ceased to sound along the road from Lexington to Boston, the Committee of Safety of the town of Watertown had sent out express-riders to carry the momentous news south and west. The dispatch destined for New York and Philadelphia passed on through Worcester, Norwich, New London, and New Haven (being successively forwarded by relays by the committees at those places), and reached the chamber of the New York committee at 4 o'clock P.M. on Sunday, the 23d of April. From New York<sup>1</sup> the dispatch was forwarded in all haste by way of New Brunswick, Princeton, and Trenton to Philadelphia, reaching that city in the afternoon of the 24th. From there the express sped away southward to Maryland, Virginia, and the Carolinas, while the momentous news was sent by other messengers up the valleys of the Schuylkill and Susquehanna and across the Alleghenies, spreading like wildfire through every town and hamlet from the Delaware to the Monongahela.

Two days after the alarming news from Lexington was received at Lancaster the borough committee convened at the Grape Tavern for deliberation, and to take such action as might seem necessary. The following is the record of its proceedings on that occasion, viz.:

"At a meeting of the committee of inspection and observation of the borough of Lancaster, the 27th of April, 1775, at the house of Adam Rolgart. Present, Edward Shippen, Esq., William Atlee, William Bauman, Charles Hall, William Patterson, Casper Shaffner, Eberhart Michall, Adam Riegart. Edward Shippen was chosen president.

"It appearing by intelligence from divers places, and by the papers, that Gen. Gage hath at length attacked the inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay, and killed and wounded many of them, and the latest accounts from England confirming the accounts that the Parliament of

<sup>1</sup> At New York the dispatch was thus indorsed by the committee: "Recd the within Account by express, and forwarded by express to New Brunswick, with Directions to stop at Elizabeth Town and acquaint the committee there with the following Particulars. By order of the Committee, Isaac Low, Chairman. The committee at New Brunswick are requested to forward this to Phila." The other indorsements made on the dispatch in its passage through New Jersey were as follows: "New Brunswick, Ap. 24, 1775, 2 o'clock in the morning, recd the above express, and forwarded to Princeton, Wm. Oake, Jas. Neilson, Az. Dunhams, Coms"; "Princeton, Monday, Ap<sup>l</sup> 24, 6 o'clock, and forw<sup>d</sup> to Trenton, Tho. Wiggins, Jno. Baldwin, Com. members"; "Trenton, Monday, Ap<sup>l</sup> 24, 9 o'clock in the morning, recd the above per express, and forwarded the same to the Committee of Philadelphia, Sam. Tucker, Isaac Smith, Coms."

Great Britain are determined by force of arms to compel the colonies to an abject submission to the late acts of the British Parliament, calculated to deprive the inhabitants of the colonies of their inestimable rights and privileges, and that a formidable fleet and army are preparing to invade the colonies, or some of them, it is, therefore, thought proper to request a general meeting of the committee for this county to consult and determine upon such measures as may be necessary to be pursued at this alarming crisis; and it is unanimously agreed that handbills be immediately printed and distributed throughout the county requesting the members of the committee to meet at the house of Adam Reigart in the borough of Lancaster, on Monday, the 1st day of May next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, for those purposes; and Mr. Bailey is requested to print a sufficient number of handbills for this purpose, in the following words, to wit:

"The members of the committee of observation for the respective districts and townships are desired to meet at the borough of Lancaster, at the house of Adam Reigart in the said borough, on Monday, the 1st day of May next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, to consult and determine upon proper and necessary measures to be taken for the general good in the present alarming situation of affairs. At the request of the committee of observation in the borough of Lancaster."

"EDWARD SHIFFEN, Chairman."

In accordance with this call, the committee of Lancaster County met at the time and place designated in the handbill, and continued their session during two or three succeeding days. On the first day of their session they adopted the following:

"The association of the freemen and inhabitants of the county of Lancaster, the 1st of May, 1776.

"WHEREAS, The enemies of Great Britain and America have resolved by force of arms to carry into execution the most unjust, tyrannical, and cruel edicts of the British Parliament, and reduce the free-born sons of America to a state of vassalage, and have flattered themselves from our unacquaintance with military discipline that we should become an easy prey to them, or tamely submit and bend our necks to the yoke prepared for us. We do most solemnly agree and associate under the deepest sense of our duty to God, our country, ourselves, and posterity to defend and protect the religious and civil rights of this and our sister colonies with our lives and fortunes to the utmost of our abilities against any power whatsoever that shall attempt to deprive us of them. And the better to enable us so to do, we will use our utmost diligence to acquaint ourselves with military discipline and the art of war.

"We do further agree to divide ourselves into companies not exceeding one hundred men each, so as to make it most convenient to our situation and settlement, and to elect and choose such persons as the majority of each company shall think proper for officers, viz.: for each company a captain, two lieutenants, and one ensign, who shall have the power of appointing the other officers under them necessary for the companies.

"That when the companies are formed and the officers chosen and appointed, an association shall be signed by the officers and soldiers of each company for the good order and government of the officers and soldiers."

On the 3d of May the committee further resolved to take an account or census of the white people of the several townships of the county,—men, women, and children,—to be forwarded by the members residing in Lancaster to the Provincial Congress of Pennsylvania. It was also resolved "that the members of the committee do examine the quantity of powder and lead the storekeepers have in their hands in the respective townships, and that the storekeepers be required that they sell no powder or lead before the first of June next, as they tender the trade and custom of the inhabitants of the respective townships; provided that it be sold only by such storekeepers having a license from two members of the committee." On the 4th of May the committee, in session, received tenders of ammunition from several merchants, as follows:

Charles Hamilton, 26 casks of powder at £14 per cwt., the county to pay the transportation of the same. Also about 800 cwt. of lead at 45 pence per cwt.

Josiah and Robert Lockhart, five quarter casks of powder at £15 per cwt. (with carriage), and their stock of lead at 45 pence per cwt.

Matthias Slough, four quarter casks of powder at £15 per cwt. and carriage, and his lead at 45 pence per cwt.

Andrew Levy (for Mr. Simons), two quarter casks of powder at £15 per cwt. and carriage, and his lead (about 200 pounds) at 45 pence per cwt.

Christian Wirtz, five quarter casks and some pounds loose of powder at £15 per cwt. and carriage, and about 150 pounds of lead at 45 pence per cwt.

John Hopson, two quarter casks of powder at £15 per cwt. and carriage.

Mr. Crawford, 10 or 12 pounds of powder, and Mr. Graff, about one quarter cask of powder, both at £15 per cwt. and carriage.

This warlike action of the committee was followed within a single week by the formation of companies of "associators," embracing the greater part of the able-bodied men of military age in the entire county. Among the first of these were the companies of Capt. Jacob Cook (of the Cook family of Donegal township), Capt. George Hudson, Capt. Casper Stoeber (of Coalico), Capt. George Null, and Capt. Henry Sheaffer. Other companies formed within a few days of the same time were those of Capts. William Paine, Philip Weiser, Michael Holderbaum, Leonard Immel, Valentine Shouffler, and Daniel Oldenbrück (the last-mentioned nine companies composing the battalion of Col. Philip Greenawalt). All or nearly all of them served with credit in the campaign of the following year on Long Island, in the vicinity of New York, and in New Jersey, and later many of their officers and men fought at Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth. But for some months after the formation of these and the other companies of Lancaster County Associators they remained in the county, engaged in frequent drilling and "acquainting themselves with military discipline and the art of war," yet always ready to march when called on for duty in the field.

On the 14th of June, 1776, the Continental Congress passed a resolution to raise six companies of expert riflemen in Pennsylvania, two companies in Maryland, and two in Virginia, to join the patriot army near Boston. By a resolution dated June 22d, the colony of Pennsylvania was called on for two more companies, making eight in all, which were to be formed into a battalion, commanded by officers to be recommended by the Assembly or convention of the province. This resolution having been communicated to the Assembly, that body resolved, June 24th, "that the members of Congress deputed by this Assembly be a committee to consider of and recommend proper officers of the said battalion." This was done, and the officers recommended by the Pennsylvania deputies were commissioned by Congress on the 25th of June. The field-officers so commissioned for the battalion were: Colonel, William Thompson, of Carlisle; Lieutenant-Colonel, Edward Hand, of Lancaster borough; and Major, Robert Magaw, of Carlisle. The adjutant was Lieut. David Zeigler, and the quartermaster Lieut. Frederick Hubley, both of Lancaster. The command formed of the eight Pennsylvania companies was styled "Col. Thompson's Battalion of Riflemen." Each company was to consist of one captain, three lieutenants, four sergeants, four corporals, a drummer or trumpeter, and sixty-eight privates. The pay of the officers and privates was as follows: captain, twenty dollars per month; a lieutenant, thirteen and one-third dollars; sergeant, eight dollars; a corporal, seven and one-third; a drummer or trumpeter, the same; privates, six and two-thirds, to find their own arms and clothes. The term of enlistment was one year.

For the formation of the battalion, two companies were to be raised in Cumberland County, and one in each of the counties of York, Northumberland, Bedford, Berks, Northampton, and Lancaster. On the 11th of July Congress was informed that two companies had been raised in Lancaster County instead of one, and it resolved that both companies be taken into the Continental service. This battalion, therefore, consisted of nine companies, enlisted as follows: Chambers' and Hendricks' in Cumberland County, Doudel's in York, Lowdon's in Northumberland, Cluggage's in Bedford, Nagel's in Berks, Miller's in Northampton, and those commanded respectively by Capt. James Ross and Capt. Matthew Smith, in Lancaster. Capt. Ross was a citizen of Lancaster borough, and his company was raised in the territory of the present county of Lancaster. Capt. Smith was of Paxtang, and his company was made up largely of men of that vicinity, with a smaller proportion from the lower parts of Lancaster. His lieutenant, Archibald Steele, was from Drumore township. James Wilkinson, afterwards Brig.-Gen. Wilkinson, of Revolutionary fame, was a volunteer in one of the companies, as was also John Joseph Henry, of Lancaster (afterwards Judge Henry), who was then but a boy, and joined the riflemen contrary to the wishes of his family and friends. There were also a number of Lancaster County men who joined the battalion as unenlisted volunteers.

Within three weeks from the time of their enlistment, some of the companies (not waiting for the entire battalion to be ready) took up their line of march to the Hudson River, on their way to the army at Cambridge, Mass. The Philadelphia Evening Post, of Aug. 17, 1775, stated, on the authority of a communication from New York, that "between the 28th of July and the 2d instant, the riflemen, under the command of Capts. Smith, Lowdon, Doudel, Chambers, Nagel, Miller, and Hendricks, passed through New Windsor (on the Hudson, a few miles above West Point), in the New York government, on their way to Boston." The first of the companies (that from York County) reported at headquarters at Cambridge on the 25th of July, and the last of the battalion arrived there on the 18th of August. Lieut.-Col. Hand wrote, August 20th, that he arrived with Col. Thompson on the 17th; that they were under Gen. Lee's immediate command, but were to move four and a half miles into Gen. Putnam's department, and that Maj. Magaw was in command at Cape Anne. The fine appearance and condition of the rifle battalion is thus mentioned by Thacher in his "Military Journal of the Revolution," under date of August, 1775:

"They are remarkably stout and hardy men, many of them exceeding six feet in height. They are dressed in white frocks or rifle shirts and round hats.<sup>1</sup> These men are remarkable for the accuracy of their aim, striking a mark with great certainty at two hundred yards distance. At a review, a company of them, while on a quick advance, fired their balls into objects of seven inches diameter at the distance of two hundred and fifty yards. They are now stationed in our lines, and their shot have frequently proved fatal to British officers and soldiers who expose themselves to view, even at more than double the distance of common musket-shot."

But though the riflemen were, physically, among the finest troops in the patriot army, they were by no means equally remarkable for soldierly discipline and subordination; in fact the very opposites of these qualities were shown by the men of some of the companies to an extent that brought them to arrest and punishment, as is made apparent by parts of the following extracts from officers' correspondence, which, however, are not given here for that purpose, but mainly to show the services and movements of the battalion.

In a letter dated Cambridge, Aug. 13, 1775, Capt. James Chambers said, "We arrived in camp on the 6th ultimo [instant?], about twelve o'clock. We were not here above an hour until we went to view the lines where the English camp is all in plain sight. We crossed the lines, and went beyond the outposts to a small hill, within musket-shot of a man-a-war and a floating battery, and not farther from the works at the foot of Bunker Hill, where we could see them very plainly. While I was standing there, some of our rifleman slipped down the hill, about a gun-shot to the left of us, and began firing. The regulars returned it without hurting our men. We thought we saw one of the red-coats fall. Since the riflemen came here, by the latest accounts from Boston, there have been forty-two killed and thirty-eight prisoners taken at the light-house, twelve of the latter Tories. Among the killed are four captains, one of them a son of a lord, and worth £40,000 a year, whose name I cannot recollect. The riflemen go where they please, and keep the regulars in continual hot water.

<sup>1</sup> "Each man," says Judge Henry, "bore a rifle-barreled gun, a tomahawk or small axe, and a long knife, usually called a 'scalping-knife,' which served for all purposes in the woods. His under-dress, by no means in a military style, was covered by a deep ash-colored hunting-shirt, leggings and moccasins, if the latter could be procured. It was the silly fashion of those times for riflemen to ape the manner of savages."

"They are every day firing cannon at our people, but have not yet killed a man. We expect six wagons loaded with powder here in two or three days, and when they arrive, our twenty-four-pounders will begin to play on their ships and the lines on Bunker Hill. It is difficult for our men to get within shot of them, as they have floating batteries that flank the end of Winter Hill and men-of-war on the other side, though our boys think they killed several of them. About an hour ago I saw a small cannonading between two of the enemy's boats and one of our batteries to the north of Boston. We can see all the town distinctly from our fort on Prospect Hill, and it is a very pretty place. Two deserters came to us last night."

The battalion was first actually engaged and sustained its first loss in killed and wounded on the morning of the 27th of August, while covering an intrenching party. An account of the affair is given in a letter written by Capt. James Chambers to his wife on the 29th of August, viz.:

"On the evening of the 26th instant, Saturday, I was ordered to draw fifty men out of each of the Cumberland companies, and to be ready to march at sunset. Accordingly I did so, and marched without beat of drum to Prospect Hill, and thence proceeded with the rifleman stationed there—in all about four hundred—to Ploughed Hill, and then down the hill within three or four hundred yards of the enemy's strongest works, to cover a party of about two thousand musketeers who were at the same time to entrench on Ploughed Hill. They labored hard all night, and at daybreak had the redoubts nearly completed. The English began a heavy cannonading, which continued all day. They killed one adjutant and one soldier with cannon, and wounded three others with musket-balls. William Simpson, of Paxton, was struck by shot, and his foot carried away. . ."

Concerning this affair with the enemy and the death of private Simpson, Gen. James Wilkinson (who, as before mentioned, was at that time a volunteer soldier in the rifle battalion) wrote<sup>1</sup> as follows: "The provincials broke ground at Ploughed Hill August 26th, about one mile northwest, and in front of the British post at Bunker Hill, on the peninsula of Charlestown. A detachment of riflemen ordered to cover the working party took post in an orchard, and under cover of stone fences in advance. As soon as the enemy discovered the workmen they opened a battery upon them, and kept up a brisk cannonade by which volunteer Simpson, of Pennsylvania, had one of his heels and ankles so much shattered that mortification ensued, and he died in a few days. The young man was visited and consoled during his illness by Gen. Washington in person, and by most of the officers of rank belonging to the army. Every exertion of the faculty was made to save him, and his death became a theme of common sorrow in an army of twelve or fourteen thousand men." William Smith was a member of Capt. Smith's company from Lancaster County. He died on the 29th of August, 1775, the first Pennsylvania soldier who fell in the war of the Revolution.

In the summer of 1775 the Continental Congress and the commander-in-chief planned an expedition against Canada, the invading forces to consist of a column under Gen. Richard Montgomery to march from the head of the Hudson River by way of Lake Champlain and Montreal, and a detachment from the army in the vicinity of Boston to be under command of Col. Benedict Arnold, and to march through the wilderness of Maine and down the valley of the Chaudière River to the St. Lawrence, near Quebec; the detachment to consist of about eleven hundred men, all New England troops, except three companies of riflemen. The rifle companies selected for this service were those of Capt. Daniel Morgan, of Virginia; Capt. William Hendricks, of Cumberland County, Pa.; and Capt. Matthew Smith, of Lancaster County. The orders, detailing these companies to join the expeditionary force, were received on the 5th of September, and five days later they, with the rest of Arnold's troops, marched from Prospect Hill, Cambridge, for Newburyport, whence they were to be moved by transports to a point on the Kennebec River.

Referring to the departure of the expedition from Cambridge, Jesse Lukens, in a letter dated September 13th, said, "On Monday last (11th) Col. Arnold, having chosen one thousand effective men, consisting of two companies of riflemen (about one hundred and forty), the remainder musketeers, set off for Quebec, as it is given out, and which I really believe to be their destination. I accompanied on foot as far as Lynn, nine miles. Dr. Coates, who goes as surgeon, Mr. Matt. Duncan, Mr. Melcher, and several other southern gentlemen as volunteers. Here I took leave of them with a wet eye. The drums beat, and away they go as far as Newburyport by land, from there they go in sloops to Kennebeck river, up it in batteaux, and have a carrying place of about fifty miles, over which they must carry on their shoulders their batteaux and baggage, scale the walls, and spend the winter in joy and festivity among the sweet nuns." It proved to be very far from a true prophecy. Lieut.-Col. Hand, in a letter to Jasper Yeates, of Lancaster, dated September 23d, said,

"Morgan, Hendricks, and Smith have left with their companies for Canada. Seven hundred musqueteers from here are on the same expedition. The expedition with which the York company was raised does not help on for their misconduct; had Smith's company been better behaved, they might probably saved themselves a disagreeable jaunt." The general refused peremptorily to take the York company. This clearly indicates the general insubordination that existed at that time among the men of the rifle battalion, and which seems in fact to have been worse in Capt. Ross' Lancaster company<sup>1</sup> than in any of the others. A mild <sup>1</sup> Jesse Lukens, in the letter before referred to, dated September 13th, tells the story of the misconduct of the men of Ross' company as follows:

"Our camp is separate from all others about one hundred yards. All our courts-martial and duty was separate. We were excused from all working parties, camp guards, camp duty. This indulgence, together with the remissness of discipline and care in our young officers, has rendered the men rather insolent for good soldiers. They had twice before broken open our guard-house and released their companions who were confined there for small crimes, and once when an offender was brought to the post to be whipped, it was with the utmost difficulty they were kept from rescuing him in the presence of all their officers. They openly damned them, and behaved with great insolence. However, the colonel was pleased to pardon the man, and all remained quiet; but on Sunday last the adjutant having confined a sergeant for neglect of duty and murmuring, the men began again, and threatened to take him out. The adjutant being a man of spirit seized the principal mutineer and put him in also, and coming to report the matter to the colonel where we were all sitting after dinner, were alarmed with a huzzing, and, upon going out, found they had broken open the guard-house and taken the man out. The colonel and lieutenant-colonel, with several of our officers and friends, seized the fellow from amongst them and ordered a guard to take him to Cambridge to the main guard, which was done without any violent opposition, but in about twenty minutes thirty-two of Capt. Ross' company, with their loaded rifles, swore by God they would go to the main guard and release the man or lose their lives, and set off as hard as they could run. It was in vain to attempt stopping them. We stayed in camp and kept the others quiet. Sent word to Gen. Washington, who reinforced the guard to five hundred men with fixed bayonets and loaded pieces. Col. Hitchcock's regiment (being the one next to us) was ordered under arms, and some part of Gen. Greene's brigade (as the generals were determined to subdue by force the mutineers, and did not know how far it might spread in our battalion), Gens. Washington, Lee, and Greene came immediately, and our thirty-two mutineers who had gone about a half a mile towards Cambridge and taken possession of a hill and woods, beginning to be frightened at their proceedings, were not so hardened, but upon the general's ordering them to ground their arms they did it immediately. The general then ordered another of our companies (Capt. Nagel) to surround them with their loaded guns, which was immediately done, and did the company great honor. However, to convince our people (as I suppose, mind) that it did not altogether depend upon themselves, he ordered part of Col. Hitchcock's and Col. Little's regiments to surround them with their bayonets fixed, and ordered two of the ringleaders to be bound. I was glad to find our men all true and ready to do their duty except these thirty-two rascals. Twenty-six were conveyed to the quarter guard on Prospect Hill, and six of the principals to the main guard. You cannot conceive what disgrace we are all in, and how much the general is chagrined that only one regiment should come from the South, and that set so infamous an example, and in order that idleness shall not be a further bane to us, the general's orders on Monday were 'that Col. Thompson's regiment shall be upon all parties of fatigue (working parties), and do all other camp duty with any other regiment.'

"The men have since been tried by a general court-martial and convicted of mutiny, and were only fined twenty shillings each for the use of the hospital, too small a punishment for so base a crime, mitigated, no doubt, on account of their having come so far to serve the cause, and labeling the first crime. The men are returned to their camp and seem exceedingly sorry for their misbehaviour, and promise amendment. I lesson, taught them by court-martial, however, restored them to their senses, and they afterwards became as well-behaved and soldierly in camp as they had ever been brave and steady in times of danger.

The forces destined for the march to Canada under Arnold reached Newburyport on the 12th of September. They remained there in camp five days, and on the afternoon of the sixth day "embarked aboard of ten transports; sailed in the evening, and at dawn of day departed the mouth of the Kennebec River." They "ascended the river to Col. Coburn's ship-yard, whence they were transported in bateaux as far up the stream as Fort Western. There Col. Arnold designated Capt. Smith's lieutenant, Archibald Steele, to command a party of seven men (to be selected by himself) for the purpose of ascertaining and marking the paths which were used by the Indians at the numerous carrying-places in the wilderness towards the heads of the river; and also to ascertain the course of the river Chaudière, which runs from the height of land towards Quebec." Steele made up his party by selecting Jesse Wheeler, George Merchant, and James Clifton, of Morgan's company, and Robert Cunningham, Thomas Boyd, John Tidd, and John McKonkey, of his own company. These made out the party of seven privates as ordered by Arnold, but by some means Steele managed to add "his messmate and friend," the youth John J. Henry, of Lancaster, who had in the first place left home and joined the riflemen as a volunteer in defiance of the wishes of his father, then left the army at Cambridge and joined the Canada expedition without leave,<sup>2</sup> and finally succeeded in adding himself to the already full party of pioneers. "Jeremiah Getchel, a very respectable man, and John Horne, who had grown gray in this cold climate," were employed as guides; and the party thus composed embarked in canoes, and paddled northeastwardly, bound for the waters of Dead River and the wilderness beyond.

charge our whole disgrace upon the remissness of our officers, and the men being employed will yet, no doubt, do honor to their Province; for this much I can only say for them, that upon every alarm it was impossible for men to behave with more readiness, or attend better to their duty; it is only in the camp that we cut a poor figure."

The general orders referred to as disgracing the rifle battalion, dated Cambridge, Sept. 11, 1776, were as follows:

"Col. Thompson's battalion of riflemen posted upon Prospect Hill, to take their share of all duty, of guard and fatigue, with the brigade they encamp with." Also, September 13th: "The thirty-three riflemen of Col. Thompson's battalion, tried yesterday by a general court-martial, whereof Col. Nixon was president, for 'disobedient and mutinous behaviour,' are each of them sentenced to pay the sum of twenty shillings, except John Leamon, who, over and above his fine, is to suffer six days' imprisonment; the paymaster of the regiment to stop the fine from each man out of next month's pay, which must be paid to Dr. Church for the use of the general hospital."

In a letter written by Lieut.-Col. Hand, October 3d, he said, "Capt. Ross goes for Lancaster to-morrow;" and in a letter of the 23d, to Jasper Yeates, he said, "Gen. Washington is irritated by Capt. Ross' absence without his knowledge, and declared to Col. Thompson that any officer who went home from his regiment must resign his commission."

<sup>2</sup> Lieut.-Col. Hand, in a letter to his wife dated Oct. 3, 1776, said, "Mr. Henry, Junior, has followed the troops to Canada without leave. Nothing but a perfect loss to his feelings will tame his rambling desire."

It would be hardly practicable, and certainly tedious and unnecessary, to narrate the events of the wonderful march of Arnold's column through the swamps and forests from the Kennebec to the St. Lawrence. The advance party under Steele proceeded, marking the route, until they reached the dividing ridge from which the waters of the Chaudière flow northward. Having reached this point they retraced the route of their advance, and after almost unparalleled hardships and sufferings rejoined the main body on Dead River. The whole force then pressed on, and early in November reached Point Levi, on the south side of the St. Lawrence opposite Quebec. On the night of the 13th of that month Arnold moved his troops across the river to "Wolfe's Cove," and during the following night they toiled up the steep and lofty bluff, and took position on the historic "Plains of Abraham," three miles west of the city. Five days later they retired some fifteen or twenty miles up the river to Pointe aux Trembles, where, on the 1st of December, Gen. Montgomery arrived, having come down the St. Lawrence after capturing the British posts of St. John's, Chambly, and Montreal. On the night following the arrival of the commanding general the whole force moved down the river to St. Foix, about three miles from Quebec.

In the disposition of the troops around the city the riflemen were posted on the low grounds along St. Charles River, about two miles from the Palace Gate and St. Roch's Gate in the city walls. Cannonading and sharp-shooting occurred daily until and including the last day of the year 1775. The early part of the night of the 31st of December was clear and "admirably enlightened by a luminous moon. . . . Officers as well as privates had dispersed in various directions among the farm- and tippling-houses of the vicinity,"<sup>1</sup> but at midnight the heavens became overcast, and a furious snowstorm set in. Every officer and man of Montgomery's command knew that this was the signal for battle, for the general had only been waiting for such a night of storm as a favorable time to assault the city. By two o'clock A.M. the troops were under arms and on the march through the blinding snow and piercing cold towards the gates. In the furious but unsuccessful assault which immediately followed, Gen. Montgomery was killed and Col. Arnold dangerously wounded in the leg. The rifle companies took part in the attack at the Palace Gate. In that assault Capt. Hendricks, of the Cumberland company, was killed, and Lieut. Archibald Steele, of Drumore (who was then in command of the Lancaster County company<sup>2</sup>), was wounded in the hand, losing three fingers. The survivors of the command were forced to surrender after desperate fighting. They were paroled on the 7th of August, 1776, and after being exchanged, for the most part re-entered the service, following the fortunes of the Pennsylvania Line with Gen. Wayne down into Georgia, resisting the fearful night attack made upon Wayne's camp near Sharon, Ga., on the 24th of May, 1782, entering Savannah in triumph with him on the 11th of July, Charleston on the 14th of December, 1782, and only returning in the month of July, 1783, when the last of the Pennsylvania troops embarked at James Island, S. C., on board of transports for Philadelphia.

Following is given the roll of the Lancaster County company, commanded by Capt. Matthew Smith, who was allowed a bounty of one dollar each for eighty men enlisted. Henry states that sixty-five of their number reached the Plains of Abraham in November. Of nearly the whole company captured on the 1st of January, scarcely thirty, he states, remained in prison. They arrived at New York, Sept. 11, 1776, and were exchanged, in 1778, for the St. Johns prisoners, captured by Gen. Montgomery.

Captain.

Smith, Matthew, Paxtang.

First Lieutenant.

Steele, Archibald,*<sup>2</sup> Drumore. Steele was in command of Smith's company on the night of December 31st, and lost three fingers. He returned from captivity Oct. 10, 1776; was transferred to commissary department, under Col. Flowers, April, 1777; subsequently United States military store-keeper at Philadelphia; died Oct. 19, 1832; fifty-seven years in the service of the United States.

Second Lieutenant.

Simpson, Michael, Paxtang, promoted captain First Penn'a.

Third Lieutenant.

Cross, William, promoted first lieutenant in Col. Moylan's cavalry, and June 3, 1777, captain in Fourth Penn'a.

he says (pp. 220-222), "In former times, as now, lying was in vogue, but methinks within the last thirty years there have been vast improvements in the art. Receive information of two instances which were somewhat remarkable in those days. Simpson (second lieutenant of Smith's company), one of the most spirited and active of officers, always alert, always on duty, was traduced and vilified for a want of courage because he was not taken prisoner at Quebec. On the other hand, Capt. M. Smith, our commander, was applauded for his immense bravery shown in the attack of that place, when in fact he was on the Isle of Orleans, many miles distant from the city. Simpson had been commended to that place by a regular order from Col. Arnold. Capt. Smith skulked there illicitly. . . . Smith wrote, but Simpson acted. A letter from Smith to a worthy and patriotic clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Elder, of Paxton, which was filled with bombast and trash, and stuffed with the most flagrant untruths, that he was in the midst of battle, covered by smoke, bullets of all sizes playing around him, etc., every word of which was fabulous. This person was among the last of those savage men who murdered the innocent and unoffending Indians in the jail of the town we now live in. They have all died miserably, but a few remaining to relate the occurrence of that horrible massacre." The last two sentences have reference to the killing of the remnant of the Onestoga Indians, men, women, and children, in the old Lancaster work-house by the "Paxton Boys" in December, 1763.

<sup>3</sup> The names marked with the asterisk are of those who were taken prisoners at Quebec. Those in italics enlisted in the king's service while prisoners, to avoid being taken to England. Many of them afterwards deserted and rejoined the American army.

Capt. Ross' company remained with Washington's army near Boston during the fall of 1775, and, with the other companies of the rifle battalion, was engaged in a skirmish with the enemy near Charlestown, and lost one man killed and one taken prisoner. This slight affair was mentioned in a letter from Lieut.-Col. Hand to his wife, as follows:

"CAMP ON PROSPECT HILL, 10th November, 1776.

"I give you the particulars of the fun our regiment had yesterday. About 1 P.M. a number of regulars, taking advantage of a high tide, landed from twenty boats on Lechmers Point, to carry off some cattle. Six men of our regiment were on the point to take care of our horses; they did their utmost and partly effected it. One poor fellow was taken; he was of Capt. Ross' company. I think his name was Burke. When the alarm was given Col. Thompson was at Cambridge. I had gone to Watertown to receive the regiment's pay, but thanks to good horses, we arrived in time to march our regiment, which was the first ready, though the most distant of our brigade. Col. Thompson, who arrived before we had crossed the water with thirteen men only of Ross' company, but not being supported by the musqueteers, before I could get up with the remainder of our regiment off duty, returned, and met Maj. Magaw and myself on the causeway; the whole then passed with the utmost diligence, up to our middles in water. David Ziegler, who acts as adjutant, tumbled over the bridge into ten or twelve feet water; he got out safe, with the damage of his rifle only. As soon as the battalion had passed the defile we divided them into two parties, part of Capt. Chambers', Capt. Miller's, and Loudon's, with Maj. Magaw and Col. Thompson, marched to the right of the hill; with part of Cluggage's, Nagel's, and Ross', I took the left, as the enemy had the superiority of numbers and the advantage of rising ground, with a stone wall in front and a large barn on their right and flank, aided by a heavy fire of large grape-shot from their shipping and batteries. We had reason to expect a warm reception; but, to the disgrace of British arms be it spoken, by the time we had gained the top of the hill they had gained their boats and rowed off. We had but one man wounded, I believe mortally, by a swivel-ball, Alexander Crelighton, of Ross' company. William Hamilton need not grudge the money his son cost him. His coolness and resolution surpassed his years. Billy Burd had his eyes closed by the dirt knocked off by a cannon-ball."

On the return of Lieut.-Col. Hand from Lancaster, where he had been on leave of absence, Col. Thompson and Maj. Magaw (the latter of whom had been commissioned colonel of the Fifth Pennsylvania Battalion on the 6th of January) left the army for Pennsylvania (February 2d), leaving Col. Hand in command of the rifle battalion. The latter, writing on the 8th of March, said, "I am stationed on Cobble's Hill, with four companies of our regiment. Two companies, Cluggage's and Chambers', were ordered to Dorchester on Monday; Ross and Loudon relieved them yesterday. Every regiment is to have a standard and colors. Our standard is to be a deep-green ground, the device a tiger partly inclosed by coils attempting the pass, defended by a hunter armed with a spear (in white), on crimson field the motto Domari nolo." This color is still in existence, in possession of the State of Pennsylvania.

At that time (the early part of March, 1776) there were unmistakable indications that the British commander was preparing to evacuate Boston, and as his destination was evidently New York, Washington commenced moving the patriot army to that city. On the 18th of March the commander-in-chief ordered Hand's riflemen, with five other regiments (all under command of Gen. Sullivan), to proceed to New York.

The battalion left Cambridge on the 14th and reached New York on the 28th. Col. Thompson had been promoted to brigadier-general on the 1st of March, and on the 7th Hand succeeded to the colonelcy of the battalion, Capt. James Chambers being promoted to lieutenant-colonel. On the 5th of April, Hand's regiment was moved, by order of Gen. Israel Putnam, to Long Island, where it remained, at a station near New Utrecht, during the remainder of April and the months of May and June, doing some good service.

On the 22d of April, 1776, Gen. Washington said in a letter to the President of Congress, "The time for which the riflemen enlisted will expire on the 1st of July next, and as the loss of such a valuable and brave body of men will be of great injury to the service, I would submit it to the consideration of Congress whether it would not be best to adopt some method to induce them to continue. They are, indeed, a very useful corps; but I need not mention this, as their importance is already well known to the Congress." But Congress had already (without the knowledge of the commander-in-chief) passed a resolution, dated April 15th, to recruit and re-enlist the battalion, and the independent rifle companies attached to it, for the term of two years, unless sooner discharged. On the 30th of June, the day when the time of those who did not re-enlist expired, Col. Hand said in a letter, "Almost all the men discharged to-day declare that they will stay to know what the fleet will do," meaning the British fleet, bringing Howe's army from Boston to the harbor of New York.

On the 1st of July, 1776, the rifle battalion, recruited and re-enlisted, entered on another term of service as the First Regiment of Pennsylvania in the Continental Line. The original enlistment was for two years, but in October, 1776, a committee of the Assembly succeeded in changing the term to the duration of the war. The commanding officer of the regiment was Col. Edward Hand, of Lancaster, who was promoted to brigadier-general March 7, 1777, having, however, acted as brigade commander prior to his promotion.

GEN. EDWARD HAND was born at Elzduff, Kings County, province of Leinster, Ireland, Dec. 31, 1744, and died at his farm, "Rockford," near Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 3, 1802. In 1767 he was appointed by George III. surgeon of the Eighteenth Royal Irish Regiment of foot, and sailed with the regiment from Cork on May 20th of the same year, arriving in Philadelphia July 11th. He was ensign of the same regiment, his commission bearing date 1772. He went with his regiment to Fort Pitt, and returned to Philadelphia in 1774, resigning his commission, and receiving a regular discharge from the British service. The same year he came to Lancaster, with recommendations, in order to practice his profession, and the following year married Catharine (1751-1805), daughter of Capt. John Ewing (1727-1754) and Sarah Yates

Chas. L. King Esq.

(1731-1823), a sister of Judge Yates, of Lancaster. In 1775 he entered the Continental service, and left Lancaster as lieutenant-colonel First Battalion Pennsylvania Riflemen, with his commission dated June 25th of that year. He was on Prospect Hill on August 20th, when the battalion distinguished itself. He was raised to the rank of brigadier-general in 1777, subsequently to adjutant-general, and held this rank at the battle of Yorktown, marching back with the troops to Philadelphia, where they were dismissed. In 1785, Gen. Hand was elected to the lower branch of the Pennsylvania Legislature, and in 1789 he was a delegate from Lancaster County to the convention that amended the first State Constitution. He was a member of the Continental Congress in 1784 and 1785, as a Federalist. In 1798 he was appointed major-general in the Provisional army. Gen. Hand was an intimate friend of Gen. Washington, and had his full confidence during the entire struggle of the colonies for independence, as the following letter attests, and he was one of the original members of the "Order of Cincinnati:"

"MOUNT VERNON, JAN 14th, 1784.

"DEAR SIR,—When I left Philadelphia I hoped to have had the pleasure of seeing you at Annapolis before my departure from thence, and to have had an opportunity (previous to my resignation) of expressing to you personally, amongst the last acts of my Official life, my entire approbation of your public conduct, particularly in the execution of the important duties of Adjutant General.

"Notwithstanding I have been disappointed in that expectation, and have it now in my power only as a private character to make known my sentiments and feelings respecting my military friends, yet I cannot decline making use of the first occasion after my retirement of informing you, my dear Sir, how much reason I have had to be satisfied with the great zeal, attention, and ability manifested by you in conducting the business of your Department, and how happy I should be for an opportunity of demonstrating my sincere regard and esteem for you. It is unnecessary, I hope, to add with what pleasure I should see you at this place, being, with great truth,

"My dear Sir,

"G<sup>o</sup> WASHINGTON.

His children were: Sarah (1775-1860), wife of Samuel Bethel, of Columbia; Dorothy (1777-1862), wife of Edward Brien (1769-1816), a native of Ireland, County Tyrone, and an iron-master at the Martie Iron-Works in Lancaster County; Mary (1780-1880), died unmarried, at New Haven, Conn.; Edward, born in 1792, died at Havana; Jasper, born in 1784; and John (1782-1807).

The children of Edward Brien are: Edward, died in Lancaster in 1834; Harriet; Sarah Bethel, born in 1810, is the widow of Henry Rogers (1803-1868), a lawyer of Lancaster, and brother of Judge Rogers of the same city; Henry, died in Madeira at the age of twenty-one; and Catharine.

The children of Henry Rogers and Sarah Bethel Brien are: Anna Russum, wife of Edward Reilly, of New York; Sarah Hand, died; Catharine Brien, wife of Dr. John L. Atlee, Jr., of Lancaster; Mary Hand, died; Harriet Dorothea, wife of Washington W. Hopkins, a lawyer at Port Deposit, Md.; and Edward Brien Rogers, deceased.

One of Col. Hand's aides-de-camp was Jasper Ewing, nephew of Hon. Jasper Yeates, of Lancaster. The adjutant of the regiment was David Zeigler, of Lancaster County, severely wounded at the battle of Long Island, Aug. 27, 1776; retired from the army Jan. 1, 1783; died at Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 24, 1811, aged sixty-three. Frederick Hubley, of Lancaster borough, was appointed quartermaster.

Among the list of company commanders are found the following of Lancaster County, viz.: Capt. Matthew Smith, Capt. James Ross, Capt. James Hamilton (taken prisoner Nov. 2, 1777; promoted to major Second Pennsylvania Dec. 10, 1778), and Capt. (afterwards major) Henry Miller. Capt. Ross was promoted to major of the regiment, Sept. 25, 1776, and to lieutenant-colonel March 12, 1777, and transferred to the Eighth Pennsylvania. Ross' promotion to major over the heads of senior officers caused Capt. Smith to resign Dec. 5, 1776. Capt. Cluggage, of Bedford County, also resigned for the same reason. The only rolls found of any of the above-named companies are the following incomplete ones of the companies of Capt. Ross and Miller, viz.:

CAPT. JAMES ROSS' COMPANY.

N. B.—Five of the above taken Nov. 10, 1770, on York Island (Fort Washington).

HENRY MILLER,
 Captain, First Regiment.

Nov. 24, 1770.

Following is a list of drummers and fifers for the First Regiment, under tuition at Lancaster, sent forward by the committee of Lancaster to New York, July 26, 1776, viz.: William Ferguson (fife-major, Jan. 1, 1777), Henry Wilson, — Maloy, William Porter, Robert Chalkley, George McGachakin, James Elliott, Robert Jones, Christian Newcomer.

The first general action in which the First Regiment was engaged was the battle of Long Island, fought on the 27th of August, 1776. Some account of the battle, and of the retreat of the Americans across the East River to New York, is given in the following extracts from a letter written by Lieut.-
 Col. Chambers (of the First Regiment) to his wife, and dated "Camp at Delancey's Mills, three miles

"On the morning of the 22d of August there were nine thousand British troops on New Utrecht plains.
 The guard alarmed our small camp, and we assembled at the flagstaff. We marched our forces, about two hundred in number, to New Utrecht to watch the movements of the enemy. When we came on the hill we discovered a party of them advancing towards us. We prepared to give them a warm reception, when an imprudent fellow fired, and they immediately halted and turned toward Flatbush. The main body also moved along the great road toward the same place. We proceeded alongside of them in the edge of the woods as far as the turn of the lane, where the cherry-trees were, if you remember. We then found it impracticable for so small a force to attack them on the plain, and sent Capt. Hamilton, with twenty men, before them, to burn all the grain, which he did very cleverly and killed a great many cattle. It was then thought most proper to return to camp and secure our baggage, which we did, and left it in Fort Brown. Near twelve o'clock the same day we returned down the great road to Flatbush, with only our small regiment and one New England regiment sent to support us, though at a mile's distance.

"When in sight of Flatbush we discovered the enemy, but not the main body. On perceiving us they retreated down the road perhaps a mile. A party of our people, commanded by Capt. Miller, followed them close with a design to decoy a portion of them to follow him, whilst the rest kept in the edge of the woods alongside of Capt. M. But they thought better of the matter, and would not come after him, though he went within two hundred yards.
 There they stood for a long time, and then Capt.
 Miller turned off to us, and we proceeded along their flank. Some of our men fired upon and killed several Hessians, as we ascertained two days afterwards.
 Strong guard were maintained all day on the flanks of the enemy, and our regiment and the Hessian

yagers kept up a severe firing, with a loss of but two wounded on our side. We laid a few Hessians low, and made them retreat out of Flatbush. Our people went into the town and brought the goods out of the burning houses.

"The enemy liked to have lost their field-pieces. Capt. Steel, of your vicinity, acted bravely. We would certainly have had the cannon had it not been for some foolish person calling retreat. The main body of the foe returned to the town, and when our lads came back they told of their exploits. This was doubted by some, which enraged our men so much that a few of them ran and brought away several Hessians on their backs. This kind of firing by our riflemen and theirs continued until two o'clock in the morning of the 26th, when our regiment was relieved by a portion of the Flying Camp, and we started for Fort Greene to get refreshment, not having lain down the whole of this time, and almost dead with fatigue. We had just got to the fort, and I had only laid down, when the alarm-guns were fired. We were compelled to turn out to the lines, and as soon as it was light saw our men and theirs engaged with field-pieces.

"At last the enemy found means to surround our men there upon guard, and then a heavy firing continued for several hours. The main body that surrounded our men marched up within thirty yards of Forts Brown and Greene; but when we fired they retreated with loss. From all I can learn we numbered about twenty-five hundred, and the attacking party not less than twenty-five thousand, as they had been landing for days before. Our men behaved as bravely as ever men did, but it is surprising that with the superiority of numbers they were not cut to pieces. They behaved gallantly, and there are but five or six hundred missing.

"Gen. Lord Stirling fought like a wolf, and is taken prisoner; Cols. Miles and Atlee, Maj. Burd, Capt. Peebles, Lieut. Watt, and a great number of other officers also prisoners. Col. Piper missing. From deserters we learn that the enemy lost Maj.-Gen. Grant and two brigadiers and many others, and five hundred killed. Our loss is chiefly in prisoners.

"It was thought advisable to retreat off Long Island, and on the night of the 30th it was done with great secrecy. Very few of the officers knew it until they were on the boats, supposing that an attack was intended. A discovery of our intention to the enemy would have been fatal to us. The Pennsylvania troops were done great honor by being chosen the corps de reserve to cover the retreat. The regiments of Cols. Hand, Magaw, Shee, and Hazlett were detailed for that purpose. We kept up fires with outposts stationed until all the rest were over. We left the lines after it was fair day, and then came off. Never was a greater feat of generalship shown than in this retreat, to bring off an army of twelve thousand men within sight of a strong enemy, possessed of as strong a fleet as ever floated on our seas, without any loss and saving all the baggage. Gen. Washington saw the last over himself."

Maj. Jasper Ewing, who left the army on sick leave September 3d, wrote from Lancaster on the 10th of the same month to his uncle, Jasper Yeates, at Pittsburgh, as follows:

"As it has pleased Divine providence to spare my life, I think it my duty to send you as good an Ac't of the engagement, together with the enclosed Draught, as lays in my power. As I had gone from Elizabeth point, New Jersey, to Long Island, to see my brothers, I had an opportunity of seeing every thing that occurred from the time the enemy landed on the Island until a day or two before we retreated from thence. Col. Hand's Reg<sup>mt</sup> had been on duty 2 days, & the second night were relieved between 12 and 1 o'clock in the morning, and about 'Two, it is thought, the enemy began their movements from Flat Bush to the Right and Left, and at between 7 and 8 o'clock in the morning, we had the mortification from our Lines to see our men, commanded by Lord Stirling, almost surrounded by the Regulars, as they kept their stand on a Hill without flinching an Inch. The Regulars were firing at them like Fury; they at last descended; then there was a continued peal of small arms for an Hour or better. Our men at last partly got off by the marsh, as in the Draught inclosed. I have been very Ill of a Fever which I got by being clothed too thin, and lay at York about 2 Days before our people had made that Grand Retreat from the Island, which will ever reflect honour to our Generals; from York I was removed to King's Bridge, twelve or fifteen miles from thence, after I had recovered; my Health suffered from Traveling; the Col. was good enough to send me Home in a carriage, where, thank God, I happily am, and don't doubt of recovering Health shortly.

"P.S.—I shall refer you to the papers for our Loss in the Battle, though it is with infinite regret, I must inform you of Major Burd's being among the prisoners, tho' Lord Howe treats them with great politeness. Time will not permit my saying so much as I would wish. I left the Col. & all friends very well at King's Bridge, where the Reg<sup>t</sup> is stationed, as I only left them this day week."

The regiment continued with Washington's army during the subsequent movements of 1776, in the vicinity of New York and in New Jersey, and went into winter-quarters at Morristown. About the 25th of May, 1777, it moved with the army to a new position at Middlebrook and Mount Prospect, N. J. From the regimental camp at the last-named place, Col. Chambers, of the First, wrote Gen. Hand under date June 18, 1777, in which letter he said, "We are now Encamped on the Mountain, on the back of Bound Brook, and have before us a very fine prospect of Brunswick and all the Low Country. On the night of the 14th the Enemy Moved a Detachment of their army to Somerset Courthouse. In the Morning our Partizans and them had a Skirmish; killed Severals—forced one of their Piquet Guards, and took a hessian officer prisoner. The morning following a party from General Sullivan's army way-laid a party of Light horse, killed a Com<sup>d</sup> and 2 or 3 privates, and took 2 Sergeants with their horses and accoutrements. When the Enemy first advanced, General Sullivan Retreated over Delaware, in order to Draw the Enemy on towards Princetown, and then we would have fallen in their Rear, but they thought it not Safe to Leave so formidable an Enemy in their Rear, Least they should find Difficulty in case of a Retreat. They have pitched their Main Camp at Middlebrook, about half-way between Summerset and Brunswick. General Washington long undisturbed, and has left the way Clear for Men to advance to Trenton if they Chuse; but it seems to me they see his Scheme, and Will not Go that Way, for if they do their Ruin to all appearances is inevitable. We have always three days' Provisions Ready Cooked, and keep in Readiness to March at a Minute's warning. We have a partizan Reg<sup>t</sup>—Col. Morgan Commands—Chosen Marksmen from the Whole Army Composes it. Capt. Parr, Lt. Lyon and Brady, & fifty men from my Reg<sup>t</sup> are amongst the number. I have sent Frederick, agreeable to your Request. Pleas to Let me hear from you when opportunity offers.

"N.B.—My best Compliments to Major Ewing. Look out for Good Mill Seats, and Remember old friends."

"This day week we drove the enemy from Brunswick, and I was one of the first officers that entered the town. The advanced party took two prisoners, one a Hessian officer. We cannonaded them smartly, and they ran, and left the works as we approached without firing a gun, though we were within shot of small arms."

In its later service the First Regiment took prominent and honorable part in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, Paoli, Monmouth, and several others of the principal engagements of the Revolution, and continued in the field to the end of the war. A return, dated Sept. 23, 1783, shows that its field-officers at that time were colonel, Daniel Brodhead; lieutenant-colonel, Josiah Harmar (subsequently adjutant-general of Pennsylvania, and general-in-chief of the United States Army); major, James Moore. The captains of its companies were John Doyle, Walter Finney, Thomas B. Bowen, John Bankson, Jacob Humphrey, William Wilson, Thomas Boude (of Lancaster borough), Andrew Irvine, and Benjamin Fishbourne.

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION—(Continued).

Lancaster County Companies in the Battalions of Cols. De Haas, St. Clair, and Shee—Election of Generals at Lancaster—Formation of the Flying Camp—Lancaster County Troops in the Flying Camp and on Duty as Militia in New Jersey in 1776—Companies in the Rifle and Musketry Battalions of Cols. Miles and Allen—Companies in the Tenth and Twelfth Continental Regiments—Militia Ordered out for Defense of Philadelphia—Lancaster County Troops in the Campaign of Brandywine and Germantown—Hospitals established in Lancaster County—Removal of Supreme Executive Council and Congress to Lancaster—Their Return to Philadelphia—Lancaster County Men in the "New Eleventh" Regiment in Sullivan's Expedition of 1778.

SOON after Thompson's rifle battalion took the field, as already mentioned, other troops were raised and organized in Lancaster County, for the patriot army. The First Pennsylvania Battalion, raised in pursuance of a resolution of Congress, passed Oct. 12, 1775, recommending the Assembly or the Committee of Safety of Pennsylvania to raise a battalion on the same terms as those ordered to be raised in New Jersey, contained a large number of Lancaster County men, and was commanded by a Lancaster County officer—Col. John Philip De Haas—whose residence, however, was in that part of the county which is now Lebanon. The surgeon of the battalion was Dr. Robert Boyd, of Lancaster County, and among the names of its line-officers is found that of Lieut. Adam Hubley, Jr., of Lancaster, who in 1776 was promoted to major of one of the additional regiments, and subsequently to lieutenant-colonel of the Tenth Pennsylvania, and still later (June 5, 1779) to "lieutenant-colonel commandant" of the "New Eleventh" Pennsylvania Regiment, of the Continental Line, and Jacob Ziegler, of Lancaster. The term of enlistment was one year. The line-officers were commissioned Oct. 27, 1775.

The battalion rendezvoused at Philadelphia, whence, on the 19th of January, 1776, it was ordered to join the expedition which was preparing to invade Canada under Gen. Gates. Two companies marched in the latter part of January, and advanced into Canada to a point below Trois Rivieres in the St. Lawrence, where they met Col. Arnold, who was moving up the river with the forces which had made the unsuccessful attack on Quebec on the morning of January 1st. The combined forces retired up the St. Lawrence and Sorel Rivers before the advancing columns of Burgoyne's army, and reached St. John's, at the foot of Lake Champlain, where, on the 16th of June, all the companies of De Haas' command were united as a battalion for the first time. Still retreating before the British advance, the battalion, with the other commands of Gates' force, moved up the lake to Ticonderoga.

On the 13th of November this battalion was taken off duty at Ticonderoga, and ordered to embark the next morning for Fort George. It was raised "to the 27th of October" (as shown by a note to Col. De Haas' return, dated October 20th), but remained three weeks longer, at Gen. Gates' request, for the defense and security of Ticonderoga, for which the general thanked them in general orders of the 14th. It was then evident that the British had gone into winter-quarters and would make no further attempts that fall to come southward. Gen. St. Clair came down the Hudson River with this battalion to join Gen. Washington, "and when, on the 8th of December, it reached New Germantown, in New Jersey, the field-officers and staff were still with the battalion, together with Capts. Harmar, Dorsey, and Davis, but the rank and file were reduced to sixty-nine men, the rest having scattered off to their homes." Many of the men of De Haas' battalion re-enlisted, forming the nucleus of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment of the Continental Line, in which was Maj. James Hamilton, of Lancaster County, in later years a resident of Charleston, S. C.

The Second Pennsylvania Battalion, raised under authority of a resolution of Congress, dated Dec. 9, 1775, contained one Lancaster County company, commanded by Capt. John Brisban, of Leacock township, an officer who had seen service in the French and Indian-war. The field-officers of the battalion were Col. Arthur St. Clair (afterwards a major-general in the Revolutionary army), Lieut.-Col. William Allen (promoted from captain in the First Battalion), and Maj. Joseph Wood. The adjutant was George Ross.

On the 16th of February the secret committee of Congress was directed to furnish Col. St. Clair's battalion with arms, and to write to him to use the utmost diligence in getting his battalion ready, and to march the companies as fast as they were ready, one at a time, to Canada. On the 13th of March, Lieut.-Col. Allen had arrived in New York, and embarked some of the companies for Albany, and received an order from Gen. Stirling to direct the rest of the companies to proceed to New York, where quarters would be found for them. On the 12th of April, 1776, five companies of the Second Battalion were at Fort Edward, N. Y., on the Upper Hudson River, where they remained until the 19th, when they were ordered to Fort George, whence they moved northward by way of Lake Champlain into Canada. The other companies of the Second came up, and on the 6th of May, Lieut.-Col. Allen with the battalion had passed Deschambault, and was within three miles of Quebec, where he met Gen. Thomas with the army retreating from Quebec. On the 7th, at a council of war, at which he was present, it was determined that the army should continue the retreat as far as the Sorel. Thomas with the army left Deschambault on the 13th, and was at Three Rivers on the 15th with about eight hundred men. On the 20th, Gen. Thomas was at Sorel, and the same day issued an order to Col. Maxwell to abandon Three Rivers, which he did, and with the rear of the army reached Sorel on the 24th. From Sorel, Col. St. Clair's battalion with other troops turned back and proceeded to Trois Rivières on the St. Lawrence, where, on Saturday, the 8th of June, a severe battle was fought, resulting in the defeat of the American force, which retreated up the St. Lawrence, and reached Sorel on the 10th. On the 14th the British general, Burgoyne, reached that place, the Americans having evacuated it only a few hours before, and moved up the Sorel River to St. John's, at the foot of Lake Champlain. From there the retreat was continued to Isle aux Noix, and thence to Crown Point and Ticonderoga, which last-named place the Second Battalion left Jan. 24, 1777, and moved southward to Pennsylvania, the enlistment of the men having expired. Subsequently many of them enlisted in the Third Regiment of Pennsylvania.

Following is given a copy of the roll of the Lancaster County company of the Second Battalion, viz.:

Lancaster County contributed one company (and a considerable number of men in other companies) to the Third Pennsylvania Battalion, enlisted for one year under authority of a resolution of Congress passed Dec. 9, 1775. The battalion was commanded by Col. John Shee, at that time a resident of Lancaster County, and among its line-officers were Capt. Joseph Hubley and Ensign Jacob Weaver, of Lancaster. On the 11th of June, 1776, Congress ordered the Third and Fifth Battalions (the latter under command of Col. Magaw) to New York, where they arrived from the 20th to the 25th, and were placed in the command of Brig.-Gen. Mifflin. Both battalions marched to the upper part of New York Island, and commenced the construction of Fort Washington, under immediate command of Col. Rufus Putnam. They remained on the work until the 27th of August, when they were marched down to the East River, arriving too late in the afternoon to cross and take part in the battle of Long Island, which was fought on that day. They crossed on the 28th, and remained until the morning of the 30th, when the army crossed to New York, the two battalions forming a part of the force that was assigned to the duty of covering the retreat. A day or two later they reoccupied the position at Fort Washington, where nearly all the men and officers of both battalions were made prisoners in the capture of the fort by the British forces, on the 16th of November. Most of the officers were held prisoners for two years and more. The privates were released in the month of January following their capture, the time of their enlistment having then expired. The remnant of the Third Battalion was the nucleus of the Fourth (Continental) Regiment of Pennsylvania.

When the British general, Howe, evacuated Boston, in March, 1776, it was supposed that his destination was New York, and accordingly Gen. Washington moved his army to that point. It proved, however, that Howe, with the fleet on which his army was embarked, proceeded first to Halifax, to await the arrival of reinforcements from England; but as these did not arrive at or near the time when they were expected he became wearied by the delay, and on the 10th of June set sail from Halifax with the troops of his command bound for Sandy Hook, where a part of the fleet arrived on the 25th of the same month, and a few days later the lower bay of New York, and all the adjacent waters, were thickly dotted by the black hulls of almost innumerable transports and ships of war.

Gen. Washington had received intelligence of Howe's movement to Halifax, yet he never doubted that the ultimate destination of the British army was New York, and he urged upon Congress the necessity of taking immediate measures for raising additional troops to reinforce the army. Thereupon, Congress, on the 3d of June, resolved "that a Flying Camp be immediately established in the middle colonies, and that it consist of ten thousand men, . . ." to be raised in Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Delaware, and on the same day, "Resolved, That thirteen thousand eight hundred militia be employed to reinforce the army at New York."

The formation of the Flying Camp, as directed by Congress, from such of the associated battalions as volunteered for the purpose, required full organization, and a meeting was called at Lancaster, to which the militia of the State were directed to send representatives. This meeting, consisting of the delegates from the officers and privates of the fifty-three battalions of associators, convened on the memorable Fourth of July, 1776, for the purpose of choosing two brigadier-generals. The delegates present representing the Lancaster County battalions were:

First Battalion.

Officers.—Col. George Ross, Lieut.-Col. Adam Reigart.
Privates.—Christ. Wirtz, Francis Baily.

Second Battalion.

Officers.—Col. Curtis Grubb, Maj. Philip Marsteller.
Privates.—James Sullivan, Lodwick Ziering.

Third Battalion.

Officers.—Lieut.-Col. Robert Thompson, Maj. Thomas Smith.
Privates.—John Smith, Isaac Erwin.

Officers.—Capt. Joseph Sherer, Capt. James Murray.
Privates.—Abraham Darr, William Leard.

Fifth Battalion.

Officers.—Col. James Crawford, Capt. James Morcer.
Privates.—Henry Shaymaker, John Whitehill.

Officers.—Lieut.-Col. Alexander Lowry, Maj. James Cunningham.

Col. George Ross was chosen president of the meeting, and Col. David Clymer, secretary. Col. Mark Bird, Col. George Ross, and Capt. Sharp Dulaney were appointed judges of the election. It was decided that the delegates should vote by ballot singly; that both brigadiers should be voted for at the same time, the one having the highest number of votes to have seniority. The election was had, and resulted in the choice of Daniel Roberdeau and James Ewing, the former having 160 votes, and the latter 85. Of the others who received more or less support, Samuel Miles had 82 votes; James Potter, 24; Curtis Grubb, 9; George Ross, 9; Thomas McKean, 8; and Mark Bird, 7 votes. On the announcement of this result, the president immediately declared Daniel Roberdeau first brigadier-general, James Ewing second brigadier-general, and the meeting

"Resolved, That the Brigadier Generals shall have full Power & Authority to call out any Number of the Associators of this Province into Action—their Power to continue until succeeded [superseded] by the Convention or by any Authority under their Appointment. . . .

"Resolved, That we will march under the Direction & Command of our Brigadier Generals to the assistance of all or any of the free, independent States of America."

The appearance of the British fleet and army at the mouth of the Hudson River created great consternation in New York and New Jersey, and scarcely less in Pennsylvania, and measures were at once taken to send forward additional troops to reinforce the army of Washington. On the 2d of July the Council of Safety at Philadelphia resolved that, "In Consequence of Intelligence Just Received, Col. Miles is requested immediately to march his Battalions to this City, & suspend the sending a Battalion to Billingsport 'till further orders,"—the colonel having previously been directed by the Council to march one of his battalions to the fortifications at the place named. The record of the same day's session proceeds: "Letters were this day wrote to the Colonels of the different Battalions of the Counties of Philadelphia, Bucks, Chester, and Lancaster, Requesting that they would hold themselves in Readiness to march at an Hour's warning, with their Battalions, to this City."

The Continental Congress, on the 3d of July, "took into consideration the letter from the Convention of New Jersey" (asking for immediate assistance to repel the expected invasion by Howe's army), and thereupon

"Resolved, That the Committee of Safety of Pennsylvania be Requested to send as many of the Troops of their Colony as they can spare to Mouth County in New Jersey, to the assistance of the Inhabitants of that Colony, & to be subject to the orders of the Commander-in-Chief, the said Troops to be allowed the same pay and Rations as the Troops in the service of the Continent, from the time of their March until their Return."

A copy of this resolve was sent to the Committee of Safety, and thereupon, on the same day, "a Letter was wrote to Colo. Miles, requesting he would give orders for the most Speedy March of the Rifle Battalions to this City, and to Colo. Atlee of the Musket Battalion, desiring his attendance on this Board."

July 4, 1776. The following communication was sent by Robert Morris, on behalf of Congress, to the Committee of Safety:

"Gent'n.—The Congress passed a Recommendation this day Requesting a Conference of the Committee of Safety, the Committee of Inspection of this City, the Delegates of New York, New Jersey, & Pennsylvania, and the Commanding Officers of the Association, to devise the most expeditious mode of raising & marching the Militia of this Province, to the Assistance of the Neighbouring Colonies."

The following appears in the minutes of the Council of Safety, under date of July 5th:

"Upon application of Congress for a Quantity of Fillets for the use of the Army under General Washington; By order of the Board, Robert Towers, Commissary, was directed to deliver 30 thousand of them, and in order to their being conveyed to New York with the greatest expedition, four Chaises were employed for that purpose, two of which set off yesterday evening, and the other two at 4 o'clock this Morning, with a request to the different Committees to aid & assist with Fresh Horses, if found necessary."

On the 8th of July the Committee "Resolved, That Doct'r Adam Kuhn [son of Dr. Adam Simon Kuhn, of Lancaster] be appointed Physician and director General of the Hospital for the Provincial Troops under orders for New Jersey. Resolved, That Doct'r Kuhn be requested to Adjust a plan for the Establishment of said Hospital."

The troops of the Flying Camp, composed of men from Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Delaware, and under command of Gen. Hugh Mercer (who was killed in the battle of Princeton, Jan. 3, 1777), were stationed at Perth Amboy and points north of that place, opposite the west shore of Staten Island, where the British forces were encamped. This corps never actually reached its nominal strength of ten thousand men, and prior to the 15th of July the command of Gen. Mercer had been materially reduced by the sending of detachments to Gen. Washington in New York, amounting to about two thousand men. That the enlistments for the Flying Camp proceeded but slowly, in Pennsylvania, at least, is evident in the minutes of the Council of Safety. On the 24th of July it was by that body

"Resolved, That all the Militia who may be furnished and equip'd agreeable to the Resolve of Congress, do march to such Place as they have been respectively ordered by Congress; and that the persons who have been appointed Captains in the Flying Camp, & have not enlisted twenty-five Men for that Service, do return them to their respective Corps of Associators to which they formerly belonged, and Continue with them. The appointments of Officers for the Flying Camp still to continue, and the men already enlisted, to be considered as bound by their enlistment, and to be continued in service when the Militia may be permitted to return, and subject to the further orders of the Convention, or of this Board. And it is further recommended that those Companies which have been raised to form the Flying Camp, which already consist of twenty-five Privates and upwards, do Immediately proceed to Trenton or Brunswick, as heretofore directed." And again, on the 7th of August, the Committee "Resolved, That Col. Matlack lay before the Convention the Necessity of Raising the Flying Camp, and to request them to take the most effectual Measures to encourage the same, by allowing what may be esteemed a sufficient Bounty."

On the 30th of August the Committee of Safety published the following:

"Whereas some designing, ill-disposed persons have spread false Reports that the number of Troops now in New Jersey is too great; that many are in Consequence discharged by the Generals, and that there is not any occasion to forward the Troops who have not yet been at Camp. The Council, therefore, to frustrate the designs of such persons, and to hasten the March of the Associators to the Camp in Jersey, Make known that there is an Immediate Necessity for the Associators to hasten their March to the said Camp with all expedition, and pay no regard to any reports which do not come from this Council or other proper authority."

In regard to the Lancaster County troops which joined the Flying Camp, and the militia battalions and companies which marched to the Jerseys in the summer of 1776 for a two months' tour of duty, it has been found impracticable to give a connected or complete account, or to give the dates of their departure to join the forces around New York; but the minutes of the Council of Safety furnish items of information concerning various military commands of Lancaster County then forming, equipping, preparing to move, or already on the march to Washington's army, as follows:

Col. Matthias Slough's battalion, May 25, 1776. "Upon application of Col. Samuel Miles for a sum of Money for the use of himself and Col. Slough for the service of the Provincial Battalions. By order of the Board an order was drawn in favour of Col. Miles for the use of Col. Slough on Michael Hillegas, Esqr., Treasurer, for two thousand pounds, & one other order in favour of Col. Miles for one thousand pounds." September 28th, in the Council of Safety, "Mr. Nesbitt was directed to pay Col. Matthias Slough £177 12s. 6d. for arms purchased by him for the use of his Battalion, to be charged to his acc't; also £665 4s. 9½d. for Clothing, &c., for a Company in the Flying Camp, under the Command of Capt. Jacob Glotz." Capt. Glotz (or Klotz) was of Lancaster borough. Slough's battalion was among the earliest of those that joined the Flying Camp, some of its companies (if not the whole battalion) being there on duty prior to the 8th of July. It was in the battle of Long Island, Aug. 27, 1776, and after performing its tour of duty in the vicinity of New York, returned home, and was subsequently employed in guarding prisoners of war at Lancaster and Lebanon.

Col. George Ross' battalion. July 15, 1776, the Committee of Safety directed Robert Towers, commissary, to deliver a certain number of rifles to Col. George Ross, "for the use of his Battalion of Associators, taking Receipts for the same." Mention is made of the companies of Capt. Hoofnagle and Capt. Andrew Graff, of this battalion. August 27th the Committee ordered payment "to Capt. Peter Hoofnagle £58 10s., for arms Purchased for the use of his Company of Col. George Ross' Battalion, of Lancaster County, to be charged to the Col." August 30th, board allowed "Christian Wert & Co. for victualing 4 Companies of Col. Ross' Battalion, Lancaster County, £110 3s. 9d., to be charged to Congress." Nothing is found to show the date when the battalion marched to New Jersey.

Col. James Crawford's battalion. Aug. 5, 1776, "By order of the Board, Mr. R. Towers, commissary, was directed to deliver Maj. Fullerton 25 stand of Arms for the use of Col. James Crawford's battalion, of Lancaster County, taking his receipt for the same." August 14th, "By order of the Board, John M. Nesbitt, Esq., Treas'r, was directed to pay Alexander Rutherford £82 5s., for Cartouch Boxes, and Bayonet Belts £68 5s., to be charged to Col. James Crawford, of Lancaster County." August 16th the board allowed "Col. Crawford's acc't for Arms, &c., £205 14s. 9d., to be charged to Col. James Crawford."

Col. Bartram Galbraith's battalion. August 13th the Council ordered the delivery of a quantity of arms to Col. Galbraith, "for the use of his Battalion." August 15th, "By order of the Board, Mr. Nesbitt was directed to pay to Capt. Robert Craig £17 2s. 0d., for Blankets for the use of his Company," of Col. Galbraith's battalion. August 17th, "An order was drawn on Messrs. Mease & Caldwell for £38 0s. 6d., for Blankets purchased by Capt. Padon, to be Charged to Col. Bartram Galbreath, & to be deducted out of men's wages." August 21st the Council directed Mr. Nesbitt to pay Col. Bartram Galbraith certain sums for powder-horns, cartouch-box, bayonet-scabbards, and "Blankets for the use of his battalion;" also "mileage for two men of Col. Galbreath's Battalion, to be Charged to Congress," showing that the battalion was in the service of the United States, in the Flying Camp, instead of the two months' militia tour of duty. "A Muster-Roll of Capt. Robert McCallen's Company of Militia of Col. Bartram Galbreath's battalion, of Lancaster County, 20th August, 1776, destined for the Camp in the Jerseys," bears the names of the following company officers: Captain, Robert McCallen; First Lieutenant, Matthew Hays; Second Lieutenant, David McQueen; Ensign, Thomas McCallen; Sergeants, James Morrison, John Wear; Corporals, Andrew Hunter, James Kelloy.

Col. Thomas Porter's battalion. The earliest entry in the minutes of the Council of Safety, in 1776, concerning this command is dated August 18th, when Robert Towers (commissary) was directed to deliver arms to "Capt. Ross, of Col. Porter's battalion of Lancaster County," August 29th. "Mr. Robert Towers, commissary, was directed to deliver Maj. Ewing 100 Stand of Arms for the Use of Col. Porter's Battalion of Lancaster County." Same date, Capt. Thomas Morrison (of Porter's battalion) was allowed £25 2s. 6d. for mileage of sixty-seven men ninety miles, "and £6 10s. for a Rifle, to be charged to Col. Porter." September 13th. The Council of Safety allowed £2 8s. 9d. for "dieting" sixty-five men of the company of Capt. William Ross, in the battalion of Col. Thomas Porter, and £1 9s. 3d. "for dieting, 39 meals, of Capt. John Boyd's Company, Col. Thomas Porter's Battalion." Mention is also found of the companies of Capts. Boyd, John Eckman, and John Patton, of Porter's battalion.

Col. John Ferree's battalion. Various entries in August, 1776, relate to deliveries of arms to this battalion by order of the Council of Safety. August 19th. The Council allowed bills of Valentine Vahalt for meals furnished to the companies of Capts. John Rowland, Jacob Carpenter, — Bowman, and Alexander Martin, of Ferree's battalion, and to Capt. Robert McKee, of the same battalion, for mileage of men of his company. August 26th. Council allowed "Col. John Ferree, of Lancaster County, for arms, etc., purchased for his Battalion to be charged to his acco't, £97 18s. 6d.;" and August 29th, "Capt. Andrew Bean £103 15s. for Arms purchased for his Company, to be charged to Col. Ferree," and "Capt. John Withers, of Col. Jno. Ferree's Batt'n, Lancaster County, for Arms Purchased for the use of his Company, to be charged to the Collonel."

Col. Peter Grubb's battalion. August 22d. Council of Safety ordered delivery of arms to Capt. Alexander Martin, of this battalion, and on the 23d allowed "Major John Jones for diet of Capt. Alexander Martin's Company, Col. Grubb's Battalion, £2 3s. 3d., to be Charged to Congress." September 6th. "To pay Capt. Henry Weaver £11 2s. 9d. for diet of his company, Col. Grubb's Battalion, Charged to Congress." September 13th. "Archibald Thompson £4 7s. 9d. for dieting Capt. Adams' & Capt. Morgan's Companies, of Col. Peter Grubb's Battallion, to be charged to Congress," showing that the battalion was in the Continental service.

Col. James Burd's battalion and Col. Timothy Green's battalion were made up principally of men living in that part of Lancaster County which is now Dauphin. The minutes of the Council make reference to the companies of Capt. James Murray, James Cowdon, Joseph Shorer, William Boll, Richard Manning, Jacob Fridloy, John Reed, and Allbright Döbler, of Burd's battalion, and of Capts. Richard McQuown, William Brown, Thomas Koppenhoffer, and James Rogers, of Col. Green's battalion.

A company of the Flying Camp was commanded by Capt. Paul Zantzinger, of Lancaster. Other companies from the county are mentioned as follows; Sept. 6, 1776, Council resolved "to pay Martin Holman for 84 meals for Capt. Joshua Evans' Company of 8th Battalion, Lancaster County, £3 3s. 0d.; for 410 meals for Capt. Wm. Parey's Company, £15 7s. 6d.; for 321 meals for Capt. John Jones, £12 0s. 9d., to be charged to Congress." Sept. 2. "An order was drawn on Mr. Nesbitt in favor of Matthew Hand £50 towards Bounty Money for a Company now raising by him for the Flying Camp, to be charged to his acco't." August 16. The Council "resolved that the Committee of Inspection and Observation of Lancaster County be requested to assist Capt. Matthew Smith in the procuring of 160 Rifles, and that they direct the Gun Smiths in their county to make that quantity of Rifles with all Convenient dispatch, so as not to hinder them from repairing the arms of the Militia now on their march to Head Quarters in Jersey."

It is much to be regretted that we cannot give the rolls of the above-mentioned battalions and companies, which served well and honorably with the army of Gen. Washington in the summer and fall of 1776. Many of the militia returned home after a two months' tour of duty, but the commands which joined the Flying Camp generally remained until the following winter; taking part in the battle of Long Island on the 27th of August, in the later movements in the vicinity of the city of New York, in the retreat across New Jersey to the Delaware River in December, and in the battles of Trenton and Princeton.

The Pennsylvania rifle regiment of Col. Miles, and the musketry battalion of Col. Atlee (to which reference has already been made in extracts from proceedings of the Council of Safety) were recruited in the spring of 1776, and on entering the field in the following July, joined the Flying Camp under Gen. Mercer. These commands were raised (strictly for the defense of the Province of Pennsylvania) at the suggestion of the Committee of Safety to the House of Representatives, which last-named body, on the 5th of March, 1776, resolved to levy and to take into pay fifteen hundred men, officers included; and that the men be enlisted to serve until the 1st day of January, 1778, subject to be discharged at any time, upon the advance of a month's pay to each man. On the 6th, they determined that one thousand of the levies should be riflemen, divided in two battalions of five hundred men each, the remaining to be a battalion of musketeers. The two rifle battalions to have one colonel; each battalion to consist of six companies, to be officered with one lieutenant-colonel, one major, six captains, eighteen lieutenants. The battalion of musketeers to consist of eight companies, officered by a colonel, lieutenant-colonel, major, eight captains, eight lieutenants, eight ensigns, and to have sixteen sergeants, sixteen corporals, eight fifes, eight drums, one adjutant, two surgeons, and one quartermaster, each company to have fifty-two privates.

The rifle regiment was commanded by Col. Samuel

Miles, and the musketry battalion by Col. Samuel J. Atlee, of Lancaster County. In Atlee's command were two Lancaster County companies, commanded respectively by Capt. Thomas Herbert and Capt. Abraham Dehuff. In the second battalion of Miles' regiment was the Lancaster County company of Capt. Peter Grubb, Jr. Two other companies of the regiment (those of Capts. John Murray and John Marshall) raised in what is now Dauphin County, also contained a considerable number of Lancaster County men; and one at least of the officers of Murray's company, Ensign James Hamilton, was of this county. One of the surgeons of Miles' regiment was Dr. Jacob Reiger, of Lancaster. Following are given the rolls of the above-mentioned Lancaster County companies of Miles' and Atlee's commands, viz.:

The rifle regiment and musketry battalion rendezvoused at Marcus Hook. On the 2d of July Miles' regiment was ordered up to Philadelphia, and on the 4th, one battalion, under Lieut.-Col. Brodhead, ordered to Bordentown, N. J., and on the 5th, the whole regiment marched for Trenton, whence it marched to Amboy, under orders to join the Flying Camp, under Gen. Mercer, which it accomplished on the 16th. Col. Atlee's battalion arrived on the beach at Amboy on the 21st. Col. Miles was ordered over to New York on the 10th of August, and Col. Atlee on the 11th; on the 12th they were brigaded with Glover's and Smallwood's regiments, under command of Brig.-Gen. Lord Stirling. In the battle of Long Island, August 27th, Miles' regiment and Atlee's battalion suffered so severely that Gen. Washington ordered the three battalions to be considered as a regiment, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Brodhead, until further orders. On Thursday, September 19th, "the three battalions mutinied, and appeared on the parade under arms. After this they deserted in parties with their arms, about two hundred men in the whole." A party of about thirty of them, attempting to desert, was kept back by force, and during the affair a corporal of the mutineers attempted to bayonet a lieutenant and shoot an ensign. Those who deserted gave as a reason for doing so, a lack of clothing, blankets, rations, and pay, notwithstanding that all had been paid to the 1st of August, "and some deserted immediately after having their full pay to the 1st of September." The following petition or statement of alleged grievances, signed by fifty-eight "privates in Col. Miles' and Atlee's battalions, returned from camp without leave," was addressed and presented to the Committee of Safety:

"We, your Petitioners, Soldiers enlisted for the Province of Pennsylvania, now returned from New York Government, being Willing & Desirous of Letting your Honour know the reason of our returning. Our Commanders told us, the Subscribers, that if we went out of the Province that we should be used well, and return in six weeks from the time we left the Province. We were out of the Province upwards of Two Months and not used according to promise. We never had half of our Provisions Given us that was allowed to us by the Honourable the Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, nor never received any pay for the time we were out of the Province. We lost our Chief Commanders on Long Island, and not knowing who to apply to for Redress when out of the Province, we returned to seek Redress, and hope your Honours will take it into your Consideration. Your Petitioners did not leave New York for Cowardice but for bad usage, and we are willing to fight to Defend the Province where we were enlisted.

"Your Petitioners Humbly beg that you would take it into your Consideration."

On the 5th of October, 1776, the Council of Safety ordered a rearrangement of the three battalions, and on the 25th of the same month ten of the companies of the battalions ceased to exist, by being consolidated with the others. Among those so consolidated were the Lancaster County companies of Capts. Thomas Herbert and Peter Grubb, Jr.<sup>1</sup> The company of Capt. Abraham Dehuff retained its organization in the reorganized command, which then became known as the "State Regiment of Foot." A part of the regiment was present in the action at Fort Washington, November 16th, and fell into the hands of the enemy, with several of its officers, among whom was Capt. Dehuff. The remainder of the regiment remained with Washington's army in the retreat to the Delaware River, and fought in the battles of Trenton and Princeton. Afterwards it moved to Philadelphia, and remained there till March, 1777, when it was moved to the works at Billingsport, N. J.

On the 8th of May, John Bull, Esq., was appointed colonel of the regiment, but he was promoted to adjutant-general on the 17th of June, and Walter Stewart succeeded him as colonel. The regiment was transferred to the Continental service, and took part in the battles of Brandywine and Germantown. By a resolution of Congress, Nov. 12, 1777, it became the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Regiment of the Continental Line, which, in turn, was consolidated (July 1, 1778) into the Second, the Thirteenth having become reduced in strength by the expirations of the terms of original enlistments in Miles' and Atlee's battalions.

The "German Regiment" contained one company from Lancaster County. This regiment was raised under a resolution of Congress, passed June 27, 1776, "That four companies of Germans be raised in Pennsylvania and four Companies in Maryland to compose the German Battalion. . . . That the said Companies be enlisted to serve for three years, unless sooner discharged, and Receive Bounty, pay, rations, and all other allowances equal to any of the Continental Troops. . . . That five thousand Dollars be sent to the Committee of Safety of Pennsylvania & 5000 Dollars to the Convention, or in their Recess, to the Committee of Safety of Maryland to defray the expence of Raising the German Companies."

The Lancaster County company of the "German Regiment" was commanded by Capt. George Hubley, of Lancaster, and afterwards by Capt. Bernard Hubley. The adjutant of the regiment was Lieut. John Weldman. David Dloeffenderfer, of Lancaster, was one of the ensigns.

<sup>1</sup> Capt. Grubb was transferred to the command of a company in the "Additional Regiment" of Col. John Patton, in which Ensign Jacob Weitzel, of Lancaster, also served until his transfer to the "New Eleventh."

The regiment took the field in 1776, and took part in the battles of Trenton and Princeton. It afterwards fought at Brandywine and Monmouth. After the last-named battle the colonel, Nicholas Haussegger, deserted to the enemy, and Lieut.-Col. Ludwig Weltner succeeded to the command. In 1779 the regiment took part in Gen. Sullivan's campaign against the Indians, and in the following year was stationed on the frontier of Northumberland County. By a resolution of Congress in October, 1780, the "German Regiment" was reduced, and its organization ended on the 1st of January, 1781. None of the rolls of the companies of this regiment are known to be in existence.

An independent company, raised in Lancaster County for the purpose of guarding the prisoners of war confined at Lancaster (as will be more fully mentioned hereafter), was commanded by Capt. Jacob Weaver, of Lancaster, who afterwards served with his company in the Tenth Pennsylvania Regiment of the Continental Line, in which there were also considerable numbers of Lancaster County men in the companies of Capts. Jacob Stake and Thomas Herbert of Lancaster County, previously captain in Atlee's battalion. Among the other line-officers were the following of Lancaster County: Capt. John Steele,<sup>2</sup> Lieuts. John Hambright, William Feltman (paymaster), Edward Cowan, and Henry Small (quartermaster); Ensign, Samuel Boude. The second lieutenant-colonel of the Tenth was Adam Hubley, Jr., of Lancaster, previously a line-officer in the First Battalion, and major of one of the additional regiments, and thence transferred to the Tenth. He afterwards became lieutenant-colonel commandant of the "New Eleventh," as before mentioned.

The Tenth was raised in the fall of 1776, under authority of a resolution of Congress, dated September 16th in that year. The line-officers were nearly all commissioned on the 4th of December following. The regiment took the field immediately, and fought in the battles of Princeton, Bound Brook, N. J. (April 13, 1777), Brandywine, Germantown, Paoli, and in several of the later battles of the war. Following is given a "Return of Men Recruited for the service of the United States of America by Capt. Jacob Weaver, of Col. Richard Humpton's Tenth Pennsylvania Regiment from the State of Pennsylvania in 1778," viz.:

<sup>2</sup> Brother of Lieut. Archibald Steele, of Thompson's rifle battalion, who was wounded and taken prisoner at Quebec, Jan. 1, 1776. Capt. John Steele was wounded at Brandywine, Sept. 11, 1777, promoted to captain-lieutenant May 27, 1778, and to captain March 23, 1779.

The original of the foregoing return is now in possession of Mr. John E. Weaver, of Lancaster, who has also Capt. Jacob Weaver's commission, signed by John Hancock in 1776, and the "muster-roll of Capt. Jacob Weaver's Company in the Tenth Pennsylvania Regiment of Foot in the service of the United States, commanded by Col. Richard Humpton, for the month of June, 1779," as mustered and certified June 3d, in that year, by Lewis Woodruff, commissary of musters. It is as follows:

One of the companies in the Twelfth Pennsylvania (Continental) Regiment was commanded by Capt. Stephen Chambers,<sup>1</sup> of Lancaster. Another Lancaster County officer in the Twelfth was Lieut. Stewart Herbert,<sup>2</sup> who recruited part of a company in Salisbury and adjoining townships. No rolls of this or other companies can be given. The regiment was raised in the fall of 1776. In December it moved to join Washington's army on the Delaware. In 1777 it took part in various actions and skirmishes in New Jersey, and fought at Brandywine and Germantown, losing heavily. In June, 1778, it fought at Monmouth, sustaining such severe losses that the remnant was incorporated with the Third Regiment in the following July.

At the close of the year 1776, when Gen. Washington retreated from the Hudson to the right bank of the Delaware River, closely pursued by the victorious columns of Lord Cornwallis, it was the general belief that the British forces would proceed down the Delaware and occupy Philadelphia. This caused great alarm in the city, and Congress and the Council of Safety made preparations to remove at shortest notice. On the 8th of December, at a meeting of the last-named body, "a letter was laid before the Board from Col. Bayard to Mr. Andrew Hodge, dated at Trenton, two o'clock yesterday afternoon, informing that Gen. Howe was advancing at the Head of his Army towards Head Quarters at Princetown. . . . Letters were dispatched to the Colonels or Commanding Officers of the several Battalions of Militia in this State, informing them of the movements of the Enemy, and entreats them to march with their Battalions to succour Gen. Washington, and empowering them to impress waggons to assist the Inhabitants of the Country to remove their effects, if not to be had without."

On the 9th of December the Council "Resolved, That our Treasury and the Books of that office be removed to Lancaster, & that a waggon be provided to-morrow morning early for that purpose. That Mr. Robert Erwine provide John M. Nesbitt, Esqr., with the first waggon that comes in, for the Service of the State." On the 13th the Council "Resolved, That Col. John Bull be empowered to employ a number of Waggons to remove the Powder and other Military Stores from the New Powder Mills at French Creek and Norrington towards Lancaster, there to remain until further orders, under the care of such persons as he shall appoint to Guard the same." Soon afterwards the Lancaster County battalion, under Col. Matthias Slough, and Capt. Mercer's company of Col. Ross' battalion, were ordered to march immediately to Philadelphia.

The victories of Gen. Washington at Trenton and Princeton, and the consequent retirement of the British forces to New Brunswick and the vicinity of New York, had the effect to quiet the alarm which had been felt for the safety of Philadelphia. Congress and the Council of Safety continued their sessions in the city, and the orders for the militia to rendezvous there for its defense were countermanded. Again, in June, 1777, it was believed that the army of Gen. Howe was about to move on Philadelphia by way of the Delaware Bay and River. On the 10th of that month in the General Assembly "Gen. Mifflin desired leave to be introduced into the House, which being done, he informed that he had it in charge from His Excellency Gen'l Washington to Assure them that it was his firm opinion that the Enemy's Army meditated a sudden and immediate attack upon some part of this State, and that he therefore earnestly requested that the Militia of this State, and particularly of the City and its neighborhood, might be ordered to hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's warning to such parts as may be necessary." The alarm, however, subsided in a great degree when it was ascertained, soon afterwards, that the enemy was not approaching the city by way of the Delaware.

But in the following month of August it was definitely ascertained that the British fleet of war-vessels and transports had landed Howe's army north of the Elk River, and that it was preparing to move on Philadelphia, and thereupon all the available troops of Lancaster, as of the other eastern counties, were ordered to march without delay to join the forces of Washington, who were moving to meet the enemy. In this emergency Lancaster County sent forward even more troops than had marched, in 1776, to the relief of New York and New Jersey.

Among the troops who moved promptly to join the army of Washington at this time were the Lancaster County battalions of Col. Alexander Lowry, Col. James Watson, and Col. Philip Greenawalt. All of these fought well, and were commended for their bravery in the battles which occurred soon afterwards at Brandywine and Germantown. Many of the wounded from those engagements (particularly from Brandywine) were carried to Lancaster County. Between five and six hundred were placed in hospital at Ephrata, where more than one hundred and fifty of them died during the following three or four months. Through the winter of 1777-78 detachments of troops were stationed at Lancaster, Mount Joy, Manheim, and other places in the county.

When the defeat of the American army at Brandywine (Sept. 11, 1777) made it evident that Gen. Washington could interpose no successful resistance to the occupation of the city of Philadelphia by the victorious forces of Gen. Howe, the Continental Congress and the Executive Council of Pennsylvania took measures looking to an immediate removal from the city to places of safety. On Sunday, September 14th, the Council "ordered that Mr. Lowden and Mr. Hoge be appointed to have the Money and Papers belonging to the Public Loan Office removed to Easton, in the County of Northampton, and John Snyder and Henry Bartholomew were employed with a Waggon to convey it to the said place. . . . That Col. Nicola furnish a guard of Two Men to go with the said Waggoners. These Papers, &c., are contained in a case, a Barrel, and an Iron Chest." At the same time Col.

Flower was directed by the Council to employ workmen "to take down the Bells of all the publick Buildings in this City, and convey them to a place of safety." On the 17th it was "ordered that the Books in the Library belonging to the State be sent immediately to Easton, in Northampton County, and committed to the care of Robert Levers, Esq., of the said county, to whose care a case and a Barrel containing the Books and Papers of the late Council of Safety and the Board of War have already been sent, with the Loan Office Money and Papers. N. B.—Fourteen Boxes and Two Trunks sent by Philip Mosser and Jacob Kuhn, accordingly." These orders seem to indicate that it was the original intention of the Council to remove from Philadelphia to Easton; but, if so, the plan was afterwards changed, and Lancaster became their objective point, as will appear.

The British army under Gen. Howe entered Philadelphia on the 27th of September. The last session of the Council prior to that event was held in the city on the 23d. Its next meeting was on Wednesday, October 1st, at Lancaster, where its sessions continued to be held for nearly nine months, during which time the president of the Council, the Hon. Thomas Wharton, Jr., died. On that occasion a committee of the Council, appointed to superintend the funeral, ordered "That the Body be inclosed in a double Coffin and interred in the Evangelical Trinity Church in this [Lancaster] borough; the Elders and Vestry of that Church having politely requested that it might be there interred."

The Continental Congress continued its sessions in Philadelphia after the battle of Brandywine, until the 18th of September, when, after the usual routine of business, it adjourned to ten o'clock A.M. of the next day, "but during the adjournment the president received a letter from Col. Hamilton, one of Gen. Washington's aids, which intimated the necessity of Congress leaving their place of deliberation. The members resolved at once to repair to Lancaster, where they arrived on the 27th of September, the very day on which Sir William Howe entered Philadelphia." The Continental records and treasury were removed to Lancaster by way of Bristol and Reading, to avoid capture by the enemy's rangers, who were then scouring portions of Chester County. One session of Congress was held at Lancaster, but the members, believing that they would here be liable to interruption by the enemy, resolved to remove to York, which was done, and their first session at that place was held on the 30th of September, 1777.

In the morning of the 18th of June, 1778, the British army under Sir Henry Clinton (who had succeeded Gen. Howe in the command on the 11th of May preceding) left Philadelphia, and, crossing the Delaware, moved into New Jersey on the campaign which resulted in the battle of Monmouth and the retirement of the enemy to New York. By this evacuation of Philadelphia it became again a place of safety for the deliberations of the Congress and the Council of Pennsylvania, and both bodies made immediate preparations to return to the city. The Executive Council closed its sessions in Lancaster on the 20th, and held its "first meeting in the city, after the evacuation by the enemy," on the 26th of June. Congress remained at York until the 27th of June, and on that day adjourned to meet in Philadelphia at the State-House.<sup>1</sup>

In the spring of 1778 an expedition was fitted out under command of Maj.-Gen. Sullivan, to march by way of the North Branch of the Susquehanna into the country of the Cayuga and Seneca Indians, for the purpose of destroying the villages and crops of those tribes in retaliation for their bloody participation in the massacre at Wyoming in July of the previous year. One of the regiments in Sullivan's expedition was the "New Eleventh" Pennsylvania, under "Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant" Adam Hubley, Jr., of Lancaster, who was commissioned to that office June 8, 1779, to rank from the preceding 13th of February. Of the "New Eleventh," the third company (of which the commissioned officers were Capt. George Bush, Lieut. William Lemmon, and Ensign Jacob Weitzel) contained a considerable number of Lancaster County men, and in the other companies there were a number of privates and officers from this county,—among the latter being Lieuts. Samuel Morrison (quartermaster), William Huston (adjutant), and Samuel Reed.

The regiment, with other commands, rendezvoused at Sunbury, Pa., from which place it marched in the latter part of June, 1779, to Wyoming. The force there concentrated consisted of the brigades of Gens. Maxwell, Poor, and Hand, the "New Eleventh" Regiment being a part of the last-named brigade, which was termed the "Light Corps." The forces left Wyoming July 31st, and reached Tioga Point August 11th. Here two regiments were left to erect defensive works, and the main body proceeded by way of Newtown (Elmira) and the head of Seneca Lake to the "Genesee country,"—the home of the Senecas,—through which the avenging columns of Gen. Sullivan swept like the angel of destruction, doing all that in them lay to cripple and distress the treacherous butchers of Wyoming and Cherry Valley. "The axe and the torch soon transformed the beautiful region from the character of a garden to a scene of sickening desolation. Forty Indian towns, the largest containing one hundred and twenty-eight houses, were destroyed; corn, gathered and ungathered, to the amount of one hundred and sixty thousand bushels, shared the same fate. Mere fruit-trees were cut down, and the Indians were hunted like wild beasts, and neither house nor fruit-tree remained in the country."<sup>2</sup>

The objects of the expedition being accomplished, the army set out on the return march from Genesee September 15th, and reached Fort Sullivan (at Tioga) on the 30th. On Sunday, October 3d, the fort was demolished, the two regiments which had been left behind to build and garrison it rejoined the main body, and on the 4th the army marched from Tioga for Wyoming, and reached that place in the afternoon of Thursday, the 7th of October. Thus closed Sullivan's famous campaign of 1779, having fully accomplished the mission on which it was sent, viz., "The total ruin of the Indian settlements and the destruction of their crops, which were designed for the support of these inhuman barbarians while they were desolating the American frontiers."<sup>3</sup>

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION—(Continued).

Prisoners of War at Lancaster—March of Mutinous Soldiers from Lancaster to Philadelphia—Close of the War—Continental Money.

A GREAT number of prisoners of war were confined at Lancaster at different times during the war of the Revolution. The first of these arrived at Lancaster in the latter part of October, 1775, and the number was afterwards increased by the arrival of other detachments. Some of them had been taken from British vessels driven ashore on the New Jersey coast, and some were of those captured in November, 1775, at St. John's, Canada, by Gen. Richard Montgomery when on his way to Quebec. The first arrival of British prisoners from Canada was on the 9th of December, 1775, when eight officers<sup>4</sup> and two hundred and forty-two privates of the Seventh Royal Fusiliers came to Lancaster in charge of Mr. Egbert Dumont and a guard. Thirty women and thirty children belonging to these prisoners were brought to Lancaster,<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> In a communication by Judge Yeates at that time, he said, "From the Return brought in to us we find the Commissioned Officers of the Regt. are Eleven in number, of whom one is left sick at Esopus and two are with the Baggage. The non-commissioned officers and privates, 242; women, 30; and 30 children."

<sup>5</sup> At a meeting of the Council of Safety in Philadelphia on the 7th of December, 1775, "by order of Congress, Robert Morris, Esq., made application to this Board that they would supply with Provisions the Women and Children belonging to the Ministerial forces taken at St. John's, and to give the necessary directions for their being conveyed to Reading, York, & Lancaster, the places of their destination." And the Council "Resolved, That Mr. Mease & Colo. Robertson be a Committee to see the above request of Congress carried into Execution."

On the 10th of January following the Lancaster Committee said, in a letter to Congress, "The women and children of the prisoners complain that they are denied further provisions by Mr. Franke, Agent in this place. The Agt. says he has rec'd Express orders not to deliver any allowance of Meat or Bread to the soldiers' Wives & Children. The Com., moved by pity, have requested Col. Slough to supply them. The as also, at the same time or soon afterwards, a party of prisoners, officers and soldiers of the Twenty-sixth British Regiment.

The officers of the prisoners were at first lodged in one of the public-houses, and the privates were placed in the Lancaster barracks (which were subsequently inclosed by a strong stockade). No provision having been made for their subsistence, the committee were at a loss how to proceed, and asked advice and instruction from Congress. In the mean time Col. Matthias Slough proposed to the committee to supply rations for the prisoners. Mr. Egbert Dumont, who came with the prisoners of the Fusiliers, informed Congress "that the Captive Soldiers are in great distress for want of Breeches, Shoes, and Stockings, especially the latter."

Among the British officers prisoners at Lancaster was one whose sad fate afterwards made his name familiar through all America and England—"Maj. André was captured by Gen. Montgomery in Upper Canada, when on his way to Quebec, Nov. 3, 1775, and taken with other officers to Lancaster, where he became an inmate of Caleb Cope's house. There the eldest brother, John, then thirteen years of age, received lessons in drawing from . . . the lively young English officer who was destined to figure so terribly in the after history of this country."

Besides the military prisoners sent to Lancaster as above mentioned, several persons were placed in confinement there in the fall and winter of 1775 for political offenses. Among these were a Dr. Kearsley and a man named Brooks, who were arrested in Philadelphia by order of the Council of Safety, and placed in jail there on a warrant issued by that body as follows:

"To Thomas Doweels, Keeper of the Gaol for the City & County of Philadelphia. You are hereby directed to receive into your Custody the Bodies of John Kearsley, I. Brooks,<sup>1</sup> and Leonard Snowden, charged before us with practices inimical to the Liberties of America and dangerous to the Peace and Safety of this Province, and there Safely keep until you shall receive Directions from this Committee for their Discharge; and this shall be your warrant for so doing.

"Philadelphia, 7th October, 1776."<sup>2</sup>

A person named Christopher Carter was also arrested, charged with "being concerned with Doct'r John Kearsley & I. Brooks in their endeavor to procure British Troops to invade this and the other Colonies in a Hostile manner, with other inimical Correspondence and practices," but in consideration of a promise which had been made to him by a committee of the Council of "protection from punishment on condition of his delivering up the Papers, and giving information of the Designs to be executed by him and the others concerned, which he has complied with," he was set at liberty by the Council on security of £500 "for his good behaviour, & that he will not leave the Province without License from the Assembly or Committee of Safety, nor be concerned in practices or correspondence, during his Stay, that shall be inimical to the United Colonies."

Com. ask that Cong. will provide supplies for the children & women. The Com. have taken up a number of blankets at the pub. expense for the Prisoners—have added 72 new blankets to the 165 old ones now in the Barracks. They have purchased coarse strong linen to be filled with straw for bedding."

<sup>1</sup> In a few instances the minutes of the Council of Safety give this name as J. Brooks, but generally I. Brooks, which is probably correct.

On the 19th of October, "By order of the Board, a Letter was this day wrote to the Committee of York County, and one other Letter to the Committee of Lancaster County, respecting Doct'r Kearsley & I. Brooks' confinement in each County." Dr. Kearsley was allowed a servant to be kept at his own expense, and also a clerk to attend him during his confinement, to assist in the settlement of his private affairs. The clerk appointed by the Council of Safety for this purpose was Mr. Stephen Bayard.

Kearsley left Philadelphia on the 24th of October, "guarded by an Escort of Light Horse under the command of Capt. Markoe, for Lancaster, and from thence to be conveyed by a guard to York Town, there to be put into the custody of the Committee of York County, who are to see the Sentence of this Board effected. I. Brooks went at the same time under the same guard for Lancaster, there to be delivered to the Committee of that County, who are to see the Sentence of this Board carried into Execution against him. Letters were wrote, Read, and Approved of, and sent by Capt. Markoe to the Committees of Lancaster and York County, inclosing the Resolves and Sentence against Doct. Kearsley and I. Brooks. . . . A letter dated the 24th inst. was received on the 28th from the Committee of Lancaster County, informing that Capt. Markoe had safely Lodged in the Gaol of that County the Bodys of Doct'r John Kearsley and I. Brooks, and that Doct'r Kearsley would be forwarded to York Town next day under a proper Guard, and that I. Brooks would be continued in his confinement, and dealt with agreeable to the sentence & direction of the Committee." On the 9th of November the Lancaster Committee said in a letter to the Council of Safety, ". . . According to your desire, a proper Guard from hence conducted Doct'r Kearsley to York, and took a receipt for his safe delivery to the Committee there. I. Brooks remains confined in our Gaol.<sup>3</sup> A sub-committee of twelve Gentlemen residing in and near this town has been appointed to see that your Sentence and Resolves respecting Brooks be carried into Execution, and no person is permitted to visit him but in the presence of one or more of these Gentlemen." The twelve gentlemen referred to (appointed a sub-committee November 8th by the committee of Lancaster County) were George Ross, Jasper Yeates, William Atlee,

A paper entitled, "A State [Statement?] of the Guards kept up in the Borough of Lancaster for preserving the Peace of the Borough, keeping the Prisoners in order, and protection of the Magazine, &c., with the approbation of the Honourable, The Continental Congress, from October 25th, 1775, to March 6, 1776," gives the daily details of officer of the day, sergeants, and corporals of the guard, drummers, fifers, and number of privates on duty as guards between and including the dates indicated. It shows that the detail for October 25th (which appears to have been the date of the first posting of guards for the purposes named) was: officer of the day, Capt. Paul Zantzingler; sergeant of the guard, Arnold Bombarger; corporal of the guard, Andrew Cunningham; drummer, — Kersey; fifer, — Brooks; number of privates, sixteen. Afterwards, during the period mentioned, the daily guard detail never exceeded twelve privates, except on the 29th of February, when the number was nineteen. From the 30th of December, 1775, to March 6, 1776, inclusive, the names of officers of the day and sergeants of the guard are given for each day, without break, as follows:

At about this time the independent company of Capt. Jacob Weaver, which had been raised in Lancaster for the purpose of guarding the prisoners, was assigned to that duty, in place of the militia guards. The company afterwards joined the Tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania, as before mentioned.

In the spring of 1776 it was thought expedient to remove the British officers, prisoners of war, at Lancaster, from that place, and on the 14th of March, 1776, the Council of Safety "Resolved, That, agreeable to authority Delegated to this Board by Congress, one-half of the Officers, prisoners of war, who are or have been by any former order stationed in the Borough of Lancaster, be removed to the Town of Carlisle, and the other half removed to the Town of York; and that the Committee of Lancaster take order in this matter, and have full authority to make the arrangements according to their best judgment. Resolved, That Colo. Roberdeau draw up a Letter to the Committees of Lancaster, Cumberland, and York Counties on this subject, and furnish them with the resolution of Congress and this Board, respecting the disposition of the Officers ordered to be removed, agreeable to the resolution of this day; also with a form of the parole said Officers are to take." But at that time the smallpox was raging at York, and the prisoners made strong objections on that account to being sent there.<sup>1</sup> The result was that nearly all who would otherwise have been sent to York were sent to Lebanon, whence, soon afterwards, many of them made their escape in a manner which was for a time regarded as very mysterious, but which was afterwards fully explained.

On the 8th of July, 1776, the Council "Resolved, That the Iron Masters employed in Casting Cannon or shot for the publick service in the Counties of Chester, Lancaster, and Berks, be permitted to employ any of the Soldiers, prisoners of war, at Lan-

"April 17, 1776.

"To Committee of Safety:

"Lieut. Dullhanty declines to go to York with the other prisoners, officers of the 26th Regt.—he fears the small pox, now said to be raging in York—having with him a wife & 2 children. The Com. of Lanc. ask if it would be proper for him to remain in Lancaster, where the privates of his Regt. are yet stationed. Lieut. D. requests to be permitted to go with his family to Reading."

caster and Reading, as Labourers in the said Business, giving an Account to the Committees of Lancaster and Reading of the times of such soldiers as they shall so employ." This permission, which had previously been asked by Col. Curtis Grubb and others, and opposed by the Lancaster Committee as inexpedient, was now given in view of the public exigency, requiring additional artillery and war material for repelling invasion by the army of Gen. Howe, who had then recently appeared with the British fleet at New York.

On the 16th of August "permission was given [by the Council of Safety] to one Officer belonging to each of the Battalions of Prisoners confined at Lancaster, now on Parole at Carlisle, to go to Lancaster and continue for such a Space of Time as is Sufficient to muster the Prisoners belonging to their respective Battalions, & directed to the Committee of Inspection of Cumberland."<sup>1</sup>

The number of prisoners at Lancaster was largely increased by the arrival of the Hessians and others captured from Howe's army in the battles of Trenton, Dec. 26, 1776, and Princeton, Jan. 3, 1777. It is stated that during the latter year as many as two thousand of them were held at one time in Lancaster, and there was also a large number confined at Lebanon, which was then in this county. On the 6th of January, 1777, the Council of Safety, having ordered Col. Slough's battalion and a part of Ross' battalion from Lancaster to Philadelphia, "Resolved, That the Committee of Lancaster direct a sufficient number of aged or infirm Persons, who are unfit to bear the fatigues of the Campaign, to be enrolled under the Town Major, for the purpose of guarding the Prisoners in the Barracks, the Ammunition and Stores in Lancaster during the absence of the militia;" and Mr. Christian Wirtz was at the same time appointed Town Major of Lancaster for the purpose indicated in the resolution. Jan. 11, 1777, the Council authorized John Hubley, Esq., "to employ all the shoemakers amongst the Hessian Prisoners at Lancaster in making of Shoes for this State; for which purpose the sum of two thousand pounds shall be advanced to him or his order, for the purchase of leather or other materials for working upon; and he is to pay them a small allowance for their labor; for which service Mr. Hubley is to have a reasonable compensation."

On the 2d of July, 1777, when the British fleet was daily expected to appear in the Delaware, "a Letter from Christian Wirtz, Town Major of the Borough of Lancaster in the County of Lancaster, dated June 25, 1777, was read in Council. Among other things, Mr. Wirtz represents that the British Prisoners threatened the destruction of Lancaster, and that it alarmed the inhabitants; and proposing for consideration the removing of the said Prisoners to some other place." The Council referred the matter to Congress, and measures were taken to guard the prisoners more securely. On the 9th of August, in Executive Council, "The Continental Board of War, having made application to the Council for a guard, in case it shall be found necessary to remove the Prisoners from Lancaster; thereupon Ordered, that an application of the Commissary of Prisoners, or his Deputy, the Lieutenant of the County of Lancaster [then Col. Bartram Galbraith] do furnish the Guard which may be necessary for the said purpose." And on the 1st of October following the Council "Ordered that Colo. Galbraith, Lieutenant of the County of Lancaster, do immediately send the [three ?] hundred of the Militia of the County to the Borough of Lancaster, and that he do furnish a guard for Prisoners whenever the same may be necessarily required of him."

Of the British and Hessian prisoners surrendered by Gen. Burgoyne to Gen. Gates at Saratoga, on the 16th of October, 1777, a large number were sent to Lancaster. Some of the prisoners were forwarded from Lancaster to York in the following February,<sup>2</sup> but whether they were of those taken by Gates' army or otherwise does not appear. It is evident, however, that a large number remained in Lancaster, from the nature and extent of the precautions taken to keep them securely guarded. On the 18th of March, 1778, the Executive Council "Ordered that the eighth class of Militia of the County of York be immediately called into service and sent to this [Lancaster] Borough. The Council being informed that John Hubley, Esq., has received orders from the Board of War to remove the Powder and other Ammunition from this Borough over the Susquehanna, and as the necessity of keeping a supply of Cartridges for the Guards &c. is evident; therefore Ordered that John Hubley, Esq., be directed to supply Major Wirtz with as much Gunpowder as will fill Twenty thousand Cartridges, & that Maj. Wirtz make up that number of Cartridges for the Guards of this Borough. Ordered that Bart'm Galbraith, Esq., Lieut. of this County, be directed to furnish a guard of two hundred Militia to serve in this Borough, to guard the Prisoners & other purposes." And on the 9th of June following the Council (still holding its sessions at Lancaster) "Ordered that the Lieut. of the County of Lancaster do supply two hundred Militia for a Guard for this Borough, & that he do exert himself to procure them as soon as Possible."

<sup>2</sup> At a session of the Council at Lancaster, Feb. 13, 1778, "The Hon'ble W. A. Atlee, Esq., Commissary of Prisoners, informed the Council that there was a number of Prisoners to be now forwarded to York Town, & that Capt. Long, with a Company of the York County Militia, was now in the Borough on their way home, whose term of Service expired this day; and that they were willing to take charge of the Prisoners & conduct them to York Town, on condition that they draw Rations & receive Pay during the time they shall be employed in this service. Thereupon Ordered, That Capt. Long and his Company, employed in conducting Prisoners from this Borough to York Town, be continued in Pay & receive Rations from this day until they shall have performed that Service."

The Saratoga prisoners who were taken to Lancaster remained there until December, 1778, when they were sent South. On the 6th of that month, in Executive Council, "The President laid before the board a Copy of a Letter from the Board of War of this date to Col. Bland, and also a Letter from that Board to the President respecting the escort of the Convention Prisoners: Whereupon Resolved, That the Lieut. of York County be directed to call out one Class of the Militia of said County to meet the said Prisoners at Wright's Ferry [Columbia] on the Susquehanna, & escort them from thence to the borders of this State; and if there are not a sufficient number of Arms in said County, application be made to Mr. Henry, at Lancaster, or any other Person having the care of Arms belonging to this State, to furnish the necessary quantity, for which the Lieut. of the County is to give Receipts & to be accountable, unless lost by unavoidable accident." The date of the departure of the prisoners has not been ascertained, but reference to the fact is found in a letter from Edward Shippen to Col. Burd, dated Lancaster, Jan. 2, 1779, as follows: "All General Burgoyne's army are gone over Susquehanna. Happy for this borough they were not detained by the weather all winter."

The Continental Congress passed a resolution March 3, 1781, directing that the Convention prisoners should be removed back from Virginia and Maryland to Pennsylvania, the British to York Town, and the Hessians to Lancaster or such other place as the Council of Pennsylvania might direct, and "that after the said troops shall enter the State of Pennsylvania, they be supplied from the said State. That the Executive authority of the State of Pennsylvania be requested to order the supplies, agreeable to the above resolution, and make the necessary preparations for the reception of the Prisoners at the towns or places assigned as aforesaid, and upon their arrival at those places respectively, the Board of War take order for their future security and supply." Upon which the Supreme Executive Council ordered (March 14th), "That the Honourable Mr. Atlee be requested to give directions to the Barrack Master to have the necessary repairs made in the Barracks at Lancaster, so as to accommodate about twelve hundred men, and report the expence thereof to the Council; that if there is no acting Barrack Master, Mr. Atlee be requested to appoint one, and report the same to the Board. That the Lieutenant of the County of Lancaster be authorized and required to call into service two classes of militia of the said county for the purpose of guarding the prisoners. That the Commissioner of Purchases of the said County of Lancaster be authorized and required to take immediate and effectual measures for supplying the said militia with provisions." And on the same day it was by the Council "Resolved, That John Miller be appointed a Commissioner of Purchases for the County of Lancaster, in the room of Christian Wirtz, suspended."<sup>1</sup>

The number of prisoners held at Lancaster at this time was only about eight hundred,<sup>2</sup> instead of twelve hundred, as indicated in the foregoing order of Council. They were principally Hessians, and of the class termed "unconditional prisoners." They were guarded by details of men from the militia, which were changed from time to time; and besides these, a detachment of Col. Moylan's cavalry was stationed at Lancaster<sup>3</sup> to give greater security to the town, the magazine (in which was more than twenty tons of powder), and the large quantities of supplies which were stored there. But between the cavalrymen and the militia guards there was soon developed a feeling of animosity which, on the 19th of May, resulted in

<sup>1</sup> Some of the acts of Wirtz which led to his removal from the office of Commissioner of Purchases in Lancaster County are referred to in letters of William Henry, of Lancaster, to President Joseph Reed. In a letter of March 3, 1781, he said, "Mr. W—— has been bound over for asking a greater Sum in State Money than in Specie for an Article he offered for Sale, and yet he is every day crying down the State Money, saying it is good for nothing and will depreciate, &c.; that the price he gives for Wheat is too little, that it will be dearer, &c., &c. Wheat is now bought from 4s. 6d. to 6s. 6d. specie per Bushel, and he gives Eight Shillings; he has nearly got the amount of the last Order for £2000. If Slough or Belgart would act in W——'s office they would certainly serve the publick much better. Some time after I wrote you, at the Request of Col. Temple, concerning the Difficulty of procuring Forage, the Forage Master of the Corps went to the most disaffected part of this County and got 22 Tuns of hay by a voluntary Subscription in Two Days and one half Riding, although a Stranger without Credit and Money, and this in the Winter. Mr. W——, who was here at Hay Making, could get none, or at least sold so." On the 26th of May, Mr. Henry said in a letter to President Reed, "Mr. Wirtz gives Certificates to the Collectors of the Taxes for the Wheat delivered by the people. I offered to pay his Draughts in favour of the Collectors, but he declines. This, with some other Circumstances, occasions me to think he intends to keep the Grain for his private use; this prevents the Collectors from settling their Accounts with the Board, and gives them much unnecessary trouble and expence."

<sup>2</sup> In a letter from Col. Adam Hubley, county Lieutenant, to President Reed, dated Lancaster, May 21, 1781, the writer said, "We have 800 Prisoners here; the number of disaffected people through this County is very considerable, so that our situation is truly alarming when I consider the state in which I find the militia. . . . The farmer will now be wanted in the field to gather his Harvest, and the expences of quartering Country militia when called upon to perform a tour of duty can be saved, as the Town people have their own houses to go to; besides, should there be a call for militia to march this summer, this town must in a manner be left naked, as the Guards merely would not be sufficient to secure 800 prisoners, exclusive of their Emisaries, which I believe are not inconsiderable."

<sup>3</sup> "From the many and frequent applications, I conceive it my duty to represent to your Excellency the situation of this place. The powder magazine, in which is deposited between twenty and thirty Tun of Powder, is and has been for some time past without Guard. The Militia of this place are unarmed, nor are there any for them in this place, so that little or nothing would be done to oppose any attempt against the magazine or other publick property."

"In consideration of the singular situation of this place application for a Guard from the Corporation was made some time since to the Board of War, who, in consequence thereof, ordered Colo. Moylan's [Moylan's] Reg't (stationed here) to do that duty; but the peculiar state of those Troops I fear they were not acquainted with. I am informed by the commandant they have so few men as scarcely to enable them to furnish a sufficient Guard for the Stables (which is absolutely necessary) and those are destitute of clothing, and some of them sickly."—Letter of Col. Adam Hubley to President Reed, dated Lancaster, March 3, 1781.

a collision that was mentioned as follows in a letter written two days afterwards by Col. Adam Hubley, Jr., to President Reed :

"Necessity, as well as duty, obliges me to demand a further indulgence and give Council a short narrative of an unhappy affair which happened on the 19th inst. between the guards and Col. Moylan's Dragoons. It appears one of the Dragoons, for some offence which he had committed, was put into the Goal house; a rescue by the Dragoons was agreed on; they accordingly assembled, armed with pistols and swords, marched to the Barracks, and one more daring than the rest stepped up to the Sentinel, who previously desired him not to advance or he would put him to death; this, however, had no effect, he (the Dragoon), first cocking and presenting his loaded Pistol, attempted to seize the sentinel's arms, who instantly fired and killed him; the deceased's Pistol in his falling went off also and wounded one of the militiamen in the thigh. This gave alarm to the Town, and the Horse, finding their situation rather precarious, made off to their respective quarters. Ever since this affair the Inhabitants have been kept in continual alarm on account of the threats and behaviour of the dragoons, who swear vengeance against the militia, and particularly the Sentinel, who, like a good soldier, did his duty on his post (an Inquest was held on the body of the deceased). He, for his security, has kept in the guard-house ever since; they have threatened to force the Guards and seize him, indeed, last evening (12 o'clock) some attempts were made, but the activity of the out-Sentinel, after halting some men who were coming towards him, and receiving impertinent language, fired, and this day, though it is not yet clearly found out, we are informed one of the Horsemen was shot through the arm. I have called on the Commanding officer of the Horse and requested he, with his officers, should exert themselves in putting a stop to this affair; every step by them is taken, I believe, to find out the leaders and have them punished."

"I have no doubt," said Hon. William Atlee, in a letter of May 25th, to President Reed, in which he narrated the incidents of the affair, "but their Officers will do everything in their power to keep them in order, and am persuaded the Militia will be watchful, but should a party of those people attack the Guard in the night (which was apprehended and believed to have been their intention a few nights since) the Prisoners would probably take that opportunity to force their way from the Barracks, and the consequences would be bad. This consideration has induced me to order the Block-Houses at the four corners of the Stock-ade to be put in order, so that the whole of the militia ordered for Guards, as well those off as those on duty, may live in them, and not be scattered thro' the Town by Billets; they will then be ready at their Posts in case of any alarm, and will have a better eye on the conduct of the Prisoners."

Three days before the above-mentioned affray between the dragoons and militia guards the authorities at Lancaster discovered a well-concerted plot among the prisoners to effect their escape, and which they had intended to put in execution on the 17th of May. The particulars of the affair were narrated as follows by Col. Adam Hubley, Jr., county lieutenant, in a letter to President Reed, dated Lancaster, May 21st :

"A daring plot was discovered on the night of the 16th instant, at the Barracks in which are confined the British Prisoners, which, however, by the early intelligence we received, was happily frustrated. About 11 o'clock at night I was called upon by the Officer of the Guard, who informed me a soldier of the 71st Regiment had come to the guard-house (one of y<sup>e</sup> Block-houses) desiring admittance, that he had a matter of importance to communicate; he was accordingly admitted, and gave the following intelligence: That the Sergeants of the Prisoners had a private and unanimous meeting that day, and form'd a plan to effect the escape of the whole, viz.: They, after their meeting broke up, inform'd the Prisoners of their resolution, and gave directions for the whole to be in readiness on the proceeding day to avail themselves of the opportunity when the gates opened for the delivery of their wood the whole to rush out, surprise the Guard, and disarm them; they then would proceed to town, where a certain Inhabitant (his name we cannot find out) would conduct them to a Magazine of arms and ammunition; these they were also to take, then to fight their way thro' the Country and effect their escape.

"Immediately on receiving the information, after making some necessary dispositions of the Guard, entered the Barrack-yard and ordered the whole of the Sergeants (upwards of forty in number) to parade, which after some time was effected. I then gave them in charge of the Guard, and had them conducted to the jail, where they are now safely lodged. . . . If some ways and means could be fallen on to arm the militia of this Town, I should consider it safe from any attempt of the prisoners or their Emissaries."

At the beginning of the summer of 1781, the people of the borough of Lancaster became greatly alarmed by the appearance and rapid spread of a malignant fever among the prisoners in the barracks, and this alarm was increased by the arrival of a body of "convention prisoners" from the South (those previously confined in the barracks being of the class known as "unconditional prisoners," as before mentioned). Strong protests were made by the inhabitants against the quartering of this additional detachment of prisoners in the borough, and with a view to laying the matter before the Council and asking for their removal, Paul Zantzinger, chief Burgess of Lancaster, procured from Dr. Houston the following certificate :

"LANCASTER, July 14, 1781.

"SIR,—My opinion being desired concerning the State of the Fever of the Prisoners in the Barracks in this Borough, I think it my Duty to assure you that the Jail Fever, attended with the most malignant symptoms prevails very generally among them; that it will be extremely difficult to eradicate it from those already there, without some additional Quarters or Buildings, and morally impossible, if those of the Convention be added; and that the Inhabitants of the Borough, especially those any way concerned in the Care of them, are in the most imminent danger of contracting the Contagion.

"I am, Sir,

"Your most obedient Servant,

"J. HOUSTON."

This certificate, as also "a Petition of the Corporation of the Borough of Lancaster at the request of the Inhabitants," praying for the removal of the Convention prisoners from Lancaster, was forwarded (July 14th) to President Reed. Another letter, favoring the removal of the prisoners, was addressed to the President by the county lieutenant on the 17th. On the 20th, in Council, "A letter from Col. Adam Hubley, Lieutenant of the County of Lancaster, dated the seventeenth instant was read, and thereupon Ordered: That the Lieutenant of the county of Lancaster do call one hundred and twenty militia for the purpose of guarding prisoners to Easton and Philadelphia. The militia which may be sent to Easton to continue there on duty until relieved by the militia of the county of Northampton, and on their return to Lancaster to complete their tour of duty as guards at Lancaster. The militia sent to Philadelphia, on their return to Lancaster, also to complete their tour of duty there as guards."

No mention is found of the number of prisoners thus sent to Easton and Philadelphia. With regard to those who remained in Lancaster, it does not appear that they suffered very severely from the ravages of the fever, or that the disease spread to any great extent among the people of the town. Later, during the summer and fall of 1781, there were frequent escapes of prisoners, sometimes singly, oftener by twos and threes, and sometimes in larger parties. These escapes were believed (correctly as it was afterwards shown) by the authorities to have been assisted by inhabitants of the town and surrounding region. In Col. Hubley's letter to President Reed (before quoted) he speaks of "a certain Inhabitant" of Lancaster, who was privy to the projected escape of prisoners on the 17th of May, and who, in case of their success, was to guide them to the magazine of ammunition and arms. Various other references are found in public documents of that year to "emissaries," "disaffected inhabitants," and others, suspected of furnishing assistance to escaping prisoners.

The Hon. William Atlee, writing to President Reed, Aug. 6, 1781, urged that more efficient guards be placed over the prison-barracks at Lancaster, "for keeping in order a set of artful fellows who frequently persuade some of those [militia guards] from the country, as well officers as privates, when on duty, to let them pass from the barracks on various pretences; by which means they get opportunities of straggling into the country, and with the assistance of the disaffected, make their escape."

In this situation of affairs the Board of War decided to send a body of Continental troops to supersede the militia detachments in the duty of guarding the prisoners, and, in the latter part of December, 1781, Gen. Moses Hazen—who had served under Washington against Cornwallis at Yorktown—was ordered with his regiment ("Congress's Own") to Lancaster<sup>1</sup> for that purpose. Detachments were sent as guards to York and Reading, but the main body of the regiment was stationed at Lancaster, where there was a larger number of prisoners than at either of the other places named.

Gen. Hazen at once set about the business of ascertaining how, and by means of what assistance, the escapes had been (and still continued to be) effected; but for a time the matter remained apparently as far from explanation as ever. "Many and various were the conjectures as to the means of their escape; the officers inquired and investigated in vain; the country was explored to no purpose; the soldiers shook their heads and told of fortune-tellers, peddlers, and such characters, who had been seen at intervals; and sundry of the more credulous could think of nothing but supernatural agency; but whether man or spirit was the conspirator, the mystery remained unbroken."

Finally Hazen conceived a new plan, which seemed to promise success. He then procured an interview with Capt. Andrew Lee (then on recruiting service at Paxtang), who, on being informed of the project, and the manner in which it was to be accomplished, at once assented to it. The plan proposed was this: It was to be given out that Capt. Lee was absent on furlough or command. He, meantime, was to assume the dress of a British prisoner, and having provided himself with information and a story of his capture, was to be thrown into the barracks, where he might gain the confidence of the soldiers and join them in a plan of escape. It was a dangerous service, one which might cost him his life should he be discovered, but he was brave as a lion and shrewd as he was brave; and how well he sustained his part and maintained his disguise may be understood from the fact that when he had disappeared and placed himself among the prisoners his own officers and soldiers saw him daily, yet none of them had the least suspicion of his identity.

The plan was successful. For many days Lee remained in the barracks among the prisoners without making any discovery, but finally, on a dark night and amid the howling of an autumnal storm, he found himself included, by mistake, in a party of four prisoners (including himself), for whose escape arrangements had evidently been made. They passed the sentinel without discovery, and were then joined by an unknown man and an old woman, who, under the supposition that she was deaf, half-witted, and harmless, had been allowed to pass freely inside the stockade to sell apples and other fruit to the prisoners. She took them to her hut, in a lonely place about a mile from the borough, whence, after partaking of some coarse food, they set out on their journey towards the Delaware River, reaching that stream without molestation, but being there captured by a party of patriot militiamen scouting along its banks. They were sent in irons to Philadelphia, where Capt. Lee disclosed his identity to the Minister of War, Gen. Lincoln, and was of course released. By his dangerous adventure he had gained information which enabled the authorities to bring to justice fifteen persons who had aided in the escape of British prisoners. Among those who were convicted of this offense in the Lancaster County court were Jacob Grove, Christian Grove, Jacob Snyder, and Henry Martin.<sup>1</sup> The names of the others can easily be ascertained, but it has not been thought a matter of much importance. As a result of Lee's daring adventure, the escape of prisoners was afterwards almost entirely prevented.

<sup>1</sup> The following is from the Minutes of the Supreme Executive Council, Philadelphia, Wednesday, Jan. 2, 1782: "Maj.-Gen. Lincoln, Minister of the War Department, informs the Council that General Hazen's regiment is appointed to guard the prisoners in the counties of Lancaster, Berks, and York; whereupon Ordered, that the Lieutenants of the counties of Lancaster, Berks, and York, respectively, do discharge the militia now on duty as guards over the prisoners, so soon as the said Continental troops shall take charge of the prisoners in those counties."

During the time of Gen. Hazen's command at Lancaster (in the summer of 1782), it was represented to the Supreme Executive Council "that, under pretence of supplying British prisoners with clothing, a store of British merchandise is opened in or near the borough of Lancaster, within this State, whereby a clandestine traffic is carried on between the inhabitants of this county and those who reside within the garrisons, and places therein now in the possession of the enemy, a market is provided for British merchandise, the circulating specie is exported from the United States, the payment of taxes rendered more difficult and burthensome to the people at large, and great discouragement occasioned to honest and lawful commerce." Upon which information the Council, on the 27th of June,

"Ordered, That William Henry, Esq., of the said borough, taking to his assistance a Justice of the Peace of Lancaster, do inquire concerning, and inspect the store in the said borough which has been opened on the pretence aforesaid; and if it shall appear that any goods, wares, and merchandise shall be found therein other than made-up uniforms for the said prisoners, to take possession of the said store, with all merchandise therein contained, and report to this Board; placing a sufficient guard to secure the same until further order from this Board. And if any goods, wares, and merchandise other than made-up uniforms shall hereafter be brought into the said borough or county under the pretence aforesaid, to seize and secure the same in like manner and report to this Board."

July 8, 1782, "The Council, being informed that a quantity of merchandise was said to be lodged in the house of John Musser, in the borough of Lancaster, which, from circumstances that have transpired, it appears probable the same are British goods, clandestinely imported; whereupon Ordered, That the Attorney-General do issue an attachment in the name of the State against the British merchandise in the house of the said John Musser, supposed to be clandestinely imported, and report his proceedings to this Board.

"On consideration of the circumstances attending the seizure of the store of British goods at Lancaster by William Henry, Esquire, Ordered, That the said William Henry, Esquire, be authorized and directed to seize and secure the books and papers relative to the store aforesaid and report to this Board. Ordered, That the Secretary desire Mr. Henry not to deliver the wine or goods, but to seize the wine if brought from New York, and if not from New York, to inquire if the duty be paid, and seize it if not paid the duty."

The Continental troops, under Gen. Hazen, remained on the duty of guarding the prisoners at Lancaster until the fall of 1782. On the 9th of September, in that year, the Minister of War notified the Council of Pennsylvania that a detachment of Hazen's troops were to be moved to Fort Pitt, and that upon their departure it would be necessary to have one hundred and forty-five militiamen (besides officers) ready to take their places as guards over the prisoners at Philadelphia, York, Lancaster, and Reading, viz.: one hundred men at Lancaster, and fifteen at each of the other places named. Upon which the Council ordered that the lieutenants of the counties of Philadelphia, Berks, and York each call into service one subaltern, one sergeant, one corporal, and fifteen privates; and "That the Lieutenant of the county of Lancaster be directed in like manner to call into service two captains, four subalterns, eight sergeants, eight corporals, and one hundred rank and file of the militia of said county next in order of duty, for the purpose of guarding the British prisoners of the said county, to be in readiness to mount guard on the twenty-fifth instant."

Gen. Hazen's troops had been ordered to Fort Pitt for the purpose of joining an expedition (composed mainly of militia of Westmoreland and Washington Counties) to start from the fort on the 6th of October and march against the hostile Indians at Sandusky. But immediately after the troops left Lancaster for Fort Pitt (September 25th), the War Department was notified that the British had called in their Indian allies.<sup>2</sup> The Sandusky expedition was therefore abandoned, and the Continental soldiers returned to Lancaster,<sup>3</sup> where they remained until the early part of November following. On the 2d of that month, on the eve of the departure of Hazen and his command, the burgesses of the borough of Lancaster, in accordance with the request of "several reputable inhabitants, who desired that the thanks of the corporation should be given to Gen. Hazen and the officers under his command, for their good and uniform behaviour to them and the inhabitants during their residence in it," agreed on and adopted the following address, which was presented to Gen. Hazen by William Parr and John Hopson, appointed a committee for that purpose:

"SIR,—We, the Burgesses and assistants, &c., of the Borough of Lancaster, do, with the utmost satisfaction, return you and your officers our most sincere and warmest thanks for the many distinguished proofs of your regard and attention to them and the inhabitants. Your generous undertaking of erecting Barracks for the reception of your Troops and others that may require hereafter quarters in this place, and thereby easing the inhabitants; your faithful and steady attention as Superintendent of the Prisoners of War, and your spirited conduct in general in promoting the public weal merits the highest approbation and thanks of this incorporated body.

"To Brigadier-General Hazen.

"Signed by order of the Burgesses,
"LEWIS HECK, Clerk."

"WAR OFFICE, Sept. 27, 1782.

"DEAR SIR,—From late accounts, forwarded by his Excellency General Washington, we learn that the Indians are all called in. This has induced the resolution to lay aside the expedition I mentioned to my last

"I am, dear Sir, your ob't serv't

"B. LINCOLN."

<sup>3</sup> On the 28th of September it was, by the Council, "Ordered, That the militia of the Counties of Lancaster, York, and Berks, called into service on the 9th instant for guarding the British prisoners in the said counties, be discharged as soon as the Continental troops shall return to that duty."

It does not seem entirely clear whether the whole body of prisoners left Lancaster at this time or whether some remained under guard of the militia.<sup>1</sup> No record is found of the subsequent calling out of militia for that service at Lancaster. In the spring of 1783 another small body of Continental troops was stationed in the borough, but it is not shown that they were there as guards. Many of the Hessian prisoners never returned to Europe or to the British army, but settled in Lancaster County and other parts of Eastern Pennsylvania, where their descendants are still found.

The preliminary articles of the treaty of peace between the United States and Great Britain were signed on the 30th of November, 1782, the treaty to take effect on the 20th of January following. The cessation of hostilities was formally proclaimed on the 16th of April. Then arose the question of how the army could be disbanded in safety, for Congress was without means to pay the soldiers, and there was on that account a deep and general dissatisfaction among both officers and men, and this was accompanied in many quarters by open threats of mutiny and violence.

It was found to be next to impossible to hold together under discipline the men enlisted for the war (who composed the greater part of the army), after the proclamation of an indefinite cessation of hostilities, but at the same time it would be an act of amazing folly for America to disarm entirely until the articles of the provisional treaty were carried into execution. This consideration caused Congress to adopt the expedient of offering furloughs to such of the soldiers as chose to return to their homes, to be mustered out and discharged upon the ratification of the definite treaty. The furlough was accepted by all, or very nearly all who had enlisted for the war, except those of the Pennsylvania line who were then in the State. These refused the furloughs, and became violent and insubordinate (especially the detachments at Philadelphia and Lancaster), and openly threatened mutiny in case they did not receive in full the arrears of their pay.

At this time there was stationed at Lancaster a body of Continental troops under command of Col. Richard Humpton. With regard to these troops the Minister of War, Gen. Lincoln, instructed Gen. St. Clair (June 14, 1783) as follows: "Should any of the men now at Lancaster decline receiving their furloughs, you will please to form them in complete corps, and cause them to be marched to the barracks at Carlisle." The orders were sent to Col. Humpton at Lancaster. But the soldiers (in particular those who were recent recruits) demanded an immediate settlement. There was no one at Lancaster who was empowered to make settlement with them, and had it been otherwise their demand must have been refused, as it was. Upon refusal, a body of about eighty of the soldiers, with their non-commissioned officers, set out, June 18th, on the march for Philadelphia, with the avowed purpose of obtaining justice from Congress or the Executive Council, by force if necessary.

On the 19th of June the war office in Philadelphia received by express the intelligence that "the troops at Lancaster have mutinied, and are now on the march to this city." On the same day in Council "Letters from William Henry, Esq., and Col. Richard Butler, containing information of the march, temper, and intentions of part of the troops stationed at Lancaster, were read, and transmitted to the delegates of this State in Congress." A conference was then had with a committee of Congress "on the subject of the preceding advices from Lancaster. In this conference the idea of reducing the [insurgent] party by force, or of preventing them from crossing the Schuylkill (the next desirable object) was suggested, and the probability that their confidence would increase with their numbers, and that under their uncorrected example, the remaining part of Butler's and all Armand's corps would take the same steps. Maturely considered, the result of which was that the committee and Council concurred in the opinion that from the good order observed in their march, the tranquil temper of the troops already here [in Philadelphia], and the measures pursued by government to make them all easy and contented, the language of invitation and good humor became more advisable than any immediate exertion of authority." On the same day orders were issued from the war office, that the soldiers should on their arrival be received into the barracks and supplied with rations.

The insurgent party from Lancaster arrived in Philadelphia on the 20th of June and marched to the barracks, where, as had been anticipated, they were joined by soldiers of the detachments stationed in the city, augmenting the force of the mutineers to about three hundred men. On Saturday, June 21st, a party of thirty soldiers under arms marched from the barracks to the State-House, where both Congress and the Executive Council held their sessions, and sent in to the Council a written message, as follows:

"May It please your Excellency,—

"We, the non-commissioned officers and soldiers now in this city, demand of you and the Honorable Council authority to appoint commissioned officers to command us, and redress our grievances, which officers to have full power to adopt such measures as they may judge most likely to procure us justice. You will immediately issue such authority and deliver it to us, or otherwise we shall instantly let in those injured soldiers upon you and abide by the consequence. You have only twenty minutes to deliberate on the important matter. The officers in general have forsaken us, and refuse to take any further command. This I presume you all know.

"We are, in behalf of ourselves and the men,

"Yours, etc., etc."

The terms of this message were immediately and unanimously rejected by the Council, who about an hour later sent the secretary to inquire of the soldiers at the door (whose numbers had in the mean time been increased to fully three hundred) whether the message sent to the Council was approved by the soldiers in general. The secretary reported that he had been answered insolently by some of the leaders that it was approved by all, and that the Council should hear more from them. The Council adjourned at four o'clock P.M., at which time the soldiers marched back to the barracks.

No regular session of Congress was held on that day, it being Saturday, the usual day of recess. But on learning of the gathering of the troops, the President summoned the members to meet in special session. They left at about three o'clock P.M., having had an informal conference with the Council, and having also passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the President and Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania be informed that the authority of the United States having this day been grossly insulted by the disorderly and menacing appearance of a body of armed soldiers about the place in which Congress were assembled, and the peace of this city being endangered by the mutinous disposition of the said troops now in the barracks, it is, in the opinion of Congress, necessary that effectual measures be immediately taken for supporting the publick authority."

At an extraordinary session of Council, held on Sunday the 22d, the foregoing resolution of Congress was read by a committee of that body, who explained that it meant a demand by Congress that the Council should immediately call out a militia force sufficiently strong to disarm the mutineers, reduce them to obedience, and place them within the power of Congress. The Council was not disposed to carry out such a measure, giving as one of the reasons to the contrary "that the State Magazine was in the hands of the soldiery, and the Commissary of Military Stores had but a very inconsiderable quantity of fixed ammunition in his possession, . . . that this was not so much to be considered as an insurrection of citizens of Pennsylvania as a mutiny of Continental troops; that if the rest of the army could be relied on it appeared advisable that intelligence of this disturbance should be immediately dispatched to the Commander-in-Chief, and a body of men put in motion towards this city," etc. The committee replied that the army could be relied on, and that Congress was determined on coercion, and a force would at once be ordered here from the Continental Line; and that as to the matter of insufficiency of ammunition, the Council might be assured that any quantity of musket and cannon cartridges could be supplied in fifteen minutes, "one of the committee having pointed his inquiries to that subject, and his information being derived from a person whose business it was to know." Whereupon the Council desired "that the ammunition mentioned by the committee might be secured, lest it might be discovered and seized by the soldiers."

was to show that while Congress was determined to use strong measures, the Council was equally determined to temporize with the insurgents. At a meeting held on the morning of the 24th, at which several officers were present by invitation, Col. Shee gave the following opinion, as senior officer present, viz., "That it would be imprudent to call upon the militia now, as we are convinced that it would be ineffectual," etc., and the Council in effect concurred in the opinion. But in the afternoon of the same day, "Information having been received that the soldiery meditate an immediate attack upon the Bank," the Council thereupon "ordered that the militia officers be directed to call for as many of their respective commands as possible, and, repairing thither, take such posts as may be best calculated for its defense. That Capt. Joseph Stiles, Commissary of Military Stores, repair immediately to the old work-house, and deliver to the militia such publick arms and ammunition as he may be possessed of."

The Council, having finally committed themselves to the policy of using force to compel the mutineers to submission, continued their energetic efforts to that end; in the session of June 25th, ordering an increase of the force in the city to five hundred, and the issue of the necessary arms and ammunition. "We then adjourned," says the Council's record, "and were severally employed in engaging the militia and citizens in general to take arms immediately." These preparations, together with the intelligence which just then reached the city that a Continental force, ordered by Congress from New Jersey, was then marching towards Philadelphia, caused the mutinous troops to realize the danger of the position in which they had placed themselves. At this crisis President Dickinson requested Col. Humpton to go to the barracks and reason with the leading ones among the soldiery. "He did so, and some citizens went to assist, by advising the soldiers to behave prudently in the present exigency. After some time they were prevailed on to leave their arms under guard at the barracks, to come to the President's, and hear what he should say to them. They came, and paraded before his house. He addressed them on the subject of their late and present behaviour, insisted on their giving a further evidence of their good disposition, and of their duty full submission to the offended Majesty of the United States, by compelling the soldiers lately arrived from Lancaster to lay down their arms, or begin their march for that place, under the command of their officers at the end of twenty-four hours, unless in that time these unhappy men should return to a sense of their duty. At the conclusion of the address they were ordered to repair to the Barracks under command of their officers, then present, and behave themselves as soldiers ought to do, and they instantly obeyed. The next day [June 26th], at twelve o'clock, the soldiers from Lancaster submitted, and soon after began their march for that borough."

The Continental Congress, thinking themselves grossly insulted in Philadelphia by the occurrences above mentioned, resolved to leave the city; and, accordingly, on the 24th of June, adjourned at the State-House, to meet in Princeton, N. J. Pursuant to the adjournment, they convened on the 26th in the library-room of Nassau Hall, in Princeton, where their sessions were continued during the remainder of the season. Some time after the removal to Princeton, Congress wrote to Gen. Washington, then at Newburg, N. Y., asking his attendance before that body, to consult on the arrangements for peace, the disbandment of the army, and other public concerns. Leaving the army on the Hudson in command of Gen. Knox, he at once repaired to Princeton, reported to Congress, and established his headquarters in a mansion at Rocky Hill, about four miles from the town. There he remained until November, in attendance upon Congress, and in consultation with its committees; and there he wrote his farewell orders and address to the armies of the United States. In that address, which was issued from the headquarters at Rocky Hill on the 2d of November, 1783, he referred to the proclamation of Congress of the 18th of October applauding the armies for their virtue, fortitude, and magnanimity, giving them the thanks of the country for their long and faithful services, and ordering their discharge from service after the 3d of November, and said,—

"It only remains for the commander-in-chief to address himself once more, and that for the last time, to the armies of the United States (however widely dispersed the individuals who composed them may be), and to bid them an affectionate, a long farewell. But before the commander-in-chief takes his final leave of those he holds most dear, he wishes to indulge himself a few moments in calling to mind a slight review of the past; he will then take the liberty of exploring with his military friends their future prospects,—of advising the general line of conduct which, in his opinion, ought to be pursued; and he will conclude the address by expressing the obligation he feels himself under for the gifted and able assistance he has experienced from them in the performance of an arduous office. . . . And, being now to conclude these his last public orders, to take his ultimate leave in a short time of the military character, and to bid a final adieu to the armies he has so long had the honor to command, he can only again offer in their behalf his recommendation to their grateful country and his prayers to the God of armies. May ample justice be done them here, and may the choicest of Heaven's favors, both here and hereafter, attend those who, under the Divine auspices, have secured innumerable blessings for others! With these wishes, and this benediction, the commander-in-chief is about to retire from the service. The curtain of separation will soon be drawn, and the military scene, to him, will be closed forever."

Continental Money.—Inseparable from the history of the Revolutionary struggle is the story of the Continental currency (issued as the only resource for keeping the patriot armies in the field), and its remarkable depreciation. The Continental dollar, which at first passed for its face value, was in September, 1777, reduced to seven shillings and sixpence.<sup>1</sup> In October it had fallen to seven shillings; November, six shillings and three pence; December, five shillings and eightpence; January, 1778, five shillings and twopence; February, four shillings and eightpence; March, four shillings and threepence; April, three shillings and ninepence; May, three shillings and threepence; June, two shillings and tenpence; July, two shillings and sixpence; August, two shillings and twopence; September, one shilling and ten and one-half pence; October, one shilling and seven and one-half pence; November, one shilling and fourpence; December, one shilling and twopence; January, 1779, one shilling; February, ten and one-half pence; March, ninepence; April, eightpence; May, seven and one-half pence; June, six and one-third pence; July, sixpence; August, five and one-half pence; September, fivepence; October, four and one-half pence; November, fourpence; December, three and one-half pence; January, 1780, threepence; February, threepence; March, two and one-half pence; and up to the 18th of May, 1780, two and one-tenth pence, and then nothing. In Pennsylvania, however, as late as Feb. 1, 1781, the Executive Council resolved that Continental money should be received for public dues at the exchange of seventy-five dollars for one in specie. This continued till the 1st of June in that year, when an act of Assembly went into effect that only specie, or bills of credit equivalent thereto, should be received for taxes or other public dues. This was the end of all value to Continental money in this State. In some other States it had become worthless nearly a year earlier. How the people ever managed, with such a currency, to buy, sell, or traffic at all, or how the government ever succeeded in carrying the war to a successful issue with such a currency seems a mystery. It could never have been done but for the assistance of the great financier, Robert Morris, who more than once placed his immense fortune at the disposal of Congress to save the patriot cause. As it was, the depreciation of the Continental currency brought great hardship, loss, and ruin to multitudes of people; and those who suffered most were the brave men who had borne the toil and privation of the march and the camp, and risked their lives in battle, to make their country free.

CHAPTER IX.

SLAVERY IN LANCASTER COUNTY.

Early Slaveholders—The Abolition Law of 1780—The Underground Railroad—Operations under the Fugitive Slave Law.

THE first white settlers along the Delaware River were slaveholders, and when William Penn founded his colony in 1682, he not only found slavery established along the northern shore of the lower river, but some of his followers were not averse to owning negro slaves themselves.

The system which permitted slaves to be held for life was no more rigorous, nor were they treated any more severely than were the "redemptioners," who were sold into servitude to pay the cost of their passage from Europe to America. The records of our courts fully attest the frequency of runaway redemptioners, who, in many cases, were harshly treated. Slavery as it existed in Pennsylvania was rather of a mild type, and her citizens did not care to carry on a traffic in slaves, and make profit by breeding them for another market. No follower of George Fox, who believed sincerely in his precepts, could look upon human bondage with approval, hence we find that the Quakers in England and America were the first to make a public protest against the system. Societies were formed to promote the gradual abolition of slavery in many of the States. Occasionally a person advocated immediate emancipation or abolition of slavery, who found followers, and these gradually increased in numbers, and began to awaken a kindred sentiment in the breast of every lover of the entire freedom for the human race.

The Pennsylvania Society for the Abolition of Slavery was founded in 1775, and was in existence up to the period when Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, in 1863, gave slavery in the United States its death-blow. The first president of this society was that great philosopher, statesman, and philanthropist, Benjamin Franklin. The first secretary was Benjamin Rush. In 1790 this society sent a memorial to Congress, bearing the official signature of Benjamin Franklin, president, asking that body to "devise means for the removing the inconsistency of slavery from the American people," and to "step to the very verge of its power for discouraging every species of traffic in the persons of our fellow-men."

The Legislature of Pennsylvania, by an act dated the 1st day of March, 1780, entitled "An Act for the gradual abolition of slavery," provided and declared that all servitude for life, or slavery of children in consequence of the slavery of their mothers (in case of children born within the State after the passing of the act), should be utterly taken away, extinguished, and forever abolished. But such negro or mulatto children born within the State after the passing of the act as would have been slaves in case the law in question had not been made were liable to be held to service as bound children or servants were, until they attained the age of twenty-eight years. All slaves who were such at the time of passing the act were required to be registered in books provided for the purpose in the city of Philadelphia and in the several counties in the State before the 1st day of November then next ensuing, and none to be deemed slaves or servants until thirty-one years unless thus recorded. To prevent the evasion of this law it was provided that no negro or mulatto should be held to service by indenture for a longer time than seven years, unless the person so bound was, at the commencement of the term, under twenty-one years of age, in which case an obligation to serve until twenty-eight, but no longer, was declared.

The tenth section of the act contained a proviso excluding from the benefit of the law the domestic slaves of members of Congress, foreign ministers, and sojourners not becoming resident within the State, limiting the slaves of the last-mentioned class of holder to a period of six months. In a few years it was found that there were frequent evasions of the tenth section. Slaves were brought into the State, and held nearly but not quite six months, then removed for a few minutes beyond the line of the State, and brought back to remain another term of nearly six months.

This law was so modified in 1788 as to prevent parties from taking their slaves to another State and bringing them back again, as in the cases cited above. Under this law one of the most exciting cases occurred in Lancaster County. On the 9th day of January, 1804, Charles S. Sewell, of the Eastern Shore of Maryland, was married by the Rev. James Latta to Miss Catharine Keagy, a granddaughter of James Patterson, the old Indian trader and pioneer, who settled in Manor township in 1717. Sewell removed to Manor township, and settled upon a tract of land containing about five hundred acres, divided into several farms. He brought several of his slaves with him from Maryland, and kept them for a period longer than six months. William Wright, who resided at Columbia, and a grandson of John Wright, the pioneer, made application to the court in Lancaster for an order discharging Sewell's slaves. When summoned to appear before the court, Sewell was enraged at Wright for interfering with a personal matter which, he alleged, concerned him alone.

Like a majority of the old-time abolitionists, Mr. Wright had a good share of moral courage, and could not be moved from the position he chose to take upon this question, yet he lacked physical courage. Sewell had made threats to do personal violence to Wright, and after the court ordered his slaves to be set free, he went to his hotel, and ordered his horse to be brought out immediately. Anticipating this movement, Wright mounted his horse and started for his home, but he had gone but a short distance when he observed Sewell riding after him upon a fleet horse. Wright was a good rider himself, and, although a birthright member of the Society of Friends, he frequently, when a young man, engaged in the chase, and he happened on this occasion to be mounted upon a very fleet and blooded horse. Sewell had a raw-hide in his hand, ready to lay it over the back of Wright. The chase commenced at the western limits of West King Street, Lancaster, and was kept up for six miles, with only a few yards intervening between the pursued and pursuer. When they arrived in front of the Bear Tavern (afterwards kept by Klugh), near Mountville, Sewell was close enough to reach Wright, and gave him a cut with his rawhide, when the latter suddenly sprang from his horse and ran into the tavern. Sewell stopped to hitch his horse, and the time thus lost enabled Wright to effect his escape. Sewell kept a number of race-horses and a pack of hounds, but he found few congenial spirits in Lancaster County, and removed back to Maryland, where his wife died shortly afterwards.

When the act of 1780 was under discussion in the Legislature, Col. Alexander Lowry, a member from this county, who was himself a slaveholder, took strong ground against the separation of slave families, and made most urgent appeals to the Legislature to insert a clause in the law, then under discussion, to prevent families from being divided and sold to different masters.

The old iron-masters were the principal slaveholders in the country, Curtis Grubb being the largest holder. A number of slaves were held by the Scotch-Irish settlers in Drumore, Little Britain, Colerain, Bart, Donegal, Mount Joy, Rapho, and Hempfield townships, by the Welsh settlers in Caernarvon, and the Episcopalians in Salisbury township. Earl, Leacock, and Lampeter townships also contained a number of slaveholders. Many slaves were manumitted by these early inhabitants of the county, and ample provision was made in their wills for their comfort during life. Small houses with patches of ground for gardens were provided for them in a number of cases.

Considerable efforts were made in Pennsylvania to bring the question of the constitutional existence of slavery before the courts for its final decision, but that tribunal made no decision. Slavery in Pennsylvania was of such a mild type that it caused comparatively little opposition.

Matters went along quite smoothly until about the year 1825, when a number of free colored children were suddenly missed from the city of Philadelphia. They were supposed to have been drowned, but as their number increased it began to be thought that they had been kidnapped and taken to the South and sold into slavery. Some of these children were taken to the State of Mississippi and offered for sale to John M. Thomson and John Henderson, of Rocky Springs, in that State. Suspecting something wrong, they wrote to the mayor of Philadelphia, when the newspapers took up the matter. Great indignation was aroused throughout the State, and public sentiment was thereby set strongly against the institution of slavery, though few at that time advocated its immediate abolition.

William Wright, of Columbia, was perhaps the first person to suggest a system and concert of action among the friends of the slaves to help them in their flight from Southern bondage to a land of freedom by establishing a number of "stations" along this route, where friends could direct and pass the fugitives from one friend to another. Owing to the secrecy of those who had charge of the fugitive slave it was very rarely indeed the case that any of them were discovered and prosecuted. Hence it came to be known as the "Underground Railroad." This led to a great deal of irritation between the North and the South. Unawed by threats and the terrors of the law, the small band of abolitionists pursued the even tenor of their ways.

In 1850 Congress enacted the "Fugitive Slave Law," which imposed severe penalties for refusing to assist in the arrest of a fugitive slave when called upon by a deputy marshal. If a crust of bread was given, or the slightest assistance rendered to a slave fleeing from his master, the act was construed under this law as coming within its penalties. The case of Mr. Kauffman, of Cumberland Valley, was one in point. Two or three fugitive slaves took refuge in his barn at night, where some member of Mr. Kauffman's family, without his knowledge, gave them food. The owner or reputed owner of these men, who were fugitives from slavery, brought suit against Mr. Kauffman to recover the value of these slaves. The case was a long and interesting one. The Hon. Thaddeus Stevens was employed by Mr. Kauffman, and he contested every inch of ground. Finally, when the case came before the United States Court in Philadelphia, two Lancaster County men were on the jury, viz.: Edward Davies, of Churchtown, and Abraham N. Cassel, of Marietta. The members from this county "hung" the jury for six weeks, and prevented a verdict in favor of the slaveholder. Although Mr. Kauffman was not convicted, it cost him a large sum of money, and he was forced to sell his farm in consequence.

The first conflict and bloodshed under this law took place in Lancaster County. At and in the neighborhood of the Gap there was a gang of kidnapers, whom not all the vigilance and cunning of the negroes and their friends could prevent from carrying free black men to a slave State and selling them into bondage. In September, 1850, Henry Williams was seized at night, taken into Maryland and sold into slavery. In March, 1851, a colored man was taken from Mr. Chamberlin's and sold into slavery. The anti-slavery friends and the colored people in Sadsbury township became more vigilant, meeting frequently and taking counsel with each other. Every stranger who came into the neighborhood was watched and his movements reported, and if he was suspected the fact was communicated to some friend, and the colored people were cautioned. Those who resided in dwellings of their own were armed, and measures were adopted to give an alarm to the neighborhood if their premises were invaded at night by the kidnapers.

The great Chester Valley, the most beautiful and lovely one in the State, suddenly diverges when it reaches Penningtonville, and leads in a southwesterly direction through Sadsbury township. When about two miles south of the town of Christiana, in Sadsbury township, the valley is about one mile wide, the Great Valley road running through its centre. The southeastern side was bounded by hills covered with chestnut and oak timber. A long lane ran at right angles with the great road to that hill, and at some distance up its slope; another lane ran a short distance in a northerly direction about forty yards to a one and a half-story log house which was occupied by a colored man named William Parker, who worked for the farmers in the neighborhood and cultivated a few acres of ground. A fine growth of timber ran to within a few yards of the house. The place was secluded, but overlooked the valley below.

On the 9th and 10th of September, 1851, a number of suspicious-appearing persons were seen at Penningtonville, at the Gap and other points, and the fact was reported by Samuel Williams, a colored man, who had watched their movements. Every colored person in the township was warned to be on their guard, and their friends were not idle. In Parker's house there were three fugitive slaves named Noah Buley, Nelson Johnson, and Joshua Hammond. Edward Gorsuch, a slaveholder, who resided in Maryland, claimed to own these slaves, and obtained a warrant from one of the United States commissioners in Philadelphia for their arrest. It was placed in the hands of a deputy marshal, named Henry H. Kline, for execution. He selected a few men of the vicinity to assist him, who, with Edward Gorsuch, Dickinson Gorsuch, his son, J. M. Gorsuch, a cousin, Joshua Gorsuch, Dr. Thomas Pearce, also a relative, John Agen, Thomas Tully, and several others, arrived at the Gap in the afternoon of Sept. 10, 1851.

The party proceeded down the railroad towards Christiana about a mile, where they met a professional kidnapper, who was to act as their guide. They remained concealed in the neighborhood until a late hour in the night, when they proceeded to Parker's house, and arrived there about daylight on September 11th. When the party arrived at the bars, in the short lane leading to Parker's house, they met Nelson Gorsuch's alleged slave, who was going to work for one of the farmers in the neighborhood. He suspected no danger, and was humming a negro ditty when they came upon him. He turned and ran into Parker's house and ascended to the loft before any of Gorsuch's party could catch him. Gorsuch was the first one of the pursuers to enter the house. He went to the foot of the steps which led to the loft, and attempted to go up, but he was driven back by some one of the party, who was armed with a pitchfork. He first resorted to threats of violence, and failing in that, he undertook to coax his alleged slaves downstairs; but in this he also failed. He then went outside of the house, and attempted to parley with those in the loft; the answer was the report of a gun. The shot injured no one, but the sound was carried across the valley to the hills beyond, where there were many who understood what it meant, and they hastened in the direction of Parker's house. An old-fashioned dinner-horn was blown by one of the colored men out of the loft window, and the sound was an alarm-signal to their friends in the valley. No bugle was ever sounded to call men to battle who responded more promptly than did the black man's friends to this call for help. Kline, who was not a brave man, at once realized their peril, and fled to a corn-field where he hid himself. Gorsuch and his party slowly retreated down the short lane to the bars.

By this time succor for the negroes had arrived. Castner Hanway rode up the long lane. Elijah Lewis and Joseph Scarlet, all anti-slavery friends, came about the same time. Colored men armed with guns, scythes, and clubs, were seen running from every direction to Parker's house. Hanway and Lewis advised the slave-owners to leave at once if they desired to save themselves, when Edward Gorsuch suddenly turned in the direction of Parker's house and said he would "have his property dead or alive." His sons and nephews followed him, but he had gone but a few steps when he was met by Parker with the fugitive slaves and some others, who fired several shots at the slaveholder's party. Edward Gorsuch fell mortally wounded at the first fire, and one of his slaves sank a cornstalk-cutter deep into his brain. Dickinson Gorsuch stood bravely by his father, and was very seriously wounded. Dr. Pearce and Joshua Gorsuch were both wounded. Dr. Pearce's life was saved by Castner Hanway, who told him to catch the stirrup of his saddle, and he rode down the long lane amidst a shower of missiles.

There was great excitement in the neighborhood, and when the facts became known, it created a profound sensation throughout the country. It happened in the midst of a political campaign in the State for Governor, and the unexpected turn which it brought about defeated William F. Johnston for Governor by a few thousand votes.

The negro Johnson, who shot his master, was taken through to Canada on the "underground railroad" in three days. Constables from Lancaster were sent to the neighborhood, and they entered every house for many miles around, and treated the colored inmates with great severity, many of them being dragged to jail and confined there without a particle of evidence against them.

Castner Hanway, Elijah Lewis, Joseph Scarlet, and a number of colored men were arrested for their participation in the affair, and were indicted for treason. Hanway was the first one arraigned. His trial commenced Nov. 24, 1851, before Judges Grier and Kane in Philadelphia, and terminated Dec. 20, 1851, in his acquittal. The other prisoners were not tried. There were three members on the jury from Lancaster County in this memorable trial, viz., Peter Martin, James M. Hopkins, and James Cowden. Peter Martin resided in Ephrata township, near New Ephrata. He was afterwards (1860) elected prothonotary and (1866) associate judge of the county. He died before the expiration of his term. James M. Hopkins, iron-master, resided in Drumore township, and is now living, at an advanced age, upon his Conowingo farm. James Cowden resided at Columbia, and had been a member of the Legislature in 1850.

The Grand Jury was composed as follows:

"Grand Inquest for the United States, inquiring for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania. August Term, 1851.

"Thomas B. Florence, Foreman; John H. Diehl, John Dolby, Benjamin Millin, Isaac Myer, Andrew Scott, Ambrose J. White, and Gerhard B. Wilstach, Samuel Castor, Waters Dewees, Abraham L. The counsel in the case were: for the United States, John W. Ashmead, George L. Ashmead, James R. Ludlow; for the State of Maryland, Robert J. Brent, James Cooper, R. M. Lee; for the defendant, John M. Read, J. J. Lewis (of Westchester), Theodore Cuyler, Thaddeus Stevens (of Lancaster), W. Arthur Jackson.

Castner Hanway was born in the State of Delaware, and at the age of five went with his father to Chester County, from whence he removed to the State of Maryland. From there he went to one of the Western States, and returned to Chester County about three years before this affair, and in the spring of 1851 he married, and rented a grist-mill in Chester Valley, a short distance from Parker's house. He lost everything, but he never regretted having taken part in this affair. He died since 1880.

The first martyr under the fugitive slave law was sacrificed at Columbia. On the 30th of April, 1852, Albert G. Ridgely, a slave-catcher, of Baltimore, Md., and a one-armed man named Snyder, who pretended to be a deputy marshal, made their appearance in a lumber-yard between Front Street and the river, below Perry Street, in the borough of Columbia, where they arrested a colored man named William Smith, (claimed as a slave by George W. Hall, of Harford County, Md.), who was there at work. Smith said nothing, but struggled to get away from Ridgely and Snyder, and was forcing his way towards an opening in a paling fence along Front Street. If he could have reached this opening, which was only large enough to admit the passage of one person at a time, he doubtless would have escaped, but when within a few feet of it, Ridgely drew a pistol and shot Smith in the side of the head or neck, killing him instantly. Ridgely fled and crossed the bridge to Wrightsville, thence he took the old Baltimore road and passed to the south of York, where the sheriff and his posse were watching, and expected to arrest him. Ridgely became so overheated and exhausted by the headlong haste of his flight that when he arrived in Baltimore he was taken sick and died a few months later.

This affair created a profound sensation in the community. Application was made to Governor William Bigler for a requisition on the Governor of Maryland for Ridgely. Governor Lowe, of Maryland, appointed Otho Scott and James M. Buchanan commissioners to inquire into the particulars of the shooting of Smith. They came to Columbia and took some testimony, with closed doors, at the "Sorrel Horse Hotel," kept by Parsons. After this, Governor Bigler, who had at first promised to grant a requisition, refused to do so, and the attempted kidnappers, Ridgely and Snyder, were never brought to justice. Mrs. Smith, the wife of the murdered man, a respectable colored woman, died in Columbia a few years ago.

The pioneer settlers at Wright's Ferry, now Columbia, were friends of the slave. William Wright, the grandson of John Wright, was not only the black man's friend, but was an aggressive opponent of Southern slavery, and dealt that institution a blow whenever he had an opportunity.

In 1816, Israel Bacon, a wealthy slaveholder, who resided in Henrico County, Va., on the bank of the Chickahominy (not far from the place where the battle of Mechanicsville was fought, June 26, 1862), manumitted fifty-six slaves. Some of the heirs tried to hold them in slavery, and after a long litigation the courts pronounced them free on the 15th day of June, 1819. Charles Granger, a nephew of Bacon, gathered up these emancipated slaves (of both sexes and all ages), and procuring wagons, loaded them and their goods, and started for the Northern States, with the view of settling in Canada. They wended their way slowly along in their rickety wagons, and after several days they found themselves at Columbia, Pa. For several days they were quartered in a stone warehouse belonging to Samuel Bethel, Esq., which stood where the canal basin is, after which the Wrights gave them land in the northeastern section of the town, upon which they erected small cabins. The Pleasants, Randolphs, Greens, Haydens, and others, were of this party.

Two years later one hundred manumitted slaves from Hanover County, Va., came to the place, and drove into the yard of the old "Lamb Tavern," on Locust Street, in Columbia, where they remained several days, until places could be provided for them near those who came in 1819. The men found ready employment along the river among the lumber-merchants, and earned good wages.

Columbia being the most important place along the river which was spanned by a bridge, runaway slaves sought to cross the river at this point. Some remained among the colored people. Their masters often followed, and arrived before their slaves, and caught and returned them to slavery. William Wright conceived the idea of passing these fugitive slaves from one friend to another, located at intervals of ten and twenty miles. After these stations were established, friends were selected, who would pilot or direct these fugitives from one to another. The principal stations in this county were Columbia and Daniel Gibbons' place, one mile west from Bird-in-Hand, in Lampeter township. Sometimes half a dozen or more runaways were placed in the care of these agents, and they were almost invariably carried through in safety on the "underground railroad" when placed in charge of its agents.

It was not always an easy task, when the fugitive slaves found themselves among friends of their own color, and where they could earn good wages, to induce them to go beyond Columbia. Just prior to the passage of the fugitive-slave law, in September, 1850, there were several hundred of them in Columbia, many of whom fled to Canada and settled at Chat-ham. The first successful attempt at the rendition of a fugitive slave under the law occurred in Columbia in the fall of 1850. William Baker, while sawing wood in front of Mr. Shenberger's, in Locust Street, Columbia, was arrested and taken to Philadelphia before a United States commissioner, who remanded him into slavery, but a number of the colored man's friends in Columbia collected several hundred dollars and purchased his freedom. He is now residing in Columbia, a respectable and well-to-do citizen. There were many cases of hairbreadth escapes and a number of captures of fugitive slaves in Columbia. One case which happened more than seventy years ago is here noticed.

Stephen Smith, the successful lumber-merchant, in Columbia, who removed to the city of Philadelphia forty-five or more years ago and became very wealthy, was bought, when five or six years old, by Gen. Thomas Boude from a family named Cochran, who lived on Paxtang Creek, near Harrisburg. Gen. Boude brought him to Columbia, where he had been but a short time when his mother ran away from her master and came to Gen. Boude's. Soon afterwards a lady arrived in Columbia on horseback and stopped in front of Gen. Boude's dwelling, on Front Street. She at once proceeded to go through Gen. Boude's dwelling to the kitchen, where she seized hold of Mrs. Smith and attempted to drag her to the street and tie her to the back of the horse. Mrs. Smith and the ladies of Gen. Boude's household made such a vigorous resistance and outcry that Gen. Boude, who was engaged in his lumber-yard some distance away, heard them, and came to the woman's rescue. Miss Cochran, the lady who attempted the capture, was forced off the premises, and, remounting her horse, returned to Paxtang. Fearing that a more successful attempt would be made to kidnap Mrs. Smith, Gen. Boude went to Paxtang and purchased her.

CHAPTER X.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF 1812-15, AND MEXICAN WAR.

Opening of the War of 1812—Prompt tender of Services by Lancaster County Companies—March of Lancaster County Men to Maryland in 1813—Troops from Lancaster County in Campaign of 1814—Rolls of Companies—Lancaster County Men in the Mexican War.

IN the war of 1812-15, between the United States and Great Britain, a large number of soldiers from Lancaster County entered the service, and honorably performed the duties required of them, though none of the companies sent from this county were brought into actual battle. War was formally declared by the United States on the 18th of June, 1812, but more than a month earlier (May 12th), Governor Snyder, of Pennsylvania, had issued his proclamation or general orders, twenty-two regiments to be formed in four brigades and to aggregate (officers and privates) fourteen thousand men, which was the quota called for from this State by the proclamation of the President of the United States. The men required as the quota of the State were to be drafted from the militia organizations, except where drafting should be rendered unnecessary by the offer and acceptance of volunteers.

In less than two weeks from the date of Governor Snyder's proclamation ordering out the troops, the services of the "Lancaster Phalanx," sixty-five strong<sup>1</sup> (including officers), were offered to the Governor by the following letter:

"LANCASTER, 25th May, 1812.

"His Excellency, the Commander-in-Chief:

"SIR,—During the long space of time wherein other nations, under the scourge of ambitious and profligate princes, have been the victims of destructive wars, our favored country, by a judicious policy, has been sustained in the almost undisturbed enjoyment of happy peace. But in this singular age of revolutions, the convulsed state of the world at length threatens to involve our peaceful regions in the general vortex; and the hostile encroachments on our sovereignty by nations arrogantly presuming power, and unmindful of right, as well as past events yet too recent to have been forgotten, has rendered it necessary that the republic be placed into an attitude to support its dignity and maintain its independence.

"To contribute to this end the Lancaster Phalanx, commanded by Captain James Humes, under the impulse that led their ancestors of glorious memory into an arduous and then almost hopeless contest, have this day unanimously resolved on a voluntary tender of their service to their country.

"We, the undersigned, having been appointed a committee for the purpose, hereby, in the name and on behalf of the said corps, with pleasure tender their services to the Governor, as part of the quota to be detached from this Commonwealth, and as such are prepared to march, completely armed and equipped, at the required notice.

"Abstract from the muster-roll of the Lancaster Phalanx (light infantry), under the command of Capt. James Humes, attached to the One Hundred and Twenty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania militia.

"Officers—Commissioned.....	3
Non-commissioned.....	2
Musicians—Drummer, fifer.....	2
Privates.....	58
Total, including officers.....	65

"I certify the foregoing a true return of my company, this 25th day of May, 1812.

"JAMES HUMES,
"Captain."

"Felicitating the Commander-in-Chief on the patriotic ardor that pervades our country at this eventful crisis, we remain,

"Your Excellency's most obedient,

"GEO. MAYER,

"JNO. F. STEINMAN, JR.,

"JNO. JEFFERIS, Lieut.,

"Committee of the Lancaster Phalanx."

At about the same time sixty other companies in the State (including the company of Capt. John Hubley and the company of Capt. Youse, of Elizabethtown) offered their services to the Governor, but it does not appear that any of the companies of Lancaster County were put into the field at that time. But in May of the following year, when there was a general apprehension that the British were preparing to invade Maryland and Delaware, with a strong force landed from their fleet, a Lancaster County battalion of several companies marched on the 13th of that month, and proceeded to the vicinity of Elkton, Md., but returned soon afterwards, without having met an enemy. Among the troops who marched on that expedition was the above-mentioned Lancaster Phalanx, commanded by Capt. James Humes.<sup>2</sup> George Mayer (whose name appears in the letter offering the services of the Phalanx in May, 1812) was adjutant of the battalion, and afterwards became lieutenant-colonel of one of the regiments (the Sixty-ninth) which were called out in the fall of 1814.

In the summer of 1814 the presence in Chesapeake Bay of a British fleet of war-vessels and transports created a general alarm and fear (which proved well founded) that the enemy was preparing to at-

"TO CAPT. JAMES HUMES:

"SIR,—Yours to the Governor of yesterday was received by this day's mail. The Governor highly applauds the patriotism of the volunteer companies of Lancaster, in marching to assist their fellow-citizens of Maryland in repelling the wanton aggression of a cruel and vindictive enemy. Acting, as you have done, under the impulse of patriotic feeling, you merit and must assuredly have the applause of your country. But it is to be regretted that under existing laws the meed of virtue can be your only reward, except it be received from the State of Maryland or the United States. The Governor not being competent upon his own authority to order militia out of the limits of the State. It is presumed you did not conceive yourselves as acting under the provisions of the second section of the supplement to the militia law passed 29th March last.

"Accept assurances of my most ardent desire for your success, honor, and personal safety.

"Secretary."

The following is from one of the Lancaster newspapers of May 22, 1813:

"The Lancaster volunteer companies, which marched from this place last week for the defense of Elkton, Md., were joined on the road by the Pequea Rangers, a rifle corps, commanded by Capt. John Slaymaker, Jr., who volunteered their services. The three companies arrived at Elkton in good health and spirits, where they are in excellent quarters and mean to remain two or three weeks, or longer if necessary."

One week later (May 29th) the same journal said, "Our patriotic volunteers returned home on Thursday last, having been honorably discharged. Their services being considered no longer necessary."

tack Washington City or Baltimore, or both. In this exigency the President, through the general commanding the Tenth Military District, made the following call on Governor Snyder for additional troops:

"WASHINGTON CITY, Aug. 18, 1814.

"His Excellency SIMON SNYDER, Governor of Pennsylvania:

"SIR,—In consequence of the arrival of a large reinforcement to the enemy at the mouth of the Potomac, I am authorized and directed by the President to require from you immediately the whole number of the militia of Pennsylvania designed for this district out of the requisition of the 4th July last, to wit, five thousand men.

"The letter of Secretary Boileau (see August 11th) has just reached me. It is to be deplored that the situation of the militia of your State is such as Boileau represents. The spirit, however, of the people will, I hope, in this awful crisis, supply all defects of the laws by voluntarily rallying them around the standard of their country.

"The danger to the capital of our country is extreme, and I am authorized by the President, without regard to the designated quotas of the late requisition, to call such militia aid as may be necessary. In the present state of things, therefore, and the imminent danger which threatens my district, I must beg you to call out and send to me, from the counties nearest my district, either as volunteers or in any other manner, all the force you can detach. This requisition, from the situation of your militia and the pressing urgency of the occasion, is not clothed in the form which more leisure and a better arrangement of the militia would permit and require; but since we must rely, it seems, principally upon the voluntary form, I have been unlimited, because I fear, with all the efforts which can be made, the number obtained will be short of the demand.

"I am, sir, with very great respect,

"Your obedient servant,

"WILLIAM H. WINDER.

"Brigadier-General Commanding Tenth Military District."

Pursuant to this requisition, the Governor, on the 26th of August, ordered out, to a general rendezvous at York, Pa., "five thousand men, Pennsylvania militia, from the Second Brigade, Third Division, and from the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Divisions, which detachment is to consist of volunteers who have, or who may tender their services, of flank companies, infantry, and riflemen, who are to march in companies, and of drafted militia designated for service under general orders of the 22d July last past, which shall be organized into one division and two brigades (if not otherwise directed), on the 5th day of September next, agreeably to law, and conformably to the regulations prescribed for the United States army." Maj.-Gen. Nathaniel Watson was placed in command of the division, and Brig.-Gens. John Forster and John Addams, respectively, of the two brigades. "The major-general and the officers and men under him to obey the commands and execute the orders of Gen. William Winder, commandant for the United States within the Tenth Militia District."

In his general orders of the 26th of August the Governor said, "The militia generally within the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, Berks, Schuylkill, York, Adams, and Lancaster, and that part of Chester County which constitutes the Second Brigade of the Third Division, and those corps particularly who, when danger first threatened, patriotically tendered their services in the field, are earnestly invited to rise (as on many occasions Pennsylvania has heretofore done) superior to local feelings and evasives that might possibly be drawn from an imperfect military system, and to repair with that alacrity which duty commands, and, it is fondly hoped, inclination will prompt to the several places of brigade or regimental rendezvous that shall respectively be designated by the proper officer, and thence to march to the place of general rendezvous."

On the day of the issuance of Governor Snyder's order for the rendezvousing of five thousand troops at York, Capt. William Hamilton, of Lancaster, tendered the services of his company, which the Governor accepted in the following terms:

"HARRISBURG, Aug. 27, 1814.

"TO CAPT. WILLIAM HAMILTON:

"SIR,—The tender of service by you and the other gentlemen composing the corps is cheerfully accepted by the Governor, who directs me to express to you, and through you to the company, the high sense he feels of your patriotism exhibited at this alarming crisis. You are hereby authorized to purchase the requisite number of rifles to supply the company, the expense of which will be immediately paid at the treasury, on the production of the necessary vouchers for their having been delivered to you. The earlier you march the more gratifying it would be to the Governor. The commissions will be made out with the least possible delay and forwarded to you. A letter was written to Maj. Light yesterday, requesting his immediate attention at this place, for the purpose, among other things, of furnishing him with the means of defraying any expenses that may be incurred in the performance of his duties. By him I hope to have the opportunity of sending the commissions.

"Very respectfully, sir,

"Your obedient servant,

N. B. BOILEAU,

"Secretary."

On the same day (August 27th) the Governor issued General Orders, in which, after reciting that "the recent destruction of the capital of the United States, the threatened and probable conflagration of the metropolis of sister States [Baltimore], and the general threatening aspect of affairs warranting the opinion that an attack is meditated by the enemy on the shores of the Delaware," he proceeded to direct the calling out of the militia generally, within the counties of Philadelphia, Bucks, Montgomery, Delaware, Chester, Lancaster, Dauphin, Lebanon, Berks, Schuylkill, Lehigh, Northampton, and Pike (in addition to those drafted and designated for the service of the United States, under orders of the 22d of July), "to be held in readiness to march at a moment's warning to such place as may be named in subsequent orders, that will issue if the exigencies of our country shall require." These orders, together with the intelligence of the destruction of the city of Washington, brought to Governor Snyder the proffer of additional volunteer companies from Lancaster County; to which secretary Boileau made reply for the Governor as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, September 3, 1814.

"TO JOHN REITZEL, Esq.:

"SIR: Your letter of the 31st ult. was not delivered to the Governor till yesterday, consequently you could not have an answer within the period requested.

"As the militia that are drafted, as part of the detachment which are ordered to rendezvous at Yorktown on Monday next, will have marched before this reaches you, it is not now necessary to answer that part of your letter which relates to those that have been drafted. I shall, therefore, only observe that, if the contemplated volunteer corps bring themselves within the provisions of the militia law, commissions will be granted to the officers that may be elected.

"The patriotic feeling of you and your associates is highly and justly appreciated by the Governor, and he trusts that your example, and that of others in Lancaster, will have the happy effect to excite in many more the like spirit which has influenced your conduct.

"I am, sir, respectfully,
"Your obedient servant,
"N. B. BOILEAU."

<sup>2</sup> Harris, in his "Biographical History of Lancaster County," says of Capt. Grosh and the raising of his company, "When Washington City was captured, the capitol and its records burned, and other cities threatened, his blood boiled within him, and he contributed liberally to send a company of drafted men to Baltimore. Soon after, Governor Snyder issued a proclamation calling for volunteers, and sent a copy with a letter, appealing to Mr. Grosh to give it his influence. He at once hired the town crier to go through the streets, read the proclamation, and call a town meeting that evening. At the meeting he made a warm appeal and called for volunteers. Over eighty gave their names on the spot;

("Marietta Grays"), John Robinson, and Henry Good. It was supposed that the troops to be collected at York would immediately move from that place to the defense of Baltimore, and a detachment of them did march to that city, but within two weeks from the time of rendezvous, and before a complete organization had been effected, the following advices were sent to the Governor by the Secretary of War:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, September 19, 1814.

"HIS EXCELLENCY SIMON SNYDER, Governor of Pennsylvania:

"SIR: The enemy having left Baltimore, and passed down the bay, I have deemed it advisable to alter the destination of the Pennsylvania militia assembled at York. Gen. Watson has been ordered to march those troops to the neighborhood of Philadelphia, and dispose of them, agreeably to such arrangements as may have been made for the defence of that city, should it be attacked by the enemy. It is hoped, however, that our late brilliant success on Lake Champlain and pressure on the enemy, on that frontier generally, may contribute to relieve our eastern frontier.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, sir,
"Your Excellency's obedient servant,
"JAMES MONROE."

Under the orders referred to, the detachment at Baltimore,<sup>3</sup> and the troops still at York, prepared to uniform and name ("Marietta Grays") were agreed on, and money subscribed to equip the men and provide for needy families. The principal work and cost soon rested on Mr. Grosh, who was unanimously chosen captain; John Pedan, first lieutenant; John Huss, second lieutenant; and J. Albright, ensign. On the fourth day after receiving the Governor's proclamation one hundred and seven men were uniformed and marched for their destination."

"I had not a doubt but that at York, as at places heretofore assigned for rendezvous, the United States would have provided tents and other camp equipments. That they were not furnished at York, I did not know until the day before yesterday, the evening after the arrival of the adjutant-general; but at Baltimore I had hoped every necessary provision would have been abundantly made. It is a lamentable fact that your letter from Baltimore, dated the 20th inst., which I have just received, is the only letter, and contains the only information that I have received relative to the troops that you command from yourself, or from any general or other officer, belonging to your division, since the day appointed for rendezvous at Yorktown. It pains me much to learn that you are destitute of camp equipments and of money, but I trust that enthusiastic feeling which has impelled the troops under your command to march to meet and punish our implacable foe will strengthen their hearts for yet a short period, until supplies can be sent on. I cannot prevail on myself to believe that any possible privation short of starvation, at this season of the year, would induce a hardy Pennsylvanian to desert the standard of his country. A sense of grateful feeling, I trust, will actuate our Baltimore brethren to sustain and shelter you for a few days and nights, on your road towards the shores of the Delaware, until money and tents can be forwarded.

"Permit me to advise your immediately marching your troops by small detachments. If you apprehend danger on the Havre-de-Grace road (which I think cannot now exist), I would suggest your marching on the Baldfriar road. Some tents, say two hundred, will be sent to meet you on the Havre-de-Grace road, as many more as will cover the whole detachment will follow. I hope your advance will meet the wagons at Havre-de-Grace."—Pennsylvania Archives, xi. 765.

move to the Delaware below Philadelphia, but the orders were countermanded a day or two later,<sup>1</sup> and Col. Watson was directed to move his division towards Washington. The danger at that point, however, was past, and the Pennsylvania troops were again ordered to the vicinity of Philadelphia. They (or a large part of them) rendezvoused at Marcus Hook, there holding themselves in readiness to march against the British, should they move up the Delaware and attempt to land their troops for an attack on Philadelphia, which was then thought probable. But this did not occur, and the services of the troops were not required for actual fighting. They remained in the field until it was certain that they were no longer needed. Some of them were mustered-out in December, 1814, and some remained in service until the following March.

Rolls of the Lancaster County companies serving in Gen. Watson's division in the fall campaign of 1814, are here given, viz.:

CAPT. WILLIAM HAMILTON'S COMPANY.

Muster-roll of a company of riflemen in the actual service of the United States, commanded by Capt. George Musser,<sup>2</sup> in the rifle regiment of the Second Brigade, Pennsylvania Militia, under the command of Lieut.-Col. William Hamilton, from the 5th of September to the 5th of December, 1814. Formed in the borough of Lancaster, and marched

"PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 26, 1814.

"To COL. JOHN BINNS:

"DEAR SIR,—Yours of the 24th inst. was handed to me this morning, previous to the receipt of which I had learned by a letter from the Secretary at War, under date of the 21st of this month, that he had issued counter orders to which you allude, directing the division of Pennsylvania militia, under the command of Gen. Watson, to march towards Washington instead of the shores of the Delaware, and which has excited much sensation here.

"If his division are not, nor likely to be, furnished by the United States with provisions, and any other thing that may be necessary for their comfort in camp, or to sustain them on their march wheresoever they may be ordered, you will not withhold the money entrusted to your care, but apply it, under a sound discretion, to those objects. If they cannot be furnished with tents by the United States, they must be supplied out of the four hundred lately forwarded from this city, and the balance returned by the wagons that were employed to transport them thither.

"The journey which you have undertaken to Washington, at the instance of Gens. Smith and Watson, though not originally contemplated, has my entire approbation, and I trust you will succeed in executing their commission, and that the marching of the Pennsylvanians to a point at which I think danger cannot exist, and at which it would be difficult, if not impossible, to procure supplies, may be legally prevented.

"Believing the appearance of the enemy in the Patuxent to be merely a feint, I hope the Pennsylvania troops may be ordered to an intermediate point between this and Baltimore, so as they may be ready to act in defence of either, as circumstances may require.

"I early intimated to Mr. Monroe the propriety of such an arrangement, and I am pleased to find that Gen. Smith accords with me in sentiment, and that he is willing to co-operate in any measure which may be adopted for the mutual defence of both cities against our common enemy.

"Respectfully, sir,

"I am your obedient servant,

"SIMON SNYDER."

Lancaster County in the Mexican War.—In the war with Mexico—1846—48—Lancaster County furnished a considerable number of men for the armies of Gen. Scott and Gen. Taylor, but there was no company formed in the county for that service, and those who went from here joined different commands at Harrisburg, Philadelphia, and other places. From Lancaster City, H. A. Hambright (afterwards a captain in the war of the Rebellion) and about ten others joined the Cameron Guards at Harrisburg. A number of other men from different parts of the county joined companies in Philadelphia. Of course, under these circumstances, no rolls of Lancaster County men serving in that war can be given. Some of them served under Taylor at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and Monterey, and others (including those who joined the Cameron Guard), under Scott, at Vera Cruz, and the campaign which closed with the capture of the city of Mexico. Lieut. Roland A. Luther and Lieut. John F. Roland (both natives of New Holland, in Lancaster County, and both graduates of West Point) were officers in the Second United States Artillery, and served in Mexico, winning honor and promotion. Lieut. Luther (who had seen service in the Florida war) was wounded at Palo Alto, and promoted to captain for gallantry on that field. His health was ruined in Mexico, and he died in 1853. Lieut. Roland fought at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, was promoted to captain for services there, and afterwards brevetted major for gallantry at Monterey. Afterwards he was with Gen. Scott at the city of Mexico. He died in September, 1852.

CHAPTER XI.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Opening of the War—Public Meetings and Raising of Troops—Emergency Troops of 1862 and 1863—Action of County Authorities during the War—Patriot Daughters of Lancaster—Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument in Lancaster—First, Second, and Third Pennsylvania Regiments.

In this county, as in other portions of the loyal North, the thrill of patriotism which was aroused by the attack on Fort Sumter, completely silenced for the time the mutterings of disloyalty that had previously been heard. Although there existed here a disloyal feeling, which afterwards manifested itself again, the spontaneous uprising of the loyal masses awed it to silence for the time, and apparently the determination to defend the Union against the assaults of its traitorous enemies was unanimous. Although this was the home of President Buchanan, who saw in the Constitution no authority "to coerce a sovereign State," it was also the home of Thaddeus Stevens and others, whose patriotism and loyalty were unquestioned.

At the meeting of the Court of Quarter Sessions, on the 15th of April, 1861, a resolution was offered by Judge Champneys that the members of the bar be called on to renew their oaths of fidelity to the Union. At the recommendation of Mr. Stevens this was amended so as to include the jurors, the students-at-law, and the county officers. It was adopted, and the oath was administered accordingly.

In the same day a call was issued for a public meeting at the court-house. This call was signed by about one hundred of the first citizens of the county, representing every shade of political opinion. At this meeting, which was held on the 17th, the utmost enthusiasm was manifested, able addresses were made, and patriotic resolutions were adopted. A similar meeting was held on the same day at Columbia, and the proceedings there were marked by the same determination to uphold the institutions of the country.

The enrollment of volunteers commenced at once. Military companies then existing were quickly filled to the maximum, and many applicants were necessarily rejected. Other companies were formed, meetings were held in all parts of the country, and volunteers everywhere offered their services. The Lancaster Fencibles and the Jackson Rifles went to Harrisburg on the 20th, and were made part of the First Regiment, as elsewhere stated.

At the April sessions, 1861, the grand jury recommended to the commissioners to appropriate twenty thousand dollars for the relief of needy families of volunteers, which was done.

As early as May, 1861, the following companies were formed or forming in Lancaster County: Lancaster Fencibles, Jackson Rifles, Lancaster Infantry, Union Guards, Steuben Rifles, Lancaster Rifles, Garibaldi Sharpshooters, Mounted Rifles, German Sharpshooters, American Infantry, Lancaster Cadets, Lancaster Home Guards, Columbia Infantry, Columbia Rifles, Marietta Cameron Guard, Hempfield Rifles, Safe Harbor Artillerists, Mount Joy Infantry, Maytown Rifles, Salisbury Infantry, Manheim Guards, Fulton Rifles, Martic Rifles, Manor Infantry, Earl Guards, Pequea Rifles, Strasburg Guards, Strasburg Cavalry, Donegal Rifles, Colemanville Guards, Manheim Home Guard, and Millersville Home Guard. Companies were afterwards organized under many other names in different parts of the county. These companies, when they entered the service, lost their local names, and were designated by the letters of their companies and the numbers of their regiments.

The Seventy-ninth Regiment was recruited and went to the West with a larger number of men from this county than any that had preceded it, and its movements were watched with interest by more of the citizens at that time than any of the others.

In the latter part of 1862 the need of more men, both in organizations that were already in the field and in new regiments, became apparent, and the war spirit revived in this county as elsewhere. Meetings were held in all parts of the county, and the quotas of the different districts were rapidly filled. The One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment was quickly recruited, and four companies of the One Hundred and Thirty-fifth, both nine months' regiments, were as quickly ready for the field.

On the occasion of the threatened invasion of Pennsylvania by Gen. Lee, in the summer and autumn of 1862, after the second battle of Bull Run, Governor Curtin called on the people throughout the State to form companies and regiments. Six days later, or on the 10th of September, Lee having crossed the Potomac with his army and commenced his march through Maryland, an order was issued for all able-bodied men to enroll, arm, and hold themselves in readiness to move at an hour's notice. The next day a call was made for fifty thousand to report for orders. With such alacrity did the people respond to these calls that in an incredibly short time the number asked for were in the field, on their way thither, or in readiness awaiting transportation. A portion of these were in line of battle while the important enagements of that campaign were being fought, ready to advance if necessary.

The emergency that had arisen passed away with the defeat of the enemy at South Mountain on the 14th and Antietam on the 17th of September, and his retreat into Virginia, and the citizens who had thus suddenly transformed themselves into soldiers returned to their homes. Though they were not required to shed their blood in defense of their country, the moral support which they gave to the army in the field was potent.

In the emergency occasioned by the invasion of the State in the summer of 1863 by the army of Gen. Lee, the people were again called on to rally in defense of their homes, and as soon as the reality and magnitude of the danger became apparent they responded to the call with a promptness that dissipated all doubts of their patriotism, which previous mutterings of dissatisfaction among a few had created.

The first call by the Governor was made on the 12th of June, 1863. On the 15th a call from the President for fifty thousand emergency troops in this State was made, and sent forth in a proclamation by the Governor, asking all able-bodied men to enroll for the defense of the State and the country. Although at first the people were slow to believe that the enemy contemplated an invasion of the State, the fact soon became apparent to all, and the same alacrity was manifested in responding to the country's call that was shown when danger appeared to be imminent a year previously. Troops poured into Harrisburg, where they were organized and quickly disposed for defense against the invasion. Col. Emlen Franklin, who had just returned from the campaign of the One Hundred and Twenty-second, was requested by Gen. Couch, the commander of the Department of the Susquehanna, to organize and place on the line of the river, in Lancaster County, companies for defense against this invasion. For this purpose he appealed to the captains and other officers who had been with him in the One Hundred and Twenty-second, and on the 16th of July issued the following:

"HEADQUARTERS OF DEFENSES OF LANCASTER COUNTY,
"June 16, 1863.

"GENERAL ORDERS No. 1.

"The citizens of the townships of Fulton, Little Britain, Colerain, Bart, Salisbury, Eden, Paradise, Salisbury, Drumore, Providence, Strasburg, Leacock, Earl, Earl East, and Earl West shall rendezvous at Peach Bottom Ferry.

"The citizens of the townships of Martic, Pequea, East and West Lampeter, shall rendezvous at McCall's Ferry.

"The citizens of Conestoga and Lancaster townships shall rendezvous at Shenk's Ferry.

"The citizens of Manor and Millersville shall rendezvous at Safe Harbor.

"The citizens of Columbia Borough, East and West Hempfield, Mauhelm, Manheim Borough, Mount Joy township and Borough, Warwick, Elizabeth, and Ephrata shall rendezvous at Columbia.

"The citizens of Marietta, East and West Donegal, and Conoy shall rendezvous at Marietta.

"The citizens of Carnarvon, Brecknock, East Cocalico, West Cocalico, Clay, Ephrata, and Lancaster City shall rendezvous in Lancaster City.

"Each citizen shall provide his own arms and ammunition, until a sufficient supply of arms reaches this department, also his own rations for three days to be carried with him. Also intrenching tools, either an axe, shovel, or pick.

"Officers will be assigned to the command of the several points and will give the necessary directions.

"The line of the river from the Chester County line to York Furnace Bridge is placed under the command of Maj. Thaddeus Stevens, Jr., One Hundred and Twenty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers.

"The line of the river from York Furnace Bridge to the line of Columbia borough is placed under the command of Maj. R. W. Shenk, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, headquarters at Safe Harbor.

"Columbia borough and the line of the river to Marietta is placed under the command of Maj. Haldeman, headquarters, Columbia.

"The line of the river from Marietta to the Dauphin County line is placed under the command of Lieut. Johnson, Company H, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

"Citizens equipped and ordered as above are designed for the defense of the county, and may arrive at the places of rendezvous singly, in squads or companies, and report to the commanding officer of the line, who will report the same direct to the officer commanding defenses.

"As the honor and safety of Lancaster County depends upon a prompt obedience to this order, the commanding officer trusts that it may be forthwith respected.

"By command of

"EMLEN FRANKLIN,

"Colonel commanding Defenses of Lancaster County."

To this order the people responded with the utmost promptness, and at once the work of fortifying vulnerable points along the river was commenced and prosecuted with energy. At Columbia, which, by reason of the bridge between that place and Wrightsville, was believed to be a point more liable to be attacked than any other, such fortifications as were thought to be effective were quickly constructed on both sides of the river. On the Columbia side works were built to command the breast of the dam, which could easily be crossed by an army at low water.

On the 27th of June a force under the rebel Gen. Early, reached York, and the next day a brigade was sent to hold the bridge at Columbia. Four companies from Columbia, three white and one colored, with other troops, amounting in all to less than fifteen hundred, crossed to Wrightsville and fortified themselves on the heights, half a mile from the town. Having no artillery, they were soon driven from their position and compelled to cross the bridge. Col. Frick, who was in command, made preparations to blow up a span of the bridge, but, not succeeding in this, he was compelled to fire it, and thus prevent it from falling into possession of the enemy.

At this time very great alarm was felt by the people here, and this feeling was not without foundation. Had the enemy been successful in the battle which was then impending, the people would have been at the mercy of the enemy. Their houses would have been plundered; their fields, then yellow with an abundant harvest, would have been ravaged; their horses seized; their cattle driven away; their barns burned; and this garden of the State would have been laid waste.

Many of the people in Lancaster, Columbia, and elsewhere in the county put their valuable effects in readiness for removal, and the public records at the county-seat were packed and held in readiness to be taken to a place of safety, if necessary.

Following the defeat of the hostile army at Gettysburg, and its retreat from the State, came a feeling of security. Visions of rapine and plunder no longer haunted the slumbers of the people, and those who had rushed to the borders to repel the invaders returned to their offices, workshops, and fields; business resumed its ordinary course, and society recovered its accustomed tone.

As in the case the year previous, the emergency troops, though not many of them were led into actual combat, did their part toward the achievement of the grand result, and showed, by the promptness with which they left the walks of civil life to face the stern realities of grim-visaged war, that, in a country like this, reliance on its citizens for defense in times of peril is not misplaced.

In the summer of 1863 an enrollment was made, and a draft ordered to fill the depleted ranks of the regiments in the field. The names of the drafted men appear in the regimental lists. Another draft took place in the summer of 1864.

Although here, as in other parts of the country, there were all shades of opinion, from radical loyalism down to secession sympathy, the loyal feeling was so largely in the ascendant that treason dared not show itself, and the readiness with which people laid aside former differences of opinion and united on the great question of maintaining the integrity of the Union, proved that in the hands of the people here, as elsewhere, the free institutions of the country are entirely safe in a time of real peril.

Action of the County Authorities during the Civil War.—No better history can be given of the action of the county officials in the war of the Rebellion than the following extracts from the records of the commissioners:

April 15, 1861:

"WHEREAS, within the last few days the country's flag has been torn from Fort Sumter by the hands of traitors; and whereas, it is not only right but proper for all good and loyal citizens, and especially for those who hold official stations, to express in most unqualified terms their disapprobation of an act, the parallel of which has not been witnessed in the annals of crime, from the formation of our government to the present time.

"Therefore, Resolved, That we, the commissioners of Lancaster County, sincerely regret that we are compelled to record the fact that the government, which acknowledged no equal or feared no foe, should be assailed by an intestine enemy, those who have been reared and educated beneath its protection and shield.

"Resolved, That while the stars and stripes have been insulted and dragged in the dust, we will raise them to the breeze above the citadel of justice, so that all may behold that we and all those we represent are true to the constitution and laws of our country."

April 22, 1861:

"WHEREAS, The grand jury, acting for the body of the county of Lancaster at April sessions, 1861, recommended to the undersigned commissioners of said county to appropriate the sum of twenty thousand dollars for the relief of the families of the patriotic citizens who have left their homes, families, and friends, to protect the stars and stripes of our country, which have been torn down and trailed in the dust by a band of traitors.

"Therefore resolved, That we, the commissioners, give a hearty response to the said request, and appropriate the said sum of twenty thousand dollars for the purpose mentioned.

"Resolved, That in addition to the executive committee appointed and referred to by the grand jury in their report, the following-named persons be appointed to act in conjunction with them, viz., Col. Samuel Shock, J. W. Cottrell, and J. R. Long, which same committee, as it is now constituted, is respectfully requested to ascertain the names of all those needy families whose fathers, brothers, and sons have volunteered to fight in defence of their country, together with the amount which may be necessary to relieve their weekly wants, and report the same to this board as soon as convenient.

"JOSEPH BOYERS.
"LEVI S. REIST.
"JOHN DONER."

Resolutions were also adopted prescribing the manner in which the wants of families were to be ascertained, and relief administered.

May 6, 1861:

"WHEREAS, The undersigned commissioners of Lancaster County are informed that there are many good and loyal citizens in our midst who, while they are prevented from taking an active part upon the field of battle in defence of the constitution and laws of their country, are nevertheless anxious to sustain the same by those means which a kind Providence has placed in their hands; and whereas, it is believed that many a patriotic heart would in this way have responded to the command of its country could it have been known when, where, and how that response could have been made; therefore,

"Resolved, That for said purpose a subscription-book be opened in this office, so that an opportunity may be presented to every person residing in the county, who may desire to make a donation, to be applied to the sustaining of the government and free institutions in this hour of darkness, of difficulty, and danger."

The board agreed to proceed to Harrisburg for the purpose of obtaining arms for the use of the citizens residing in the townships bordering on the Maryland line.

March 17, 1862:

"The commissioners have resolved to vote another appropriation of ten thousand dollars, to meet the necessities of the families of our brave volunteers who have given their lives to their country for the purpose of upholding the constitution and laws."

June 23, 1862, the commissioners appointed a commission, consisting of James Black, Esq., John D. Hubley, and Daniel H. Heitshue, to proceed to the vicinity of Richmond, Va., "to look after and attend to the soldiers who enlisted from this county, and who may be wounded in the daily-expected approaching battle, with authority to engage assistance and secure transportation from there here," etc.

On the 23d of July, 1862, the commissioners, in accordance with the requests of numerous committees from various parts of the county,

"Resolved, That we, the commissioners of Lancaster County, do hereby appropriate . . . the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

"Resolved, That fifty dollars of the above sum be paid to each man who may volunteer."

On the 18th of August, 1862, it was, in compliance with the request of the grand jury,

"Resolved, That the commissioners of Lancaster County pay a bounty of fifty dollars to each volunteer (when mustered into the United States service) from this county, until the quota of the county, under the call of the President for six hundred thousand men, be filled."

Sept. 13, 1862:

"Resolved, That an appropriation, not exceeding twenty thousand dollars, be made to relieve the present wants of the families of destitute, able-bodied, and patriotic men who may now volunteer in the service of the State to check the rebel raid which now threatens the invasion of the Commonwealth."

A commissary committee was at the same time appointed to provide, at the expense of the State, subsistence for volunteers.

A resolution was also adopted "that the Patriot Daughters be allowed to purchase material for cartridge-boxes for volunteers now leaving the county, to be paid for by the county."

On the 15th of June, 1863, a bounty of twenty dollars was offered to each volunteer for six months, and a committee of sustenance, to subsist troops while in the city of Lancaster or on the Susquehanna, was appointed.

On the 25th of July, 1863, it was

"Resolved by the commissioners of Lancaster County, That the sum of seventy-five cents per day be allowed out of the county funds to each person who connected himself with one of the different companies that were formed for the defense of the county when it was threatened by the last rebel raid.

"Resolved by the commissioners of Lancaster County, That a bounty of twenty dollars be paid to each individual, without respect to color, who is a resident of said county (whether they go into the infantry, cavalry, or artillery service), that may enlist in the service of the United States for the period of three years or during the war, immediately upon their being respectively mustered into said service."

June 29, 1863,

"Resolved, That the sum of two dollars per week be paid out of the county funds to each and every resident of Lancaster County who will volunteer his services, under the last proclamation of the Governor of the State, for the space of three months, or during the period in which they are in actual service, or until they are finally discharged."

Sept. 28, 1863,

"Resolved by the county commissioners, That a weekly allowance, not exceeding two dollars per week, be allowed to the families of persons who have been drafted and now in the service of the United States, and who in the opinion of this board are in necessitous circumstances, provided that this resolution shall not be in force any longer than the time when the said drafted man shall receive his first payment from the government."

On the 30th of December, 1863, a committee was appointed in each township and borough "to visit all needy families, and ascertain and report the names of all persons who are in actual want in consequence of their dependence on their husbands, parents, and friends, being volunteers and drafted men in the service of the general government. No persons shall receive relief but those who are in absolute need."

On the 10th of July, 1864, the Governor of the State called for troops to protect the State against invasion, and on the 11th the commissioners

"Resolved, That a bounty of fifty dollars is hereby offered to each and every one of her citizens who will enlist as a private or non-commissioned officer, under said call, for a period of one hundred days; provided that the individual has not received the same sum from any district in the county.

"Resolved, That this board will pay for the subsistence of said recruits sworn into the service, not exceeding one thousand men, under the said call of the Governor, for the period of two days, at an expense not exceeding fifty cents per day."

Aug. 1, 1864:

"Resolved by the commissioners of Lancaster County, That agreeably to the recommendation of a county meeting, held this day in the courthouse, a donation of ten thousand dollars be made to relieve the sufferings of the people of Chambersburg, Franklin Co., occasioned by the late rebel raid, by which the greatest part of the town was laid in ashes."

Relief committees for the townships and boroughs in the county for the year 1865 were appointed Dec. 20, 1864.

Patriot Daughters of Lancaster.—To the ladies of Lancaster belongs the honor of organizing the first society for ministering to the wants of the volunteers who went forth to fight in defense of the honor and integrity of the nation. Similar societies subsequently came into existence in all parts of the country, but, so far as is known, none preceded the one formed here.

On the 22d of April, ten days after the attack on Fort Sumter, a meeting of the ladies of Lancaster was held in the court-house, at which it was "Resolved, that an association of ladies be formed under the style and title of 'The Patriot Daughters of Lancaster,' for the purpose of ministering to the wants of our heroic volunteers from Lancaster city and county, and that the following ladies act as officers: President, Mrs. R. Hubley; Vice-President, Mrs. E. E. Reigart; Secretary, Miss Annie A. Slaymaker; Treasurer, Mrs. J. F. Long." The necessary committees were appointed, and all the details for the successful working of the association were arranged at this meeting. Without delay it entered on its benevolent and patriotic work, which it prosecuted so efficiently during the entire period of the war. Other associations that came into existence afterward sought to make this society their auxiliary, but while its members always manifested a willingness to aid these associations in their benevolent work, they felt a laudable pride in the fact that they were the first to inaugurate the system which, in its practical operations, was so eminently successful, and proved to be so great a boon to those who went forth to do battle in defense of the institutions under which they were prosperous and happy. They also felt a confidence in their ability to carry on this work, and their success proved that this confidence was well founded.

During the entire period of the war they labored assiduously to provide the soldiers in the field and the sick in distant hospitals with those comforts and luxuries which the government was unable to furnish, and many a poor soldier, as he languished on his cot, far away from home and friends, had reason to bless his unknown benefactress in Lancaster County for some luxury which would not have come to him but for the efforts of these patriotic and benevolent women.

Soldiers passing through Lancaster were fed, bodies of troops quartered near the city were supplied with food, and agents bearing supplies were sent to the distant battle-fields, camps, and hospitals, where soldiers from this county were to be found.

The records of the society have been destroyed, because of some mistaken notion on the part of their custodian, but it is known that thousands of dollars in money and supplies were collected and disbursed. The proceeds of one fair held by these ladies were about fourteen thousand dollars.

It must not be supposed that while the patriotic women of Lancaster City and vicinity were thus active in this benevolent work, their sisters in other parts of the county were forgetful of the needs of those who were fighting the battles of their country. Ladies' aid societies were organized in almost every borough and township, and according to their abilities and opportunities, the women in all parts of the county labored with equal earnestness, and while too much gratitude cannot be bestowed on those who went forth to endure the hardships and incur the dangers of war, the sacrifices and benevolent labors of their mothers, wives, daughters, and sisters should not be forgotten.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument of Lancaster County.—The surviving veterans of the Union army had scarcely returned from the field to resume their peaceful callings, when the project of erecting a monument in honor of the soldiers and sailors of Lancaster County who fell in the Union army and navy began to be discussed. The patriotic spirit of the people recognized a sacred duty to the memory of the fallen heroes, and various plans and methods were devised and proposed. The first practical step toward raising funds was taken by the ladies of Lancaster, with the "Patriot Daughters" as a nucleus for organization. Under their auspices a successful fair was held for one week in Fulton Hall during December, 1867, and a fund of about three thousand five hundred dollars was realized.

Among the ladies prominently engaged in the work were the following, who had charge of the different tables: Mrs. Bartram Sheaffer, Mrs. May Kendig, Mrs. G. M. Kline, Mrs. O. J. Dickey, Mrs. Dr. Ehler, Mrs. John Metzgar, Mrs. J. W. Hubley, Mrs. M. Shreiner, Mrs. J. H. Pearsol, Mrs. George Snurrier, Mrs. Christian Yost, Mrs. M. Kline, Mrs. D. W. Patterson, Mrs. James Hopkins, Miss Kate Reitzel, and the Misses Carson.

The amount, however, was not sufficient to warrant the friends of the project to proceed, and various plans and means were devised to raise more money, but all resulted in failure, and for several years it seemed as if the attempt would have to be abandoned. About this time the attorney of a military company, afterwards the solicitor of the Monumental Association, in proceedings against the county commissioners to compel payment of militia funds for the support of the military company, in the legal investigations ascertained that every year there was collected about three thousand dollars under the old militia assessments of fifty cents per capita tax. This was exclusively for militia purposes, and not being used for military companies, the fund had accumulated for many years, was collected annually, and covered into the fund for county purposes, although not warranted by law. The idea suggested itself to the attorney that here was a fund, accumulating every year for military purposes, which, if diverted to the fund for building a monument, would furnish ample means for the erection of a testimonial to the fallen heroes creditable to the county, and without being a burden to a few. The fund was here. There were no living soldiers to use what was collected for them. Why not apply it to commemorating the valor of the dead heroes of Lancaster County? The plan was soon practically crystallized into a charter, prepared by him, for the incorporation of the Lancaster County Monumental Association. An act of Assembly was passed Feb. 10, 1871, and Edward Edgerly, H. R. Breneman, John P. Rea, R. W. Shenk, William H. Wiker, William D. Stauffer, Charles Dennes, Frederick S. Pyfer, A. C. Reinoehl, S. E. Wisner, Samuel Evans, John Peart, D. P. Rosenmiller, Henry Mullen, John H. Dulabon, Dr. S. P. Grey, Justus F. Diehm, W. T. McPhail, Hiram Stamm, Dr. Alexander Craig, and Joseph McGowan were constituted commissioners to contract for and superintend the erection of a monument to the memory of the soldiers and sailors of Lancaster County who were killed or died in the military or naval service of the United States during the Rebellion, to be erected in the city of Lancaster. By section six of the charter the county treasurer was authorized and required to pay over to the treasurer of the Monumental Association all military funds which had accumulated, or which might hereafter accumulate, from the assessment and collection of militia or military taxes or fines, and not required by existing laws or laws which might be enacted for the support and maintenance of military companies of the county. The only existing military company disbanded shortly after the granting of the charter, and left the association free to claim the militia funds. On the 24th of July, 1871, the association formally organized by electing the following officers: President, Hiram Stamm; Vice-President, F. S. Pyfer; Secretary, H. R. Breneman; Treasurer, R. W. Shenk; Solicitor, A. C. Reinoehl.

Formal demand was made by the association upon the county treasurer and county commissioners for the militia fund, and payment was refused. In January, 1872, the association presented their petition to the court for a mandamus to compel the payment of $230.88, the tax accumulated for the year 1870, which was granted by the court, and an order made upon the county treasurer for the payment of the same to the association. Not content with the decision of the court of Lancaster County, the county officials, through their solicitor, B. C. Kready, Esq., appealed to the Supreme Court, and endeavored to reverse the court below. They attacked the charter of the association, and with a zeal worthy of a better cause sought to have the act of incorporation declared unconstitutional and void. Upon the Supreme Court depended the fate of the monument that is now a thing of beauty and a joy forever to the people of Lancaster County, and that tribunal, after the close of the argument by counsel, settled the question by promptly affirming the action of the court below. In July, 1872, the county treasurer paid over the militia fund which had been collected for two years, $5187.48. This sum, with the accumulations of the fair funds in the hands of Mrs. M. A. Ehler, the lady treasurer, under whose careful management the original amount had increased over one thousand dollars by interest, and one hundred and fifty dollars in the hands of J. W. Jackson, made nearly ten thousand dollars with which to begin. The highest court of the State having decided the legal rights of the association to a certain accumulation of funds yearly, the way was open for the commission to proceed. A number of plans and proposals were presented, and after considering all, the contract for the monument was given to Batterson, Canfield & Co., of Hartford, Conn., and Mr. Lewis Haldy, of Lancaster, for twenty thousand dollars, to be placed on foundation prepared by the association. The location of the monument had long been a vexed question. Some favored a park with the monument in the centre, the park to be laid out in walks and drives, and ornamented with fountains. Public sentiment was, however, decidedly in favor of placing the monument in Centre Square, and the association decided on that location, provided the consent of Councils could be obtained. Select and Common Councils, on the 5th of June, 1872, promptly granted the right of thirty-five feet square, and the location being finally settled the work began. A substantial foundation of rock and cement over nine feet deep was laid, and upon this foundation the monument, in the summer of 1874, was erected. The work is best described in the language of the contractors in their proposal and specification. "It has been our endeavor to present an original and artistic design, yet so simple in its character that, without explanation, it will to every beholder commemorate the brave men, both living and dead, through whose sacrifices the glorious results of the war were attained, and peace and prosperity secured to our country. The style of ornamentation is of the Gothic order throughout, in accordance with the general design. The platform, or lower base course, is eighteen feet square; the total height of the monument, including the crowning statue, is forty-three feet. Upon the four corners of the platform are four pedestals, upon which stand four statues six feet high, representing respectively the different branches of the service,—the infantry, artillery, cavalry, and navy. Upon the plinth in the centre of the platform is a richly-moulded base, on which rests a massive die with frieze and moulded cornice. From the heavily-moulded column base rises a graceful shaft, with richly-moulded bands containing in high relief, polished on the face, the names of the following battle-fields: Gettysburg, Antietam, Malvern Hill, Vicksburg, Wilderness, Chaplin Hills, Chickamauga, Petersburg. The capital of the shaft is richly carved and ornamented. The capital is surmounted with a magnificent statue eight feet high, representing the Genius of Liberty, with the shield of victory, bearing the arms of the United States, held in the left hand, the right hand grasping a drawn sword." Upon the die is the following inscription:

"ERECTED BY THE PEOPLE OF LANCASTER COUNTY to the memory of THEIR FELLOW-CITIZENS who fell in the defense of the Union in the war of the REBELLION, 1861-65."

The entire monument, including the statues and coping of the fence, is executed in the white granite of Westerly, Rhode Island, the same as was used for the national monument at Gettysburg, and numerous other valuable monuments, public and private. This granite is distinguished for its great beauty and durability, its purity and freedom from discoloration. The whole work is surrounded by a wrought-iron fence of beautiful design, the work of Richard Blickenderfer, contractor. The complete cost of the monument was twenty-six thousand dollars. The dedication of the monument on the 4th of July, 1874, was one of the most imposing demonstrations ever witnessed in Lancaster. The entire management was under the charge of the following committee: Maj. A. C. Reinoehl, Capt. H. R. Breneman, Dr. Alexander Craig, Capt. S. E. Wisner, Capt. Edward Ederly, Capt. John P. Rea, Maj. R. W. Shenk, Capt. W. T. McPhail, Capt. D. P. Rosenmiller, of the monumental association. Ex-Governor A. G. Curtin was the orator on this occasion.

The care and control of the monument is perpetually in the Monumental Association, which has a snug sum of one thousand dollars invested in mortgage, the interest being applied annually to keeping the monument and inclosure in repair. The board of commissioners at this time is composed of the following gentlemen, all veterans of the Union army: Edward Ederly, H. R. Breneman, W. D. Stauffer, Charles Denues, A. C. Reinoehl, S. E. Wisner, Samuel Evans, D. P. Rosenmiller, Henry Muller, Hiram Stamm, Dr. Alexander Craig, Marriott Brosius, E. K. Martin, James H. Marshall, J. W. Yocum; the officers being E. K. Martin, president; Charles Denues, vice-president; H. R. Breneman, secretary; J. H. Marshall, treasurer; A. C. Reinoehl, solicitor.

First Pennsylvania Regiment.—Companies F and K of this regiment were recruited at Lancaster, and both were mustered April 20, 1861. The regimental band was also from Lancaster, and the following musicians constituted it: Daniel Clemens, leader, Joseph M. Cogley, George P. Bruederly, Herman Newmyer, Joseph A. Bruederly, Charles Hepting, John Chambers, George G. Myers, George F. Rote, Jacob H. Norbeck, Jacob Adams, Charles Streich, John P. Shindle, Frederick Wettig, Henry Schenck, and Benjamin F. Adams.

On the night of the 20th of April the regiment left Harrisburg under command of Brigadier-General George G. Wynkoop, and proceeded first to a point near Cockeysville, Md., then to Camp Scott, near York, Pa. Clothing and camp equipage were received here, and on the 14th of May it entered on the duty of guarding the Northern Central Railroad from the Pennsylvania line to near Baltimore. May 25th it was ordered to Cantonville, Md.; on the 29th to Franklinton, and on the 3d of June to Chambersburg, where it was assigned to the Second Brigade; from there it was ordered with its brigade to Hagers-town, and thence on the 21st of June to Frederick, Md. It then went to Martinsburg, Va., where it did garrison duty till July 17th. It was then, with its brigade, engaged in making demonstrations in front of the enemy till after the battle of Bull Run. On the 21st it was ordered to Harper's Ferry, and on the 23d it took passage for Harrisburg, where the men were discharged and mustered out of the United States service.

Twenty-third Regiment.—This was originally a three months' regiment, and was raised almost wholly in Philadelphia. It was mustered out on the 31st of July, 1861, and was at once reorganized for three years or during the war, retaining its old number. Nearly all of one company were from Lancaster County.

During the first four months after it went to Washington it was engaged in drill, picket, guard, and fatigue duty. Early in March, 1862, it marched toward Vienna, and in the latter part of the same month went to Fortress Monroe, and thence it moved with the army to the Peninsula. Although it was frequently engaged in skirmishes, it was first under heavy infantry fire at the battle of Fair Oaks, on the 31st of May. It participated in the operations of the Peninsular campaign, and then, with other troops, went to the support of Gen. Pope on the Rappahannock, arriving in season to take a part in the battle of Chantilly, on the 1st of September, 1862. It went on the Maryland campaign of that autumn, but was not actively engaged, either at South Mountain or Antietam. After this campaign it did picket duty along the Potomac River, near Hancock, till Nov. 1st, when it went forward. It was not actively engaged at Fredericksburg. In the campaign and battle of Chancellorsville it had an active part, and lost seventy-one killed and wounded. Its next active duty was in the Gettysburg campaign, and in the battle on the 3d of July it was engaged, but its loss was not heavy. It joined in the pursuit of the retreating rebel army, and during the remainder of the summer and autumn it participated in the operations of the army in Virginia.

In December a portion of the regiment re-enlisted and received a furlough. The balance went, in January, 1864, to Johnson's Island, Lake Erie, where they guarded rebel prisoners.

It took an active part in the campaign of the summer of 1864, and at the battle of Cold Harbor suffered a loss of nine officers and one hundred and eighty-eight men killed and wounded. It continued on active duty till the expiration of its term of service, when it returned to Philadelphia, and on the 8th of September, 1864, it was mustered out.

Thirtieth Regiment (First Reserves).—The First Regiment of the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps was organized at Camp Wayne, near West Chester, June 9, 1861. Companies B and E were recruited in Lancaster County, and Company D in the counties of Lancaster and York.

At daylight, July 22d, the regiment started for Baltimore, through which city it marched on the following morning regardless of threats of violence by an excited populace. It was mustered into the United States' service on the 26th, at Camp Carroll, in the suburbs of Baltimore, and on the 27th it moved to Annapolis, Md., where its headquarters were in the naval school. Here the regiment was engaged in guard and provost duty, and it was very efficient both in enforcing order in the city and in suppressing the contraband trade and intercourse that was carried on between rebels and their sympathizers.

On the 30th of August it proceeded to Washington, and the next day to Tenallytown, Md., where it was made a part of the First Brigade, Pennsylvania Reserve Corps. In October it marched to Langley, Va., where it encamped, and, with the exception of an armed reconnoissance to near Dranesville, remained till March, 1862. It then moved to Alexandria, Fairfax Seminary, Manassas Junction, and Fredericksburg, in the vicinity of which it remained till the next June. On the 8th of that month it left its camp at Falmouth for the Peninsula, where it participated in the operations conducted by Gen. McClellan against Richmond. It was heavily engaged at Mechanicsville and at Gaines' Mill. It was again engaged on the 30th of June at Newmarket Cross-Roads, where it fought gallantly, and lost eleven killed and eighty-five wounded.

The regiment moved north in August, and participated in Gen. Pope's disastrous campaign, during which it was engaged with the enemy at Centreville.

It was again engaged at South Mountain, Md., where it made a gallant charge and drove the enemy from a stronghold, for which it was particularly commended by Gen. Hooker. Three days later it was again engaged at the battle of Antietam. It moved forward with its brigade, and was again engaged at the battle of Fredericksburg.

The regiment participated in the "mud" campaign of January, 1863, but was not again engaged till July 2d, at the battle of Gettysburg, in which it made a spirited charge. On the 3d it was again in action. It participated in the battle of Bristoe Station, and in the many manœuvres and skirmishes till the close of 1863.

The regiment wintered at Bristoe Station, and in the spring of 1864 engaged actively in the Wilderness campaign, fighting at the battle of Spottsylvania, and even on the last day of its service, at the battle of Bethesda Church.

It left the field on the 1st of June, 1864, and was mustered out of the service at Philadelphia on the 13th of the same month. On their arrival at Lancaster a grand reception was given to the companies from this county by the Patriotic Daughters of Lancaster. Bates says, "The whole number mustered into the regiment was one thousand and eighty-four. Of these, one hundred and thirty-nine were killed or died in the field, two hundred and thirty-three were wounded, two hundred and fifty-eight were discharged for disability contracted in the service, and one hundred and forty-eight re-enlisted as veterans."

COMPANY C.

Saulsberry, Robert, March 2, 1862.

Thirty-first Regiment (Second Reserve).—In Company G of this regiment were some citizens of Lancaster County. In the latter part of July, 1861, it went to Pleasant Valley, near Harper's Ferry, without having been mustered into the United States service. By reason of the delay and irregularity of its muster a portion of the men declined to remain, but returned to their homes, and afterwards joined other organizations. The rest were actively engaged in the operations of the army during their term of service, and achieved an excellent record.

Thirty-fourth Regiment (Fifth Reserve).—Lancaster County furnished Company K of this regiment, which was organized at Camp Curtin, June 20, 1861, and first entered on active duty about the middle of the next month thereafter. It was finally made a part of the First Brigade, and on the 10th of October crossed the Potomac and encamped near Langley, Va. During the spring of 1862 it was engaged in guard duty on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, and in the summer it participated in the operations against Richmond, under Gen. McClellan. It was in action at Mechanicsville, Gaines' Mill, and Charles City Cross-Roads, in which actions its losses in killed, wounded, and prisoners were two hundred and thirty-six. In August, with the rest of McClellan's forces, it moved north, and arrived in season to participate in the second battle of Bull Run. It was in action at South Mountain and Antietam, Md. It was next engaged at the battle of Fredericksburg, where it lost twenty killed, eighty-eight wounded, and sixty-one prisoners.

At the battle of Gettysburg it was actively engaged, and in the ensuing campaigns in the summer and autumn of 1863 it participated. It was recruited and reorganized in the winter and early spring of 1864, and in the campaign of that spring it bore an active part.

Its term of service expired in the latter part of May, and on the 31st of that month it bade adieu to the veterans still in the field and returned to Harrisburg, where, on the 11th of June, 1864, it was mustered out. Rolls of companies containing Lancaster County men are here given:

CHAPTER XIII.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION—(Continued).

The Forty-fifth and Fiftieth Regiments—The Second Cavalry—Seventy-seventh Regiment.

Forty-fifth Regiment.—Thomas Welch, of Lancaster County, was colonel of this regiment at its organization, and Companies B and K were raised in the county. It was organized on the 21st of October, 1861, and on the 23d it went to Washington. It was assigned to Howard's brigade of Casey's division.

It was engaged in unimportant duty till November 19th, when it embarked at Baltimore for Fortress Monroe, whence on the 6th of December it embarked for Port Royal, S. C., where it occupied the sea islands, among which it was distributed in detachments. Here it remained, occasionally engaging in skirmishes and minor actions, till the 9th of June, 1862, when it embarked on a steamer and landed on James Island, eight miles from the city of Charleston, where it encountered and engaged a force of the enemy. On the 16th it was again in action, but without loss. It was engaged in picket and fatigue duty till the 18th of July, when it embarked for Fortress Monroe. It remained in that vicinity, engaged in drill, till the 4th of August, when it was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, Ninth Army Corps, and went to Acquia Creek, in the vicinity of which it remained till the 6th of September, when it moved by water to Washington. Thence it marched to Brookville, Frederick City, and Middletown, Md., where it arrived on the 13th, and on the 14th was hotly engaged in the battle of South Mountain, where it suffered a loss of one hundred and forty-five men killed, wounded, and missing. On the 17th it was actively engaged at the battle of Antietam, where its loss was thirty killed and wounded.

From the battle-field of Antietam it marched successively to Frederick City, Point of Rocks, Berlin, Snicker's and Ashby's Gaps, Rectortown, Orleans, Waterloo, Warrenton, and Falmouth, and on the 19th of November it encamped on the north bank of the Rappahannock, opposite Fredericksburg. In the battle at that place it was not engaged, but remained in its camp till the 11th of February, 1863, when it removed to Newport News, and encamped on the banks of James River, where it remained during three months. In this time Col. Welch was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general.

On the 22d of May the regiment was ordered to East Tennessee, to which State it went by rail from Baltimore, and arrived in the vicinity of Vicksburg on the 19th of June.

After the capture of Vicksburg, the regiment, with its brigade, made a painful and severe march to Jackson, Miss., where it arrived on the 10th of July, and bore an active and important part in the engagements that took place there. After these actions it returned to Vicksburg, whence it went by water to Cairo, then to Cincinnati, from which place it marched to Blue Springs, Tenn., where, on the 10th of October, it was sharply engaged with the enemy. It then moved with its brigade by rail to Knoxville. Here, on the 16th of November, occurred an engagement with the rebel Gen. Longstreet, in which the Forty-fifth bore a part, and during the siege which followed it was engaged, along with other troops, in the defense of the place.

Jan. 1, 1864, four hundred and forty-six of the Forty-fifth re-enlisted and received a veteran furlough. On the 19th of March the veteran regiment went to Annapolis, Md., whence it proceeded into Virginia, and in May, 1864, engaged in the Wilderness campaign, and in the action on the 6th it lost one hundred and forty-five killed and wounded. From this time it was almost constantly engaged or under fire, and in the battles of Cold Harbor, on the 1st, 2d, and 3d of June, the aggregate loss was one hundred and sixty-three, killed and wounded, out of three hundred engaged. During the remaining operations of that year, including the Petersburg mine, the Forty-fifth was constantly on duty, and on the 1st of October it numbered only ninety-two men present for duty. During the winter of 1864-65 its ranks were filled up, and it bore its part in the final campaign. It participated in the grand review, and on the 17th of July, 1865, it was mustered out of the service.

Thomas Welsh, col., appointed brig.-gen. March 13, 1863; died Aug. 14, 1863.

Fiftieth Regiment.—This regiment was organized at Camp Curtin Sept. 25, 1861. Company F was recruited in Lancaster. On the 2d of October it left Harrisburg and went to Washington, thence to Annapolis, Md., where it was assigned to Stevens' brigade of T. W. Sherman's corps.

October 19th it embarked on transports for South Carolina, where, after severe perils, it arrived, and on the 6th of December went to Beaufort, where it had its first skirmish, and drove the enemy from the island. On the 1st of January, 1862, the battle of Coosaw—its first engagement in force—occurred. On the 30th it crossed a stream on the strungers of a bridge at Old Pocotaligo under the fire of the enemy, and dislodged a force from its position on the opposite side. The regiment left Beaufort July 12, when it went to Fortress Monroe, and was made part of the Ninth Corps, and went to the support of Gen. Pope, on the Rapidan. It was engaged two days at Second Bull Run. It made a gallant fight at Chantilly on the 1st of September, and was engaged at South Mountain, Md., on the 14th. On the 17th it was in the battle of Antietam, and at the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 18th of December, it was present but not actively engaged. It afterwards, in the summer of 1863, went to the West, was at the siege of Vicksburg, and participated in the campaign to Jackson. In August it went across the mountains via Cumberland Gap to Knoxville. It went thence to Blue Springs, where it was engaged in battle, then returned to Knoxville. Early in November it was in a fight with Longstreet's forces on the Tennessee Railroad. It was several times afterwards engaged during the siege of Knoxville, which was raised on the 5th of December, 1863.

On the 1st of January, 1864, nearly the entire regiment re-enlisted, then marched, amidst great suffering, to Nicholasville, where the men received their veteran furloughs and went home.

March 20th it made its rendezvous at Annapolis, and early in May entered on the Wilderness campaign, and participated in the operations which followed in front of Petersburg, where it passed the winter. It also participated in the campaign of the spring of 1865, which terminated the war, and on the 31st of July, 1865, it was mustered out of the service near Georgetown, D. C.

The following lists are of men from Lancaster County serving in the Fiftieth Regiment:

COMPANY I.

Mayberry, Reuben, Feb. 10, 1864; must. out with company July 30, 1865.

Fifty-ninth Regiment (Second Cavalry).—This regiment, of which Company D was from Lancaster County, was recruited in the fall of 1861, and went to Washington April 25, 1862, and in June set out for the seat of war on the Rapidan. Here it was engaged in the ordinary duty of cavalry, scouting, skirmishing, and harassing the enemy by sudden dashes on weak or exposed points, obstructing him in his advance, and falling suddenly on his flank or rear on his retreat. In the discharge of such duties the regiment was engaged during the summer and autumn of 1862. It went into winter-quarters at Accotink, where it could hold the line of the Occoquan. It left its winter-quarters and resumed active operations early in April, 1863. It was assigned to the brigade of Gen. Stahel, which was afterwards commanded by Gen. Pleasonton. It entered on the Gettysburg campaign in June. At the battle it was engaged in checking the tide of stragglers, conducting prisoners, doing provost duty on the field and in the town, and pursuing and harassing the retreating army of Lee. During the autumn it made frequent reconnoissances and several active fights, as well as many skirmishes and less important actions. It had its winter-quarters at Warrenton. Many of the men re-enlisted and received a veteran furlough in the winter of 1863-64.

In the campaign of 1864 it participated in the brilliant cavalry operations of Gen. Sheridan, which contributed so largely to the success of and gave lustre to the Union army. Its list of actions is too long to rehearse, but of the important ones may be mentioned those of Hawes' Shop, Deep Bottom, Malvern Hill, Charles City Cross-Roads, Reams' Station, and afterwards Wyatt's Farm, Boydton Plank-Road, McDowell's Hill, and Five Forks. It was present at the final surrender. It was three times filled by recruits, and was mustered out July 13, 1865. Bates says of it, "It enjoyed a reputation second to none. On the skirmish line it was noted for its steady, plucky advance. On parade it was distinguished for the regularity of its 'dress,' its fine appearance, its cleanliness, and esprit. It furnished several staff-officers for the general commanding."

 Zell, Jacob, Feb. 17, 1865.

Seventy-seventh Regiment.—This regiment, of which Company K was recruited at Lancaster, was organized at Camp Wilkins, near Pittsburgh, in October, 1861. On the 18th of that month it moved to Louisville, whence it proceeded by leisurely marches to Nashville, which place it reached on the 2d of March, 1862. It moved forward with the army, and first encountered the enemy at the battle of Pittsburg Landing, April 7th. A month later it reached Corinth. During the summer of 1862, with its division, the Seventy-seventh was engaged in marching and countermarching, sometimes seeking and sometimes eluding the enemy, reconnoitering and skirmishing till the latter part of October, when it reached Nashville and encamped for a time. On the 26th it broke camp and went forward towards Murfreesboro'. At the battle of Stone River, which ended on the 2d of January, 1863, the Seventy-seventh earned the compliment from Gen. Rosecrans of being the "banner regiment" that "never broke their ranks."

The regiment was engaged in guard, scout, and foraging duty, and in building fortifications at Murfreesboro' till the opening of the summer campaign of 1863, when it went forward and first encountered the enemy at Liberty Gap, in June. In this severe action it lost one-third of its effective strength. After this action it marched with the army in pursuit of the enemy to near Rome, Ga., then returned to near the falls of Little River, and in the action at Chickamauga, on the 19th of September, a portion of the officers and men of the regiment were captured. In the latter part of October the remnant went into camp at Whiteside, where it remained till January, 1864, when a large proportion of the men re-enlisted and received a veteran furlough. On their return they entered on the Atlanta campaign of Gen. Sherman, and were in action at Tunnel Hill, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Kingston, New Hope Church, Kennesaw Mountain, Smyrna, Chattahoochee River, and Peachtree Creek. It assisted at the siege and capture of Atlanta, then returned to Tennessee with a portion of the army, while "Sherman marched on to the sea." It was in action at Franklin the latter part of November, and again at Nashville in December. It pursued the enemy to Huntsville, Ala., where it rested through the winter. It returned to East Tennessee the following March (1865), then to Nashville, and was reorganized. Thence it went to Texas via New Orleans, arriving at Indianola on the 27th of July. It marched thence to Green Lake, then to Victoria, in the vicinity of which it remained till December, when it started for Philadelphia, where it arrived Jan. 16, 1866, and was mustered out of the service.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION—(Continued).

The Seventy-ninth Regiment.<sup>1</sup>

Seventy-ninth Regiment (called the Lancaster County Regiment).—All the companies in this regiment except Company D were from Lancaster County. It was recruited in September and October of 1861 by Henry A. Hambright, of Lancaster, who was made its colonel. Its place of rendezvous was Camp Wilkins, near Pittsburgh, from which it marched on the 17th of October to Allegheny City, where it received from the Governor its colors, and on the following day it embarked on steamers for Louisville, Ky. Thence it proceeded by rail to a camp on Nolen Creek, and by leisurely marches to Camp Wood, near Munfordsville, on Green River. Here it remained through the winter, engaged in drill, picket, guard, and scout duty. It was made a part of Gen. Negley's brigade in Gen. McCook's division.

On the 29th of March the regiment was ordered to Columbia. While there a detachment that went out to repair the telegraph lines was captured and paroled by a party of Morgan's cavalry.

During the month of April the Seventy-ninth was engaged in guarding the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, but early in May an expedition was made by it, with other troops, under Col. Hambright, to Rodgersville, Tenn. The enemy was fired on across the river and driven away. A detachment under Capt. Klein went down the river and destroyed some rebel boats.

The command went to Florence, and then returned to Columbia.

Late in May an expedition, of which the Seventy-ninth formed a part, went across the mountains to Chattanooga. At Waldron Ridge the enemy was encountered, and three companies of the Seventy-ninth, under Capt. Klein, went out as skirmishers. A fight occurred, with some loss on the part of the enemy, and on the 7th of June the command arrived at Chattanooga. Here a fight occurred, in which, after three hours, the enemy was driven from his intrenchments. The command then returned to Shelbyville, after an absence of fourteen days, during which it marched two hundred and eighty-four miles.

About the middle of July the regiment went to Tullahoma, and thence to Manchester. On the 11th of August it went to Nashville, and encamped on College Hill, south from the city. In the latter part of August it was twice sent to Gallatin to support troops that were attacked by the enemy. While at Nashville it was assigned to the Third Brigade, under Gen. Starkweather, First Division, Gen. Rousseau, and Fourteenth Corps, Gen. McCook.

On the 7th of September the regiment broke camp and marched, arriving at Bowling Green on the 7th. It remained in camp there till the 16th, then resumed its march, which was very severe, and in the course of which frequent skirmishing with the enemy took place. On the 8th of October a heavy battle was fought, at Perryville, with Bragg's army. In this fight the Seventy-ninth lost thirty-seven killed, one hundred and forty-nine wounded, and three missing. The enemy was pursued as far as Bowling Green, where a halt was made on the 4th of November, and here the regiment received a supply of sanitary stores from their home friends, the "Patriot Daughters of Lancaster."

On the 10th of November the regiment was sent on guard duty on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. It went to Louisville on the 4th of December, then, on the 26th of the same month, marched thence with the army. At Stone River a battle occurred on the 1st, 2d, and 3d of January, 1863, in which the loss of the Seventy-ninth was not heavy. At this time the regiment had lost, in various ways, four hundred and twenty-two, and had received sixteen recruits. Its strength was thirty-five officers and six hundred and eighty-eight enlisted men, of whom twenty-five officers and four hundred and eighty-four men were present for duty.

The regiment went into camp at Murfreesboro', and remained till the 20th of April, when, with other troops, it went to McMinnville and Liberty, at which places several mills and a large amount of stores were destroyed.

The summer campaign opened June 24th, and the summer was passed by the army to which the Seventy-ninth belonged marching and manœuvring to obtain strategic advantages.

The battle of Chickamauga occurred on the 19th, 20th, and 21st of September, and in this battle the Seventy-ninth lost sixteen killed, sixty-six wounded, and forty-seven missing, out of a total strength of three hundred and sixty-seven. With the rest of the army the Seventy-ninth was shut up in Chattanooga, which was closely invested, and the troops suffered greatly till they were relieved after the battles of Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge, November 23d, 24th, and 25th.

In February, 1864, two hundred and sixty-five of the regiment re-enlisted, but before receiving their veteran furlough they were in action at Tunnel Hill, where two were wounded. They arrived at Lancaster on the 16th of March, and returned early in May, to find the Atlanta campaign fully inaugurated. The regiment was engaged in a skirmish on the 11th, and again, between Dalton and Resaca, on the 16th of May. After collecting the arms and burying the dead of the rebels, and escorting a train to Ackworth, the regiment again joined the brigade, and was in action on the 18th of June. It participated in the operations about Atlanta, and its losses during the entire campaign amounted to an aggregate of ninety-four. Of its subsequent career Bates gives the following account.<sup>1</sup>

"On the 16th of November, clothing and rations having been issued, the regiment set forward on the great march to the sea. The following brief extract from the record of its progress will illustrate the general character of that memorable march: '24th of November, left camp at 7 A.M., crossing the Oconee River, marching ten miles on the Sandersville road and encamping. 25th, not on march; day spent foraging. 26th, left camp at 7 A.M.; the division in rear of cavalry train. A swamp at Buffalo Creek delayed the train, and it was midnight before the wagons all got over. 27th, left camp at 7 A.M.; crossing the swamp, marched three miles to Scragg Creek Swamp, passing through Sandersville at 1 P.M., and thence southeast, striking the Macon and Savannah Railroad and encamping. 28th, left camp at 8 A.M., and at Davidsboro' Station came up with the Twentieth Corps, engaged in tearing up the road.' On the 21st of December the regiment entered Savannah, the enemy having retired without offering serious opposition. After its occupation the regiment went into camp a few miles from the city, where supplies of clothing were issued, and where it rested a month.

"On the 18th of January, 1865, the regiment broke camp and, passing through the city, started with the army on the march north through the Carolinas. On approaching the Black River, on the 15th of March, it was ascertained that the enemy in force under Hardee was in front. Three days later a part of the Twentieth Corps had an engagement at Swiss Farm, the First Division of the Fourteenth Corps being in line, but not engaged. On the morning of the 19th the division, the Third Brigade in advance, moved for Goldsboro'. Skirmishing began soon after leaving camp, and the line of battle was formed as the troops came up. The enemy was found in position, and soon opened briskly. The Seventy-ninth was posted in support of the First Division Battery, but was soon ordered away, three of its number being wounded as it passed. A line of works was hastily thrown up, and a charge was ordered to develop the enemy's strength. The Seventy-ninth was of the charging column. It moved boldly up to within thirty yards of the rebel works, when, receiving a murderous fire, and the supporting regiment giving way, it was forced to yield. The charge had been made along the entire line, but was repulsed at every point with heavy loss. Soon after the division was flanked, and the rebels, swarming in behind the works, drove regiment after regiment towards the right. The Seventy-ninth held the extreme left of the division, and the enemy, now in flank and rear, had reached the line of the brigade. Quickly changing front to meet the advancing foe, the regiment charged, encountering a terrific fire. By hard fighting the brigade held the ground until the troops in the rear had thrown up breastworks, when it retired. During the night the works were strengthened and securely established. In this engagement, known as the battle of Bentonville, the loss was thirteen killed and forty-six wounded. Lieut.-Col. Miles, in command of the brigade, was among the wounded. On the 22d the command moved on to Goldsboro', where the regiment received two hundred recruits. From Goldsboro' it moved to Raleigh, and thence to Martha's Vineyard, where it was encamped when news was received that Gen. Johnston had surrendered, and the war was practically at an end. At quick step and with light hearts the division marched via Richmond to the neighborhood of Washington, where, on the 12th of July, it was mustered out of service." On the 19th the Patriot Daughters of Lancaster gave to the returned veterans of the regiment a reception at Lancaster City. Speeches of welcome were made, and a bountiful collation was prepared by the ladies of the association.

Rolls are given below of officers and enlisted men from Lancaster County serving in the Seventy-ninth Regiment :

CHAPTER XV.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION—(Continued).

The Ninety-second, Ninety-ninth, and One Hundred and Seventh Regiments—The Twelfth Cavalry—One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment.

Ninety-second Regiment (Ninth Cavalry).<sup>1</sup>—This, which was at first known as the Lochiel Cavalry, had two companies, F and G, from Lancaster County. It was organized on the 29th of August, 1861, and its place of rendezvous was Camp Cameron, near Harrisburg.

On the 20th of November, 1861, it moved to Louisville, via Pittsburgh, went into camp at Jeffersonville, Ind., opposite Louisville, and engaged in drill. It went to the front in January, 1862, and in February, on the advance of Gens. Buell and Mitchell against Gen. A. S. Johnson, at Bowling Green, it was, at the request of the citizens, ordered to remain for the protection of the State, and the battalions were posted at different localities.

In March the regiment was ordered into Tennessee, and in May the third battalion met a force of Morgan's cavalry at Lebanon, where that daring leader was defeated. Soon afterward the third battalion captured Morgan's rear-guard, and pursued his force to the Cumberland Mountains at Sparta. The same battalion was again warmly engaged at Moore's Hill on the 6th of June, and at Tompkinsville, Ky., on the 9th of July, with Morgan's force again.

The battalions were united in Kentucky early in August, and the regiment was engaged in protecting the State against the raids of Morgan's bands. It covered the retreat of Gen. Nelson to Louisville, after the battle of Richmond, Ky., on the 30th of August, and in doing so had a sharp fight with the rebel cavalry at Shelbyville. It was engaged at Perryville, where it fought bravely, and lost ten killed and twenty-seven wounded.

It returned to Louisville, where it was remounted and newly equipped, and on the 22d of December went on an expedition through the Cumberland, Pine, and Clinch Mountains, where roads and civilization were abandoned, and great hardships were endured. On the 1st of January, 1863, it reached the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad, captured a force of the enemy, and burned the bridge over the Watauga. Twelve miles distant, on the Holston River, another force of two hundred and fifty was captured and paroled, and a mile of trestle-work was destroyed. The command then recrossed the mountains by the route over which it came, and reached Nicholasville on the 13th of January. Soon afterward the regiment went to Louisville and was remounted, then went to Nashville, and, on the 8th of February, to Franklin, where it drove Forrest's cavalry from the town. During eighteen days the regiment confronted a vastly superior force of rebel cavalry under Van Dorn, and when attacked defeated it. The next day a fight occurred, which, though disastrous to the Union arms, was nobly borne by this regiment. In the Chickamauga campaign the regiment was in action at the battles of Rover, Middleton, and Shelbyville, at which latter it captured a battery and about a thousand prisoners. It was also in action at Cowan, Lafayette, and Chickamauga.

In the winter and spring of 1863-64 it was in the battles of Dandridge, New Market, Mossy Creek, and Fair Garden. It then re-enlisted, had a furlough of thirty days, and returned, twelve hundred strong, in May. During the summer of 1864 the regiment operated against Morgan in his last raid into Kentucky, and on the 2d of September reached Chattanooga, crossed the mountains to McMinnville, and on the 6th attacked and defeated a brigade of Wheeler's command, taking about three hundred prisoners. The same day the regiment attacked and defeated a part of the force of the rebel general Williams.

The regiment joined Gen. Sherman at Marietta, Ga., and on the 14th of November, 1864, started on the march to the sea. During this march it was in action at Lovejoy's Station, Macon, Bear Creek, Waynesboro', Buckhead Creek, Buckhead Church, and Waynesboro' again.

After reaching Savannah the regiment delayed a month, then went forward, and was in action on the Charleston and Augusta Railroad, at Aiken, Lexington, Black Stakes Station, Averysboro', N. C., Bentonville, near Raleigh, Hillsboro' Road, and Morrisville.

This regiment had the honor of firing the last gun at the enemy before the surrender of Gen. Johnston, and of receiving the flag of truce sent by that general, with a letter asking for terms of surrender. After this surrender the command went to Lexington, where it remained till the 18th of July, when it was mustered out of the service.

The following is a list of Lancaster County soldiers in the Ninety-second Regiment:

Ninety-ninth Regiment.—Of this regiment Companies A, B, and D were recruited wholly in Lancaster County, and in the other companies were also men from this county. When three companies had been recruited and mustered in they were sent forward to Washington, and other companies followed as they were filled, till, in February, 1862, the regiment was full.

It was first engaged in drill, picket, and fatigue duty at Alexandria, then, during more than four months, in garrison duty at Washington.

Early in July it went to the Peninsula, where it did duty on picket and in the trenches, and in August it moved to Acquia Creek, and marched thence to Alexandria, where it arrived on the 23d of that month. It reached Warrenton Junction on the 27th, and went at once to Manassas Junction, where it participated in a sharp action with "Stonewall" Jackson's troops, and on the same day arrived at the Groveton battle-field, and was there engaged on the 28th and 29th of August. It went on the Maryland campaign of September, 1862, but it was not engaged either at South Mountain or Antietam. It took part in the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, and in the "mud march" of January, 1862. At the battle of Chancellorsville, in May, 1862, the regiment was actively engaged, after which it did picket duty till the 11th of June, when it entered on the Pennsylvania campaign. At the battle of Gettysburg it was desperately engaged, and left half its number dead and wounded on the battle-field. It participated in the pursuit of the retreating army, and encamped near Warrenton Sulphur Springs, where it remained till the 10th of October. It moved again, was in a skirmish at Auburn on the 12th, in an action on the Rappahannock on the 7th of November, and at Mine Run on the 28th. It soon afterward went into winter-quarters at Brandy Station.

Many of the men re-enlisted and received a veteran furlough in February, 1864. They returned to their old quarters at Brandy Station on the 7th of March, and on the 3d of May, 1864, entered on the spring campaign of that year. The regiment was engaged in the battles of the Wilderness, and there lost seventy-one killed and wounded. It went South with the army, and at the battle of Spotsylvania Court-House, on the 12th, it bore an important part, capturing many prisoners, two guns, and two battle-flags. One of these flags was taken by Lieut. C. H. Fasnacht, of Company A, and for this service a medal was subsequently awarded to him by Congress. Again on the 17th and on the 20th of May, 1864, it was engaged, and captured several hundred prisoners. About the middle of June it joined in the operations before Petersburg, and was frequently in action, losing many officers and men. On the 28th of July it went to Deep Bottom, where it fought bravely, and was highly complimented for its gallantry. It was again in action at Deep Bottom on the 14th and 15th of August. On the 9th of September it fought at Jerusalem Plank-road, and took two hundred prisoners, though in a subsequent movement at the same battle fifty-two of its men fell into the hands of the enemy. It skirmished at Pope's Church on the 1st of October, and was warmly engaged at Boydton Plank-road on the 23d of the same month. It aided in the destruction of the Weldon Railroad early in December, and soon afterwards went into winter-quarters.

In the campaign of 1865 it was engaged at Hatcher's Run, near the Davis House, at Five Forks, Sailor's Creek, and near Appomattox Court-House. It participated in the grand review on the 23d of May, and was mustered out of service on the 1st of July, 1865.

One Hundred and Seventh Regiment.—This was organized in March, 1862, for three years, and it went at once to the seat of war. It first did guard duty on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, then went to the Shenandoah Valley. It returned, and was first under fire at the battle of Cedar Mountain, on the 9th of August, 1862; then it was engaged at the second battle of Bull Run; then, in succession, at South Mountain, Sept. 14, 1862; at Antietam, on the 17th; at Fredericksburg, December 12th; at Chancellorsville, May 5, 1863; at Gettysburg, July 1st, 2d, and 3d; near Hope Chapel, November 28th; at Jericho Ford, in May, 1864; and in many of the engagements of the campaign in that summer and autumn.

The regiment entered early on the spring campaign of 1865, and continued on active duty, participating in many actions, till the surrender of the rebel army. It had part in the great review on the 23d of May, and was mustered out on the 13th of July, 1865.

One Hundred and Thirteenth (Twelfth Cavalry).—This regiment, which contained some men from Lancaster County, was organized in November, 1861, and went to the field in the latter part of April, 1862. It first did duty in the summer and autumn campaign of 1862, in Virginia and Maryland, then, in the summer of 1863, in the Gettysburg campaign, and in 1864 in the operations in Virginia, in which its service was arduous.

In the winter of 1864-65 it went across the Blue Ridge to operate among the guerrillas of that region. In April, 1865, it went to Winchester, in the vicinity of which it remained till the 20th of July, when it was mustered out of the service.

In the One Hundred and Thirteenth, Captain, Jacob Herzog; First Lieutenant, Philip Farnauf; Second Lieutenant, A. F. Gablenz; Sergeants, Charles Koch, Charles Kachell, Fynatz Ochs, Jacob Hamann, George Schmidt, Max Stutter; Corporals, John Scheiber, Valentine Klingler, John Euper, Louis Haenlen, Henry Mardorf, Conrad Maesch, Conrad Holbein, Fred. Stegemeyer; Buglers, Henry

Scherdt, Frederick Becker; Teamster, Franz Suter; Saddler, Gottlieb Abel; Blacksmith, Franz Maesch; Farrier, Gottfried Grossman; Privates, Fred. Brenne- man, John Baelie, Jacob Baeger, Diedrich Gristock, John Dreyen, John Enty, Julius Getz, Edward Haen, Henry Haeck, John Hermann, Martin Hostetter, Herman Hillebrand, Charles Katy, Christian Kull, Charles Kenntner, George Keppel, Michael Kelly, John Leonard, John Musch, Christian Grebe, George Seeser, Thomas Farrell, Fred. Muller, Patrick Meed, John Mauch, Franz Masseh, Benjamin Negele, Henry Ruhl, Joseph Schickel, William Rehm, Robert Van- tessen, Joshua Wickle, Anton Wentzel, Henry Wild, Jacob Zimmerman, John Paule, Ephrain Pollok, Peter Wittmer, George Seel, Matthias Grebe, Mar- tin Gossel, Wilhelm Neuwhoff, Charles Schauw, Her- man Plum.

One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment.<sup>1</sup>— Emlen Franklin, Esq., of the city of Lancaster, was a captain in the first regiment of volunteers that was raised in this State under the call of the Presi- dent for seventy-five thousand troops to serve three months. In July, 1862, he was authorized by Gov- ernor Curtin to recruit a regiment for nine months' service, and at once a camp was established a short distance east from Lancaster City. With such energy was recruiting prosecuted, and so readily did the people respond to the call for men, that by the 12th of August fourteen companies had organized and as- sembled at the place of rendezvous. Of these, ten were organized as the One Hundred and Twenty- second Regiment, and the remaining four became part of the One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Regiment, that was soon after organized. All these companies were raised in Lancaster County, and when the regi- ment was organized Emlen Franklin was made its colonel; Edward McGovern, lieutenant-colonel; and Thaddeus Stevens, Jr., major.

The misfortunes of the campaign then in progress rendered necessary the presence at Washington of all available forces, and on the 16th of August the regi- ment arrived in that city. During some time it occu- pied different points in front of Washington, without remaining long at any one place. It had no part in the Maryland campaign of that autumn, but, with its brigade, it joined the army near Berlin soon after the battle of Antietam. Early in November it went on a two days' reconnoissance towards the Shenandoah Valley, and engaged the enemy's cavalry and artil- lery, and after a time encamped near Falmouth.

The regiment was present at the battle of Fred- ericksburg, where it was under artillery fire during forty-eight hours. It had a part in the "mud" cam- paign of January, 1863, after which it retreated to its camp, and remained till the latter part of the next April. It moved forward on the Chancellorsville campaign, and on the 28th it marched to a point on the Rappahannock below Fredericksburg, from which, on the afternoon of May 1st, it moved up the river to United States Ford, and crossed the next morning. It was here in the corps of Gen. Sickles. On the morn- ing of the 3d of May the battle opened in front of this corps, and here the fighting was terribly severe. The loss of the One Hundred and Twenty-second in this action was one hundred and thirty-five killed, wounded, and prisoners. The commander of the division to which the regiment belonged, Gen. Whip- ple, was killed, and after the battle it was sent to be the escort at his funeral. It then went to Harrisburg, where it was mustered out of the service on the 15th and 16th of May. At midnight on the 16th the mem- bers of the regiment arrived at Lancaster, where a reception and banquet had been prepared by the Patriot Daughters of Lancaster, and they were wel- come to their homes in a becoming manner by their grateful fellow-citizens.

CHAPTER XVI.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBELLION—(Continued).

One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Regiment—Seventeenth Cavalry—One Hundred and Seventy-eighth, One Hundred and Seventy-ninth, and One Hundred and Eighty-second Regiments.

One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Regiment.—This regiment had Companies C, E, H, and K recruited in this county. It was organized on the 19th of August, 1862, and of the field-officers, Maj. Rudolph D. Shenk was of Lancaster County. On the day of its organization it moved for Washington. It there engaged in provost-guard duty by detachments in Washington and Georgetown till the middle of February, 1863, when the detachments were united, and the regiment went to Belle Plain, Va. and was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, First Army Corps. It was engaged for a time in guard and picket duty, but in the latter part of April, 1863, it went to the Rappahannock, about three miles below Fredericksburg, at Pollock's Mills, where it was under artillery fire during two days. Thence it moved to Chancellorsville, where it was under severe fire, and lost a lieutenant and twenty-six men captured. From this battle it returned to its camp at Belle Plain, and after a few days went to Washington and thence to Harrisburg, where, on the 24th of May, 1863, it was mustered out of the service.

One Hundred and Sixty-second Regiment (Seventeenth Cavalry).—This regiment, of which Company C was from Lancaster County, was recruited in the summer and autumn of 1862. On the 25th of November it left its rendezvous, near Harrisburg, and moved to Washington. December 22d it went to Occoquan, in the vicinity of which three companies, including C, remained some days, frequently skirmishing with the enemy. On the 5th of January, 1863, the detachment rejoined the regiment at Stafford Court-House, and the Seventeenth was made a part of the Second Brigade of the First Cavalry Division. In the Chancellorsville campaign, Companies C and I were on escort duty with Gen. Meade, and during the battle were engaged in the transmission of orders. In June, 1863, the regiment, with other troops, under Buford and Gregg, operated along the Rappahannock, and frequently skirmished with the enemy. In the Gettysburg campaign, the division of which the Seventeenth was a part was under the command of Gen. Buford, and at the commencement of the battle held the enemy at bay during four hours, till the arrival of the First Corps. It was afterward efficient in preventing the attacks of flanking columns of the enemy. In the fall campaign of 1863 the Seventeenth, with the other cavalry, was very active and efficient in thwarting the movements of the wily rebel chief.

During the winter of 1863-64 the regiment was engaged in picket duty, and in February of that year a detachment went, under Capt. Spera, with Gen. Kilpatrick in his raid on Richmond.

In the brilliant cavalry operations under Gen. Sheridan during the summer and autumn of 1864 the Seventeenth bore an active part, and was often in action, but space will not permit a detailed mention of the engagements in which it participated. During a charge at Meadow Bridge, on the 12th of May, Lieut. Joseph E. Shultz, of Company C, was shot through the heart. Capt. Spera, of the same company, who had on many occasions shown himself a brave and efficient officer, was, on the 10th of August, 1864, promoted to the office of major. He had the honor to accompany Gen. Sheridan, on his famous "ride," as the following account will show: ". . . Gen. Sheridan then ordered Maj. Spera to take twenty men, with the best horses, from the escort and follow him, as he was going to move lively to the front, the remainder of the escort being directed to report to Gen. Forsythe, and Cols. Thorn and Alexander to do what they could in stemming the tide of fugitives. On the way up the pike towards Newtown the crowds of men and wagons thickened until the multitude became almost a jam, so much so that it was impossible to keep the pike, and Gen. Sheridan struck off to the left of the road, dashing through fields and over fences and ditches. He spoke to few, occasionally crying out, 'Face the other way, boys!' A chaplain was met mounted on a mule, who seemed importunate to speak with the general, and beckoned him to stop, but the general told him to face about and ride along if he had anything to say. But the mule-mounted chaplain was soon left behind with his story untold. On arriving upon the field the general struck to the right of the road, where were Gens. Wright, Getty, and members of his own staff, one of whom remarked, 'General, I suppose Jubal Early intends driving you out of the valley.' 'What!' exclaimed Sheridan, 'drive me out of the valley! Three corps of infantry and all my cavalry? I'll lick him before night.' With a lion heart he set to work disposing his forces, and by nightfall he had redeemed his promise."

In the winter of 1864-65 the regiment had its quarters near Winchester, and was employed in picket and scout duty. On the 24th of February Gen. Sheridan commenced the campaign of 1865, which terminated with the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox. During this campaign the Seventeenth sustained, to the last, its well-earned reputation. Gen. Devin said in his farewell order to the Seventeenth, "In five successive campaigns, and in over threescore engagements, you have nobly sustained your part. Of the many gallant regiments from your State none has a brighter record, none has more freely shed its blood on every battle-field from Gettysburg to Appomattox."

One Hundred and Seventy-eighth Regiment.—

This, which was a nine months' regiment, had four companies—B, E, D, and K—from Lancaster County, and its lieutenant-colonel, John Wimar, of this county, had served in the Seventy-seventh Regiment.

On the 5th of December, 1862, the regiment went from its rendezvous at Camp Curtin to Washington, and on the 10th to Newport News via Fortress Monroe. It soon afterward went to Yorktown, and on the 29th of December entered on garrison duty and drill within the fortifications.

In April, 1863, the regiment went to the relief of the garrison at Fort Magruder, near Williamsburg, which had been attacked by the enemy under Gen. Wise. Some skirmishing took place on this occasion, but no severe fighting.

In June the regiment formed a part of a force that went up the Peninsula on a reconnoissance, in which a large quantity of rebel supplies were destroyed and some herds of cattle were captured. Following this it continued to do picket duty till the latter part of the month, when it returned, and with other forces under Gen. Dix, made a demonstration towards Richmond to divert the enemy in favor of the Union army at Gettysburg. In this expedition the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth was, on the 2d of July, engaged in a skirmish with the enemy near Bottom's Bridge, on the Chickahominy, but suffered only slight casualties. It did picket duty till the 6th of July, when it returned to Williamsburg, and soon afterwards to Washington, then to Harrisburg, where it was mustered out on the 27th.

The following lists embrace officers and enlisted men from Lancaster County who served in this regiment:

One Hundred and Seventy-ninth Regiment.—

This regiment, in which were a number of men from Lancaster County, was organized on the 8th of December, 1862. It was soon sent, via Fortress Monroe, to Yorktown, where it was a part of the garrison of the fort, and became proficient in drill. It formed a part of the expedition towards Richmond under Gen. Dix, in June, 1863, and it was said of it by its brigade commander that it was "prompt and ready, and always well in hand," and that it "never had a straggler," and that it was "always closed and promptly in its place, while other regiments were scattered for miles along the road."

The regiment unanimously tendered its services to the Governor for the defense of the State after its term of enlistment had expired. The offer was accepted; but Gen. Lee having been driven from the State, its services were not required, and it was mustered out July 27, 1863. Following is the roll of Company F of this regiment:

Captains.

John R. Bricker, Nov. 18, 1862; must. out with company July 27, 1863.
Hiram Dinsinger, 1st Lieut., Nov. 18, 1862; must. out with company July 27, 1863.
Benjamin Wissler, 2d Lieut., Nov. 18, 1862; must. out with company July 27, 1863.

One Hundred and Eighty-second Regiment (Twenty-first Cavalry).—This regiment, of which Companies C and G were from Lancaster County, was recruited in July and August of 1863, on a call for cavalry for six months' service. Seven of the companies were at first detailed for duty in different parts of this State, and the others were sent to the Department of the Shenandoah.

In January, 1863, the regiment was concentrated at Chambersburg for reorganization as a three years' regiment, and the places of those who did not re-enlist were filled by recruits. In May it went to Washington, and was dismounted and sent forward as infantry. It reached the front at Cold Harbor, where, on the 2d of June, it was in action. It was again engaged with the enemy the next day, and Capt. Phillips, of Company G, was wounded. On the 18th of June, in front of Petersburg, it was heavily engaged, and lost eleven killed and seventy-nine wounded. It was next engaged, on the 22d of June, at Jerusalem Plank-Road, losing two killed and three wounded. It was under fire at the time of the explosion of the Petersburg mine, and on the 18th of August it assisted in the destruction of the Weldon Railroad, and in the action on that occasion had one man killed and twenty-seven wounded. It was again in action at Poplar Spring Church, on the 30th of September, and lost sixteen killed and wounded.

The regiment was mounted and equipped as cavalry on the 5th of October, and was brigaded in Gen. Gregg's division. On the 27th of the same month it was engaged at Boydton Plank-Road, where it lost three wounded, and among the latter Capt. McMellen, of Company C. On the 10th of December, while on the Bellefield raid, it was again engaged, with a small loss.

During the winter of 1864-65 the regiment was recruited to the maximum strength, and in March, 1865, entered on the final campaign, in which it had an active part. After the surrender it was engaged for a time in provost duty, and on the 8th of July was mustered out of the service. During its term it had four officers killed, fourteen wounded, and four captured. One hundred and forty-seven men were killed and two hundred and fifty-three wounded.

CHAPTER XVII.

LANCASTER COUNTY IN THE WAR OF THE REBEL-LION—(Continued).

The One Hundred and Ninety-fifth and One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Regiments.

One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Regiment.—This, which was first recruited in Lancaster County as a hundred days' regiment, was organized on the 24th of July, 1864, with Joseph W. Fisher, colonel; William L. Bear, lieutenant-colonel; and Oliver C. James, major. As soon as it was organized it went to Baltimore, and thence to Monocacy Junction, where it remained two months, engaged in guard duty and drill. On the 1st of October it went to Berkeley County, West Va., and did guard duty along the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad till the expiration of its term of service.

Three hundred of the men re-enlisted for one year, and these were organized in three companies, and remained on duty, under command of Capt. Henry D. Markley. On the 16th of March these were joined by seven other companies that had been recruited in Lancaster County by Col. Fisher, and the One Hundred and Ninety-fifth was reorganized. It soon afterwards went to Charlestown, and thence, on the 1st of April, to guard some fords on the Shenandoah River for a short time. It then went to Stevenson's Station, and on the 22d of April to Berryville, where it remained till the 6th of June engaged in provost duty. It was then sent to Staunton, and the three companies that had first re-enlisted were mustered out. On the 1st of August the balance of the regiment arrived at Washington, where it guarded government property till Jan. 31, 1866, when it was mustered out.

One Hundred and Ninety-seventh Regiment.—

This was a one hundred days' regiment, and had two companies, C and E, recruited in Lancaster County. It was organized July 22, 1864, and soon afterward went to Camp Bradford, near Baltimore. Two weeks later it was ordered to Rock Island, Ill., for the purpose of guarding a camp of prisoners of war. It continued to discharge this duty till the close of its term of service, when it returned to Philadelphia, and was mustered out Nov. 11, 1864.

Adj. Thomas Dinan was from Lancaster County.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Two Hundred and Third, Two Hundred and Seventh, Two Hundred and Fourteenth, and Two Hundred and Fifteenth Regiments—Independent Battery 1—Third United States Colored Regiment—Second Regiment Militia of 1862—Forty-Seventh Regiment Militia of 1863—Fiftieth Regiment Emergency Troops of 1863—Lancaster County Soldiers in other Regiments.

Two Hundred and Third Regiment.—This was recruited as a regiment of sharpshooters, but it never served as such. It was organized in September, 1864, for one year's service, and a portion of the men (Company A and Company K) were from Lancaster County. It arrived before Petersburg on the 27th of September, and at once entered on the active duties of the campaign in progress there, like a veteran regiment.

In December it went to Fortress Monroe, where it embarked with other troops for Fort Fisher. In the assault on that fort in January, 1865, the Two Hundred and Third covered itself with glory, fighting its way, hand to hand, through seventeen traverses, and losing forty-six killed and one hundred and forty-five wounded. In February, 1865, it participated in the advance on Wilmington and the capture of that place. In this it was in action, but its loss was small.

Early in March it went forward and effected a junction with Gen. Sherman's army. Up to the time of Gen. Johnston's surrender it was moving with the army, out was not seriously engaged. It afterward did provost duty at Raleigh till June 22, 1865, when it was mustered out of the service.

Two Hundred and Seventh Regiment.—Parts of Companies B, E, and G in this regiment were recruited in Lancaster County. The regiment was organized, for one year, on the 8th of September, 1864, and on the 12th went forward to the front with the Army of the James. It first did picket duty, but on the 16th of November it was briskly engaged. In February, 1865, it joined in the movement to Hatcher's Run, but was not in action there. It was in action on the 25th of March at Fort Steadman, and again on the 2d of April at Jerusalem Plank-Road.

Here it did excellent service, and was especially commended for its gallantry. Its loss in this battle was thirty-seven killed, one hundred and forty wounded, and eight missing, a total of one hundred and eighty-five.

It was afterwards engaged in picket and guard duty, and on the 13th of May, 1865, it was mustered out of service.

Two Hundred and Fourteenth Regiment.—This was recruited in part in the county of Lancaster, and was organized, for one year, in March, 1865. It was employed in guard and provost duty in the Shenandoah Valley till July, after which it did garrison duty in Washington. A detachment went to Annapolis in November. The regiment was mustered out of service at Washington, March 21, 1866.

Two Hundred and Fifteenth Regiment.—This, which was a one year's regiment, and had men from Lancaster County, was organized in April, 1865. Detachments were posted in different parts of Pennsylvania, and the eastern part of Maryland.

From early in June till the time of its muster out, July 31st, it did garrison duty and guarded rebel prisoners at Fort Delaware.

Independent Battery I.<sup>1</sup>—This battery was composed of men from the city and county of Lancaster, except about twenty. It was organized for a service of six months, at Harrisburg, on the 30th of June, 1863. It remained in Harrisburg during the invasion of Pennsylvania, and while the riots in New York were in progress it went to Philadelphia. It was transferred to West Virginia in November, and remained there till January, 1864, when it returned to Harrisburg, and on the 7th of that month was mustered out. Many of the men at once re-enlisted for three years, and on the 7th it was mustered in. It was quickly recruited to the maximum, and armed with three-inch rifled guns. It went within the defenses of Washington, where it remained till the end of the war. It was mustered out of service on the 23d of June, 1865.

Third United States Colored Regiment.—About fifty men, mostly in Company B of this regiment, were recruited in Lancaster County. The regiment was organized in August, 1863, and soon afterwards proceeded to Morris Island, while the siege of Fort Wagner was in progress. It at once went on duty in the trenches, and shared in the duties of the siege till the capture of the fort. It went to Florida early in 1864, and at Jacksonville was drilled as a heavy artillery regiment, and did garrison duty in the forts near that place. During the summer many scouting-parties were sent out to destroy rebel property and bring in contrabands, as the slaves were called, and in all these raids not a man was lost as a prisoner, though the detachments were often driven by superior numbers. Probably a well-grounded apprehension of inhuman treatment by their captors rendered the men more vigilant to avoid surprises, and more desperate when fighting.

After the surrender of the rebel armies the regiment continued on duty at various points in Florida till October, 1865, when it came back to Pennsylvania, and on the 30th of that month it was mustered out of the service at Philadelphia.

Second Regiment Militia of 1862.<sup>1</sup>—This regiment was organized in Harrisburg, Sept. 13, 1862. It went at once to Chambersburg, where it remained till the 18th of September. It then moved to Hagerstown, and thence three miles on the Williamsport road, where it formed in line of battle. It remained twenty-four hours, and then, moving a mile farther, it went into camp, but the same evening it started for Greencastle, where it took cars for Harrisburg, at which place it was mustered out on the 25th of September, 1862.

Forty-seventh Regiment Militia of 1863.—It was late in June, 1863. The State Normal School at Millersville was in session with several hundred students, many of whom were young men. Its principal was James P. Wickersham. Daily, almost hourly, reports reached the school of the invasion of Pennsylvania by the rebel army under Lee. It was said the rebels had crossed the Potomac, were in Pennsylvania, had taken possession of Chambersburg, had attacked Carlisle, were threatening Harrisburg, etc. What added greatly to the excitement was the multitudes of fugitives that thronged every highway leading from the counties west of the Susquehanna, with their property of all kinds. Patriotic young men could not be forced to study under such circumstances, and, hoping that the threatened invasion would turn out to be merely a raid, the principal armed a hundred of the students, organized them into a company, and marched with them, as captain, to Wrightsville, to assist in guarding the Columbia bridge, which was considered in danger. After performing guard duty for about a week, the company was relieved by the Seventy-seventh Emergency Regiment, under the command of Col. Jacob G. Frick, and marched back to Millersville.

A brigade of Early's troops reached the neighborhood of Wrightsville on the afternoon of the 28th, two days after the Normal School boys had left, attacked Col. Frick, drove him across the river, and gave him scarcely time to fire the long bridge that spanned the Susquehanna, to prevent being followed. Meantime Governor Curtin had issued a proclamation, "declaring that the enemy in force was advancing upon the border, and calling for sixty thousand men to be mustered into the service of the State for ninety days, but to remain so long as the safety and honor of the commonwealth might require."

The smoke of the burning bridge could easily be seen at Millersville, some ten miles away, rising in great black clouds. Sunday as it was, the school was hastily convened and closed for the term. The principal announced his purpose to become a soldier at once under the Governor's call, and stated that he was willing to take command of all who would follow him. The next day he advertised the formation of the "People's Regiment," sent the companies as rapidly as they were organized to Camp Curtin, went to Harrisburg himself on the 2d of July, while the roar of the cannon of the great fight at Gettysburg could be heard in the distance, was sworn into the service as captain on the Fourth of July, and on the 9th had the regiment mustered in and was soon ready to march. He was ordered to Shippensburg; became a part of Gen. Whipple's command at Chambersburg; halted at Greencastle to prepare for the expected battle with Lee, and reached Hagerstown and the Potomac just in time to see the last of the rebel forces safe on the other side and to capture a few stragglers found hid in the barns and farm-houses of the neighborhood.

The Forty-seventh Regiment encamped for several weeks near Hagerstown, was then sent to Reading, thence to the mining regions of Schuylkill County, where a collision with disaffected parties seemed at one time imminent but was averted without violence. The regiment was discharged at Reading, August 14th.

Fiftieth Regiment Emergency Troops of 1863.

—To meet the emergency which arose in the summer of 1863, Mr. Emlen Franklin, by request of the commander of the Department of the Susquehanna, organized companies and disposed them along the line of the river in this county. After the battle of Gettysburg, these companies were assembled at Harrisburg, and organized into the Fiftieth Regiment, with Mr. Franklin as colonel.

From Harrisburg it went to Carlisle and Chambersburg. After a short time it marched to Hagerstown, and then to Williamsport, and was stationed at Dam No. 5, about five miles above that place, where it did picket duty till about the middle of July, when it returned to Harrisburg and was discharged. After its arrival at Chambersburg, Lieut.-Col. Thaddeus Stevens, Jr., was in command of the regiment, Col. Franklin having been placed in command of the brigade to which it belonged.

Rolls of the Fiftieth Regiment are as follows:

FIELD AND STAFF OFFICERS.

Colonel, Emlen Franklin; Lieutenant-Colonel, Thaddeus Stevens, Jr.; Major, James F. Ricksecker; Adjutant, David K. Springer; Quartermaster, Lewis Haldy; Surgeon, John F. ## CHAPTER XIX.

COUNTY BUILDINGS AND LANDS.

Court-Houses—County Prisons—House of Employment and Poor Farm.

THE first court-house of the county of Lancaster was the tavern of John Postlethwait, located in the township of Conestoga, six or seven miles south-westerly from the site of the present city of Lancaster. This point, somewhat widely known at that time as "Postlethwait's," being then very near the centre of population of the county, was regarded by many as being, on that account, the most eligible location for the seat of justice. There were also two other competing points, viz., Gibson's tavern (where the town of Lancaster was soon after laid out), and Wright's Ferry (now Columbia), which was the place of residence of Robert Barber, the first sheriff, and several other influential citizens of the county; but at first, Postlethwait's was regarded with most favor, and in 1729 (the year of the erection of the county) the sum of three hundred pounds in bills of credit was loaned by the province to the commissioners of Lancaster County, and an additional sum of equal amount was loaned in 1730, for the building of a court-house and prison at Postlethwait's, though the funds thus obtained were never applied to the erection of county buildings at that place.

The first session at Postlethwait's (as also the first held in the county) convened on the 9th of June, 1729. Present, John Wright, Esq., and his associate justices (the magistrates residing within the boundaries of the new county of Lancaster), who proceeded to the transaction of public business, among which was the defining of the boundaries of the townships, and the ordering of the erection of a prison at Wright's Ferry, all of which was confirmed by the newly-organized Court of Quarter Sessions at its August term (1729), which was held at Postlethwait's, as was also the November term in the same year. On the 13th of January, 1729-30, John Davis, Andrew Carnish, and George Stewart, county commissioners, in session with Patrick Campbell, Joshua Lowe, Richard Hough, John Denver, John Colwell, and Israel Robinson, assessors, chose John Postlethwait treasurer of the county, and afterwards fixed

"y<sup>e</sup> sum of sixpence per pound for receiving, and sixpence per pound for paying out, as a reward for him, y<sup>e</sup> said Treasure, for executing y<sup>e</sup> s<sup>d</sup> office, as y<sup>e</sup> law directs." And on the 4th of February following the commissioners and assessors allowed to John Postlethwait the sum of £11 19s. 10d. for attendance and provisions for the commissioners engaged in running the division line between Lancaster and Chester Counties, as also the sum of "seven pounds to be pay'd him out of y<sup>e</sup> next assessment, being y<sup>e</sup> full allowance for building a court-house for y<sup>e</sup> County Service until such time as another shall be Built by y<sup>e</sup> Commissioners appointed for that use." No one at the present day knows precisely what was the work done by Postlethwait, for which he received this allowance of seven pounds, whether it was an addition built to his tavern-house to accommodate the courts temporarily, or whether it was a separate log building erected for that purpose. It is said that foundations for a permanent court-house of considerable size were commenced at Postlethwait's, while it was probable that the county-seat would be established there, but of course abandoned, when another point was definitely determined on. And it is also stated that relics of these old foundations are still visible.

The commissioners appointed to locate and establish the seat of justice of the new county reported (Feb. 19, 1730) to the Governor and Council in favor of the place which soon after became the town of Lancaster, and which was established as the county-seat by the acceptance and adoption of their report on the 1st of May next following. The spot selected for the erection of a court-house was on the Centre Square, at the intersection of King and Queen Streets, and on the 15th of May, 1730, the land was deeded by Andrew Hamilton and wife to the commissioners, John Wright, Caleb Pierce, Thomas Edwards, and James Mitchell, in trust, for the use of the people of Lancaster County.

The court continued to be held at Postlethwait's through the February, May, and August terms of 1730. The first session at the new county-seat was that of November following, when, as is shown by the record, the Court of Quarter Sessions was held "at Lancaster," though there is nothing to show at what place or building in the town it convened. It is evident, however, that the courts, which from that time continued to meet regularly at Lancaster, were held in a tavern or other building rented for their use, for it is certain that the first court-house on the Centre Square was not commenced immediately, and was not completed until several years after the courts first held their sessions in the town. The first entry found in any of the records having reference to the building of the court-house at the county-seat is under date of Nov. 3, 1737, as follows: "The commissioners mett & Considered about getting y<sup>e</sup> Court House finished, and Ordered y<sup>e</sup> Clerk to give Notice to Cornelius Verholts to attend at Lancaster on y<sup>e</sup> 11th of this instant to shew why he doeth not go on with s<sup>d</sup> Work." And November 11th "The Comm<sup>r</sup>s mett, Butt Cornelius Verholts did not attend; they therefore Agreed with Samuel Bethell for Bricks to pave y<sup>e</sup> floor of y<sup>e</sup> Court House, and also to gett Scaffold powles for the Carpenter to shingle y<sup>e</sup> pent houses of y<sup>e</sup> Court House; and hearing that Samuel Blunston, esq., designed to be at Lancaster To-morrow Morning, They were desirous to have his advice about the finishing of the Bar. They therefore adjourned to Tomorrow morning." November 12th "The Com<sup>r</sup>s met. Samuel Blunston, Esqr., was in towne, who assisted in Advice, and it was Resolved that y<sup>e</sup> bench that now is, & barr, should be taken Downe & altered, & two Turned Posts should be affixed under the Girder, which is to be done before y<sup>e</sup> floore be paved there. They sent to Cornelius Verholts, the Carpenter, immediately to go on with his part of y<sup>e</sup> Work."

But notwithstanding these efforts of the board to push the work with vigor, it appears that no very rapid progress was made, and that a further period of nearly eighteen months elapsed before the building was completed, for there is found in the commissioners' records an entry dated Feb. 6, 1739, showing that the commissioners and assessors "Agreed with Theo. Plutus Hartman to Glaze y<sup>e</sup> Court House windows for three Pounds ten Shillings, they finding Glass and lead and lines, he to find all y<sup>e</sup> other things wanted to finish y<sup>e</sup> same before y<sup>e</sup> first day of May." There is little doubt that the glazing was done, and the building completed at about the date last named, as on the 7th of the same month the commissioners "Agreed with John Young, of Lancaster, to take care of y<sup>e</sup> Court House, that is, to open ye Windows on each day of y<sup>e</sup> Courts and Elections, and to shut them at nights during y<sup>e</sup> time of Courts and Elections, and to keep y<sup>e</sup> Court House clean for y<sup>e</sup> term of one year from this time," his remuneration for this service to be two pounds ten shillings.

lands. Between 1750 and 1754 there arose a great dissatisfaction among the people on account of the fact that a dancing school was permitted to be taught in the court-house. An entry in the commissioners' records, dated November 7th of the latter year, sets forth that "Whereas there has been a long debate subsisting for some time between y<sup>e</sup> Justices and y<sup>e</sup> Commissioners about y<sup>e</sup> property of y<sup>e</sup> key of y<sup>e</sup> Court House, under whose charge y<sup>e</sup> same should depend, arising from some of ye magistrates consentably permitting a Dancing School to be kept therein, to y<sup>e</sup> great Offence of y<sup>e</sup> sober part of y<sup>e</sup> Inhabitants of this County, as well as to y<sup>e</sup> damage of y<sup>e</sup> said House, therefore y<sup>e</sup> Magistrates this day complied that y<sup>e</sup> care of y<sup>e</sup> Court House be made y<sup>e</sup> care and y<sup>e</sup> inspection of y<sup>e</sup> Commissioners of y<sup>e</sup> County; and accordingly Emanuel Carpenter, Esq., one of y<sup>e</sup> Magistrates appeared before them and reported y<sup>e</sup> same, and allowed that y<sup>e</sup> key thereof be delivered to y<sup>e</sup> Care and possession of y<sup>e</sup> Commissioners."

Not long after the expulsion of the dancers from the court-house, it was utilized as a place of storage for ammunition intended for use in the defense of this region of country against the French and Indian incursions which continued for several years after Gen. Braddock's defeat on the Monongahela. On the 15th of June, 1757, the commissioners resolved, "That a motion be made to y<sup>e</sup> Magistrates of this County, that due care be taken to preserve His Majesty's Magazine of Powder lodged in y<sup>e</sup> Court House by order of John Stanwix, esq., cornet of y<sup>e</sup> first Battalion of y<sup>e</sup> Royal Americans, from any traitorous designs or attempts of our Enemies, or other accidents."

The old court-house, located in the centre of the square, at the intersection of King and Queen Streets, in the borough of Lancaster, was a two-storied brick building, which could neither be called large nor commodious. The court-room (paved with brick in place of a floor, and having the royal arms of England<sup>1</sup> emblazoned above the judge's chair) was below, and there were three or four rooms in the second story. Surmounting its roof was a small steeple or belfry, in which was a bell and also a clock, which had two dials, one facing north and the other south, up and down Queen Street. The bell was placed on the building in 1748 or 1749. On the 4th of November, in the former year, the commissioners "agreed, by approbation of y<sup>e</sup> Court and Grand Jury, to procure a Bell for y<sup>e</sup> Court House." A few years prior to this the commissioners had ordered for the court-house a bell "not exceeding, but near two Hundred Weight." The order was probably rescinded for economical reasons. The clock was put upon the court-house about the year 1756, but there is nothing found to show the precise date of its purchase. On the 24th of May, 1757, a bill of £1 15s. was allowed to Abraham Le Roy, clockmaker, and on the 3d of November, in the same year, £2 was allowed to the same person for taking care of the clock. After that time payments of £2 each were made semi-annually to Le Roy for the same service, until and including the year 1763. Then comes an entry, dated March 25, 1764, as follows: "Commissioners met according to adjournment. Abraham Le Roy, Clockmaker, Deceased, being y<sup>e</sup> Late person that took care of y<sup>e</sup> County Clock, and it now being necessary to appoint another, they have accordingly appointed and agreed with Rudy Stoner, Clockmaker, to take y<sup>e</sup> care necessary of s<sup>d</sup> Clock, at £4 yearly, to be paid half-yearly from this date." How long Stoner continued to perform the duty is not shown, but it is found that George Huff had charge of the clock in 1770, and that in December of the following year John Eberman engaged to take charge of it at £3 per year. In 1782 the same John Eberman was allowed the sum of £20 for keeping the court-house clock in order five years, and this is the last that is found in reference to the matter.

Finally, after a period of forty-five years' service, the old court-house was destroyed by fire, on the 9th of June,<sup>1</sup> 1784. The following letter from John Hubley, of Lancaster, to President John Dickinson, at Philadelphia, gives some of the particulars of the disaster, viz. :

"LANCASTER, June 11th, 1784.

"HONORED SIR,—It is likely before now you have heard that the Court House in this place has been entirely consumed by fire. I received this disagreeable account on my way to Lancaster from your City, and from anything that I can collect here I find that all is guess-work how this affair happened.

"The house underwent some repairs this Summer, and the plasterers were at work; a quantity of Lime was put up in the inside for that purpose to secure it from the weather. Some suppose the lime set it on fire, others suppose that a Clock maker, who was conducting the weights of the Clock in a different channel from that formerly run in, used some fire, and was negligent; and many conjecture that it was wickedly set fire to by some unknown villain, so that the affair remains as yet in the dark. Happily it is for this place that the mischief has ended with the loss of the Court House only, as a strong southwest wind was blowing, and carried the fire in great quantities over a great part of the north-east part of the town; and although the Calvinist Meeting House, which stands at a considerable distance from the Court House, and several other buildings took fire, yet it was happily extinguished without much damage. I thought that this affair might be confusedly reported in the City, therefore I have given you such information as I could collect in the few hours since I have arrived here.

"I am, Sir, with the utmost respect,

"Your very humble serv<sup>t</sup>,

"JOHN HUBLEY."

Caleb Cope, the contractor for the plastering, had been slaking lime in the building, which led some persons to believe that the fire originated from that cause. The fire was first discovered by a man named Wien, and was then in the cupola. This fact was regarded by some as proof that it was the work of an incendiary, while others, from the same circumstance, were inclined to lay the blame on the presumed carelessness of John Eberman, who was then making some repairs on the clock in the tower. Beyond these mere conjectures nothing was ever known of the origin of the fire.

In some accounts of the burning of the court-house the disaster is said to have occurred in 1781. This statement is clearly enough disproved by John Hubley's letter, already given, but there is additional proof found in the borough records of Lancaster. In the first book of minutes, page 66, occurs the following: "At an Election held and taken at the Court House in the Borough of Lancaster on the 15th day of September, 1781, by Peter Bollinger, High Constable of the year preceding," etc. Again (page 69), "At an Election held and taken in the Court House in the Borough of Lancaster on the 16th day of September (the 15th being on Sunday), 1782, by Peter Bollinger," etc. And again (page 71), "At an Election held and taken at the Court House in the Borough of Lancaster on the 15th Sept., 1783, by Peter Bollinger," etc. For the years 1784 and 1785 (pages 75 and 77 respectively), the records of the September elections state plainly that they were both "held and taken at the House of Mr. Frederick Hubley, in the Borough of Lancaster;" but in the next year there is found (page 80) the entry, "At an Election held and taken at the Court House in the Borough of Lancaster, on the 15th day of September, 1786, by Henry Stouffer, High Constable," etc. And it is found that from that time the elections continued to be held yearly at the court-house during the remainder of the existence of Lancaster as a borough. These entries show clearly that the old court-house was in existence and in use as a place of holding borough elections during the years 1781-83, and (inferentially) that in 1784 and 1785, the old court-house being destroyed, the elections were held at Hubley's until the completion of the new one.

Immediately after the destruction of the old court-house preparations were commenced for the erection of a new one on the same site. The work was commenced in the fall of 1784, and, being pushed on with considerable energy, the building was sufficiently far advanced to allow the borough election to be held in it on the 15th of September, 1786, but it was not completed so as to be occupied by the court until February, 1787.<sup>2</sup> The total cost of the building was £5909 8s. 10d. From an examination of the bills allowed for its erection it appears that the bricks were furnished by Lewis Peters and G. Lindenberger; the cut stone by Jonas Metzger; rough stone by Robert Coleman and Christian Hershey; lumber by George Moore, Michael Herman, Martin Mayer, Edward Hand, Jacob Rohrer, John Behm, and Adam Reigart; lime by John Mayer, John Meister, John Stouffer, Abraham Landis, George Lutman, and Andrew Kauffman; iron and iron-work by Paul Zant-zinger, Thomas Turner, and Samuel Boyd; copper-work and tin-work by Frederick Steinman. The mason-work was done by George Lutman; the carpenter-work by Frederick Mann; the plastering by Caleb Cope; and the painting and glazing by Philip Thomas. The bell, which was placed in the tower, cut stone, and the lintels and window-sills were of the same material. From the centre of the shingled roof rose a steeple or cupola, in which hung the bell before referred to, and on this the hours were struck by the hammer of the Eberman clock, which had four dials, fronting north, south, east, and west, like the gables of the building.

<sup>1</sup> This date, June 9th, is given upon the recollection of a gentleman of this county, who saw it a few years ago in an affidavit made by an eye-witness of the burning. That affidavit, which then came to light among some ancient papers in the court-house, has since been mislaid, and cannot now be found. The correctness of the date given, however, seems to be confirmed by John Hubley's letter, dated June 11th, which is given in the text.

<sup>2</sup> From the destruction of the old court-house in June, 1784, to the occupation of the new one in February, 1787, the courts were held at the house of Frederick Hubley, whose last bill for firewood, candles, and use of room for the court at an adjourned session held at his house Dec. 7, 1786, was £9 15s. 8d. Previously his bills had amounted to from £12 to £15 for each term.

"There were doors in the centre of each front of the building, but the principal entrance to the court-room, which occupied the entire lower story, was by the South Queen Street front. The door on the North Queen Street front was never opened, that end of the court-room being occupied by the judges' bench. The west door was seldom opened, except was purchased for £250. The court-house clock was made by John Eberman, and cost £550, that being the valuation placed upon it by three persons agreed upon for the purpose, viz., B. Rittenhouse, Samuel Meily, and Jacob Fisher, who were paid £6 7s. 6d. for the service. These sums, which seem to be large for the items referred to, were probably paid in depreciated currency.

This second court-house, which occupied the Centre Square at Lancaster, was a two-storied structure, having four faces and four gables, facing respectively towards North Queen, East King, South Queen, and West King Streets, that facing southward being then considered its main front. The building was of brick, but its eight corners were laid up of blocks of when there was a great crowd in attendance, and the east door was used principally by the attorneys and court officers, and by persons having business in the rooms in the second story of the building. At the north end of the court-room (which, as before stated, occupied the entire lower story of the building) was the judges' bench, placed on a platform raised some two or three feet above the floor. The bench was reached by a flight of steps placed at the east and west ends of the platform. In front of the bench was a convenient desk for the use of the judges. At the west end of the desk was the witness-stand, a little crib raised a step or two above the floor, just large enough for one man to get into, and close beside it was the seat of the crier. The 'bar' occupied a semi-circular space of some twenty feet in diameter, immediately in front of the bench. It was raised one step above the court-room floor, and inclosed by a high and strong railing. On the east side of the inclosure were placed seats for the grand jury, and on the west seats for the petit jury. In front of the juries were two long tables, and about two dozen chairs for the use of the lawyers. Access to the bar was had through a wicket at the south end of the inclosure, and here were placed two tipstaves with their official 'poles,' to keep order and prevent the intrusion of improper persons. Inside the bar, to the west of this wicket, was the prisoners' dock, inclosed by an additional railing.

"On the east and west sides of the bar were a few rows of benches, raised one above the other, and facing inward, for the accommodation of jurors and witnesses awaiting their turn to be called. The southern half of the court-room was for the public generally, and was supplied with long rows of benches rising one above the other, and facing the bench and bar. The court-room was heated by two Franklin stoves (placed respectively in fireplaces in the northeast and northwest corners of the room) and two cannon stoves, placed in the open space outside the bar. The latter superseded two ten-plate stoves, which heated the room until wood was forced to give way as fuel to the more convenient though less agreeable anthracite. The walls of the court-room were quite plain, but were relieved by a very heavy moulding running around the ceiling, while at equal distances from the east and west doors arose two fluted columns, to support the weight of the heavy girder that extended from the east to the west wall. Above the judges' bench was a very well-executed painting of the coat of arms of Pennsylvania.

"The second story of the court-house was divided into three rooms, access to which was had by a circular stairway, built just inside the east entrance to the main court-room. Ascending this stairway, a landing was reached opening into the three rooms, the larger of which occupied the western half of the building, and was used for holding District and Orphans' Courts. The other two rooms occupied the eastern half of the building, and were used for jury-rooms, meetings of City Councils, school board, etc. These rooms were heated by wood fires in old-fashioned fireplaces built in the corners of them. Such was the appearance of the old court-house at the time, and for many years before it was torn down, though . . . in times long gone by it underwent numerous alterations. When, about the beginning of the present century, Lancaster was made the State capital, an inclosed wooden stairway, leading to the second story, was built outside the south wall of the court-house, and remained there for many years. It was probably put up for the greater convenience of the senators, who deliberated in the upper room, and who did not wish to enter the lower room, where the House held its sessions."

The old court-house of 1787 became known as the "State-House," for the reason that it was used by the two houses of the Legislature while Lancaster was the State capital, and the appellation clung to it during the remainder of its existence. About the year 1850 the opinion began to be generally expressed that the old court-house was no longer sufficient for the requirements of the county, and that there should be built a new one of sufficient size not only to afford ample accommodations for the courts, but to contain all the offices and records of the county. This sentiment being emphasized in official presentments by successive grand juries, the county commissioners took action, Jan. 12, 1852, as follows: "Whereas, there have been two successive grand-jury reports recommending the building of a new court-house; and whereas, the board are of opinion that the funds of the county are such as authorize the erection of a court-house; and whereas, they are of opinion, and believe, that the majority of the people of the county are of the same opinion that a new court-house is necessary: therefore, be it resolved, that, with the approval of the Quarter Sessions, this board deem it expedient and proper to erect a new court-house, at such time and place as may hereafter be determined upon."

The Court of Quarter Sessions readily and fully approved the opinion and action of the commissioners, and on the 9th of February, 1852, the board viewed the different sites recommended for the proposed court-house, but not agreeing, adjourned without further action in the matter. On the 13th they resolved to purchase land belonging to David Longenecker, I. N. Lightner, and James Evans, at the northwest corner of East King and Duke Streets, as a site, "provided the same can be purchased for fifteen thousand dollars, clear of all incumbrances." But the lots could not be obtained at the price named, and thereupon several other lots of land proposed as sites were examined, and the question of the purchase of some one of them was considered by the board at several meetings. Successive ballotings were had, protests entered and afterwards withdrawn, and resolutions adopted and reconsidered until the 8th of March, when the board resolved to purchase the property on East King and Duke Streets,—fronting one hundred and six feet on East King,—provided it could be had at eighteen thousand dollars. This decision was final, and on the 11th of March the commissioners entered into an agreement with David Longenecker, I. N. Lightner, and James Evans for the purchase of the land on East King and Duke Streets at the price named.

Having secured a site for the new court-house, the commissioners proceeded to make preparations for the erection of the building. On the 29th of April they appointed Samuel Sloan architect. May 10th they advertised for proposals for the work of excavating the court-house cellar. The contract was given to John Barrack. Other contracts were awarded as follows: For brick-work, to William G. Kendrick; for masonry, to Matthias and Peter Brieday; smith-work to William Diller; cast-iron work to William Kirkpatrick; and the carpenter-work to M. & D. Ehrisman, for fifteen thousand nine hundred and eighty-five dollars. James Crawford was appointed superintendent of construction.

The corner-stone was laid on Monday, Aug. 23, 1852, by Samuel Sloan, architect, and James Crawford, superintendent, in presence of the judges of the court, the county commissioners, the members of the Lancaster County bar, and a great concourse of people of the county and city of Lancaster, on which occasion addresses were delivered by David G. Eahleman, Esq., solicitor for the commissioners, and R. Frazer, Esq. From that time the work of construction proceeded steadily and without material interruption. On the 6th of May, 1852, the commissioners appointed M. & D. Ehrisman to superintend the demolition of the old court-house, the board having previously "agreed that all the courts shall be held in Fulton Hall until the court-house is completed, so as to hold court there." May 5, 1853, commissioners "agreed with William Heinitsh that he take down the dials from the old court-house, and that he smalt, or sand, and gild the same." May 23d, "contract made with Jacob Dinckmiller and Samuel Benedict for rough-casting and plastering court-house," and with Jacob Gable for plumbing; also (June 6th) with John Gimpseling for tin roofing. Nov. 28, 1853, Dr. William B. Fahnestock, John G. Fetter, and Joseph Eberman were appointed by the commissioners to inspect the new court-house bell,<sup>1</sup> made by Joseph Benedict & Co., of Philadelphia. Inspection was made by the committee, and their approval reported. The court-house was completed in 1854, at a total cost (including site, furniture, and fixtures) of about one hundred and sixty-six thousand dollars. It was occupied by most of the county officers on the 7th of September. The commissioners' office and records were removed to it on the 18th, and the Court of Quarter Sessions opened its first term in the new building on the 20th of November in that year.

The Lancaster court-house, occupying the ground bounded by East King, Duke, and East Grant Streets, and Court Avenue, is a massive structure of stone and brick, one hundred and sixty-four feet in length, seventy-two feet wide, and two stories high. The basement is of sandstone, the superstructure of brick, covered with a rough-cast coating of mastic. A portico on the southern and another on the northern end of the building, also a pediment on its eastern side, are each supported by six fluted stone columns, with ornamental capitals of the composite order.

<sup>1</sup> The bell taken from the old court-house was sold to John P. Shaum. It was not afterwards used, but being stored in his stable in South Queen Street, was melted in the fire by which that building was destroyed, in the spring of 1883.

The columns stand on buttresses raised to the height of the floor of the second story. From the centre of the roof rises a cupola, which is crowned by a statue of Justice holding the scales. In the cupola is a clock, which has four dials, facing north, south, east, and west. In the south end of the court-house is the main entrance, which is reached by a flight of stone steps (equal in length to the width of the building) rising from the East King Street sidewalk. The lower story is occupied by the several county offices. In the upper story is the court-room, eighty-three feet long, sixty-six feet wide, and twenty-five feet high, handsomely frescoed and decorated. Adjoining this is a large room devoted to the use of the law library. The courts and offices are well accommodated in this building, which, having now been in use for nearly thirty years, seems likely to fill the requirements of the county for half a century more.

County Prisons.—On the 9th of June, 1729, one month after the passage of the act erecting the county of Lancaster, the magistrates residing within the limits of the new county met at John Postlethwait's tavern (in the township of Conestoga, about six miles southwestwardly from the present city of Lancaster) and transacted various business, among which was locating and defining the boundaries of the several original townships of the county and ordering the erection of a county jail, which action was confirmed by the Court of Quarter Sessions at its August term in the same year; the order of court in the matter being recorded as follows: "Whereas, at a meeting of the Magistrates and others at y<sup>e</sup> house of John Postlethwait, in y<sup>e</sup> month of June past, It was agreed that for y<sup>e</sup> present supply of this County y<sup>e</sup> Sheriff should erect a Building sufficient to hold prisoners, and should be allowed toward the defraying the Expense y<sup>e</sup> sum of five pounds publick money, which building is now near built. It is therefore agreed and ordered by this Court, That y<sup>e</sup> Sheriff shall with all expedition finish y<sup>e</sup> s'd Building, which when finished shall henceforth be reputed the Comon Gaol of the County of Lancaster till the publick Prison be built; and with this Order the Sheriff agrees."

On the 4th of November the Court of Quarter Sessions, then sitting at Postlethwait's, made the following order: "At y<sup>e</sup> Request of y<sup>e</sup> Sheriff of y<sup>e</sup> County to this Court, setting forth that he had according to a former order of this Court finished y<sup>e</sup> prison According to Bargain, And that y<sup>e</sup> Court would please to view y<sup>e</sup> same That he may obtain an order on y<sup>e</sup> Treasurer for pay for y<sup>e</sup> same: Ordered, that Tobias Hendricks and Andrew Galbraith view y<sup>e</sup> s'd Prison and make Report to y<sup>e</sup> Commissioners and Assessors accordingly." The view and report were duly made, and on the 4th of February, 1729-30, it was by the commissioners "Ordered, that Robert Barber, esq., be allowed y<sup>e</sup> sum of five pounds, By order of Court, for building a prison for y<sup>e</sup> aforesaid county service, with a further allowance out of y<sup>e</sup> next Assessment,

This first jail of the county of Lancaster, built as above narrated, by the first sheriff of the county, Robert Barber, was a strong log house, located on his land at Wright's Ferry (now Columbia<sup>1</sup>), at which place he firmly believed the seat of justice of the new county would be located. In this hope and belief he was disappointed by the establishment soon afterwards of the county-seat at Lancaster town, where, in May, 1730, three lots of land were purchased (as has already been mentioned), one being for the erection of a court-house, one for a market-house, and one as the site of a new prison; the last named fronting one hundred and forty-eight feet on King, or High Street, and one hundred and twenty feet on Water Street, it being situated in an angle formed by the intersection of these streets, and embracing the original town lots numbered 273 and 274, a location which would now be properly described as on the north side of West King Street, opposite the Stevens House, and extending from Water to Prince Street.

Beyond what has already been stated, nothing is found having certain reference to the old jail built by Barber, or to the duration of its use as a prison, or to the time of the building of a new one on the lot purchased for the purpose at Lancaster. It appears nearly certain, however, that the erection of a prison at Lancaster was not commenced immediately, and that the old log jail at Wright's Ferry was continued in use for several years. After the entry already quoted, dated Jan. 12, 1731, and referring to "ye County Gaol at his [Barber's] house," the records make no allusion to a county prison until the date Aug. 4, 1737, when the commissioners allowed Bill No. 7 to Peter Coughlan "for mending the prison," £1 6s.; and Bill No. 19 to Frederick Strouble for the same service, £1 15s.; and Bill No. 21 to Michael Wise for "stone for the Prison," £0 4s. It is probable that these items refer to the old Barber jail at Wright's Ferry, but there is nothing to show with certainty that such was the case.

That the erection of a jail on the lot in Lancaster was commenced prior to or during the year 1739 is shown with some degree of certainty by an entry found in the commissioners' records, dated December 4th of that year, viz.: "The Commissioners and Assessors met and concluded to have the Logg prison floors Layd, the Lowar with square Loggs and the upper with 2 Jack plank, and a good plank pettishon in the middle; the upper floor to be boulded down with iron Boulds." And on the 7th of February following Robert Barber was ordered to have the "Logg Prison" finished without delay, according to certain directions furnished him. The new jail at Lancaster was probably occupied, and the old one at Wright's Ferry abandoned, during that year (1740). On the 9th of December, 1742, the commissioners agreed with James Webb to dig a well for the house on the prison lot, and to "lay the Dungeon floor with stone eighteen inches deep."

In 1744 (August 11th) the commissioners of Lancaster County, upon the recommendation of the grand jury and court, "took into consideration y<sup>e</sup> erecting of a new prison for y<sup>e</sup> safe and conveyiancy of Debtors, which they conceive highly necessary," but they reached no decision, and referred the question "to be further considered at November court." At that term of court the commissioners held a conference with the justices, which resulted in a determination on the part of the commissioners "to proceed as soon as opportunity will permit to erect a new Prison for y<sup>e</sup> safe of debtors, and wall in y<sup>e</sup> lott of ground on which y<sup>e</sup> publick Gaol of this county is situated."

Feb. 7, 1745, "The Commissioners met according to adjournment and Drew up a plan of y<sup>e</sup> New Prison and laid y<sup>e</sup> same before y<sup>e</sup> Justices, who approved thereof." On the following day the board appointed Samuel Scott (one of the commissioners) and Isaac Sanders (their clerk) "to meet at Lancaster on y<sup>e</sup> 23d day of March next to make such additions and alterations to y<sup>e</sup> Plan of y<sup>e</sup> New Prison as may be necessary to enable them to agree with Workmen for y<sup>e</sup> building thereof." Accordingly, Messrs. Scott and Sanders met at the place and time specified, and made the necessary changes in the plan, and on the 28th of March they "entered into a memorandum of agreement with James Webb to do y<sup>e</sup> Mason work and find his material for y<sup>e</sup> same for doing y<sup>e</sup> Stone work of y<sup>e</sup> New Prison." The contract with Webb, and his bonds, were duly executed on the 10th of May, and on the following day contracts were executed with Robert Trotter and Thomas James for the carpenter-work, and with Jacob Laughman for the iron-work, for the new jail. On the 24th of June the commissioners "viewed y<sup>e</sup> new Prison and found y<sup>e</sup> work properly carried on." They also ordered Jacob Laughman to make additional gratings to the chimneys of the "old prison" (that is, the jail completed in 1740), to secure "y<sup>e</sup> breach through which y<sup>e</sup> Prisoners this day made their escape." On the 30th of June the "commissioners visited y<sup>e</sup> new Prison, and ordered James Webb to take an account of y<sup>e</sup> weight of all such irons that Jacob Laughman should make for y<sup>e</sup> use of y<sup>e</sup> new prison." The cost of the mason-work on the new jail was £241 14s. 10d.; that of the iron-work, £109 4s. 6d.; and of the carpenter-work, £51 10s. 5d.; total, £402 9s. 9d., for which settlement was made in May, 1746; but some small contracts were made for additional work, among which was one made on the 3d of June in that year "with John Rees to pave y° entry and lay y° hearth of y° new Prison; and another on the same day with Nathaniel White "to seil and plaster y° second story of y° new Prison." On the 14th of June the commissioners "went to y° Locksmith's to view y° Lock to be made for y° new Prison, which appeared to be made according to orders." This last entry seems to mark the completion of the jail of 1745-46. "An old house on y° Prison Lott" had been sold to Peter Worrell, and by him removed to make room for the erection of the jail.

Within a year from the completion of this prison it was found insufficient for the requirements of the county, and an addition was made to it. On the 26th of March, 1747, the commissioners resolved to make "an addition to y° new Prison and walling in y° Prison Lott, and digging and walling in a well in y° s'd Lott," and gave the contract for the mason-work to James Webb, and made an agreement "with Thomas Poultney to do y° Carpenter work of y° addition of y° new Prison, and roofing y° wall around y° Prison Lott." On the 3d of June the board "agreed with Jacob Laughman to do y° smith work of y° addition to y° old stone Prison." The cost of Laughman's work is not ascertained, but Poultney's carpenter-work on the addition amounted to £129 4s., and Webb's masonry to £280. An additional expense of £4 was incurred for a pump, ordered (November 4) to be placed "in y° well in y° Prison Lott."

In 1752, in consequence of the escape of some prisoners from the jail, the grand jury declared the building to be insufficient and insecure; concerning which action an order is recorded that "y° Sheriff, having privately dealt with y° Grand Jury in order to have y° County Prison condemned, with designe to procure some unreasonable demands for y° escape of sundry prisoners, y° same is referred therefore untill next November sessions for further hearing." On the 8th of November following the commissioners and assessors asked the grand jury to review their action, which was acceded to, and they found that "y° Prison is wholly sufficient, and if any escapes be made, it will be owing to y° neglect of y° gaol keeper."

From this time the prison answered the requirements of the county, and remained unchanged (except by occasional comparatively unimportant repairs and alterations) for more than twenty years. In the fall of 1773, the prison wall being adjudged insecure, was raised four feet. In 1774, "May y° 5th, y° Justices and Grand Jury of the County of Lancaster, having Together with y° Commissioners and Assessors of y° s'd County, after viewing y° Prison of y° said County, and y° Justices and Grand Jury with y° Commissioners and Assessors, Being of Oppinion, and having adjudged that there should be an addition Made to y° Prison of Proper and Sufficient Strength and Materials should be Built and maintained, and that at the Expencc of the County of Lancaster, The Justices and Grand Jury afforesaid Did direct that y° Commissioners of y° said County should immediately proceed and cause y° said addition to y° said Prison to be built at y° expence of said County as by y° records of said County, and y° Presentment of y° said Grand Jury, filed amongst y° Records of y° Court of Quarter Sessions may appear. Whereupon y° Commissioners Resolved to go on with y° work, and after Meture Consideration it was thought it would be Best to build it where y° old Work House<sup>1</sup> now stands, at y° corner of King Street and Prince Street in y° Borough of Lancaster, so that there might be three good rooms on a floor on Prince Street, and the depth that that part now used for a Work House now is."

The commissioners proceeded vigorously towards the prosecution of the work. "They agreed with Jacob Strickler, of Hempfield Township, to furnish Lime for y° Work, at y° rate of Eleven Pence per Bushel, to be Delivered by him as pr agreement in writing signed. They agreed with Thomas Walker, of Hempfield Township, mason, to build y° said Gaol in a good workmanlike manner, at y° rate of three shillings and nine pence pr Perch, to be measured in y° common manner, and tuck Jacob Strickler with himself for y° performance of ye Work as pr agreement in Writing signed and delivered. They agreed with Christopher Reigart to furnish what Stone would be Wanting for y° Work, at y° rate of four shillings and three Pence pr Perch, to be Delivered at ye place, and be piled up and Measured there. They agreed with Frederick Mann (carpenter) to do ye Carpenter Work, at ye following rates, to wit: To lay ye floors and frame y° Joyce at y° rate of fifteen Shillings for every square, y° Roof at y° rate of ten Shillings for every square, as per agreement in Writing signed and Delivered. They agreed with Henry Funk for What Scantling should be wanting at ye rate of thirteen shillings per Hundred feet, and for what Plank should be wanting at y° same Rate, and y° Lath at y° Rate of two shillings and six pence Pr Hundred, and to furnish y° Girders at y° rate of Two Pounds seven shillings and six pence for y° hole of them; And further, they appointed Everhart Michael, Wm. Henry, Esqr., and Wm. Atley, Esqr., to consult with Fredk. Mann (y° Carpenter), and make a plann of y° Prison, and Prepare a bill of scantling for y° same. And ordered, Caleb Johnson and George Eberly to employ Workmen to pull Down y° Old Building, and pile up y° Materials as expeditiously as possible; y° Expences of which will be paid out of y° publick Money of y° County by our Orders."

The construction of the new prison building was begun in the summer of 1774, and completed in July, 1775, the total cost being £1758 10s. 7d. It was a solid structure of stone, standing on the prison lot, at the corner of West King and Prince Streets, and its appearance is still fresh in the recollection of many of the older citizens of the county. It was not until after this prison had been in use for more than half a century that the question of building a new one to take its place began to be agitated. In 1827 the Court of Quarter Sessions appointed a committee, consisting of Samuel Humes, Christian Brenneman, James Coleman, William Gibbons, John Robinson, Jeremiah Brown, and Adam Riegart, "to take into consideration the propriety of building a New Jail" and to report on the same. This committee met at Slaymaker's Hotel on Monday, the 29th of October, in the same County Jail at the present time," and "Resolved, That it be recommended to the commissioners to make such repairs to the present jail and yard as may be necessary for the security and better accommodation of the prisoners, having due regard in such repairs to a judicious economy." The repairs as recommended (including the raising of the jail wall four feet along West King Street) were contracted for by the commissioners on the 25th of May following, and were completed during the ensuing summer. From that time for nearly two decades successive grand juries again and again presented the old jail as insufficient, but it continued to fill the requirements of the county, without further extensive repairs, until it had completed more than three-fourths of a century of existence, when it was superseded by the present county prison.

year, and in due time their adverse report was presented to the court. At the January term of court, in 1831, the grand jury reported the insufficiency of the county jail; and the question of building a new prison was kept in agitation until the 20th of April following, when "a County Convention met agreeably to Public Notice at the Court House in the City of Lancaster, relative to the erection of a New Prison." Maj. James Patterson was chosen president; John Rohrer, Esq., and Francis Boggs, vice-presidents; John Strohm and Dr. G. F. Charles, secretaries; and Nathan Graham, John Ofarke, Col. George Mayer, Dr. J. F. Charles, and John Strohm were appointed a committee to draft resolutions. The committee reported, and the following were unanimously adopted, viz.: "Resolved, That in the opinion of this Convention it is inexpedient and unnecessary to erect a new

The first official action of the commissioners of Lancaster County looking to the erection of the present county prison was taken by that board on the 21st of November, 1848, as follows:

"Whereas, the insufficiency of the present County Jail has been for several years past the subject of especial and continual presentment by almost every Grand Jury inquiring for the body of the County of Lancaster: And, whereas, the said Grand Juries have in the most urgent manner as repeatedly recommended the building of a new county prison upon the most approved modern principles of architecture with a view to separate confinement at labor: And, whereas, these recommendations of the Grand Juries, as aforesaid, have in addition to the general approval given them, been made the subject of a special recommendation to this Board on the part of the Judges of the Court of Quarter Sessions: And, whereas, the Commissioners are anxious to obtain a plan for a suitable prison of the character above indicated, and an estimate of the expenses incident to the erection thereof: Resolved, That John Haviland, of the city of Philadelphia, be requested to furnish the Commissioners with a suitable plan for such a prison, to contain at least eighty cells, with sufficient room for a further extension of cells, should it be necessary to do so, and an estimate of the probable expenses for the erection."

On the 27th of January, 1849, the board resolved "That the Commissioners, fully concurring in sentiment with the views of the Grand Jury as to the unfitness of the present Jail and the necessity of erecting a new prison, hereby agree that a new county prison be erected upon such plan as they shall hereafter determine upon, and upon such site as they shall deem best." Three days later the commissioners approved a plan for the new prison, furnished by John Haviland. The further action of the board on the same date (Jan. 30, 1849) is shown by the following entry: "The Commissioners have selected as the most eligible place for the location of the new prison the ground near the Reservoir, at the east end of East King St., in the city of Lancaster: provided the ground necessary for the building can be obtained upon reasonable terms." Arrangements were made for the purchase of land to compose the prison grounds,—viz., with John Duchman for a piece of land fronting East Orange Street, at the rate of three hundred dollars per acre, and with Jacob Druckemiller for a piece of land (about one-half a town lot) fronting on East King Street, for one hundred and thirty dollars. And soon afterwards the mayor, aldermen, and Council of Lancaster deeded to the commissioners for prison purposes a lot of land (one acre and one hundred and two perches) bounded by the Reservoir lot on the east, East King Street on the south, and by an alley on the north, the front being on East King Street. Consideration, five hundred dollars. The contract for building the prison was made Feb. 5, 1849, by John Landis, John Witmer, and Henry Musselman, commissioners of Lancaster County; with John Haviland, in consideration of one hundred and two thousand dollars ($102,000), to erect and complete "a building comprising a criminal prison and accommodations for the keeper and his assistants, on a lot of ground bounded on the north by Orange Street, south by East King Street, east by Water Reservoir lot, and west by private property, all in the city of Lancaster," Haviland to furnish all materials, and to complete the building within two years and six months from date of contract. The contractor commenced work without unnecessary delay, and the building was completed at or very near the time specified in the contract. Wednesday, Aug. 20, 1851, was the day fixed on by the commissioners for the inspection of the work by the board and by the viewers appointed for the purpose by the Court of Quarter Sessions. The inspection and report were made, and the commissioners having accepted the building, made final settlement with the contractor, Haviland, Sept. 15, 1851. The total cost of the building was, in round numbers, one hundred and ten thousand dollars. It was first occupied by prisoners Sept. 12, 1851. The old prison property, at the corner of Prince and West King Streets, was sold to P. H. Ehrman and C. Hager for $8400, and proceeds applied in payment for the new prison.

The prison, which has now been in use for more than thirty years, is situated in the eastern part of the city of Lancaster, near the reservoir, on the grounds before described. It is an imposing structure of reddish sandstone, with towers at the angles, and others flanking the main gate, and is surrounded by a massive "keep," more than one hundred feet in height, all of which, together with its embrasured battlements, its arched gateway and portcullis, give it the appearance of a castle stronghold of the Middle Ages. By many it is regarded as poorly adapted to the purposes for which it was erected, and much fault has been found with regard to its location, drainage, and other alleged defects, but it will doubtless continue in use for many years to come as the county prison of Lancaster.

House of Employment and Poor Farm.—For more than half a century after the erection of Lancaster County the poor were supported by the several townships, the constables and assessors being required to make report of persons requiring support or aid to the township overseers of the poor. A considerable amount of money to be applied to the support of such persons was given by Samuel Blunston by will in 1745, and other bequests of the same character were made by other persons in the county at different times.

The first provision for the support of the poor of the county of Lancaster at a House of Employment on land owned by the county was made under the requirements of an act passed Feb. 27, 1797, and entitled "an act to provide for the erection of houses for the employment and support of the Poor in the Counties of Chester and Lancaster."<sup>1</sup> That act authorized and required the election of "six reputable citizens" of the county, to "be one body politic and corporate in law," under the name, style, and title of "The Directors of the Poor and of the House of Employment of the County of Lancaster," which body "shall and may receive, take, and hold any lands, tenements, and hereditaments not exceeding the yearly value of five thousand dollars, and any goods and chattels whatsoever of the gift, alienation, or bequest of any person or persons whatsoever; to purchase, take, and hold any lands and tenements within their respective counties [here referring to both counties,—Chester and Lancaster], in fee-simple or otherwise, and erect suitable buildings thereon for the reception, use, and accommodation of the Poor of their respective counties; to provide all things necessary for the reception, lodging, maintenance, and employment of the said poor, . . . and to exercise and enjoy all such other powers now vested in the hands of the Overseers of the Poor as are not herein granted or supplied."

By the sixth section of the act, Edward Hand, Thomas Boude, George Musser, James Morrison, John Funk, Peter Ellmaker, Frederick Seegar, George Ihlig, and Zachariah Moore were appointed trustees to fix and designate a site for the erection of the House of Employment. These trustees selected a tract of eighty-four acres and one hundred and fifty-two perches of land belonging to Matthias Slough, and located adjoining the present boundary of the city of Lancaster on the east, near the city reservoir. On the 26th of February, 1799, the tract was conveyed by Slough (for the consideration of £3129 17s. 6d.) to the directors, viz., Frederick Seegar, William Webb, George Musser, James Morrison, George Ihlig, and Zachariah Moore, for the use of the county as a Poor Farm and site of a House of Employment. On this land the directors built (in 1800-1801) a stone house one hundred and fifty feet long, forty-two feet wide, and two stories high, the cost of which is shown in a report made to the court by the directors of the poor, May 29, 1802, and covering a period ending Oct. 1, 1801, viz.:

Building materials, labor, tradesmen's bills, yard fence, bake-house, and pay of directors for two years . . . . .	£5616 19s. 0½d.
Less surplus material sold . . . . .	48 14 6
	£5578 4s. 6½d.

The same report shows that from Nov. 15, 1800, to Oct. 1, 1801, support had been given to eighty-four paupers, twenty-nine had been discharged from the House of Employment, and twenty had died. The actual expenditure for support of paupers during that time was £1442 11s.

The old stone building erected in 1800-1801 was continued in use as a House of Employment for three-fourths of a century, and afterwards (upon the completion of the present almshouse) was occupied as a hospital.

On a site east of the old stone house there was erected, about 1830, a brick building, the basement of which was used for some years for the accommodation of the insane poor, the upper part being used as a hospital. Afterwards an addition was made to the south end of this building, and later another addition was built, and both these were occupied by the insane. Under the provisions of a legislative act passed March 9, 1865, and another act passed April 4, 1866, the former authorizing the erection of a hospital and the latter an insane asylum, a brick building was erected for these purposes. Its dimensions are thirty by one hundred and twenty feet, with a height of two stories and a basement, and being built across the end of the old brick building, and joined to it, it forms, with the latter, a structure nearly in the form of the letter T.

The present main almshouse building, standing on the hill to the eastward of the other buildings, was commenced in March, 1875, and completed in the summer of 1876, at a cost of about one hundred and thirteen thousand dollars, including the heating and other internal fixtures and some necessary road-building. The architect and superintendent of construction was John Evans. The board of directors was then composed of William L. Peiper (president), David Landis, John Fry, Adam Le Fevre, Conrad Gast, and Jonas Nult. The building is of brick, and covered by mansard-roofs of slate. It is two hundred and twenty-eight feet in length, with an average width of fifty-five feet. The central portion is four stories in height; the other parts have three stories. In the rear of the building is a central wing, forty by sixty feet in dimensions and three stories high, which contains the kitchen, dining-room, and chapel. On the completion of the new almshouse building it was occupied by the paupers, who up to that time had been quartered in the old stone building of 1800-01. The latter then became the hospital, and to it the patients were removed from the old brick building, which from that time has been devoted exclusively to the use of the insane.

The county farm, which originally contained a little less than eighty-five acres (as before mentioned), has been increased by subsequent purchases, and now embraces about one hundred and ninety-two acres. On one of the later purchases was an old distillery, which (standing at a considerable distance from the other buildings) was fitted up for use as a hospital for contagious diseases.

On Sunday, Aug. 20, 1882, a barn standing at some distance from the main buildings, and nearly opposite the reservoir, took fire and was destroyed. By sparks from this conflagration the shingle roof of the old part of the insane asylum was set on fire, and before it could be extinguished both the old and the new portions of the asylum were so badly damaged as to necessitate the removal of the insane inmates. They were accordingly removed on the 23d to Harrisburg, where they remained until the damaged buildings were again put in proper condition to receive them. Several other barns on the county farm besides the one mentioned above have been destroyed by fire at different times. A fine new barn is now in process of erection directly west of the old stone hospital. It is to be 56 by 110 feet in size, roofed with slate, and to cost about $4500.

The almshouse has at present (June, 1883) 205 inmates,—135 adult males, 58 adult females, and 12 children. The hospital and insane asylum have together 181 inmates,—95 adult males, 77 adult females, and 9 children, of which total about 100 are insane. The expense of the three departments—Almshouse, Asylum, and Hospital—for the year 1882 was $44,530.47; receipts, $56,501.47.

<sup>2</sup> The surveyors of the county were deputies under the surveyor-general for many years. The first of whom there is record was Jacob Hilsbman, who was commissioned Dec. 9, 1813, and served till 1819. In that year the county was divided into two districts, Northern and Southern. The line of division is given as "beginning at a point on the western shore of the Susquehanna River, crossing at right angles to the mouth of Conestoga River; thence up said creek to the Lancaster and Philadelphia Turnpike; thence along said turnpike to the county line." This division remained till about 1850, when county surveyors were elected.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

In the year 1739 the General Assembly passed an act for dividing the county into justices' districts, and at the August term of court in that year the justices of the Court of Quarter Sessions made out and agreed to the following division, and ordered the same to be recorded:

- No. 1, Hempfield, Lancaster, Hallem.
 No. 2, Donegal, Derry, Paxton, Hanover.
 No. 3, Sadsbury, Salisbury, Leacock, Strasburg.
 No. 4, Warwick, Manheim, Lampeter, Lebanon.
 No. 5, Conestoga, Martic, Drumore, Little Britain.
 No. 6, Tolpehocken, Hydeburg, Beam, Bethel.
 No. 7, Robinson, Cocalico, Caernarvon, Earl.
 No. 8, Pennsborough, Hopewell.

These divisions were changed when parts of the territory were set off to form other counties, and in 1811 there were twelve districts. The following lists are given by districts as far as can be ascertained, except that of the borough of Lancaster, District No. 1, which will be found in the history of the city of Lancaster:

DISTRICT No. 2.

A CIVIL division of the province of Pennsylvania, called Lancaster County, was erected by an act of the General Assembly of the province, May 10, 1729, which enacts, "That all and singular the lands within the province of Pennsylvania lying to the northward of Octoraro Creek, and to the westward of a line of marked trees, running from the north branch of the said Octoraro Creek northeasterly to the river Schuylkill, be erected into a county, and the same is hereby erected into a county, named, and from henceforth to be called, Lancaster County."

The boundaries of Lancaster County have been altered from time to time by the operation of laws erecting new counties, viz.:

York County, Aug. 19, 1749.
Cumberland County, Jan. 27, 1850.
Berks County, March 11, 1752.
Northumberland County, March 21, 1772.
Dauphin County, March 4, 1785.
Lebanon County, Feb. 16, 1813.

Since the formation of Lebanon County the territorial limits of Lancaster County have remained unchanged.

The second section of the said act of May 10, 1729, provides, "That the said county of Lancaster shall have and enjoy all and singular the jurisdictions, powers, rights, liberties, privileges, and immunities whatsoever which any other county within the province of Pennsylvania doth, may, or ought to enjoy by any charter of privileges, or the laws of this province, or by any other ways or means whatsoever." . . .

Any comprehensive and detailed account of the administration of justice in the province and State of Pennsylvania belongs rather to the history of the commonwealth than to that of any particular subdivision. Nevertheless, as Lancaster County participated, and still, of course, participates, in the general methods of administering justice, a brief outline of the organization of the courts and the changes in their organization will not be inappropriate in this place as a part of the sketch of the Bench and Bar. The founders of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania were not disposed to favor English lawyers nor to intrust the administration of justice to those learned in law. "The organization of the judiciary," says Bancroft, "was the subject of longest controversy. That the tenure of the judicial office should be the will of the people was claimed as 'the people's right.' The rustic legislators insisted on their right to institute the judiciary, fix the rules of court, define judicial power with precision, and by request displace judges for misbehavior. Neither would they, even in the highest courts, have English lawyers for judges. 'Men skilled in the law,' said they, 'of good integrity, are very desirable, yet we incline to be content with the best men the colony affords.' And the courts obtained no permanent organization till the accession of the house of Hanover."

"Orphans' courts," says Hildreth, "were established for administering the estates of deceased persons." The organization of the Courts of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace and Gaol Delivery and of Common Pleas was effected by the act of General Assembly of May 22, 1722. It is provided by Section 8 of the said act, "That there shall be a competent number of Justices in every of the said counties, nominated and authorized by the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor, for the time being, by commission under the broad seal of this province; which said Justices, or any three of them, shall and may hold the said General Sessions of the Peace and Gaol Delivery according to law, and as fully and effectually as any Justice of the Peace, Justices of the Assize, Justices of Oyer and Terminer, or of Gaol Delivery may or can do." Section 21 of the said act provides, "That a competent number of persons shall be commissioned by the Governor or his Lieutenant, under the broad seal of this province, who shall hold and keep a Court of Record in every county, which shall be styled and called The County Court of Common Pleas, and shall be holden four times in every year, at the places where the General Quarter Sessions shall be respectively kept." . . . "Which said Justices, or any three of them, according to the tenor and direction of their commissions, shall hold pleas of assizes, scire facias, replevins, and hear and determine all and all manner of pleas, actions, suits, and causes, civil, personal, real, and mixed, accord to the laws and constitutions of this province." By act of March 27, 1713, it was enacted, "That the Justices of the Court of Generall Quarter Sessions of the Peace in each county of this province, or so many of them as are or shall be from time to time enabled to hold those courts, shall have full power, and are hereby empowered in the same week that they are or shall be by law directed to hold the same courts, or at such other times as they shall see occasion, to hold and keep a Court of Record in each of the said counties, which shall be styled The Orphans' Court." . . .

The said act of May 22, 1722, was repealed, or was attempted to be repealed, or was supposed to be superseded or repealed by the act of Aug. 26, 1727. In 1781 the said act of Aug. 26, 1727, was repealed by the king in Council, and the General Assembly of the province at once proceeded to re-enact the law of May 22, 1722. On the 26th day of November, 1781, a bill for reviving the said act of 1722 was introduced, and became a law on the following day, Nov. 27, 1731. The said act of May 22, 1722, revived in the manner described, remained practically in force until the separation of the colonies from England.

On the 29th day of September, 1759, a supplement was passed to the above-named act of May 22, 1722, which provided, "That there shall be in every county within this province five persons of the best Discretion, Capacity, Judgment, and Integrity that may be found, and no more, duly appointed and Commissionated by the Governor, or Commander in Chief, for the Time being, under the Broad seal of this Government, who, or any three of them, shall, and they are hereby authorized and required to hold and keep, within their respective Counties, the Court of Record, stiled and called The County Court of Common Pleas, at the same Times of the Year, and at the same places as the said Courts respectively have been heretofore used and accustomed to be held by the Judges of the same;" . . . "and that each and every person so appointed and commissioned . . . shall have, hold, enjoy, and exercise their severall and respective Commissions and Offices aforesaid, quamdiu se bene gesserit, And that their respective Commissions shall be granted to them accordingly." . . . This supplement was repealed within sixteen months from its passage. The commissions issued under its provisions were superseded, and justices were again appointed, as provided for in the act of May 22, 1722.

The independence of the colonies having been declared, a general convention was elected for the purpose of framing a Constitution for the commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The convention met at Philadelphia on the 15th day of July, 1776, and continued its sessions by adjournment to the 28th day of September, 1776. By it a Constitution for the commonwealth of Pennsylvania was established, the preamble of which declares that "all allegiance and fealty to the said king" (George III. of Great Britain) "and his successors are dissolved and at an end, and all power and authority derived from him ceased in these colonies." Section 30 of the said constitution provides as follows: "Justices of peace shall be elected by the freeholders of each city and county respectively; that is to say, two or more persons may be chosen for each ward, township, or district, as the law shall hereafter direct. And their names shall be returned by the president in council, who shall commissionate one or more of them for each ward, township, or district so returning for seven years, removable for misconduct by the General Assembly."

An act of the General Assembly, passed the 28th day of January, 1777, provided in its second section that all laws in force on the 14th day of May, 1776, should be binding from and after the 10th day of February, 1777.

Section 4 of the said act enacts, "That Courts of Quarter Sessions and Gaol Delivery, and Courts of Petty Sessions, Courts of Common Pleas, Orphans' Courts and Supreme Courts, Courts of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, shall be held and kept in each respective county in this state . . . by the Justices and Judges that shall be hereafter elected and appointed, . . . and shall have, use, and exercise all the powers, authority, and jurisdiction that by the aforesaid laws Justices and Judges of such courts respectively heretofore have had, used, and exercised." . . .

Section 6 of the said act provides, "That the President and Council shall appoint one of the Justices in each respective county to preside in the respective courts, and in his absence the Justices who shall attend the court shall choose one of themselves president for the time being."

No further changes were introduced until the adoption of the Constitution of 1790.

The 4th section of the 5th article of that instrument directs, that, "until otherwise directed by law, the several Courts of Common Pleas shall be established in the following manner: The Governor shall appoint in each county not fewer than three, nor more than four, judges, who during their continuance in office shall reside in such county. The State shall be divided by law into circuits, none of which shall include more than six, nor fewer than three, counties. A President shall be appointed of the courts in each circuit, who during his continuance in office shall reside therein." Section 7 of the same article directs that "The judges of the Court of Common Pleas of each county, any two of whom shall be a quorum, shall compose the Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace and Orphans' Court; and the Register of Wills, together with the said Judges, or any two of them, shall compose the Register's Court of each county." . . .

Section 2 of Article 5 provides that "the Judges of the Supreme Court and of the several Courts of Common Pleas shall hold their offices during good behavior."

On the 13th day of April, 1791, an act was passed to establish the judicial courts of this commonwealth in conformity to the alterations and amendments in the Constitution of 1790.

Sections of this act divide the State into five districts, and the third section provides, "That in and for each of the said districts, or circuits, a person of knowledge and integrity, skilled in the laws, shall be appointed and commissioned by the Governor to be President and Judge of the Courts of Common Pleas within such district, or circuit, and that a number of other proper persons, not fewer than three, nor more than four, shall be appointed and commissioned Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas in and for each and every of the counties of this commonwealth; which said Presidents and Judges shall, after the 31st day of August next, respectively, have and execute all and singular the powers, jurisdictions, and authorities of Judges of the Courts of Common Pleas, Judges of the Courts of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery, Judges of the Orphans' Court, and Justices of the Courts of Quarter Sessions of the Peace."

Here, in this provision of the act of April 13, 1791, respecting the appointment of president judges of the several districts, is the first appearance in the history of the judiciary of Pennsylvania of a requirement that a judge should be learned in the law.

In respect to the number of associate judges, an act of April 1, 1803, provides, that thereafter "not more than three associate judges shall be nominated in any county hereafter to be organized," and, in case of vacancy in any existing county, "the number of the judges in the said county where such vacancy shall happen shall be reduced, and there shall be no more than three associate judges in the said county, and the office so become vacant shall hereafter be abolished."

The number of associate judges is still further reduced by the act of Feb. 24, 1806, which provides, "That if any vacancy should hereafter happen in any county at present organized, . . . the Governor shall not supply the same, unless the number of associates be thereby reduced to less than two; in which case, or in case of any county hereafter organized, he shall commission so many as will complete that number in each county, and no more."

Some changes were introduced by the Constitution adopted in the year 1838. The tenure of the judicial office was limited, and the consent of the Senate to the nomination of the Governor made necessary to an appointment. The second section of the fifth article provides that the judges "of the several Courts of Common Pleas, and of such other courts of record as are or shall be nominated by the Governor, and, by and with the consent of the Senate, appointed and commissioned by him, . . . the president judge of the several Courts of Common Pleas, and of such other courts of record as are or shall be established by law, and all other judges required to be learned in the law, shall hold their offices for the term of ten years, if they shall so long behave themselves well. The associate judges of the Courts of Common Pleas shall hold their offices for the term of five years, if they shall so long behave themselves well."

An amendment to the Constitution of 1838, adopted in 1850, provides that "the president judges of the several courts of Common Pleas, and of such other courts of record as are or shall be established by law, and all other judges required to be learned in the law, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the respective districts over which they are to preside or act as judges, and the associate judges of the courts of Common Pleas, by the qualified electors of the counties respectively." The amendment also directs that the president judge and other law judges shall hold their offices for the term of ten years, and the associate judges for the term of five years, and that all of them shall be commissioned by the Governor.

On the 7th day of January, 1874, a new Constitution was proclaimed as adopted by the people of Pennsylvania. This Constitution abolishes register's courts, but leaves the existence of the other courts of the commonwealth untouched. The fifteenth section of the fifth article provides "that all judges required to be learned in the law, except the judges of the Supreme Court, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the respective districts over which they are to preside, and shall hold their offices for the period of ten years, if they shall so long behave themselves well."

The fifth section of the said fifth article provides that "the office of associate judge not learned in the law is abolished in counties forming separate districts; but the several associate judges in office when this Constitution shall be adopted shall serve for their unexpired terms."

As Lancaster County formed a separate judicial district, the office of associate judge not learned in the law became abolished therein.

Prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1874, and as far back as the year 1854, a vacancy occurred in the office of one of the associate judges of the courts of Lancaster County. An act of Assembly was then passed on April 13, 1854, providing, "That it shall be the duty of the Governor to fill the vacancy now existing in the office of associate judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County by appointing thereto a competent person learned in the law, to continue till the first Monday of December next, and at the next general election the qualified electors of Lancaster County shall elect a competent person, learned in the law, to be an associate judge of said court, who shall hold his office for the term of ten years from the first Monday of December next, if he shall so long behave himself well." After this legislation the courts of Lancaster County became composed of a president judge, an associate judge learned in the law, and an associate judge not learned in the law. This composition of the courts continued until the first Monday of December, 1878, as the last election for an associate lay judge took place in the fall of 1878. The elected person was commissioned for five years from the first Monday in December, 1878, and under the operation of the Constitution of 1874 was to continue in office until the expiration of his term.

Since the first Monday of December, 1878, the courts of Lancaster County have consisted of a president judge and one associate law judge.

The Judicial District.—The act of April 13, 1791, provides that the State shall be divided into five districts or circuits, the second of which shall consist of the counties of Chester, Lancaster, York, and Dauphin.

The act of Feb. 24, 1806, divides the State into ten districts, and forms the counties of Lancaster, York, and Dauphin into the second district.

The act of Feb. 6, 1815, erects the counties of Schuylkill, Lebanon, and Dauphin into the twelfth district, thus leaving the second district composed of the counties of Lancaster and York.

The act of April 11, 1835, enacts that after the first Monday of May, 1835, the counties of York and Adams shall be formed into the nineteenth district.

By the operation of these various acts Lancaster County became a separate judicial district after the second Monday of May, 1835, and from that day up to the present time has constituted a separate judicial district, known as the second.

The Place of holding Courts.—The records show that courts were first held for the county of Lancaster on the first Tuesday of August, 1729, at the house of John Postlethwait, in Conestoga, and continued to be held in Conestoga up to and inclusive of the August sessions, 1730. The records in the Quarter Sessions office state that the court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace was held at Lancaster on the 3d day of August, 1730. The records in the Common Pleas office show the following preliminary entry: "Att a Court of Common Pleas held at Lancaster for the County of Lancaster The Third Day of August, 1730." An imperfect docket entry then follows on the same page. The record is then transferred to another page, and the preliminary entry made, viz.: "Held at Conestogoe the fourth day of August, 1730." Full and complete docket entries then follow. It would seem that the justices met at Lancaster on the 3d day of August, 1730, transacted the business of the Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, and then adjourned to meet at Conestoga on the 4th day of August, 1730, and there held the Court of Common Pleas.

The November sessions, 1730, of all the courts were held at Lancaster, and all Courts of Common Pleas, Orphans' Court, Courts of Quarter Sessions of the Peace, etc., for the county of Lancaster have been held regularly and continuously at Lancaster from that time up to the present day.

Special Courts.—In addition to courts of an organization common to every county and judicial district in the State, courts of limited jurisdiction were established at particular times, by special legislation, for the county and city of Lancaster, which, after continuing in existence for some time, were abolished.

The act of March 27, 1820, enacts that "there shall be established in and for the city and county of Lancaster, by the name and style of 'The District Court for the City and County of Lancaster,' which shall consist of a president, who shall have power to try, hear, and determine all civil pleas and actions, real, personal, and mixed, and for the trial of all such pleas and actions shall have and exercise the same powers, authorities, and jurisdictions as are now vested in the Court of Common Pleas of the County of Lancaster; provided, that the said court shall have no jurisdiction, either originally or in appeal, except when the sum in controversy shall exceed three hundred dollars."

The act of March 10, 1823, provides in its first section that "from and after the passing of this act the county of Dauphin shall be added to and form a part of the district composed of the city and county of Lancaster," . . . "and that the president of the said District Court of the city and county of Lancaster shall have and exercise all the powers and jurisdictions within the county of Dauphin that are given and granted to him in the city and county of Lancaster." . . . Section 9 of the said act of March 10, 1823, provides that the act of March 27, 1820, and the court created for the county of Dauphin, be continued in force for the term of four years from and after March 27, 1824. Section 10 of the said act of March 10, 1823, requires the Governor to appoint, on the 27th day of March, 1824, or immediately thereafter, the president of the said District Court.

Under this legislation the said District Court, having jurisdiction in the city and county of Lancaster and the county of Dauphin, was continued in existence from the 27th day of March, 1824, to the 27th day of March, 1828.

By the act of April 10, 1826, the act of March 27, 1820, and the act of March 10, 1823, as far as it relates to the District Court for the city and county of Lancaster, were continued in force to May 1, 1833, and it was further provided that the county of York should be annexed to the said district for the city and county of Lancaster.

Said act of April 10, 1826, also enacted, "that from and after May 1, 1826, the District Court for the city and county of Lancaster shall consist of two judges, viz., the president and one assistant judge, who, in the absence of the president, shall hold the said court," . . . "and the Governor shall, on May 1, 1826, or immediately thereafter, appoint such assistant judge, to hold during the continuance of said court."

The said act of April 10, 1826, provides, "That from and after the 1st day of May, 1826, the said court shall have no jurisdiction except as to cases then pending therein, either originally or on appeal, unless when the sum in controversy shall exceed one hundred dollars; and all suits and causes depending in the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County where the sum in controversy exceeds two hundred dollars shall, from and after the said 1st of May, 1826, be transferred to the said District Court, there to be heard, tried, and determined; and the original jurisdiction of the said Court of Common Pleas, in all civil actions where the sum in controversy exceeds two hundred dollars, shall henceforth cease and determine."

Under the above-mentioned legislation, the said District Court, composed of a president and one assistant judge, exercised the jurisdiction conferred from May 1, 1826, to March 27, 1828, in the city and county of Lancaster, county of Dauphin, and county of York. On March 27, 1828, the act of March 10, 1823, expired by its own limitation, and, so far as its provisions relate to Dauphin County, was not continued in force by the act of April 10, 1826, nor was it revived by subsequent legislation. From March 27, 1828, to May 1, 1833, the jurisdiction of the said District Court extended over the city and county of Lancaster and the county of York.

The act of April 8, 1833, continues in force the several acts of Assembly relative to the District Courts of the city and county of Lancaster and the county of York until the 1st day of May, 1840, and provides that after May 1, 1833, the city and county of Lancaster shall form a separate district, and the county of York shall form a separate district. The said act directs the Governor, on the 1st day of May, 1833, or immediately thereafter, to appoint and commission a judge, of competent legal attainments, for the district composed of the city and county of Lancaster, whose term shall extend over the continuance of the said court, and who shall have jurisdiction in the district of York County until the third Monday of December, 1833, at which time a judge shall be appointed and commissioned for York County.

The act of March 11, 1840, re-establishes the District Court for the city and county of Lancaster, for the period of ten years from May 1, 1840, and provides that it shall consist of a president learned in the law, who shall be appointed and commissioned on or before May 1, 1840.

The act of Feb. 6, 1849, abolishes the District Court of the city and county of Lancaster, and transfers the jurisdiction and unfinished business to the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County.

Mayor's Court for the City of Lancaster.—The act of March 20, 1818, incorporating the city of Lancaster, establishes a court of record within the said city, by the name, style, and title of "The Mayor's Court for the City of Lancaster," to be composed of the mayor, recorder, and aldermen of the said city, or any four or more of them, with powers and jurisdiction within the said city of like character and extent as those of any Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Jail Delivery of any county within the commonwealth.

The recorder is directed by the said act to be appointed and commissioned by the Governor, and to hold his office during good behavior. The court was abolished by the act of Feb. 6, 1849.

Admission of Attorneys.—The act of May 22, 1722, provides, "That there may be a competent number of persons of an honest disposition, and learned in the law, admitted by the Justices of the said respective courts, to practice as attorneys there, who shall behave themselves justly and faithfully in their practice." . . . The law of Pennsylvania thus recognized the existence of attorneys, and from the first organization of Lancaster County persons learned in the law have been admitted to practice in its courts. At present, under the rules of court, the student-at-law must be registered with the prothonotary by name, age, and place of residence, and prior to such registration must successfully undergo an examination, by a committee appointed by the court, in spelling, arithmetic, grammar, geography, Latin, history of England, and history of the United States. The student must then serve a regular clerkship within the State to an attorney for the term of three years from the date of registration, if then in his minority, or for the term of two years if he shall have attained his majority at the time of registration. Having served the prescribed term of clerkship, and applied for admission to the bar, the student must pass an examination upon the various branches of legal study by a committee appointed by the court, which committee must certify that the applicant is duly qualified to be admitted as an attorney.

Justices of the Courts of Lancaster County from 1729 to 1776.—The names of the justices holding the courts for this period are obtained wholly from the records of court proceedings up to the year 1759, in which year a few commissions are recorded in the recorder's office, Lancaster. From 1759 to 1776 the names are procured in part from the records of the courts and in part from the commissions recorded. The year of the first appearance of the name, or of the date of commission, of the justice is given only, and not the dates of expiration of office, except in a few instances.

1730.—Caleb Pearce.

1734.—Edward Smout and Derrick Updegraff.

1739.—Thomas Lindley, Anthony Shaw, Samuel Boyd, James Armstrong, Emanuel Carpenter, and John Kyle.

1746.—Conrad Welsler and John Postlethwait.

1749.—William Parsons.

1757.—James Smith and Thomas Holliday.

(Thomas Edwards presided last at November sessions, 1757. Emanuel Carpenter presided at February sessions, 1758, and regularly thereafter when present.)

1759.—On Nov. 1, 1759, Emanuel Carpenter, Isaac Sanders, Calvin Cooper, John Hopson (or Hobson), and John Douglass were commissioned judges of the County Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County, under the provisions of the supplement passed Sept. 29, 1759, to the act of May 22, 1722.

1760.—James Galbraith presided in Quarter Sessions, February, May, and August terms.

1761.—Jan. 13, 1761, Emanuel Carpenter, Isaac Sanders, William Jevon, Adam Simon Kuhn, Robert Thompson, Edward Shippen, Andrew Work, John Allison, Calvin Cooper, Adam Read, Thomas Foster, Isaac Richardson, John Hay, Zaccheus Davis, and William Hamilton were commissioned justices of the various courts.

And, Jan. 29, 1761, the above-mentioned commissions to Emanuel Carpenter, Isaac Sanders, Calvin Cooper, John Hopson (or Hobson), and John Douglass were superseded.

1763.—June 2, 1763, James Burd and Thomas McKee were commissioned.

1765.—July 31, 1765, John Phillip De Haas was commissioned.

1766.—Aug. 2, 1766, James Clemson was commissioned. (Oct. 15, 1766, the commission of Thomas Foster was superseded.)

1769.—June 20, 1769, Robert Boyd was commissioned.

1773.—William Henry, Everhard Gruber, and James Work. (Names appear on records of Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace.)

Justices of the Courts from 1776 to 1791.—During this period the commissions of the justices hereafter named appear of record in the recorder's office, Lancaster. The dates of the commissions and the courts for which the justices were commissioned are set forth below. The commissions now run for the period of seven years.

March 31, 1777, Emanuel Carpenter, Zaccheus Davis, Timothy Green, John Henry, Joshua Elder, Moses Irwin, Joseph Miller, James Jacks, Samuel Jones, John Thorn, Phimp Greenawald, Jacob Cooke, James Bailey, Stewart Herbert, Adam Nees, Henry Slaymaker, John Craig, John Whitehill, and Henry Shaffer, by a general commission; and they, or any three or more of them, to act as justices of Assizes, Oyer and Terminer and Jail Delivery, Common Pleas, and Orphans' Court.

Dec. 8, 1784, Henry Sheffer, Quarter Sessions and Jail Delivery.

Jan. 3, 1785, Joseph Miller, John Boyd, Henry Sheffer, and Samuel Jones, Common Pleas.

Feb. 9, 1785, Timothy Green, Quarter Sessions, etc., and Common Pleas.

May 15, 1785, Adam Nees, Common Pleas.

The following-named persons were, on the dates specified, commissioned as justices of the various courts, viz.:

March 10, 1786, James Bailey.

March 12, 1786, Abraham Whitesides.

April 8, 1786, John Luther.

April 29, 1786, Everhard Gruber.

June 16, 1786, Joseph Shippen.

July 15, 1786, James Old.

Jan. 17, 1787, Joseph Gingerich.

March 5, 1787, Jacob Reigar.

March 5, 1787, Andrew Graff.

March 20, 1787, David Watson.

July 28, 1788, Michael Hubley (as president).

Aug. 20, 1788, Henry Ream (Common Pleas only).

July 27, 1790, James Olemson.

(Michael Hubley sat and presided for the last time at August sessions, 1791. The courts at the November sessions were organized under the Constitution of 1790 and the act of April 13, 1791, carrying the said Constitution into effect.)

President Judges from 1791 to 1833.—1. William Augustus Atlee. Commission, Aug. 17, 1791. Died Sept. 9, 1793.

2. John Joseph Henry. Commission, Dec. 10, 1793. Resigned in the latter part of year 1810, or early in January, 1811.

3. Walter Franklin. Commission, Jan. 18, 1811. Died Feb. 7, 1836.

4. Charles Ogle. Commission, April 1, 1836. Resigned July, 1836, without having taken his seat.

5. Oristus Collins. Commission (1), Aug. 8, 1836. Resigned Dec. 26, 1838. Commission (2), Dec. 27, 1838. Ousted by judgment of Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, July, 1839. Commonwealth vs. Collins, 8 Watts, 331.

6. Benjamin Champneys. Commission (1), July 8, 1839, to continue in force to the end of the next session of the Senate. Commission (2), March 20, 1840, to run for ten years, as provided for by the Constitution of 1838. Resigned in the latter part of 1842.

The first commission limits the tenure of the office to the end of the next session of the Senate for the following reason: The appointment was made to fill the vacancy occasioned by the ouster of Judge Collins and at a time the Legislature was not in session. The Constitution of 1838 required judicial appointments to be confirmed by the Senate. The Governor, therefore, had power merely to commission until the Senate should act upon a nomination regularly submitted at its next session.

7. Ellis Lewis. Commission Jan. 14, 1843. Having been elected one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania at the October election, 1851, he, on Oct. 21, 1851, tendered his resignation, to take effect on Nov. 14, 1851.

8. Henry G. Long. Commission (1), Nov. 17, 1851, to expire on the first Monday of December, 1851. Commission (2), Nov. 6, 1851, to run for ten years from first Monday of December, 1851, being the first commission directed to a judge elected by the qualified electors of Lancaster County under the constitutional amendments of 1850. Commission (3), Nov. 20, 1861; expired on the first Monday of December, 1871.

The first commission was a special one, and the appointment of Judge Long for the brief term specified was made to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Judge Lewis, which took effect on Nov. 14, 1851, which vacancy would have continued up to the first Monday of December, 1851, when the regular commission of Judge Long became operative. The appointment was made in order that the November sessions of the courts might be held.

9. John B. Livingston. Commission (1), Nov. 7, 1871, to run to first Monday of December, 1881, but by operation of the schedule of the Constitution of 1874 the term was extended to the first Monday of January, 1882. Commission (2), Dec. 8, 1881; will expire on the first Monday of January, 1892.

Associate Law Judges.—1. Alexander L. Hayes. Commission (1) (under act of April 13, 1854), Nov. 13, 1854. Commission (2), Nov. 23, 1864, to run to first Monday of December, 1874, but by operation of the schedule of the Constitution of 1874 the term of office was extended to the first Monday of January, 1875.

2. David W. Patterson. Commission, Dec. 3, 1874; will expire on the first Monday of January, 1885.

Associate Judges.—Under the act of April 13, 1791, four associate judges were appointed and commissioned for the county of Lancaster, viz.:

1. Robert Coleman. Commission, Aug. 17, 1791.

2. John Whitehill. Commission, Aug. 17, 1791.

3. Frederick Kuhn. Commission, Aug. 17, 1791.

4. James Clemson. Commission, Aug. 17, 1791.

The seat of James Clemson became vacant in a short time, and thereupon the following appointment was made, viz.:

5. Andrew Graff. Commission, Sept. 13, 1792.

John Whitehill took his seat as a member of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States on the first Monday of December, 1833. The office of fourth associate judge being then vacant it became abolished under the operation of the act of April 1, 1803, and the number of associate judges was reduced to three.

Robert Coleman. Resigned April 23, 1810.

Andrew Graff. Resigned Jan. 5, 1811.

By the act of Feb. 24, 1806, the number of associate judges was reduced to two, and the offices of the associate judges for Lancaster County being all vacant in January, 1811, the following appointments were made under the provisions of the said act, viz.:

6. James Whitehill. Commission (1), Jan. 3, 1811.

7. Jacob Hilselman. Commission, Jan. 14, 1811.

The commissions of James Whitehill and Jacob Hilselman were read on the 21st day of January, 1811, in open court, and they took their seats on that day.

James Whitehill having been elected a member of Congress in 1812, he resigned the office of associate judge on the 1st day of February, 1813. Thereupon the following appointment was made, viz.:

8. Thomas Clark. Commission, April 16, 1813.

Jacob Hilselman having been elected a member of Congress in 1818, he resigned Dec. 3, 1819, and the following appointment was thereupon made, viz.:

9. Samuel Dale. Commission (1), Dec. 3, 1819.

Thomas Clark resigned Oct. 4, 1820, and thereupon the following appointment was made, viz.:

10. James Whitehill. Commission (2), Oct. 17, 1820.

James Whitehill died Feb. 26, 1822, and thereupon the following appointment was made, viz.:

11. John Lightner. Commission, April 2, 1822.

The commissions of Samuel Dale and John Lightner having expired, Feb. 27, 1841, by operation of the schedule to the Constitution of 1838 and the act of March 7, 1840, which classified the said associate judges in accordance with the provisions of the said schedule, the following appointments were made, viz.:

12. Samuel Dale. Commission (2), March 15, 1841.

13. Jacob Grosh. Commission (1), Feb. 2, 1842. Commission (2), Feb. 17, 1847.

(The commissions of associate judges, under the Constitution of 1838, run for five years.)

Samuel Dale died Sept. 1, 1842, and thereupon the following appointment was made, viz.:

14. Emanuel Schaeffer. Commission (1), Sept. 8, 1842; to run to the end of the next session of the Senate, for the reason explained above in the matter of the appointment of Judge Champneys. Commission (2), Jan. 14, 1843. Commission (3), Jan. 25, 1848.

The commissions of Jacob Grosh and Emanuel Schaeffer expired, by operation of the constitutional amendments of 1850, on the first Monday of December, 1851. The following-named persons having been elected to fill the office of associate judge by the qualified electors of Lancaster County at the October election, 1861, they were commissioned, viz.:

15. Jeremiah Brown. Commission, Nov. 10, 1851, to run for five years from the first Monday of December, 1851.

16. Daniel B. Yondersmith. Commission, Nov. 10, 1851, to run for five years from the first Monday of December, 1851.

(The office of Daniel B. Yondersmith became vacant in 1854. The vacancy was directed by the act of April 13, 1854, not to be filled, the office abolished, and provision made for the appointment of an associate law judge for Lancaster County. The number of associate judges for Lancaster County was then reduced to one.)

The following-named persons were elected in subsequent years, and commissioned, viz.:

17. Ferres Brinton. Commission (1), Nov. 23, 1856. Commission (2), Nov. 23, 1861.

18. Peter Martin. Commission, Nov. 8, 1866. Died Aug. 16, 1867.

19. John J. Libhart. Commission (1), Oct. 12, 1867, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Peter Martin, and to run until the next general election. Commission (2), Nov. 6, 1868. Commission (3), Nov. 6, 1873.

(The commission of Judge Libhart of Nov. 6, 1873, expired on the first Monday of December, 1878, and thereupon the office of associate judge for Lancaster County became wholly abolished by operation of the Constitution of 1874.)

President Judges of the "District Court for the City and County of Lancaster."—1. Charles Smith. Commission, April 28, 1820. Continued in office until March 27, 1824, when the act of March 10, 1823, re-constituting the court and adding Dauphin County to the district, went into operation, and an appointment was made under the provisions of said act.

2. Isaac D. Barnard. Commission, March 27, 1824. Appointment declined.

3. Ebenezer G. Bradford. Commission (1), May 3, 1824, the district being then composed of the counties of Lancaster and Dauphin. Commission (2), March 27, 1828, the district being then composed of the counties of Lancaster and York. Under this second commission Judge Bradford continued in office until May 1, 1833, when the act of April 8, 1833, re-establishing the court and making the city and county of Lancaster a separate district, went into operation, and an appointment was made under the provisions of the said act.

Alexander L. Hayes. Commission (1), May 1, 1833, to expire on the 1st day of May, 1840, the district being then composed of the city and county of Lancaster. Commission (2), May 1, 1840, to run for ten years. Resigned December, 1848.

(The said District Court was abolished, as above stated, by the act of Feb. 6, 1849.

Assistant Judges of the "District Court for the City and County of Lancaster."—1. Alexander Thomson. Commission, May 1, 1826, under act of April 10, 1826, the district then consisting of the counties of Lancaster, York, and Dauphin. Resigned June 25, 1827, on which day he was appointed and commissioned president judge of Sixteenth Judicial District, composed of the counties of Franklin, Bedford, and Somerset.

2. Alexander L. Hayes. Commission, June 25, 1827. Continued in office until May 1, 1833, at which time the office of assistant judge was abolished by operation of the act of April 8, 1833. Judge Hayes was then commissioned as president, as above stated.

Recorders of the "Mayor's Court for the City of Lancaster."—1. Molton C. Rogers. Commission April 16, 1818. Resigned Jan. 31, 1820.

2. Patton Ross. Commission, April 12, 1820.

3. John K. Findlay. Commission (1), May 6, 1841, to expire with the end of the next session of the Senate. Commission (2), Feb. 15, 1842, to run for ten years from Jan. 20, 1842. Resigned —, 1845.

4. William Jenkins. Commission, April 12, 1845.

(Said court was abolished, as above stated, by act of Feb. 6, 1849.)

Biographical Sketches.—GEORGE ROSS, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, was born in New Castle, Del., in 1730. He was admitted as an attorney-at-law in the courts of Lancaster County in 1750. From 1768 to 1776 he was a member of the Colonial Assembly of Pennsylvania. In 1774 he was chosen one of the committee of seven who represented Pennsylvania in the Continental Congress, of which he continued a member until January, 1777, when he retired on account of ill health. For his conduct in Congress the sum of one hundred and fifty pounds was voted to him by the county of Lancaster, which he declined to accept. In 1770 he drew up a reply to Governor Penn's message deprecating any action on the part of the colony. After the substitution of the General Convention for the Legislature of Pennsylvania, Mr. Ross was elected to that body, and prepared a declaration of rights for the State, the regulations necessary for the government of the convention, and an ordinance for the punishment of treason. A report on the measures necessary for putting the colony and the city of Philadelphia in a state of defense was also from his pen. On the 14th day of April, 1779, he was appointed judge of the Court of Admiralty. He died in Lancaster, in July, 1779, from a sudden attack of the gout.

WILLIAM AUGUSTUS ATLEE was born in Philadelphia, July 1, 1735. He was admitted to the bar of Lancaster County Aug. 13, 1758. On the 16th day of August, 1777, he was commissioned as one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and was reappointed Aug. 9, 1784. He was appointed president judge of the Second Judicial District of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Chester, Lancaster, York, and Dauphin, on the 17th day of August, 1791. He occupied this latter position until his death, which occurred Sept. 9, 1793.

JASPER YEATES,<sup>1</sup> son of John and Elizabeth (Sidbotham) Yeates, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., April 7, 1745. He studied at the College of Philadelphia, and received the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1761, and afterwards that of Master of Arts. He was admitted to the bar in 1765, and became one of the most distinguished lawyers of that period, with a larger practice than any other in the interior of Pennsylvania. He took up his residence in Lancaster, where he married, Dec. 30, 1767, Sarah, eldest daughter of James Burd, by his wife Sarah, daughter of Edward and Sarah (Plumley) Shippen, of Lancaster. Col. James Burd was the son of Edward Burd, of Ormistown, near Edinburgh, Scotland, and his wife, Jane Hallebuiston, was daughter of the Lord Provost of Edinburgh. Mrs. Yeates was born in Philadelphia, Jan. 1, 1748–49. Mr. Yeates sided with the American colonies in the war with Great Britain, and was chairman of the Committee of Correspondence of Lancaster County in 1776. During the summer of that year he made a journey to Western Pennsylvania, and paid a visit to the scene of Braddock's defeat, of which he wrote an interesting account in a letter afterwards printed. He was one of the delegates for Lancaster County to the Convention of Pennsylvania which ratified the Constitution of the United States in 1787, being one of the committee of three persons (the others being Thomas McKean and James Wilson) who reported the form of the ratification adopted by the convention. March 21, 1791, he was commissioned a justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, a position which he occupied with honor for the remainder of his life. Aug. 8, 1794, in company with James Ross and William Bradford, he was appointed a commissioner by President Washington to confer with the inhabitants of the western counties of Pennsylvania, "in order to quiet and extinguish" the Whiskey Insurrection, a duty which was discharged by them in a most satisfactory manner. In 1805, with his wife's uncle, Chief Justice Edward Shippen, and Judge Thomas Smith, he was tried and acquitted on an impeachment before the Senate of the commonwealth, made in consequence of their imposition of a fine and imprisonment on a certain citizen for contempt of court. Judge Yeates preserved notes of judicial proceedings in which he took part, and prepared them for press before his death. They were printed immediately after his decease, and in the advertisement of this publication by Judge Yeates' son-in-law, Charles Smith, mention is made of "the industry and abilities, as well as the accuracy and fidelity of the author," as "well known to the gentlemen of the bar, by whom he had the happiness to be highly esteemed." Judge Yeates died at Lancaster, March 14, 1817. He is buried in St. James' (Protestant Episcopal) churchyard, of that place, under a pyramidal tombstone, with this epitaph: "He fulfilled the duties of life with fidelity. His integrity was inflexible. As a judge he was most learned and eminent, and in the exercise of his public functions he deservedly obtained the confidence of his fellow-citizens, and he left behind him a name which will only perish with the judicial records of his country." Mrs. Yeates survived her husband, dying at Lancaster, Oct. 25, 1829. She is buried in St. James' churchyard, under a pyramidal monument, with the inscription: "Adorned with all the charities of life, in manners mild, benevolent, and polished, she was beloved by all who knew her. Pious and sincere in her religious duties, and confiding in her Redeemer's love, she departed full of years and honor. Her remaining children have erected this testimonial of their reverence and gratitude."

Mr. and Mrs. Yeates had ten children, all born in Lancaster, Pa.

Mary was born March 18, 1770, and was married in Lancaster, March 3, 1791, to Charles Smith, son of Rev. William Smith, D.D., provost of the College of Philadelphia. Mr. Smith read law, was admitted to practice, and on March 27, 1819, he was appointed president judge for the Ninth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Cumberland, Franklin, and Adams, and in 1820 he was commissioned president judge of the District Court of the city and county of Lancaster, holding the office for several years, and living at his country-seat called "Hardwick," which he built, and which was recently destroyed to make way for the new Pennsylvania Railroad line around Lancaster. He died in Philadelphia in March, 1836, and his wife died at Belmont in August of the same year.

John Yeates was born in June, 1772, and received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from the College of Philadelphia in 1792. He married Eliza, daughter of Daniel Buckley, a prominent ironmaster of Lancaster County. Mr. Yeates died in Lancaster in January, 1844, and is buried in St. James' churchyard. Mrs. Yeates died in Philadelphia County in December, 1849.

Jasper Yeates was born Aug. 30, 1774, and died at Lancaster, Dec. 24, 1774. Sarah was born Dec. 4, 1775, and died at Lancaster, Nov. 12, 1776.

Elizabeth was born April 4, 1773, and was married at Lancaster, May 2, 1808, to Redmond Conyngham, son of David Hayfield Conyngham, and grandson of Redmond Conyngham, Esq., of Letterkenny, Ireland. Mr. Conyngham was a literary gentleman, contributing some valuable papers on literary subjects. He died at Paradise, June 16, 1846, and Mrs. Conyngham died at Lancaster, Aug. 3, 1867. Both were buried in All-Saints' (Protestant Episcopal) churchyard, at Paradise, Lancaster Co. Among those who sprang from this union were the late Jasper Yeates Conyngham, and his brother, David Conyngham, still living in Paradise township.

Margaret Yeates was born April 24, 1780, and died, unmarried, at Lancaster, Feb. 1, 1853. She is buried in St. James' churchyard.

Edward Shippen Yeates was born May 17, 1782, and died at Lancaster, Dec. 12, 1782.

Catharine Yeates was born Dec. 1, 1783, and died, unmarried, at Lancaster, June 7, 1866, and is buried in St. James' churchyard. She was familiarly known in Lancaster as Miss Kitty Yeates, and among her beneficent acts may be mentioned the founding of the Yeates Institute, the original purpose of the institution having been to educate poor young men for the ministry.

Sarah Yeates was born Dec. 6, 1786, and died Dec. 7, 1786.

Edward Yeates, the last born of the children of Joseph Yeates, was born eodem partu, and died Dec. 7, 1786.

JOHN WILKES KITTEBA was born in East Earl township, Lancaster Co. He was graduated at Princeton College, New Jersey, in 1776. He was admitted to the bar in 1782. From 1791 to 1801 he was a representative in Congress from Lancaster County. He was appointed United States district attorney for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, but did not hold the position long, as his death occurred June 6, 1801. The Lancaster Journal, issued on the 13th day of June, 1801, has the following obituary notice: "Died, in this borough, on Saturday last, in the forty-ninth year of his age, after a lingering illness, John Wilkes Kittera, Esq., late representative from this county in the Congress of the United States, and on Monday evening his body was committed to the earth in the Presbyterian burial-ground. On this occasion the Rev. Mr. Sample delivered a short but pathetic and impressive address, well adapted to the mournful occurrence, from the words 'Weep not.' (Luke vii. 13.)"

JOHN JOSEPH HENRY was born in Lancaster, Nov. 11, 1758. When but seventeen years of age he secretly joined the expedition against Canada in 1775, under the command of Gens. Montgomery and Arnold. In the unsuccessful assault upon Quebec, on December 31st of that year, he was made prisoner, and remained a captive for nine months. The privations of his confinement laid the foundation for an attack of scurvy, with which he was seized about six weeks after his return home, and from the effects of which he never fully recovered. He afterwards wrote an account of the campaign against Quebec, which is still full of interest. He then served a clerkship of four years in the office of the prothonotary of Lancaster County, and subsequently entered as a student-at-law in the office of Stephen Chambers, Esq. He was admitted to the bar in 1785, and continued in practice for eight years. On Dec. 16, 1793, he was appointed and commissioned by Governor Thomas Mifflin president judge of the Second Judicial District, composed of the counties of Chester, Lancaster, York, and Dauphin, which office he filled for seventeen years.

During the latter years of his judicial term ill health impaired the efficiency of his services, and he was often unable to attend the sessions of court. Owing to his physical condition, he resigned in December, 1810. He died April 22, 1811. He lies buried in the Moravian burial-ground, corner of Prince and Chestnut Streets.

CHARLES SMITH was admitted to the bar of Lancaster County in 1787. He served as representative in the State Legislature, and was elected a member of the State Senate in 1816. On the 27th day of March, 1819, he was appointed president judge of the Ninth Judicial District, consisting of the counties of Cumberland, Franklin, and Adams. He resigned the said office March 27, 1820, having been appointed and commissioned on that day president judge of the "District Court for the city and county of Lancaster." This latter office he filled until March 27, 1824. Shortly after his retirement from the bench, Judge Smith severed his connection with the Lancaster bar and removed to Baltimore.

JAMES HOPKINS was admitted to the Lancaster bar in 1787, and then began a long and eminent professional career. He at once acquired business, which increased until his practice, maintained for a period of forty-seven years, became in the aggregate the largest and most lucrative that has been known in the entire history of the bar of this county. Mr. Hopkins devoted himself exclusively to professional pursuits, and never sought public office. He died Sept. 14, 1834.

It is not inappropriate to give the circumstances of his death as narrated in the Lancaster Journal of Sept. 19, 1834: "A trial of great interest and importance had been progressing for several weeks, in which Mr. Hopkins was the leading counsel for the plaintiffs. On Thursday afternoon (September 11th), just as Mr. Buchanan, who was one of the counsel for the defendant, had risen to address the jury, he was interrupted by Mr. Hopkins, who expressed a desire to read to the court certain authorities, upon which among others he intended to rely. Mr. Buchanan gave way, but Mr. Hopkins, after a few incoherent remarks, was unable to find the authorities and resumed his seat. He soon after dropped asleep, apparently, and was found to be in a stupor, from which he could not be aroused. He was carried home and medical aid called in, but nothing could arouse him. He lingered in a nearly unbroken lethargy until about nine o'clock on the succeeding Sunday morning, when death occurred."

WILLIAM JENKINS was born at Windsor Place, Lancaster Co., July 7, 1779. He was graduated at Princeton College, New Jersey, in 1797. He read law in the office of James Hopkins, Esq., and was admitted to the bar Aug. 10, 1801. He served as deputy attorney-general for the Quarter Sessions of Lancaster County continuously from January sessions, 1808, to January sessions, 1824. On April 12, 1845, he was commissioned as recorder of the "Mayor's Court for the city of Lancaster," which office he held until the abolition of the court by act of Assembly of Feb. 6, 1849. Mr. Jenkins died in Lancaster, May 24, 1858.

CAPT. WILLIAM FRAZER (1753-1817), of the Delaware Light-Horse, served in the war for the independence of the colonies, and with his first wife, Mary Clark (1763-1816), is buried in the churchyard of Draver's congregation, in St. George's Hundred, New Castle Co., Del. His virtues were those of the Christian, the soldier, the patriot, and the gentleman. His other wives were Mary O'Hara and Mary Reah. His son, Hon. William Clark Frazer (1776-1838), a native of Kent Co., Del., was graduated at Princeton College in 1797, read law in Lancaster City with William Montgomery, and was admitted to practice at the Lancaster bar as an attorney in 1801. He practiced his profession at New Castle, Del., until 1813, and then settled at Lancaster, where he continued the practice of the law until 1836, when he was appointed by President Jackson, with the consent of the Senate, one of the Supreme Court judges for the new Territory of Wisconsin, which office he creditably filled until his death, two years after. As a lawyer, Judge Frazer had few superiors. His strong mind and vigor as a debater, combined with a finished education, gained for him an early and just eminence in his profession. In all the relations of life he was distinguished for his upright deportment and unswerving integrity. His wife was Susan (1783-1836), daughter of Abraham Carpenter, of Carpenter Hall, and Salome Smith, and a granddaughter of John Carpenter and Mary Ferree. Their children were Col. Reah Frazer, born at Carpenter Hall, Lancaster Co., June 27, 1804, died in Lancaster City, Dec. 30, 1856, subject of this sketch; Abraham Carpenter Frazer, M.D., born at New Castle, Del., Feb. 2, 1806, graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1825, died at Carpenter Hall, April 26, 1828; Mary Clark Frazer, born at New Castle, Del., Nov. 27, 1808, a woman of rare culture and beauty, married Rev. James P. Wilson, D.D., April 7, 1830, and died at Neshamony, Pa., May 14, 1838; Lieut. William Frazer, born at New Castle, Nov. 21, 1815, entered West Point as a cadet in 1832, was graduated in 1836, and the same year commissioned brevet second lieutenant, Third Regiment of the Artillery of the United States. He served in Florida until 1838, was made first lieutenant, and at the time of his decease, June 27, 1844, was highest in the line of promotion. For two years and a half he was stationed at Fort McHenry, attached to the light artillery, and commanded a company at the battle of Loochahatchie, Fla., where he distinguished himself for courage and bravery.

AMOS ELLMAKER was born at "Walnut Bottom" farm, in Leacock township, Lancaster Co., Feb. 2, 1787. He was graduated at Princeton College, New Jersey. He entered as a student-at-law in the office of James Hopkins, Esq., Lancaster, then attended the law-school under the charge of Judge Reeves, at Litchfield, Conn., and finally completed his course of study in the office of Thomas Elder, at Harrisburg, Pa. He began practice at Harrisburg, and on Jan. 13, 1809, was appointed deputy attorney-general for the county of Dauphin, and held that office until July 3, 1815. He served as a representative in the State Legislature in the years 1813 and 1814, having been elected from the legislative district composed of Dauphin and Lebanon Counties. In 1814 he was elected to Congress for the congressional district consisting of the counties of Lancaster, Dauphin, and Lebanon, along with John Whiteside, of Lancaster County, but did not take his seat. Mr. Ellmaker, on the 3d day of July, 1815, was appointed and commissioned president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill, which office he resigned Dec. 21, 1816. Governor Snyder appointed him attorney-general of the State Dec. 21, 1816, and Governor Findlay re-appointed him April 1, 1818, to that office, which he continued to fill until 1819, when he was succeeded by Thomas Sergeant. On the accession of James Monroe to the Presidency, Mr. Ellmaker was tendered the appointment of Secretary of War, but he declined. In 1821 he removed to Lancaster, and there practiced law with great success. On the 6th day of May, 1828, he was appointed attorney-general of the State of Pennsylvania by Governor Shulze, and served until August, 1829, when Phillip S. Markloy succeeded him. In 1832 he was candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States on the anti-Masonic ticket, with William Wirt as candidate for the Presidency. The electoral vote of Vermont was cast for Wirt and Ellmaker. In 1834, Mr. Ellmaker was voted for as candidate for United States senator from Pennsylvania when James Buchanan was elected. On the fourth and final ballot the five candidates voted for received the following votes respectively, viz.: James Buchanan, 66; Amos Ellmaker, 31; James Clarke, 26; Joseph Lawrence, 6; Joel B. Sutherland, 1. Mr. Ellmaker continued the practice of law in Lancaster, Pa., up to the time of his death, which occurred Nov. 28, 1851. He lies buried in the churchyard of St. James' Episcopal Church, Lancaster.

WALTER FRANKLIN. [See biography of Thomas E. Franklin.]

MOLTON C. ROGERS was a native of the State of Delaware. He was graduated at Princeton College,

New Jersey, and subsequently attended the law-school at Litchfield, Conn. He removed to Lancaster, and was admitted to the bar Nov. 18, 1811. On the 16th day of April, 1818, he was appointed and commissioned recorder for the Mayor's Court of the city of Lancaster, which office he resigned Jan. 31, 1820.

Governor Shulze appointed him secretary of the commonwealth Dec. 16, 1823. On April 15, 1826, he was commissioned one of the judges of the Supreme Court, and filled that office until 1851, in which year the constitutional amendments of 1850 went into operation. Judge Rogers died in Philadelphia, Sept. 27, 1863, in the seventy-eighth year of his age.

JAMES BUCHANAN, the fifteenth President of the United States, was born near Mercersburg, in Franklin County, Pa., April 23, 1791. He was a son of James Buchanan and Elizabeth Speer. James Buchanan the elder was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, and emigrated to America in 1783, settling in Franklin County. About 1798 the family removed to the village of Mercersburg. Here young Buchanan attended school, and laid the foundation of an education which in after-years carried him to an eminence he then little dreamed of. He entered Dickinson College, at Carlisle, in 1805, and graduated with high honors in 1809. After studying law in the office of James Hopkins, at Lancaster, for three years, he was admitted to the bar in 1812. While at college he gave evidence of a remarkable mind, and he had been admitted to the bar but a little time when his talent and learning placed him in a prominent position and inducted him into a lucrative practice. In 1812 he enlisted in the service of the republic in the war with Great Britain, serving in the company of Capt. Henry Shippen. He was elected to the State Legislature in 1814, serving in the lower house, and re-elected in 1815. He was elected to Congress from his district in 1820. In politics he was at first a Federalist, but in 1828 he became a Democrat, and supported Gen. Jackson for the Presidency. He served almost continuously as a Congressman from 1820 till 1831, when he retired voluntarily and was appointed by President Jackson as Minister to Russia. He negotiated and concluded the first commercial treaty between the United States and Russia, opening the latter's ports to our commerce. He returned to the United States in 1833, and was made senator from his native State, serving from 1834 to 1845. He was appointed Secretary of State by James K. Polk in 1845, and filled that important position till 1849. After a retirement of four years he was appointed Minister to the Court of St. James in 1853. In 1856 he was nominated on the Democratic ticket for President in opposition to John C. Fremont, Republican, and Millard Fillmore, American. Mr. Buchanan was elected, receiving one hundred and seventy-four electoral votes, and was inaugurated March 4, 1857. Though from a State in which no slavery existed, Mr. Buchanan was hostile to those who opposed its extension, and was also an extreme advocate of the sovereignty of individual States. In a message to Congress in December, 1860, he blamed the people of the North for the disruption of the Union, and affirmed that the Executive had no power or right to prevent the secession of a State. The principal events of his legislative career were his advocacy of the recognition of the independence of Texas, and afterwards his support at the time of its admittance as a State; his service as chairman of the Congressional Committee on Foreign Relations; his advocacy of the "Sub-Treasury Act;" his opposition to the Fiscal Bank bill and support of an independent treasury. In 1861 he retired to his residence at Wheatland, and resided there until his death. In 1866 he published "Mr. Buchanan's Administration," a book designed to defend the acts of his administration as President. His course as the President of the United States, while condemned by the great majority of the people of the Northern States, was evidently directed by his views upon the questions at issue, and in the light of future revelations will probably be reviewed with less severe judgment. He died at Wheatland, June 1, 1868.

BENJAMIN CHAMPNEYS was born in Bridgeton, N. J., in the year 1800. He passed through the sophomore and junior years at Princeton College, New Jersey, but did not graduate. He began the study of law in the office of Chief Justice Ewing, at Trenton, N. J., but soon removed to Lancaster, Pa., and completed his legal studies in the office of George B. Porter. He was admitted to the bar April 2, 1818, being then but eighteen years of age. In 1822 he distinguished himself by an argument in a criminal case,—Commonwealth vs. John Lechler, indicted for murder.

Frederick Smith, attorney-general, appointed him deputy attorney-general for the "Mayor's Court of the City of Lancaster," and he served in that capacity from January sessions, 1824, to January sessions, 1830. He was elected representative to the State Legislature in 1825, and again in 1828. He was appointed deputy attorney-general for Lancaster County, and held that office for a period beginning with April sessions, 1830, and ending with January sessions, 1833. On July 8, 1839, he was commissioned by Governor Porter president judge of the Second Judicial District, consisting of Lancaster County, and sat upon the bench until the fall of 1842, when he resigned in consequence of his becoming a candidate for election to the State Senate. His candidacy for the State senatorship proved successful, and he served during the years 1843, 1844, and 1845 in the Senate of the State.

Governor Shunk appointed Mr. Champneys attorney-general of Pennsylvania Dec. 18, 1846, and he continued in that office until July 31, 1848, when he was succeeded by James Cooper. He was elected representative to the State Legislature for the year 1863, and a member of the State Senate for the years 1864, 1865, and 1866. The health of Judge Champneys now began to fail him, and he engaged no longer actively in the practice of the law. He died Aug. 9, 1871.

SAMUEL PARKE studied law in the office of James Buchanan, and was admitted to the bar Aug. 20, 1821. He served as deputy attorney-general of Lancaster County for a period beginning with August sessions, 1828, and ending with November sessions, 1829, and again at August and November sessions, 1838. He was representative in the State Legislature from Lancaster County in the years 1830 and 1831. He died in Lancaster, April 28, 1859.

JOHN R. MONTGOMERY was admitted to the bar Oct. 1, 1821, after a course of study in the office of James Buchanan. He died Nov. 3, 1854. No lawyer who has practiced in this county made upon his contemporaries a profounder impression than Mr. Montgomery for native capacity, comprehensive and exact legal knowledge, and strength of advocacy. A vivid tradition of his power still remains with the present generation. For a number of the last years of his life he did not appear in the courts.

WASHINGTON HOPKINS, son of James Hopkins, Esq., studied law in the office of his father, and was admitted to practice April 19, 1822. His professional career was giving abundant promise when it was prematurely closed by death. In the fall of 1832 Theophilus Hughes was under indictment for murder, and Mr. Hopkins was retained for the defense. The trial was reached on Friday, Nov. 23, 1832, and Mr. Hopkins addressed the jury on the following Sunday. His speech is remembered as one of great power and eloquence. He had made extraordinary exertions in the preparation of the case and throughout the trial. Hughes was acquitted, but his counsel suffered for his great zeal. His friends attributed the decline of Mr. Hopkins's health, which now set in, to his unusual efforts in this case. He was never able to rally, but after languishing a few months death ensued, April 21, 1833. He left behind him a bright name for brilliant oratory and power as an advocate.

ALEXANDER L. HAYES was born in Kent County, Del., March 7, 1798. After attending the Friends' Boarding-School at Smyrna, Del., he spent two years and a half at Newark Academy, from which he passed to Dover Academy, where he completed his preparation for college. While at Dover Academy he was chosen secretary of the Senate of the State of Delaware. He entered the junior class of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., and was graduated in 1812. After graduation he entered upon the study of the law in the office of the Hon. Henry M. Ridgely, of Dover, Del., and was admitted a member of the Dover bar Nov. 15, 1815. He followed his profession in Dover until 1820, when he removed to Philadelphia and was admitted to practice in the courts of Philadelphia County. He remained in Philadelphia but one year, and in April, 1821, went to Reading, Pa., in which place he continued to practice for six years. He was appointed June 27, 1827, associate judge of the District Court of the counties of Lancaster and York by Governor John Andrew Shulze, and held that office until 1833. In that year the said district was divided, and he was appointed by Governor George Wolf, under a commission of the date of May 1, 1833, president judge of the District Court of the city and county of Lancaster, and continued in office until 1849, when he resigned, and the said court was abolished by act of Feb. 6, 1849. Judge Hayes then became interested in other pursuits. He was one of the originators of the enterprise which resulted in the creation of the Conestoga Cotton-Mills, and was one of the committee of five selected in 1845 to visit and inspect the New England factories. He prepared the report of the committee favoring the immediate erection of a mill. In 1846 he was made one of the managers of the manufacturing company. In 1850 he succeeded Christopher Hager as president, and was also chosen general agent. His connection with the cotton-mills continued until 1854. In that year the office of associate law judge of the courts of Lancaster County was created, and Judge Hayes was elected to fill it. He took his seat on the first Monday of December, 1854, under a commission running for ten years. In 1864 he was again elected associate law judge, and continued in office until the first Monday of January, 1875, when he was succeeded by Hon. D. W. Patterson. Judge Hayes served in a judicial capacity for a period aggregating forty-two years. In 1873 he had the honorary degree of LL.D. conferred upon him by Franklin and Marshall College. After his retirement from office he resumed practice, and was engaged in professional business to the time of his death, which occurred suddenly July 13, 1875. He was buried in the churchyard of St. James' Church, corner of North Duke Street and East Orange Street, Lancaster, Pa. The reputation of Mr. Hayes as a judge was deservedly high. His mind was trained by extensive study in the line of his profession and of general literature. His opinions were written in a finished and polished style, and displayed logical power and accurate knowledge of legal principles. They always commanded respect, and in a number of instances were received with marked approbation by the Supreme Court of the State. Industrious, intelligent, and thoroughly impartial, he had gained the entire confidence of the community. In his administration of the duties of his high office, no question was ever raised as to the purity of his motives or the sincerity and earnestness of his efforts to attain the ends of justice.

Judge Hayes was an active citizen. He was for many years president of the board of school directors of the city of Lancaster, a trustee of the State Normal School at Millersville, and a trustee and vice-president of Franklin and Marshall College. He was also president of the Athenæum and Historical and Agricultural Society. Socially, his influence was not less happy than it was upon the bench. His extensive information, the knowledge of men gained in the course of a long life, and an abundant store of anecdote made his conversation at all times extremely interesting. His kindness of heart, consideration for the feelings of others, and polish of manner rendered intercourse with him always pleasant. In all his relations, domestic, social, and professional, he was most estimable,—a man irreproachable in his daily walk and conversation.

COL. REAH FRAZER.<sup>1</sup>—The world seems to be ruled by triumvirates. How glibly come to our tongues Pitt, Burke, and Fox; Bright, Gladstone, and Disraeli; King William, Bismark, and Von Moltke. In our own country, so far as fundamental political ideas are concerned, we have the names of Webster, Clay, and Calhoun. And so coming down to our local affairs, and writing the history of political leadership for half a century, we find it circling around three names,—Buchanan, Stevens, and Frazer. The first was an aristocrat by instinct, a democrat from circumstances; the second loved revolution; but the last was of the people and for the people. He was a democrat by education, instinct, and feeling. He stood between the cool, half-distrustful intent of Buchanan and the radicalism of Stevens, and controlled because he was loved. The fame of both Mr. Stevens and Col. Frazer is traditional. It has been written in deeds, not words. Scarcely a speech of either can be found. They live in the memories of those who knew them. Out of the meagre records it is difficult to portray the acts and manhood of such a man as Col. Frazer. But one who filled so large a place in our local, political, and professional life is entitled to some notice in a history of our people.

Col. Reah Frazer was born at Carpenter Hall, Lancaster Co., Pa., June 27, 1804. He sprang from an old and sturdy ancestry, who saw the country's birth, and many of whom fell in her battles. He was sixth in descent from Daniel Ferree, the original ancestor of the Ferrees of this and neighboring counties. His mother, Susan Carpenter, was the descendant of Dr. Henry Carpenter, the ancestor of the Carpenters of Lancaster County. If, therefore, there be anything in the principle of heredity Col. Frazer came into the world with the heritage of courage, independence, enthusiasm, mental and moral strength. His father, William Clark Frazer, was a lawyer of note, possessed of not only the love of the ordinary practitioner, but the broad knowledge which makes the liberal cultured gentleman. Early in life young Frazer was sent to school, and in a few years ran through the curriculum of the learned institutions of the day, and then chose law as his life's calling. He was nominally in the office of Amos Ellmaker, but he also benefited by the instructions of his father. He was admitted, Feb. 7, 1825, to practice in the several courts of Lancaster County. He then went to the West to live, but, disappointed with the country, returned to win fame and fortune on his native heath. There were giants at the Lancaster bar in those days who shed lustre upon the practice of the legal profession generally, and specially upon the bar of which they were members.

Col. Frazer the Lawyer.—It was in the environment of men that Col. Frazer developed into the successful lawyer and won renown, honor, and wealth. Much of his success at the bar was the result of his mental and moral convictions. Right and wrong he clearly saw. He cared nothing for technicalities or legal sophistries. He knew his client and believed him. He never appeared before a jury without a moral conviction that his client was right. This faith inspired his natural enthusiasm, and so his conclusions were given to the jury in tones and words of fiery, impetuous eloquence that overruled courts and wrung verdicts from even unwilling juries. Intensity of feeling won both friends and clients. In a few years his practice was large and wealth was his heritage. No one to-day to the older members of the bar is so familiar in recollection as Col. Frazer. Men are gray to-day who felt the kindly pressure of his hand and his ready assistance. His natural big-heartedness induced him to favor the young, and so to-day he is remembered for the kindness shown to those who have gained instruction in the legal calling. Those who know confirm the assertion that before court and jury he had few superiors, and that he stood among the leaders of his day and generation admits of no doubt.

The Politician.—Col. Frazer's sympathies were always with the masses. He believed more in common feeling than in the wisdom of the few. He was a born Democrat. His temperament suited the times. Political sentiment in 1830, was chaotic, because emotional. We were in a formation period, and it required leaders to give a right direction to feeling and impulse. He was a politician in the highest sense. He never held office and never asked it. He loved power simply because he had the elements of leadership. It was fame enough for him to direct party action, to have followers who asked his counsel and obeyed his call. On his return from Kentucky he found his party in Lancaster County leaderless. He came upon the scene and became the leader of Democracy, and for thirty years held undisputed sway. He was a man of intense personality. He held confidence by his faith and enthusiasm, not fears or compromises.

To illustrate his power over the masses it is only necessary to relate an incident of the Convention of 1844. Polk had been nominated for President and Silas Wright for Vice-President. As it was uncertain about Wright accepting, a committee was appointed to wait upon him, at Washington, to ascertain what he would do. The convention adjourned, a mass-meeting was held, and Col. Frazer was called upon to speak. For hours he talked, now lulling the crowd to awful silence, and then lashing into excitement till it rolled and swayed like the waves of the fretful sea. After all was over Gen. Robert Toombs exclaimed, "Give me that man to stump the world and I can conquer it, including the Devil!" Alas! words are sometimes traditions. No speech remains to judge the powers of Democracy's great orator. The force of temperament and circumstances combined forced Col. Frazer into an early antagonism with both Buchanan and Stevens. Burning coals and frozen embers have no sympathy. Neither has a kindly fire with the lava of the volcano. Buchanan was cold; Stevens too radical. Col. Frazer asked nothing for himself, but Buchanan would give nothing to the colonel's friends, hence commenced estrangement. It is needless to go into details. The colonel opposed Buchanan in 1852, when Pierce was nominated; again in 1856, when Buchanan won. But during the campaign the colonel laid aside his personal feelings and stuck loyally to his party, and almost his last words were in behalf of the man he had fought for a score of years.

For thirty years Col. Frazer's voice was potent in every State and National Convention. He made men. He cared not for the gratification of selfish ambition. This was his element of strength, and so to the end his power did not wane. No pigmy could wrestle with a Buchanan and a Stevens. Frazer did, and only death could still the eloquent voice and ready brain from leading an opposition few could withstand.

The Man and Family.—On Sept. 28, 1843, Col. Frazer married Abiann; daughter of Capt. John Steele (1788-1853) and Jane Porter (1791-1867), of Harmony Hall, Lancaster Co. She was born Aug. 9, 1821, and survives in 1883, residing in Lancaster City. She is a granddaughter of William Porter (1750-1809), of Lancaster County, and of Sarah Hamilton (1762-1815). Her paternal grandfather, Gen. John Steele, served in the Revolutionary war, and subsequently as collector of the port at Philadelphia. The children of Reah and Abiann Frazer are Susan Carpenter, Henry Carpenter, of Pittsburgh, a civil engineer, Reah, paymaster in the United States navy since 1875, and J. P. Wilson Frazer, a merchant in Philadelphia.

As has been said, Col. Frazer never held any office, because he did not want it. He had a horror of debt. He loved independence, and as he found a family growing up around him, he desired above all things, not only to provide abundantly for them while living, but to leave them an ample competency when he should be dead. Political life is expensive. So he chose rather to make political reputation for others than to enjoy the fruits of office or the honors thereof himself. He devoted himself to his profession exclusively, to politics as a good citizen, and an acknowledged leader of men. Wealth came to him, but he spent with a liberal hand. He was too democratic for vain show, but princely in lavishing his favors upon the poor, needy, and struggling. His house was open to all. His hearty manner and kindness won the favor of the poor. He knew half the fathers and mothers of the working classes in town, and could call their little ones by name. He made money for the glorious privilege of being independent. So the rich respected and the poor loved him.

His life was intensely active, both before court and the people. To the speculations of ordinary business life he had no time to attend. This led to some disaster. He was a large stockholder and director in the Lancaster County Savings Institution. Like many another confiding man, he trusted to the integrity of those managing the bank. They betrayed confidence, and bankruptcy followed. Col. Frazer lost thirty thousand dollars. For this he cared little, but the cry of the widow, the orphan, and the poor laborer touched his kind heart. He imagined they accused him of negligence. This touched his soul and made the bitterness of his life. He felt that his name had given prestige to the bank, and the poor he loved so well went to it on his credit. Sensitive, kind, generous, and loving, he upbraided himself, though no one chided. The weary labor of a great practice and the excitement of politics all joined to financial difficulties like the bank affair were beginning now to tell their tale. He had passed the meridian of life, and was entering the shadows. His last political fight was against the nomination of Buchanan in 1856; his last speech was for his election. His work was ending. The summons came with the dying year, and on the 30th of December, 1856, the hand of the trusted leader and the brave man fell, nerveless, dead, and the brain of the busy lawyer was stilled forever.

Though his fame is not written in book or published speeches, he still lives in happy recollections, while his deeds of kindness have made other lives successful, and these will carry his fame on silent wings to time's for evermore.

HENRY G. LONG, ex-president law judge of the courts of Lancaster, was born in the city of Lancaster, Pa., Aug. 23, 1804. He read law with Hon. G. B. Porter; was admitted as a member of the Lancaster bar in January, 1827, and although retired from the bench and practice in 1882, is the senior representative of his profession in the county. A short time after coming to the bar he was appointed by the prothonotary of the Supreme Court of the district, then comprised of the counties of Lancaster, Berks, York, Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill, holding its sessions in Lancaster, assistant prothonotary. This position brought him into relations with the most distinguished lawyers of the State, by which he acquired knowledge and experience of great advantage to him. About the same time he was, without his seeking the position, elected solicitor for the commissioners of the county. This office, by re-election annually, he held for twenty consecutive years, although at the expiration of the first year he informed the board of commissioners that he would not be a candidate for re-election, but notwithstanding his withdrawal he was continued in office. He endeavored faithfully and independently to discharge his duties under the reform measures of the board, which rendered him unpopular with a few, but attached to him others who remained firm friends, and whose friendship after the death of some of them was transferred to their successors. In 1836 he was elected a member of the convention to amend the Constitution of the State, which met at Harrisburg in May, 1837, and adjourned at Philadelphia Feb. 22, 1838. Judge Long was among the youngest members of that body, and is the only surviving one of the eight members from Lancaster County. Here he acquired something of a desire for legislative life, but determined not to assume any future position that would interfere with the practice of his profession. In the fall of 1838 a difficulty arose in the Whig party respecting the choice of a candidate for the Legislature, and he yielding to the wishes of his political friends, was nominated and elected. This session was memorable on account of the difficulties growing out of the organization of that body and the disturbed condition of affairs at the seat of government, the Executive being obliged to call out a portion of the State militia to quell the excitement. This episode in the history of the State is now known as the Buckshot war. In 1851, when the judiciary first became elective, although urged by many members of his political party, he declined seeking the judicial position, not that he was insensible to its importance and the honor conferred, but thinking his practice more advantageous to him in many respects than a seat on the bench, and it was not until he was nominated by the Whig party, without his request, that he consented to become a candidate. He was elected without opposition, no other nomination being made. In 1861, when his term was about expiring, although not nominated by any party, he was re-elected by the people regardless of their political ties, and served a second term as president judge, retiring from the bench on Dec. 4, 1871. Thus closed a judicial career of twenty years,—a career throughout marked by sound, practical sense, indefatigable industry, temperance, and courtesy in the exercise of authority, impartiality, fidelity to duty, and unswerving integrity. These qualities possessed by Judge Long, joined with his adequate legal knowledge, made him eminently distinguished in his official capacity. He inspired the whole community with confidence in his rectitude and sound judgment, and retired from the bench with the profound respect of the profession and all good men acquainted with his judicial career.

On December 9th following his retirement from the bench the Lancaster bar, at a meeting called for that purpose, Hon. Thomas E. Franklin acting as president, and W. Leaman as secretary, appointed a committee of seven to draft resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, expressive of their sentiments relative to the retirement of Judge Long as president judge of the district, among which were the following:

"The Hon. Henry G. Long, late President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster County, having refused to be a candidate for reelection, and having retired from the bench after an arduous and successful career as Judge for twenty years, the members of the Lancaster Bar, desirous of rendering a just tribute to his merits as a conscientious, upright, and learned magistrate, do resolve:

"That as members of the Lancaster Bar we cannot permit the occasion of the retirement of the Hon. Henry G. Long from the Bench to pass without some expression of our sense of the many merits by which his judicial course has been distinguished.

"That we recognize and profoundly appreciate the purity of purpose, impartiality, industry, extensive legal knowledge, and sound sense which have so conspicuously marked the performance of his judicial duties; and that we shall ever bear with us in the future a grateful remembrance of the kindness, urbanity, and readiness to accommodate which all of us in the conduct of our professional business, as well as in our general intercourse with him, have uniformly experienced at his hands."

Judge Long married, July 28, 1841, Catherine (1821-1843), daughter of John Haldeman, of Lancaster County, by whom he has an only child, Catherine Haldeman Long.

He is grandson of Nicholas Long (1730-1784), a native of Sveybrickken, Bavaria, Germany, who settled in Lancaster in 1754, when he became an active member of society, was patriotic to his adopted country during the French and Indian and Revolutionary wars, and sent two of his sons to fight for the independence of the colonies. Nicholas Long's wife, Elizabeth Gass (1736-1819), bore him six children who grew to man's estate. Jacob, father of Judge Long, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, spent most of his active life a merchant in Lancaster, and died in 1842, aged eighty-four years. Peter, second son of Nicholas, was also a soldier in that war, and served on Long Island. He died at the age of twenty-three in 1784. The other children were Christian, Frederick, Mary, and John, all dying before reaching middle life except one. Jacob Long's wife, Mary Grimler (1764-1856), a woman of great moral and Christian excellence, bore him seven children who grew to man's estate. The three eldest sons—Jacob, Peter, and John—became business men in Lancaster; Henry G., subject of this sketch, and three daughters—Mary, Sarah, and Catherine—all dying unmarried.

The Long family have been identified with the Reformed Church.

GEORGE WASHINGTON BARTON was born in the city of Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 2, 1807. He left his home in boyhood, being impelled by a desire to see the world, and, like the majority of adventurers in those days, betook himself to the Mississippi Valley. Having reached Nashville, he became the assistant editor of a journal published in that city. This position aided him materially in making and cultivating the acquaintance of the higher class of residents, and among them Gen. Jackson. When but twenty years of age he returned home, and at the suggestion of Hon. James Buchanan began the study of law in his office. He was admitted to the bar in 1830. In 1838 he was appointed by Governor Ritner assistant district attorney with C. Wallace Brooke, and filled the position to the satisfaction of the court and government. He was afterwards commissioned president judge of the Court of General Sessions of the city and county of Philadelphia, the jurisdiction of which was restricted to cases of misdemeanor. He remained on the bench less than three years, and then resigned the office of judge and resumed the practice of law in Philadelphia, where he attained prominence and enjoyed a lucrative practice. In 1849 he sailed for San Francisco, and, having reached that place in safety, opened an office. He was rapidly acquiring business and rising in fame, when, after a residence of but little more than a year, he died suddenly. His reputation for brilliant oratory and erratic character still survives in his early home, and the memory of him is often revived by his contemporaries, who speak of him with admiration, wonder, and pity.

THOMAS EMLIN FRANKLIN, ex-attorney-general of Pennsylvania, and a retired lawyer of Lancaster, was born in Philadelphia April 20, 1810. He obtained his early preparatory education at the public schools in Lancaster, and at the Mathematical School of Joshua Hoopes, of Downingtown, Chester Co., and entered Yale College in September, 1824, from which he was graduated with honors in 1828. He was also there admitted a member of the "Phi Beta Kappa" and "Chi Delta Theta" Societies, then an honorable distinction, and evidence of superior scholarship. After leaving college he began reading law with Washington Hopkins, his brother-in-law, in Lancaster, was admitted to the bar in 1831, the year of reaching his majority, and at once opened a law-office in Lancaster, where he has spent his active life, a period of fifty years, in the practice of his profession. He has been a member of the American Bar Association since its organization, and a member of the General Council of the association for Pennsylvania.

In 1838 he was appointed district attorney for the Mayor's Court of the city of Lancaster, and served for three years. His ability as an advocate, and his quick and just construction of the law soon gave him a place among the best talent at the Lancaster bar. In April, 1851, Governor Johnston appointed him attorney-general of Pennsylvania, which place he ably filled until the end of the administration, in January, 1852. By appointment a second time, in 1855, by Governor Pollock, he continued the office until 1858, retiring with the Governor. In 1844 he was the Whig delegate from Lancaster County to the Baltimore Convention that nominated Henry Clay for the Presidency, and in 1848 to the National Convention that nominated Gen. Zachary Taylor for the Presidency, and again in 1864, in conjunction with the Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, to the Baltimore Convention which nominated Abraham Lincoln for re-election. In 1847 he was chairman of the Whig State Central Committee, and in 1861 he was appointed one of the delegates by Governor Curtin, to what was popularly known as the "Peace Convention," at Washington. Mr. Franklin was one of the original directors of the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad Company, and its solicitor; was for many years a director of the Farmers' National Bank, of Lancaster, president of the Lancaster Fire Insurance Company since its organization until February, 1883; besides being a director of several other companies, was junior warden of St. James Episcopal Church for several years, senior warden of St. John's Episcopal Church for many years, was a member of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which met at Baltimore in October, 1871, and in 1880 he was chosen chancellor of the Diocese of Central Pennsylvania. In June, 1874, Franklin and Marshall College conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D. He married, Nov. 7, 1837, Serena A. (1816-1877), only daughter of Col. George Mayer (1781-1862) a merchant of Lancaster, member of the State Legislature in 1835, and colonel of the Sixty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania militia in the War of 1812-14. He was a son of George Ludwig Mayer, who came to America in 1752 from Ulm, Germany, and landed at Annapolis, Md. Their children are Capt. George M., a graduate of Yale College, was admitted to practice law in 1861, and is a member of the mercantile firm of George M. Steinman & Co., Lancaster. He enlisted as first lieutenant, Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in October, 1862, was soon promoted captain, and afterwards served as adjutant-general, with the rank of captain, on the staff of Maj.-Gen. William B. Franklin. He served for two and one-half years, the regiment being a part of the Army of the Potomac, and was in the battles of Chantilly, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, and while in the Army of the Gulf, in the battles of Mansfield, Pleasant Hill, and Sabine River. Mary Smith, wife of Rev. Francis D. Hoskins. Serena M., wife of Hugh M. North, a lawyer of Lancaster. Thomas Walter, a farmer in Virginia. Frances Olivia, wife of Smith P. Galt.

Henry Smith. Anna Emlen. Walter Mayer, a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, admitted to practice June 22, 1875, and a lawyer in Lancaster. Annette, wife of John W. B. Bausman, a lawyer in Lancaster, died June 18, 1882. Dr. Charles M., a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College in the class of 1877, graduate of Pennsylvania University in the class of 1880, and completing his medical studies in Vienna. Blanche and Robert Leighton.

Henry Franklin, the progenitor of the family in America, settled on Long Island, from England, during the latter part of the seventeenth century, and was a member of the Society of Friends. His son, Thomas (1703-1773), born in Flushing, L. I., married Mary Pearsall (1703-1786), who bore him four sons and two daughters, of whom Thomas (1734-1797) married, in 1764, Mary Rhoads, who died May 2, 1779. He removed from New York in 1775, and was a merchant in Philadelphia for many years. During the Revolutionary war he was appointed commissary of prisoners at Philadelphia. He served in that capacity, but objection was made to his action by the Society of Friends, of which he was a member. His children were Elizabeth, Benjamin, Ann, Thomas, Walter, and Samuel, of whom Walter (1773-1836), born in New York, became a distinguished advocate and jurist. He was admitted to the bar in Philadelphia in 1792, rapidly rose to the front rank of his profession, and was appointed attorney-general of Pennsylvania Jan. 9 1809. On Jan. 26, 1811, he was appointed president judge of the Second Judicial District of the State, and settled in Lancaster, where he continued to reside during his incumbency of that office, and until his death,—having been upon the bench a period of twenty-five years. His wife, Anne (1784-1852), whom he married July 13, 1802, was a daughter of James Emlen and Phœbe Pierce. Her father was a highly-esteemed and accepted preacher of the Society of Friends, whose life-sketch was published in the "Memorials of Deceased Friends of Pennsylvania from 1788 to 1878." James Emlen (1760-1798) was great-grandson of George Emlen, who came from England with William Penn in 1682, and settled in Philadelphia. The children of Judge Walter Franklin and Anne Emlen who grew to maturity are: Sarah (1801-1880) became the wife of the eminent physician and surgeon, Dr. John L. Atlee, of Lancaster; Mary (1804- ), widow of the late Washington Hopkins, a lawyer of Lancaster; Thomas Emlen Franklin, subject of this sketch; Dr. James Emlen Franklin (1812-50), a physician in Philadelphia, died there; Rev. Walter Franklin (1815-1857), an Episcopal clergyman, who served the church faithfully at York and La Porto for many years, dying at the latter place; Emily ( -1850), was the wife of Edward C. Darlington, and died leaving children,—Anne, wife of Amos S. Henderson, a banker in Lancaster; Elizabeth Rhoads, who died unmarried; and Col. Emlen Franklin, born April 7, 1827, graduated at Yale College in the class of '47, read law with Nathaniel Ellmaker, of Lancaster, and has practiced at the Lancaster bar since his admission, in 1850. He was district attorney of Lancaster County from 1859 to 1862, a member of the State Legislature in 1855, register of wills, 1863 to 1866, and in 1862 went to the front as colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was engaged in the battles of Chantilly, Fredericksburg, and Chancellorsville.

DAVID WATSON PATTERSON, associate law judge of Lancaster County, Pa., is a native of Rapho township, where the family homestead has been successively owned and occupied for several generations. He obtained his early education at Lititz, and his preparatory classical course at Moscow Academy, Chester County, and the old Milton Academy, Northumberland County, and entered Washington College (now Washington and Jefferson) in the fall of 1837, from which he was graduated with the usual honors in the fall of 1839. Immediately after leaving college he began reading law, and in the spring of 1840 became a student in the law-office of one of Lancaster's most distinguished lawyers, John R. Montgomery, with whom he remained until his admission to practice in 1842. For about one year following he was the law partner of his preceptor, since which time he has been without an associate in business. Judge Patterson in his early practice took high rank in his profession, and became so favorably known in the county that he was chosen as the Whig candidate for the State Legislature in the fall of 1847, was elected, and served one term.

Resuming his practice and refusing re-election, he was elected district attorney in the fall of 1853, and served for three years, an able and fearless prosecutor in the courts of Lancaster County.

He was active and among the leaders in organizing the Republican party in 1855-1856, and in 1872 was elected upon the Republican ticket from the Ninth Senatorial District a member of the Pennsylvania Constitutional Convention, which met November 12th of that year at Harrisburg; adjourned to Philadelphia after a few weeks, and closed its session in the fall of 1873. Under the new Constitution, he was elected in the fall of 1874 associate law judge of Lancaster County for a term of ten years, and is the incumbent of that office in 1883. In this responsible position Judge Patterson has retained the high respect and confidence of the profession and citizens of the county for his sound sense, ready discrimination between right and wrong, unflinching integrity on the bench, in his honest judgment of justice to all, and for courtesy yet firmness in his opinions. He married, in December, 1846, Mary R., daughter of Henry Y. Slaymaker, an ironmaster and lawyer of York, Pa. Their children are James Rodney, read law with his father for two years, after graduating at Franklin and Marshall College, and died June 18, 1874, aged twenty-six years; Henry Slaymaker, a merchant in New York City; Anne Cochran, wife of Judge John B. McPherson, of the district of Dauphin and Lebanon counties; and David W. Patterson.

This branch of the Patterson family is descended from Arthur Patterson, of Scotch-Irish extraction, who came from the North of Ireland in 1724, and settled with his wife, Ann Scott, in Rapho township, then a wilderness. He was collector of excise in 1745-48, appointed by George II. Three of his sons, Samuel, James, and William, all served their country in the war of the Revolution, the latter being taken prisoner by the British and died in the prison-ship on Delaware Bay; the two former were in the battle of Princeton, and members of the Committee of Safety for Lancaster County in 1775.

Col. James (1775-1863), son of James above mentioned, was the father of Judge Patterson. He was a public-spirited and influential citizen, and resided on the homestead of his ancestors in Rapho township. He commanded a regiment of Pennsylvania volunteers in the War of 1812 as lieutenant-colonel, and was made one of Gen. Nathaniel Watson's aids on his staff, with the rank of colonel. He represented Lancaster County in the State Legislature in 1817-18 and 1832-33. By his wife, Mary, daughter of Dr. John Watson, of Donegal, whom he married in 1805, and who died in 1866, he had seven children, five of whom grew to man's estate,—James Agnew Patterson (a retired farmer of Mount Joy township), Judge David Watson Patterson, Anna Mary (deceased, was the wife of Robert S. McIlvain, of Paradise township), Harriet B. (wife of Dr. J. L. Zeigler, of Mount Joy), and Rachel Jane Patterson.

THADDEUS STEVENS, the "great commoner," as he was popularly called, was born in Danville, Caledonia Co., Vt., on April 4, 1792. His early education was obtained in the common schools and at Peacham Academy. His parents being poor, he taught school during vacation in order to enable himself to obtain an education. He entered the University of Vermont in 1810, and when that institution suspended on account of the War of 1812 he proceeded to Dartmouth. Here he graduated with honor in 1814, and immediately entered the office of Judge Mattocks, and commenced the study of the profession upon which he had decided as his life's work. After remaining here for some time he removed to York, Pa., in 1815, and while continuing his legal studies taught school at the academy of Dr. Perkins. When ready to apply for admittance to the bar he found it impossible to gain admittance in York County, as the members of that court had passed a resolution that "no person should be recognized as a lawyer who had followed any other profession while preparing for admission." This was not only a direct personal attack upon Mr. Stevens, but an insult to all those who were endeavororing by their unaided exertions to fit themselves for a lawyer's life. Nothing daunted, however, he proceeded to Harford County, Md., and was there admitted. He then proceeded to Gettysburg, Pa., and there opened an office. Here he at first passed through the ordinary experiences of a young lawyer's career, and the causes for which he was retained were of little moment. After about two years' practice the turning-point in his career was reached. A murder had been committed, and the case was so desperate that none of the older attorneys would take an interest in it. At last the defense was given to Stevens, and he entered upon it with all the energy of his nature. Though his client was not acquitted, Stevens' reputation was made. His masterly management of the case, and the clearness and force with which he presented its salient points, and his masterly manner of presenting them to the jury, won for him the encomiums of all his hearers and a reputation that was lasting. From this time there was no lack of clients nor causes.

His first entry into political life was as a delegate to the National Anti-Masonic Convention of 1831. He was elected to the lower House of the State Legislature, and took his seat in 1833. About this time the agitation for the repeal of the new common-school law was at its height, and as Mr. Stevens was known to be opposed to its repeal, in 1835 he was returned to the Legislature from his county with but a small majority and under positive instructions to support and vote for its repeal. This he refused to do, and so far was he from supporting the bill that he became one of its most prominent and active opponents. At this time Mr. Stevens was forty-three years of age and in the full vigor of his intellect and manhood. His speech in opposition to the bill was one of the most effective of his life, and many who were pledged to the support of the bill now became its opponents. The bill was defeated and the common-school system of Pennsylvania was saved. Mr. Stevens served in the Legislature till 1841, when he retired to private life and devoted himself to his profession. After the close of the session in 1842, desiring a larger field of operations, he removed to Lancaster, where his reputation had preceded him. Here his success was instant and complete. In conducting causes and in his speeches before a jury he used no notes and depended entirely upon his memory. His arguments were no great exhibitions of eloquence and rhetorical effort, but short, concise, comprehensive, and effective. He seemed to be able to grasp the most prominent and telling points and to impress them with convincing force upon the minds of the jury.

In 1848 he was nominated by the Whig party from the Lancaster district, and was elected. He immediately entered the arena of political strife, and became a candidate for Speaker, an unusual thing for a man serving his first term. The great question of the day was the anti-slavery issue. Texas had been recently annexed against the protest of the North, and in violation of promises of the South. The most prominent men of the Anti-Slavery party in the House at this time were Seward, John P. Hale, Giddings, Chase, and Horace Mann. These were all men of great talent and ability, but were inclined to act upon the defensive. What was needed was a moral catapult. This was found in Stevens, who from the first was slavery's most aggressive and harassing foe. His first great speech against slavery was made Feb. 20, 1850, and created a furor, the effect of which was felt long afterwards. From 1853 to 1859 he remained in private life at Lancaster, following his profession. He was elected to Congress by the Republican party, and took his seat Dec. 5, 1859. He immediately became the leader of his party. From the beginning of the Thirty-seventh Congress he became chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and during the whole period of the civil war filled this most important position. He was one of, if not the first, advocates of the emancipation of the slaves, and in a speech made early in 1861 said that this must be done, and the slaves of rebels used to assist in liberating their race. On Dec. 2, 1861, he introduced a bill to emancipate all slaves of rebel owners, but the time was not yet come.

The entire character and life of this great man may almost be summed up in a few words spoken by himself. Speaking of an opponent in debate, he describes him as a man upon whose tombstone a fitting epitaph might be, "Here rests the ablest and most pertinacious defender of slavery and opponent of liberty," and of his ambition to make a fitting one for himself, "Here lies one who never rose to any eminence, and who only courted the low ambition to have it said that he had tried to ameliorate the condition of the poor, the lowly, the downtrodden of every race, and language, and color;" and, further, "I shall be content with such an eulogy upon his lofty tomb and such an inscription upon my humble grave, to trust our memories to the judgment of after-ages." After the close of the war he introduced the famous Reconstruction Resolution of 1865, and was made chairman of the committee appointed under it. He was chairman of the committee that reported the resolution in favor of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, and was appointed one of the committee of two to present that impeachment to the Senate.

One of his last acts in Congress was the championship of the free-school system in the District of Columbia. Thus, one of his first and also of his last actions as a legislator was in the advancement of education. He remained in official life almost up to the day of his death, though ill, feeble, and aged. He died at Washington on Aug. 11, 1868, and is buried in Lancaster, Pa. An eulogy on the dead statesman was pronounced by Charles Sumner before the Senate, Dec. 18, 1868, and it was a glowing tribute to the life, character, and works of this great and good man. In referring to his work in the advancement of education, Mr. Sumner said, "Not a child conning his spelling-book beneath the humble rafters of a village school who does not owe him gratitude." The epitaph over his grave was written by himself, and illustrates fully his character,—“I repose in this quiet, secluded spot not from any natural preference for solitude, but, finding other cemeteries limited by charter rules as to race, I have chosen it that I might be enabled to illustrate in my death the principles which I have advocated through a long life,—equality of man before his Creator.”

A. HERR SMITH was born in Manor township, Lancaster Co., Pa., March 7, 1815. By the loss of his parents, while yet under eight years of age, he was placed under the care of his paternal grandmother, with whom he spent a large part of his minority when absent from school. His preparatory education was obtained at the Lititz Academy, under the eminent teacher, Professor John Beck, for two years, with Joshua Scott, of Lancaster, in surveying and engineering for one year, at Franklin Institute and Harrington College, and he was graduated at Dickinson College in the class of 1840. He read law with John R. Montgomery, a prominent lawyer of Lancaster, and was admitted to the bar Oct. 20, 1842. He at once opened a law-office in Lancaster, and has enjoyed a large and lucrative practice until the present time, a period of over forty years, being, in 1883, one of the oldest, yet most active, members of the Lancaster bar.

As a lawyer, Mr. Smith is well read in his profession, impresses both judge and jury with his knowledge of the law and the facts, is always well prepared in whatever case he undertakes, a safe and judicious counselor, and characteristic of him is his integrity, not only in his professional career but in all the acts of his public life. He was elected on the Whig ticket and served in the lower branch of the State Legislature in 1844-45, during which time he was the author of the bill providing for the payment of the interest on the State debt by raising an annual tax of one-half a mill upon each dollar assessed, which met with strong opposition by those who openly advocated repudiation. Mr. Smith earnestly and fearlessly held up the honor of the State to the payment of its just debts, the bill became a law, and had the effect of raising the credit of the commonwealth from thirty-three cents on the dollar to a par value of its bonded indebtedness. He also advocated the sale of the public works, which were unproductive, which also became a law, introduced the bill for the abolition of the Mayor's Court, which, although vetoed by the Governor several times, finally passed and received executive sanction, and he refused to sanction the renewal of the District Court when it had expired by limitation, and this also was abolished.

In the fall of 1845 he was elected to the State Senate, and served for the years 1846, 1847, and 1848. While a member of the Senate he earnestly supported the bill making the common-school system obligatory throughout the State, and also the bill entitled "Rights of Married Women," the former becoming a law in 1846, the latter in 1848. Returning to the practice of his profession, he uninterruptedly followed it until the fall of 1872, when he was elected on the Republican ticket to the Forty-third Congress of the United States, and by re-election served in the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-eighth Congresses, a high compliment of so long a continuous service for the people, never before paid to a Congressional representative from Lancaster County, except Thaddeus Stevens.

Mr. Smith did efficient service as a member of the Committee on War Claims for six years, and served on the Committees on Appropriations, Pensions, and other important committees. He took a bold stand against constructive mileage of the members of Congress, showing its abuses, which were to some extent corrected; favored the payment of pensions directly by the Treasurer of the United States instead of through agents, thereby saving money to the government, and at the same time protecting it from losses; has been an earnest advocate of protective tariff as a protection to the laboring man, and the easiest way to raise a revenue to pay the obligations of the government; and he opposed ably on legal grounds the creation of the Electoral Commission, holding that the Vice-President, under the Constitution, was the custodian of the returns, who must present the same to the two Houses when they meet in convention, and have them opened in their presence and counted, neither House having any right to control the result, their presence being necessary only as witnesses of the result. Mr. Smith favored the resumption of specie payment by the government, and of coining silver for fractional currency only, and opposed the coinage of needless silver dollars. He has ever been a strong adherent of rigid economy and reform in all the departments of the State and National government, and with patient attention and scrupulous fidelity has watched the interests of his constituents.

Soon after his graduation Mr. Smith was elected a member of the board of trustees of Dickinson College, and later he was chosen a member of the board of trustees of Franklin and Marshall College.

He was never married, and has an only sister, Eliza E. Smith. His father, Jacob Smith (1778-1819), was an intelligent and scientific millwright, made his own drawings and plans, and resided in Pequea township. His mother, Elizabeth Herr, a daughter of Abraham Herr and Barbara Eshleman, was a native of Manor township, and died in 1827. His paternal grandfather, Jacob, owned several hundred acres of land in Pequea township, and was also a millwright, and his father, progenitor of the family, came from Switzerland and settled in this county about 1710.

ELLIS LEWIS was born in Lewisberry, York Co., Pa., May 16, 1798. He was originally a printer and editor. He then studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1822. In 1824 he was appointed deputy attorney-general for Lycoming County, Pa. In 1832 he was elected to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, where his conspicuous talents attracted the attention of Governor Wolf; he was made attorney-general for the State in 1833. Later, in the same year, he was appointed president judge of the Eighth Judicial District. On the 14th day of January, 1843, Judge Benjamin Champneys having resigned, he was commissioned as president judge of the Second Judicial District, composed of Lancaster County. In 1851 he was elected judge of the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania, and resigned the office of president judge of the Second Judicial District after the election held in October of that year. In December, 1854, he became chief justice. In 1857 he declined the unanimous nomination of the Democratic Convention for re-election to the Supreme Court, and retired to private life. He was appointed, in 1858, one of the commissioners to revise the criminal code of Pennsylvania. His acquaintance with medical jurisprudence gained for him the honorary degree of M.D. from the Philadelphia College of Medicine. He also received the degree of LL.D. from Transylvania University, and from Jefferson College. The opinions of Judge Lewis upon important and difficult questions of law have frequently been cited with approval by the most eminent writers of his profession. He is the author of an "Abridgment of the Criminal Law of the United States." Judge Lewis devoted considerable time to lighter studies, and contributed to periodical literature. He was a profound jurist, and a man of versatile talents. He died March 19, 1871.

JESSE LANDIS was born in Lancaster, Oct. 16, 1821. He studied law in the office of Emanuel C. Reigart, Esq., and was admitted to the bar Sept. 13, 1848. In 1861 he was elected by the commissioners county solicitor, and held that office by successive re-elections until 1869. He prepared a supplement to "Linn's Analytical Index," a work of much value to the profession, which was published in 1873. He died Dec. 28, 1873.

JAMES L. REYNOLDS was born in March, 1822. After a collegiate course at Marshall College, Mercersburg, he entered as a student-at-law in the office of John R. Montgomery, Esq., Lancaster, but completed his studies with John Weidman, Lebanon, Pa. He was admitted to the Lancaster bar Nov. 22, 1844. In 1854, Governor Packer offered him a position on the Supreme Bench, but he did not accept. In 1862 he was appointed superintendent of the draft. On Nov. 6, 1863, Governor Curtin appointed him quartermaster-general for Pennsylvania, and he served in that capacity until the end of the war. In 1872 he was elected on the Republican ticket a member at large of the Convention which framed the Constitution of 1874.

He did not engage in active practice during the latter years of his life. He died April 5, 1880.

ISAAC E. HIESTER was born May 29, 1824. After the usual course of academic preparation he entered the freshman class of Yale College in 1838, and was graduated in 1842. He then became a student-at-law in the office of Hon. Thomas E. Franklin, and was admitted to the bar Sept. 13, 1845. He was appointed in 1848 district attorney for Lancaster County by Attorney-General Darragh, and held that office for a little more than three years. In 1852 he was elected by the Whig party of the county to the Thirty-third Congress, and took part in the great debates upon the Kansas-Nebraska bill. In 1854 he was nominated by the remnants of the same party, but failed of election. He was again a candidate in 1856, supported by the Democracy, and was defeated. From that time until his death, Feb. 6, 1871, he neither held nor sought any public position, but devoted himself to his profession.

Mr. Hiester early acquired and firmly maintained a foremost position at the Lancaster bar, and was entitled to a high rank among the prominent lawyers of the State. Possessed naturally of a good mind, he had the advantage of the best education the collegiate institutions of the country could afford, and his mental discipline was continued throughout life by self-imposed study, chiefly in the line of his profession. His efforts before the court evinced familiar acquaintance with general legal principles, thorough special knowledge of the case in hand, lucid arrangement of matter, strong argumentation, and precision and compactness of statement. Avoiding general declamation and rhetorical flourish, he addressed himself to the judgment of jurors, seeking to secure a verdict not by inflammatory appeals to their prejudices and passions, nor even to their sympathies, but by a clear presentation of facts, justness of inference, and resources of argument. He manifested a uniform strength at all points in the progress of a case. Vigilant and circumspect in the use and scrutiny of all technical forms, grasping firmly all matter that bore favorably upon his own side of the question at issue, and anticipating all that could be arrayed against him, opposing counsel could only wrench a verdict or decision from him by the inherent strength of their case and adequate maintenance of it. The spirit in which he conducted a trial was admirable. It was marked by perfect courtesy of manner, entire fairness, candid dealing with court, jury, and antagonists, a contempt of all artifice, and a determination to stand upon the merits of the case. His whole professional career was distinguished by unswerving integrity, a high sense of honor, and for that elevated professional standard which he ever upheld.

The Lancaster bar shortly after his death, at a meeting called for that purpose, among other resolutions, passed the following:

Resolved, That we have heard with profound sorrow the death of our late brother, Isaac E. Hiester, who, in all the relations of an active life, personal and official and professional, exhibited such rare ability, such universal courtesy, and such rare unsullied and uncompromising integrity as gained for him a successful and well-merited career of usefulness and the respect and admiration of his associates."

His wife, Mary T., deceased, was a daughter of Benjamin Eshleman, of Greenland, Lancaster Co., and a sister of B. Frank Eshleman, a lawyer of Lancaster.

OLIVER JESSE DICKEY, a distinguished member of the Lancaster County bar, was born April 6, 1828, in Beaver County, Pa., and died at Lancaster, April 21, 1876. His father, Hon. John Dickey, was a member of Congress from the Beaver district from 1843 to 1845, and from 1847 to 1849, and at the time of his death, March 14, 1853, he was United States marshal for the Western District of Pennsylvania. He had also served as a member of the old board of Canal Commissioners, and represented his district in the State Senate. He was a man of great prominence in the State, and his son, Oliver, early in life manifested the moulding influence of his father's pursuits and tastes.

Oliver Jesse Dickey was educated at the Beaver Academy and at Dickinson College, Carlisle. Leaving college one year short of graduation, he read law with James Allison, a leading lawyer of Beaver, and was admitted a member of the Beaver County bar. Soon afterward, in 1846, he came to Lancaster with a letter of introduction to Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, who kindly received him and proffered him the use of his office. Mr. Stevens soon perceived that the young lawyer was made of solid material, and employed him at a fixed salary to attend to a certain part of his business. This was an instance of a rare mind meeting with rare opportunities, and Mr. Dickey was thus afforded an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the practical business of the profession, and rapidly did he profit by their advantages. After a few years he became the law partner of Mr. Stevens, which relation continued until 1857, when he found it necessary from the press of business to open an office of his own. In the fall of 1856 he was elected district attorney for Lancaster County, an office he filled with great credit and ability. Upon the death of Mr. Stevens, in 1858, Mr. Dickey was nominated and elected to fill his unexpired term in Congress, as well as for the subsequent term of two years; and in 1870, after a warm and spirited contest, he was again elected to Congress.

As a lawyer Mr. Dickey ranked among the first practitioners of the Lancaster bar. He was well read in his profession, and in the trial of a cause he had no superior. His arguments before a jury were sound, logical, and convincing, and he was able to bring out of a case all that was in it. At times violent in invective and withering in denunciation, he would often attain the most eloquent heights, and, again, address a jury in the most pathetic manner. At a meeting of the Lancaster bar, following his decease, at which Hon. Thomas E. Franklin presided, Samuel H. Reynolds, a leading member of the bar, said, "I am here with his fellow-brethren to attest the fact that he was always a high-toned gentleman, and that his word was as good as his bond. He united with a high sense of professional honor such a bold, defiant interest in his cause that every one who heard him was struck with his true eloquence, now terrific as the thunder and scathing as the lightning, and again subdued into the most quiet and tender pathos. In argument he was clear, sound, and logical, inviting the attention of his hearers and carrying conviction to the court and jury. He presented his case with such wonderful energy that it was always a finished piece of work, a result attributable to his quick perception, which gave him complete mastery of all its details. Who has not witnessed the readiness of his resources and his quickness to rally from discomfiture? No hope was too forlorn for him to lead, and his greatest triumphs were in cases which men of less courage would have shrunk from undertaking. He had wonderful tact in the application of legal principles, and his power of persuasive eloquence, peculiar force of action, and wonderfully strong diction made him a formidable adversary. Well may it be said of him, 'Whatever side he was on had a 'living force.'" Declining a third re-election for Congress, he devoted himself mostly to his profession until his death, although he was made a delegate to the State Republican Convention which met at Harrisburg in 1874, was the author and mover of the resolution that brought Gen. Hartranft prominently before the public as a candidate for the Presidency, and he was chosen a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Cincinnati, which duty to fill devolved upon his alternate, B. F. Eshleman, on account of his death.

Altogether he was a member of fifteen State and two National Conventions, one of them being that which met at Chicago, and nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency. In the State Convention at Harrisburg in 1874 he made a very effective speech against a "third term" for President of the United States, in which he said, "I don't believe that Gen. Grant has such an aspiration, but if he has, then it is time for the great Republican party to say one and all that they will stand by the precedent of Washington and the fathers of the Republic, a precedent that has become the common law of the nation."

Mr. Dickey was exceedingly liberal in his opinions, never permitting difference of sentiment to alter his conduct towards a personal friend, and during the dark days of the Rebellion he could accord to individuals of different opinions from his own the same honesty of sentiment as he himself entertained. During the late civil war he was in the service as lieutenant-colonel of the Tenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, serving until the expiration of the time for which the regiment enlisted. He again served twice, each time as colonel of regiments in the Pennsylvania volunteer militia. He was one of the original owners and builders of the Fulton cotton-mill, and retained an interest in it for five years, and he was an ex-president of the Shiffler Hose Company.

Mr. Dickey was known throughout the State as an able advocate, and his fame as Congressman reached throughout the United States, not only for the important part he took while a member of Congress, but as the successor to the great Pennsylvania commoner, Thaddeus Stevens. Mr. Dickey was well versed in English literature and classical lore, and his occasional references thereto, either in private conversation or in the argument of causes, were always apt, and displayed a refined taste in the selection of his reading. On one occasion when traveling across the continent in company with several of his friends from Lancaster and other parts of the State, after viewing for a short time in profound silence the sublimities of the great Yosemite Valley from Inspiration Point, he broke the silence by asking the guide, "Which is called the Sentinel Dome?" He was pointed out one of the smaller peaks, when he said, addressing Messrs. Reynolds and North, "This is wonderful, surely there is a God, and the great architect of the universe has made El Capitan yonder the silent sentinel of the earth." In private life he was a genial and sincere friend, sympathizing with the needy, and assisting them with his means and counsel. In the social circle he was a most agreeable and refined gentleman. With a thorough knowledge of polite literature, and a high appreciation of the amenities of social life, he was in the drawing-room the centre of an admiring and appreciative circle, and in his own family loved by a devoted wife and children. In 1857 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Christian Shenk, of Lancaster County, and granddaughter of Rudolph Shenk, of Erie, Pa., and sister of the late Maj. R. B. Shenk, of Lancaster City. Their children are Maria Elvira, Elizabeth (died in June, 1880, aged nineteen), John, and Anna Dickey.

JOHN B. LIVINGSTON, president law-judge of Lancaster County, was born in Salisbury township, Oct. 14, 1821. He obtained his early education under the private instruction of his father, at the common school, and at the select school of Rev. P. I. Timlow, and for four terms was a teacher in the public schools. At the age of twenty-four he began reading law with Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, of Lancaster, and after two years' close application to study was admitted to the bar Jan. 26, 1848. From this date until 1871 he practiced his profession in Lancaster, serving one term (three years) as district attorney, being elected in 1862. In the fall of 1871 he was elected president law-judge of Lancaster County, and by re-election in 1881 is the present incumbent of that high office. At the Republican Convention at Harrisburg in the fall of 1882, Judge Livingston's name was favorably presented for judge of the Supreme Court of the State.

Outside his professional duties, Judge Livingston has been closely identified with the various local interests of Lancaster City and County. He was president of the Young Men's Christian Association for one year, a member of the board of trustees of Franklin and Marshall College for a number of years, and he is a member of the board of trustees of the State Normal School at Millersburg on the part of the State, being first elected by the stockholders, and subsequently appointed by the State. As a lawyer, Judge Livingston ranks among the most talented members of the Lancaster bar. As a judge, he enjoys the honor of having the fullest confidence, not only of the legal profession, but of his fellow-citizens generally, for his impartial dispensation of justice to all.

He married, in 1853, Anna Margaret, daughter of Christian Swentzel, of Lancaster City.

His parents, John Livingston (1791-1853) and Jane F. (1796-1876), a daughter of Edward Graham, were residents of Salisbury township; and his father, who followed the occupation of a farmer, was a man of good intellect, a teacher, and was a justice of the peace. Their surviving children are Judge John B.; Sarah, wife of Rev. Valentine Gray, a Methodist minister; William G., a farmer in Salisbury township; Mary B., wife of William D. Hoar, of Salisbury; Benjamin P., firm of Kauffman & Livingston, merchants at the Gap; Rachel J., wife of Rev. J. A. Cooper, a Methodist minister; David H., of Philadelphia; Lydia A.; and Clement A., of the firm of John Long & Co., Philadelphia.

His paternal grandfather, William, died in 1836, and was also a farmer in Salisbury township. He was a Quaker in religious faith. Other brothers of William were Thomas and Isaiah, who settled in the West, and John, who died in Lancaster County in 1832.

HUGH M. NORTH, lawyer, was born in Juniata County, Pa., May 7, 1826. He is of Scotch-Irish descent, and second son of the late John North, of Juniata County. His mother was a daughter of Hugh McAlister, whose father was one of the original settlers of the county, the founder of McAlisterville, and a major in the Revolutionary war. Hugh M., the subject of this sketch, enjoyed exceptional educational advantages, and at the age of twenty was graduated with honor from the academy at Mifflinburg, Pa. Choosing the legal profession, he entered the office of Judge Casey, a prominent lawyer of Union County, who was elected to Congress in 1848, and subsequently appointed chief justice of the United States Court of Claims. He studied with thoroughness and assiduity the course of law prescribed, and passing a most creditable examination, was admitted to the bar of Union County in March, 1849, and on August 30th of the same year was admitted to the bar of Lancaster County. He settled in Columbia, and immediately began the practice of his profession. His energy, industry, and intellectual attainments soon brought him into prominence, and early in his career he acquired a large and lucrative practice, which has steadily increased, yielding him a handsome fortune. His services are engaged in nearly every important suit in his district, and frequently in important suits in other parts of the State, and many of his leading cases are reported in the legal publications of the State. Among the eminent lawyers of Pennsylvania he enjoys a high rank, being distinguished no less as an advocate than for his sound learning as a jurist and the wisdom of his counsel. The ability and thoroughness with which he takes hold of the subject matter in litigation, his rare legal acumen, his skill in marshaling the facts of his cause, and withal the force of a commanding presence have made him singularly successful in trials before courts and juries. Complete research and thorough preparation have characterized his whole professional career. Having a tenacious memory, he is familiar with decisions bearing upon almost any question that may arise, and being of a generous disposition, he takes pleasure in assisting the younger members of his profession, by whom he is frequently consulted. At the bar of his adoption his pre-eminence is conceded. Upon the organization of the Lancaster Bar Association in 1880, for "the improvement of the law, and of its administration," etc., he was unanimously elected its president, and has been re-elected annually to this time. He is a member of the American Bar Association, and for several years has been a member of its council for the State of Pennsylvania. Active and public-spirited, he has always taken a deep interest in all political questions, local and national.

Soon after settling in Columbia, he held several offices in the borough with much satisfaction to his fellow-citizens, and in 1854 he was elected to the State Legislature on the Democratic and Independent tickets. In 1860 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention at Charleston, S. C., in which he served upon several important committees, among others that on credentials, a post of exceeding importance in that convention, demanding the exercise of rare judgment and ability. In 1864 he was the Democratic candidate for Congress against the late Thaddeus Stevens, and ran ahead of his ticket. In 1872 he received the nomination as the opponent of A. Herr Smith. In 1874 he polled the second highest vote in the Democratic State Convention as the nominee for Lieutenant-Governor of Pennsylvania, and in 1876 was a delegate-at-large to the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis. He has been for many years solicitor for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, and other railroad companies, the two national banks of Columbia and other corporations, including iron companies, insurance companies, etc. He is president of the First National Bank of Columbia, and a director in a number of other corporations. He was married, Dec. 23, 1868, to Serena M. Franklin, a daughter of Hon. Thomas E. Franklin, of Lancaster, Pa. Their children are a daughter, Serena Mayer North, and a son, Hugh M. North, Jr.

GEORGE BRUBAKER, retired lawyer of Lancaster, was born in Leacock township, Lancaster Co., April 26, 1817. From early boyhood he had no pecuniary assistance from any one, and with the exception of limited opportunities at the private school, he labored on the farm until the age of seventeen. For eleven months following he applied himself closely to his books, and obtained sufficient education to pass examination as a teacher, and for nine terms taught in the common schools of the vicinity of his birth, being one of the first teachers after the adoption of the common school system by the State. For two years he successfully engaged in the cattle trade, buying his stock on the road between Lancaster and Pittsburgh, and for five years following 1843 he was an agent for the Quaker book house of Kimber & Sharpless, Philadelphia, and sold large numbers of the German Bible and Flavius Josephus. In 1848 he was elected register of wills for Lancaster County on the Whig ticket, and held this place for one term. In 1851 he began reading law with Hon. Thaddeus Stevens, of Lancaster, and under that eminent lawyer pursued his studies until his admission to the bar in 1854. He immediately thereafter established himself in the practice of his profession in Lancaster, where he continued successfully until his retirement from active practice in 1882. During this time he served one term as district attorney, being elected in 1868. As early as the age of nineteen he was chosen judge of a school election in Sallsbury township, which was carried through his ingenuity, and thereby became the first among the rural school districts in the county. He took a decided stand in early life against slavery, and openly protested against the wrong and injustice being done the colored race in the United States. After the breaking up of the Whig party he joined the American party, and was in 1856 one of the foremost in organizing the Republican party in Lancaster County. In the division of parties in 1860 he formed a political association in Lancaster County which has no precedent in the political history of the State. It was so ingeniously arranged that the originator could tell the result of a convention weeks before it was held. The association had no name, no specified place of meeting, but its conventions were called at the option of Mr. Brubaker, at such time and place as he designated, and, notwithstanding the strong opposition it met, it kept in active operation for nearly ten years. Largely through his influence the State Legislature increased the number of wards in the city of Lancaster from four to nine, thereby increasing the members of the Select Council by four, and of the Common Council by eleven, which resulted in the majority vote of the city being Republican for a number of years. In this measure he was bitterly opposed by his own party through the Republican newspapers of the city. Seeing this, he made a vigorous appeal to the rank and file of the Democracy, and with their assistance succeeded in getting control of the city's vote. In 1867 the party, in order to defeat the originator of the association, called a convention to adopt the personal voting system, known as the Crawford County system of nominating candidates for State and county offices. Mr. Brubaker was bitterly opposed to this measure from its inception, believing it to be disastrous to the interests of the party, but as the people were for it, he also voted "yea," and the next year he was elected district attorney for Lancaster County. Mr. Brubaker served for four terms in the Select branch of the City Council, and for two terms as school director. He was also for one year a member of the firm of Stehman, Clarkson & Co., who established a private banking-house in Lancaster. Mr. Brubaker married, in 1841, Ellen (1824-1873), a daughter of Frederick and Elizabeth (Huffnagle) Hoffman, of East Hempfield. Their children are H. Clay Brubaker, a graduate of Franklin and Marshall College, a lawyer, for some time in Cambridge, Ind., and since 1868 practicing his profession in Lancaster City, and Mary Amanda, first the wife of Stuart A. Wylie, founder of the Lancaster Inquirer Printing-House, and after his death the wife of Eugene H. Munday, of Philadelphia.

His paternal great-grandfather, with two brothers, came from Switzerland, and were among the early settlers of Lancaster County. His grandfather, Abraham Brubaker, a native of the county, was a teacher, resided in Leacock and East Lampeter townships, and died in Manor township, at the residence of his daughter, in his seventy-first year. Abraham Brubaker's children were Abraham, Jacob, John, Tobias (deceased), Henry, Nancy (deceased), was the wife of Henry Hartman, and Elizabeth is the widow of Frederick Bloyer. Of these, Abraham is father of George Brubaker, was born in 1797, a carpenter by trade, was a teacher, but spent most of his active life a farmer, and resides in Providence township (formerly Martic). His first wife, Nancy Develin, of Scotch-Irish extraction, died in 1817, leaving an only son, the subject of this sketch. By his second wife, Baronica Heller (deceased), he had three sons and four daughters.

WILLIAM B. GIVEN.—The Given family are of Irish descent. James Given, the grandfather of William B., was born in Ireland, and having emigrated to America during his early life, settled in Chester County, and later removed to Columbia, Lancaster Co., where he engaged in the lumber business.

He married and had nine children. William F., one of this number, was born near Downingtown, Chester Co., Jan. 20, 1818, and during the year 1816 removed to Columbia, where he grew to man's estate, and succeeded to the business of his father.

In 1859 he retired from active business, purchased a farm near Baltimore City, Md., and settled thereon, where his death occurred in 1862.

Mr. Given was, on the 26th day of October, 1853, married to Miss Susan A., daughter of Rev. William Barnes, of Philadelphia, and had children,—Laura, William B., Mercer, Frank E., and Martha W.

William B. was born Sept. 25, 1855, in Columbia, though Maryland, to which he early removed, was the scene of his boyhood experiences. He pursued his studies when a lad at the public schools of Maryland, later at the Saunders Institute, Philadelphia, then at the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, from which he graduated in his twentieth year. Having chosen the law as a profession, he began his studies in Philadelphia, in the offices of Hon. Vincent S. Bradford and E. Rey, Esq., and completed them under the direction of H. M. North, Esq. Upon his admission to the bar in 1876, he became established as a practitioner in Columbia, where he has since resided. Mr. Given has, by his knowledge of the law, his studious habits, and the zeal and ability exhibited in the interests of his clients, won a position at the bar of Lancaster County, though still one of its junior members.

He manifests an active interest in public affairs, especially in measures tending to the advancement of education. He has for four years served as a member of the Columbia school board. Mr. Given is a director of the Keeley Stove Company, which is the most prominent business interest of the borough. He is the solicitor of the boroughs of Columbia and Washington, and was one of the attorneys of the H. J. and S. Railroad Company from the date of his admission until its recent sale to the Reading Railroad Company. In politics Mr. Given is an active and pronounced Democrat. He has been a member of the State Committee for several years, and in every campaign performs efficient service for his party as a speaker. He was the candidate of his party for the office of district attorney in 1877, and nominated for Congressional honors in 1882. Mr. Given was married Sept. 5, 1878, to Mazie E., only daughter of Abram Bruner, Esq., of Columbia. Erna B. is their only child.

ANDREW J. KAUFFMAN.—Christian Kauffman, who was the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, emigrated to America from Germany in the year 1734, and settled in Manor township, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he died March 11, 1799. He was married to Barbara Bear, whose death occurred Jan. 12, 1801. Their sons were Christian, Isaac, and Benjamin, and their daughters were Elizabeth, Barbara, and Anna.

Isaac, the grandfather of Andrew J. Kauffman, was born in Manor township in 1762, where he died Jan. 4, 1826. About the year 1786 he married Catharine Baughman, who died July 9, 1833. Their children were Christian, Isaac, Maria, Barbara, John, Catharine, Benjamin, Anna, Andrew I., Elizabeth, Susan, and Magdalena.

Andrew I., the father of Andrew J., was born Aug. 24, 1802, at the old homestead in Manor township, and spent the principal portion of his life in said township. His occupation was that of a farmer. He represented Lancaster County in the House of Representatives in the State Legislature during the session of 1836-37.

In 1850 he became a resident of Cumberland County, Pa., and for three years cultivated his farm, and in 1853 removed to Mechanicsburg, in said county, where he engaged in mercantile pursuits, and continued therein until his death, which occurred Dec. 14, 1861.

Catharine Shuman, the mother of Andrew J. Kauffman, was the only daughter of Christian Shuman, of Manor township, and was born July 16, 1806. She married Andrew I. Kauffman, March 24, 1825, and died at Mechanicsburg, May 18, 1875. Their children were Christian S., Isaac B., Annie S., Amos, Maria, Levi, Elizabeth, Daniel S., Elias, Andrew John, Benjamin, Catharine, Martha, Joseph, Mary, and Joseph C., of whom ten grew to mature years.

Andrew John, whose life is briefly sketched, was born in Manor township, Lancaster Co., near Washington borough, Nov. 12, 1840. Here he remained until his tenth year, when he removed to Cumberland County, where his boyhood was spent at school.

In 1854 he entered the drug-store of his brother in Mechanicsburg, and spent four years in acquiring a knowledge of the druggist's profession, after which he attended the State College of Pennsylvania. Upon his return from college, he purchased the interest of his brother in the drug business in Mechanicsburg, and resumed that profession. In March, 1862, he removed to Columbia, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he began the study of the law with H. M. North, Esq., and was admitted to the bar of Lancaster County, Dec. 3, 1864, since which time he has continued in the active practice of his profession at Columbia.

In June, 1862, he was elected secretary of the Reading and Columbia Railroad Company, and remained in office for a period of four years, after which he was elected treasurer of the Columbia and Port Deposit Railroad Company, which position he filled until the removal of the offices of the company to Philadelphia.

He held the position of solicitor of the borough of Columbia, and of the Columbia school board for many years.

He is known as one of the most active and pronounced Republicans in the county, has frequently been a delegate to the Republican State Conventions, and was a delegate from Lancaster County to the Republican National Convention held at Chicago in June, 1880. In May, 1882, Mr. Kauffman was appointed by the President of the United States collector of Internal Revenue of the Ninth District of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Lancaster, York, Cumberland, and Perry. On June 6, 1866, Mr. Kauffman married Anna Fausset, daughter of Dr. Daniel I. Bruner, of Columbia. They have three children,—Bruner, Elizabeth Davies, and Reginald.

Deputy Attorneys-General.—The following-named members of the Lancaster bar have filled the position of deputy attorney-general for the county of Lancaster, under appointments made by different attorneys-general of the State. Their functions were the same as those of the officer now called district attorney:

CHAPTER XXII.

HISTORY OF MEDICINE AND MEDICAL MEN IN LANCASTER COUNTY.<sup>1</sup>

WITH the advent of the aborigines really begins the history of medicine in this county, and it is not derogatory to the science of medicine to make this acknowledgment, in view of the fact that the red man's discoveries have proved valuable acquisitions to the list of remedies applicable in the treatment of disease.

Later, however, came the early settlers, possessing more refined and exact ideas on the treatment of some of the simpler disorders, gained either from their own experience and observation or acquired from others.

The first regular-bred practitioner, however, came here some time before 1715, and settled within a few miles of Lancaster. It has been a question of some dispute as to who really was the first representative physician in the county, but it is clearly evident that this honor fairly belongs to DR. HANS HEINRICH NEFF.

So far as can be ascertained there were of this family two brothers, Francis and Hans, who, being Mennonites, suffered such intolerable religious persecution that they were obliged to forsake their home in Switzerland and take up lands in Alsace; "thence they emigrated to America, and Francis settled at a very early date on a small stream, Neff's Run, which empties into the west branch of the Little Conestoga." (Rupp.)

The records show that the Neffs came here and took up lands prior to 1715, whereas "Henry Zimmerman, or Carpenter," for whom this priority of claim is set up, "arrived in Pennsylvania in the year 1698, and returned afterwards to Europe for his family, whom he brought out in 1706, and settled first in Germantown, and removed within the present bounds of Lancaster County (then Chester) in 1717."

DR. JOHN HENRY NEFF took up land on the Conestoga, a few miles from Lancaster, "under a particular agreement with the Honorable Proprietor, William Penn."

Afterwards he built a mill, and later owned the property now known as Hardwicke. It is not reasonable to suppose that at this early date he devoted himself exclusively to the practice of medicine; at the same time, however, he was quite popular, and generally known as the "Old Doctor." Rupp informs us that, "so well was Dr. Neff known, that when the boundaries of townships were fixed upon, June 9, 1729, one of the lines of Manheim township is thus defined: 'thence down the said creek (Conestoga) to the Old Doctor's Ford.'"

Many of the direct and indirect descendants of the Neffs were physicians, among whom appear DR. ABRAHAM NEFF, Lancaster, 1758; DR. CHRISTIAN NEFF, Lancaster, 1795; his nephew, DR. ABRAHAM BRENNEMAN, who practiced "physic and surgery" and kept a drug-store in Lancaster, 1797; another nephew of the same name, Lancaster, 1810, who acquired some notoriety as a "Water Doctor," and who lived in the residence and built the office on Lime Street now occupied by our present Congressman, the Hon. A. Herr Smith. Also DR. JOHN K. NEFF, Lancaster, 1843; DR. JOHN EBERLE, who practiced for some time at Lancaster and afterwards moved to Philadelphia, where he appears prominently as one of the professors of a leading medical college of the day. In following up the doctors consecutively as their names appear in records which have been preserved or in traditions handed down, we find the name of one DR. WILLIAM SMITH, whose career ended quite suddenly, and who by order of the court left the county rather unceremoniously.

It is a serious question whether summary justice such as was meted out by the judge to Smith would not be quite apropos at the present day, in view of the fact that we still have unfortunates among us who seem never so happy as when they are being deceived. The following is the record of the court, Aug. 5, 1736:

"At a court of general quarter sessions, Dr. William Smith, a vagabond and beggar, being convicted before the court of being an impostor, it is the judgment of the court that he receive, in the county of Lancaster, ten lashes, and be conducted from constable to constable, and be whipped with ten lashes, in the most public place, till he comes to the bounds of the county at Octorara, and then be dismissed."

DR. ADAM SIMON KUHNKE came to Lancaster about 1740. He was appointed a justice, and occupied a very prominent position in public affairs. He was also an active member of Trinity Lutheran Church, especially interested in the promotion of the parochial schools. In 1744 he purchased fifteen acres from Hans Musser, and laid out a town called "Adamstown." It was bounded by Middle and East King Streets. He sold the ground-rents to James Hamilton.

DR. JOHN KUHN, son of the above, was a surgeon in the Revolutionary army, and lived in the borough of Lancaster in 1804.

DR. ADAM KUHN, son of Adam Simon Kuhn, M.D., practiced medicine in Philadelphia.

DR. FREDERICK KUHN was engaged in the practice of his profession in Lancaster. He married a daughter of Samuel Bethel, of Columbia.

DR. ABRAHAM NEFF lived at Lancaster in 1758, and had his office on Orange Street above Lime. He had an extensive practice, but mostly among the farmers, with whom he was quite a favorite.

DR. CHRISTIAN NEFF, son of above, lived in 1795 at the corner of Shippen and Orange Streets. He also enjoyed a large practice, and was the preceptor of the Drs. Breneman, to whom they were indentured, as was the custom in those days.

DR. THOMAS WHITESIDE, of Little Britain, 1750, prominent during the Revolution, figured at the battles of the Brandywine and Germantown, and also those of Monmouth and Princeton during the New Jersey campaign.

DR. HIERONIMUS BRUBACK, Leacock, 1751.

DR. SAMUEL BOUDE, Lancaster, 1758, was married to Mary, daughter of Samuel Bethel, who laid out Bethelstown. He was the father of Gen. Boude, and kept a drug-store in addition to practicing medicine.

DR. JOHN LEIDY, Warwick, 1758.

DR. ROBERT THOMPSON, Lancaster, 1751, was a prominent physician, a large landholder, and a justice for many years.

DR. ABRAHAM BRENEMAN was the son of Dr. Adam Breneman, a practicing physician of this city, who in turn was a son of Melchoir Breneman, the original ancestor, who emigrated to this country about 1725. Dr. Breneman is the father of A. N. Breneman, Sr., Esq., of this city. He lived on the northwest corner of South Queen and German Streets, studied medicine with Dr. Christian Neff, who built and resided in the house now occupied by Mrs. Kelly, corner of East Orange and Shippen Streets. He enjoyed a large practice, and also had a drug-store; died 1819.

DR. ABRAHAM BRENEMAN was the son of John Breneman, a physician, and cousin of the above, and therefore a grandson of Melchoir Breneman. He also studied with Dr. Christian Neff, and resided, as previously stated, on Lime Street, where the Hon. A. Herr Smith now resides. He secured a large practice, making examination of the urine a specialty. Dr. Breneman died in the fall of 1819, and, what is singular to relate, on the same day on which the decease of the foregoing Dr. Breneman occurred.

DR. ALBERT DUFRESNE was known in Lancaster as the "Swiss Doctor," and lived in the second square of North Duke Street, Lancaster. He was quite wealthy, and built the former "Farmers' Bank" of this city. He had quite a run on a salve, which was put up in small bladders, and said to have been quite efficacious. He was born June 20, 1748; died May 3, 1823.

DR. ALFRED DUFRESNE, JR., son of the above, never acquired much of a reputation as a physician, being rather inclined to acts unprofessional in character. He died Sept. 9, 1812, aged thirty-five years.

DR. SAMUEL DUFRESNE, also a son of the "Old" doctor, was a man of excellent character and a fine physician. Nevertheless he never practiced much, simply because he made no effort in that direction. He had many friends. He died Aug. 8, 1835, aged forty-seven years.

DR. JOHN HOUSTON was a man of mark and belonged to a fighting family. He was born in Salisbury township, in this county, in 1742. His father sent him to Edinburgh, Scotland, to be educated for the ministry. Not liking that profession he chose that of medicine. On the 6th day of May, 1773, he married Susanna Wright, daughter of John Wright, Jr., who owned the ferry and lived on the west side of the river at Wrightsville. In 1775, when hostilities broke out between England and America, he was appointed a surgeon in the Continental army, and remained in it for seven years. After the war he removed with his family to York borough, where he practiced medicine. A few years thereafter he removed to Columbia. Governor Mifflin appointed him one of the justices of the peace for this district about the year 1793 or 1794, an office which he held until his death, June 9, 1809. He was an accomplished gentleman, and was considered in his time the best educated and read physician in the county. His widow died in August, 1829. The doctor had three brothers in the Revolutionary army, viz.: James was killed at Paoli; William married a sister of Dr. Watson, late of Donegal. He was taken prisoner on Long Island by the British. There was another brother killed in the Revolutionary army. The doctor left a large family. Dr. William F. Houston, Robert Houston, Samuel N. Houston, Mrs. Mifflin, and the Misses Houston were his children.

DR. WILLIAM F. HOUSTON, son of above, practiced medicine in Columbia, kept a drug-store, and published a newspaper. In 1826 he abandoned a large practice and entered the ministry. It was, however, the spoiling of a good doctor to make a poor preacher.

GEN. EDWARD HAND. [See biography, page 44.]

DR. WILLIAM BROWN. After the battle of the Brandywine a large number of the sick and wounded soldiers were brought to the villages of Ephrata and Lititz, the "Brothers' House," now the academy, at the latter place, being transformed into a hospital and the single brothers detailed as nurses. Dr. Brown, surgeon in charge of the hospital, in order to simplify the compounding of drugs and facilitate the administration of the same, compiled a small book, written in Latin, for the use of his assistants in the hospital. The following is a translation of the title-page and preface:

"A Repertory of simple and efficacious prescriptions for the use of the military hospital belonging to the army of the United States of America, adapted especially to our present state of need and poverty, which we owe to the ferocious cruelty of the enemy and to a cruel war brought unexpectedly upon our Fatherland.

"WILLIAM BROWN, M.D., Author.

"Second Edition,

"From the office of Charles Christ, 1781,

"Philadelphia."

"PREFACE.

"With an asterisk are denoted such prescriptions as are to be prepared and compounded in the general laboratory, the others are to be mixed for the occasion at the office of the hospital. There are very many prescriptions of solid and dry medicines which might be made more convenient for use, or at least prepared more elegantly, were there not wanting for this a sufficiency of phials and such preparations, which though less efficacious, are used only to gratify the wishes of the patient and for the sake of elegance. It is also our desire to avoid such remedies as simple waters, etc., and various plasters and unguents which are hardly necessary or even useful, on account of the inconvenience of transportation.

"LITITZ, May 12th, 1778."

DR. EDWIN A. ATLEE was born about 1778, and was the youngest son of the Hon. William Augustus Atlee, and the uncle of Dr. John L. Atlee, of Lancaster. After his father's death, which occurred in 1793, he came to Lancaster and resided with his guardian, Dr. Edward Hand. He took his Master's degree at Dickinson, where he distinguished himself for his proficiency in Latin. He read medicine with Dr. Hand, and while yet a student moved to Middletown, where he began practice. While residing there he married the niece of Governor Simon Snyder. Afterwards he moved to Columbia, where he held a successful practice, and after having acquired sufficient means, went to Philadelphia, and in 1804 graduated at the University of Pennsylvania.

He possessed rare musical abilities, and chose for his graduating thesis, "The Influence of Music on the Cure of Disease." After graduating he returned to Columbia, but he never was able to establish himself again, owing to the fact that during his absence prejudicial influences were brought to bear against him by those from whom better things might have been expected, and he consequently removed to Philadelphia in 1806, where he practiced successfully for many years. He was especially successful as an accoucheur. Dr. DeWees said of him that in this branch he was the peer of any man in the city. At one time he was prominently mentioned as the proper person to fill the chair of obstetrics in the University of Pennsylvania, but his ultra religious views prejudiced the board of directors of that institution against him. During the course of his professional career he continued his literary pursuits, and there are yet some of his books extant which he translated into Latin, among which is a short life of William Penn. He died at Philadelphia, aged seventy-six years.

DR. JOHN WATSON, of Donegal, was born in Leacock township in 1780. He was a brother of Gen. Watson, who distinguished himself during the war of 1812. Dr. Watson studied medicine with Dr. Boyd, of Bucks County, Pa., and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. He then located at Donegal, where he succeeded in building up a large and extensive practice. He was a man of great force of character and many resources. It may be of interest to note that he was the grandfather of Judge Patterson, of Lancaster City.

DR. DAVID WATSON was a son of the above. He was a classmate at Dickinson College of the late ex-President Buchanan; studied medicine with his father, and also graduated at the University of Pennsylvania.

After graduation he became associated with his father at Donegal, where he remained but one year, when he was appointed on his uncle's, Gen. Watson's, staff. After leaving the army he located at Bainbridge, where he practiced many years, and then removed to Middletown, where he died after a long period of successful practice. He was remarkable for his accuracy in diagnosis, his fame in this respect having been recognized far and near, and consequently secured for him an extensive consultation practice.

DR. NATHANIEL WATSON was also a son of Dr. John Watson, and has now almost attained the remarkable age of fourscore and four. He likewise read medicine with his father, and graduated at the university in 1821. In his day Dr. Watson had an extensive practice, and was universally liked by his patrons. He was formerly a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. DAVID R. WATSON was a son of Dr. Nathaniel, and after receiving a collegiate education studied medicine with Dr. John L. Atlee, Jr., of Lancaster, receiving his degree in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1868. During his first course at medical college he contracted a cold which developed into consumption, and he died one year after graduation, being but twenty-two years of age. He was a man of perfect physical proportions and rare intellectual attainments.

DR. JACOB RIEGAR was a highly respectable physician of Lancaster. His duel with Stephen Chambers (fatal to the latter) is mentioned elsewhere. Dr. Riegar died in 1795.

DR. JOHN HOWARD, late from Canton, East Indies, advertises April 14, 1798, "now living opposite the German Lutheran Church, respectfully informs the public that he will undertake to cure any disease or complaint whatever, even where other doctors have declared the patient incurable." . . . He states that all his "medicines are prepared from herbs and roots only, which he has brought with him from China for the purpose."

DR. J. COMMON practiced "physic, surgery, and midwifery in Lancaster July, 1800, house East Orange Street."

DR. G. W. ALDERSTERREN in an advertisement July 15, 1796, acquaints the public in general that he means to practice as doctor and surgeon in the borough of Lancaster. His office was "at the inn of John Michael, the sign of the waggon, on Queen Street. He takes no pay until the cure is completed." On December 9th of the same year he announces that he has opened a drug-store in North Queen Street, at the house of David Hall; the latter part of 1797 he was still here.

DR. ISAAC COHEN, Aug. 14, 1797, published the following card: "Dr. Isaac Cohen, from Hamburg, in Germany, who studied seven years in the city of Copenhagen, informs the public that he has lately arrived in Lancaster, where he intends to practice physic and the art of healing, at the house of John Hatz, innkeeper, at the sign of the Pennsylvania Arms, North Queen Street. . . . N.B. Poor persons cured gratis if they can show a certificate from a clergyman that they are really poor. He expects letters addressed to him to be postpaid, and those who live at a distance and desire his aid will please send a horse for him."

DR. DUVOISIER, "just arrived from London," advertises May 26, 1797, that he offers his services to the citizens of the borough of Lancaster in the practice of physic and surgery. "Apply in E. King's Street, in the corner house, opposite Maj. John Light's tavern."

DR. DOWLIN evidently came to Lancaster about 1794. In the Lancaster Journal, July 15, 1795, he advertises as follows:

"FEVERS, AGUES, AND FLUXES.

"Dowlin, surgeon and man-midwife from London, acquaints the public that as the season approaches in which these diseases become more peculiarly distressing, he begs leave to offer his assistance, having derived particular information of their treatment while in the British army, during his residence in Africa and the West India Islands, which the success of his practice in Lancaster last fall has fully demonstrated. "N.B. He lives in Mrs. Bicklam's house, near the English Church."

On March 11, 1796, he advertises to inoculate for smallpox, and likewise for measles.

On March 24, 1797, he notifies the public that on the 1st of April "he will move into the one-story brick house beyond Mr. Lechler's, Donegal Street, opposite Samuel Humes." It may be of interest to state that Dr. Dowlin is the first in the county of whom we have any record to inoculate for smallpox.

HENRY CARPENTER, M.D., physician, of Lancaster, Pa., was born in that city, in the house where he resides, Dec. 10, 1819. He received his preliminary education in the select schools of the city and at the Lancaster Academy. He read medicine with Dr. Samuel Humes, of Lancaster, was graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College, Philadelphia, in March, 1841, and succeeded to the large practice of his preceptor, with which he became conversant as a student. Dr. Carpenter has continued in the active duties of his profession since his graduation, and is an acknowledged skillful physician, and among the foremost in the county. He was one of the founders of the Lancaster County Medical Society in 1844, secretary from its organization for many years, and in 1855 its president. He was secretary and vice-president of the State Medical Society, and one of the board of censors for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.

He was president of the Select branch of the City Councils for nearly twenty years, presiding officer of the lower branch for several years, and an active member of the Lancaster school board for some thirty years, and also a director of the Lancaster Gas Company, and of the Lancaster Insurance Company for many years. He was a director of the Conestoga Steam Mills Company for a long time, and one of the principal owners for many years after their sale, in 1857, and he is one of the company that built and owns No. 4 cotton-mill, and also one of the originators of the Conestoga Turnpike Company, in 1870, of which he has been president since.

Dr. Carpenter was a director of the Lancaster and Quarryville Narrow-Gauge Railroad, director and treasurer of the Delaware River and Lancaster Railroad, director and assistant treasurer of the National Railroad (now the Bound Brook), and president and director of the Hamilton Land Association of New Jersey. Twice during the late civil war he was called into active service in the volunteer surgeons' department by the surgeon-general of the State, and labored zealously to alleviate the sufferings of the sick and wounded after the battles of second Bull Run and Antietam.

He married, in 1846, Ann Louisa, daughter of ex-Mayor Mathiot, of Lancaster, who died in 1863, leaving three daughters, Mary, Catharine, and Sarah. His second wife, Laura W., daughter of Martin Miller, of Oil City, died in 1871. His present wife is Mrs. Sarah A., widow of the late Harris Boardman, of Lancaster, and daughter of Hon. Benjamin F. Billings, of Connecticut.

Dr. Carpenter is the fifth of the same name in five successive generations, from Dr. Henry Carpenter (or Zimmerman), who came from Switzerland to Pennsylvania in 1698. He returned to Europe, and in 1706 came with his family, first settling at Germantown, but in 1717 settled on a farm in West Earl township, Lancaster Co., where he practiced medicine and carried on farming the remainder of his life. An old relic, a hanging lantern, now in possession of the subject of this sketch, dated 1693, was brought here by him. One of his sons was Emanuel, whose son (Emanuel, Jr.) was a member of the Legislature in 1777, 1780, 1784, 1785, and 1786. Another, Dr. Henry, succeeded to the homestead, where he also practiced medicine in the vicinity during his active life. One of his sons, Jacob Carpenter, was a member of the State Legislature in 1765 to 1767, 1769, 1772, and 1781; was State treasurer three terms, and was appointed Jan. 8, 1800, by Governor McKean, clerk of the Orphans' Court of Lancaster County.

Henry Carpenter

Another son, Henry, succeeded to the homestead property, and his sons were Henry (1773-1835), father of our subject, born on the old homestead, near Carpenter's Church, settled in Lancaster City in 1818, where he carried on mercantile business with his brother Daniel, and was also largely engaged in surveying and conveyancing. Dr. John (1770-1830) succeeded to the homestead, carried on farming and practiced his profession, and, like his ancestors, kept up the large botanical garden established by the first Dr. Henry Carpenter, where was introduced a fine assortment of rare and costly plants which were exotics in this section of the country. Isaac was a farmer near the homestead, and Jacob, Daniel, and Christian were engaged in mercantile pursuits in Lancaster.

Dr. Henry Carpenter's mother, Mary Ann, daughter of David Cook, and granddaughter of Bartram Galbraith, surveyor-general of Pennsylvania for many years, died in 1872, aged seventy-eight years. His brothers are James C., a civil engineer in Lancaster; Dr. Alexander Hamilton, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, practiced in Lancaster County, and died about 1850, aged twenty-four years; Dr. Andrew Jackson, also a graduate of the same medical college, practiced in Lancaster City, and died in 1866, aged thirty years; Isaac K., a civil engineer in Lancaster City; and two sisters, Catharine and Maria Louisa, the latter dying in 1873.

DR. JOHN D. PERKINS was the son of Dr. Elisha Perkins, of Norwich, Conn. He first located at Strasburg, and on Aug. 20, 1800, came to Lancaster and opened an office in the tavern of William Ferree, "at the sign of Gen. Washington."

He claimed to have passed through the course of education required by the Medical Society of the State of Connecticut, and also that he was a member of that society. "His success, which has attended his father's practice in New England, and his brother's and his own in Strasburg, in this county, . . . is such that he flatters himself that he shall be able to give satisfaction. In suitable cases he will operate with the Metallic Tractors, invented by his father."

This operation consisted of drawing over the body or any affected parts the points of metallic rods (Metallic Tractors), composed of different metals, and is known in medicine as Perkinism, or Tractoration. These tractors were said to be "applicable in the treatment of pains in the head, face, teeth, breast, side, stomach, back," etc. At this period Perkinism was quite popular, in fact, even the president of the Medical Society of Connecticut, observing that Perkins produced so many and really genuine testimonials in its favor, delivered an eloquent address before that body advising a thorough investigation before condemning it; but it having no real merits soon died out.

DR. ELISHA PERKINS, of Strasburg, was a brother of John, and afterwards also came to Lancaster.

The First Medical Society in the County.—About 1820 the physicians throughout the State, in order to advance medical science and protect their own interests, organized medical societies.

The fact that Lancaster was so near to the centre of medical learning in those days made it plausible to suppose that our physicians would likewise have organized themselves in a similar manner. A search has revealed that such an attempt was made, as we shall see from the following, taken from The Intelligencer of Feb. 24, 1823:

"At a meeting of physicians in the borough of Strasburg, on the 7th inst., for the purpose of establishing a Medical Society in the county of Lancaster, Dr. Francis S. Burrows was appointed chairman, and Dr. William Forman secretary. On motion, it was

Resolved, That we constitute an association to be called 'The Medical Society of the City and County of Lancaster,' whose object it shall be to promote harmony among the members of the profession and to improve medical science.

Resolved, That Drs. Humes, Dingo, Riegy, Boulden, Handford, Davis, and Forman be a committee to draft a Constitution and By-Laws for the government of the society, who shall report at the next meeting.

Resolved, That this meeting adjourn to convene at the house of Mr. John Whiteside (Fountain Inn), in the city of Lancaster, on Monday, the 15th of March next, at 2 o'clock P.M., when and where the physicians of Lancaster and adjoining counties are respectfully invited to attend."

In pursuance of the above resolution there was another meeting held at the time and place appointed, as will appear from the report in The Intelligencer of March 23, 1823, at which time Dr. Samuel Humes, Jr., was appointed chairman, and Dr. N. L. Boulden secretary.

"The object of the meeting having been stated from the chair to be the promotion of medical science, it was, on motion,

Resolved, That it is expedient for the practicing physicians in the city and county of Lancaster to form an association to be called 'The Medical Society of the City and County of Lancaster.'

Resolved, That Drs. Muhlenburg, Carpenter, and Atlee from the city, and Drs. Boulden, Burrows, and Forman from the county of Lancaster be a committee to prepare a Constitution and By-Laws for the government of the society, and report at the next meeting agreeably to the subsequent resolution.

Resolved, That this meeting adjourn to meet again at the same place on Monday, the 19th of April next, at 2 o'clock P.M., where and when all the practicing physicians of the city and county are respectfully invited to attend."

The committee on constitution and by-laws did its work, but it never had an opportunity to report, because the organization failed, and no more meetings were held.

The cause of the failure is expressed in those significant words of Dr. John L. Atlee in his address before the American Medical Association at Cleveland, 1883, in which he says, while referring to the physicians of 'his period,' "So great was the jealousy existing between them that for more than twenty years after my graduation it was impossible to form a medical society in my native city and county, because there were so many aspirants for the honors."

DR. JOHN EBERLE was born in Manor township in January, 1788. As was previously stated, he was a direct descendant of Dr. John Henry Neff, the pioneer physician of the county, and the son of a blacksmith. His father was unable to give him more than an ordinary school education, but, as tradition has it, Nathaniel Ellmaker, Esq., perceiving him to be unusually bright for his limited opportunities, with praiseworthy benevolence, for a disinterested consideration, volunteered to give him a medical education.

He studied medicine under the supervision of Drs. Abraham Carpenter, of Lancaster, and Clapp, of Philadelphia, and in 1809 received the degree of Doctor of Medicine at the University of Philadelphia, choosing "Animal Life" as the subject for his graduating thesis. He began the practice of medicine at the Four-Mile Tavern,—until recently known as Hess' Tavern,—on the Columbia and Lancaster Turnpike.

Several years later he moved to Manheim, where he was married to Miss Salome Sebrick. Afterwards he was commissioned as surgeon, and served in the war of 1812. In 1815 he bought some land in Mount Joy township, adjoining Elizabethtown, and laid out an addition to that place.

From Manheim he moved to Lancaster, but unfortunately, at the latter place was led into practices, through his association with politicians, which threatened utterly to destroy his prospects for success. During this time, however, he began writing articles for one of the medical journals of Philadelphia, which from their clearness of style and originality of subject-matter attracted so much attention that he was induced by the publisher to move to that city, and subsequently established a journal of his own, The American Medical Recorder, which for a time was ably sustained by the members of the profession.

In 1822 he published a work in two volumes on "Materia Medica and Therapeutics," which became quite popular, and was accorded the honor of a German translation at Weimar soon after it appeared in this country. The copyright of this work was sold for two hundred dollars. In 1831 appeared his "Treatise on the Practice of Medicine," in two volumes, a work considered by able authority as forming an epoch in the medical literature of this country. It passed through five editions during the author's lifetime, and after his death was issued with additions by Professor George McClellan. Subsequently he wrote a "Treatise on Diseases of Children," but it never was accorded the favor received by his previous publications.

At the organization of the Jefferson Medical College, in 1825, Dr. Eberle was elected to the professorship on Practice of Medicine, which position he filled with credit for five years. The following year he occupied the chair of Materia Medica. In 1831 he was elected Professor of Practice of Medicine in the Ohio Medical College, located at Cincinnati, to which place he removed with his family this same year. Six years later he removed from Cincinnati to Lexington, Ky., to accept the chair of Practice of Medicine in the Transylvania University, the great medical school of the West, but here soon afterwards (Feb. 2, 1838) closed his earthly career.

Dr. Eberle was a member of the Linnæan Society of Philadelphia, the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, and also of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Berlin.

On the 3d of March, 1826, the members of the medical fraternity, and a number of other gentlemen from Lancaster, gave a public dinner to Dr. Eberle in the old court-house; Dr. Samuel Humes officiated as president, and Frederick Muhlenberg as vice-president. After dinner toasts were drank and responses made.

Professor S. D. Gross, M.D., who attended Dr. Eberle's lectures as a student, and who in after-life became more intimately acquainted with him through professional intercourse, describes him as follows:

"He was a man of short stature, with a light olive complexion, a keen black eye, and a good forehead. He was a model of a student, reticent, patient, laborious, and brimful of his subject. Whatever he knew he knew well. As a practitioner he never ranked high, and as a lecturer he was not pleasing, although always instructive. Having no powers as a speaker, he always availed himself largely of the use of his MS. Poverty seems to have been his lot; it seized upon him early and clung to him all his life. . . . Of social qualities Eberle was wholly devoid. I never heard him laugh heartily in all my intercourse with him, which, during my residence at Cincinnati, was for a time frequent and familiar. . . . He was a copious as well as a learned writer, and long before his death he enjoyed a national and European reputation. . . . He was a most zealous student, and, above all, he was the architect of his own fame and fortune. As one of his weaknesses, I may say that he was a firm believer in the powers of the divining rod."

DR. NEIL McCLOY was a native of Ireland; emigrated to this county and practiced medicine. He had two sons, of whom Alexander became a physician and practiced in Leacock township.

In March, 1824, he made an assignment of his property to James Porter. How much longer he remained in this county is not known, but in October, 1835, he appears in Cecil township, Washington Co., Pa., as the purchaser of a farm. Later in life he moved to Canonsburg, where he died.

DR. J. F. NISSEN, in 1802, under the head of "Medical Information," publishes the following:

"The subscriber being at Mr. Dubourg's, corner of Queen and Orange Street, takes this method of offering his aid, as a Physician and Surgeon, to the inhabitants of this borough and vicinity. He has lately arrived from Germany, where he regularly studied Physic and Surgery for more than six years, under the most Eminent Professors and in the largest Hospitals, and after a strict examination was promoted to the Degree of Doctor. . . .

"J. F. NISSEN, OF HAMBURG,
"Physician, Surgeon, Midwife, and Oculist. Honorary Member of the Medicinal Society of Philadelphia."

DR. MARBOURG announces, July 12, 1802, that he "has practiced Several years as physician and Surgeon in the Austrian and English Armies, and has just arrived from the West Indies, gives notice that he is inclined to practice in Lancaster in internal and external Complaints, as well as in Midwifery. . . . He lodges at the house of John Demuth, East King Street."

DR. MORGAN RAWLIN practiced at Rawlinsville, after whom the place received its name.

DR. JOHN CUTHBERTSON, of Bart, 1790-1800, was the son of Rev. John C. Cuthbertson, a Covenanter preacher.

DR. HENRY HUTTENSTEIN, 1800, one of the first druggists of Lancaster. He died Aug. 26, 1807, at an advanced age.

DR. JOHN ROSS, Lancaster, 1797.

DR. BEAR, Lancaster, 1804.

DR. GEORGE HAMILTON, Bart, 1807.

DR. SMALLWOOD, of Columbia, 1811, a native of Drumore township, Lancaster Co.

DR. WILLIAM S. GARRAUD, Marietta, 1813.

DR. AICHMILLER, who had practiced in Lancaster for some time, announced, Nov. 9, 1802, that he had removed to the house of Mr. George Hoff, King Street.

DR. GEORGE MOORE, of Lancaster, June 2, 1802, informs the public that he has commenced inoculating for the kine pox, and is provided with pest matter. He was Dr. John L. Atlee's father's family physician, and Walter L. Atlee, Esq., was the first person vaccinated in Lancaster, Dr. Moore having received the virus from Dr. Cox, of Philadelphia. Dr. Moore had a drug-store in Centre Square about 1800. He had four sons, three of whom were physicians, and the fourth a merchant in Baltimore. After his death his wife was appointed postmistress.

DR. GEORGE MOORE, son of above, moved to Columbia about 1829, where he was engaged as druggist and justice of the peace.

DR. CHARLES HERBST studied medicine with Dr. William Fahnestock, and commenced practice in Lancaster in 1804. In 1805 he was prison physician. He never accumulated much of a practice.

DR. VINCENT KING, formerly of Columbia, was a native of the county, and a son of Vincent King, of Little Britain township. Prior to reading medicine with Dr. Houston, of Philadelphia, he attended the Westtown school, an institution under the control of the Quakers. He received his degree in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1807.

After graduation he began practice at Philadelphia, then removed to Goshen, Chester Co., and afterwards to Baltimore, where he remained but a short time before coming to Columbia. At this place he had the misfortune to lose his wife. A number of years afterwards he was united in matrimony to Miss Patience Wright. Later he removed to his native place, and there remained until he died. Dr. King was a highly honored and successful practitioner, a man of great worth and intellectual force.

DR. CLARKSON FREEMAN died June 8, 1843, aged seventy-eight years. He was a native of New Jersey, and studied mathematics and the languages, and received his degree of A.B. in 1783. Later he studied medicine with Professor Vandevere, and graduated at the College of New Brunswick, 1787. He afterwards went to the Western States, and then came to Lancaster about July, 1802. At this time he advertises, "Late from the Indian towns in the Northwestern Territory of the U. S. . . . Is happy that it is in his power to state that he . . . performed a number of capital cures."

In 1810 he formed a partnership with Dr. John I. Mayweg, but this was dissolved the following year, and Dr. Freeman went to Ohio. In 1815 he returned to Lancaster, and remained here until he died. In a financial point of view, Dr. Freeman was a successful practitioner; his "Indian Specific," which was no more nor less than paregoric, containing oil of sassafras instead of oil of anise, was quite a bonanza. He was quite fond of the drama, and consequently had his house so arranged as to conveniently give private theatricals. Edwin Forrest was among those who adorned his stage.

DR. JOHN I. MAYWEG, having practiced for about four years after completing his studies at Philadelphia, came to Lancaster in 1810, and formed a partnership with Dr. Clarkson Freeman. Their business relations were dissolved the following year, when Dr. Mayweg moved to Columbia. In 1822 he moved to Philadelphia, where he remained about ten years, and then, after practicing at Lancaster for one year, again removed to Columbia.

DR. LACKEY MURRAY in 1800 advertises in a Harrisburg journal that he "respectfully informs the public that he has practiced Physic, Surgery, and Midwifery for 25 years in the County of Lancaster." On March 1, 1796, he lived in a two-story brick house on King Street. It is said that when he first came to Lancaster, among his first patients was a young lady who had accidentally gotten a fish-bone in her throat. Her father said to the doctor, "If you get that bone out I will give you a horse." The doctor opened his snuff-box and requested the lady to take some. In a moment the snuff caused her to sneeze, and the bone was dislodged, to the delight of all concerned, and the doctor got the horse. Dr. Murray died Oct. 31, 1815.

DR. HUGH McCORKLE came to Columbia in 1805, where he married a Miss Strickler. He was an able practitioner and a fine gentleman. He continued at Columbia for more than forty years.

DR. — GRIFFITH came to Columbia 18—. He was the preceptor of Dr. Wallace, a brother-in-law of Mrs. Abraham Lincoln.

DR. SAMUEL HOUSTON, formerly of Manheim, came to Marietta about 1820. He continued to practice medicine until the Anti-Masonic excitement, when he entered politics.

DR. GEORGE GRAHAM, at Marietta, in 1820.

DR. JACOB GLATZ, of Marietta, was a student of Dr. Richard E. Cochran, and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania in 1826. He was a descendant of Col. Jacob Glatz, of Lancaster, appointed postmaster under President Van Buren. His ancestors were hatters, and occupied the building on the northeast corner of East King and Duke Streets.

DR. ARTHUR MAY practiced ten years in Lancaster borough previous to his death. He is said to have been a most excellent physician and capital surgeon, and a favorite pupil of the late celebrated Dr. Physick. Dr. Samuel Humes studied medicine with him. Dr. May died of typhoid pneumonia Jan. 28, 1812.

FREDERICK AUGUSTUS MUHLENBERG, M.D., was the youngest child of the Rev. Dr. G. Henry Ernest Muhlenberg, and was born the 14th of March, 1795, in the city of Lancaster, where his father was pastor, for thirty-five years, of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity. His preliminary education he received in the German and English private and parochial schools of his native city and in the family of his father, who was a university scholar, and a gentleman of high culture, refined taste, and exalted Christian character. There was no system of public-school education at that time, either at Lancaster or in the State; the education of the young, therefore, was provided for by congregational schools and those of a private and voluntary character, which varied in excellence and duration with the ability of the teacher and the support given to him. Such schools as these the doctor attended, and often mentioned to his family the names of the principals of them with gratitude or pleasantry, in accordance with his conviction of the benefit or the converse he had experienced whilst connected with them. His children thus remember to this day the names of Gallagher, Snowden, Hutchins, and Benjamin Schipper, a distinguished teacher of the classics at the commencement of this century. All of these, with the exception of the first, were gentlemen of education and experience in their profession; but John Gallagher, as he was known among the boys, seems to have been of that class of teachers whom Dr. Goldsmith has so pleasantly immortalized in his poems.

After the completion of this curriculum of private study, which embraced a solid, though not an extended, education in the English, German, Latin, and Greek languages and the elements of mathematics, and a considerable knowledge of botany, one of the favorite pursuits of his father, he was placed as a student of medicine in the office of the eminent Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia. The Rev. Dr. Muhlenberg was personally well acquainted with Dr. Rush, had been associated with him in works of general benevolence and patriotism, and had a high appreciation of his ability as a physician and his excellence of character. The son probably entered his office in the year 1812, and continued with him as private pupil, and heard his lectures in the University of Pennsylvania, until the spring of 1814, when he received, April 4th, the degree of M.D. from that justly celebrated institution. He managed, by zeal, industry, and self-reliance, to be graduated with honor; for though, as already said, his preparatory education had been solid, it had not been of such an extended and thorough character in all directions as to enable him to get through without great diligence. The writer remembers to have heard the doctor say that when he first went to Philadelphia a copy of Ewing's "Natural Philosophy" had been put into his hands at the suggestion of his preceptor to complete by private study his defective mathematical education, but that he found it, owing to the want of the necessary elementary knowledge, a dry and unprofitable employment. No doubt this consciousness of the deficiency of his education in some directions stimulated him to greater effort in his professional studies, which, under the guidance of his able instructor, gave him honorable eminence among his fellow-students and prepared him for further success in subsequent life. It may be said here that he always entertained a high regard for his preceptor, and often spoke of him as a gentleman of high culture and an impressive and eloquent lecturer.

After his graduation in the University of Pennsylvania he returned to his native city, with the view of entering upon the practice of his profession, and one year afterwards lost his excellent father by a stroke of apoplexy, and thus, with but limited means of support, was thrown upon his own resources. His father died May 28, 1815. He was married to his first wife Feb. 6, 1816. This lady was a granddaughter of the Rev. John Helfrich Schaum, one of the early ministers of the Lutheran Church, sent over from Halle. This gentleman had come over to America in the year 1745.

From necessity and inclination he devoted himself with all the energy of his nature to the noble profession he had selected for his life-work, and in the discharge of the duties connected with it in the departments of general practice and surgery, which then, and especially in the county, were intimately united, he spent fifty years of the best part of his life in ministering to the wants of his fellow-men. In this long period of practice he built up for himself a widespread reputation and a competent support. His skill was greater in general practice than in surgery, for which the tenderness of his heart somewhat disqualified him. But in the multiplied forms of acute and chronic disease he had few superiors in Pennsylvania in accurate diagnosis and judicious treatment. Too modest to claim this for himself, the writer knows these qualifications to have been accorded to him, as the result of his long and varied practice, by some of the most eminent of his medical contemporaries in the schools of Philadelphia and elsewhere. His benevolent labors were not confined to the city of his birth, in every part of which, among the rich and the poor, he was a daily visitant, but extended to the most distant parts of the county, and adjoining counties, in cases of his own, or in consultation with other physicians. Everywhere he gained the confidence and respect of the people by the soundness of his judgment, the urbanity of his manner, and the warmth of his heart. His kind and sympathetic words by the bedside of his patients often acted as a charm, and did as much good as the medicine he administered. Nor did he merely show concern for the bodily ills of those to whom he was ministering, he was also solicitous to promote their higher and spiritual welfare. Where necessary he did not hesitate to mingle encouragement with reproof; he brought up before the minds of the dying the promises of the divine Word for their consolation, and often, when requested, offered up prayers to God in their behalf. Both kinds of services are germane to this profession, and ought never to be separated. He also frequently accelerated the cure of his poorer patients by sending them delicacies from his own table, and in other cases awakened for them the sympathies and secured the benefactions of their fellow-citizens. Services of this kind, continued for so many years, and which were not intermitted until he was disqualified for them by blindness and organic disease of another kind, cannot be fitly described in a few words; they are gratefully remembered on earth and have been rewarded in heaven. While his profession was the great field in which his usefulness was most conspicuously and most constantly displayed, he was also ever ready to promote the welfare of his fellow-citizens in other directions, and to advance the prosperity of the city of his birth and the land of his nativity whenever a suitable opportunity offered. He served as prothonotary in the years 1821-28, having been appointed by Governor Hiester, and his occupancy of this office brought him into contact with the leading legal and literary gentlemen of Lancaster, which both improved his mind and increased his influence. He was appointed register of wills afterwards by Governor Shultz, and served two terms.

As president of the Lancaster Bank, with James Evans, Esq., as cashier, he aided in rescuing it from destruction, and in raising it to a high degree of usefulness and prosperity. With other gentlemen he interested himself for the improvement of the Conestoga, by a series of locks, to bring it into connection with tide-water, for commercial purposes, and used his influence and contributed of his means to make it a success. The money was lost, though the improvement remains.

He was also much interested in early life in politics, being connected with the Democratic party, and along with Mr. Buchanan he aided in promoting the measures of that organization, so long as they were in his judgment calculated to promote the general good. He was also a member of the military company which, in 1812, with Mr. Buchanan as captain, went to Baltimore to volunteer their services in defense of that city on the appearance of the British. On their arrival at Baltimore the danger was past. The doctor remained a steadfast personal and political friend of Mr. Buchanan until, as President, he took sides with the South in the Kansas struggle, and failed to oppose with the necessary vigor the efforts of the secessionists to dismember our country. Love of country then impelled the doctor to forsake the friend of his youth and the party favoring such pernicious doctrines. In the great Rebellion his voice gave no uncertain sound. He could not prefer party to the welfare of his country. Descended from a grandfather, the Rev. Dr. Henry Melchoir Muhlenberg, who was called by the British, when encamped round his residence, in the neighborhood of Valley Forge, and occupying Philadelphia, "an arch rebel;" having also had one uncle, Maj.-Gen. Peter Muhlenberg, who had served in the Revolution with distinction, from its commencement in Charleston, S. C., to its brilliant close at Yorktown; named after another uncle, the Hon. Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, who had been obliged to flee from New York on its occupancy by the English troops, and was afterwards Speaker of the First and Third Congresses of the United States; conscious also that his own father had several times been obliged to flee from Philadelphia in disguise to escape falling into the hands of the invaders of our country, and had lost in consequence nearly all of his property, by nature and education all the pulsations of his heart were for that glorious Union which had been secured at such sacrifices. Without hesitation he united with the war party to preserve the Constitution and the government. His aid was solicited and given in the organization of the Union League, and he became its first president. Throughout the entire struggle he and all of the name were found on the side of their country, and none rejoiced more than he did on the final triumph of the cause of the Union. The doctor might have had high political positions. He declined the offers; he had no aspirations for public honors of this kind. Once, to satisfy his friends, with no hope of election, he ran as a candidate for Congress against the Hon. Thaddeus Stevens.

We turn now to another sphere of his honored and useful life, that of education and religion. Here he co-operated at a comparatively early period with other gentlemen of Lancaster of different religious denominations to establish the Lancasterian public school for the benefit of the poor of the city, and one of his nieces for a long period was the successful principal of the female department. Subsequently he aided in the promotion of the success of the Lancaster County Academy, of which he was one of the trustees. Still more important services, however, did he render in this direction when, after the introduction of the public-school system, this institution was merged into and became a part of Franklin College, incorporated in the year 1787 by the Legislature of Pennsylvania for the benefit of the Germans and their descendants. His father had been one of its early trustees and president, and the son, aided by other public-spirited gentlemen of Lancaster of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches, had husbanded the proceeds arising from the sale of the lands granted it by the State with great industry and care, until the negotiations of the different parties interested in it for the division of its funds, or its reorganization, were in progress a few years anterior to 1850. It was owing chiefly to his earnest efforts and influence with others in the course of the able and animated discussion on this subject that the final result was reached, the removal of Marshall College to Lancaster, to be united with the old institution, and the founding of the Franklin Professorship in Pennsylvania College, at Gettysburg, by the Lutheran share of the funds. Though this was contrary to the doctor's wishes in the outset of the debate, he acquiesced in the seemingly providential termination of the matter; and it is now apparent that these measures have greatly benefited Lancaster and the two churches for whom Franklin College was mainly incorporated. Thus the sacrifice of his own personal preferences by the unselfish subject of our sketch resulted in greater good to the institutions of his own church; and at the very last meeting of the Ministerium of Pennsylvania of the Lutheran Church, May, 1883, the incumbent of the "Franklin Professorship," at Gettysburg, was transferred as Professor of Dogmatic Theology to the Lutheran Theological Seminary in Philadelphia. The doctor and his associates in the board of trustees of Franklin College were united with the board at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg.

In the Lutheran congregation of the Holy Trinity, to which he belonged throughout his life, he was among the first to advocate the introduction of English preaching, which was done so gradually and judiciously that no injustice was done to the German interests; and in all the other measures proposed for its benefit, such as the call of pastors, the remodeling of the church building, Woodward Hall Cemetery, removal of debt, etc., by his wise and prudent counsels and active co-operation he contributed greatly to bring about its present prosperity. For many years he was a member of its vestry, either as trustee or elder, and when not holding office he was regularly consulted, and seldom were his views opposed. In a representative capacity he was, on many occasions, delegate to the Ministerium of Pennsylvania and the General Synod of the Lutheran Church.

It may be proper to state that the doctor seldom allowed himself any recreation from the duties of his profession. He was never abroad, nor even at any of the places of summer resort. His patients dreaded even his temporary absence to such a degree that he exercised self-denial in this regard also to subserve their interests. It gave him pleasure to spend the few hours of leisure afforded him in his profession on the small farm and lots he owned in the neighborhood of the city, and his simple and pure tastes were thus easily gratified.

In personal appearance the doctor was noble and commanding, and every one felt in his presence that he was no ordinary character, and could not be trifled with. His frame was muscular and his constitution sound and vigorous, both of which he inherited from his father, who, though "a man of peace," was considered the strongest man in Lancaster County, to say nothing more. The doctor was twice married, the first time to the lady already mentioned, the second time to Ann Eliza Duchman. He had by the first marriage five, and by the second nine, children.

The last few years of his life he was a great sufferer. In addition to his blindness, he was obliged to endure protracted and intense bodily pain from organic disease. All these complicated ills he endured with heroic fortitude and Christian resignation, and, in spite of his keen suffering, retained the use of his faculties unclouded to the last. His judgment of his own condition was so accurate that it almost amounted to a prediction. He concluded, from his symptoms, that he might live until the Fourth of July, the natal day of our great republic. He actually died on the 5th of that month, a few hours after the time determined upon in his own reflections. How happy are we in being able to say for him, and for others who are following in that beaten track to the grave, that he died in hope of a glorious immortality through the merits of that Saviour who had redeemed him, and for whom he had endeavored, with ever-increasing fidelity, to live and to labor! "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

DR. HENRY E. MUHLENBERG, of Lancaster, was a native of the city, and a son of the above. He read medicine with his father and Dr. Benjamin Rush, and took his degree at the University of Pennsylvania with the class of 1838. After graduation he became associated with his father, and soon accumulated a large and remunerative practice. Aside from his private practice, he was consulting and visiting physician to the Lancaster County Hospital. He was an active member of the board of Councils of the city, and also a member of the County Medical Society. In 1869 he was appointed by President Grant collector of internal revenue of the Ninth District, which office he held until his death, which occurred in July, 1877.

DR. HENRY E. MUHLENBERG, JR., was born in the city, and a son of the above, with whom he studied medicine. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1871, and two years later was appointed surgeon in the United States marine service, serving in the hospitals of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia respectively. Began private practice in 1877 in Lancaster, and since then has served several terms as surgeon to the Lancaster County Hospital. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. BENJAMIN S. MUHLENBERG, of Lancaster, is a son of Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg, with whom he began his medical studies, and is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1845, and also of the Medical Institute of Philadelphia. Two years after graduation he was commissioned surgeon of the army under President Polk, and was assigned to the Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, being present at the taking of Vera Cruz. He afterwards resigned his commission, returned to Lancaster, and followed the practice of his profession until 1851, when he engaged in the drug business. He was one of the early members of the Medical Society, and one of the first censors of the State Medical Society.

JOHN LIGHT ATLEE, M.D., LL.D.—His great-grandfather, William Atlee, a native of England, came to America about 1740 as the private secretary of Lord Admiral Howe, of the West Indies fleet, subsequently went to Philadelphia and Trenton, N. J., and was a merchant at the latter place, where he died suddenly, leaving children: William, Augustus, Col. Samuel John (who with Gen. Wayne raised the first two Pennsylvania regiments for the Revolutionary war), and Amelia. Upon the death of the father Edward Shippen, a lawyer of Lancaster, Pa., took William Augustus, then a lad of twelve years, to his home, where in due time he read law with that eminent advocate. William Augustus Atlee was an active Whig, chairman of the Committee of Safety, and deputy commissary of prisoners during the war of the Revolution. He was appointed to the Supreme Court bench of the State, and filled that place at the time of his sudden death in Lancaster by yellow fever, in 1793, and in honor of his judicial position he accompanied his associate judges in the great procession in Philadelphia in honor of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. His wife, Esther, a daughter of Rev. John Sayre, an Episcopal clergyman of Trenton, bore him the following children: Col. William Pitt (1778-1816), a coppersmith, deputy sheriff, marshal of the district, and had charge of the British prisoners, and was colonel of a regiment in the war of 1812-14; John Sayre, died at Carlisle; Dr. Edwin Augustus, read medicine with Surgeon-General Dr. Edward Hand, practiced his profession for many years in Philadelphia, and died there; Elizabeth, wife of Maj. Moses White, of the Revolutionary war; Jane Rigg, wife of an Episcopal clergyman; Sally became the wife of Thomas Vickroy, the famous surveyor, who laid out Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mary, wife of Edward V. James; and Charlotte, wife of William Charles White, a lawyer of Boston, who, after her husband's death, was a Baptist missionary in India for thirteen years, there married a Mr. Rowe, and after his death returned to America with her three children.

The eldest, Col. William Pitt Atlee, married, in 1798, Sarah (1780-1850), a daughter of Maj. John Light, a Revolutionary officer from 1775 to 1783, and at Lord Cornwallis' surrender. Their children are Dr. John Light Atlee (the subject of this sketch), Elizabeth Amelia, William Lewis, Edwin Augustus, Catharine Esther, Dr. Washington Lemuel (1808-1879), read medicine with his eldest brother, was an eminent physician in Philadelphia, and Professor of Medical Chemistry in Pennsylvania College.

Dr. John Light, eldest son of Col. William Pitt and Sarah Atlee, was born in Lancaster Nov. 2, 1799. After receiving his preliminary education in the schools of Lancaster, and at Grey and Wiley's Academy, Philadelphia, he began to read medicine with Dr. Samuel Humes in 1815, and in April, 1820, was graduated M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania. He at once settled in the practice of his profession at Lancaster, where he has enjoyed a large and lucrative practice in physics and surgery since, a period of sixty-three years. Dr. Atlee was one of the founders of the Lancaster City and County Medical Society in April, 1844, and has twice served it as president. He was one of the organizers of the State Medical Society in 1848, and became its president in 1857. He was one of the organizers of the American Medical Association in Philadelphia in 1847, its vice-president in 1868, and was chosen its presiding officer in June, 1882. At the union of Franklin and Marshall College, Dr. Atlee was chosen Professor of Anatomy and Physiology, and continued to fill that chair until 1869. He is a trustee of the college as well as of the Bishop Bowman Church Home of Lancaster, president of the boards of trustees of the Home for Friendless Children of the city and county of Lancaster, and of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg. He has always been deeply interested in the cause of education, and served as school director for forty years following 1822, and thirty years as senior warden of the Episcopal Church in Lancaster. Dr. Atlee has been a contributor to the American Medical Journal and other periodicals. He revived the operation of ovariectomy in 1848, and was the first to successfully remove both ovaries at one operation. His eminent medical and surgical skill is widely known and appreciated, while his dignified courtesy and intrinsic worth endear him to a large circle of friends.

He is an associate member of the College of Physicians in Philadelphia; was elected at Boston, in 1877, an Honorary Fellow of the American Gynecological Society, and in 1878 Franklin and Marshall College conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D.

He has been not only an able and brilliant man during a long and well-spent life, but has occupied most of the offices in the gift of American physicians. The eminent Dr. S. D. Gross, of Philadelphia, says of him, "As a physician and as a general surgeon, skilled in diagnosis, in the art of prescribing, and in the use of the knife, he has earned a wide and an enduring reputation, and added lustre to his native

State and city, as one of their most worthy and illustrious citizens."

He married, March 12, 1822, Sarah H., eldest daughter of the late Hon. Walter Franklin, president judge of the courts of Lancaster and York Counties. His surviving children are Dr. Walter Franklin Atlee, a graduate of Yale and of Pennsylvania University, has practiced medicine in Philadelphia since 1853; Dr. John Light Atlee, a graduate of Yale and Pennsylvania University, has practiced medicine at Lancaster since 1852, and was examining surgeon here during the late civil war; William Augustus, graduated at Yale, read law with his uncle, Thomas E. Franklin, of Lancaster, and is practicing his profession in his native city; and one daughter, Anne Franklin Atlee.

JEREMIAH B. STUBBS, M.D.—The progenitor of the Stubbs families of Pennsylvania, North Carolina, and Ohio was Thomas Stubbs, who came from England and settled in Goshen township, Chester Co., Pa., as early as 1718. In 1720 he moved to West Bradford, where he married Mary Miner, who came from Ireland. About 1756 he removed to Concord township, Delaware Co., where he died in the year 1768. Thomas Stubbs had nine children. His eldest son, Daniel, married Ruth Gilpin, whose ancestry has been traced back to Richard-De-Guylpin (1206), who, during the reign of King John, of England, was knighted, and given the Manor of Kentmore as a reward for his bravery.

Daniel and Ruth Stubbs, after their marriage, resided in Delaware County for fifteen years (1767-82), when they migrated to the eastern bank of the Susquehanna, located on a large tract of land, and became the common ancestors of all of the name in Lancaster County. Daniel died at an advanced age in the year 1808. His family consisted of four children. The youngest, Isaac (1774-1840), married (1801) Hannah (1778-1825), daughter of Jeremiah and Hannah (England) Brown, early settlers in this section of the county.

Isaac's family comprised ten children. Jeremiah Brown Stubbs, his second son and subject of this sketch, was born at what is now known as Wick's Mill, Fulton township, on the 18th of April, 1804. When he was three years old his parents moved to Harford County, Md., having purchased a small property near the "Rocks of Deer Creek." They remained there until 1821, when they returned to Lancaster County to reside on a property jointly inherited by the father and mother. After the return of the family to his native county Jeremiah entered a mercantile establishment in Baltimore. Disliking the business, he returned home in a few months. Receiving encouragement and pecuniary aid from his maternal grandfather, Jeremiah Brown (of whom he always retained a grateful remembrance) he was induced to enter one of the learned professions. With no advantages of a preparatory education, other than instructions received from a kind parent and limited attainments secured by a few years' attendance at a public school, he commenced the study of medicine in the year 1824. After reading, under direction of Dr. Vincent King, a well-known practitioner of southern Lancaster County, he attended two courses of lectures at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and graduated in the class of March 8, 1827. Receiving his medical degree he located at Rising Sun, Cecil Co., Md., where he practiced his profession for nine years. While there, Sept. 9, 1827, he was elected a member of the Medico-Chirurgical Society of Maryland.

Feb. 25, 1836, he married Rachel H., eldest daughter of Timothy Kirk, of Oxford, Chester Co., formerly a member of the State Legislature, and then an active business citizen of that place. Previous to his marriage he purchased the farm of Dr. John K. Sappington, of Little Britain, Lancaster Co., to which he removed and continued to practice his profession to the time of his decease, a period of thirty-five years.

In the early days of his medical career his labors to alleviate suffering humanity were unceasing, and at times exceedingly arduous. Possessing a strong constitution and determined will, he was enabled to practice throughout a section of country many miles in extent.

In 1844 he became a member of the Lancaster City and County Medical Society, and afterwards president of that organization. He was elected to represent it in the American Medical Association, and attended its meetings at Boston, 1849; Richmond, 1852; New York, 1858; and Philadelphia, 1855.

In 1847 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania by the Whigs of Lancaster County, and was re-elected in 1848. While a member of the Legislature he took an active part in all subjects pertaining to general education. During his first term he served on the Committee on Education, and the second was placed on the Committee on Banks and Ways and Means. Having served the customary two terms he returned to his farm, his practice, and the instruction of students of medicine. Seven young men read under his direction and graduated. Surgery, or that part of the science properly belonging to the surgeons, he did not fancy. His sympathetic temperament forbade it. His province or forte was the duties properly belonging to the physician. Few men were better versed in etiology, or the causes of disease, and in diagnosis he had few equals. In this he was an adept, and hence his skill in practice.

For several years previous to his death Dr. Stubbs had frequent admonitions of a malady that he was well aware would finally prove fatal. On the 4th and 5th of July, 1862, he was attacked with angina pectoris, and died suddenly on the morning of the 10th, aged fifty-eight years.

Dr. Stubbs had two children, both of whom are sons. The eldest, Charles H. Stubbs, was born Dec. 30, 1839. After attending several terms at the Millersville State Normal School, commenced, in 1861, the study of medicine under direction of his father. In 1862, while a student, he received from Surg.-Gen. Hammond, United States army, the appointment of medical cadet, and joined the medical staff of Brigade-Surgeon David McRuer, in charge of the floating hospital, Louisiana; employed in conveying the wounded of Gen. McClellan's army to Philadelphia and Washington; attended two courses of lectures at Jefferson Medical College, and graduated in the class of March 10, 1863. In July of that year he was appointed assistant surgeon Fortieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, and in 1864 served on the staff of Surgeon Joseph Hopkinson Mower, United States Army Hospital, Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia.

Sept. 10, 1868, married Sallie B., only daughter of Timothy and Rachel E. Haines. Since 1864 he has resided at the homestead in Fulton township, engaged in farming and practicing his profession. Taking an interest in all public improvements in his section of the county, he was at one time a director of the Peach Bottom Railroad Company. During his leisure hours he has not failed to gratify his taste for the natural sciences. His cabinet of minerals, fossils, and relics of the Stone Age, is among the finest in the county. He is the author of several monographs on various subjects, and a volume on genealogy; is a corresponding member of the Linnæan Society of Lancaster, and of the Maryland Academy of Science.

The second son, Cassius E. Stubbs, born March 22, 1844, educated at the West Chester Academy and State Normal School, Millersville, read law under Hon. A. Herr Smith, of Lancaster, Pa., attended two courses of lectures at the Law Department of the University of Michigan, where he graduated in the class of 1865; located in Jefferson County, W. Va., and practiced his profession for several years. While there, was elected State attorney of that county, and afterwards represented it in the State Legislature. He removed to Colorado Springs, Col., where he now resides. He has been prosecuting attorney for El Paso County, and represented his constituents in the Senate of the "Centennial State." He married Hannah K., daughter of Lewis and Sarah Haines, of Fulton, Lancaster Co., Pa.

DR. FRANCIS DORMAN, "Chymist and Doctor of Medicine at the Faculties of Germany, France, and several European academies," located at Lancaster about 1819. He opened an "Apothecary Shop" next door to Jonathan Henkle's tavern, sign of the "Deer," and according to his advertisement "undertakes the cure of all diseases to which human life is exposed in its different ages."

DR. J. MCELWAY, "Physician and Accoucheur," resided at Lancaster, 1819. He claimed to be a licentiate of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, Glasgow. "He opened shop first door above Mr. Dismont's Bookstore, North Queen Street."

DR. J. MILLAR, of the firm of J. Millar & W. Thompson, was a Scotchman. He attended one course of lectures in London by the celebrated Abernethy, and came to this country as a surgeon on a merchant vessel. He located in Lancaster about 1815, and brought with him one William Thompson. He was the father of the late William Millar, jeweler, of this city, and was married to an aunt of Henry Leman, of Lancaster.

DR. WILLIAM THOMPSON, of the above firm, was no physician, but merely an apothecary's clerk in Dublin, and therefore had no right to the title of doctor. He married a Mrs. Burke.

DR. HANDFORD, of Salisbury, 1810, practiced for a great number of years, and died about 1843.

DR. WILLIAM B. DUFFIELD was located on East King Street, and in 1820 he announces through the press that he "devotes himself particularly to midwifery." He afterwards went to Philadelphia, where he acquired a very good practice, then removed to Lancaster, but soon returned to Philadelphia, where he died. He was a highly respectable physician and quite popular.

DR. SAMUEL DUFFIELD, son of the above, also practiced in Lancaster, and afterwards removed to Columbia, and later to Strasburg. He never succeeded in the profession, owing, it is said, to his ignoring the poor, and thus being too exclusive in his choice of patients.

DR. SAMUEL HUMES was the son of Samuel Humes, Esq., a native of Lancaster. Prior to taking up medicine (1806) he was treasurer of the city. Dr. Humes graduated in medicine in 1808 at the University of Pennsylvania, and soon afterwards located in his native city. He enjoyed a large and successful practice, and was in every respect an eminent physician and successful surgeon. In 1823 he was active in the formation of the first medical society, which came to such an untimely end. In 1844 he was again foremost in the organization of the present medical society; he was elected its first president, and was re-elected for four successive years, when the constitution and by-laws were so amended that a president could not be his own immediate successor. When the State Medical Society was founded, he was also elected its first president. Among Dr. Humes' successful pupils are Drs. John L. Atlee and Henry Carpenter, the latter of whom being also appointed his executor after his decease, which occurred in September, 1852. It was said of him that in every relation in life he conducted himself as a Christian gentleman, a patriotic and liberal-minded citizen, and a faithful friend. At his decease the society requested that his remains might be borne to their last resting-place by its members.

DR. DINGE, a native of Delaware County, settled near Bird-in-Hand about 1823-24; never succeeded to a large practice, but was popular among his own sect, the Quakers.

DR. KIEGY was located at Strasburg in 1823.

DR. FORMAN was a classmate of Dr. John L. Atlee, but being afraid of the green-room, went to New York and received his degree from an institution which did not require attendance, but merely an examination. He afterwards came to Salisbury, but soon returned to Princeton, his native place, and practiced there until 1845, when he and his son, who was also a physician, died, the victims of typhoid fever.

DR. BOULDEN was a native of Delaware, and lived at Strasburg. He was a man of quick temper, high passions, and not unacquainted with the duello.

DR. JACOB MOORE lived at Strasburg. He was highly respectable as a practitioner, and correspondingly successful.

ROBERT M. GIRVIN, M.D.—Robert Girvin, of Scotch-Irish parentage, came in early manhood to this country about 1780, locating in Lancaster County. He was an educated man with strong intellectuality. He married Mary Smith, of English-Quaker stock. By this marriage there were eight children,—five sons,—James, William Isaac, John, Samuel, and Daniel, and three daughters,—Ann Eliza, Sarah, and Margaret.

Isaac, the third son, the father of the subject of the present sketch, was born in Paradise township, September, 1800. He early developed a fondness for books, and so profited by his father's instruction that he became proficient in the classics and in mathematics. At an early age he began teaching, and later in life engaged in surveying and engineering with farming. He was an active and aggressive Democrat, participating in most of the councils of the State for nearly thirty years. His devotion to the party continued until the firing upon Fort Sumter.

In 1828 he married Susan, eldest daughter of John and Mary Eshleman (née Weaver). John Eshleman was a farmer living southeast of Strasburg. He was noted for his charity and sympathy for the poor, to whom he freely gave of his abundance.

Isaac and Susan Girvin had five children,—two sons,—John E. and Robert M., and three daughters, Mary, Annie, and Susan. Robert M. was born Feb. 3, 1836, in the village of Strasburg, and was educated at the public schools, the Strasburg Academy, and the Lewisburg University, completing his education by attending the first two courses of the State Normal School at Millersville, Lancaster Co. After teaching three winters he began merchandising in Strasburg. This undertaking proved unfortunate.

Having determined to study medicine, after a full course at the Jefferson Medical College, he graduated therefrom in 1862. He was immediately elected a resident physician to the Philadelphia Hospital, and at once entered upon his duties. Subsequently he served eight months in a large military hospital. In January, 1864, he began private practice in West Philadelphia. In 1866 he was elected consulting physician to the Philadelphia Hospital, department of obstetrics and diseases of women and children.

West Philadelphia, from its inception, has been noted for the variety and number of its charitable institutions, its homes for children of both sexes, and the two races, white and black, its homes for old men and for old women. Dr. Girvin early became interested in all of these homes, assisted in the foundation of many, and, save one, has been or is now attending or consulting physician to all. Being largely impressed with the urgent need of more hospital accommodation, and finding the Presbyterians of New York had determined to establish a hospital under their management, he early entered the field and agitated the question among Presbyterians, of the wisdom of their denomination founding a similar institution in Philadelphia.

When the church, through the Presbyterian alliance, was on the eve of making a connection with Charity Hospital, Dr. Girvin had the good fortune to induce Dr. E. D. Saunders to offer his valuable property, at the corner of Thirty-ninth and Powelton Avenue, to the alliance for hospital purposes. This offer was accepted, the hospital organized and opened for patients in 1873. Dr. Girvin accepted the position of gynecologist to the hospital.

Having identified himself with the Presbyterian

R. M. Gorvin

M. B. Musser M.S.

Hospital, he resigned his position in the Philadelphia Hospital (Blockley) in 1876.

In the beginning of his career Dr. Girvin determined to practice medicine exclusively, and not to engage in medical teaching or writing. He has rigorously held fast to this determination, and though no effort has been made to bring himself before the profession or the public, his work is probably not exceeded by a half-dozen of his brethren in Philadelphia or the State. Attention to his own work has developed a large and lucrative practice. He is a member of the Pennsylvania State and County Medical Society, the Pathological Society, the Obstetrical Society, and the West Philadelphia Medical Society.

In July, 1867, Dr. Girvin married Susan H. Saunders, widow of Courtland Saunders, and daughter of John M. and Susan Harper. Mr. Harper was well known to the business world as an importer and dealer in watches, and to the religious world as a conscientious and active Presbyterian. Dr. Girvin and wife have four children,—John H., Charles Jeffreys, Robert M., and Mary.

DR. JOHN MUSSER lived at Turkey Hill, and practiced there and in Lancaster, where he came once or twice a week to meet his patients. He was not a graduate of any school, nor did he have any educational advantages. He had an extensive practice, and was especially famous for his cures of "white swellings." He introduced many medicinal combinations which are still in use at the present day, among which was the "White Salve," of great value in the treatment of ulcers. He died about 1820.

DR. JOSEPH MUSSER was a son of the above, and studied medicine with his father. He began practice near Marietta, where he remained for several years, and then removed to Ohio.

DR. MARTIN MUSSER, a brother of the above, also studied with his father, Dr. John Musser, and settled in Lampeter, where he accumulated a large practice, which extended beyond the borders of the county. He was a great reader and close observer, and also an intimate friend of Professor John Eberle, of Philadelphia, whose hospitality he enjoyed while visiting that city. He died in 1850, at the early age of fifty, of leucocythemia.

Of the sons of Martin Musser, three became physicians and one a farmer. They are as follows:

DR. JACOB MUSSER was educated in the public schools, studied medicine with his father, but never graduated. He located at Smoketown, where he continued in practice until 1867, when he was succeeded by his son, Dr. Frank M. Musser, now of Lancaster.

DR. F. M. MUSSER attended Millersville State Normal School, taught public school two years prior to registering as a student of medicine under Dr. D. D. Richardson, physician-in-chief of the Insane Department of Blockley Hospital, Philadelphia, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1870. He began private practice at Witmer, and continued the same up to 1880, when he was obliged to relinquish it on account of failing health. Two years later he located at Lancaster. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies, and also of the American Medical Association.

DR. BENJAMIN MUSSER, of Strasburg, was the second son of Dr. Martin Musser. He prepared for medical college in the office of his father, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in the class of '46. After graduation he located at New Providence, where he remained until 1850, and then removed to Strasburg, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred July 14, 1883. Dr. Musser enjoyed an extensive and laborious practice; and though naturally quiet and reserved, he was a man of fine social qualities. He worked hard, and, strange as it may seem, was yet able to keep abreast with the most advanced ideas of medical thought. He was a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. JOHN H. MUSSER, of Philadelphia, son of the above, attended Strasburg Academy, Millersville State Normal School, studied with his father, and received his degree in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1877. In 1878-79 he was resident physician at Blockley; in 1879 he was appointed medical registrar of the University of Pennsylvania; in 1881 named as chief of the Medical Dispensary of the same institution. He is a member of the State and Philadelphia County Medical Societies, of the Pathological Society, and physician-in-chief to several charitable institutions.

HENRY MUSSER, the third son of Dr. Martin, was a farmer, but his two sons are physicians.

M. B. MUSSER, M.D., was born in Strasburg township, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 20th day of October, A.D. 1846. He is a son of Henry Musser, now of West Lampeter township, in said county, whose biography, which appears on another page of this work, gives a history of Dr. Musser's ancestors. Born of a family of physicians, it is not to be wondered at that as soon as old enough the doctor turned his thoughts to the medical profession. After the usual attendance at the district schools of his native township he attended the Millersville Seminary, near Lancaster. At the age of nineteen he entered the office of his uncle, Dr. Benjamin Musser, with whom he studied one year. He then went to New York City, and spent nine months in the Bellevue Hospital College, from whence he returned to Philadelphia, and became a student in the Jefferson Medical College, from which he graduated in 1868. Immediately after receiving his diploma he was elected resident physician of Philadelphia Hospital, in which capacity he served fifteen months. He then opened an office at the corner of Fortieth and Walnut Streets, in West Philadelphia, where he remained four years, then removed to his present fine location, at Fortieth and Locust Streets. In his practice of medicine Dr. Musser has met with unvarying success, and deservedly stands high in his profession, and has by close attention to his business, aided by a natural adaptability to the work he has chosen, added another name to the long list of successful physicians who were born and reared in old Lancaster County. On the 24th day of September, 1873, Dr. Musser was joined in marriage to Miss Carrie M. Swaine, of Newark, N. J., who was born June 4, 1846. To them have been born two children, viz.: Henry M., born Sept. 28, 1876, and Lawrence G., born March 8, 1880. Mrs. Musser's father, Mahlon F. Swaine (formerly spelled Swayne), was born near Morristown, N. J., Jan. 1, 1803. His father, Bryant Swaine, was also born near Morristown. His father was a native of Amsterdam, Holland, and became a well-to-do merchant of his native city. The date of Mr. Swaine's coming to America is not known, but it was when the colonies were in their infancy. His son Bryant became a farmer, and located near Morristown. He married Miss Phebe Brown, who bore him five sons, of whom one was Mahlon F., who grew to manhood near Morristown. He became quite prominent in his county, and held different offices of trust and responsibility. He died Feb. 13, 1849. He married Miss Jane L. Geurin, daughter of Halsey and Ann (Stevens) Geurin. The Geurins are descended from an old French Huguenot family of wealth and distinction. Halsey's grandfather, who was heir to the family estates, was compelled, after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, either to change his religion or give up wealth and position and flee the country. He chose the latter, and escaped by swimming to a ship, which brought him to the New World, where he landed without a dollar. The property in France became his brother's, and is still held by his descendants. Mr. Geurin located on a farm in Morris County, which is still in the family name, as it has been for two hundred years. He reared a large family of children, one of whom was Vincent, who also became a farmer. His wife was a Miss Brown, by whom he had five children. Vincent Geurin was a lieutenant in the Revolutionary war. His son was Halsey, the father of Mrs. Jane L. Swaine and grandfather of Mrs. Dr. Musser. He served in the war of 1812. He died in December, 1823, his wife in 1854.

DR. H. E. MUSSER, of Witmer, is a son of Henry Musser, of West Lampeter township. He obtained his preliminary education at the Millersville State Normal School and Saunders' Institute, West Philadelphia; studied medicine under Dr. Benjamin Musser, of Strasburg, and his brother, Dr. M. B. Musser, of West Philadelphia, and in 1875 graduated at the Jefferson Medical College. He began practice at Centerville, and in 1880 moved to his present location. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. MARTIN MUSSER, JR., was the fourth son, referred to above; educated at home, read with his brother, Dr. Benjamin, and graduated in 1849 at the Pennsylvania Medical College. After graduation he practiced a while at Strasburg, and then removed to Cumberland County, where he died at an early age.

DR. DANIEL MUSSER, of York County, studied with old Dr. Martin Musser, his uncle, whom he assisted for some time, and afterwards succeeded in practice at Lampeter. Later he became an active worker in the New Mennonite Church, afterwards a preacher and bishop, and the author of several religious works, notably a history of the church. Becoming deeply involved in the affairs of the church, he resigned his practice to his son, Dr. J. H. Musser, who still continues at the same place.

DR. J. HENRY MUSSER was born in Lampeter township, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 5th day of January, A.D. 1845. His family is one of the old families of Lancaster County, and on both sides have been prominent in the Mennonite Church. His father, Daniel Musser, was born in Cumberland County, Pa., Nov. 2, 1809, and by the death of his father in 1822, was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood. Three years later he came on foot to Lancaster County, and with his uncle, Dr. Martin Musser, who lived in Lampeter, found a home. He worked for his uncle for his board and clothes, and spent all his leisure time in the study of medicine under his instruction. He remained with the doctor until he was of age, when he opened an office in Providence, in Lancaster County, where he remained a short time, then removed to Millersville, where he also practiced for a time, then came to Lampeter and bought out his uncle and assumed his practice. He was a successful practitioner, and followed his profession in Lampeter until 1869. In 1847 he joined the New Mennonite Church, of which his father-in-law, John Herr, was the founder. He became a bishop in the church, and in the latter years of his life devoted the most of his time in extending and building up the society. He was a man of fine literary ability, and was the author of the life of John Herr and a history of the Reformed Mennonite Church. His wife, to whom he was married Nov. 27, 1832, was Elizabeth, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Gross) Herr. She was born in Lancaster County, Jan. 15, 1814. John Herr was born in Lancaster County, of Mennonite parents. Becoming dissatisfied with the church as then conducted, he founded the New Mennonite Church, and soon had many followers. His death occurred in Buffalo, N. Y., on his return from Canada, where he had been preaching the new doctrine to the people. Daniel Musser died Jan. 20, 1877; his wife, Nov. 8, 1870. Their children were Mary A., born Feb. 1, 1832, and J. Henry, the subject of this sketch, who was born in Lampeter, as above set forth, and where he grew to manhood. It was the wish of his mother and sister that he should also become a physician, and he was sent to the private school of Benjamin Herr and brother, where he remained some time. In 1864 he went to Philadelphia and attended lectures at Jefferson College, being a student of Dr. D. D. Richardson during the time in the Northern Dispensary of Philadelphia. He graduated in 1866, and soon after established himself in the practice of his profession in his native village of Lampeter, where he has since remained and where he has built up a fine practice. In politics the doctor is an ardent Republican, but is not a politician, as his calling takes all his time. He was elected president of the medical society in 1882, and held the position one year, then giving way, as is customary, to some one else. On the 27th day of October, 1868, he was joined in marriage to Miss Leida Musselman, daughter of John and Eliza (Breckbill) Musselman. She was born May 27, 1848. Their children are Edith E., born July 15, 1871; Willie, born Oct. 9, 1872; and Ada, born Aug. 24, 1878, died Oct. 13, 1881.

DR. ABRAHAM CARPENTER was a descendant of Heinrich Zimmerman, and practiced medicine in Lancaster during the first quarter of the present century. He acquired considerable reputation from being the only surgeon of his day who had successfully performed the supra-pubic or high operation for stone in the bladder. He was the father-in-law of David G. Eshleman, Esq., of this city.

DR. J. BATES CARPENTER, Lancaster, "two doors above the post-office," July, 1832.

JAMES PURCELL, M.D. and P. C., advertises Sept. 9, 1831, that he is a licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London, and has opened an office at the house of Charles Shaeffer, potter, in Lancaster, and is ready to minister to the wants of the public.

DR. JAMES POWER, who for some time had taught the academy in the city, advertises March, 1833, and offers his professional services free to the poor of the city during the time he is not occupied in the school.

DR. WILLIAM MCPHERSON, of Marietta, was a native of Gettysburg, and a son of John McPherson, Esq., president for many years of the Gettysburg Bank. He practiced medicine at Marietta for a number of years, and then removed to Harrisburg, and engaged in the drug business. He enjoyed a large practice at Marietta, but he lacked energy to keep it together, though aside from this he was a most excellent and successful physician. He was the father of Judge John McPherson, now of Lebanon.

DR. J. S. CLARKSON, Columbia, 1831. He was prominent as a physician, politician, and educator, and one of the first, through the means of public meetings, to arouse the sentiments of the people on the subject of public education.

DR. CLARKSON SMITH, of Columbia, nephew of the above, was a very brilliant young man and the author of a number of contributions on medical subjects. In 1855 he went to Norfolk, Va., to attend the yellow fever sufferers, and while there was taken sick and died with the disease.

DR. J. W. COOPER, Indian physician, was located,

1839, half a mile from Hinkletown, on the New Holland road; not in the least modest in proclaiming his extraordinary ability, "he challenges any physician in the United States to beat him performing cures." . . . He further states that he is "able to teach a student more in one summer season than he could acquire by the best botanic physician in five years." From all accounts his renown never extended beyond Hinkletown.

DR. W. L. COWAN, April 30, 1839, proclaims his advent to Lancaster, and announces that he intends to practice his profession on reformed principles. He gives the public to understand that "he is not one of those ignorant pretenders who, under the assumed title of botanic physician, imposes upon the credulity of the public by professing to accomplish improbabilities, but a regular graduate of Jefferson Medical College, and has formerly practiced in Chester and Delaware Counties."

The Lancaster City and County Medical Society.—Nearly twenty-one years elapsed before a second attempt was made to organize a medical society.

The first effort was such a complete failure that the progressive physicians of the city dared only hope for success in a second undertaking after the obstacles which resulted so disastrously to the first organization were removed. Finally Dr. Eli Parry sent an invitation to the physicians of the city, asking them to meet at his house on Jan. 14, 1844, for the purpose of taking into consideration the formation of a society. At this meeting the following physicians were present: F. A. Muhlenberg, A. M. Cassidy, J. Leonard, H. Muhlenberg, J. L. Atlee, E. Landis, C. A. Cameron, P. Cassidy, E. Parry, H. Carpenter, S. Humes, and W. L. Atlee. Dr. Samuel Humes was called to the chair, and Dr. W. L. Atlee appointed secretary.

On motion of Drs. J. L. Atlee and Henry Carpenter, it was

"Resolved, That it is expedient that a medical society, to be composed of the physicians of this city and county, be organized."

And in pursuance of another resolution on the 30th of January the following call appeared in the public prints:

"The medical gentlemen are respectfully invited to meet the physicians of the city in the room of the City Lyceum, at 11 o'clock A.M., on Wednesday, the 14th of February, 1844, for the purpose of organizing a city and county medical society. A general attendance is desired, and those who cannot attend are requested to return an answer to this invitation to either of the subscribers.

"SAMUEL HUMES, Chairman,
"WASHINGTON L. ATLEE, Secretary."

The history of this society is the record of a struggle, the rehearsal of the combined efforts of a comparatively few members of the profession to elevate its standard, advance medical science, and promote good fellowship. Unfortunately, however, personal jealousies and selfish interests have at times jeopardized its life, and though these combined influences never succeeded in stamping out its existence, they nevertheless at times have seriously crippled its influence for good.

Its members have met with varied success; some have ever been in the front ranks bearing the standard of the profession, while others either lagged behind or tarnished its fair name and dragged its vestments into the mire of human depravity. In a word, some have succeeded brilliantly while others failed ignominiously; many have added lustre and dignity to the profession, while some few have brought shame upon themselves and reproach upon their associates.

At the morning meeting in February a joint committee, composed of Drs. J. L. Atlee, Burrows, and Parry, of the city, and Drs. Stubbs, Duffield, and Sample, from the county, were selected to take the constitution and by-laws prepared by the committee appointed at the previous meeting into consideration and present it for final adoption. At the afternoon meeting the constitution as reported was, with some slight amendments, adopted, and the following officers elected: President, Samuel Humes, M.D.; Vice-Presidents, F. A. Muhlenberg, M.D., Samuel Duffield, M.D.; Recording Secretary, Henry Carpenter, M.D.; Corresponding Secretary, Washington L. Atlee, M.D.; Treasurer and Librarian, Eli Parry, M.D.

A committee was then appointed to select a list of medical publications for the society. At the subsequent meeting the following list was presented:

Foreign: British Foreign Quarterly Medical Review, Johnson's Medico-Chirurgical Review, Dublin Journal of Medical Science, Edinburgh Medical and Surgical Journal.

American: American Journal of the Medical Sciences (Dr. Hays), New York Journal (Dr. Forry), Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, Western Medical Journal, Louisville.

The society adopted the report and ordered the librarian to subscribe for the journals, but on second thought the members came to the conclusion that the funds of the treasury hardly warranted such a lavish expenditure in this direction, and the motion was therefore reconsidered.

At a later meeting, however, the list was revised and a number of the journals taken.

The first communication read before the society was by Dr. W. L. Atlee, giving an account of a case of "Perineal Section" for the removal of an ovarian tumor, operated upon by himself. "The report contained a candid and faithful account of all the circumstances connected with the case, which, with its accompanying remarks and observations, were highly instructive and interesting." (Carpenter.)

As illustrating some of the direct advantages of membership in a medical society, we might relate a proceeding which, we believe, has fallen into disuse, but which might be of incalculable value to those choosing to avail themselves of such a privilege. In 1846, Dr. Kerfoot stated to the society that he had received a letter from a former pupil, Dr. Diffenderfer, a practicing physician in North Carolina, who desired a letter of recommendation. After hearing Dr. Kerfoot's statement, on motion, it was unanimously agreed, "That the secretary be empowered to append to any letter of recommendation that Dr. Kerfoot might write a certificate, with the seal of the society attached, representing his standing in the profession, membership of this association, etc."

During the winter of 1845-46 smallpox prevailed quite extensively in Philadelphia and Baltimore, and in view of the fact that considerable intercourse is constantly held between Lancaster and these cities, and several cases appeared in the county which could be traced to this source, our citizens naturally became very much alarmed lest this loathsome disease should manifest itself as an epidemic here also.

The society appreciating the just cause the public had for entertaining such fears, and deeming it a duty to allay them, appointed a committee to draft resolutions expressing their views as representatives of the society on the prophylaxis of vaccination.

The report of the committee was adopted by the society, and the resolutions were ordered to be published in the papers under its sanction.

That part of the report relating to their conviction on the efficacy of vaccination reads as follows:

"Resolved, That this society has undiminished confidence in the prophylactic power of vaccination to secure the system against the invasion of smallpox; that in a majority of instances a single vaccination will offer entire protection, but that from a variety of causes, incidental to the system, and the quality of the virus at the time of its introduction, its preservative power is not universal, and this fact cannot be determined except by the reintroduction of the vaccine matter.

"Resolved, That it is strongly recommended to our medical brethren to test the efficacy of previous vaccination by re-vaccination in all cases with fresh and unadulterated vaccine virus.

"Resolved, That when the system can no longer be influenced by the reintroduction of the vaccine virus, we believe that it is perfectly protected from smallpox."

The National Medical Association, which convened in New York in 1849, sent out invitations to all the medical associations throughout the several States, asking them to send delegates. This society accepted the invitation, and elected as its representatives Dr. John L. Atlee, Sr., and Dr. George B. Kerfoot, allowing them the privilege of making such representation either in person or in writing. They appeared in person. The next year, when the association held its session at Philadelphia, Dr. Kerfoot offered the following important resolution:

"Resolved, That when physicians are called upon by courts of justice to give medical evidence, or opinions in medico-legal questions, or by coroners to make post-mortem examinations or chemical analyses, such service shall be considered professional and remuneration expected accordingly."

The resolution offered at the New York meeting of this association in reference to the adoption of a medical code of ethics was met with great favor by this society; but its committee considered that to establish a code would be no more important than its general diffusion, and therefore Dr. Henry Carpenter, at the Philadelphia convention in 1847, offered a preamble and resolutions, of which the following is an extract:

"WHEREAS, The difficulties which sometimes unfortunately arise between physicians in their attendance upon the sick are frequently owing to improper procedure, or representations on the part of patients or friends, from an ignorance of the etiquette which should govern the conduct of the respective parties towards each other; therefore,

"Resolved, That the president of this convention appoint a committee of three to select such parts of the code of ethics, adopted by this body, as they may deem expedient, and report the same to the convention for its approval at its session to-morrow morning, etc."

Copies of these selections were then to be printed for distribution, and the respective delegates were requested to present the same to the editors of journals in their various localities as proper and useful information for publication.

On the subject of higher education the society was equally alive. At the April meeting in 1847 their sentiments were expressed in the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That this society cannot urge too strongly upon the profession the expediency of recommending the higher standard of medical education in classical, mathematical, and belle-lettres studies, which the schools and colleges of the United States can afford to young men about to enter upon the study of medicine.

"Resolved, That where this standard cannot be reached, the society considers it absolutely necessary that the student be, in addition to high moral qualifications, well grounded in a knowledge and be acquainted with the rules of arithmetic and algebraical calculation."

About this same period this society also passed a resolution requesting the National Medical Association to recommend the formation of State medical societies, to be composed of delegates from incorporated medical colleges, and city and county medical societies.

The State Medical Society.—At the forenoon session of the Lancaster Medical Society, held in January, 1848, a communication was presented by Dr. Atlee from the Chester County Society suggesting the expediency of organizing a State Medical Society, and requesting this society to assist in effecting such an object.

In accordance with this request, a committee of three were appointed to take the subject into consideration and report in the afternoon.

The committee, after stating that it was impossible to consider the subject in all its bearings in the brief space of time allotted them, recommended a similar course of action to that of the Chester County Society. "They think, however, that the great object of the American Medical Association cannot be fully carried out without a full and thorough organization of State and county medical societies.

"If nothing be done by the profession themselves in this matter, the business of medical education will be left too much in the hands of the colleges, and for this reason, if for no other, we think that this society ought to take steps to co-operate in the matter; we therefore recommend the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That this society now proceed to the election of delegates to a State Medical Convention, for the purpose of forming a State Medical Society, at such time and place as may be hereafter agreed upon.

"Resolved, That the chairman of said delegation be authorized to correspond with other medical societies and colleges in relation to this subject."

It therefore appears that this committee not only concurred in the proposition of the Chester County Society, but also suggested the plans for proceeding. It was then, on motion, "resolved that this society propose Lancaster as the place of meeting, and the 11th day of April, following, as the time."

The delegates elected were as follows: Drs. Humes, Duffield, Kerfoot, Eshleman, Atlee, and Clarkson.

At a subsequent meeting a committee of arrangements was appointed, of which Dr. Henry Carpenter was chairman. This committee afterwards reported that it had procured the Methodist Episcopal Church for the accommodation of the convention; and it was then instructed to cause due notice of the time and place of meeting to be published in the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, and the public prints of Lancaster.

The delegates assembled in convention, and it was found that twenty-five districts and societies were represented.

Dr. Kerfoot called the convention to order, and nominated Dr. John P. Hiester, of Berks County, as temporary chairman. In addition to the delegates from the County Society, the Lancaster County hospital was represented by Drs. Harmany A. Smith and C. Orrick Richards.

The committee to nominate officers for the permanent organization of the convention reported the following: President, Dr. Samuel Humes, of Lancaster; Vice-Presidents, Drs. John P. Hiester, of Berks, Thomas Wood, of Lycoming; Secretaries, Drs. Alfred Stillé, of Philadelphia, G. Z. Dimock, of Susquehanna.

After transacting business of minor importance, Dr. Gouverneur Emerson offered the following preamble and resolution relative to the organization of a State society:

"WHEREAS, The extension of knowledge upon all subjects pertaining to the healing art, and the improvement of the capacities of those to whose skill and attention the suffering community is necessarily intrusted, are matters of the deepest interest to the public; we, therefore, representatives of a large portion of the medical faculty of the State of Pennsylvania, believing that these objects may be greatly promulgated through a systematic organization of the members of the profession of the commonwealth, assembled in convention in the city of Lancaster,

"Resolve, That this convention now proceed to the organization of a State Medical Society."

A committee was then appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws, and after their report was offered, the greater part of the time was consumed in considering the various items before adoption.

Dr. Isaac Parker moved that a committee on finance be appointed, to be composed of a delegate from each county represented, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the convention, "when Dr. J. L. Atlee, on behalf of the Lancaster City and County Medical Society, opposed the adoption of the motion by stating that the acceptance by the profession throughout the State of their invitation to Lancaster was a source of pride and gratification; that through the liberality of one of the most respectable religious societies their church had been obtained for the use of the convention, and that the Medical Society of Lancaster were unwilling that the members of the State Convention should incur any expense, except for printing the proceedings."

Dr. Parker, of Philadelphia, then moved to amend the previous motion by laying an assessment of one dollar per capita for defraying the expenses of printing, and the same to be paid to the treasurer of the Lancaster society.

Probably the most important paper presented at this convention was the preamble and resolutions offered by Dr. Kerfoot. The idea was practicable and good as we have reason to believe, now that we can judge of the results of such a tribunal, which exists at the present time in one of the States. The following is the exact paper:

"WHEREAS, It is evident that, for want of some wholesome law to regulate and guard the practice of medicine in the State of Pennsylvania, disqualified persons are permitted to impose themselves upon the public in undertaking what they do not understand, and pretending to what they do not possess, to the great injury to human health and danger to human life; therefore

"Resolved, That an honesty and scientific attainments are considered essential prerequisites in every department of professional life, we deem them paramount in the assumption of the medical character.

"Resolved, That as guardians of the health and the lives of the citizens of this commonwealth, we respectfully call the attention of the government and the people to the serious consideration of a State medical tribunal, without whose authority, or an incorporated college, none shall practice under penalty.

"Resolved, That a bill be drafted, and may become a law, which will be in keeping with the age, compatible with the spirit of our republican institutions, and meet the wants of the people, &c., &c."

These resolutions were, on motion, laid on the table, but later they were considered and discussed, and finally a resolution was passed that they receive early attention at the next meeting of the society, which was to convene at Reading. In the election of officers for the ensuing year four Lancaster men were given places, viz.: Dr. Samuel Humes, president; Dr. John L. Atlee, one of the vice-presidents; Dr. George B. Kerfoot, one of the recording secretaries; Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg, one of the censors. Dr. Atlee was also elected one of the six delegates to the American Medical Association.

The first member of the Lancaster society to fall in the ranks was Dr. John B. Mauk, of Marietta, a man of intellectual and moral worth. A contemporary speaking of him says, "In his death the society lost an active member, the medical profession a bright ornament, and the community at large a moral and intelligent citizen."

The medical service of the county hospital at this time was rendered by individual physicians appointed by the board of directors. The society, however, was anxious that the power of making these appointments and the charge of the hospital be delegated to it, in order that the sick would be properly served and the material found here utilized for the benefit of its members. To obtain this object repeated proposals were made to the board, who, not wishing to lose the appointing power, felt that they would be obliged to make some defense of their action in resisting these propositions, and therefore sent a series of resolutions, of which the following are the most important:

"... And, WHEREAS, Such application, if approved by this board, would be fraught with consequences the most injurious to the interests of the county, and the condition of the afflicted inmates of the hospital, by reason of the fact that this board would have no means of enforcing the attendance of any one physician, nor could they at any time punish remissness of duty, by discharging any physician, by reason of the whole control of the medical department being placed in the hands of a corporation; it would also be a direct violation of the rules, ordinances, and by-laws, enacted for the government of the house;

"Therefore, be it Resolved, That it is inexpedient to change the existing course, which has been practiced ever since the establishment of the Lancaster county hospital, of this board choosing its own physicians and having them subject to its own control."

On the 15th of July, 1850, a special meeting was called to take action in reference to the death of the late President, Gen. Zachary Taylor. This bit of history is interesting from the fact that the individuality of the society was more conspicuous than now, as we shall see from what follows. The following are the resolutions passed at this meeting:

"WHEREAS, Inasmuch as it has been the pleasure of the Divine Ruler of nations to remove from the head of this great Republic her late chief magistrate, Gen. Zachary Taylor, it is proper that this society should express its feelings at the loss the Nation has sustained;

"And WHEREAS, After the warrior had fought the battles of liberty until the toils of time have brought him down to the Republic of dust, and after the sage in council has had his constitution broken down by the storms of State, and his body gathered to the mansion of the dead amongst his fathers, it is the prerogative as well as the duty of American freemen to pay homage to his virtues and cherish his memory. Therefore,

"Resolved, That we sincerely lament the loss the nation has sustained by the death of her late Executive, General Zachary Taylor.

"Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the relatives in their affliction by their loss of an husband and father.

"Resolved, That the hall of this society be hung for the usual period with appropriate emblems of mourning.

"Resolved, That this society will participate in the solemnities to be observed by our citizens on Saturday next in memory of the deceased.

"Resolved, That the officers of the society be requested to forward a copy of the resolutions to the family of the late lamented President."

On the following Saturday the society took the place assigned in the procession, and the president acted as marshal.

It may be of interest to note that during the early history of the society, at the death of a member, it was customary to wear a badge of mourning. For example, in the resolutions passed on the death of Dr. Francis S. Burrowes we find,—

"Resolved, That in sorrowful remembrance of our departed friend and professional associate we will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days."

During the latter part of the first decade of the society's existence the members, owing to a want of a properly systematized order of business, did not seem to accomplish as much as might have been desired; the time of the meeting was employed in discussing subjects which, directly, were of no benefit to the society as a whole or its members individually.

In 1854, therefore, a committee appointed to suggest a plan whereby the purpose of the society might be carefully carried out suggested that committees be appointed annually, whose duty it shall be to report at least once annually, at stated meetings, upon the following subjects, viz.: Epidemic Diseases, Practical Medicine not embracing epidemics, Surgery, Midwifery and Puerperal Diseases, Meteorology, Hygiene, Medical Topography and Geology, Medical Jurisprudence. It may strike the reader that this list is rather comprehensive, nevertheless the report was adopted, the committee appointed, and for a time the plan worked successfully.

Up to this time homœopathy, the bête noir of the regulars, gave them but little concern; here and there one heard of complaints because they were called "too late," but, nevertheless, they got over the matter very philosophically. If their former patrons insist on being deceived after being warned, let them go; a bitter experience will teach them a lesson. Patients, however, are not, as a rule, apt pupils, and, moreover, they frequently have a habit of acting contrary to the counsel of their best advisers, and are, therefore, constantly on the lookout for some fellow who, having more wit than conscience, may offer them something new. One of the members, therefore, knowing the weakness of humanity, unfortunately fell from the grace of the profession and became an avowed homœopath. The members, however, claimed that this society was established for the purpose of promoting the true interests of medical science, of sustaining the honor and integrity of the profession, and of discountenancing, on the part of its members, all attempts at irregular practice, etc. The brother had to go.

On the subject of female physicians, it is to the credit of the society to state that it was more liberal than the State society.

The following resolutions, which were offered in 1859, prove this fact clearly:

"WHEREAS, At the last stated meeting of the 'Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania' a resolution was adopted to the effect that it would be considered inconsistent with sound medical ethics for members of the regular profession to hold professional intercourse with the teachers and alumnae of female colleges; and,

"WHEREAS, Believing such action to have been not only premature, ill advised, and injudicious, but that it also evinces an amount of prejudice and illiberality no less surprising than reprehensible; and,

"WHEREAS, Constituting an Integral part of the State Medical Society, jealous of its good name, and cordially desirous of seeing its usefulness enhanced and extended; and believing that the passage of the resolution referred to will neither promote the one nor augment the other;

"Therefore, Resolved, That the delegates from this society to the next stated meeting of the State Medical Society be and are hereby instructed to use all honorable means to secure the repeal of the resolution to which reference is had."

The resolutions were hotly discussed pro and con, and finally it became evident that its friends would fail to carry them in this shape, and they therefore offered the following substitute, which was adopted:

"Resolved, That while this society does not recognize the principle that the practice of medicine is the proper or legitimate sphere of action for woman, her organism preventing her at all times from performing its arduous and responsible duties, yet being opposed to everything that may seem to savor of prejudice or illiberality, and believing such action to have been injudicious, they would therefore respectfully suggest to the State Medical Society a reconsideration of its action upon the subject, and hereby instruct our delegates to its next meeting to take such action as will effect such reconsideration."

On April 17, 1861, the society convened at 11 A.M., as usual, but adjourned, on motion, without transacting any business, in order that the members could attend the Union meeting that was to be held in the court-house that morning. About this time a number of the members accepted the post as surgeons in the late Rebellion, and in consequence the attendance of the society was for several years meagre and the interest flagged.

It continued to exist in this way, with an occasional meeting now and then, until it was thoroughly revived in 1866, and received the stimulus of new blood. Since then it has held its own in the front ranks of the societies, being the second largest in the State outside of Philadelphia. There are many things that the society effects since its existence that are of more than ordinary interest, but our space will not allow of any reference to them.

DR. FRANCIS S. BURROWES was a graduate of the University of Dublin. When he first came to this county he located at Paradise, but afterwards removed to Lancaster. He possessed the natural qualifications of a physician, and acquired an extensive practice. He died in January, 1854. He was an efficient member of the Medical Society, and one of its earliest promoters.

GEORGE BARRETT KERFOOT, M.D., was born in Dublin, Ireland, June 27, 1808. He came to America with his parents in 1819, who settled in Lancaster. In 1823, Dr. Humes, the family physician at Lancaster, noticing the brightness of the lad, induced his mother to allow him to enter his office. Here his natural talent began to develop, and his thirst for knowledge increase.

The doctor was not wrong in his estimate of the boy's ability, and induced him to study medicine. His close application to his studies and rapid progress soon convinced Dr. Humes that he was a student of more than ordinary talent. He took up the study of Latin and Greek, and unaided attained considerable proficiency therein. He also studied German, and was able to read it with great ease and fluency. He attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he was graduated with honors in March, 1830.

He at once established himself in Lancaster after his graduation, where he soon acquired a large and lucrative practice. In 1844 he was among the founders of the Lancaster County Medical Society. In 1833 he began a series of anatomical lectures, and about 1840 he established an anatomical hall in Lancaster, where he gave lectures to numbers of students during the winter months. At one time the number of his students reached sixty, among whom were Dr. John McCalla, Rev. Mr. Bahnsen, and many others of the learned professions in the city.

During the latter years of his life he gave much attention to the treatment of the eye, ear, and brain, and delivered public lectures upon those interesting topics, and he is said to have been the first medical man ever called in the State to testify as an expert, which occurred at Lancaster in 1847 on the Haggarty trial, and in the Knepley case at Harrisburg in 1851, and he was frequently called upon to testify in other important cases. Dr. Kerfoot was for many years a member of the Lancaster school board, and of the City Councils. He was proverbial for his charity, and but for this trait in his character he might have accumulated a fortune from his medical practice. He was a leading member of the Masonic fraternity, being at the time of his death, in 1851, District Deputy Grand Master. Dr. Washington Augustus Atlee, in his address before the Alumni Association of Jefferson College, said of him, "Dr. George B. Kerfoot, a teacher of anatomy in Lancaster, an active participant in all the literary and benevolent projects of his day, to whose memory a monument has been erected by his Masonic brethren." Dr. Kerfoot loved his native country, and felt deeply for her people. On one occasion of St. Patrick's dinner he gave the following toast: "Our native country, may our voices never cease to be heard in defense of her rights until the light of liberty illumine every hamlet, and the principle of freedom govern her people." As a student at college he took high rank for his learned lectures, and as a physician in general practice he ranked among the ablest in the profession in the county.

His wife, whom he married in 1829, and who survives in 1882, is Eliza, a daughter of Robert Reed, of Lancaster, who was born in Coleraine, Ireland, in 1773, came to Lancaster in 1799, and died in 1854. Their surviving children are two sons and three daughters. Dr. Kerfoot's father, Richard Alexander, died soon after settling in Lancaster. His mother, Christiana Barrett, was a woman of superior moral and Christian excellence, took a deep interest in the early training and education of her children, and died in 1868, aged seventy-six years.

DRS. ALEXANDER M. AND PATRICK CASSIDY.—Two brothers, John and Patrick Cassidy, natives of Sussex County, N. J., were bereft of their father when mere lads, and about that time, in 1788, accompanied Judge John Cleve Symmes to the then Northwest Territory, and settled at North Bend on the Ohio River. Here they were among the pioneers in a wilderness country, but possessed that energy and force of character that stopped at nothing short of success. While yet young men they are found engaged in shipping produce down the Ohio and Mississippi to New Orleans, but on the ninth voyage Patrick died before reaching his destination, Dec. 16, 1813, and was buried on one of the islands in the Mississippi. John died two days previous, and his remains were interred at Hamilton, Butler Co., Ohio, where he had resided since 1804. Patrick never married. John was prominently identified with home interests, was alderman of Hamilton, captain of a militia company, clerk of the court, and a farmer. His wife, Sally, was a daughter of Abraham Freeman, of Somerset County, N. J., who, with his family, removed with Judge Symmes to Ohio. After the death of her husband she educated her children, and taught them all that makes honorable men and women. She died at the age of eighty-six years, honored by her children as a devoted mother and a Christian woman. The second daughter, Miss Catherine W. Cassidy, a resident of Lancaster, Pa., contributes the portraits of her brothers to the medical history of Lancaster County in this volume. The other children are Charlotte, Abbie, Ezra, Eliza, Dr. Alexander M., and Dr. Patrick, subjects of this sketch, and Phebe.

Dr. Alexander M. Cassidy was born in Butler County, Ohio, in 1808, where he spent his minority. He came to Lancaster about 1831, read medicine with his uncle, Dr. Clarkson Freeman, and was graduated at Jefferson Medical College in 1834. He continued a large and successful practice at Lancaster and vicinity until his death in Millersville, Jan. 20, 1865. He was extensively known throughout the country as an accomplished physician and skillful surgeon. During the Mexican war he was surgeon of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment, and gained considerable reputation by the performance of a number of difficult operations. In social life he was a man of genial manners, excellent conversational powers, and varied information, and upon questions of local and State legislation, very tenacious of his opinions.

Dr. Patrick Cassidy, born in Butler County, Ohio, Sept. 22, 1810, came to Lancaster in October, 1845, read medicine with his brother, Dr. Alexander M., attended lectures in New York, was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in 1848, and practiced medicine and surgery, mostly in Lancaster, with great success until his death, July 12, 1864. At the time of his death he stood in the front rank of his profession in the State. His early manhood was spent as a teacher in his native State, where he gained distinction as an educator, and his practical knowledge of schools and their workings made him a useful and influential citizen, after taking up his residence in Lancaster. To promote the best interests of the schools of the city was a prominent aim of his life for many years, and to that end, by weekly and almost daily visits, he became fully conversant with their wants, and expended money freely from his private means for the purchase of works on the art and science of teaching, new and improved text-books, charts, etc. Probably no man, as a director of the city schools, ever did more than Dr. Patrick Cassidy to foster a thorough education in Lancaster, or labored more faithfully out of an abiding love for the cause of education. Laboring to the last in his profession, and for the benefit of his fellow-men, he lay down with the harness on. He was a student of his profession and no fossil, and one time said, "The older I grow the less medicine I prescribe. I have long made it the cardinal rule of my practice to give absolutely as little medicine as possible." During the late civil war he was patriotic, and contributed of his means and time towards strengthening the arm of the government, and served as surgeon of the board of enrollment at Lancaster until his death. Both he and his brother, Dr. Alexander M. Cassidy, were among the active members of the County and State Medical Societies.

REV. JOHN LEAMAN, M.D., of Leaman Place, is a son of Christian Leaman, deceased, a farmer, who formerly resided at the same place. Prior to reading medicine he had attended the Newark Academy, the Lancaster County Academy, and received his bachelor's degree at Princeton College, New Jersey. He registered as a student under Dr. Francis S. Burrowes, and in 1837 graduated at the Jefferson Medical College.

He began the practice of medicine in Williams-town, this county, soon after graduation. In 1849 he was ordained a minister of the gospel, and installed pastor of the Cedar Grove Presbyterian Church, in East Earl township. Ten years later he was appointed, by the Synod of Philadelphia, Professor of Human Physiology and Anatomy in Lafayette College, Easton, Pa. At the present time, professor (Emeritus) of the same chair in the same college.

He became a member of the County Medical Society in 1844, and continued his membership up to 1849, when, on being ordained to the ministry, he resigned. He was married to Miss Martha McClung, daughter of the late Charles McClung, of Leacock township, Lancaster Co., Pa.

He studied medicine with his father, took his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College in 1864, and afterwards located where he at present resides. He is surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, formerly president of the County Medical Society, a member of the American Medical Association, and the State Medical Society.

D. HAYES AGNEW, M.D., LL.D., one of the most widely-known surgeons of the United States, and for more than twenty-five years a resident and practitioner in Philadelphia, was born in Sadsbury township, Lancaster Co., in 1820. He was educated at Moscow Academy and Newark College, and after a preparatory course in medicine under his father (then a physician of high repute in Lancaster County) he entered the University of Pennsylvania. Upon graduating at that institution he located in Lancaster County, and after practicing there a short time removed to Philadelphia. His advancement into a prominent place in his profession was speedy and important. He was soon called to the position of lecturer on anatomy and operative surgery in the Philadelphia School of Anatomy on College Avenue, and not long afterwards to that of demonstrator of anatomy in the University of Pennsylvania. Subsequently elected Professor of Clinical Surgery, and later Professor of Surgery in the University, he founded about that time the Philadelphia Hospital, Pathological Museum, and for a while was the curator thereof. Honorable distinctions followed rapidly. He was successively elected to be surgeon to the Philadelphia Hospital, surgeon to the Pennsylvania Hospital, surgeon to the Wills Ophthalmic Hospital, surgeon to the Orthopædic Hospital, Professor of Clinical Surgery in the University Hospital, consulting surgeon to the Orthopædic Hospital, consulting surgeon to the Philadelphia Dispensary, and consulting surgeon to the Northern Dispensary. In 1876 the degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred by the trustees of Princeton College. Dr. Agnew's practice has for many years been confined to the field of surgery, in which he has become one of the most eminent professors of his time. As a consulting surgeon he has been called in important cases to many sections of the country. Much of his time and labor has been given to the preparation of works on surgery, now generally recognized as important authorities. He is the author of a volume on "Practical Anatomy," one on "The Lacerations of the Female Perineum," and one on "Vesico-Vaginal Fistula," besides having contributed a series of papers (sixty-three in number) on "Anatomy in its Relations to Medicine and Surgery." His latest and most important published work (recently issued) is "The Science and Art of Surgery," in three volumes, covering in the aggregate about three thousand pages. Dr. Agnew still occupies the place of Professor of Surgery in the University of Pennsylvania, to which he was unanimously chosen in 1871. He is a member of the College of Physicians, and of the Philadelphia County Medical Society; a member and one of the founders of the Philadelphia Pathological Society, of the Academy of Surgeons, and a member of the American Philosophical Society.

DR. RICHARD E. COCHRAN, of Columbia, was a native of Delaware, and the son of a farmer. He was graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1811. After engaging in various pursuits in his native State at various places, aside from the practice of his profession, he removed to Columbia in 1824. Here he continued to enjoy a large patronage, and at various times was honored by several offices of responsibility. He remained at Columbia until his death, which occurred in 1864, during the epidemic of Asiatic cholera, of which he fell one of the first victims, having contracted the disease while in the discharge of his professional duties.

DR. JOHN A. EHLEB, of Lancaster, was a student in medicine under Dr. John L. Atlee, Jr., and a graduate of the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1841. After graduation he began practice at Millersville, but soon afterwards removed to Lancaster. He has been visiting physician to the county hospital and also the prison for a number of years. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. SAMUEL KANEAGY, of Strasburg, is a native of the town. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1844, and immediately after located at Strasburg. Since then he has practiced his profession in Lancaster, where he resided for a number of years, and afterwards removed to Strasburg. He was one of the early members of the County Medical Society, and is also a member of the State Society.

H. A. SMITH, M.D., was born in Lancaster City Dec. 2, 1818, the eldest in a family of six children of Christian and Christiana (Harmany) Smith. His great-grandfather emigrated from Germany, and eventually settled in Bethlehem, Northampton Co., Pa. His grandfather, Anthony Smith, born in Bethlehem, was twice married. The maiden name of his first wife was Michael. By this union there were two sons, one of whom died at an early age. Christian Smith, the surviving son, and father of the doctor, was born in Bethlehem Sept. 17, 1787; married Christiana Harmany April 10, 1817. She was born in Ruttstown, Berks Co., Pa., Aug. 12, 1795. Their children were Harmany Anthony, Angelica L., Sarah M., George Washington, Mary, and Christian Benjamin.

Angelica L. was the wife of Professor John Muller. No children. Both are deceased. Sarah M., unmarried, lives in Lancaster City. George Washington is a partner of Dr. David Hostetter, of the firm of Hostetter & Smith, Pittsburgh, Pa. Mary is the wife of Judge Brooks, of Prescott, Arizona. Christian B. resides in Lancaster City. Christian Smith, the father, settled in Lancaster City before his marriage. All of his children were born in Lancaster. He kept for many years the Grape Hotel there. He died there Aug. 11, 1834.

Dr. Smith received his education preparatory to his professional studies in the Frederick Latin School, under the charge of Thomas Yarrell. Commenced the study of medicine in 1834 with Dr. Abraham Carpenter, and finished with Dr. Francis Burrows, both of Lancaster. He was graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in 1838. Commenced the practice of medicine at Bird-in-Hand, Lancaster Co., where he remained six years. Then moved to Lancaster, where he continued in practice eight years. During a portion of this time he was hospital and prison physician. In 1851 he moved to Intercourse, Leacock township, where he has been in continuous practice ever since.

The doctor was one of the first members of the Lancaster County Medical Society. With one or, perhaps, two exceptions, he is the oldest practicing physician in Lancaster County.

He married, April 13, 1848, Angelica K., daughter of Jacob and Catharine (Frissler) Eichholtz. Mrs. Smith was born in Philadelphia Oct. 15, 1826. Her father was a portrait-painter of some celebrity.

H. A. SMITH, M.D.

Leaer Minter

The children of Dr. and Mrs. Smith are as follows: Harry, born Dec. 18, 1849; died Feb. 27, 1862. William H., born Jan. 15, 1854; studied medicine with his father; followed the drug business in Philadelphia, Lancaster City, and Washington, D. C., for a number of years; was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in 1877, and now practicing his profession at Intercourse; married Mary E. Trout. Children, William and Susie. Catharine C., born Aug. 14, 1856; died Aug. 12, 1864. Edward W., born Jan. 6, 1859; died July 29, 1864. Mary C., born Dec. 29, 1865; died July 31, 1867. Mary E., born Aug. 6, 1868, living at home.

DR. WILLIAM H. SMITH, of Intercourse, is a son of the above. Prior to reading medicine with his father he was engaged as drug-clerk for nearly four years in Lancaster, Philadelphia, and Washington, respectively. In 1877 he graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, and subsequently became associated with his father; he is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. ISAAO WINTERS was a practicing physician in Lancaster County for the extended space of fifty-three years, and during the whole of that time his home was in the village of Hinkletown, upon the place now owned and occupied by his son Richard. The record of more than half a century devoted to the studious and unfaltering pursuit of a dignified and useful calling stands over and against his name, and sheds a lustre upon his memory. A conscientious and ardent worker in his profession, an upright citizen, and an honored member of the community in which he spent his life and his labors are the tributes that may easily and justly be offered in testimony of his worth. Dr. Winters came of English stock, his grandfather having emigrated from England to America before the Revolution, and in that struggle afterwards bore an active part as a soldier under Washington. His home was near Lebanon, Pa., and there he died within a month after returning thereto from his Revolutionary service. He left a widow and son, the latter being named John, who was born Nov. 21, 1776. When John Winters grew to man's estate he settled in the village of New Holland, where for many years he followed the occupation of a blacksmith. He married Catharine Diefenderffer Jan. 16, 1796. She died July 12, 1843, his death occurring July 13, 1850. Their children were John, Isaac, Maria, Ludwig, Levi, Margaretha, and Cyrus.

Isaac Winters, the second child, was born in New Holland, July 13, 1800. Such limited educational advantages as the home district school offered were enjoyed by him only for a brief space. His father was a poor man, and the family numerous. Upon the sons, therefore, devolved the responsibility of pushing out into active life as soon as their physical energies waxed strong enough for labor. Thus young Isaac learned early the lessons of stern necessity, and knew what hard work meant before he had completed the few school-days vouchsafed to him. His ambition pointed, however, to a higher field than mere mechanical drudgery, and when but fifteen years of age he began to turn his thoughts toward a medical career. For a year his inclination was temporarily checked, while he worked as a clerk in Lebanon, but at the end of that year he determined to delay no longer, and accordingly began the study of medicine with Dr. John Leaman, of New Holland. He gave himself closely to his studies for four years, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1820 he located at the village of Hinkletown, and at the age of twenty faced with eager zeal and strong purpose the possibilities before him. His was no royal road. Unaided, save through his own efforts, he knew he must win the victory by sheer force of merit, and, happily for his purpose, the lessons of self-reliance had been taught him early in life. So humble was his start that he borrowed the money that paid for his horse and a new suit of clothes. His horse was stolen before he had been in his new master's possession a week, and then the doctor, well-nigh cast down, tried to borrow a hundred dollars to buy another. He tried in vain until he appealed to the late Henry Roland, who not only loaned him the money but let him have it without security. He had faith in him, and felt that the young man possessed the metal of which successful men were made. At the end of the year the doctor repaid the loan, and after discharging all his obligations found himself worth eighteen hundred dollars. That was a gratifying showing indeed, but it was the more gratifying to him to know that he had put his energies forward in a way that had made him deserving of success. Thus firmly fixed upon the road to professional prosperity, he followed it faithfully to the end, and not only occupied a constantly expanding field of usefulness, but gained likewise an ample fortune.

To quote the words uttered by his pastor upon the occasion of Dr. Winters' death, "He was peculiarly a self-made man, and that in the highest sense of this much-abused term. The influence he acquired, all the gain and triumph of his life were attained through earnest, well-directed personal effort. He was ardently attached to his profession. Its toilsome and often perplexing duties ever seemed a pleasure to him, and he never seemed happier than when engaged in his professional labors. For him the practice of medicine was no irksome drudgery. He loved the work for its own sake, and for the relief he was able, while thus engaged, to administer to suffering humanity, and hence, when some years before his death he sought, on account of his advanced age, to retire from the active duties of his large and burdensome practice, he was still impelled by force of his sympathy with the suffering, and his attachment to his lifelong work, to continue in the active pursuit of his calling. His relations not only to his profession, but to his professional brethren, were of a very tender character, and very few men in professional life could have been more highly esteemed or more relied upon and trusted by his brethren than was the venerable Dr. Winters. He may be said to have died in harness, for almost to the time of his death—July 27, 1873,—he was in active practice. He stood high as a physician among the highest in the county, and during the later years of his life was conspicuous as a frequently-consulted authority in Lancaster County. In the diagnosis of a medical case he is said to have been one of the most skillful of his time."

He was a man of fine presence and strong personal magnetism. A stanch Democrat all his life, he was a close observer of the progress of political events, and was, moreover, well advised upon all subjects that concerned current history. He twice accepted a nomination to Congress as a candidate against Thaddeus Stevens. The conclusion that his party would be defeated was foregone in each instance, but he felt that the honor of his party demanded that the party should have some candidate, and only in the furtherance of that sentiment consented to carry the standard. In the good old days of militia trainings he held a commission as a brigadier-general, and was far and near reputed to be one of the finest swordsmen in the State.

Dr. Winters married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Nagle, then of Lancaster County, but a native of Ireland, where he was born Feb. 23, 1765. Their children were John Lemmon (practicing physician at Hinkletown for some years, but now deceased), Richard N. (residing upon the old homestead), Dr. Isaac D. Winters (of Goodville), Mrs. Isaac S. Long (of New York), George W., and Barton N. (of Ephrata).

A. K. ROHRER, M.D., is of German descent; his great-grandfather, John, having been a native of Alsace, Germany. The latter was born in 1696, and emigrated to America about the year 1732. He married Maria Souder, and had children, eight in number, among whom was John, born in 1732 in Lampeter township, Lancaster County, and during the year 1772 united in marriage to Maria Neff. They had nine children, of whom John was born March 14, 1778, on the homestead. He married Magdalena Shank, and had children,—Barbara, Mary Ann, Magdalena, John S., Henry N., Amos K., Susan A., Reuben S., Samuel F., Martin M., Felix C., and Ann Eliza. The death of Mr. Rohrer occurred Jan. 30, 1840, in his sixty-second year, and that of his wife Jan. 30, 1837, in her fifty-sixth year. Amos K., their son, was born at the paternal home May 14, 1812, where the years of his boyhood were spent either at school or in active labor on the farm.

When sixteen years of age he removed with his parents to Lancaster, and began the study of medicine with his brother John, formerly of the city and later of Philadelphia. These studies were continued for four years, when occurred his graduation at the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in March, 1837. Silver Spring, Lancaster Co., was in April of that year the scene of his earliest professional experiences, where twelve months were spent as a practitioner, after which he removed to Mountville, and has continued at this place in uninterrupted practice for a period of forty-six years. The field of his professional labor is extended, his skillful treatment of disease having won for him a well-earned reputation as a successful physician. He is still vigorously engaged, though nearly half a century of toil may with justice claim a respite from the activity of former years. The doctor has since his removal to Mountville been identified with its growth and general progress. He is in politics a Republican, though the demands of his profession have left little time for participation in affairs of public import. He is a director of the school board of the village, and in sympathy with all measures for the advance of education. He was one of the incorporators of the Lancaster County Medical Society.

Dr. Rohrer is descended from a family of Mennonites, his parents having been members of that religious body.

DR. PETER S. CLINGER, of Conestoga Centre, is a native of Chester County, and a son of John Clinger, a miller by occupation. He studied medicine with Isaac S. Worrall, M.D., and in 1843 took his degree at the Washington University at Baltimore. He located at his present place of residence soon after graduation, and after the Rebellion was appointed United States examining surgeon for pensions. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. JOHN DEAVER, of Buck, is a native of Harford County, Md., and the son of Richard and Mary Deaver, farmers. He received his preparatory education under a private tutor, was under the preceptorship of Dr. Richard Wilmot Hall, Professor of Midwifery, Diseases of Women and Children, University of Maryland, and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine from this institution in 1843. He was a classmate of Professor Christopher Johnson, of the same institution, began practice of medicine in Hopewell township, York Co., Pa., in May, 1843, removed to Buck, Lancaster Co., Pa., in November, 1843, and has remained there ever since. He is a member of the State Medical Society, and also of the County Society, of which he at one time occupied the chair as president.

He was united in marriage to a Miss Gardner, of York, Pa., in May, 1845, and had two sons, the younger of whom, R. W. Deaver, M.D., a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania, is now a practitioner in Germantown, Pa. His wife having died Jan. 12, 1861, he was united in matrimony a second time, October, 1855, to a Miss Moore, of Cecil County, Md. Of two sons by this marriage, Dr. John B. Deaver, also a graduate of the University, is a practicing physician in Philadelphia, and Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Pennsylvania.

DR. J. L. ZIEGLER, of Mount Joy, is a son of Jacob Ziegler, of East Donegal township, this county, a farmer by occupation. Prior to beginning the study of medicine he attended the Lititz Academy, Marietta Academy, and Mount Joy Institute. He studied medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Nathaniel Watson, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in the class of 1844. Soon after he began practice at Mount Joy, and has remained there ever since.

In 1848 he was elected a member of the County Medical Society, and since then has twice held the office of president. In 1850 he was sent as a delegate to the State Medical Society, from which time his membership dates, and in 1881 was elected to the presidency of this society. In 1852 he became a member of the American Medical Association. For a number of years he has been physician to the Mount Joy Soldiers' Orphan School, and also surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. In 1848 he was married to Miss Harriet B., daughter of Col. James Patterson, of Mount Joy. In 1879 Lafayette College conferred upon him the degree of A.M. Dr. Ziegler has two sons at present engaged in the practice of medicine.

DR. WALTER M. ZIEGLER graduated at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa., prior to reading medicine in the office of his father, Dr. J. L. Ziegler. In 1874, he took his degree in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, and afterwards became associated with his father. Several years later he removed to Philadelphia, and is at present chief of the clinic for diseases of the ear at the hospital of the University of Pennsylvania. He was formerly a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. JAMES P. ZIEGLER was likewise a student at Lafayette College, and received his master's degree from this institution in 1874. His preparatory studies in medicine were under the direction of his father, Dr. J. L. Ziegler, and in 1880 was graduated in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania. After graduation he became associated with his father, with whom he continues in practice. He is at present an active member of the County Medical Society, and also a member of the State Society.

JOHN W. LUTHER, M.D., for nearly forty years a practicing physician at New Holland, was born in that village Sept. 6, 1810, and there died in April, 1870, full of honors as a citizen, whose true worth and example were abundantly testified to by the universal regret with which his death was contemplated. He came of German ancestry, and according to well-established evidence, was a lineal descendant of the great reformer, Martin Luther. He came also of a family of physicians, his father, John, and grandfather, John, having in their time occupied places of distinction in the medical profession; the former at New Holland, and the latter at Harrisburg.

He was educated at the academies of Downingtown and Reading, engaged in the study of medicine with his father, and in March, 1832, graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. His father having died in 1828, John W. succeeded him at New Holland, and until his death steadily pursued his calling in that locality, and enjoyed nearly all that time an extensive and profitable practice. He was admitted to membership in the Lancaster County Medical Society in April, 1845, and for years stood conspicuously high among county physicians.

From a sermon preached by Rev. John W. Hassler upon the occasion of his death are taken the subjoined extracts, which will be found to indicate in a forceful manner an earnest and graceful tribute to the character of Dr. Luther as a man and physician.

"No man in our community was more highly esteemed, none more cheerfully confided in, than was Dr. Luther, and no man among us has found a warmer place in the hearts of all classes and conditions, and that without any other effort than that of discharging his duty and rendering himself useful.

"The heroic in practice was not his forte. His sensitive and sympathetic nature shrank from inflicting pain. He could not be a surgeon. His constitutional weakness unfitted him for the practice of this part of his profession. Although, in general, a man of few words, his expressive countenance unmistakably revealed to those who knew him the emotions of his mind. His face, whether it told a tale of sorrow or joy, of hopefulness or anxiety, could be read almost like a book. It became on this account among his friends a common remark that they could always tell whether a patient was in a dangerous condition by the doctor's look and manner. The sympathies of his heart forbade the concealment of his anxiety, though his words should refuse to confess it.

"He was ever the warm, sympathetic friend and helper of the poor no less than the rich. It was enough for him to know that a fellow-creature was suffering, and although it might, as it latterly did, tax too much his falling strength, yet he would ever respond to the call until the strength of a naturally robust constitution yielded beneath its burdens, and thus death came to him while he still held himself bravely in the field of his usefulness. He was no drone. He worked unceasingly to the last. In addition to his labors in practice he was ever an ardent student in the literature of his profession. To his latest day he conscientiously sought to keep pace with the progress of medical science. He was never rash or precipitate; always thoughtful, studious, and deliberate. His disposition and habits were pre-eminently retiring. He commended himself to popular favor by sterling qualities of head and heart. In any other community unlike this, where for years the name of Dr. Luther was a household word, the departed would no doubt have risen slowly in his profession, but he would anywhere have risen surely and solidly."

HENRY S. MELLINGER, M.D.—The grandfather of Dr. Mellinger was John, whose life was spent in Manor township, where he was both farmer and distiller. He was a man of sturdy business qualities, and wielded a considerable influence in the community where he resided. In politics he was an exponent of the principles of the Old-Line Whig party. Among his sons was David, father of the doctor, who was born in February, 1795, and whose death occurred April 9, 1878, in Manor township, where his lifetime was passed. His early education was such as the common schools of the day afforded, after which he entered upon the study of medicine with Dr. Musser, of Manor township. On the completion of his studies he began practice, which was continued without interruption and successfully for a period of sixty years. This was at an early day, when the country practitioner encountered many privations and hardships not known to later representatives of the profession. The doctor was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he was an efficient officer. In his political predilections he was a Republican. He married Miss Susan Shopf, of the same township, who was born March 21, 1794, and died Sept. 23, 1856. She became the mother of five sons,—John S., David (deceased), Benjamin and Jacob (also deceased), and Henry S. The latter was born Nov. 23, 1821, in Manor township, where his boyhood was spent on the farm and at school. He began at sixteen the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. Washington L. Atlee, and subsequently attended one course of lectures at the Pennsylvania Medical College. On its failure he entered the Jefferson Medical College, from which he graduated in March, 1845. Manor township offered an inviting field of labor, and hither the doctor directed his footsteps. His practice has from that time steadily increased and been exceptionally successful, extending over a radius of twelve miles. Though nearly twoscore years have elapsed since the beginning of his active professional career, he still responds with alacrity to the summons of his patients, and also superintends the cultivation of a productive farm. The doctor is in politics a Republican, but not an active partisan, and finds little leisure for matters that do not pertain to the science of medicine or his immediate business pursuits.

FRANKLIN HINKLE, M.D.—The grandfather of Dr. Hinkle, who was of German descent, early settled in Berks County, Pa., where he purchased a tract of land of William Ponn, later known as Hinkletown, where his life was spent and where his death occurred in advanced years. Among his children was Philip, whose birth took place at the homestead. After his marriage to Miss Sarah Geiger, he settled upon a farm in Northumberland County, and at a subsequent period removed to Berks County.

His children were Levi, Philip, Elijah, Franklin, Harriet, Maria, Eliza (Mrs. Joshua Spar), and three sons who died in childhood. Mr. Hinkle died during the year 1825, and was buried in Walnuttown, Berks Co. His son Franklin was born Nov. 25, 1824, in Berks County. His infancy was clouded by the death of his father, when the lad removed with his mother to Philadelphia, where his boyhood was spent at school. After a preparatory course of study at the Franklin Institute and the Washington Academy, at Trappe, Montgomery Co., he, in 1842, began the study of medicine with Dr. W. W. Gerhard, then lecturer on Clinical Medicine in the University of Pennsylvania, and also clinical lecturer at the Pennsylvania Hospital. His thorough course of study embraced a period of five years, and included lectures, an extended experience at the Pennsylvania Hospital, Blookley's Hospital, and Wills Eye Hospital, after which, on the 3d of April, 1846, he received his diploma from the University of Pennsylvania. He was during the time appointed clinical clerk, and for more than three years acted as assistant in the medical and surgical clinics. He early located in Philadelphia, but during the latter part of 1846 began the practice of his profession at Marietta, Lancaster Co., where he remained until 1861, when during the late war he enlisted and acted for four years as assistant surgeon. In May, 1864, he resumed his practice, and in 1867 removed to Columbia, where he has since resided.

The doctor was on the 3d of January, 1849, united in marriage to Miss Anna Mary, daughter of John M. Whitehill, Esq., of Lancaster County, near Donegal Church. The maternal great-grandfather of Mrs. Hinkle was William Cameron, of Dungrainshire of Barroth, Scotland. Among his sons was William, who married Jane Linton. Their children were Samuel, William, and Elizabeth, the latter of whom married John M. Whitehill, and became the mother of Mrs. Hinkle. Dr. Hinkle has been eminently successful in his profession. He has made a specialty of surgery and gynecology, in both of which he has won a deserved reputation for skill and judgment. He was the first physician to administer anesthetics in the county, and also to discover the use of permanganate of potassium as a remedy for the treatment of hospital gangrene while in the service at Campbell's United States General Army Hospital, at Washington, D. C., and also at the Jarvis United States General Army Hospital, at Baltimore, Md.

Dr. Hinkle is a Republican in his political predilections, though with neither taste nor leisure for the excitements of a public life. He was formerly an elder of the Donegal Presbyterian Church, but has recently united with the church of the same denomination at Columbia.

DR. C. J. SNAVELY, of Manheim, is the son of George Snavely, a farmer of Lebanon County. Two years prior to beginning the study of medicine under

DAVID MELLINGER.

H. S. MELLINGER.

Franklin Hinke

Dr. Peter W. Malone, he attended the Womelsdorf Academy. In 1849 he graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College, and subsequently located at Manheim. He was formerly a member of the County Medical Society and likewise one of its presidents; he was also a delegate to the American Medical Association. In 1876 he was elected to the House of Representatives, and two years later was re-elected.

DR. JOHN M. DUNLAP, of Manheim, is a native of Leacock township; studied medicine at the Jefferson Medical College, at which institution he received his degree in medicine in 1845. After graduation he located at Manheim, where he has continued in his profession ever since. He served as a member of the State Legislature for several terms, and was formerly a member of the County Society. He has a son who is also in the profession.

DR. JOHN F. DUNLAP, of Manheim, son of the above, read medicine with his father, and took his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College in 1875. Since graduating he has been associated in practice with his father. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. GEORGE J. HOOVER, of Paradise, is the son of Jacob Hoover, formerly of Strasburg. He received his early education at the Lititz Academy and the Boys' High School, of Philadelphia. He read medicine under Dr. Joseph Lefevre, of Paradise, and Drs. Smith and Allen, of Philadelphia, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1848. One year later he moved to Paradise; he was surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for thirty-one years, and formerly a member of the County Society.

DR. JOHN S. MESSERSMITH, of Lancaster, was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, and a member of the County Medical Society. He entered the service as assistant surgeon of the United States navy in 1839, appointed from his native State; commissioned surgeon in 1853.

DR. JONATHAN M. FOLZ is a native of the State, and a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College. He entered the naval service as assistant surgeon in 1831, appointed from Maryland, and was commissioned as surgeon in December, 1838; was with Admiral Farragut in all his battles on the Mississippi, 1862-63; member of the Board of Examiners, 1864-66; president of Board of Examiners, 1867; fleet-surgeon, European Squadron, 1868-69. In 1858 he was united in matrimony with Miss Steinman, of Lancaster. He was a member of the Lancaster County Medical Society. He died in 1877.

DANIEL I. BRUNER, M.D.—Ulrich Bruner came to Pennsylvania from Switzerland in the year 1744. He married, in 1755, Fronica Gross, a native of Germany, and at this time lived on Neshaminy Creek, Bucks County. These were the grandparents of Daniel I. Bruner, whose father, Ulrich Bruner, afterwards called Owen, was the third son of a family of eleven children,—six sons and five daughters.

Owen Bruner married Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Weaver, of Caernarvon township, Lancaster Co., a man of influence and wealth, who lived to be more than eighty years of age. The children of Owen and Elizabeth Bruner were John, Barbara, Abraham, Owen, Jacob, John (second), Isaac, Elizabeth, Daniel I., and Frances. Owen, the father, died in 1845, in his eighty-second year. Elizabeth Bruner, his widow, died in 1853, in her eighty-fifth year.

Daniel I. Bruner

Daniel I. Bruner was born in Caernarvon township, Berks Co., Pa., June 22, 1807. He began the study of medicine with his brother, Dr. Isaac Bruner, of Leacock township, Lancaster Co., with whom he continued during the years 1827 and 1828, and after his brother's death finished his medical reading with Dr. Thomas Harris, surgeon United States navy, at Philadelphia. He attended the lectures of the University of Pennsylvania, and of the Medical Institute of Philadelphia, and graduated from the University in 1830. He began practice in Morgantown, Berks Co., in May of the same year. In the course of two years his practice became laborious, extending over a wide territory, including portions of the adjoining counties of Lancaster, Berks, and Chester, being about equally divided among the three.

In 1832 he married Elizabeth Davies, daughter of Hon. Edward Davies, of Lancaster County, who represented this district in the Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Congresses.

In the year 1860, Dr. Bruner, feeling his labors to be too arduous, removed to Columbia, where he has since continued in active practice.

His surviving children are Ellen (Mrs. Samuel Wright), Edward, Anna (Mrs. Andrew J. Kauffman), and William.

Dr. Bruner is the examining surgeon at Columbia for the United States pension office, is a member of the Lancaster City and County Medical Societies, of the State Medical Society of Pennsylvania, of the American Medical Association, and an honorary member of the California State Medical Society. In politics he is a Republican. He is rector's warden of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church, Columbia.

DR. WILLIAM COMPTON, of Lancaster, is a native of Cambridge, Chester Co., Pa. He received his diploma in medicine from the Philadelphia Medical College in 1853. He has served as prison physician for a number of years, and is a member of the American Medical Association, and of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. ELIAS B. HERR, of Creswell, is the son of David Herr, of Manor township, and prior to taking up medicine, was a pupil both at the Lititz and York County Academies. Dr. F. A. Muhlenberg was his preceptor. He took one full course at the University of Pennsylvania, and in 1854 graduated at the University of New York. After graduation he located at Millersville, where he remained six years, and then removed to Creswell, where he has resided ever since, having relinquished practice in 1868. In 1854 he was elected a member of the society, and later was also a member of the Legislature for several years.

L. Z. RINGWALT, M.D.—Martin Ringwalt emigrated from Württemberg, in Germany, when a young man and, pushing his way to America in the track of thousands of similarly adventurous and hardy spirits, made a permanent location in Lancaster County, Pa., near the Pool Forge in Caernarvon township. He married Elizabeth Dieffendorfer, of New Holland, and became thus allied to a family whose representatives linked their names with the earliest epoch in the history of Lancaster County. Martin and Elizabeth Ringwalt had eleven children, of whom Martin and David are the only ones living. One of the sons of Martin, the elder, was Maj. William Ringwalt, a well-known and widely-popular citizen of Caernarvon township. He traded many years as a merchant at Mulberry Hill, and long held a conspicuous place as a militia commander. He ranked in his time as one of the best horsemen in the State, and in that especial direction achieved more than ordinary notice upon the occasions of the numerous militia gatherings in which he participated. He died in October, 1875, aged seventy-three. His widow, Harriet (daughter of Adam Zell, of Salisbury township) still lives upon the old Ringwalt homestead. Their children numbered ten (five sons and five daughters), of whom the third child and now the sole surviving son is Dr. L. Z. Ringwalt, of Churchtown.

Dr. Ringwalt was born Sept. 23, 1830, at Mulberry Hill, in Caernarvon township, upon the farm he now owns. His youth was passed in occasional service at his father's store and in attending school at Rockville and New London Cross-Roads, both in Chester County. At the age of nineteen he ended his school days, and for three years thereafter was a clerk for his father.

At the age of twenty-two he began to read medicine with Dr. B. F. Bunn, of Churchtown, and after a five years' experience as a student, graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1857. The same year he entered upon the practice of his profession at Churchtown, and from that time to the present he has remained steadily in his first chosen field. During that extended interval of nearly twenty-seven years many physicians have located in Churchtown, only to remain for greater or lesser seasons and then to pass on to other fields. For twenty-seven years, however, the name of Dr. Ringwalt has been a household word in the community, and in the faithful exercise of the duties of his calling he has steadily progressed along the plane that marks the existence of an honored physician and esteemed citizen, while the wide field of his practice bears ample testimony to the declaration that his labors have found a recompense. Dr. Ringwalt is a member of the Lancaster County Medical Society, and although his busy life forbids participation in much else save his professional labors, he has ever been found an active and zealous worker in behalf of popular education, having already served two terms as township school director. He is a trustee of the Churchtown Methodist Episcopal Church, and, as one of the building committee, took an active part in the construction of the handsome edifice of that society. In October, 1860, he married Hester, daughter of John W. Swift, of Fulton township, Lancaster Co. Mr. Swift (now aged eighty-seven) resides in the old Fulton mansion, in which he was born, and is to-day, despite his great age, a fine specimen of the sterling manhood that came as a noble heritage from the worthy ancestry that honored and memorialized the pioneer era of the county of Lancaster.

EDMUND J. BOWMAN, M.D., physician and surgeon at Neffsville, Lancaster Co., Pa., for over a quarter of a century, was born at that place July 6, 1832, and there died Feb. 5, 1883. His father, Dr. Henry B. Bowman (1806-1869), was a native of Ephrata, Lancaster Co., removed to Neffsville soon after his marriage, where he spent the remainder of an active life as a physician, a merchant, and in carrying on a wool manufactory. He was prominent in political circles, and was recorder of deeds for Lancaster County for the term beginning with 1849, and a member of the State Legislature for 1862 and 1863. Dr. Henry B. Bowman married Eliza Neff (1807-1868), who was a doctress, and practiced her profession with success in the vicinity of her home, and was frequently called to Lancaster City. They were identified with the English Lutheran Church of Neffsville. Their children are: Dr. Edmund J., subject of this sketch; Albert, a musician; Amelia A., widow of Daniel S. Bair, of Lancaster; Selina, wife of David Segreist, of St. Louis.

Dr. E. J. Bowman was educated in the schools of his native place, at Lititz Academy, and at Elizabethtown. He began reading medicine at the age of twenty with Dr. Ehler, of Lancaster, attended lectures at Pennsylvania College, and was graduated from the Medical Department of that institution in March, 1855. He practiced for two years at Ephrata, and in 1857 settled at Neffsville, where he built a fine residence in 1860, and where he continued a large and successful practice of medicine and surgery until his death. He was known as a skillful physician, devoted to his profession, a student of the theory and practice of medicine, and of quick perception and of ready opinion in the diagnosis of disease. He was a member of the Lancaster County Medical Society, and for nine years served as a member of the board of school directors. His wife, Corena L., born Dec. 6, 1832, is a daughter of Abraham and Tamsou (Grabill) Bowman, of Ephrata. They were married Dec. 28, 1856, and their children are: Ida L., wife of George J. Diller, Jr., a coppersmith, of Lancaster; Harry Lincoln; and one daughter, Florence L. Bowman, died young.

DR. ADAM SHELLAR, of Mount Joy, was born at Big Chikis, Rapho township, Lancaster Co., Pa., January, 1808; was the son of Christian and Margaret Shellar, farmers.

He received a public school education, and afterwards taught school. He studied medicine with Dr. Henderson, of Hummelstown, and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine at the Reformed Medical College of New York in 1830.

He began practice at Hummelstown in 1831, and this same year was married to Miss Margaret Fox, of the same place. Two years later he removed to Mount Joy, where he remained in full practice until a short time before his death, which occurred in November, 1882.

He was a member of the County Medical Society, and at various times filled important offices. He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, and for nearly forty years an elder. He was highly esteemed by the profession, and had accumulated an extensive practice.

DR. JOHN LEVERGOOD, of Lancaster, is a native of Windsor township, York Co., Pa. He graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1847. During the Rebellion he served as surgeon, and afterwards was appointed examining surgeon for pensions. He has been an active member of the different branches of Councils and the school board of Lancaster, and formerly was an active member of the Medical Society.

DR. SAMUEL R. SAMPLE, of Paradise, is a son of Dr. Nathaniel W. Sample. He attended the Strasburg Academy previous to reading medicine with his father, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1857, being a classmate of Professor Austin Flint, Jr., Professor Louis Elsberry, and Dr. Batty. He was assistant surgeon of the Forty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. J. A. E. REED, of Lancaster, is a native of York County, Pa.; read medicine with Dr. Washington L. Atlee, and in 1854 graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College. He practiced for a number of years at Mountville, and in 1872 moved to Lancaster. He served in the capacity of surgeon during the late rebellion; is a member of the State and County Medical Societies, and an active member of the Board of Health of the city of Lancaster.

DR. S. T. DAVIS, of Lancaster, is a native of Huntingdon County and the son of Henry Davis, a blacksmith by occupation. He attended Mooresville Collegiate Institute and Millersville State Normal School, at which time he was studying medicine under the direction of Dr. Orlady, of Huntingdon County.

At the breaking out of the war he enlisted in the Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers for three months; at expiration of term of enlistment entered the army again as second lieutenant of what became Company C, Seventy-seventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. At organization of the regiment was appointed and commissioned as adjutant of the regiment. Upon organization of the army was detached as acting assistant adjutant-general of the brigade, and served in that capacity until the Seventy-seventh Regiment recruited as veterans, when he was commissioned as captain of Company G, a Welsh company from Scranton.

After the war he continued medical studies with Dr. S. B. Hartman at Millersville, and after attending one course at the Jefferson Medical College, graduated at the Long Island College Hospital in 1865. He began practice at Millersville, and in 1874 moved to Lancaster. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the American Surgical Association, and of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. M. L. DAVIS, of Lancaster, is a brother of the above; served in the late civil war from 1863 to 1865, when he was discharged; entered State Normal School at Millersville, afterwards the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, from which institution he graduated in the class of 1870. After graduation he located at Rohrerstown, in 1874 removed to Millersville, and in 1882 to Lancaster. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. FRANCIS G. ALBRIGHT, of Lancaster, is a native of the county, and graduated in 1851 in the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. He was assistant surgeon during the late rebellion in the Seventy-ninth Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, and surgeon Nineteenth Pennsylvania Veteran Cavalry. He is a member of the American Medical Association, of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. A. J. HERR, of Lancaster, is a son of the late Benjamin G. Herr, of Strasburg township. Prior to reading medicine with Dr. Benjamin Musser he attended the Lititz Academy and the Millersville Normal School, graduating in 1861 at the Jefferson Medical College. Soon after graduation he was commissioned assistant surgeon and assigned to the Sixty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in 1862 promoted to a surgeoncy and assigned to the Sixty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in which capacity he served continuously with the Army of the Potomac until June 9, 1865, when he was mustered out of service. He was physician to the county hospital for nine years and to the prison for one year. He is a member of the American Medical Association and the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. ISRAEL BUSHONG, of New Holland, is a native of the county. He took his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College in 1861. He had quite an extensive experience as surgeon during the late rebellion, and is at present an active member of the County Medical Society, also a member of the State Society and the American Medical Association.

DR. ALEXANDER CRAIG, of Columbia, was born at Hillside, Westmoreland Co., Pa., and is the son of Alexander Craig, a woolen manufacturer. His ancestors were among the early settlers of Westmoreland County. His great-grandfather (father's side), while serving in the capacity of quartermaster to the frontier fort of Harmortown, was captured by the Indians near Fort Ligonier, and never heard of afterwards. His grandfather served throughout the Revolutionary war. After attending Elder's Ridge Academy, Indiana County, Pa., teaching in the public schools, acting as clerk and salesman, Dr. Craig began the study of medicine under Dr. Eli Ferguson, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1865.

After graduation he located at Columbia, where he has been practicing continually ever since. He has been surgeon for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for fifteen years, during which time he contributed valuable statistics that have been utilized by the company. In August, 1862, he enlisted in Company F, One Hundred and Thirty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; was afterwards promoted to hospital steward, and mustered out with regiment in May, 1863. He is a member of the American Medical Association and of the State and County Medical Societies.

MARTIN L. HERR, M.D., of Lancaster, Pa., was born in Lancaster County, Sept. 13, 1838, and acquired his early education in the State Normal School at Millersville. Upon the completion of his elementary studies in 1860, he began reading medicine with Dr. Patrick Cassidy, of Lancaster, and attended his first course of lectures at Jefferson Medical College. In 1862 he entered the medical department of the Army of the Cumberland, where he had full opportunity to avail himself of the superior advantages of hospital medical and surgical practice. He completed his lecture term at the Medical University of Nashville, and was graduated from that institution in 1864. Dr. Herr continued his service in the army hospitals until the winter of 1866, ably ranking among the most skillful in surgical practice. Returning, he settled in Lancaster, where his skill in the treatment of diseases soon gained him a large practice, and where the constantly-increasing demand for his services has made his name widely known throughout this section of the State. Dr. Herr is a member of the Lancaster City and County Medical Society, of which he has served officially, of the State Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association. He has been an efficient director of the Lancaster City School Board, and a member of the Common Council, of which body he was chairman for several terms. He is an influential member of the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, and of St. James' Episcopal Church of Lancaster.

His father, Christian B. Herr (1809-1847), was a thoroughgoing and successful farmer of Lancaster County, and resided in West Lampeter township. His mother, Maria, was a daughter of Martin Light, a large land-owner and influential citizen in this section of the State. The family in Lancaster County is descended from Hans Herr, the pastor and spiritual adviser of a large colony of emigrants who made their way to Lancaster County from Switzerland in 1710. Hans Herr came here with his four sons, Abraham, Emanuel, John, and Isaac. One son, Christian, a minister of the Mennonite Church, had come in 1709.

Dr. Herr married, Sept. 6, 1870, Rosina, a daughter of John Adam and Sarah Hubley, of Lancaster, who was born June 2, 1846. Her only brother died Jan. 24, 1878, aged thirty years. Their children are Sarah M., William H., John L., Robert M., and Anna Elizabeth.

George Hubley, the progenitor of the family in Lancaster County, a native of Maulburn, Germany, landed in Philadelphia in 1732, and in 1740 settled in Lancaster. His son Michael (1722-1804) married Rosina, daughter of Dietrich Strumpf, a native of Germany. He was justice of the peace of Lancaster County, appointed by the Supreme Executive Council in 1777, and for some time the presiding justice of the several courts of the county. He was recommissioned justice in 1784, and was acting magistrate of the county for twenty-seven years; was barrack-master of Lancaster County for some time during the Revolutionary war, and for the last forty-three years of his life served the Trinity Lutheran congregation as warden, elder, and trustee. Michael's brother, Bernard, was appointed major of the Tenth Pennsylvania Regiment in 1776, was a member of the Legislature in 1783, 1785, 1786, and 1787, and a member of the State Senate in 1790. John Hubley (1747-1821), son of Michael, a native of Lancaster, married Maria Magdalena, a daughter of Ludwig Lauman; read law with Edward Shippen; was admitted to the bar in 1769; was delegate from Lancaster County to the convention which met at Philadelphia, July 16, 1776, to adopt a State Constitution. On Aug. 5, 1776, he took his seat as a member of the General Pennsylvania Council of Safety, established by the first Constitution. On Jan. 11, 1777, he was appointed commissary of the Continental stores and the stores of Pennsylvania at Lancaster, with the rank of major, and with authority to appoint such deputies as he might judge necessary. He was authorized a few days afterward to employ all the shoemakers among the Hessian prisoners at Lancaster in making shoes for the State. He was for some time a councillor of the Supreme Executive Council. He was appointed April 5, 1777, by the same Council, prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas, clerk of the Orphans' Court, clerk of Quarter Sessions, and also recorder of deeds, part of which offices he held for upwards of twenty years. In 1777 he was appointed justice of the peace. In 1787 he was a member of the State Convention that ratified the Federal Constitution.

His son Joseph (1789-1830) was a merchant in Lancaster, and Joseph's son, John Adam (1817-1851), was the father of Mrs. Dr. Herr, and married Sarah, daughter of Peter Young, and sister of James Young, of Middletown, Pa.

DR. G. W. BERNTHEIZEL, of Columbia, is the son of John Berntheizel, of Mountville, a painter by occupation. He studied medicine under Dr. Amos K. Rohrer, of Mountville, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1866. Soon after graduation he located at Silver Springs, where he remained for several years and then moved to Columbia. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. A. C. TREICHLER, of Elizabethtown, is the son of John Treichler, a blacksmith, who formerly resided at Conewaga. Before studying medicine with Dr. William H. Beane he taught common school, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1869. After graduation he located immediately where he now resides. He had three brothers in the profession, of whom two are deceased. He is a member of the American Medical Association and the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. WASHINGTON RIGHTER, of Columbia, is a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, class of 1866. He is, however, not engaged at present in the practice of the profession. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. JOSEPH BRACKBILL, of Strasburg, is a native of the township and a graduate in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1869. He is a member of both the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. JOHN K. LINEAWEAVER, of Columbia, is a son of Dr. George Lineaweaver, formerly a practitioner at Lebanon, Pa. After receiving a good academic education, he followed civil engineering until 1859, when he began studying medicine under his father, and in 1861 graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, being a classmate of Professor Harrison Allen, of the University of Pennsylvania. After graduation he was elected interne of the Blockley Hospital, appointed acting assistant surgeon to the Broad and Cherry Streets Military Hospital in 1862, and the Chestnut Hill Military Hospital in 1863-64. In 1866 he moved to Columbia, where he still resides. He is surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. He is a member of the American Medical Association and the State and County Medical Societies. He has several brothers who are members of the profession.

DR. JESSE H. DAVIS, of Soudersburg, was born in Colerain township, studied medicine at the Jefferson Medical College, at which institution he graduated in 1858. He is a member of both the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. DAVID J. MCCAIG, of Ephrata, was born in Churchtown, Lancaster Co., Pa. He was graduated Bachelor of Arts at the Franklin and Marshall College, and in 1867 received his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College. He is an active member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. S. A. BOCKIUS, of Columbia, is a native of the county, and graduated as Doctor of Dental Surgery at the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery in 1859. In 1861 he received his degree of M.D. from the Pennsylvania Medical College. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

P. J. ROEBUCK, M.D.—The grandfather of Dr. Roebuck, who was of German parentage, resided in Lebanon County, Pa., where he was a successful farmer. He was married to a Miss Shally, of the same county, and had six children, among whom was Jacob. He was in his political predilections a Whig, and in his religious belief a member of the Reformed Church. His son, above mentioned, was born Jan. 14, 1807, and spent his early years upon the farm of his parents. By his marriage to Miss Sarah, daughter of Ludwig Yengst, of Lebanon, he had five sons and six daughters, among whom was the subject of this biographical sketch. Mr. Roebuck pursued the vocation of a farmer until his death, which occurred Sept. 5, 1877. He was an ardent Whig in politics, and active in the interests of the Reformed Church. His son, Peter J., was born in Dauphin County, Dec. 10, 1838, and until his tenth year remained at the home of his father. The residence of an uncle subsequently afforded him opportunities for education, after which, while still a lad, he entered the store of John Bruner, of Jonestown, Pa., and remained two years. He then returned to the farm to recuperate his failing health, meanwhile continuing his studies, after which he became a pupil at the Annville Academy, and engaged in teaching. Having at the age of nineteen chosen medicine as a profession, he entered the office of Dr. J. Seiler, of Grantville, Dauphin Co., and remained three years, during the interval attending a complete course of lectures at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, from which he graduated in 1860. The same year Derry Church, Dauphin Co., was chosen as his earliest field of labor, where he remained until 1867. The doctor was married Sept. 3, 1864, to Miss Emma J., daughter of Samuel H. Thome, M.D., of Palmyra, Pa., whose ancestors were of Scotch-Irish descent, and early settled in the county. In 1867, Dr. Roebuck removed to Ohio, and two years later made Lititz his home, which has since been the scene of his active professional labors. His practice, which is extended and of a general character, has steadily increased, its success having depended less upon fortuitous circumstances than upon thorough knowledge of the science of medicine and professional skill. He has been especially successful as an oculist, most of the cases within a wide range of territory coming under his observation. He is a member of the Lancaster City and County Medical Society, and also of the State Medical Society. The doctor is in his political views an earnest Republican, and one of the most active exponents of the principles of the party in the county. The contest over the new Constitution in 1873 first inspired him with political zeal, and rendered him one of the most enthusiastic advocates for its adoption. The following year he was elected State senator in the new district created by the first apportionment under the new Constitution, the contest being one of the most spirited ever known in the county, and the only instance where two primary elections were held for the nomination of a candidate. After serving a term of two years he was re-elected, and in 1878 became a candidate for the nomination for Congressional honors, but was defeated. He has since been active in the political field, but not an aspirant for office, having resumed again the routine of professional labor. The doctor is a supporter of all evangelical religious denominations, Mrs. Roebuck being a member of the Reformed Church.

DR. ISAAC MAYER, of Willow Street, is the son of Isaac Mayer, a farmer of Strasburg township. He taught school prior to registering as office student under Dr. Benjamin Musser, of Strasburg. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies, and also of the American Medical Association; besides, he has on various occasions contributed papers at institutes and to educational journals.

DR. GEORGE W. BEANE, of Bainbridge, is a native of Washington County, Md., and the son, Thomas Beane, a farmer by occupation. He formerly taught school, then was telegraph operator prior to commencing the study of medicine under his brother, Dr. William H. Beane, of Middletown.

In 1866 he graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, and immediately located at Manchester, York Co., where he remained several years previous to moving to his present place of residence. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. WILLIAM J. WENTZ is a native of Drumore, a practitioner at New Providence, and is a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, class of 1865. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. THOMAS H. WENTZ, of Kirkwood, is a brother of the above, and a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, class of 1874. He is a member of the Medical Society of the county.

DR. WILLIAM BLACKWOOD, of Lancaster, is a son of Joseph Blackwood, of Baltimore, a manufacturer by occupation. He took his bachelor's degree at the University of Maryland, and in 1849 graduated in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College. He spent three years after graduation in hospital and dispensary work, and then located at Philadelphia. In 1866 he came to Lancaster, and soon afterwards was elected a member of the medical society. The following year he was elected recording secretary, which office he has held ever since. He was assistant surgeon during the late rebellion, United States examining surgeon for pensions, physician to the County Hospital for a number of years, is a member of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, and also of the American Medical Association and the State Medical Society.

DR. JOHN K. HERTZ, of Lexington, is a native of Berks County, and the son of John Hertz, who formerly moved to Iowa. He studied at the State Normal School at Millersville, and taught in the public schools for five years previous to reading medicine with Dr. D. E. Shirk, of Lincoln, Pa. Dr. Hertz graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1860, began practice at Lincoln immediately after, but remained here only a few months when he moved to Lexington. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. THOMAS MOORE LIVINGSTON, of Mountville, is a native of Huntingdon County, Pa., and the son of William W. Livingston, a farmer by occupation. He was a student at Millersville, and also of the academy at Martinsburg, Blair Co., Pa.; was a private during the late rebellion, Company A, Independent Battalion, Pennsylvania Militia, July 7, 1863; Company H, First Battalion Infantry, Pennsylvania Volunteers, July 12, 1864; discharged. By reason of re-enlistment, Sept. 9, 1864, clerk headquarters, Department Pennsylvania, from November, 1864, until August, 1865; discharged. Dr. Livingston read medicine with Dr. John M. Forrest, and in 1872 received his degree from the Bellevue Hospital Medical College. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and of the State and County Societies.

DR. A. M. MILLER, of Bird-in-Hand, is a son of John Miller, a farmer of Chester Co., Pa. He was a student at Mount Joy Academy, and began the study of medicine under Dr. William Compton, of Lancaster, and in 1858 graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College of Philadelphia. He immediately began practice at his present location, where he has lived ever since. Some years afterwards he became a member of the County Medical Society, and since then was elected vice-president of the State Society, and later a member of the American Medical Association. He is also surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

DR. JOHN W. TRABERT, of Annville, Lebanon Co., Pa., is a native of the county, and the son of Christopher Trobert, of New Holland, a shoemaker by occupation. He attended the State Normal School at Millersville, taught in the public schools, read medicine with Dr. L. Z. Ringwalt, and in 1870 took his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College. After graduation he located at Reamstown, where he remained until 1872, when he removed to his present place of residence. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. ISAAC L. LIGHTNER, of Ephrata, was born at Shirleysburg, Huntingdon Co., Pa. He is a graduate of the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery of the class of 1873, and of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College of the class of 1874. He is an active member of the State and County Medical Societies.

B. J. REEMSNYDER, M.D., practicing physician of Hinkletown, was born at Akron, in Ephrata township, July 23, 1853. His father, Henry Reemsnyder, practiced medicine in Lancaster County over a quarter of a century, served during the late war as a captain in the Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry. He died Nov. 2, 1877. His widow, Mary Jane, daughter of Henry Gray (who sat in the State Legislature several terms) still resides at Akron. Of their six children, five are living. Dr. B. J. Reemsnyder received his early education at the Bethany school, near Ephrata, and at the age of eighteen began the study of medicine in his father's office. After two courses of lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. Agnew being then the professor of surgery, he graduated at that institution in March, 1874. During the ensuing year he practiced in association with his father, and in 1875 located at Hinkletown. Since that time he has been steadily engaged in his profession at that village, and although compelled at first to face the discouragements that ever meet the young physician who makes his struggle for a start, he has by persistent endeavor and skillful application of his energies, widened and broadened his field of practice to handsome and profitable proportions. Yet young in years and ambitious with enthusiasm, he has before him a future that promises him a career of honorable distinction. In 1878 he was married to Alice A., daughter of Richard N. Winters, of Hinkletown.

B. J. Reemsnyder

SAMUEL S. WIEST, M.D., for nearly thirty years one of the leading physicians in northeastern Lancaster, was born in West Cocalico, Sept. 25, 1828. His father, Christian Wiest, a prominent farmer, was a native of the county. He was born in 1794, and died in 1873. He married Annie, daughter of John Swarr, of Lancaster County. She died in 1850. They had three children (all sons), of whom Jacob and Samuel are living. Samuel obtained his early education at the common schools and at the Waynesburg Academy, at which latter institution he completed his school-days in 1847. The two following years he taught school at Schooneck. Having from his boyhood manifested a strong predilection for a physician's career, he now embraced the opportunity to carry his desires into practice, and, accordingly, in 1850, he became a student with Dr. John McClellan, of Philadelphia, a physician of conspicuous note in his day. He attended the University of Pennsylvania during the winter of 1851-52, when his health failing he retired to Lancaster, and studied with F. A. Muhlenberg, of that city. In the winter of 1852-53 he attended a second course of lectures at the University, and in the summer of 1853 resumed his studies with Dr. McClellan, and attended the practice of physicians at the Pennsylvania Hospital. In the fall of 1853 he entered the medical department of the University of New York, and there graduated with high honor in the spring of 1854. March 23d of that year he made a location of Schooneck (where his uncle, Samuel Wiest, had been long in practice), and set himself to face the struggle marked out for all newly-fledged physicians. His knowledge of surgery gave him, however, a material advantage, and energetically improving the opportunity placed before him, he soon won his way to an assured place as a prosperous and successful practitioner. For about thirty years he has practiced uninterruptedly in his first chosen field, and long since gained a high name not only in his home-locality, but among the prominent physicians of Lancaster County. As an indication of how steadfastly he has held a place in the minds of the community, it is necessary only to note that during his thirty years of practice only one other doctor has located in Schooneck. Dr. Wiest was married Feb. 1, 1855, to Mary N., daughter of John S. Baer, of Lancaster County. He has been a member of Cocalico Lodge, No. 408, I. O. O. F., since 1855, and a member of the Masonic order since 1870. He has been extensively interested in tobacco manufacture, and latterly has been concerned in the purchase and shipment of leaf tobacco, although to the intricate details of the business he has not been able to devote much personal attention. His large practice takes all his time and energies, and to the successful conduct thereof he gives his ambition and best thoughts, as he did when making his way to the position he now occupies.

DR. M. W. HURST was born in Caernarvon township, Lancaster Co., on Sept. 27, 1835, of Pennsylvania German parentage. His father was John (Horst) Hurst, who pursued the occupation of a farmer during his lifetime, and was a substantial, useful, and energetic citizen, of plain habits, and devoid of ambition for public place. His mother was Catharine, daughter of Daniel and Anna Witmer, of Earl township. Of a family of nine children (all sons), our subject was the eighth. His earlier education was derived at the common schools of his native township. Subsequently he enjoyed academic instruction at the Marietta Academy, taught by Professor J. P. Wickersham, completing his educational course at the State Normal School at Millersville. For several years after leaving school he engaged in teaching in Lancaster County. In 1858, having decided to adopt the practice of medicine as his profession, he began his studies under the direction of Dr. Isaac D. Winters, of Goodville, Lancaster Co., and later attended two courses of lectures at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1861. He continued his connection with Dr. Winters until the fall of 1863, when he located permanently at Earlville, Lancaster Co., where he has since been in the enjoyment of a large and lucrative practice.

Dr. Hurst is recognized as one of the successful and representative physicians of the county, enjoying the reputation of a skillful and conscientious practitioner, thoroughly regular in his methods of practice, opposed to empiricism, and keeping himself fully informed of the latest and most approved discoveries in medicine and surgery. He is a member of the District Medical Society of Lancaster County, and a cheerful and liberal supporter of all movements contributing to the material and social improvement of his native county. He was married on the 15th of September, 1863, to Hallie, daughter of John and Margaret Oberholser, of East Earl township, and has a family of six children, viz., Maggie K., Minnie C., Annie C., John O., Hattie M., and Spencer Wells Hurst.

PETER O. BLEILER, M.D., was born Aug. 1, 1852, in Lehigh County, Pa. His father, David, was a prominent farmer of that county of which he was a native. He was born in 1824, and died Dec. 16, 1882, after a lifelong residence in Lehigh. He married Sarah, daughter of John Seiberling, of Lehigh County. She is living in Lehigh County upon the old homestead. They had eight children, six sons and two daughters. Peter was the fourth child and third son. His early education was received in the common schools and the Siegersville Academy. His school-days were ended for a time when he reached his twentieth year. He then engaged in teaching school in Lehigh County, following that profession four terms, meanwhile attending the Palatinate College at Myerstown, Lebanon Co., for six terms. In 1873 he determined to embrace the study of medicine, and became that year a student with Dr. Frederick Sei-berling, of Lehigh County. He attended two courses of lectures at Jefferson College, Philadelphia, and graduated at that institution in March, 1876. His first field was Lion Valley, Lehigh Co., where he remained six months. At that juncture he was induced by a relative to seek an opening in the place now known as Denver (then called Union). Dr. Bleiler found a comparatively crude community with an abundance of doctors in the neighborhood, but his foresight saw possibilities for the town and he determined to bide his time, knowing full well the struggle at first would be an arduous one. His comprehension of the situation was correct and the struggle came, but he adhered manfully to his purpose, called his energies and ambition into urgent service, and by persistence soon found himself upon the road to an assured position. He now enjoys a large and lucrative practice, and is recognized as one of the leading and skillful physicians of the section. He has won his place by hard work, and has the satisfaction of knowing that by his own efforts alone has he risen from nothing to his present position. In 1876 Dr. Bleiler was married to Emma L., daughter of Daniel B. Kistler, of Lehigh County. He was reared in the Reformed Church, and has been a member thereof since 1867.

P. O. Bleiler

DR. A. G. B. PARKE, of Gap, was born in Chester County. He is a graduate in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania of the class of 1866. He is an active member of the County Medical Society, and also a member of the State Medical Society.

DR. OLIVER ROLAND, of Lancaster, is the son of Henry A. Roland, Esq., of New Holland. He took his master's degree at Princeton, and afterwards began the study of medicine in the office of Dr. John L. Atlee, Sr. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1875, and the following year served as resident physician at the Episcopal Hospital at Philadelphia. He has been visiting physician to the County Hospital for several terms, and is a member of the American Medical Association, and of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. H. E. NORRIS, of Marietta, is a native of Wakefield, Carroll Co., Md., received the degree of A.M. in course from the Western Maryland College, Maryland; studied medicine with Dr. J. F. Buffington, of New Windsor, and graduated in medicine at the University of Maryland in 1874. After graduation he began practice at New Windsor, where he remained until 1877, when he removed to Marietta. He is surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. GEORGE R. WELCHANS, of Lancaster, is a native of the city, and formerly engaged in the drug business. He studied medicine under Dr. John L. Atlee, and received the degree of Doctor of Medicine from the Jefferson Medical College, class of 1867. He has been physician to the County Hospital for a number of years, member of the United States Pension Board of Examining Surgeons, member of the American Medical Association, and of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. BENJAMIN F. HERR, of Millersville, is a native of Buffalo, N. Y. He received his master's degree from the Classical Institute, at Williamsville, N. Y., in 1869. He studied medicine under Dr. F. M. Musser, of Lancaster, and Dr. D. D. Richardson, of Philadelphia. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1877, and immediately began practice at Millersville. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. R. M. BOLENIUS, of Lancaster, is a native of the city, and studied medicine under Dr. Henry Carpenter. In 1873 he graduated at the University of Maryland, and afterwards located here. He has been hospital physician for a succession of years, and a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. AMOS H. SMITH, of Paradise, is the son of Gabriel Smith, a miller of New Providence. He was a student at Millersville, taught public school, and studied pharmacy prior to reading medicine under Dr. M. L. Herr. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, and subsequently selected his present location. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. JACOB CHARLES was born in Pequea township, Lancaster Co., on July 14, 1848, and is a representative of an old German family by the name of Karle, who, having emigrated to this country at an early period, changed their surname to the more English form of Charles. His parents were Jacob and Ann Eliza (Carman) Charles, the former of whom engaged in mercantile pursuits for many years at West Willow, Pequea township, and ended his days in that locality. His grandfather, Joseph Charles, was also a resident of Pequea township, and led an active and industrious life.

Until he attained his thirteenth year, Dr. Charles remained at home, enjoying a district-school training, and assisting his father in the store and on his farm. At that time he entered the State Normal School at Millersville, where he pursued his studies with assiduity for four years. In 1866, having decided to make the study and practice of medicine his life-work, he entered upon his studies in the office of Dr. J. W. Hess, of Millersville, with whom he continued to be registered until the completion of his preparatory career. He attended one course of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, and subsequently matriculated at the Long Island Medical College, Brooklyn, N. Y., from which institution he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1869. The year following he commenced the practice of his profession in Philadelphia, where he remained for three years. At the expiration of that time he removed to Lancaster, where he continued for some time, and in February, 1875, took up a permanent location at Lincoln, Lancaster Co., where he has since continued in active and successful practice. He indulges in no specialties, but pursues the busy life of an earnest and industrious country practitioner, holding himself aloof from public affairs, and confining himself closely to the demands of his profession. He keeps himself informed of the latest discoveries and improvements in medicine and mechanical treatment, and is gradually developing a large and lucrative practice. He has achieved special success in the treatment of those dread diseases, scarlet fever and diphtheria, adopting a plan not usually pursued by his professional compeers. He was elected a member of the Lancaster City and County Medical Societies in 1878, and of the State Medical Society in 1880. His marriage occurred in September, 1868, his wife's maiden name being Elizabeth Kauffman, and his children Edgar and Theodore Charles.

DR. GEORGE T. WESEMAN, of Bainbridge, is a native of Nordheim, Prussia. He received his preliminary education at the Gymnasium of Göttingen, prior to entering the university of this same city, where he graduated in 1847. This same year he emigrated and began practice, being thus engaged in Dauphin, Northumberland, and Lancaster Counties respectively. He served as assistant surgeon and acting assistant surgeon for four years during the late rebellion. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. AMOS F. DILLMAN, of Oregon, is a native of New Holland. He studied medicine at the Jefferson Medical College, at which institution he received his degree in 1876. He is a member of the County and State Medical Societies.

DR. H. M. ALEXANDER, of Marietta, is a son of John Alexander, a farmer, formerly of Lewisburg, Union Co., Pa. He is a graduate of the University of Lewisburg. Afterwards he began reading medicine under Dr. Thomas H. Wilson, and graduated in medicine, in 1876, at the University of Pennsylvania. This same year he located at Marietta, where he has practiced ever since. In 1882 he began the propagation of "vaccine virus" from "grain-fed cattle," and succeeded in establishing quite a reputation in this respect. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. ISAAC M. WINTERS, of Goodville, is a native of the county, and a graduate of Jefferson Medical College in the class of 1881. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. JOHN F. YOST, of Bethesda, was born in York County, Pa., received his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College in 1867. He is a member of the Medical Society of the county.

DR. JOSEPH F. COTTRELL, of Columbia, is a native of the same place, and a graduate of Princeton College, N. J. He received his diploma in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1863. After graduation he was appointed assistant surgeon of the navy, which position he held for a number of years. He soon afterwards abandoned the active practice of medicine and engaged in mercantile pursuits, but he still remains an active member of the County Medical Society.

DR. HENRY B. STEHMAN, of Lancaster, is a son of John B. Stehman, of Mountville, this county. He took his master's degree at Lebanon Valley College, studied medicine under Professor William H. Hancock, of Philadelphia, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in the class of 1877. After graduation he spent one year in dispensary work in Philadelphia, and another as resident physician at Blockley, after which he came to Lancaster. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies, a member of the Board of United States Pension Examiners, and in January, 1883, began the publication of a local medical journal, devoted to the interests of the medical societies in the eastern part of the State.

DR. THOMAS B. COX, of Lancaster, was the son of T. B. Cox, a carriage-builder of the city. Prior to reading medicine with Dr. M. L. Herr, he graduated at the Lancaster High School, and in 1879 took his degree in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College. He served one term as visiting physician to the County Hospital, and was a member of the State and County Medical Societies. He died in December, 1882.

DR. JACOB G. WEAVER, of Strasburg, is a native of the county, and the son of John Weaver, a farmer by occupation. Prior to reading medicine with Dr. Benjamin Musser, he attended the Coatesville Academy and the Chester County Normal School. He attended lectures at the Jefferson Medical College and received his degree in 1865, after which he was located on the Strasburg and Millport Turnpike, and later moved to Strasburg. He is a member of the American Medical Association and the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. E. H. PLANK, of Christiana, is a native of Berks County, and the son of David K. Plank, of Morgantown. He was a student at Millersville, taught public school, read medicine with Dr. Robert S. Bunn, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1870. After graduating he practiced at Ebensburg, Cambria Co., during which time he was also visiting physician to the County Hospital. He moved to Christiana in 1878, and the following year became a member of the County Medical Society.

JOSEPH SIMPSON THOME, M.D.—Arthur Thome, the great-grandfather of Dr. Thome, was of Scotch descent, and emigrated to America at an early date. He settled in Lebanon, Pa., where his son John became a citizen of much prominence. The latter was justice of the peace during the period of the Revolutionary war, which he assisted liberally with his means, as the following extract from a letter addressed to his Excellency Joseph Reed, Esq., president of the Council, indicates:<sup>1</sup>

"LEBANON, May 3, 1781.

"I have Already paid 85 Sol. their gratuities, and for that purpose and for paying the new recruits I have borrowed upwards of £100, besides advancing £100 of my own money. If your Excellency and council do not send me a sum sufficient to discharge the bounties & gratuities, the consequences I am afraid will not only be attended with mutiny, but I will be obliged to abandon my House as the Soldiery have tormented me hourly for upwards of 4 weeks past.

"I have the Honour to be
Your Excellency's most obedient and very humble Servt.,
"JOHN THOME."

To his wife, Ann Amelia Thome, were born three daughters—Mrs. Jones, Mrs. Kelker, Mrs. Hess—and a son, John. Mr. Thome died in Lebanon, and was buried in the Lutheran Cemetery of that place. His son John was born in Lebanon, where his early years were passed. He subsequently removed to Allegheny County, Pa., and afterwards to Manheim, where he followed his profession of civil engineer and surveyor, and was for more than thirty years a justice of the peace of the county. He was aide-de-camp to Gen. Hilsman in 1812-14, but owing to a cessation of hostilities was not called into active service. He aided materially by his professional skill in the construction of the Union Canal, and was engaged in other important works. John Thome married Jane, daughter of John Simpson, of Butler County, Pa. Their children were Samuel, William, Joseph S., Mary (Mrs. Mays), Charlotte (Mrs. Hacker), and Rebecca (Mrs. Mays). Mr. Thome's death occurred in Manheim, in his seventy-eighth year. His son, Joseph Simpson, was born Dec. 21, 1819, in Manheim, where his early boyhood was spent in attendance at the common school, after which he engaged in labor or assisted his father in surveying and scrivening. He chose medicine as a profession, and began his studies with Dr. Thomas Veazy, of Manheim. On the death of the latter he entered the office of Dr. Daniel L. Carpenter, the demand upon whose professional skill was so great as to afford his student an opportunity for immediate practice. In 1846 he settled in Lebanon County, and in 1853 removed to Lancaster County. In 1880 he made Mastersonville, in that county, his residence, where he now enjoys a large and very satisfactory practice.

His experience and skill have made his presence invaluable as the family physician in many homes of the vicinity. He was married to Miss Sarah Brown, of Londonderry township, Lebanon Co. Their children are Margaret and Mary Jane, deceased; John J., born in 1850, and married in 1873 to Miss Amelia Landis, whose children are Stella May, Joseph H., and Bertha; William, born in 1854, who graduated at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1876, and is now associated with his father in practice. He married, in 1876, Miss Louisa Misenner, and has one son, Winfield M. Dr. Thome is a member of the County Medical Society, as is also his son. Their religious convictions are in harmony with the creed of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches.

DR. WILLIAM B. THOME, of Mastersonville, a native of Lebanon County, is a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, class of 1876. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. THOMAS W. KAY, of Columbia, is a native of Port Royal, Va. He read medicine under Dr. Alexander Craig, of Columbia, and graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, in 1879. He was appointed vaccine physician in the borough of Columbia in 1881, and is also a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. A. S. BRUBAKER is a native of Ephrata township. He graduated at the university in 1877, and then located at Akron, where he has continued in practice until recently, when he removed to Columbiana, Ohio. He is a member of both State and County Medical Societies.

DR. E. R. HERSHEY is a native of Salisbury township, and practiced at Paradise. He is a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, class of 1880, and a member of the County Medical Society.

J. N. Sherrill

DR. J. B. McBRIDE is a resident of Columbia, formerly engaged in practice, but at present in mercantile pursuits. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. J. C. GATCHELL, of Martieville, is a native of Oxford, Chester Co., Pa. He is a graduate of the Pennsylvania Medical College of the class of 1860. Of late he has combined politics with medicine, and for several years was a member of the House of Representatives. He formerly was a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. M. B. SHAEFFER, of Farmersville, is a native of Lebanon County, and the son of Adam Shaeffer, residing at Richland. He attended Palatinate College and the State Normal School at Shippensburg, prior to reading medicine with Dr. J. D. Carpenter. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1879, and immediately located at Richland, removing the following year, however, to Farmersville. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. L. M. BRYSON, of Martieville, is a native of Bart township. He graduated in medicine at the Jefferson Medical College in 1879, and located at his present place of practice. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. BENJAMIN E. KENDIG, of Salunga, was born in Safe Harbor, and graduated in medicine in 1874 at the University of New York. After graduating he located at Salunga, where he has since continued in practice. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. WILLIAM B. IRWIN, of Churchtown, a native of Waynesburg, Chester Co., Pa., is a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, class of 1879. He received the degree of B.E. from the Waynesburg Academy, and is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. JOHN K. SHIRK, of Lancaster, is a native of the county, and a son of David O. Shirk, a farmer at Oregon. He attended the State Normal School at Millersville; read medicine under Dr. F. M. Musser and Dr. D. D. Richardson; graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1879, and the following year attended the University of Vienna. He began practice at Witmer, this county, in 1880, and in 1881 moved to Lancaster. He was physician to the County Hospital, and also the prison. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

JOHN H. SHENK, M.D.—Samuel Shenk, the grandfather of the doctor, was descended from German ancestry, and resided in Annville, Lebanon Co., where he was a prosperous farmer. He was the parent of five children,—Henry, Abram, Maria (Mrs. Baker), Nancy (Mrs. Cormany), and Elizabeth. Mr. Shenk continued to reside in Lebanon County until his death in advanced years. The birth of his son Henry occurred on the homestead, where he remained until his purchase and removal to an adjacent farm.

He married Miss Magdalena, daughter of Christian Kreider, of Lebanon County, and had children,—Christian H., Joseph H. (deceased), John H., Mary (Mrs. Kreider), and Annie E. (Mrs. Zimmerman), deceased. Mr. Shenk was during his lifetime engaged in agricultural employments, and died at his home in his thirty-ninth year. He was an earnest representative in politics of the principles of the Old-Line Whig party, and in religion espoused the creed of the church of the United Brethren. His son, John H., was born near Annville, on the 8th of March, 1839, and spent his youth until the age of twelve years on the farm, after which occurred the removal of the family to Lebanon. Here he attended the Lebanon Academy, and subsequently engaged in teaching, also entering a store for one year as clerk. The medical profession having been determined upon as the one most congenial to his tastes, he in 1858 entered the office of Dr. B. F. Schneck, of Lebanon, as a student, and later attended two courses of lectures at the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which he graduated in the spring of 1861. In March, 1862, he succeeded to the practice of Dr. Levi Hall, of Lititz, where he has since been an active practitioner. His field of labor is an extended one, the skill and proficiency displayed by the doctor in critical cases having won for him an enviable reputation and the cordial esteem of his patients. He is a member of the Lancaster City and County Medical Society, and also of the State Medical Society. He has been identified with the business and social advancement of Lititz since his residence in the borough, though the arduous labors of his profession leave little leisure for matters of a public or political character. The doctor was married Oct. 7, 1863, to Miss Laura E., daughter of Dr. Levi Hall, of Lititz. They have one daughter, Sallie.

DR. JAMES C. BROBST, of Lititz, is a native of Rehrersburg, Berks Co., Pa. He received the degree of Master of Arts in course at the Franklin and Marshall College at Lancaster, and in 1867 the degree of Doctor of Medicine at the Bellevue Hospital College. He is engaged in the drug business, aside from the regular practice of his profession. He is also a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. MARTIN RINGWALT, of Rohrerstown, is the son of David Ringwalt, a merchant of the same place. He was an office student of Dr. Henry Carpenter, of Lancaster, and a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, of the class of 1880. Soon after graduation he began practice in his native place, and subsequently was elected a member of the medical society.

DR. JOHN J. NEWPHER, of Mount Joy, is a son of A. O. Newpher, Esq., of Millersville. He began the study of medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. M. L. Davis, and graduated at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1881. After graduation he immediately located at Mount Joy, and soon afterwards became a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. ISAAC B. SENSENIG, of Witmer, was born in the county, and is the son of Isaac Sensenig, of Brecknock township. Having taught public school for several years, he entered the office of Isaac Winters, M.D., and in 1869 received his degree in medicine at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College. He began practice at Denver, but soon removed to near New Holland, where he remained until 1875, when he changed to Columbus, Ohio, but in 1880 returned to his present location. He is a member of the Columbus Academy of Medicine, of the Columbus Pathological Society, of the Ohio State Medical Society, also of the Pennsylvania State Medical and the Lancaster City and County Medical Societies. Dr. Sensenig was a member of Company H, One Hundred and Ninety-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

DR. JOHN W. ZELL, of Little Britain, is a native of the county and a graduate of the Pennsylvania Medical College, class of 1856. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. DAVID H. SHENK, of Hempfield, is a native of the county. He read medicine with Dr. S. T. Davis, after attending Millersville State Normal School, and graduated in medicine at the Long Island College Hospital, class of 1874. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. J. Y. KLINE, of Clay township, was born in Berks County. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1874. He is a member of the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. B. F. W. URBAN, of Lancaster, is the son of Joseph R. Urban, a teacher by profession, of Conestoga Centre. He was a teacher in the public schools of the county prior to beginning the study of medicine with Dr. P. J. Clinger, of Conestoga Centre. He received his degree in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania in 1869; after graduation he began private practice at Conestoga Centre, but removed to Lancaster in 1873. He enlisted in 1862 as a private, and in 1864 was promoted and commissioned brigade hospital steward, in which capacity he served until the close of the war.

He was three years clerk of the Court of Oyer and Terminer and of the Quarter Sessions, and for six years deputy of the same. He is at present engaged in the drug business, and is a member of the State Medical Society, and of the County Medical and Pharmaceutical Societies.

DR. SAMUEL B. FOREMAN, of Lancaster, is a native of Franklin County, and the son of Frederic Foreman, a farmer of Waynesboro'. He attended the State Normal School at Millersville, and in 1872 graduated at Eastman's Business College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He studied medicine under Drs. S. B. Hartman, of Lancaster, and Francis A. Oellig, Franklin County. He graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1876, and subsequently took a special course on diseases of the eye at Wills Eye Hospital, Philadelphia. Later he located at Lancaster, where he has since remained. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. T. M. ROHRER, of Quarryville, is the son of John K. Rohrer, a merchant of New Providence. Prior to reading medicine with his brother-in-law, Dr. W. J. Wentz, of New Providence, he attended the Millersville Normal School, and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1881. After graduation he located at Quarryville. He is a member of both the State and County Medical Societies.

DR. J. S. KREITER, of Akron, is the son of Solomon Kreiter, a farmer, living at Litiz. He received his preliminary education at the State Normal Schools of Millersville and Indiana, taught in the public schools, and read medicine with Dr. J. C. Brobst. He graduated at the Bellevue Hospital Medical College in 1882, and immediately located at Lititz, but a few months later removed to Akron. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. JAMES ERWIN BAKER, of Lancaster, is a native of New York; he graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in 1882, and immediately began private practice. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. EDMUND B. ILYUS, of Lancaster, is a native of the county, and the son of A. C. Ilyus, a justice of the peace at Neffsville. He attended the State Normal School at Millersville, taught in the public schools, and read medicine with Dr. E. J. Bowman, graduating at the Jefferson Medical College in 1882. Immediately after graduating he located at Lancaster, and the following year joined the medical society.

DR. C. F. MARKLE, of Columbia, is the son of Emanuel Markle, a hardware merchant of Shrewsbury, York Co. He taught school prior to beginning the study of medicine in the office of Drs. J. and E. H. Gerry, of his native town. He graduated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, in 1876; commenced practice at Winterstown, where he remained for six years; then he removed to Columbia, where he combines the drug business with practice. He is a member of the society.

DR. JOHN H. MACCREARY, of Lancaster, is a native of the county, and the son of John MacCreary, of Earl (West) township. He received his preliminary education at the Coatesville Academy and Millersville Normal School, and afterwards studied medicine under the preceptorship of Dr. John L. Atlee, Jr., graduating at the University of Pennsylvania in 1866. He was assistant surgeon of the Two Hundred and First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and from 1867 to 1869 assistant physician at the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg. In 1870 he located at Chester Springs, where he remained until 1874, when he removed to Salisbury township, at which place he remained until 1883, when he was elected superintendent and physician of the Lancaster County Hospital, which position he now holds. He is a member of the County Medical Society.

DR. GEORGE R. ROHRER, of Lancaster, is the son of Jeremiah Rohrer, dealer in liquors, of this city. He studied medicine under Dr. John L. Atlee, Sr., and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1880. The following year he served as resident physician at Blockley Hospital, and subsequently as interne at Wills Eye Hospital, Philadelphia. He is a member of the medical society.

M. M. WITHERS, M.D.—Augustus Withers, the great ancestral parent of the doctor, was of German birth, and on his emigration to America, about the middle of the eighteenth century, settled in Strasburg township, where he followed agricultural employments on lands pre-empted from the government. He married, and had children, George, John, and Mary, who were reared on the homestead, which, on the death of their parents, they largely developed in resources, erecting mills, distillery, and iron-works, which were successfully operated for a number of years, transporting their products to the markets of Philadelphia by teams, making regular trips during the whole year. The grandparents of the doctor lived during the period of the Revolution, and, though not actively a participant in the struggle, rendered signal service to the cause of freedom in the manufacture of muskets for the soldiers. His death occurred about the year 1812, upon the farm where his years of activity had been passed. His son George was born in 1798 on the homestead, where the larger portion of his life was spent in cultivating the paternal inheritance. On his retirement from active labor he removed to Lancaster, where his death occurred in 1876. His politics were formerly Democratic and of the most pronounced type, though subsequent events induced his espousal of the principles of Republicanism. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Jonas Metzgar, of Lancaster, and had children,—George H., Michael M., George W., Howard H., Ann E., Mary C., and Catharine J., four of whom survive.

George W. was a practicing physician, and after a period of service in the army settled in Willow Street, West Lampeter township, where he died in 1870.

Howard H. is engaged in active practice in Lancaster.

Michael M. was born Jan. 17, 1880, in Strasburg township, where his early youth was spent. The public school of the district, and subsequently the Strasburg Academy, afforded him advantages of education, after which he decided upon medicine as a profession. In 1880 he entered the office of Dr. John L. Atlee, of Lancaster, and attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, from which he received his diploma in 1884.

After a period of active professional labor in Lancaster he removed, in 1865, to Maytown, where he has since continued in active practice. The doctor, by a thorough course of study and an extended familiarity with all forms of disease, had become a proficient in the science of medicine, and on making Maytown his residence soon controlled a large and lucrative practice. His fidelity to the interests of his patients readily won their confidence and regard, and established him as among the most successful practitioners in the county. He married, in the summer of 1866, Miss Elizabeth C., daughter of Dr. William B. Fahnestock, for many years a leading physician of Lancaster. They have one daughter, May R. The doctor is in politics a Republican, though not actively engaged in the political field, his profession usually monopolizing his time and energies. He is greatly interested in educational matters, and has been for many years a member of the East Donegal School Board. Both he and Mrs. Withers maintain their connection with the Trinity Lutheran Church of Lancaster.

DR. DANIEL MURPHY, of Safe Harbor, is a native of York County, Pa. He is a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, of the class of 1859, and has been located at Safe Harbor for a number of years.

DR. JOHN L. SHOBER, of Terre Hill, is a son of Ephraim Shober, of Brecknock township, this county. He attended Lititz Academy, and then followed milling, prior to reading medicine with Dr. Isaac Breneisen. He attended the Jefferson Medical College in 1843-44, and graduated at the Pennsylvania Medical College in 1847. After attending one course of lectures he practiced for some time at Shoemakersville. In the spring of 1847 he went to Santa Fé as assistant surgeon of the Fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and while there served as surgeon in the general hospital. In 1848 he returned to this county, and spent the winter months in attending medical lectures at Philadelphia, but he returned to Sterling, Ill., the following spring, and in 1850 crossed the plains to California. He practiced medicine at Placerville, Cal., for six years, and in 1857 returned to Terre Hill, where he has resided ever since.

DR. JACOB LONG, of Lancaster, is a native of the county. He read medicine with Dr. Heiss, formerly a student of Dr. Abraham Carpenter, and graduated at the Pennsylvania Eclectic Medical College. He practiced medicine in the city for about twenty years, and in 1860 engaged in the drug business where he at present resides.

DR. WASHINGTON BURG is a native of York County; studied medicine with Dr. G. C. Burg, of Washington borough, and in 1859 graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. He entered the army as assistant surgeon of the One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and afterwards was promoted to the surgeoncy of the two Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. He is now located at East Petersburg.

DR. R. J. CLARK, of Chestnut Level, is the son of Thomas A. Clark, formerly of Nottingham, Chester Co., Pa. He received his early education at the Chestnut Level Academy, and subsequently taught in the public schools. He studied medicine under James Fulton, M.D., and in 1868 received his diploma from the University of Pennsylvania. After graduation he attended another course of lectures, and located at Oak Hill in 1869. In the spring of 1870 he went to Allegheny County, the following year to Wyliesburg, Va.; later to Mecklinsburg, Va., and in 1874 returned to Chestnut Level, where he has been practicing his profession ever since. He was a private in the late rebellion, and formerly a member of the Oxford Medical Society.

DR. MARY ELEANOR WILSON, of Lancaster, is a native of the county, her father residing at New Providence, being a farmer and tanner by occupation. Dr. Wilson is a graduate of the Lancaster High School, and formerly a pupil at the Columbia Institute. She read medicine under Dr. John K. Raub, and received her degree in medicine in 1868, at the Women's Medical College at Philadelphia. This same year she located in the city, and is at present censor for Pennsylvania of the Alumnae Association of the Women's Medical College of Pennsylvania.

DR. A. P. GARBER, of Mountville, was a son of Jacob B. Garber, a farmer and florist of the same place. After serving in the rebellion, teaching in the public schools, and attending the State Normal School at Millersville, he entered the junior class at Lafayette College in the fall of 1866, pursued an elective course in the Scientific Department, and graduated June, 1868. Devoted to the study of natural history and especially botany, he was then employed by the college to collect plants of Pennsylvania for the herbarium under the direction of Dr. Thomas C. Porter, Professor of Botany. In September, 1868, he visited Erie and explored the lake shore and Presque Isle. During the months of August and September of the year following he traveled along the whole tier of northern counties from Wayne to Erie, and then southward through the counties west of the Alleghenies as far as the Virginia line, where he gathered the famous Dutchman's smoke-pipe,—Aristolochia Siphon. Later, in the same service, he made an excursion with the late Thomas P. James into the Pocono region of Monroe and Pike Counties, and brought back a fine collection of mosses and liverworts. These labors secured many valuable additions to the flora of the State, and although nothing wholly new to science, at least twenty-seven species only found by him. As a resident graduate at Easton, his time was taken up with botanical field work and the study of medicine in the office of Dr. Trail Green, until he received his diploma at the University of Pennsylvania in 1872. He then engaged for a short time in private practice at Harrisburg, but soon afterwards was elected assistant resident physician at the State Insane Hospital at Harrisburg, where he remained for three years. After the failure of his health, which compelled him to relinquish the practice of his profession, spent several years in Florida, and by his indefatigable explorations made large additions to the flora of the United States. The great value of his contributions is recognized by all the leading botanists of the county. Dr. Asa Gray has embalmed his memory by giving his name to a new genus,—Garberia; and Professor Porter has honored his old friend by naming an orchid of his discovery, near Miami, S. Florida, Habenaria Garberi. The last work of exploration performed by him was in the island of Porto Rico, West Indies, under the direction of Baron Eggers. Dr. Thomas C. Porter, in speaking of him said, "From my long and pleasant association with him, I am able to say that he was a most patient, thorough, and accurate student, skilled in the use of the microscope, an accomplished naturalist. His powers of observation were very acute, as shown by his letters and notes, and the specimens prepared by him excelled in every way. Quiet, modest, faithful, an agreeable companion, and an earnest Christian, the tidings of his early death caused profound sorrow and regret to his scientific friends and associates." Dr. Garber became a victim of that distressing malady, consumption, and in 1881 succumbed to its influence.

A. H. KISSINGER, M.D.—Abraham Kissinger, one of Berks County's sterling citizens, was born near Sinking Spring in 1810, passed his life upon his birthplace, and died there in November, 1882. His widow, Abylonia (daughter of Jacob Hill, of Reading), survives him, and resides upon the old homestead. They reared eleven children, all of whom are living. Dr. A. H. Kissinger, of Bowmansville, was born in Spring township, Berks Co., Dec. 3, 1847. He received his education at the Reading Classical Academy, and upon the completion of his studies there, became a medical student in the office of Dr. J. S. Herbein, of Sinking Spring. He attended lectures at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and graduated March 13, 1871. While casting about him for an opening likely to present a field for practice, his attention was invited to the village of Bowmansville, in Lancaster County. There was at that time no physician resident there, but the place had from time to time a good many. None had, however, remained any length of time for the reason that the location failed to advance sufficient encouragement in the way of patronage. Thus Bowmansville came to be looked upon as an unpromising home for a physician; but despite this outlook young Kissinger thought there was a field there, and that a persevering ambition would make it fruitful. He pitched his tent, therefore, upon the ground where so many had failed, and determined to test the matter fully. At the outset he met with little encouragement, and the first winter of his stay was stricken with fever, and lay ill a long time,—at a period, too, when there was much sickness in the country round-about, and when, if he had been well, he might have made a good start. Illness and lack of practice could not, however, check the ambitious hopes he had formed, and with dogged determination he kept steadily to his purpose of achieving success in the face of fate. Such a spirit must, of course, win a victory in the long run, and it won in his case. The turn in the tide came in due time; and when once within his grasp he pushed his improving fortunes with heroic will and untiring zeal until he soon found himself upon a secure and promising road to a flourishing practice. His was no royal path to success, and when he gained it, he had the proud satisfaction of feeling and knowing that he had fully earned it. To-day he is recognized as one of the busiest and most prosperous physicians in his section of Lancaster County. His practice extends into two counties and six townships, and radiates six miles from his home in any given direction.

Dr. Kissinger has been twice married. His first wife (to whom he was married April 10, 1878) was Lizzie Y., daughter of Christian Snader, of Brecknock. She died Sept. 27, 1878. Oct. 3, 1879, he married Missouri, daughter of Levi Weiler, of East Earl. Dr. Kissinger was reared in the Evangelical Lutheran Church, and has been a member thereof for upwards of twenty years. He is now connected with Centre Church, and is one of the trustees of the Centre Church Cemetery Association.

U. B. KLINE was born in Warwick township, Lancaster Co., May 15, 1826. He received his early education at the school in Lititz, and after studying medicine in the office of Dr. Josiah Robinson, of Lincoln, and Dr. Emanuel Rank, of Lebanon, entered the University of New York, where he graduated in 1852. In 1857 he located in the practice of his profession at Reamstown, where he has since been in constant practice.

ISAAC B. HACKER was born March 5, 1856, in West Cocalico township, Lancaster Co. He was educated at the common schools and at the Reamstown Academy. When twenty years of age he began the study of medicine with Dr. B. D. Bucher. After remaining in Dr. Bucher's office eighteen months he entered Jefferson College, Philadelphia, where he graduated in 1879. He began practice in West Cocalico township in 1879, and located in Denver in 1880, where he is practicing at the present time (1883).

E. K. FERNSLER, M.D., of Reinholdsville, was born April 29, 1842, in Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co. His father, Tobias (now living near Shaefferstown), was born in Lebanon County in 1810. He married Hannah, daughter of Michael Kuntz, of Lebanon County. She was born 1813, and died October, 1874. They had three children, one son and two daughters, all of whom are living.

E. K. Fernsler

Young Fernsler received his early education at Shaefferstown Academy, and completed it at the Missionary Institute, Seling's Grove. Upon leaving the latter institution he engaged in teaching in Schuylkill County. After an experience of two years in that field, he spent a short season at home, and it was while his father lay ill that he conceived the notion that he would like to be a doctor. In pursuance of that desire he entered the office of his father's family physician, Dr. Louis Livingood, of Womelsdorf. With him he studied two years, and after two courses of lectures at the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, he graduated there in March, 1867. His first field was Unionville, Lancaster Co., where he made a location in 1867. After remaining there two years he moved to Churchville, Dauphin Co., and practiced there until the fall of 1869, when learning of the death of Dr. A. D. Bollinger, of Reinholdsville, Dr. Fernsler at once made his home at the latter place. He was a stranger in the locality and had no practice to succeed to, but he reasoned that Reinholdsville offered a good opening for an energetic, ambitious physician, and he therefore took hold with a will to make a success. The village had known many physicians, but none had made a permanent stay. Discouraged easily, they passed to other scenes because patronage failed to roll in upon them at once. With Dr. Fernsler it was different. He was content to bide his time, knowing his time would come if he diligently sought to push his every opportunity. The result proved that he was right, although the way looked dreary at first, and watchfulness as well as indefatigable industry, exacted their constant demands upon him. In a few years he found his practice a profitable one, and to-day he stands among the representative prosperous and skillful physicians of northeastern Lancaster County.

Dr. Fernsler was married, Sept. 15, 1868, at Unionville, to Amelia, daughter of Michael Lauser, of Lebanon. They have two daughters. In 1876 he erected the home which he now occupies in Reinholdsville.

R. S. SCHWEITZER, M.D., of Adamstown, although barely turned the thirtieth year of his life, occupies firmly a place as a representative and successful physician. He is a native of Berks County, where he was born Dec. 3, 1852. His father, John (likewise a native of Berks County, and for many years one of its well-known farmer-citizens), moved to Lancaster County in 1853, and in 1857 settled at Spring Grove, his present home. His children were nine in number, of whom four were sons. Of the four sons, three are living,—R. S., Thomas (postmaster at Spring Grove), and John J. Dr. Schweitzer was but four months old when his parents came from Berks to Lancaster County, and thus may aptly be termed a life-long resident of his adopted county. His early school education was obtained at the Keystone Normal School, Kutztown, Berks Co., at the Guthrieville Academy, Chester County, and in the preparatory department of Franklin and Marshall College. He left the latter institution in June, 1876, to prepare himself for a medical career, and entered the office of Dr. S. B. Foreman, of Lancaster, as a student the same year. In 1879 and 1880 he attended the Baltimore College of Physicians and Surgeons, and graduated therefrom in the spring of 1881. His first field of practice was Shillington, Berks Co., whence he removed, however, within six months to Adamstown to succeed Dr. Raudenbush, whose practice and property at Adamstown he purchased. Dr. Schweitzer was married Nov. 13, 1881, to Anna, daughter of Daniel Hershberger, of Lancaster County. His field of practice, which he has materially developed since he entered upon it, reaches now to points ten miles distant from Adamstown, and covers territory in four townships and two counties. He is recognized as a skillful physician, and in the constantly widening of his experience and the valuable benefits gained in that experience, there are before him the possibilities that ever lie in the pathway of the professional man whose capacity points to developing excellence, and whose energetic ambition and devotion to his calling give abundant assurance that the passage of time must inevitably mark his steady advancement upon the road that leads to a worthily-won and high place in the ranks of his chosen profession.

Homeopathy.—According to the transactions of the World's Homeopathic Convention of 1876, we find that homeopathy was "first introduced into this county by DR. EHRMAN, now of Louisville, Ky., about the year 1847 or 1848. He located at Lancaster, the county-seat, and remained several years. DR. J. MARIS McCALISTER located here about 1851.

"DR. HAMILTON, now of the State of Ohio, located at Columbia in 1850, but remained only one year, when he was succeeded by Dr. Smith Armor."

The homeopathic physicians who reside in the city and county have organized themselves into a society; the following are members of the same:

DR. O. T. HUEBENER, of Lancaster, is a native of Tuscarawas, Ohio, and the son of the Rev. Samuel R. Huebener. He attended Nazareth Hall, and afterwards became a teacher in this institution.

He studied under Dr. Joseph Hark, and in 1868 graduated at the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. After graduation he located at Lititz, where he remained until 1880, when he moved to Lancaster. He is a member of the State Homeopathic Society, and at present president of the County Homeopathic Society.

DANIEL W. HARNER was born in Juniata County, Pa., June 10, 1855, and was the son of Abraham Harner, a clergyman of the United Brethren Church. He obtained his education at the district school and the normal school at Thompsettown. He matriculated at the Cleveland (Ohio) Homeopathic Hospital College in 1878, and in the spring of that year began practice at New Holland, Lancaster Co., where he has since resided.

GEORGE W. REICH, M.D.—The great-grandfather of Dr. Reich emigrated from Bavaria, Germany, when a lad. His son, Adam, was probably a native of York County, Pa., where he was a potter, and conducted a large and flourishing establishment. He was united in marriage to a Miss Keplar, and became the father of two sons and two daughters. His son, George, was born in York, Pa., March 4, 1804. When sufficiently advanced in years, his father placed him in a Lutheran theological seminary preparatory to entering the ministry of the Lutheran Church. His inclinations having led him to abandon his studies at the seminary, he became associated with the Evangelical Association, otherwise known as the German Methodists, as an itinerant, in which connection he served for five years. He was, in May, 1825, married to Miss Mary, daughter of Harman Long, whose father emigrated from Switzerland when a lad (probably more than a century and a half ago) and later became owner of a large tract of land embracing the present Conoy and East Donegal townships, acquired under Cook's patent.

In 1827 Mr. Reich retired from the ministry and began the study of medicine, graduating from a medical college in New York City in 1831. He continued in practice, though not in later life actively engaged, until his death, which occurred Feb. 17, 1875, in his seventy-first year.

The children of Dr. and Mrs. Reich were Mary (Mrs. Brose), Harman L., Lizzie (Mrs. Bowman), Annie (Mrs. Heisey), George W., Benjamin F. (a physician at York, Pa.), and Sallie.

Their son George W. was born Jan. 8, 1844, in Conoy township, Lancaster Co. When but a lad, having access to the library of his father, he began the study of medicine, which was continued, with an interval spent at the normal school at Millersville, and also at Pittsburgh, Pa. He attended lectures during the years 1868, '69, '70, '71, and '72, and graduated in the latter year at the Homeopathic Medical College of New York. Marietta having offered an attractive field of labor, he made it his residence, where he has since been an active practitioner. He has been signally successful, and won an enviable rank in the profession in this portion of the county, where he is the only representative of the homeopathic school of medicine.

He is especially interested in educational projects, and is a member of the board of education of the borough. He is a Republican in politics, though not specially interested in political contests. His belief is in harmony with the creed of the Protestant Episcopal Church, of which Mrs. Reich is a member.

Dr. Reich was married Aug. 28, 1876, to Miss Ella C., daughter of Jacob Roth, of Marietta. Their children are two sons,—George R. and Albert M.

JOHN B. KOHLER, M.D., for ten years a practicing physician at New Holland, was born in that village Feb. 1, 1851. His father, Rev. John Kohler (a native of Snyder County), was for many years pastor of the New Holland Lutheran Church, and was in that pastorate when the house of worship used by that society was erected. He is at present principal of the primary department of the Muhlenberg College at Allentown. Rev. John Kohler married Louisa Ann Baum. Their children numbered nine, and all are now living. Charles S. is a Lutheran minister of Rochester, N. Y., Frederick W. a minister in the Lutheran Church in Franklin, Venango Co., Pa., Martin L. is an attorney in Philadelphia.

John B. Kohler was educated at Washington Hall, Trappe, Montgomery Co., and upon the completion of his school days entered a store as a clerk. His desire turned toward a medical career, but his parents were not able to send him to college, and so, taking early to his heart the lesson of self-reliance, he determined to earn money enough to fit him for his chosen profession. It was no slight task that he had set before him, but ambitious zeal gave him strength, and thus urging his way slowly, and applying himself to his labors with diligence and untiring energy, he soon saw his way clear. Studying at first with

Dr. Joseph W. Royer, at Trappe, he entered the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1869, and after attending three courses of lectures graduated at that institution in March, 1873. August 23d of that year he located at New Holland, and although he found the field liberally occupied, he faced the situation with a determination to win success if success could be won. Patience and perseverance were his watchwords, and indeed they needed to be, for he found his progress slow and uncertain at first, and discouragements many. He had, however, come to stay, and so he conquered adverse circumstances at last, and found the assured place that he had sought for. His practice has steadily increased year by year, and to-day requires his constant attention and the full bent of his energies. Since 1879 he has been a member of the Lancaster County Medical Society. He was reared in the Lutheran faith for upwards of seventeen years, has been a member of that church, and for two years a deacon therein. Oct. 5, 1881, he was married to Ella L., daughter of T. M. Storb, one of New Holland's prominent citizens.

DR. WILLIAM G. TAYLOR, of Columbia, is a native of Darby, Delaware Co., Pa. He graduated at the Hahnemann Medical College in 1870, and soon afterwards located at Columbia. He is a member of the Homeopathic Medical Society of the county.

DR. F. M. HARRY, of Mount Joy, is a native of Lionville, Chester Co., Pa., and a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia. He located at Mount Joy soon after graduation, and is a member of the Homeopathic Medical Society of the county.

DR. SMITH ARMOR, of Columbia, is a native of Delaware. He graduated at the Homeopathic Medical College, Pennsylvania, in 1851, and soon afterwards located at his present place of practice.

DR. JOHN ANGSTADT located at Milton Grove, came originally from Reading. He is not a graduate in medicine, but is a member of the County Homeopathic Medical Society.

DR. F. F. FRANTZ, of Lancaster, is the son of Jacob Frantz, of Lancaster township. In 1869 he graduated at the Jefferson Medical College, and in 1875 took the degree of M.D. at the Hahnemann Medical College. He is a member of the Homeopathic Society of the county.

DR. WILLIAM D. BOLLINGER, of Lancaster, is a native of Pimber, Ill. In 1867 he graduated at the Pennsylvania College of Homeopathic Medicine, and later connected himself with the Homeopathic Medical Society of the county.

DR. SAMUEL H. METZGAR, of Lancaster, is a native of the city and a graduate in homeopathic medicine at the Pennsylvania Homeopathic College in the class of 1861. While he is considered a homeopathic physician, yet he is not a member of the society, since his liberality is incompatible with the exclusiveness of homeopathic doctrines.

CHAPTER XXIII.

DENTAL SURGERY.

PROBABLY no profession in the world has made such rapid strides during the last forty years as that of dental surgery. Prior to that period the study and care of the teeth was limited to those who made the study of anatomy and physiology a specialty, and to the members of the medical profession, very much as blood-letting and tooth-drawing were once included among the functions of a barber. Many persons are still living who distinctly remember when the scalpel and forceps were as necessary instruments in a barber-shop as the shears and razor. The first dental college in the world was established in Baltimore in 1839. Since that time the science of dentistry has developed until it now ranks among the most useful and artistic of the professions, and includes among its representatives men of education and culture. The most rapid improvement has been made in operative dentistry, in which there has been almost an entire revolution. The early practice advocated smooth-pointed instruments for use in filling, and non-cohesive gold, whereas serrated instruments and cohesive gold are now largely used. Formerly artificial teeth were in use as early as Washington's time, and were carved out of ivory, involving great expense and labor. The later improvements made in this direction, and their introduction into general use, have added largely to both the attractions and difficulties of the profession, and drawn to it many possessed of superior mechanical skill. Formerly the plates were made on gold and silver, on which the teeth were set, necessarily making them heavy and costly, whereas plates are now made of not only gold and silver, but of platinum, rubber, and celluloid. Rubber plates were not introduced until about 1854, and celluloid still more recently. The filling of artificial teeth is also a leading branch of the science, requiring both skill and judgment and delicacy when properly done. Lancaster County has a society, "The Harris Dental Association, of Lancaster, Pa.," organized June 21, 1867, which holds its annual meetings and elects officers for the ensuing year. Its officers are a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, and executive committee (consisting of three members), elected annually.

The officers upon the organization of the association were: President, Dr. John McCalla, Lancaster; Vice-President, Dr. J. W. Derr, Lititz; Secretary, Dr. William N. Amor, Lancaster; Treasurer, Dr. E. K. Young, Lancaster.

Executive Committee, Drs. Samuel Welchens, Lancaster; P. W. Hiestand, Millersville; M. H. Webb. The presidents since the organization have been as follows: Dr. John McCalla, 1868-76; Dr. Samuel Welchens, 1869-70; Dr. J. A. Martin, 1871-72; Dr. J. G. Hoffer, 1873; Dr. P. W. Hiestand, 1876; Dr.

P. W. Biestand

J. D. Heiges, 1877; Dr. John G. Moore, 1878; Dr. William N. Amer, 1880; Dr. D. K. Hertz, 1882. Secretaries, Dr. William N. Amer, 1868-78; Dr. J. G. Weltmer, 1880; Dr. A. W. Rogers, 1882. Treasurers, Dr. E. K. Young, 1868; Dr. J. G. Moore, 1869-72; Dr. A. F. Herr, 1873-78; Dr. E. Young, 1880-82.

Membership: John McCalla, William Nichols Amer, Samuel Welchens, E. K. Young, M. H. Webb, P. W. Hiestand, George A. Horting, J. A. Martin, John G. Moore, J. W. Derr, B. A. Boyce, J. S. Smith, J. Z. Hoffer, G. W. Worrall, B. Rhine Hertz, E. M. Zell, A. F. Herr, A. J. Gulick, J. G. Cannon, Brooke Davis, James M. Dunlap, J. G. Weltmer, J. D. Heiges, J. S. Mall, R. M. McKissick, J. H. Long, Robert H. Moffitt, Thomas R. Paxton, H. D. Knight, S. Atlee Bockius, Francis Hickman, M. G. N. Bonnell, Elam A. Hertz, A. W. Rogers, George A. Horting, S. P. Lytle, Jr., J. W. Allen, Alfred D. Clark.

JOHN MCCALLA, D.D.S., was born in the north of Ireland, Nov. 21, 1814, and came of Scotch ancestors, who fled their native country on account of religious persecution and settled in Ireland. With his parents he landed in Philadelphia in 1821, then only six years of age, where he obtained only a limited English education. He learned to be a mechanic, and followed his trade in that city and Baltimore until 1846, when, being brought into contact with some dental students in the latter city, he resolved to study dental surgery. Dr. McCalla began his studies in the latter year, and prosecuted them with all his energy under Dr. C. A. Harris, president of the Baltimore College of Dental Surgery, and with Dr. C. O. Cone, of Baltimore, and was graduated from that college with honors in 1848. For a short time he practiced his profession in Philadelphia, but the same year of his graduation opened an office in Lancaster, Pa., where he continued practice at the head of his profession, keeping in the advance of others of his fraternity generally in the science and theory of dentistry, and in establishing, with the aid of others, associations in the county and State regulating its practice, until 1877, when he retired from active business life and settled in Millersville, where he has since resided.

Probably Dr. McCalla has done as much as any man in the State to give dental surgery the high place it now enjoys among the other professions. He was one of the petitioners in getting a charter for the first dental school in the State, the "Pennsylvania Dental College;" was one of the organizers of the Odontographic Society of Pennsylvania in 1861, was its first vice-president and a member since; one of the founders of the "Harris Dental Association" of Lancaster, organized June 21, 1867, its first president, an active member since, and also its presiding officer a second time, and he was the first to agitate the subject of a State society at a reunion of dentists at Litz Springs in July, 1868, consisting of the Harris Dental Association of Lancaster, the Lebanon Valley Dental Society, and a number of professional gentlemen from other local societies, when a proposition was made to form a "Pennsylvania State Dental Society." Dr. McCalla officiated as president of the convention held Dec. 1, 1868, at the Philadelphia Dental College, for this object, and upon its organization, the day after, was elected treasurer, which office he has filled several years. At the second annual meeting of the society at Pittsburgh, convened June 21, 1870, he was chosen president, and presided at the third annual meeting in June, 1871, held at Gettysburg.

Dr. McCalla has read many valuable papers before the dental associations in the State, and at the second meeting of the State Society, in 1870, read a studied and invaluable paper upon the subject of the "Extraction of the Teeth," contrasting ancient with modern modes, and giving full explanations of the proper treatment of the teeth according to the most modern scientific study and practice. He may safely be ranked among the pioneers in the State of improved and progressive dentistry, in which he always took an active part, and was known as skillful and an expert in his profession. He married in 1856, Amanda K., daughter of Michael B. Barr, of Quincy, Ill. They have no surviving children. His father, Alexander McCalla, a weaver by trade, died in his eighty-fifth year in 1875. His mother, Elizabeth (Mitchell) McCalla, died prior to her husband in her seventy-eighth year. They had five sons—Dr. John, subject of this sketch; Alexander, Edmund, and Robert, of Philadelphia; and James, who was forced to serve in the rebel army during the late civil war and died in Georgia—and four daughters,—Mrs. Ellen Forbes, Mary, Margaret Ann, and Mrs. William J. McElroy, of Philadelphia.

PETER W. HIESTAND, Doctor of Dental Surgery at Millersville, was born on the homestead in Manor township, Lancaster Co., Pa., Dec. 15, 1831. He remained on the farm at home until the age of eighteen, when he began an apprenticeship with his brother John at coach-making, and subsequently learned pattern-making. In the mean time he employed his leisure hours in the study of dentistry, and afterward completed his studies in the office of Dr. Josiah Martin, of Strasburg. In 1856 he began the practice of his profession at Millersville, where he has continued successfully since, a period of twenty-seven years, his practice extending over a large territory, including Lancaster City and neighboring counties. Dr. Hiestand has been a student of his profession, and has kept pace with the advanced worthy theories of science and practice of dental surgery, a profession which has made greater progress than any other of the professions during the past quarter of a century. He was one of the originators and first members of the Harris Dental Association of Lancaster County, organized June 21, 1867, and it was largely through the efforts of this society that the State Dental Association was organized, which has done so much to elevate the dental profession in Pennsylvania. Outside his profession he has been interested in many local enterprises. He was one of the original stockholders of the State Normal School at Millersville; was a member of the board of trustees from 1856 to 1866, and has been treasurer of the institution since the latter date, a period of seventeen years. He has been chairman of the committee on instruction and discipline of the Normal School since its organization as a State institution, and was an efficient member of the building committees.

Dr. Hiestand for five years leased, managed, and controlled the Lancaster and Millersville Street Railway, which he took in an embarrassed condition, and left at the expiration of his lease upon a sound, paying financial basis. Until recently he has given considerable attention to agriculture, but for the past few years he has devoted his time almost wholly to his profession and the interest of education. He is a Republican in his political affiliations, and a contributor to the various charitable objects and religious societies demanding his attention.

He married Maria, daughter of Christian Habecker, of Manor township. They have two surviving children, Frank, and Ira, a student in the Dental Department of the University of Pennsylvania, and one daughter, Lizzie, deceased.

The family of Hiestand came from Germany. They left Rotterdam by the way of Conies in the ship "Britannia," of London, Michael Franklyn master, and arrived at Philadelphia in September, 1731, settling in Lancaster County. John, great-grandfather of Dr. Hiestand, resided in Manor township, was one of its pioneer settlers, a farmer, and there died. His son, Peter Hiestand, a preacher in the Dunkard Church, born in 1776, died at the age of seventy-two. He resided on the Blue Rock road, in Manor township, owned a fulling-mill, and was a farmer. His wife, Annie Lintner, was born in 1772, and bore him the following children: Peter, Fanny (wife of John Stehman), Daniel, Anna (wife, first, of John Fritz, and, after his death, of William DeWitt), and Henry Hiestand. Only the daughters survive in 1883.

Of these, Peter, the father of Dr. Hiestand, was born Aug. 17, 1791, and died Jan. 8, 1854. He spent his life, a farmer, in Manor township. His wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob Wissler, of Manor township, was born Oct. 20, 1793, and died Jan. 26, 1868. Their children are Jacob, Fanny (wife of Robert Evans), Elizabeth (wife of Abram Landis), Catharine (wife of Henry Torry), Ann (wife of Christian Witmer), John, Henry, Dr. Peter W., Benjamin, and Evalina (wife of Frederick Frey).

ELY PARRY, M.D., D.D.S.—The founder of the Parry family in Pennsylvania, Thomas, born A.D. 1680, in Caernarvonshire, North Wales, came to America near the close of the seventeenth century, married

Jane Morris in 1715, and settled in what is now Montgomery County. He had ten children, all born between 1716 and 1739. The family in Wales were Quakers, and the descendants in Pennsylvania for several generations have held to this religious belief. David Parry (1778-1875), a descendant of the founder of the family here, was a farmer, resided in Dunmore township, Lancaster Co., removed to Maryland, and subsequently settled in Bucks County, where he died. His wife, Elizabeth Ely (1778-1816), bore him five sons and two daughters, of whom Dr. Ely Parry is subject of this sketch, was born in Dunmore township, Oct. 11, 1804. By a second wife, Lydia Richardson (1785-1845), David Parry had three sons and three daughters. One son was Dr. James Parry, a surgeon dentist, of York, Pa., a man of great skill in the art, and ranked among the first as a mechanical dentist.

Dr. Ely Parry was educated in the schools of his native place. He studied medicine with Dr. Sylvester Hanford, an eminent physician of Salisbury, Lancaster Co., and was graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. Turning his attention to the subject of dental surgery, he prepared himself for this work, and gave little attention afterwards to the practice of medicine, except in connection with his drug business in Lancaster. He settled in Lancaster, and began the practice of dentistry about 1830. He manufactured teeth from porcelain, and mounted them on gold, silver, and platinum, which he continued to use until a late date in the history of his practice in Lancaster, when teeth manufactories supplanted the handwork, and rubber plates came into general use. Dr. Parry was one of the earliest dentists in this part of the State, and one of the pioneers in a profession that has made great progress during the past quarter of a century. He was one of the founders of the Odontographic Society of Pennsylvania, and was elected an honorary member of the Harris Dental Association of Lancaster, and he was one of the founders of the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery. About 1836 he purchased the drug-store at 111 East King Street, Lancaster, of Dr. Washington L. Atlee, and there kept his dental office and carried on the drug business until 1860, when he removed to Bellefonte, Pa., practiced his profession there for a number of years, and then settled in Lock Haven, Pa., where he continued to practice until his death, which occurred April 19, 1874. Dr. Parry ranked high in the science and theory of his profession, and for several years prior to his decease was Professor of Materia Medica and Therapeutics in the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery, where he frequently delivered lectures and gave instruction upon those subjects. He was a man of conservative ideas, yet practical, decided in his opinions, and sought to elevate and build up the profession of which he was an honored member. His wife, Elizabeth Herr, a descendant of one of the pioneer families of Lancaster County, was born

Sept. 6, 1807, and died July 4, 1858. Their children are:

Henry B. Parry, D.D.S., was graduated from the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery in 1856, practiced his profession at Lancaster and Bellefonte, and succeeded to the drug business of his father, which he has carried on since 1860; John Ely Parry was a druggist at Columbia, Pa., and died in 1873, aged twenty-seven years; and Charlotte R. Parry.

CHAPTER XXIV.

IRON AND IRON MANUFACTURE IN LANCASTER COUNTY.

Charcoal Furnaces—Anthracite Furnaces—Rolling-Mills—Forges and Bloomeries.

Charcoal Furnaces.—The credit of having erected the first blast-furnace within the limits of Lancaster County (as then constituted), for the conversion of iron ore into pig metal, belongs to Curtis Grubb. He was a native of Wales, and was familiar with all the processes for converting the raw material into merchantable iron. He came to America about the time the county was organized (1729), and remained for some time at the furnaces erected by Branson & Nutt in Chester County.

His design in coming to America was evidently for the purpose of erecting iron-works, for he at once commenced to prospect for iron ore. In 1733 we find him along the banks of one of the branches of the Swatara, which flows along the northern base of the Blue Ridge Mountains. There he discovered an immense deposit of iron ore. He purchased two hundred acres of land from Mrs. Allen in 1733, received a patent for the same on the 2d day of November, 1734, and on the 6th day of November, 1734, he received a patent for two hundred acres adjoining this tract. In 1737 he received a patent for three hundred acres more adjoining his other land.

He erected a furnace on the first-mentioned tract in the year 1742, and called it Cornwall Furnace. From this date he commenced to purchase large tracts of mountain land until he owned several thousand acres well covered with wood, which he converted into charcoal. Mr. Grubb was not only fortunate in his discovery of this iron-ore deposit, but he also found in close proximity an abundance of limestone and a never-failing stream of water, which afforded power to blow a furnace at the edge of the ore deposit. The capacity of the Cornwall Furnace when erected was but five or six tons of iron per week.

On the 22d day of June, 1783, Peter Grubb died intestate, seized of certain lands in Lancaster and Lebanon Counties containing nine thousand six hundred and sixty-nine acres of land, upon which were Cornwall Furnace, Hopewell forges on Hammer Creek, and Cornwall ore mines and hills. He left two sons, Curtis and Peter. Under the then existing laws Curtis, being the oldest son, received two shares and Peter one share.

On the 22d day of June, 1783, Curtis Grubb, who then resided at Cornwall Furnace, gave to his son Peter one-sixth of Cornwall Furnace and the ore lands, one-third of Hopewell Forge, and one-sixth of all other lands in Lancaster County, except the mills on the Swatara, which he purchased from Michael Straw. These lands, furnace, and forges Peter Grubb, Jr., held in partnership with his father, Curtis, and his uncle, Peter Grubb, Sr.

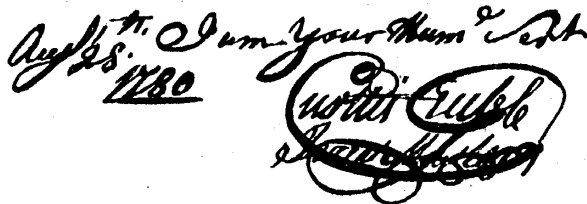

On the 19th day of October, 1765, the Grubbs purchased Hopewell Forges and lands from Jacob Giles, a merchant of Baltimore County, Md.

Curtis Grubb married first Ann Few. He went to Europe about the year 1765, and remained upon the continent for several years, then returned to America a few years before the commencement of the Revolution. He took an active part in the beginning of the war, and was made colonel of a battalion of militia. He was also made sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, elected a member of the General Assembly in 1775, 1777, 1778, and 1782. At Cornwall Furnace he manufactured salt-pans for the manufacture of salt for the army.

In the latter part of October, 1777, shortly after the battle of Germantown, his manager, Thomas Edwards (who was elected sheriff in 1782, 1783, and 1784), David Short, founder, John Campbell and John Forster, colliers, and John Peters, all in his employ, were called out in the classes of militia then sent to active duty in the field. To keep his furnace running he was compelled to apply to the Council for permission to retain these men until he had completed the number of salt-pans ordered.

Curtis Grubb was a high-spirited and a good officer. He was also a large slave-owner, holding twenty-five slaves in the year 1780. He died in the year 1788. Herewith is appended a copy of his autograph, which is a remarkable specimen of penmanship, and indicates the positive character of the man:

Autog. of Curtis Grubb
1780

In the division of Peter Grubb's estate Curtis received Cornwall Furnace and six thousand five hundred and twenty acres belonging to Cornwall. Peter Grubb, Jr., received Hopewell Forges and three thousand seven hundred and forty-one acres belonging with them.

On the 22d day of October, 1784, Jacob Graybill conveyed to Peter Grubb (Curtis' brother) two hundred and twelve and one-half acres, situated near the head of Big Chikis Creek, in Rapho and Warwick (now Penn) townships, and about three or four miles from Cornwall ore-banks, upon which he immediately afterwards built "Mount Hope Furnace." Being the owner of an undivided third of Cornwall estate, he made a will in 1784 (which was proved on the 21st day of January, 1786), by which he gave to his two sons, Burd Grubb and Henry Bates Grubb, his entire estate. They thus became owners of one-third of Cornwall. Burd Grubb, being the oldest son, received two-thirds of Mount Hope, and Henry Bates Grubb one-third. The Cornwall ore-banks were held as tenants in common, Curtis Grubb owning three-sixths, Robert Coleman (by purchase) one-sixth, and Burd and Henry Bates Grubb two-sixths.

On the 9th of October, 1798, Burd Grubb conveyed to his brother one-sixth of Mount Hope, and on May 4, 1798, he conveyed to his brother, Henry Bates Grubb, his entire interest, which came to him from his father. On May 12, 1798, Henry Bates Grubb conveyed to Robert Coleman half of Mount Hope and Hopewell Forges. On Nov. 30, 1802, Robert Coleman and Henry Bates Grubb entered into an agreement to divide the Mount Hope and Hopewell Forge properties. In this partition Hopewell Forges and two thousand three hundred and eleven acres and a half were allotted to Robert Coleman, and Mount Hope with two thousand three hundred and seven acres were allotted to Henry Bates Grubb.

Henry Bates Grubb died intestate on the 9th day of April, 1822, leaving a widow and six children, viz.: Edward B. Grubb, Clement B. Grubb, Henry Grubb, Alfred Bates Grubb, Mary S. Grubb, and Sarah E. Grubb. In the partition of Henry Bates Grubb's estate, Edward and Clement B. Grubb received Mount Hope Furnace and lands, and on Oct. 29, 1845, Clement B. and Mary Ann, his wife, conveyed his half of this property to his brother, Alfred Bates Grubb, for twenty-five thousand dollars. Burd Grubb, who was a physician, sold his half of Hopewell Forges to Henry Bates Grubb for twenty-nine thousand two hundred and sixty-six dollars.

The children of Edward B. Grubb were E. Burd Grubb, Henry B., Charles R., Euphemia P., Henry B., and Edward B. Grubb. They owned Mount Vernon Furnace, situated on the east bank of Conewago Creek, in Conoy township, about two miles above the mouth of that stream. In 1836 this property consisted of a forge, grist- and saw-mill, together with about four thousand acres of land, situated in Lancaster and Dauphin Counties. The Grubbs also erected upon this property Mount Vernon Furnace, now out of blast.

They also owned another large estate, partly in Lancaster and partly in York Counties, embracing about four thousand acres of land in York County, at and near the mouth of Codorus Creek, and an island in the river near the mouth of Codorus Creek, which contained in 1800 about forty acres, but which had increased to fifty-three in 1836, also twenty acres of ore land on Chestnut Hill.

The presence of ore upon this latter tract was known to Samuel Blunson as early as 1793. This tract came into possession of William Bennett (who was at one time one of the owners of Martie Furnace) shortly after the Revolution. He also owned the island at Codorus and other lands in York County. He sold the whole of this property to John W. Kittera, who was then a member of Congress from Lancaster County, and who sold to Thomas Neill, a merchant of York, who built Codorus Forge, and probably the furnaces also. On May 5, 1802, Mr. Neill sold the Codorus estate to Henry Bates Grubb. John Shippen, late president of the "Miners' National Bank" of Pottsville, Pa., was manager of Codorus Iron-Works in 1818-25. In 1822 a flood in Codorus Creek swept away the dam. The property is still owned by Mr. Grubb's heirs.

The iron-works are not in operation. Many thousand tons of ore have been taken out of their ore mine on Chestnut Hill. Peter Grubb, the brother of Curtis, was also a colonel of militia during the Revolutionary war. He married the daughter of Col. James Burd, and resided at Hopewell Forge, on Hammer Creek.

On the 26th day of September, 1785, Peter Grubb, Jr., son of Curtis Grubb, who then lived in Heidelberg, Berks Co., sold to Robert Coleman for £3500 in specie one-sixth part of Cornwall Furnace, one-third of Hopewell Forges, and one-sixth of all his other lands in Lancaster and Dauphin Counties. He reserved the right of hauling sufficient iron ore to supply the furnace purchased from John Patton, or any other furnace he might erect elsewhere, only one furnace to blow at one time. This furnace was then called Berkshire Furnace. Mr. Grubb seems to have rescinded his contract with John Patton to purchase his furnace, which, as it appears, was purchased by George Ege from the widow of John Patton. On the 1st day of May, 1788, Peter Grubb conveyed the ore right reserved and excepted by the deed of 1786 to George Ege, who afterwards owned the Reading Furnace.

Elizabeth Furnace was situated on "Furnace Run," a northwestern branch of Middle Creek, and about one mile and a half north of the Paxton road, then in Warwick but now in Elizabeth township. It was built in the year 1750 by Jacob Huber. He claimed to be the first and only German in America who knew how to make iron, and so recorded the fact upon a stone tablet placed in the stack over the mouth of the furnace.

The name of John Huber has come down through tradition as the person who erected this furnace, but this is clearly an error. Prior to and at the time this furnace was erected the land was owned by Jacob Huber, and he was the only one of the name classed as an iron-master upon the assessment-rolls for the year 1750, or in any of those made out in the decade which followed.

In the year 1757 the furnace and land belonging to it were purchased by Baron Henry William Steigel, Charles Stedman, and his brother, Alexander Stedman, who were wealthy and prominent men of Philadelphia. Steigel, who had been a wealthy baron in Germany, was probably acquainted with Huber in Europe, and may have owned iron-works there. He unquestionably had a knowledge of the business before he commenced manufacturing iron at this furnace. His skill in the manufacture of iron fully attests this fact. Prior to this purchase he had visited the works, and through him the Stedmans were induced to embark in the enterprise.

The site of the furnace was a wild and romantic spot, situated at the mouth of a ravine at the eastern base of the Blue Ridge Mountains, and well calculated to attract the attention of a man like Steigel. He and his partners erected a new furnace in the year 1757, and called it "Elizabeth Furnace," in honor of Elizabeth, the wife of Steigel, and Elizabeth, the wife of Alexander Stedman. Elizabeth township, which was erected in the same year from a part of Warwick, was also named by Steigel. At the time of the erection of this furnace there belonged to it but five hundred acres. They purchased one hundred and fifty acres from Jacob Huber situated in Lebanon township, and including the ore-banks. The mountains were covered with chestnut and oak timber, which were converted into charcoal. Two miles east from the furnace was an abundance of limestone.

Steigel and his partners added farm after farm to their original purchase, until they numbered ten thousand acres. Steigel manufactured the first wood stove in use in the province, which was in the shape of a box and had six plates. It was generally placed in a partition between two rooms, and heated both. Stoves similar to this had been in use in Holland and Germany prior to this date. The so-called "Franklin stove," invented by Benjamin Franklin, had been in use ten or twelve years before this, but it was merely an open fireplace.

Steigel improved his stove and made it a "ten-plate," one which has not been improved upon since. The castings were very heavy, and along the border between the top plate and the oven-doors were these words: "Baron Steigel is the man who knows how to make stoves." There were also a number of allegorical designs representing Cupid chasing angels, etc. These were raised figures and specimens of good workmanship. There are still a few of these stoves left among the farmers of the neighborhood.

The pig-iron cast at this furnace was converted into blooms or bar-iron at the forges on Hammer Creek, about four miles distant. In the year 1762 Steigel and the Stedmans purchased two hundred acres of land from Mary Norris, a daughter of James Logan, upon which they laid out the town of Manheim. In the same year Steigel purchased one-half of Charming Forge and the lands adjoining from Michael Rice and Garrett Brenner. This forge is situated in Heidelberg township, Berks Co., and about ten miles distant from Elizabeth Furnace. At Manheim he erected a large brick house and established glass-works, the products of which were of the rudest character, and were sold among the farmers of the neighborhood, although some of the glass found its way to the cities in the East and to Europe. This was the first successful attempt to manufacture glass in the United States. When Benjamin Franklin was in London, in the year 1768, he wrote to his son William, who was Governor of New Jersey, and quoted this passage, taken from the report of the Governor of the province to the crown, on the subject of the manufacture in the province, as follows:

"Pennsylvania has tried linen manufactory, but it is now dropped. There is a glass-house in Lancaster County, but it makes only a little coarse ware for the country neighbors."

These works were carried on after Steigel's failure by David Rittenhouse, the astronomer, and others. Steigel lived extravagantly and made a great display of his wealth, which his income did not warrant. He built several houses at Manheim. The lots there were not sold in fee, but were subject to ground-rent only, which did not yield much revenue.

The furnace and lands, together with the town lots in Manheim, were held by Steigel and the Stedmans as tenants in common. The former, however, purchased the Stedmans' interest in Manheim lots. In 1768, Steigel commenced borrowing large sums of money. In that year he borrowed three thousand pounds from Daniel Benezet, of Philadelphia, and in 1770 two thousand five hundred pounds from Isaac Cox, of Philadelphia, to whom he gave a mortgage upon Manheim lots. About this time he moved from the large stone mansion-house at Elizabeth Furnace to the town of Manheim. Daniel Benezet foreclosed his mortgage, and purchased Steigel's interest in the furnace and ten thousand acres of land, and Cox purchased the ground-rents in Manheim.

Steigel continued to manufacture glass after his interest in the furnace was sold. He made a brave and manly struggle to surmount his financial difficulties, but he had to succumb to the inevitable, and was thrown into prison for debt in Lancaster in 1772. The Legislature passed an act for his relief in 1774, and he returned to Manheim.

In 1779-80 he removed to and occupied the parsonage of the Warwick Lutheran Church, now the Brickerville Church, situated at Brickerville, near the old Paxton road. While there he occasionally preached and taught school. On the 17th day of April, 1780, he left the parsonage and went to his castle at Heidelberg, which he built upon a hill south of Shaefferstown. He did not remain in his castle many years, but moved to a place near the Schuylkill in Berks County, where he died. There is not a vestige of his Heidelberg castle remaining to mark the spot where it stood, and there is nothing but a few cinder-piles and out-houses left to show where stood Elizabeth Furnace.

Alexander Stedman and his brother Charles became financially embarrassed, and sold out their interest in the furnace property shortly before the Revolution to John Dickinson, Esq. In the year 1776, Robert Coleman leased these works for seven years, at an annual rent of £450. In the year 1780 he purchased John Dickinson's one-third interest (being the share of Alexander Stedman), and in the year 1784 he purchased Charles Stedman's share, being one-third of the whole. In the year 1794 he purchased Daniel Benezet's share, and also two-thirds in an oil- and grist-mill, near the furnace, for £2650, and thus became the sole owner of the furnace and ten thousand acres of land. On the 11th of April, 1785, he purchased from James Old Speedwell Forge and a thousand or more acres for £7000.

On the 26th day of September, 1785, as before stated, Mr. Coleman purchased the interest of Peter Grubb, Jr., in Cornwall ore-bank and furnace and Hopewell Forges. He purchased Campbellstown and three hundred and fifty-two acres from the same party in 1780. This laid along the old Paxton road in Lebanon County. On the 15th day of May, 1798, he purchased from Henry Bates Grubb, iron-master, one-half of Mount Hope Furnace, and one-half of Hopewell Forge, and five hundred acres of land. He also about the same year purchased Martie Forge.

He met with extraordinary success, and added rapidly to his landed possessions, and from his beginning here until the time he retired from active business his management of his extensive iron-works was excellent and eminently successful.

Robert Coleman was born in "Castle Fin," in Donegal County, Ireland, Nov. 4, 1748, and came to America in 1764. He went to Reading, and was there employed as a clerk by Mr. Read, the prothonotary, two years. He entered the service of Peter Grubb, brother of Curtis, as clerk at Hopewell Forge, on Hammer Creek, and remained there six months, when he went to Quitpahilla Forge, near Lebanon, then owned by James Old, who also owned Speedwell Forge, on Hammer Creek, and moved thence to Reading Furnace, on French Creek, near the Schuylkill. Robert Coleman went with him, and there was married to Ann, the daughter of James Old, Oct. 4, 1773, by the Rev. Thomas Barton, who resided in Lancaster. Mr. Coleman rented Salford Forge, near Norristown, where he remained three years, and then rented Elizabeth Furnace. He was an officer in one of the militia battalions of this county during the Revolution, a member of the General Assembly in 1783, and of the convention which framed the State Constitution in 1790. He was for twenty years one of the Common Pleas justices. In the year 1809 he removed to Lancaster, where he died Aug. 14, 1825, aged seventy-seven years. He died a millionaire. Elizabeth Furnace existed and flourished up to the period when anthracite coal came into use in the manufacture of pig-iron.

Martie Furnace was built in 1751-52 by Thomas Smith and his brother William, upon Furnace Run, in what is now Providence township, upon the farm of Isaac Diller, on the road leading from Lancaster to Burkholder's Ferry, upon the Susquehanna River. Thomas Smith was elected sheriff in 1752, and soon afterwards moved from his farm, situated near the village of New Providence, to Lancaster, where he lived expensively, so that he left the sheriff's office poorer than when he went into it. Although he persevered and carried on the iron business for some years, he never recovered from his embarrassment. In a letter dated Lancaster, Nov. 24, 1779, written by Edward Shippen to Col. Burd, he says that "Tom Smith, the sheriff (though he lived part of his time in the country), was almost ruined by the office." After becoming involved in the iron-works, he was imprisoned in jail for debt in 1769.

At the time when Smith and his brother built the furnace they also built Martie Forge, located on Pequena Creek, and about four miles below the furnace. They manufactured bar and refined iron, pig metal, and castings. They borrowed considerable sums of money from James Wallace and James Fulton, merchants, in Philadelphia.

The Smiths sold an interest in 1760 to William Bennett and Samuel Webb, of Maryland, and Ferguson McIlvain, who was the manager of the furnace. In the same year William Bennett and William Smith gave Wallace and Fulton a bill of sale of all the personal property at the furnace and forge, which included several slaves.

In 1761, William Smith, William Bennett, and Samuel Webb sold one-third of their interest to Wallace and Fulton, and on Nov. 8, 1764, they sold two-thirds to same parties. The firm then consisted of Thomas Smith, James Wallace, and James Fulton. They purchased from time to time twelve or fifteen farms, until they added to the furnace property about two thousand acres, and to the forge about the same quantity. On the 20th of January, 1769, James Webb, Jr., sheriff, advertised the property for sale, and described it as follows:

"A furnace, a good dwelling-house, store and computing-house, a large coal-house, eight dwelling-houses, grist-mill, smith- and carpenter-shop, six log stables, with four bays for hay, etc., a number of pot patterns and some flasks of ditto, stove moulds, etc., mine bank so convenient that one team can haul three loads per day, fifteen acres of meadow belonging to furnace.

"Forge four miles distant, with four fires, two hammers, wooden bellows, a dwelling-house, store and counting-house, with six dwelling-houses, two coal-houses for six months' stock, three stables, smith- and carpenter-shop, two acres of meadow land, and fifteen hundred cords of wood, at both places plenty of water in the driest season, two slaves, one a mulatto, a good forgerman, and the other a negro, late the property of Thomas Smith, James Wallace, and James Fulton."

This property was purchased at sheriff's sale in 1789 by Nicholas Dillo, of Lancaster township, — Harris, John Malcolm, Samuel Patterson, Esq., George Monroe, Esq., and John McCalmont, the last four named being of New Castle County, Del. On the 13th of February, 1778, they sold six hundred and fifty acres of the Martie Forge lands to Sebastian Graff, of Lancaster township, who sold half of this property to his brother, Andrew Graff, and by his will, dated in 1791, he gave his share to his sons, Sebastian and George.

On the 14th of August, 1801, Sebastian Graff, who then lived in Frederick County, Md., sold his interest to Robert Coleman and his nephew, Edward Brian, and on March 2, 1802, George Graff, son of Sebastian, and Andrew Graff sold their interest to the same purchasers.

Lynford Lardner, of Windsor Forge, Samuel Flowers, his brother-in-law, and David Jones, who lived on Pequea Creek, purchased Martie Furnace and Forge and a portion of the lands from Dillo, Harris, Malcolm, Patterson, Monroe, and McCalmont. They sold the forges to Robert Coleman.

Martie Furnace went out of blast during the Revolutionary war, and was never again blown in. All trace of the furnace is obliterated but a cinder-pile overgrown with weeds and grass upon the farm of Isaac Diller. But one little house, used by some of the employes of the furnace, now stands. The mill now owned by John Strohm, Jr., belonged to the old furnace property, and was then used for a grist-mill.

Mount Hope Furnace is located near the head of Big Chikis Creek, at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains, about four miles east from Cornwall Furnaces. The property is in Rapho and Penn townships. It was built in 1785 by Peter Grubb, Jr., and is now owned by Alfred B. Grubb. Stack, forty-nine by nine, hot blast, closed top; capacity, three thousand tons.

Colebrook Furnace is located near the head of Conewago Creek, one mile and a half north of the boundary line between Lancaster and Lebanon Counties, and eight miles southwest from "Mount Hope." The furnace and large stone mansion was built by Robert Coleman in 1792. The furnace has been out of blast for some years. There is a cultivated farm of two hundred and twenty-five acres and seven thousand acres of mountain land belonging to the property. John Benson is the manager. A railroad built by the Colemans has been completed (seventeen miles in length), which runs by the furnace and connects Cornwall Furnaces with the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad near Conewago Bridge. After the furnace having remained idle for many years, preparations are being made to "blow it in" again. A State road was made to run from this furnace to Anderson's Ferry, and also to Lancaster. Pig-iron was hauled to Martie Forges from this furnace.

Conawingo Furnace is located near the head-waters of Conawingo Creek, in the northern part of Drumore township. It was built by Michael, John, and George Withers in 1810. From them it passed to Good & Jenkins, and in 1828 to James Hopkins, Esq., of Lancaster, and Samuel Orrick, from whom it passed to James M. Hopkins and Charles Brooks, and finally to James M. Hopkins, who carried on the works successfully for thirty years. The furnace has gone to decay, and the water-power is used to drive a grist-mill.

James M. Hopkins, who is the son of James the celebrated lawyer, who resided in Lancaster, lives upon the property and occupies the old mansion. He is one of the oldest of the living iron-masters in the State. He has never held an official position, but when in the prime of life no person in the county had more friends or could wield more influence than he. For many years the specialty of this furnace was the manufacture of pig-iron used principally for car wheels, which were said to be the best in the State.

Conawingo Rolling-Mill was built by John Neff, Francis Kendig, Thomas Crawford, and George White, who, in August, 1813, purchased eighty-six acres of land adjoining Conawingo Furnace, which they held as tenants in common. They entered into partnership (to continue ten years) and built a rolling- and slitting-mill. Francis Kendig was a member of the Legislature in 1823. The mill has been out of existence for many years.

Mount Eden Furnace was located near the head of the west branch of Octorara Creek, in Eden township, about a mile north of the Great Valley road. It was built in 1812 by George, Michael, and John Withers. The latter managed this furnace, and the former managed Conawingo Furnace. The Mount Eden Furnace has been out of blast for some years.

Mount Vernon Furnace is located on the east bank of Conewago Creek, near the point where the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad crosses the stream. It was built in 1820, and is owned by the Grubbs. There was also a forge connected with these works, which was erected a number of years before the furnace was built. The works are not now in operation.

Anthracite Furnaces.—The "Sarah Ann" Furnace was located on the north side of Big Chikis Creek, at John Moore's grist-mill, and was built by John Gamber in 1839. At first it was a charcoal furnace, and changed afterwards to anthracite. It was afterwards owned by Governor Daniel R. Porter. It was named in honor of Gamber's wife. There is nothing left of the works but a portion of the casting-house, which is now used for a blacksmith-shop. John Gamber was the son of Jacob Gamber, who kept the hotel at Silver Spring. He moved to Middletown, Pa., and engaged in the iron business, but was not successful there.

Safe Harbor Furnace is located near the mouth of Conestoga Creek, in Conestoga township. It was built by Reeses, Abbott & Co., a few years after they erected the rolling-mill in 1846. It has not been in blast for some years.

The Shawnee Furnace was located on the northern bank of Shawnee Run, in the borough of Columbia. It was built by Robert and James Colvin in 1844-45. Their means were limited, and were unable to carry on the business. They were succeeded by James Myers and — Holmes in 1846, who, after running the works for several years, also failed. They were succeeded by Archibald Wright & Nephew, who erected Furnace No. 2 in 1854.

In the year 1851 the Chestnut Hill Iron Ore Company was incorporated, the members of which were Moses Taylor, W. S. Wetmore, Samuel Jandon, W. F. Havermayer, August Belmont, and Charles A. Heckscher, of New York City; Simon Cameron, of Middletown; Jacob M. Haldeman, of Harrisburg; Samuel Schock, of Columbia; James Mehaffey, of Marietta; Philip Dougherty, Dr. Edwin Haldeman, of Chikis; George N. Eckert, of Reading; Daniel Stine, of Lebanon; Henry H. Fry and Daniel Herr, of Columbia; and Archibald Wright, of Philadelphia. This company was organized solely to mine iron ore at the Big Ore bank at Chestnut Hill, three miles and one-half northeast from Columbia. Archibald Wright & Nephew became largely indebted to this company for ore, and they confessed judgment in the latter's favor. Wright & Nephew were sold out by the sheriff. The property brought a sufficient sum to pay the Chestnut Hill Iron Ore Company, but after the sale they discovered that Wright & Nephew had given a prior judgment, and to save themselves subsequently purchased the property, and also built Furnace No. 3, in 1868, and thus the name was changed from Shawnee Furnaces to the Chestnut Hill Iron Ore Company. No. 2 was remodeled in 1881, stack sixty-one by thirteen and one-half; No. 3, forty-five by seventeen; annual capacity of

No. 2 and No. 3, 20,000 tons. No. 1 has been torn down, and the company contemplate the erection of a modern furnace.

This company also own extensive ore-banks and lands in Maryland near the terminus of Bachman Valley Railroad, and the Big Ore Bank at Chestnut Hill.
