PREFATORY.

It is becoming and proper that the author should make a few statements prefatory to the following History of the Counties of Dauphin and Lebanon. It is no easy task to prepare history of any locality, and our labor in the preparation of this volume has not been a light one. We have endeavored to preserve as full a record of the history and biography of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon as the limits of a volume will allow. Much has been omitted because more important facts have been recorded. A large mass of material has come to our hands, and the difficulty has been what to preserve in these pages, and what to lay aside for future reference. Owing to the voluminous details of the war for the Union, which has increased the size of the volume from eight hundred pages, as promised by the publishers, to over nine hundred pages, we are reluctantly compelled to omit the record of Dauphin County families.

As to the biographical department, it will be found pretty full and complete. For whatever errors of omission or commission there may be in this direction, or in any of the local details, the author does not hold himself responsible—those who could have furnished the information are. Many communications or personal applications remain unanswered to this day.

We have endeavored to be correct in detail as to names and dates in local matters, and yet we fear that through the fault of those whose duty it was to furnish such data there may be errors, and we therefore throw the responsibility where it belongs.

The names of early warrantees of land and all assessment-lists we have printed as in the original, and also the early township officers. The orthography is varied, it is true, but we did not feel authorized to correct any, since even to-day members of the same family write their names differently.

In the records of the war for the Union we have faithfully endeavored to preserve all coming within our province, and hence have received the aid of a number of soldiers of that war. There were instances where companies or parts of companies were raised or drafted within the counties, but officered by men from other localities; we have failed to distinguish them. While many of the survivors are yet living, it would be well if the different posts of the Grand Army of the Republic would take immediate steps to preserve in permanent form records of all commands or portions of commands or individuals from the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon. They cannot better keep green the memory of their departed and valiant comrades.

As previously stated, we have endeavored to prove faithful to the trust reposed in us. If others can be more so, they have the opportunity. We have been candid in our opinions, in our views of men and measures, and what we have said, have abundant authority therefor. Not desiring to appear in the rôle of an historical iconoclast, we have been compelled to give facts even though they may have toppled over tradition and current history. We have not forced any opinion of our own without good and conclusive evidence.

Had it not been for the great energy of the publishers of this volume, it is doubtful if so comprehensive a work would ever have seen the light of day. They have fulfilled their part of the agreement made with the public, and we regret that their encouragement and success was not commensurate with that spirit of enterprise they have exhibited throughout the undertaking.

Our thanks are due to many kind and appreciative friends who gave us every assistance in their power. To one especially must we make due acknowledgments—our friend and co-laborer A. Boyd Hamilton,—frequently making use of his information as if it was our own.

WILLIAM H. EGLE.

GENERAL HISTORY.

CHAPTER I.

The Aborigines—Susquehannas—Shawanees—Customs and Character—Stone Implements—William Penn's Account of the Indians—Geographical Names.

WE wish it was possible to give an accurate and lucid account of the first inhabitants of this locality. Unfortunately much—very much—of the history of the aborigines is made up from the details of unreliable parties, and yet among the meagre data thus given, some few facts are gleaned which leave us not wholly in the dark. Tradition is the main source of supply, and we all know how little of that can be depended upon for verity. Fortunately the members of the Society of Jesus, the banner of the cross in their hands, during the seventeenth century, preserved not only a record of their own labors in the cause of their divine Master, but somewhat concerning the history of a race for whose spiritual salvation they braved death itself. From their Relations we glean a few facts important to us as to the earliest of the aborigines who lorded it over this section we now claim as our domain.

Prior to 1600, but how long before is not known, the Susquehannas were seated upon the river of that name. By the Relations we find that they had previously come into collision with the Mohawks, then the most eastern of the Iroquois, by which in a war that lasted for ten years the former nearly exterminated their enemy. According to Capt. John Smith, who explored the Chesapeake and its tributaries, the Susquehannas were then, in 1608, still at war with the tribe referred to. In 1633 they were at war with the Algonquin tribes on the Delaware, maintaining their supremacy by butchery. They were friendly to the Dutch, and when the Swedes arrived on the Delaware, in 1638, they renewed the friendly intercourse begun by the former. According to Hazard, they purchased lands of the ruling tribe, and thus secured their friendship. Southward, also, they carried the terror of their arms, and from 1634 to 1644 they waged war on the Yaomacoes, the Piscataways, and Patuxents, and were so troublesome that in 1642 Governor Calvert, by proclamation, declared them public enemies.

When the Hurons, in Upper Canada, in 1647, began to sink under the fearful blows dealt by the Five Nations, the Susquehannas sent an embassy to offer them aid against the common enemy. Nor was the offer one of little value, for the Susquehannas could put into the field one thousand three hundred warriors, trained to the use of fire-arms and European modes of war by three Swedish soldiers whom they had obtained to instruct them. Before interposing, however, they began a negotiation, and sent an embassy to Onondaga to urge the cantons to peace. The Iroquois refused, and the Hurons, sunk in apathy, took no active steps to secure the aid of the friendly Susquehannas. That tribe, however, maintained its friendly intercourse with its European neighbors, and in 1652, Sawahegeh, and other sachems, in presence of a Swedish deputy, ceded to Maryland all the territory from the Patuxent River to Palmer's Island, and from the Choptauk to the northeast branch north of Elk River.

Four years later, the Iroquois, grown insolent by their success in almost annihilating their kindred tribes north and south of Lake Erie, provoked a war with the Susquehannas, plundering their hunters on Lake Ontario. During that year the smallpox, that terrible scourge of the aborigines, broke out in their town, sweeping off many, and seriously enfeebling the nation. War had now begun in earnest with the Five Nations, and though the Susquehannas had some of their people killed near their town, they in turn pressed the Cayugas so hard that some of them retreated across Lake Ontario to Canada. They also kept the Senecas in such alarm that they no longer ventured to carry their peltries to New York, except in caravans escorted by six hundred men, who even took a most circuitous route. A law of Maryland, passed May 1, 1661, authorized the Governor of that province to aid the Susquehannas.—Egle's History of Pennsylvania.

Smarting under constant defeat, the Five Nations solicited French aid, but in April, 1663, the Western cantons raised an army of eight hundred men to invest and storm the fort of the Susquehannas. This fort was located about fifty miles from the mouth of the river. The enemy embarked on Lake Ontario, according to the French account, and then went overland to the Susquehanna. On reaching the fort, however, they found it well defended on the river side, and on the land side with two bastions in European style, with cannon mounted and connected by a double curtain of large trees. After some trifling skirmishes the Iroquois had recourse to stratagem.

They sent in a party of twenty-five men to treat of peace, and ask provisions to enable them to return. The Susquehannas admitted them, but immediately burned them all alive before the eyes of their countrymen. The force of the Iroquois consisted of one thousand six hundred warriors, while that of the Susquehannas only one hundred. On the retreat of the Iroquois, the Susquehannas pursued them with considerable slaughter.

After this the war was carried on in small parties, and Susquehanna prisoners were from time to time burned at Oneida, Onondaga, Seneca, and Cayuga. In the fall of 1669, the Susquehannas, after defeating the Cayugas, offered peace, but the Cayugas put their ambassador and his nephew to death, after retaining him five or six months,—the Oneidas having taken nine Susquehannas, and sent some to Cayuga, with forty wampum belts to maintain the war.

At this time the great war chief of the Susquehannas was one styled Hochitagete, or Barefoot, and raving women and crafty medicine men deluded the Iroquois with promises of his capture and execution at the stake, and a famous medicine man of Oneida appeared after death to order his body to be taken up and interred on the trail leading to the Susquehannas, as the only means of saving that canton from ruin. Towards the summer of 1672 a body of forty Cayugas descended the Susquehanna in canoes, and twenty Senecas went by land to attack the enemy in their fields; but a band of sixty Andasté, or Susquehanna boys, the oldest not over sixteen, attacked the Senecas and routed them, killing one brave and taking another. Flushed with victory, they pushed on to attack the Cayugas, and defeated them also, killing eight, and wounding with arrow, knife, and hatchet fifteen or sixteen more, losing, however, fifteen or sixteen of their gallant band. At this time the Susquehannas were so reduced by war and pestilence that they could muster only three hundred warriors.

In 1675, according to the Relations Inédites and Colden, the tribe was completely overthrown, but unfortunately we have no details whatever as to the forces which effected it or the time or manner of their utter defeat. The remnant, too proud to yield to those with whom they had long contended as equals, and by holding the land of their fathers by sufferance to acknowledge themselves subdued, yet too weak to withstand the victorious Iroquois, forsook the river bearing their name, taking up a position on the western borders of Maryland, near the Piscataways. Shortly after they were accused of the murder of some settlers, apparently slain by the Senecas. They sent five of their chiefs to the Maryland and Virginia troops, under Col. John Washington, great-grandfather of Gen. George Washington, and Maj. Thomas Truman, who went out in pursuit. Although coming as deputies, and showing the Baltimore medal and certificate of friendship, these chiefs were cruelly put to death. The enraged Susquehannas then began a terrible border war, which was kept up until their utter destruction.

When the founder of Pennsylvania came to this country there was not one of the Susquehannas dwelling in their ancient seat; all had disappeared. Some few vagabond families of the Iroquois remained, occupying the deserted towns of their conquered and expelled enemies. These were the individuals representing themselves as Conestogas,—not by blood, but simply by occupation, a fact to which we shall again refer. They were Cayugas and Senecas.

Whether by persuasion we know not, but certainly by permission of the Iroquois came the Shawanese to Pennsylvania. Their origin was Southern. They probably belonged to the Algonquins, as they spoke the same language. From the most authentic information it appears that the basin of the Cumberland River was the residence of the Shawanese before the settlement of the Europeans on the continent, and that they connected the different sections of the Algonquin families.

At the treaty of 1683 the Shawanese were a party to that covenant, and they must have been considered a very prominent band from the fact of their having preserved the treaty in their own possession or keeping, as we are informed that at a conference held many years after, that nation produced this treaty on parchment to the Governor of the Province. It was the custom with the Indian tribes who made a joint treaty with the whites to commit the preservation of the papers containing the treaty, etc., to such of the bands as were considered most to be trusted. From the best authority, it appears that as early as 1673 upwards of seventy families of that nation removed from the Carolinas and occupied some of the deserted posts of the Susquehannas. Others of the tribe soon followed.

In the year 1698, some Shawanese applied to the proprietary government of Pennsylvania for permission to settle on the Conestoga and Pequea Creeks, under Opassah, their principal chief. Here they remained a quarter of a century, when, with other families settled on the Swatara, Paxtang, and the Susquehanna streams on the east, they branched off to the westward. As early as 1728 we find the Shawanese as far west as the Ohio, and by the middle of the eighteenth century the entire tribe had settled on the branches of that river. In the year 1732 the number of fighting braves of that nation in Pennsylvania amounted to seven hundred. The Shawanese, says Colden, were the most restless of all the Indian tribes. In 1745, he says, one tribe of them had gone to New Spain. This band of four hundred and fifty, who located themselves on the head-waters of the Mobile River, probably never returned to Pennsylvania.

The latter were merely residents on the Susquehanna by sufferance, not only of the whites, but the Five Nations of New York, and yet they became the most perfidious, and to them—their savage brutality, their fiendish atrocity—are we indebted for most all the bloody transactions of a later period.

In complexion, our uncivilized predecessors were of tawny color, inclining to red, which, differing from the complexion of every other portion of the human family, seems peculiar to most, if not all, the aborigines. Their cheek-bones were high and prominent; their eyes widely separated; their noses usually broad, even when curved in outline; and the ordinary cast of their features was coarse and often inexpressive. The men were generally tall, straight, well-proportioned, and hardly ever corpulent or in any manner deformed. The women were too apt to be short and clumsy; their features were seldom delicate or handsome; and what feminine graces they had were soon obliterated by hard bodily labor combined with mental and moral degradation. The beautiful Indian maiden was only a myth or the dream of the poet. The mode of life of the men, and perchance their natural constitution, gave them a power of enduring fatigue and privation such as no European could rival. When necessary they would hunt for days together while suffering from hunger, or perform long journeys through the forests with no other refreshment than a little parched corn and water.

For subsistence, the Indian depended much less upon agriculture than upon either fishing or hunting. They confined themselves chiefly to the raising of beans, corn, and tobacco. The corn and beans were cultivated by women and children, the tobacco alone was thought worthy of the labor and attention of the men. The women of an ordinary family would commonly raise in a single season two or three heaps of corn, each containing twelve, fifteen, or twenty bushels. The corn was spread day after day in the sun, carefully shielded from the rain or dew, and when in this way sufficiently prepared was buried in the earth, and thus preserved for the winter's subsistence.

Hunting and fishing were perchance the chief dependence for food. The forests were filled with animals, some of them beasts of prey, others suitable for food, others valuable on account of their furs. Flocks of wild turkeys roamed through the woods, partridges and pheasants abounded, both in the woods and open country, and at certain times of the year the pigeons collected in such numbers that their flight seemed to obscure the light of the sun. The ponds, creeks, and rivers swarmed with water-fowl. The river Susquehanna was alive with fish, and every spring great numbers of shad, rock-fish, salmon, and perch ascended the stream, furnishing a seasonable supply to the natives when their provisions were exhausted by a long and severe winter.

The clothing of the natives was composed of skins cured so as to be soft and pliable, and sometimes ornamented with paint and beads manufactured from shells. It may be stated in this connection that very little is known of the process used by the Indians to prepare bear- and deer-skins for shoes and clothing. Loskiel says, "Their shoes are of deer-skin, without heels, some being very neatly made by the women. Their skins are tanned with the brains of deer, which make them very soft; some leave the fur upon the skin, and such fur shoes are remarkably light and easy." The buffalo robes sold by our furriers as tanned by the Indians are softer than those that are tanned by civilized people. Occasionally the women decked themselves in mantles made of feathers overlapping each other, as on the back of the fowl, and presenting an appearance of fantastic gayety which no doubt prodigiously delighted the wearers. Their dress consisted usually of two articles, a leather shirt, or under-garment, ornamented with fringe, and a skirt of the same material fastened around the waist with a belt and reaching nearly to the feet. Their hair they dressed in a thick, heavy plait, which fell down upon the neck; and they sometimes ornamented their heads with bands of wampum or with a small cap.

The men went bareheaded, with their hair fantastically trimmed each according to his own fancy. One warrior would have it shaved on one side of the head and long on the other. Another might be seen with his scalp completely bare, except a strip two or three inches in width running from the forehead over to the nape of the neck. This was kept short, and so thoroughly stiffened with paint and bear's grease as to stand up straight, after the fashion of a cock's comb or the crest of a warrior's helmet. The legs were covered with leggins of dressed deer-skin, and the lower part of the body was protected by the breech-cloth, usually called by the early settlers Indian breeches. Moccasins, that is, light shoes of soft-dressed leather, were common to both sexes, and, like other portions of the attire, were many times tastefully ornamented with embroidery of wampum. The men often dispensed with their leggins, especially in summer; while in winter they protected themselves against the bleak air by adding to their garments a mantle of skins. The male children ran about until they were ten or twelve years old in a state of nature; the girls were provided with an apron, although of very economical dimensions.

As to their houses and furniture, their food and its preparation, amusements, courtship and marriage, we shall not refer. There are certain peculiarities characteristic of the Indian which are interesting to dwell upon, but these must be left to another occasion. A few remarks, however, upon their moral life may explain their future conduct towards the white settlers. The Indian of to-day, however, is a fair type of those savages who lived in our locality two centuries ago. We dislike to picture vice in all its horrid details, and so much that is inherent in the savage nature of the aborigine we shall refrain from referring.

Although marriage was not always recognized among their rites, unfaithfulness was looked upon as a crime, and even death was frequently inflicted for this offense by the irate husband. Licentiousness was common, and the man who looked upon the waywardness of his wife, visiting her with blows and wounds, may have been the most debauched creature in the tribe. No female ever ventured alone, for bestiality was the besetting sin of the race. Uncleanliness was in all their manners. Impatient of bodily labor, and indisposed to thought, they naturally turned for pleasure to those coarse gratifications of the senses which were within reach. They were indolent when not strongly incited to exertion; they were gluttonous when supplied with an abundance of food, and they became intemperate as soon as the means of intemperance were placed within their reach. They were revengeful by nature; custom had made vengeance with them a matter of duty and honor. They had little idea of truth; they were natural-born liars, and as a result were the meanest of robbers. As for murder and arson they had no compunctions of conscience; there were no refined feelings in their nature. Selfish in the extreme, they never realized what was ennobling. Their virtues, if they had any, were lost in the multitude of vices. Their ideas of religion were crude and indefinite. With the advent of the pious Moravian and faithful Jesuit, new conceptions of a divinity crept into their obtuse minds, but it is doubtful if they ever had or held the doctrines imparted to them of a Great Spirit, and the existence of the soul after death. Their sordid and supremely selfish natures could not raise their thoughts so high, for had such been the case there would be some redeeming qualities in the moral life of the Indian.

We shall close our account of the aborigines with such reference to the weapons of war and domestic implements employed by them as may be of value and interest. No field presents to the ethnologist a greater variety of material than that of the Susquehanna, and the illustrations herewith given and described were all found within the present limits of the county of Dauphin. The abundance of these relics of the Stone Age scattered upon the shores of the rivers, its islands, and for many miles inward, show unmistakable evidences of this section of country being in possession for many centuries of a powerful nation.

The number of stone implements were far larger than many persons would suppose. Prior to the coming of the white man, with the exception of pottery and pipes, both made of clay, and wooden bowls made of the knots of trees, all articles for domestic use, ornament, and for war, were formed of stone. Some are quite ingenious, and with all the improved machinery of the present day, we doubt if as fine specimens of arrowheads could be produced as those in our possession made by Indian arrowhead-makers of the centuries ago.

Hammer stones were possibly the first stone implements.

Arrowheads are the most abundant of all stone implements to be found in this section. Few fields there are whose upturned sod does not reveal arrowheads either entire or fragmentary, and especially along the bottoms of the creeks are these specimens of the Indian arrow-maker to be found. They vary in size from one-half an inch to four inches in length, composed of quartz, flint, limestone, chalcedony, and other hard yet fragile minerals. Few are perfectly formed, being varied to suit ideas of the makers as to their form and shape. With the exception of two or three points on the first range of the Kittatinny Mountains, and among the bowlders along the Conewago, we have not been able to discover the workshop of the arrow-maker. Limestone is abundant in the county, and juttied out everywhere, while the pebbles of the Susquehanna furnished red and yellow jasper, which seem to have been selected as much for their beauty as for their utility. The art of arrow-making had been reduced to a perfect system, and were shaped in accordance with the taste and fancy of the maker. As Professor Brunner aptly says, "It was as easy for them to chip a large arrowhead down to a small one without breaking it as it is for a Caucasian to whittle a stick down to a tooth-pick." As to their manufacture, the authority just quoted says, "The first step was to select a solid stone of uniform density, and by trial discover which way the stone chips. Flints do not chip equally well in all directions. The second step is flaking or breaking large chips off a rock." The stone celt for chisel and hammer, it is true, bore a conspicuous part in the instruments used in forming the larger implements of war, agriculture, and those employed in the preparation of food, namely, mortars and pestles, and to a certain extent in shaping the arrowhead and articles above mentioned. Yet, says a good authority,¹ in the examination of a collection of hundreds of chips and flakes, there was not found the first one bearing the marks of the celt upon the face or edge, showing that the application of instruments of bone and wood, combined with friction, were the means by which they were dressed into shape. This method has been experimented upon very successfully by Professor Brunner with a block of chalcedony and a hard, dry piece of hickory. "For the large and even middle-sized chipped implements the Indians must have tied a bone on a heavy stick and used it as a lever, otherwise it is difficult to conceive how they could have obtained a sufficient amount of pressure—direct physical force would have been inadequate."

To undertake to describe a collection of these points is not in our province, nor would it repay the reader. As previously stated, they were made of different designs, such as the fancy of the arrowhead-maker suggested. The heads were attached to the end of reed shafts or split hickory, about two feet in length, by means of a cord, and sprung from a bow in such a manner that made them a most formidable instrument of warfare. They were used in the chase, and so expert were the aborigines that it was rarely they missed their object. The arrowheads of larger size were attached to sticks and used for spearing fish. Loskiel says, "Little boys are even frequently seen wading in shallow brooks, shooting small fishes with their bows and arrows."

Knives includes diverse forms, some of which become allied to the arrowheads produced by chipping, and thus used as a saving of labor and material. Upon a close comparison these may be readily distinguished from the arrowheads, the former being beveled on one side to form a sharp-cutting edge and point, while the latter, unfinished, is full in the centre and beveled both ways, both being flat on the lower side. The leaf-shaped knife presents the finest appearance, vary little in thickness, and are from two to five and six inches in length. Those found in this section are made of limestone or slate, although quartzite and jasper are not uncommon. There is a much larger class found along the banks of the Susquehanna and Swatara and adjoining fields which resemble in shape those just alluded to, and may be properly called bark-knives, and used no doubt in barking trees and making canoes, as a large percentage of canoes were made of that material. They were also employed in "digging out" the knots used for bowls and buckets. It may also be stated that some of the knives were stemmed and fastened to a handle. They were frequently used for "sticking beasts" or stabbing.

Line-Sinkers, or Pendants, are abundant on the islands in the Susquehanna, notably at the head of Conewago Falls, at Duncan's Island, mouth of the Juniata, or farther up, at Clemson's Island, noted fishing-grounds, until the past fifty years. Some of the sinkers are made square, with rounded corners, well polished, having light notches on two edges in which to attach the cord. They are usually from one to three or four inches square, by one-fourth to five-eighths of an inch thick, composed principally of limestone and slate, and others with deeper grooves in the common river pebble. The latter stone, with fragments of pot-stone vessels used for the same purpose, are generally perforated either in the end or one side. These sinkers were used in connection with long lines, to which the hooks were attached by shorter ones on the same principle of our present manner of out-line fishing, by being attached certain distances apart, and cast from the shore with heavier sinkers or anchor-stone at the outer end of the line, the whole being drawn back at certain intervals by the angler. That their fish-hooks were made of bone we have no doubt, and in a collection of implements gathered and sent to England thirty years ago were two rude fish-hooks made of the bone of some animal.

Borers or drills are generally lanceolate and very delicate, and it is surprising so many are found in so perfect a condition. The material of which they are made is usually limestone. It is astonishing with what neatness and accuracy these small and delicately-made perforators do the work, even in the hardest kind of stone. That they, too, were used by experienced workers of stone, there is no doubt, as we have many instances where the slightest carelessness on the part of the mechanic would have spoiled the design, especially where they appear in scepters, as some of them present but an eighth of an inch of stone between the hole and the face of implements, which is one reason, no doubt, so many are found broken in use. The borers were fastened to a stick like arrowheads and whirled around with the hand, or a bow and string. The perforating no doubt completed the specimen, no matter to what class it belonged, as there are specimens of every class of implements to be found in this section perfect in every respect except to the perforated part. These also appear in different stages of completion, from a slight depression made by the point of the borer to a distance almost completing the work.

Of all the implements none are equal in beauty of design and workmanship to the stone scepter, or drilled ceremonial implement, which are seldom found whole; half scepters are frequently found. These are invariably broken through the eye, or perforated part of the stone, done most likely in use, as they are as a general thing delicately made. One of the finest we have seen is ovoid in shape, and truncate at base and top. The sides are beveled to form a very accurate edge; the groove is through the long diameter of the implement, and shows concentric slight grooves made by the boring implement. One of the raised edges which runs parallel with the groove is acute, the other truncate. The greatest length of this implement is four inches, and its greatest breadth three and a half inches; diameter of groove five-eighths of an inch. The material has not been determined.

It was customary among all aboriginal tribes to record the most memorable events by notches in wood or stone, designating the importance of it by the size of the notch, thus the record of victory by one deeper and more durable than those recording time and the less important events. These calendars are frequently met with, and often appear upon ornaments of bone, wood, and stone, of which we have several in our collection.

Their axes were generally made of a hard rock, such as diabase, sandstone, etc., by taking any fragment of rock obtained by striking one rock upon another, when after trimming it down to a desirable shape, ground down all the irregularities by some process of abrasion. This they could have done by rubbing the stone to be polished on a sandstone, or by using sand as abrasive material upon any hard stone. When it is considered how slow a process this must have been, some idea may be formed of the unbounded patience it must have required to grind the larger axes into shape.

The question is often asked, says Professor Brunner, with a great deal of emphasis, how did the Indians cut wood with these axes? The Indian could not use his stone axe for the same purpose for which we use the steel axe. Loskiel says, "Their hatchets [or axes] were wedges made of hard stone, six or eight inches long, sharpened at the edge and fastened to a wooden handle. They were not used to fell trees, but only to peel them or to kill their enemies." The next question that arises is how did they fell their trees? Loskiel answers again, "Formerly, when they had no axes but those made of stone as above mentioned, they used to kindle a fire around large trees and burn them so long till they fell; then by applying fire to different parts of the stem and branches, they divided them into smaller pieces for use." "Formerly they kindled a fire by turning or twisting a dry stick with great swiftness upon a dry board, using both hands." They kept their fires constantly burning in their wigwams. It is difficult to imagine how happy the Indians must have been when they first obtained axes from the traders or settlers, with which they were enabled to manipulate their wood and erect their wigwams more expeditiously and satisfactorily. The axes were used also to girdle the trees and take off the bark which they used to cover their huts. In making their canoes they would cover the sides of the log with ground or other material which was constantly kept wet, and would burn out the middle. The axes are supposed to have been employed to remove the charcoal in this operation. These are the purposes for which it is generally conceded that the stone axes were adapted, but the variety of their implements was comparatively small, and they might have used their axes for various other objects. The size of the axes varied. The one from which our illustration was made is nearly eleven inches in length by three and a half inches in width, while others scarcely one-third the length have been preserved.

The pestle was used in the grinding of corn, and are of varied lengths, the original of the one shown being about eighteen inches in length, formed of hard, uncrystallized rock, perfectly smooth and cylindrical, each end nicely tapering. Implements of this character were not used especially for pounding in a mortar, but for rubbing soaked or green corn on a flat stone into a pulp, which was then moulded and baked in the ashes. Other pestles there were which were used for pounding, the blunt ends denoting this.

The tomahawk of the aborigine was simply a small-sized axe finely polished, to which a handle was firmly tied, and carried by its owner in his belt. That implement, which we associate with the atrocity of the red man, was not a stone instrument but one of iron, secured from the trader or early settler in exchange for skins. In this connection we must refer to the hatchets found in many localities frequented by the savages and known in the Indian trade as "Biscay Axes." They were of several sizes, the largest about eight inches long by three inches across the face, weighed about three pounds; the smaller, about six inches long by three inches across the face, weighed one and a half pounds. The largest size was the squaw axe, used in gathering firewood, the smaller was the tomahawk of the warrior, and carried habitually when traveling or when on the war-path. In battle they were used at close quarters, and surprising stories are told of the accuracy with which they could be thrown at distances of several yards. In certain localities where Indian towns have been destroyed by fire great numbers are found. So plenty were they when the country was new, that the pioneers who were fortunate enough to have a town site of this character on their farms had iron sufficient to shoe their oxen and horses and to supply other necessary wants for several years. As late as 1879 there were found no less than six in one farm scrap heap on the site of a Shawanese town along the Susquehanna. They are generally of the model shown in our engraving, and almost invariably have the three cross trade-marks on each side. Specimens of these there is good reason for believing have been buried two hundred years, somewhat corroded, but just as serviceable as when new. Many have not a particle of steel, and never had; others are well steeled and finely tempered. So far as we are able to judge there was no difference in model or finish, whether furnished by the Dutch, English, or French traders. Henry Fleet, an English trader on the Potomac in 1632, met some Indians from the direction of Lake Erie, called HERECHKEENES. He says, "There came from another place seven lusty men with strange attire; they had red fringe, and two of them had beaver coats, which they gave me. Their language was haughty, and they seemed to ask me what I did there, and demanded to see my truck, which upon view they scorned. They had two axes such as Capt. Kirk traded in Cannida, which he bought at Whits of Wapping, and there I bought mine, and think I had as good as he."

Within the brief compass of a local history it is impossible to allude at length to all the implements used by the natives. They had mortars, barking tools, polishing-stones, scalping-knives, digging tools without numbers, and relics have been discovered the use of which is unknown. Bowls, pots, and kettles were as essential in the Indian household as in that of the white man. Before they purchased these from the traders or took them in payment for land they were obliged to make them in their own peculiar way. All crockery is fragile, and for this reason only small pieces of Indian earthenware can be found. The most notable collection is that in possession of the Wyoming Historical and Geological Society at Wilkes-Barré, and concerning which Dr. Harrison Wright has recently given a description. We have had pieces sufficient, if properly placed together at the time, to make a large pot holding two quarts of water. Portions of vessels made of soapstone are to be found, but we have never discovered or known of one entire to be found in this region.

The Indians had their games, the principal of which was quoits, and we give an illustration. One secured on Duncan's Island. At one time these were quite numerous, but no notice being taken of them they seem to have disappeared altogether. They are circular or of disc shape, with a cavity on the upper side for the thumb, the lower side round, and thus well fitted to the hand for throwing.

Rock carvings, although to be found, are not numerous. On the western shore of the Susquehanna, opposite the city of Harrisburg, one-fourth of a mile below the Cumberland Valley Railroad bridge, there was, prior to the construction of the Northern Central railway, a cave opening to the river, on the walls of which we saw quite a number of rude figures, somewhat like those on the sculptured rock in the Susquehanna near Safe Harbor. It is to be regretted that some archæologist had not discovered them ere the age of improvement completely obliterated the spot, and preserved to us a record thereof.

About 1850, George Zimmerman, of Middletown, found in a bed of gravel on the east bank of the Susquehanna, below the mouth of Swatara Creek, a fine specimen of Indian carving. The material is brown slate, and represents a portion of the head and face of an Indian; size, seven-eighths of an inch in diameter and half an inch thick at the ears, from which it tapers to the forehead and chin, somewhat in the shape of a half-moon, having high cheek bone resemblance, with deep-set eyes and Roman nose; in every particular a faithful type of the Indian countenance. It is the work of a skillful artist, and in perfect state of preservation.

One of the most interesting characteristics and study of the aborigines is that of ornamentation. Nothing was more sublime and elevating in the eyes of an aged savage whose lease of usefulness was about to expire than the sight of their warriors equipped and painted. This habit was indulged in in various ways by ornaments of stone, bone, shells, wood, feathers, and beads for the festivities of camp life, while no warrior was known to enter upon the chase, the war-path, or any important council of the tribe of which he was a member without first undergoing a process of ornamentation, in which the "war-paint" was applied to face, breast, and arms in such manner as to give them the most hideous appearance, red predominating, which usually consisted of a mineral substance resembling ochre, pulverized and mixed with bear's oil in small mortars made for the purpose. The paint thus mixed was kept ready for use in little cup-shaped implements of stone, or in jars of pottery, illustrations of both of which are given.

Ornaments of brown polished stone have been found in numerous places along the Susquehanna. Some of these are cone-shaped, round, flat, and oval, all pierced with holes, showing conclusively to us that they were worn around the neck on strings. One shown in our engraving, found at the mouth of Clark's Creek, is of peculiar shape, and worn by married women as evidence of fecundity. Slabs of stones or tablets, varying from two to three inches in width by four to six inches in length, and one-fourth inch in thickness, were also used. Some of these have ground edges, while others are scalloped. Upon them are curious designs consisting of straight and cross lines, oblique, round, and lines of triangular form. The representation of a saltier is not uncommon, as also on their pottery, which, we are satisfied, was simply an accidental resemblance, although it must be confessed that designs somewhat heraldic descended from one chief to another, an insignia not of royalty, but of family renown and valor, and why not?

William Penn, in his letter to the Free Society of Traders in London, dated at "Philadelphia, the 16th of the 6th month, called August, 1683," thus refers to the natives. His estimate of their moral character in some respects differs widely from our own. His was made from a brief acquaintance of a few months, our own deduced from the general record of the race covering the intervening period since his day :

"The nutices I shall consider in their persons, language, manners, religion, and government, with my sense of their original. For their persons, they are generally tall, straight, well-built, and of singular proportion; they tread strong and clever, and mostly walk with a lofty chin. Of complexion, black, but by design, as the Gypsies in England. They grease themselves with bear's fat clarified, and using no defence against sun or weather, their skin must needs be swarthy. Their eye is little and black, not unlike a straight-looking Jew. The thick lip and flat nose, so frequent with the East Indians and blacks, are not common to them, for I have seen as comely European-like faces among them, of both, as on your side the sea; and truly an Italian complexion hath not much more of the white, and the noses of several of them have as much of the Roman.

"Their language is lofty, yet narrow; but, like the Hebrew, in signification full; like short-hand, in writing, one word serveth in the place of three, and the rest are supplied by the understanding of the hearer; imperfect in their tenses, wanting in their moods, participles, adverbs, conjunctions, interjections. I have made it my business to understand it, that I might not want an interpreter on any occasion, and I must say that I know not a language spoken in Europe that hath words of more sweetness, or greatness in accent and emphasis than theirs; for instance, Ukocokon, Bunocoot, Orikon, Shak, Marian, Poquesien; all which are names of places, and have grandeur in them. Of words of sweetness, Aana, is mother; Isian, a brother; Netap, friend; Uyueord, very good; Pine, bread; Metsa, eat; Matta, no; Hatta, to have; Puyo, to come; Sepassia, Passijon, the names of places; Tumane, Secome, Meanse, Seaterens, are the names of persons; if one asks them for anything they have not, they will answer, Matta ne katta, which to translate is, not I have, instead of I have not.

"Of their customs and manners there is much to be said; I will begin with children; so soon as they are born they wash them in water; and while very young, and in cold weather to chuse, they plunge them in the rivers to harden and embolden them. Having wrapt them in a clout, they lay them on a straight, thin board, a little more than the length and breadth of the child, and swaddle it fast upon the board to make it straight; wherefore all Indians have flat heads; and thus they carry them at their backs. The children will go, very young, at nine months commonly; they wear only a small clout round their waist till they are big; if boys, they go a fishing, till ripe for the woods; which is about fifteen; then they hunt; and after having given some proofs of their manhood, by a good return of skins, they may marry; else it is a shame to think of a wife. The girls stay with their mothers, and help to hoe the ground, plant corn and carry burdens; and they do well to use them to that young, which they must do when they are old; for the wives are the true servants of the husbands; otherwise the men are very affectionate to them.

"When the young women are fit for marriage, they wear something upon their heads, for an advertisement, but so, as their faces are hardly to be seen, but when they please. The age, they marry at, if women, is about thirteen, and fourteen; if men, seventeen and eighteen; they are rarely older.

"Their houses are mats, or barks of trees, set on poles, in the fashion of an English barn, but out of the power of the winds; for they are hardly higher than a man; they lie on reeds, or grass. In travel they lodge in the woods, about a great fire, with the mantle of duffils they wear by day wrapt about them, and a few boughs stuck around them.

"Their diet is maize, or Indian corn, divers ways prepared; sometimes roasted in the ashes; sometimes beaten and boiled with water; which they call howine; they also make cakes, not unpleasant to eat. They have likewise several sorts of beans and peas, that are good nourishment; and the woods and rivers are their arder.

"If an European comes to see them, or calls for lodging at their house, or wigwam, they give him the best place and first cut. If they come to visit us, they salute us with an Itak; which is as much as to say, Good be to you, and set them down; which is mostly on the ground, close to their heels, their legs upright; it may be they speak not a word, but observe all passages. If you give them anything to eat, or drink, well, for they will not ask; and be it little or much, if it be with kindness, they are well pleased, else they go away sullen, but say nothing.

"They are great concealers of their own resentments; brought to it,

I believe, by the revenge that hath been practised among them. In either of these they are not exceeded by the Italians. A tragical instance fell out since I came into the country: a king's daughter, thinking herself slighted by her husband, in suffering another woman to lie down between them, rose up, went out, plucked a root out of the ground and ate it; upon which she immediately died; and, for which, last week, he made an offering to her kindred, for atonement, and liberty of marriage; as two others did to the kindred of their wives that died a natural death. For, till widowers have done so, they must not marry again. Some of the young women are said to take undue liberty before marriage, for a portion; but when married, chaste. When with child they know their husbands no more, till delivered; and during their month they touch no meat they eat but with a stick, lest they should defile it; nor do their husbands frequent them till that time be expired.

"But in liberality they excel; nothing is too good for their friend; give them a fine gun, coat, or other thing, it may pass twenty hands before it sticks; light of heart, strong affections, but soon spent. The most merry creatures that live, feast and dance perpetually; they never have much, nor want much; wealth circuleteth like the blood; all parts partake; and though none shall want what another hath, yet exact observers of property. Some kings have sold, others presented me with several parcels of land; the pay or presents I made them were not hoarded by the particular owners; but the neighboring kings and their clans being present when the goods were brought out, the parties chiefly concerned consulted what, and to whom, they should give them. To every king then, by the hands of a person for that work appointed, in a proportion sent, so sorted and folded, and with that gravity that is admirable. Then that king subdivideth it in like manner among his dependants, they hardly leaving themselves an equal share with one of their subjects, and be it on such occasions as festivals, or at their common meals, the kings distribute, and to themselves last. They care for little, because they want but little; and the reason is, a little contents them. In this they are sufficiently revenged on us; if they are ignorant of our pleasures, they are also free from our pains. They are not disquieted with bills of lading and exchange, nor perplexed with chancery suits and exchequer reckonings. We sweat and toil to live; their pleasure feeds them; I mean their hunting, fishing, and fowling, and this table is spread everywhere. They eat twice a day, morning and evening; their seats and table are the ground. Since the Europeans came into these parts they have grown great lovers of strong liquors, rum especially; and for it exchange the richest of their skins and furs. If they are heated with liquors, they are restless till they have enough to sleep; that is their cry, Some more and I will go to sleep; but, when drunk, one of the most wretched spectacles in the world!

"In sickness, impatient to be cured, and for it give anything, especially for their children, to whom they are extremely natural. They drink at those times a teron, or decoction of some roots in spring water; and if they eat any flesh, it must be of the female of any creature. If they die, they bury them with their apparel, be they man or woman, and the nearest of kin fling in something precious with them, as a token of their love. Their mourning is blacking of their faces, which they continue for a year. They are choice of the graves of their dead; for, lest they should be lost by time, and fall to common use, they pick off the grass that grows upon them, and heap up the fallen earth with great care and exactness.

"These poor people are under a dark night in things relating to religion; to be sure the tradition of it: yet they believe a God and immortality, without the help of metaphysics: for, they say, There is a Great King that made them, who dwells in a glorious country to the southward of them; and that the souls of the good shall go thither, where they shall live again. Their worship consists of two parts, sacrifice and contico. Their sacrifice is their first fruits; the first and fattest buck they kill goeth to the fire, where he is all burnt, with a mournful ditty of him that performeth the ceremony; but with such marvellous fervency and labor of body, that he will even sweat to a foam. The other part is their contico, performed by round dances, sometimes words, sometimes songs, then shouts; two being in the middle that begin; and, by singing and drumming on a board, direct the chorus. Their postures in the dance are very antick and differing, but all keep measure. This is done with equal earnestness and labor, but great appearance of joy. In the fall, when the corn cometh in, they begin to feast one another. There have been two great festivals already to which all come that will. I was at one myself: their entertainment was a great seat by a spring, under some shady trees, and twenty bucks, with hot cakes of new corn, both wheat and beans, which they make up in a square form, in the leaves of the stem, and bake them in the ashes; and after that they fall to dance. But they that go must carry a small present in their money; it may be sixpence; which is made of the bone of a fish: the black is with them as gold: the white, silver: they call it scampum.

"Their government is by Kings, which they call Sachama, and those by succession, but always of the mother's side. For instance, the children of him who is now king will not succeed, but his brother by the mother, or the children of his sister, whose sons (and after them the children of her daughters) will reign; for no woman inherits. The reason they render for this way of descent, is, that their issue may not be spurious.

"Every King hath his Council; and that consists of all the old and wise men of his nation; which, perhaps, is two hundred people. Nothing of moment is undertaken, be it war, peace, selling of land, or traffick, without advising with them: and, which is more, with the young men too. It is admirable to consider how powerful the Kings are, and yet how they move by the breath of their people. I have had occasion to be in council with them, upon treaties for land, and to adjust the terms of trade. The order is thus: The King sits in the middle of an half moon, and hath his council, the old and wise, on each hand; behind them, or at a little distance, sit the younger fry, in the same figure. Having consulted and resolved their business, the King ordered one of them to speak to me; he stood up, came to me, and in the name of his King saluted me; then took me by the hand, and told me, 'He was ordered by his King to speak to me; and that now it was not he, but the King, that spoke; because what he should say was the King's mind.' He first prayed me 'to excuse them, that they had not complied with me the last time, he feared there might be some fault in the Interpreter, being neither Indian nor English; besides, it was the Indian custom to deliberate, and take up much time in council before they resolve, and that if the young people and owners of the land had been as ready as he, I had not met with so much delay.' Having thus introduced his matter, he fell to the bounds of the land they had agreed to dispose of, and the price; which now is little and dear; that which would have bought twenty miles, not buying now two. During the time that this person spoke, not a man of them was observed to whisper or smile; the old, grave; the young, reverent, in their deportment. They speak little, but fervently, and with elegance. I have never seen more natural sagacity, considering them without the help of was going to say the spoil of tradition; and he will deserve the name of wise that outwits them in any treaty, about a thing they understand. When the purchase was agreed, great promises passed between us, 'of kindness and good neighborhood, and that the Indians and English must live in love as long as the sun gave light; which done, another made a speech to the Indians, in the name of all the Sachamakers, or Kings; first to tell them what was done; next, to charge and command them 'to love the Christians, and particularly live in peace with me, and the people under my government; that many Governors had been in the river; but that no Governor had come himself to live and stay here before; and having now such an one, that had treated them well, they should never do him or his any wrong;—at every sentence of which they shouted and said Amen, in their way.

"The justice they have is pecuniary: In case of any wrong or evil act, be it murder itself, they atone by feasts, and presents of their scampum; which is proportioned to the quality of the offence, or person injured, or of the sex they are of. For, in case they kill a woman, they pay double; and the reason they render, is, 'that she breedeth children; which men cannot do.' It is rare that they fall out, if sober; and, if drunk, they forgive it, saying, 'It was the drink, and not the man, that abused them.'

"We have agreed that, in all differences between us, six of each side shall end the matter. Do not abuse them, but let them have justice, and you win them. The worst is, that they are the worse for the Christians; who have propagated their vices, and yielded them tradition for ill, and not for good things. But as low an ebb as these people are at, and as inglorious as their own condition looks, the Christians have not outlived their sight, with all their pretensions to a higher manifestation. What good, then, might not a good people graft where there is so distinct a knowledge left between good and evil? I beseech God to incline the hearts of all that come into these parts to outlive the knowledge of the satires, by a fixed obedience to their greater knowledge of the will of God; for it were miserable, indeed, for us to fall under the just censure of the poor Indian conscience, while we make profession of things so far transcending.

"For their original, I am ready to believe them of the Jesick race; I mean of the stock of the ten tribes; and that, for the following reasons: First, they were to go to a 'land not planted, nor known;' which, to be sure, Asia and Africa were, if not Europe; and he that intended that extraordinary judgment upon them, might make the passage not uneasy to them, as it is not impossible in itself, from the easternmost parts of Asia to the westernmost of America. In the next place; I find them of the like countenance, and their children of so lively resemblance, that a man would think himself in Duke's Place, or Berry Street, in London, when he seeth them. But this is not all; they agree in rites; they reckon by moons; they offer their first fruits; they have a kind of feast of tabernacles; they are said to lay their altar upon twelve stones; their mourning a year; customs of women, with many other things that do not now occur."

Within the limits of our county are a number of Indian geographical names, which necessitate some allusion as to their meaning and derivation. All names derived from the language of the natives have undergone many changes in orthography.¹ At first, every one spelled them to suit himself. The English, Irish, German, French, Dutch, and so on, had each their peculiar way of representing the Indian sounds. This gave rise to many variations. The dialectical differences in the Indian tongue greatly increased these variations. The ignorance and carelessness of many men in the proper use of letters in their own language and of the sound in other languages increased these variations still further. Hence we find such a diversity of orthography that sometimes it takes an experienced person to recognize some of the forms.

At length these words, by common usage, have come to a settled orthography. This usage often destroyed or mutilated the original word. This process of Anglicising Indian words generally consulted ease of speech, and seldom correctness of original sounds. Most of them, right or wrong, are now established. A very few still remain unsettled.

One difficulty with Indian names along the Susquehanna River is that the region was inhabited by tribes of both the Huron-Iroquois and Algonquin stocks of Indians; and each of these families had tribes on its banks, whose dialectical variations were so great that they hardly understood each other a word. This was the case with the Shawanes and Delawares, though both Algonquins. One safe rule may be adopted, viz., all names requiring the use of the lips in pronunciation did not originate from any of the tribes of the Huron-Iroquois family.

The regions of the lower Susquehanna having been overrun by so many Indian races and subdivisions of races, we may naturally look for remains of all these diversely speaking tribes in the geographical vestiges that have come down to us. It is this that makes investigation so very difficult. To get at the meaning of a term we must first know the language or Indian nationality to which it belonged. To do this would involve a knowledge of several Indian tongues and many more almost equally difficult dialectical variations.

It is an interesting fact, also, that many of the names given by the incoming tribe were translations into their own tongue of the same names employed by the tribe that preceded them. Many terms used by the Delawares were only translations of Susquehanna or Iroquois terms previously used. Even the English on their advent often translated these names into the corresponding English terms. This is apt to be the case in all such cases as Fishing, Beaver, and Stony Creeks. The historical idea remains, clinging as with hooks of steel, even when given the new translated sound.

The only one in the old days that did posterity a great service in preserving the meaning of the Indian geographical names was the Moravian missionary, Heckewelder. He lived long among the Delawares, and was quite familiar with their language and the dialect of the sub-tribes. He has given us his opinion on many of these names, and he is in general, of course, good authority; but even he, in some cases, must be received with great caution. He was a great admirer of the Delawares, and had strong prejudices against the Iroquois, which often warped his judgment. In his love for the Delawares he made all the names emanate from them that he possibly could. He made some undoubted Iroquois or Andastie words appear with far-fetched ideas of Delaware origin. We receive his statements with caution when they tend to disparage the Iroquois and extol the Delawares. Notwithstanding this we must acknowledge him as having rendered a most valuable service in rescuing the origin of many words from oblivion.

We come now to notice the word Susquehanna. Our first knowledge of it is from the History of Virginia, by Capt. John Smith, published in London in 1629. He describes his exploration of the Chesapeake Bay, at the head of which he found four rivers. He went up the largest one as far as his barge could pass for rocks. Here he awaited the arrival of some Sasquesahanoughs, for whom he had sent a couple of interpreters. The interpreters were of the people called Tockwogh, one interpreted from Powhatten language to Tockwogh and Sasquesahanough. The chief town was "two days' journey higher than our barge could pass for rocks." They numbered "near six hundred able men, and are palisaded in their towns to defend them from the Massawomekes, their mortal enemies." "Three or four days we expected their return, then sixty of those giant-like people came down." Five of the chiefs came aboard and crossed over the bay. Smith took a picture of one of them, the calf of whose leg was twenty-seven inches in circumference. They had five other towns belonging to their nation beside Sasquesahanough, the second Quadroque, about twenty miles farther up, beyond which there are two branches, on the western one is Uchowitz, and on the eastern one Tesinigh. Which branch is the main river cannot be told from the map. By the scale these towns would be about sixty miles from the bay. On a western branch, entering the river below Sasquesahanough, is Attack, seemingly sixteen miles from it. Smith drew this map from the representations of the Indians. The scale would place the first town only about twenty-one miles above the mouth of the river. But we know he was not very accurate, for he says he could not go two miles up the river for the falls, yet we know the first rocks at the head of tide are four miles, and the mark on his map of the distance penetrated along the river by the scale is some twelve miles, or more than half the distance from the bay to Sasquesahanough, to which it took the interpreters two days to travel. It is probable that at this time the chief town was at the Conestoga, Columbia, or even as high as Marietta, that Attack was about York, Quadroque at Middletown, Tesinigh at Lebanon, and Uchowitz about Harrisburg. The sixth town, Cepawig, was on the heads of the Patapasco, probably Westminster, Md.

Capt. Smith did not get the name Sasquesahanoughs from those Indians themselves. He does not tell us what they called themselves. He got his name for them from a tribe called Tockwogh who numbered only one hundred men, and were probably of the Nanticoke family. The first part, Sasquesa, meant Falls; the second part, Hanough, is the Algonquin hanné, meaning stream. As applied to these people by their neighbors, it signifies very expressively the people of the Falls River. Through time the word was gradually changed to Sasquehannock, and finally to Susquehanna. It is possible that Sasquesa was part of the name by which these people called themselves, and that they appended to it the Mohawk word Haga, for people or nation, as in the case of Onajutto-Haga. At all events Smith and his party well understood its meaning, for they translated it, as appears from the account given by his companion, who says, "The Sasquehannock's River we called Smith's Falls." It is an interesting fact, that the Sasquesa is the same word that still lingers in the creek, Sicca-a-rongo, Siccasalungo, Chickasa-lungo, Chiquesa-lungo, now contracted into Chickies and Chiques, and applied to the stream entering the river above Columbia and below Marietta, on which there once was an Indian town of that name, and it strongly suggests that this may even have been the very location of Smith's chief town Sasquesahanough. The latter part of the word still remains in such names as Rappahannock, Loyalhanna, etc.

In the "new map of Virginia and Maryland and improved parts of Pennsylvania," by John Lenex in 1719, revised in 1721, in atlas form, and printed in London, we have on the east side of the Susquehanna, from Maryland up, these towns marked, Canoona-wengh (latitude 40° 5'), Unondomeras, Ceskoe, Ocquandery, and Skawaghkaha. The latter is no doubt our modern Swatara. The map extends to latitude 40° 30'. The river forks at 40° 25'. The right branch is called Onestega. On the left branch (Juniata?) at 40° 12' is Kahetnoye. These are evidently Iroquois terms. The author says the natives are so much diminished by civil wars that they have not over five hundred men, mostly on the eastern shore and employed by the English to hunt deer. "Atlas Noveam," by Covens & Mortier, Amsterdam (no date), London, 1733, on back, gives No. 69 part of a large Popple, has on the Susquehanna River, from Maryland up, Conestogo, Indian Fort, Sicasarongo, Conewaga, Swahadowri, Ganadaguhet, Enwaga-Aratumquat, Chemegaide, Conahago, Codocoraren, Sionassi, and Seawondaona (Towanda). "De Annville's Amerique Septentrionale" (French atlas), smaller map, 1746, gives from Maryland up, Indian Fort, Skahadowri, Chemegaide, Canahoga, Juragen, Codocoraren, Sionassa, Juragen, Seawondaona.

It is said William Penn made two visits to the Susquehanna River, and was up as far as the Swatara Creek, and contemplated founding a city somewhere on the river. His last visit was in the spring of 1701, and it is believed the towns on the Popple map were all inhabited about this time and later. They differ from those given in the Colonial Records, probably because the French map-makers got their names from the Iroquois, who often gave their own names rather than that of the residents.

The Swahadowri will be recognized as Swatara; Ganadaguhet as Conedoguinnet, and Chemegaide, we think, should be Cheniegaide, and means the Juniata. We have found the word spelled Sogneijadie, Chuchniada, Choniata, Chinniotta, Joniady, Scokoonidy, and many other ways. The root of the word is the Iroquois term Oueija or Onia, meaning a stone. The first part, now written with a j, is only a breathing of some of the Iroquois dialects, which the English often designated by letters such as the above, but which the French seldom expressed, as, for example, the French made the Iroquois call the Governor of Canada "Onnontio," while the English mostly wrote it "Yonnon-dio." The Onojutta-Haga, or Juniata nation, were the people of the Standing Stone. There can be no doubt but that Indian towns were located on Duncan's Island, at the mouth of that river, at the different epochs in Indian history. Rev. David Brainerd visited the "pagans" on "Juneata Island" in September of 1746. It may also have been the site of Atra'kouaer in 1

1. The purchase of lands from the Iroquois in 1736, it is said that it was to extend westward as far as the mountains called in the Delaware language Kekkachtarin, and in the Six Nation language, Tyanuntasachta, both of which words it is stated mean The Endless Hills. In the deed of 1749 the mountains are again referred to, and the names spelled Keckachtany and Tyanuntasachta. In the deed of 1764 the Iroquois term is omitted, and the Delaware word is spelled Kittochtinny. While scholars seem to regard this as the proper orthography, the word has been corrupted into Kittatinny. The name shows the Delaware, or Leni Lenape idea of our geography, when they termed them the Endless Hills. In the deed of 1764 they are already termed the Blue Mountains, a common name to this day. In the early days the settlers in the Cumberland Valley called that portion adjoining them the North Mountain; and the one on the other side of the valley South Mountain. So we have Kittochtinny, Blue, and North, all meaning the same chain. The Indian name alone should be used; any mountain may be blue at a distance, and any one is north of some place. So we write it Kittochtinny.

MAHANTANGO is corrupted from Mohantanga, signifying where we had plenty of meat to eat.

WICONISCO is corrupted from Wikenkniskeu, signifying a wet and muddy camp. Probably some Indians encamped along the creek where the bank was wet and muddy.

SWATARA is written in old deeds Esutara and Suatara; in Susquehanna, Swahadowry, corrupted from Schaha-dawa, i.e., where we fed on eels.

CONEWAGO or Conewaugha, in Iroquois, means the place of the rapids. From this fact there are several streams emptying into the Susquehanna so named.

MANADA, or Monody's, is corrupted from Menatey, signifying an island.

STONY CREEK. In Delaware it is Sinne-hanne, or Achsin-hanne, i.e., stony stream.

FISHING CREEK in Delaware is Namees-hanne, i.e., fish stream. There are six or seven streams of this name in Pennsylvania.

PAXTANG is a Delaware word, and is Peckstank, or Peshtank, signifying where the waters stand,—the place of dead water, whether in a stream, or pool, or lake. We use the term Paxtang, and not Paxton, which is an English surname, and should never be employed. It is not correct.

BEAVER CREEK in Delaware is Sangamochke, i.e., little beaver stream.

RACCOON CREEK in Delaware is Nachenum-hanne, i.e., raccoon stream.

CHAPTER II.

The Proprietary's Concessions—Who were the Scotch-Irish?—Their Letter to Governor Shute, of Massachusetts—Penn's Proposed Settlement on the Susquehanna.

DISCOVERY was soon followed by the advent of the whites in America, drawn thither at first by search for gold, and then for colonization. As it is entirely out of place to treat of the early history of America, or even of Pennsylvania, save when some allusion to either may be deemed necessary, we shall proceed to give an account of the settlement of the pioneers on the Susquehanna within the limits of our own county domain. The Founder of Pennsylvania is certainly deserving of grateful remembrance for his efforts to settle his Province, to protect the pioneers, and to foster their industry. He was a remarkable man in many respects, and his "Frame of Government" is a model, unequalled by the laws of any of the colonies or provinces. Not that alone, but the "concessions" agreed upon in England for the encouragement of emigrants to his Province, is an important factor in that great movement which so materially assisted in building up this Western Empire, and gave to the world the great State "founded in peace." The "Certain Conditions or Concessions agreed upon by William Penn, Proprietary and Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania, and those the Adventurers and Purchasers in the same Province the eleventh of July, one thousand six hundred and eighty-one," are as follows:

"I. That so soon as it pleaseth God that the abovesaid persons arrive there, a certain quantity of land, or ground plat, shall be laid out, for a large town or city, in the most convenient place, upon the river, for health and navigation; and every purchaser and adventurer shall, by lot, have so much land therein as will answer to the proportion, which he hath bought, or taken up, upon rent: but it is to be noted, that the surveyors shall consider what roads or high ways will be necessary to the cities, towns, or through the lands. Great roads from city to city not to contain less than forty feet, in breadth, shall be first laid out and declared to be for high ways, before the dividend of acres be laid out for the purchaser, and the like observation to be had for the streets in the towns and cities, that there may be convenient roads and streets preferred, not to be encroached upon by any planter or builder, that none may build irregularly to the damage of another. In this, custom governs.

"II. That the land in the town be laid out together after the proportion of ten thousand acres of the whole country, that is, two hundred acres, if the place will bear it: however, that the proportion be by lot, and entire, so as those that desire to be together, especially those that are, by the catalogue, laid together may be so laid together both in the town and country.

"III. That, when the country lots are laid out, every purchaser, from one thousand, to ten thousand acres, or more, not to have above one thousand acres together, unless in three years they plant a family upon every thousand acres; but that all such as purchase together, lie together; and, if as many as comply with this condition, that the whole be laid out together.

"IV. That, where any number of purchasers, more or less, whose number of acres amounts to five or ten thousand acres, desire to sit together in a lot or township, they shall have their lot, or township, cast together, in such places as have convenient harbours, or navigable rivers attending it, if such can be found; and in case any one or more purchasers plant not according to agreement, in this concession, to the prejudice of others of the same township, upon complaint thereof made to the Governor, or his Deputy, with assistance, they may award (if they see cause) that the complaining purchaser may, paying the survey money, and purchase money, and interest thereof, be entitled, enrolled and lawfully invested, in the lands so not seated.

"V. That the proportion of lands that shall be laid out in the first great town or city, for every purchaser, shall be after the proportion of ten acres for every five hundred acres purchased, if the place will allow it.

"VI. That notwithstanding there be no mention made in the several deeds made to the purchasers; yet the said William Penn does accord and declare that all rivers, rivulets, woods and underwoods, waters, watercourses, quarries, mines, and minerals (except mines royal) shall be freely and fully enjoyed, and wholly by the purchasers into whose lot they fall.

"VII. That, for every fifty acres that shall be allotted to a servant at the end of his service, his quit-rent shall be two shillings per annum, and the master or owner of the servant, when he shall take up the other fifty acres, his quit-rent shall be four shillings by the year, or, if the master of the servant (by reason in the indentures he is so obliged to do) allot out to the servant fifty acres in his own division, the said master shall have, on demand, allotted him, from the Governor, the one hundred acres, at the chief rent of six shillings per annum.

"VIII. And, for the encouragement of such as are ingenious and willing to search out gold and silver mines in this province, it is hereby agreed that they have liberty to bore and dig in any man's property, fully paying the damage done; and in case a discovery should be made, that the discoverer have one-fifth, the owner of the soil (if not the discoverer) a tenth part, the Governor two-fifths, and the rest to the public treasury, saving to the king the share reserved by patent.

"IX. In every hundred thousand acres, the Governor and Proprietary by lot, reserveth ten to himself, what shall be but in one place.

"X. That every man shall be bound to plant or man so much of his share of land as shall be set out and surveyed within three years after it is so set out and surveyed, or else it shall be lawful for new comers to be settled thereupon, paying to them their survey money, and they go up higher for their shares.

"XI. There shall be no buying and selling, be it with an Indian, or one among another, of any goods to be exported, but what shall be performed in public market, when such places shall be set apart or erected, where they shall pass the public stamp or mark. If bad ware and priced as good, or deceitful in proportion or weight, to forfeit the value, as if good and full weight and proportion, to the public treasury of this province, whether it be the merchandize of the Indian or that of the planters.

"XII. And forasmuch as it is usual with the planters to overreach the poor natives of the country in trade, by goods not being good of the kind or debased with mixtures, with which they are sensibly aggrieved, it is agreed whatever is sold to the Indians, in consideration of their furs, shall be sold in the market-place, and there suffer the test whether good or bad; if good, to pass; if not good, not to be sold for good, that the natives may not be abused nor provoked.

"XIII. That no man shall, by any ways or means, in word or deed, affront or wrong any Indian, but he shall incur the same penalty of the law as if he had committed it against his fellow-planter, and if any Indian shall abuse, in word or deed, any planter of this Province, that he shall not be his own judge upon the Indian, but he shall make his complaint to the Governor of the Province, or his Lieutenant or Deputy, or some Inferior Magistrate near him, who shall to the utmost of his power take care with the king of the said Indian, that all reasonable satisfaction be made to the said injured planter.

"XIV. That all differences between the planters and the natives shall also be ended by twelve men, that is, by six planters and six natives; that so we may live friendly together as much as in us lieth, preventing all occasions of heart-burnings and mischief.

"XV. That the Indians shall have liberty to do all things relating to improvement of their ground, and providing sustenance for their families that any of the planters shall enjoy.

"XVI. That the laws as to slanders, drunkenness, swearing, cursing, pride in apparel, trespasses, distresses, replevins, weights and measures, shall be the same as in England till altered by law in this province.

"XVII. That all shall mark their hogs, sheep, and other cattle, and what are not marked within three months after it is in their possession, be it young or old, it shall be forfeited to the Governor, that so people may be compelled to avoid the occasions of much strife between planters.

"XVIII. That, in clearing the ground, care be taken to leave one acre of trees for every five acres cleared, especially to preserve oak and mulberries for silk and shipping.

"XIX. That all shipmasters shall give an account of their countries, names, ships, owners, freights, and passengers, to an officer to be appointed for that purpose, which shall be registered within two days after their arrival, and if they shall refuse so to do, that then none presume to trade with them, upon forfeiture thereof; and that such masters be looked upon as having an evil intention to the province.

"XX. That no person leave the province without publication being made thereof in the market-place three weeks before, and a certificate from some Justice of the Peace, of his clearness with his neighbors and those he dealt with, so far as such an assurance can be attained and given; and if any master of a ship shall, contrary hereunto, receive and carry away any person that hath not given that public notice, the said master shall be liable to all debts owing by the said person, so secretly transported from the province.

"Lastly. That these are to be added to or corrected by and with the consent of the parties hereunto subscribed."

The inducements offered by Penn to settlers were not confined to right of soil or voice in government, but religious toleration was guaranteed by him. The law of religious liberty, as framed by him and passed by the first Assembly at Chester, 10th December, 1682, is as follows:

"CHAPTER I. Almighty God being only Lord of conscience, Father of Lights and Spirits, and the author as well as object of all Divine Knowledge, faith and worship, who only can enlighten the mind and persuade and convince the understandings of people; In due reverence to His sovereignty over the souls of mankind;

Be it enacted, That no person, now or at any time hereafter, living in this Province, who shall confess and acknowledge one Almighty God to be the Creator, upholder, and Ruler of the world, and who professes him or herself obliged in conscience to live peaceably and quietly under the civil government, shall, in any case, be molested or prejudiced for his or her conscientious persuasion or practice. Nor shall he or she, at any time, be compelled to frequent or maintain any religious worship, place or ministry whatever, contrary to his or her mind, but shall freely and fully enjoy his or her Christian liberty in that respect, without any interruption or reflection. And if any person shall abuse or deride any other for his or her different persuasion and practice in matters of religion, such person shall be looked upon as a disturber of the peace, and be punished accordingly.

"But to the end that looseness, irreligion, and atheism may not creep in under pretense of conscience in this Province; Be it further enacted, dc., That, according to the example of the primitive Christians, and for the ease of the creation, every first day of the week, called the Lord's Day, people shall abstain from their usual and common toil and labor, that whether masters, parents, children, or servants, they may the better dispose themselves to read the Scriptures of truth, at home, or frequent such meetings of religious worship abroad as may best suit their respective persuasions."

And thus Pennsylvania became the refuge and home of people of all creeds or religious beliefs. The foregoing was one of the first laws of the Province, and during the lifetime of the Founder the liberty of conscience was not questioned. At a later day, however, his religious adherents would have throttled toleration had they not feared revolution.

Elsewhere we give an account of the German emigration which preceded by several decades that to which we shall now refer,—the coming of the Scotch-Irish. And who were the Scotch-Irish? At the first used as a term of reproach, to us it has become a synonym of enterprise, intelligence, patriotism, and religious fervor, and it is proper that in this connection we present a few points in the history of that persevering and undaunted race.

It was during the reign of good Queen Bess—the proud Elizabeth of all England—that through treason, tyranny, and rebellion, the Province of Ulster, especially the counties of Downe, Londonderry, and Antrim, Ireland, was reduced to the lowest extreme of poverty and wretchedness, while its moral and religious state was scarcely less deplorable.

Soon after the accession of James I., O'Neill, the Earl of Tyrone, and O'Donnell, the Earl of Tyrconnel, were falsely accused of having arranged a plot against the government. An accusation being at those times tantamount to a conviction, compelled those thus arraigned to fly the country, leaving their extensive estates (about five hundred thousand acres) at the mercy of the king, who at once confiscated them. A subsequent supposed threatened insurrection, promptly suppressed, gave occasion for another large forfeiture, and nearly six entire counties in the Province of Ulster were sequestered and subjected to the disposal of the crown. Any country passing through such an ordeal of turbulence could not be otherwise than almost depopulated, with resources wasted and the cultivation of the soil in a great measure abandoned. And such was the true condition of Ulster. To repeople the country it was determined to invite the settlement of Protestants from England and Scotland, and hence liberal offers of land were made for colonists to occupy this wide and vacant country, the better to preserve order, to establish more firmly the British rule, and to secure loyalty. The project was eagerly embraced, companies were formed, and individuals without organization were tempted to partake of the advantageous offers of the government. A London company—among the first to enter upon the new acquisition—established itself at Derry, and gave such character to the place as to cause it to be known and called the city of Londonderry.

The principal emigration, however, was from Scotland. Its coast is within twenty miles of the county of Antrim, Ireland, and across this strait flowed from the northeast a large population, distinguished for thrift, industry, and endurance, and bringing with them their Presbyterianism and rigid adherence to the Westminster standards. This was the first Protestant population that was introduced into Ireland, and the Presbyterians of Scotland who thus furnished the largest element have maintained their ascendancy to the present day against all the persevering efforts of the government church.

The Province of Ulster, in consequence of this influx of population, greatly revived and continued for some years to advance in prosperity. In time the throne of England was controlled by bigotry and despotism. Persecutions of an oppressive nature began in Ulster in 1661, and every expedient was tried to break down the attachment of the people to the faith of their fathers; yet, as is ever the case, persecution only attached the people the stronger to Presbyterianism.

From Ireland the tide of persecution rolled to Scotland. The latter Stuarts,—Charles II. and James II.,—blind to the dictates of justice and humanity, pursued a system of measures best calculated to wean from their support their Presbyterian subjects who were bound to them by national prejudice and had been most devoted to their kingly cause, and to whose assistance Charles II. owed his restoration to the throne. Sir James Grahame, better known as Claverhouse, was sent to Scotland with his dragoons upon the mistaken mission of compelling the Presbyterians to conform in their religious worship to that of the establishment; and from 1670 until the accession of William and Mary the Covenanters of Scotland worshiped in hidden places and at the peril of their lives.

The attempt of the Stuarts to destroy the religious system so universally established and so dearly cherished by that devoted people was steadily pursued by persecution as cruel and as savage as any which has disgraced the annals of religious bigotry and crime. Many were treacherously and ruthlessly butchered, and the ministers were prohibited, under severe penalties, from preaching, baptizing, or ministering in any way to their flocks.

There are some matters connected with these persecutions which may not be uninteresting. From 1660 to 1688 no less than eighteen thousand Scotch Presbyterians were put to death in various ways in defense of the solemn league and covenant and Christ's headship over the Church. In looking over the list of names one is forcibly struck with the fact that among them are the very surnames of the Scotch-Irish emigrants to this section of Pennsylvania,—Al-lison, Stewart, Gray, Thompson, Murray, Robinson, Rutherford, McCormick, Mitchell, Kerr, Todd, Beatty, Johnston, Hamilton, Finley, McCord, McEwen, Hall, Boyd, Clark, Sloan, Elder, Forster, Montgomery, Robertson, and others. It would thus seem that we have here the lineal descendants of those who loved not their lives unto the death, but were drowned, hanged, shot, beheaded, and their heads stuck upon poles, their bodies chopped in pieces and scattered about, in the days of that human monster, Claverhouse. Through their blood shed in defense of religious liberty we enjoy many and great privileges.

Worn out with the unequal contest, these persistent and enduring Presbyterians took refuge from persecution—abandoned the land of their birth—and sought an asylum among their countrymen who had preceded them in the secure retreats of Ulster, and thither they escaped as best they could, some crossing the narrow sea in open boats. They carried their household gods with them, and their religious peculiarities became more dear in their land of exile for the dangers and sorrows through which they had borne them.

This is the race which furnished the population in the north of Ireland, familiarly known as the Scotch-Irish. This term—American in its origin, and unknown in Ireland—does not denote an admixture of the Scotch and Irish races. The one did not intermarry with the other. The Scotch were principally Saxon in blood and Presbyterian in religion; the native Irish Celtic in blood and Roman Catholic in religion; and these were elements which could not very readily coalesce. Hence the races are as distinct in Ireland at the present day as when the Scotch first took up their abode in that island. They were called Scotch-Irish simply from the circumstance that they were the descendants of Scots who had taken up their residence in the North of Ireland.

Taxation and oppression, however, with difficulties partly political, partly religious, no doubt were the strong motives which one hundred and seventy years ago induced the Scotch-Irish to leave Ireland. It was not the home of their ancestors, it was endeared to them by no traditions, and they sought and obtained in the wilds of Pennsylvania a better home than they had in the Old World.

The emigration began prior to 1718, although few in number, and in illustration of the commencement of Scotch-Irish settlement in America, we give herewith the "memorial to Governor Shute, of Massachusetts, from residents in the north of Ireland." The memorial is important to us, from the fact that the great majority of the signers subsequently found homes in Paxtang, Hanover, and Derry.

"To His Excellency, the Right Honorable Colonel Samuel Shute, Governour of New England.

"We, whose names are underwritten, Inhabitants of ye North of Ireland, Doe in our own names, and in the names of many others our Neighbour, Gentlemen, Ministers, Farmers, and Tradesmen, Commissionate and appoint our trusty and well-beloved Friend, the Reverend Mr. William Boyd, of Macasky, to His Excellency the Right Honorable Collonel Samuel Suttle, Governour of New England, and to assure His Excellency of our sincere and hearty Inclination to Transport ourselves to that very excellent and renowned Plantation, upon our obtaining from His Excellency suitable encouragement; and, further, to act and Doe in our names as his Prudence shall direct. Given under our hands this 26th day of March, Anno Dom. 1718.

Extensive emigrations from the northern counties of Ireland were principally made at two distinct periods of time. The first from about the year 1717 to the middle of the century, the second from about 1771 to 1773. They were Protestants, generally Presbyterians,—few or none of the Roman Catholic Irish came until after the war of the Revolution, and few then until after the great political upheaval in 1798, since which period, as we all know, the flow of the latter class of immigrants has been continuous.

The Scotch-Irish emigrants landed principally at New Castle and Philadelphia, save a handful who had settled on the Kennebec in Maine, and of these the greater portion eventually came into Pennsylvania. Settling on the frontiers from Easton to the Susquehanna, and the Potomac, the stream of immigration continued south to Virginia and the Carolinas.

The country north of the Swatara had not been visited save by French Indians prior to the coming of William Penn. After his first visit he seems to have been well informed concerning this locality and personally visited it, and at or above the mouth of the Swatara decided to locate a city, and the following proposals were issued therefor in 1690. It is easily understood why the project was never carried out. The careful reader of Pennsylvania history will readily comprehend the peculiar conditions surrounding the founder. His government of his Province was giving him serious concern. The material composing his Assembly was of that stubborn, self-willed character that little could be done, and he had as much as he could do in the preservation and fostering of those enterprises he had already begun. Nevertheless, as a document of more than local interest, it is herewith given :

"Some Proposals for a second Settlement in the Province of Pennsylvania.

"Whereas, I did, about nine years past, propound the selling of several parts of land, upon that side of the Province of Pennsylvania next Delaware river, and settling out of a place upon it for the building of a city, by the name of Philadelphia; and that divers persons cloed with those proposals, who, by their ingenuity, industry and charge, have advanced that city, from a wood, to a good forwardness of building (there being above one thousand houses finished in it), and that the several plantations and towns begun upon the land, bought by those first undertakers, are also in a prosperous way of improvement and enlargement: (inso much as last year ten sail of ships were freighted there, with the growth of the Province, for Barbadoes, Jamaica, &c., besides what came directly for this kingdom.) It is now my purpose to make another settlement, upon the river of Susquehannagh, that runs into the Bay of Chesapeake, and bears about fifty miles west from the river Delaware, as appears by the Common Maps of the English Dominion in America. There I design to lay out a plan for the building of another City, in the most convenient place for communication with the former plantations on the East; which by land, is as good as done already, a way being laid out between the two rivers very exactly and conveniently, at least three years ago; and which will not be hard to do by water, by the benefit of the river Scoukill; for a Branch of that river lies near a Branch that runs into Susquehannagh River, and is the Common Course of the Indians with their Skins and Furr's into our Parts, and to the Provinces of East and West Jersey, and New York, from the West and North west parts of the continent from whence they bring them.

"And I do also intend that every one who shall be a Purchaser in this proposed settlement, shall have a proportionable Lot in the said City to build a House or Houses upon; which Town-Ground, and the Shares of Land that shall be bought of me, shall be delivered clear of all Indian Pretensions; for it has been my way from the first, to purchase their title from them, and so settle with their consent.

"The Shares I dispose of, contain each, Three Thousand Acres for £100, and for greater or lesser quantities after that rate: The acre of that Province is according to the Statute of the 33d of Edw. I. And no acknowledgement or Quit Rent shall be paid by the Purchasers till five years after a settlement be made upon their Lands, and that only according to the quantity of acres so taken up and sowed, and not otherwise; and only then to pay but one shilling for every hundred acres for ever. And further I do promise to agree with every Purchaser that shall be willing to treat with me between this and next spring, upon all such reasonable conditions as shall be thought necessary for their accommodation, intending, if God please, to return with what speed I can, and my family with me, in order to our future Residence.

"To conclude, that which particularly recommends this Settlement, is the known goodness of the soyl and situation of the Land, which is high and not mountainous; also the Pleasantness, and Largeness of the River being clear and not rapid, and broader than the Thames at London bridge, many miles above the Place intended for this Settlement; and runs (as we are told by the Indians) quite through the Province, into which many fair rivers empty themselves. The sorts of Timber that grow there are chiefly oak, ash, chestnut, walnut, cedar, and poplar. The native Fruits are papaws, grapes, mulberry's, chestnuts, and several sorts of walnuts. There are likewise great quantities of Deer, and especially Elks, which are much bigger than our Red Deer, and use that River in Herds. And Fish there is of divers sorts, and very large and good, and in great plenty.

"But that which recommends both this Settlement in particular, and the Province in general, is a late Patent obtained by divers Eminent Lords and Gentleman for that Land that lies north of Pennsylvania up to the 46th Degree and an half, because their Traffick and Intercourse will be chiefly through Pennsylvania, which lies between that Province and the Sea. We have also the comfort of being the Center of all the English colonies upon the Continent of America, as they lie from the North East parts of New England to the most Southerly parts of Carolina, being above 1000 miles upon the Coast.

"If any Persons please to apply themselves to me by letter in relation to this affair, they may direct them to Robert Nees, Scrivener in Lumber street in London for Phillip Ford, and suitable answers will be returned by the first opportunity. There are also Instructions printed for information of such as intend to go, or send servants, or families thither, which way they may proceed with most ease and advantage, both here and there, in reference to Passage, Goods, Utensils, Building, Husbandry, Stock, Subsistence, Traffick, &c. being the effect of their expence and experience that have seen the Fruit of their Labours.

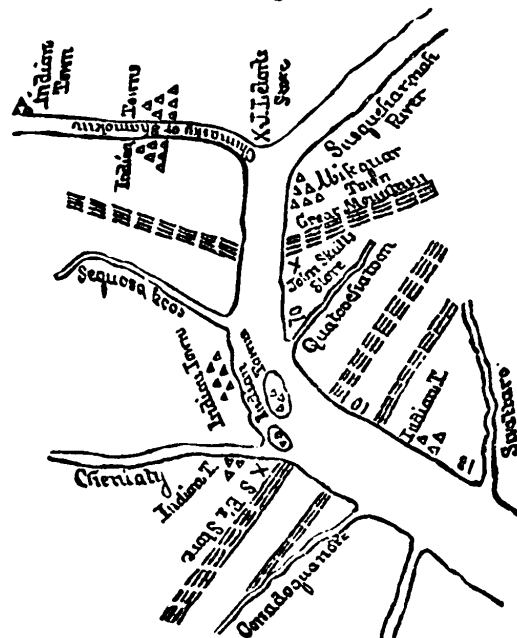

"WM. PENN."

The foregoing was "printed and sold by Andrew Sowle, at the crooked Billet in Halloway Lane, Shore Ditch, 1690," and freely distributed in England, and possibly on the Continent, although "foreigners" were not desired for the towns; they were needed to till the soil, while the peaceful Quaker was the merchant and dealer.

As remarked before, the Indian trade prior to 1700 was in the hands of French traders, who seemed to have found their way from Canada to the valley of the Susquehanna. The Bezalions, Michael and Peter, Chartier, Letort, and others were the principal personages in this dangerous enterprise, which was hardly sufficiently lucrative.

Isaac Taylor, who for many years was a surveyor in the county of Chester, made a rough "draught of the Susquehanna River in 1701," and evidently had accompanied some Indian trader on one of his expeditions, and thus we have preserved to us the following exceedingly interesting sketch:

Draught of the Susquehannoh River in 1701.
Made by Isaac Taylor Surveyor of Chester Co.

By reference thereto it will be seen that Shawanese Indian villages were at or near Paxtang, on Duncan's and Clemson's islands, above the mouth of the Juniata, at now Sunbury, and on "John Penn's" Creek and the Juniata. The streams on the east side of the river are the Suataro (Swatara) and the Quatoocha-ton; whether the latter is the Wiconisco or Mahantango, it is difficult to determine.

Governor Evans upon one of his expeditions into the country seems to have been informed at Pequohan of some irregularities of one of the French traders at Paxtang, and in company with John French, William Tonge, Michael Bezalion, a Mr. Gray, and four servants, visited this locality. We give his journal of this visit:

"On Tuesday, the 1st July, 1707, we went to Conestoga, and lay there that night, and the next morning proceeded on our journey, and arrived in the evening within three miles of an Indian village called Peixtan. The Governor had received information at Pequehan that one Nicole, a French Indian trader, was at that place, against whom great complaints had been made to the Governor, of which he acquainted the chief Indian at Peixtan, as also of his design to seize him, who willingly agreed to it, but advised the Governor to be very cautious in the manner, there being only young people at home, who perhaps might make some resistance if it were done without their being told of it. For this reason we lay short of the village that night, but early in the morning we went within a half-mile of the town, and, leaving our horses, marched afoot near the same, from whence the Governor sent Martine to the village, ordering him to tell Nicole that he had brought two kegs of rum with him, which he had left in the woods for fear any Christians were there; and withal to persuade Nicole to go with him and taste the rum. Martine returned with James Letort and Joseph Jessop, two Indian traders, but could not prevail with Nicole; upon which Martine was sent back with orders to bring down some Indians, and Nicole with them. Then we drew nearer to town and laid ourselves in the bushes; and Martine returned with two Indians whom the Governor acquainted with his intention of taking Nicole, telling at the same time that he had spoken with the uncle of one of them upon that head, who ordered the Indians to submit to the Governor's commands, with which they were contented, though we perceived too well the contrary by their inquiring how many we were, and how armed, and the concern they seemed to be in when they found we were in more number than they. But still Nicole was wanting. It was therefore resolved to try once more if he could be got into the woods. Accordingly, Martine went again to the place, and brought Nicole where we lay concealed, and asking him to drink a dram, he seized him; but Nicole started from him and ran for it, when immediately we started out and took him, and presently carried him to the village (Peixtan), through which we were obliged to pass; and there we found some Indians with guns in their hands, who looked much displeas'd at what we had done, but being in readiness against any surprise, they thought it not fit to attempt anything. Here we staid about half an hour, and then started for Turpohocken [Tulpehocken], having mounted Nicole on a horse and tied his legs under the belly; we got within a mile of Turpohocken about two of the clock. On Friday morning about seven the Governor went to the town; from thence we went to Mahatawney that night, and the next day to Philadelphia."

CHAPTER III.

John Harris, the First White Settler—The Assessment List of 1718—Prices of Land, and Early Warrantees for Paxtang, Derry, Hanover, Londonderry, and Upper Paxtang Townships.

THE first English trader we hear of within the limits of the county was John Harris. The fears of the French, who were constantly gaining ground in the northwestern part of the Province, and especially of "Papists," which all at once seems to have filled our Quaker friends with terror, it made it absolutely necessary to license only English traders, and they of Protestant proclivities, so as to prevent communication with the French on the Ohio. Among the first was John Harris, who perchance entered this then lucrative field, the Indian trade, at the suggestion of his most intimate friend, Edward Shippen, Provincial Secretary.

Of the John Harris who thus located permanently at Harrisburg, and who gave name to that city, it may not be inappropriate to refer. "He was as honest a man as ever broke bread," was the high eulogium pronounced by Parson Elder, of blessed memory, as he spoke of the pioneer in after-years. Born in the county of Yorkshire, England, although of Welsh descent, about the year 1673, he was brought up in the trade of his father, that of a brewer. Leaving his home on reaching his majority, he worked at his calling some time in the city of London, where he joined, a few years afterwards, a company from his native district, who emigrated to Pennsylvania two or three years prior to Penn's second visit to his Province. Watson states that John Harris' "entire capital amounted to only sixteen guineas."

We first hear of him after his arrival in Philadelphia as a contractor for clearing and grading the streets of that ancient village. In 1698 his name is appended to a remonstrance to the Provincial Assembly against the passage of an act disallowing the franchise to all persons owning real estate less in value than fifty pounds. The memorial had its effect, and the objectionable law was repealed. By letters of introduction to Edward Shippen, the first mayor of Philadelphia, that distinguished gentleman became his steadfast friend, and through his influence, no doubt, were secured those favors which induced him eventually to become the first permanent settler in this locality.

In January, 1705, John Harris received his license from the commissioners of property, authorizing and allowing him to "seat himself on the Susquahannah," and "to erect such buildings as are necessary for his trade, and to enclose and improve such quantities of land as he shall think fit." At once he set about building a log house near the Ganawese (Conoy) settlement, but the Indians made complaint to the government that it made them "uneasie," desiring to know if they encouraged it. As in numerous instances when the provincial authorities were taken to task, they disavowed their own acts. Nevertheless, the "trader" continued his avocation, making frequent visits to the Shawanese villages at the Conewago and Swatara. It is doubtful if John Harris came farther west until after the permanent removal of all the French traders.

It was during one of his expeditions that Harris first beheld the beauty and advantages of the location at Paxtang. It was the best fording-place on the Susquehanna, and then, as now in these later days, on the great highway between the North and South, the East and the West. Annually the chiefs of the Five Nations went to the Carolinas, where were located their vast hunting-grounds, and these, returning with peltries, found need of a trading-post. The eye of that hardy pioneer, looking out over the vast expanse of wood, and plain, and river, saw and knew that it was the place for the realization of that fond dream of the founder of Pennsylvania, the great and good Penn, "a city on the Susquehanna." At the period referred to, the lands lying between the Conewago or Lechay Hills and the Kittochtinny or Blue Mountains had not been purchased from the Indians. Of course neither John Harris nor the Scotch-Irish settlers could locate except by the right of squatter sovereignty or as licensed traders. As a trader, it could only be with the permission of the Indians.

Harris' first move was the erection of a store-house, which he surrounded by a stockade. It was located on the lower bank of the river, at about what is now the foot of Paxtang Street. A well dug by him still exists, although covered over about twenty-five years ago, the old pump stock having become useless and the platform dangerous. A mound or hillock about one hundred feet southeast of the graveyard denotes the spot. "For almost a century," in the language of the late David Harris, "this well supplied a large neighborhood with water, which was exceedingly cool and pleasant to the taste." Adjoining his cabin were sheds for the housing of peltries obtained by traffic, which at stated periods were conveyed to Philadelphia on pack-horses.

Some years prior to 1718 an incident took place in the life of John Harris which has received all sorts of versions, and even doubts of its truthfulness. We shall give it as we believe it, and as traditionary and other facts in our possession supply the material therefor. All the French traders having "gone over Sasquahannah," John Harris monopolized the business at Paxtang. In glancing over the records of the Province of Pennsylvania, frequent allusions are made to the excursions of the northern Indians, either to hunting-grounds in the South or to a conflict with a deadly foe. At one time the Onondagoes, on a predatory excursion against the Talapoosus, in Virginia, descending the Susquehanna, left their canoes at Harris', proceeding thence to the scene of strife. Situated as he was, at the best ford on the river, he commanded an extensive trade. His Indian neighbors (Shawanese) were very friendly, and of course would not allow any strange or predatory bands to molest him. The deadly foe of the red race is rum, and although the selling of it was expressly forbidden by the provincial authorities, yet there was scarcely a treaty or conference without this portion being a part of the presents made by the refined white man to his ignorant red brother. Of a consequence liquor was sold, and we are told by Conrad Weiser that on one occasion "on the Sasquahannah," the Indians whom he was conducting to Philadelphia became so drunk that he was fearful of them and left them. At the period first referred to, it seems a predatory band of Indians, on returning from the Carolinas, or the "Patowmack," naturally halted at John Harris'. In exchanging part of their goods, probably rum—for this seems to have been the principal beverage drunk at that period—was one of the articles in barter. At least we have it by tradition that the Indians became riotous in their drunken revelry, and demanding more rum, were refused by Mr. Harris, who began to fear harm from his visitors. Not to be denied, they again demanded liquor, and seizing him, they took him to a tree near by, binding him thereto. After helping themselves to whatever they wanted of his stores, they danced around the unhappy captive, who no doubt thought his death was nigh.

Prior to this the Indian village of Paxtang had been deserted, and the inhabitants removed to the west side of the Susquehanna. On the bluff opposite John Harris', as also at the mouth of the Yellow Breeches, there were lodges of Shawanese, and these held our Indian trader in high esteem. Information was taken them by Mr. Harris' negro servant, when at once were summoned the warriors, who crossed the river, where, after a slight struggle with the drunken Indians, they rescued from a death of torture their white friend.

Although no mention of these facts is made in the provincial records, there may possibly have been good reason therefor, and it is well known that many incidents, well authenticated in later years, have not been noted in the documents referred to. By tradition and private sources alone are they preserved from oblivion. It was no myth, this attempt to burn John Harris, and although the pen and pencil have joined in making therefrom a romance and heightened it with many a gaudy coloring, yet accurate resources have furnished us with the details here given.

The remains of this tree, which in the memory of the oldest inhabitant bore fruit, stands within the inclosure at Harris Park, a striking memento of that thrilling incident. The late George W. Harris furnished the author with certain corroboratory traditional evidence, which is herewith given. That it did occur was not only traditional in the Harris family but in others. The writer's grandmother, Mrs. Elizabeth (Thomas) Egle, married when a child of fifteen at John Harris', her father then being on his way from Philadelphia to his home at his mill on the Yellow Breeches. John Harris, the founder, in the course of conversation with her father alluded to the mulberry-tree and the rude inclosure of the graves at its foot, and distinctly remembered then hearing the story in detail which we have given.

Robert Harris, a grandson of the Indian trader, stated it as a fact in which he believed. According to a memorandum, made in his lifetime, he stated that a band of Indians came to the house of his grandfather and demanded rum. He saw that they were intoxicated, and he feared mischief if he gave them more rum. They became enraged and tied him to the tree for burning. The alarm was given, and Indians from the opposite side of the river came and, after a struggle, released him.

Eather, a daughter of the first John Harris, left three daughters: Elizabeth, married to Samuel Mac-lay; Isabella, married to William Bell, of New York; and Margaret, married to Isaac Richardson, of Pennsylvania, and then or subsequently living in York County. All of these granddaughters made statements in relation to the occurrence in question.

In the year 1840, G. W. Harris had a conversation with Mrs. Bell on this subject. She stated that she was born in 1760. That in 1766 she was coming from Carlisle, where she lived, to Harrisburg with her father and some of her sisters. When they came to the river opposite to Harrisburg, where William Harris was then living, some of the children pointed to an old man fishing in the river, and they mentioned that he had saved the life of his master, John Harris, from the Indians. She said that she understood it to be when he was tied to the mulberry-tree.

Robert Maclay, of Kishacoquillas Valley, Mifflin County, wrote some years ago a statement as to this matter, from information obtained from his mother and her sisters, Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Richardson. His statement is to the effect that a party of Indians came to trade, and after obtaining what Mr. Harris had given to them, or traded for, they demanded rum, which he refused. They then determined to burn him, and bound him with hickory withes to a mulberry-tree on the bank of the river, and commenced gathering and piling wood around him. While they were gathering wood his negro man Hercules slipped off and informed friendly Indians on the opposite side of the river, who at once came in sufficient force to rescue and save his master. He added, as the statement of these ladies, that Mr. Harris set Hercules free, and that afterwards he directed that he should be buried under the mulberry-tree. Hercules died a considerable time after the death of John Harris, and is buried there.

Mr. Maclay also furnished a statement, which he had heard from his mother, to the effect that some friends endeavored to dissuade the old gentleman, Mr. Harris, from his determination to be buried under the mulberry-tree, alleging that the river-bank was being washed away and the grave might be exposed and perhaps washed away, and that he ought to be buried in the Paxtang church graveyard, but that he silenced all argument by saying that if you bury me out in Paxtang, I'll get up and come back. One of his daughters, Mrs. Elizabeth Finley, is also buried under the mulberry-tree.

Here, then, is the statement of Robert Harris, a grandson of John Harris, and of three of his granddaughters to the alleged occurrence at the mulberry-tree, and Mr. Harris adds that Mrs. Bell and Mrs. Richardson were known to him, and were persons of superior intellect.

Robert Maclay also mentioned an incident, as derived from the same source, that an Indian, in a distressed condition, on a cold night, came to the house of John Harris and sought admission. He was received, and lay by the fire during the night. When the Indians came to the relief of John Harris it is said that this Indian was with them.

As to whether the alarm was given by Hercules, in a conversation with Robert Harris, about the year 1840, in which he said that the alarm on the occasion in question was not given by Hercules, but in some other way, how he did not know; but that Hercules had saved the life of his master on another occasion, I think he said when he was endangered from a steer in a flat on the river. But Mr. Samuel Breck, of Philadelphia, previous to October, 1827, wrote an account relative to Harrisburg, in which, in reference to this alleged occurrence at the mulberry-tree, he states that the Indians who came to the relief of John Harris were led by Hercules, and he adds that the narrative was submitted in substance to the inspection of Mr. Robert Harris, and declared by him to be correct.

When the picture representing that scene (in possession of the State of Pennsylvania) was painted by Reeder, who was in communication with Robert Harris, the latter, it would seem, was of opinion that the alarm was not given by Hercules, and Hercules did not appear in it. His attention may not have been directed especially to the statement relative to Hercules in the narrative of Mr. Breck, or his subsequent recollection may have been at fault. The burden of evidence seems to be that the alarm was given by Hercules, and if it were he is entitled to representation in the picture.

We have been thus explicit because the incident has been stated as untrue, and hence have given such traditional evidence as it has been possible to obtain.

Following the advent of the trader, as emigration to Pennsylvania increased, pressed towards the banks of the Susquehanna the early pioneer. The first assessment-list for what was subsequently Lancaster County is that of the township of "Conestogoe," Chester County, for the year 1718. This was the name of the outlying township of the latter county, which, in 1722, we find to be divided into East and West Conestogoe townships, and from the latter, in 1725, the township of Donegal. As many of the names in the organization of townships and counties belonged eventually to the county of Dauphin, we give the list entire, and the names as in the original. At the period noted the number of "residents taxable" was one hundred and twenty-nine, and the amount of tax levied £40 10s. 1½d.

William Penn, the first proprietary, died in England in 1718, and his son Thomas continued in his minority until 1731; Richard, his other son, until 1732. In this interval their land-office was shut up, so that during that time warrants and patents were not regularly granted by the commissioners of property for transferring lands to applicants. To further the settlement of the then Province within that period, tickets signed by one of the commissioners of property, or by the secretary of the land-office, came into practice. Hence, it would seem, sprung up improvements. The old rule being once relaxed, greater liberties were taken by the people, and emigrants from abroad often seated themselves on vacant lands without permission, and made valuable improvements. The usage of the proprietary land-office was favorable to these settlements. The interests of the proprietaries were promoted, and the pre-emption of the lands they occupied was generally considered as belonging to the settlers. The inhabitants of the frontier counties in particular availed themselves of the usage, and in many instances went much further than was ever intended by the lords of the soil or their officers.

Thomas Penn arrived at Philadelphia in 1732. No warrants appear to have been issued to take up land, but only to resurvey, from 1730 to 1733, when Thomas Penn first signed warrants; and in that year he signed many warrants to settlers for lands, and even stating settlements made many years before.

The prices for land varied. Previous to 1732 there were no fixed prices. The terms agreed upon appear to have been regulated by cash payments, and the annual quit-rents to be afterwards paid. As early as 1684, all warrants were conditional, containing a clause that the land should be improved within a specified time or the warrant to be void. The time varied from six months to a year, and in a few cases to two or more years; and which continued until after 1730, and this may partially account that the urgent request made by old and confidential officers for the establishing a uniform price was constantly rejected.

Perhaps, to understand this subject the better, it should be borne in mind that the proprietary, although Governor and political head of the Province, yet carefully and rigidly kept up the distinction between his political and private rights. He exercised the same absolute power to sell, to whom he pleased, and on what terms he pleased, which every owner of lands exercises, and resisted any interference of the Assembly with these rights constantly and successfully, by his personal influence or that of his Governors here, or by procuring the repeal by the king in council of every law infringing on such his private rights. As a result, prices varied for the first half-century—greatly varied—every month and week and day, by him and his commissioners of property; in short, that difference in price of lands nearly contiguous, or actually contiguous, was what constantly occurred. There was not always injustice or impropriety in this; the difference of soil or location may have been the cause. Besides, it must be recollected that for more than half a century cash was not generally paid on taking out a warrant. The price then very often, if not always, depended in some degree upon the ability to pay cash in hand. No man of his day was more distressed for money than William Penn. He was obliged to mortgage his Province, and was confined for debt in the Fleet Prison in England. Necessity compelled him, therefore, to sell for cash at very low rates; and the propriety and moral necessity of having his Province settled and cultivated made it proper to sell to those who would cultivate and improve the country, and agree to pay interest.

Those who had purchased warrants from William Penn in England, and who had deeds, generally took warrants to survey their lands, and often the first warrant was for only a part, and they might take another warrant or warrants for the residue of their purchase, or might sell the whole or a part, or several parts to several persons, each of whom could take a warrant for his quantity or portion. These were called first purchases. On these warrants, or their alienees, no money was due, and no price mentioned.

From and after 1732 until the 27th of December, 1762, the price was £15 10s. per cent.; interest charged from six months after the date of the warrant when the land was not improved, but if improved, then from the commencement thereof. From Dec. 27, 1762, to Dec. 27, 1763, the price was £9, currency, per cent. From Dec. 27, 1763, to Aug. 6, 1765, the price was again £15 10s. per cent.; but if the land was improved previously to 1762, £15 10s., and interest accordingly. From Aug. 6, 1765, to July 1, 1784, the price was £5 sterling for unimproved land; but if improved, the time at which the improvement was made governed the price. It may be stated in this connection that no price was ever fixed for lands within the manors or proprietary surveys, these being the private property of the proprietaries. The commissioners of property generally sold them at a higher rate than other lands, or on warrants "to agree." In 1739 and ever afterwards they were sold by special agents under special powers.

It is much to be regretted that the correspondence between the proprietaries and their secretary, James Logan, and the provincial surveyors from 1710 to 1740 has never been collated. It would greatly subserve the interests of our early history by throwing light upon a number of transactions in land, and the cause of the state of feeling on the part of the early settlers. The Scotch-Irish were not treated with the same consideration accorded the Germans and Swiss. The latter could locate anywhere, the former not. The Scotch-Irish settled on the manor of Conestoga, but they were removed by force, their cabins burned, and told to go beyond the Conewago. The Germans occupied immediately the land from which the Scotch-Irish had been driven, and warrants therefor to them shortly afterwards granted. All except less than five hundred acres of this celebrated manor was taken up by German settlers, and that was a locality where a few Shawanese Indians had planted themselves, and which in our subsequent history became more than notorious. The Scotch-Irish ejected from the purchased and surveyed lands were pushed across the Conewago and Swatara, where they were allowed to remain. Many of these had settled ten to fifteen years upon the land ere the surveyors entered upon it, and the privilege was afforded to take out warrants. Applications were made at once, but many years elapsed ere the warrant was issued, and frequently the right was transferred by one to another through purchase ere right in the soil was secured from the land-office.

We herewith give the record of such warrants. Many who secured the original warrants sold within a few days thereafter a portion of their land to their neighbors or relatives, as an examination of deeds will evidence. Many of those for whom twenty-five or fifty acres are warranted were for lands adjoining their other lands. There will no doubt be a surprise to our readers at the absence of names of individuals who it is well known were early settlers. This is due to the fact that deeds were given by the proprietaries to the "original purchasers" and others of large tracts of land, giving simply the names of the counties and sometimes the manors in which they were located. These persons sold to many of the early settlers, and although the latter were really the persons entitled to the original warrants, yet through either being relieved from quit-rent or perchance purchasing on more favorable terms, their deeds to the soil came not through the land-office, but through speculators and others.

The date of the warrant is far from the date of settlement. It is frequently stated in these that the land had been settled some years previously. Frequently the interest was to be computed from a period many years anterior to the date of warrants, and to these we have affixed an asterisk (*), which give the date interest commences, and that may have been years after a permanent improvement had been made. There is one thing to the credit of the proprietaries be it said, they never attempted to collect interest beyond the date of purchase from the Indian; but those who had already made improvements a higher price was fixed for land and for quit-rents.

Few, perchance, will attach any particular importance to the record of early warrants given. It has been a work of considerable labor and research, and if not interesting reading in the main, is of real historic value.

It is not to be denied that the Proprietaries had a great deal of trouble with their land. The fact is there were too many "original purchasers," and these seem to have had privileges and advantages which no settler had, and the land-office was for many years in a state of confusion. The following letter from Thomas Penn, one of the Proprietaries, to Secretary Logan, is of valued reference in this connection. The paper was indorsed "Terms for ye Donegallians," but as will be seen were to apply to the townships north of Donegal,—Paxtang, Hanover, Derry, and Lebanon, and is dated "Philada., 23d Jany, 1733."

"LOVING FRIEND: On the Receipt of thy Letter & paper read to the Inhabitants of Donegall, & perusal of them, I found the proposals were disadvantageous to us, & began to Consider the reasons for granting to those people their Lands at a Rate much more moderate than other persons generally pay. 'Tis true some of them applied to the Commissioners before their Settlement, whereas others went without thinking that formality Necessary, but there they have been settled 12 or 15 Years, have paid no Consideration for that favour, neither think they ought. All y't can give them room to expect an answer agreeable to their Inclinations must be from the Services their old Friend may have done them, with me joined to thy Endeavours, for the Speedy Sett'l of their Estates, which all reasonable men would have been uneasy should have been so long delay'd y't have made any Valuable Improvements on the Land.

"For my Last answer to any applications from that Township, I do agree that the Inhabitants shall have their Choice of these 3 proposals:

"Either to pay 16 : 15 & one Shilling a Hund. or Quitrent.
 15 : & 2 Shillings Quitrent.

6 : 10 & 1 penny Sterl. an acre.

"The persons must make Choice before the 1st Day of March next which of these terms they choose to Comply with, & the Consideration money must be that Day paid, or Interest for the Delay, which will be expected shall not be long. The Quitrent commences from the 1st Day of March next, pursuant to which I desire requests may be drawn up, and when thou shalt know how the people shall choose, I desire to be acquainted therewith."

On the 24th of January, Thomas Penn writes to Secretary Logan on the same subject :

"LOVING FRIEND: Having Considered the terms I am willing to offer to the Inhabitants of the Townships under thy Care North of Donegal, as the people are generally unable to pay money, I shall agree that from the first Day of March next, three years & a half shall be allowed them to provide 15£ 10 Shil. for each hundred acres, and that no Interest shall, at the expiration of that time, be demanded for the Delay; that one-half penny an acre, Sterl. money, shall be reserved for the quitrent, & that no persons who shall hereafter settle on the Lands in Your County shall be entitled to any such Length of time, but that all persons settling without proper authority shall be removed in such manner as the Law directs."

The wanton destruction, or carelessness, referable to the county officials of Lancaster, extending over one hundred and fifty years, prevents us from furnishing more interesting facts relating to the coming of the early settlers. Were the assessment-lists in existence from 1730 to the present time positive information could be obtained as to date of settlement, the year of removal, as also those of birth and death.

About the year 1740 the influx of Scotch-Irish was so great that family after family removed down the valley to the Potomac, and beyond to Virginia and the Carolinas, and this tide of emigration was one continued stream until the thunders of the Revolution checked emigration to America. They can be traced from their resting-place among their relations and friends in the townships of Paxtang, Hanover, and Derry to their descendants of the present day, who are prominent among the representative people of the South. The assessment-lists of some of the townships referred to for certain years prior to 1760 contain double the number of names found later on, showing how like bees they swarmed out from the parent hive and sought other, and perchance, more congenial localities.

The "act for erecting the upper part of the Province of Pennsylvania lying towards Susquehannah, Conestogue, Donegal, etc., into a county," became a law on the 10th of May, 1729, and recites as follows :

"WHEREAS, A great number of the Inhabitants of the Upper Parts of Chester County have by their Petition humbly represented to the Governor and Assembly of the Province, the great Hardships they lie under by being at so great a Distance from the Town of Chester, where the Courts of Justice are held, and the Public offices kept; and how hard and difficult it is for the Sober and quiet Inhabitants of that part of the County to secure themselves against the Thefts and Abuses almost daily committed upon them by Idle and dissolute persons, who resort to the remote parts of the Province, and by reason of the great Distance from a Court or Prison, do frequently find means of making their escape; For the removing which inconvenience, and Relief of the said Inhabitants,

"Be it enacted by the Honourable PATRICK GORDON, Esq., Governour of the Province of Pennsylvania, &c., by & with the advice and consent of the Freemen of the said Province, in General Assembly met, and by the Authority of the same, That all and singular the Lands within the Province of Pennsylvania, lying to the Northward of Octoraro Creek, and to the Westward of a Line of marked Trees, running from the North Branch of the said Octoraro Creek, North-Easterly to the River Schuylkill, Be erected into a County, and the same is hereby erected into a County named, & from henceforth to be called LANCASTER COUNTY; And the said Octoraro Creek, the Line of marked Trees, and the River Schuylkill, aforesaid, shall be the boundary Line of Division between the said County and the Countys of Chester and Philadelphia.

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said County of Lancaster, shall have and enjoy all and singular the Jurisdictions, Powers, Rights, Liberties, Privileges & Immunities whatsoever, which any other County within the Province of Pennsylvania doth, may or ought to enjoy, by any Charter of Privileges, or the Laws of this Province, or by any other Ways or means whatsoever, excepting only in the number of Representatives to serve in the General Assembly of this Province, in which case, it is hereby provided and enacted by the authority aforesaid, that, until it shall be otherwise ordered by the Governor and Assembly of this Province, the Freemen and Inhabitants of the said county, qualified by the Laws of this Province to elect, shall annually meet at or near the Court House of the said County, at the same time the other Counties of this Province shall meet for such like Purposes, or at such place where the Courts shall be held, until such Court House shall be erected, and there proceed to choose Inspectors, and to elect four Representatives or Delegates to serve them in Assembly, in the same manner, as by the said Charter and Laws of this Province is directed: which said four Representatives, when so chosen, shall be Members of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, and sit and act as such, as fully and freely, as any of the Representatives for the other Counties within this Province do, may, can, or ought to do.

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all Taxes already laid within the bounds of the said County of Lancaster, by an Act of General Assembly of this Province, which are not already paid, shall be collected by the respective collectors within the bounds aforesaid, and paid into the hands of the Treasurer of Chester County; and that all persons concerned in the Levying, receiving and paying the said Taxes shall have the same Power and Authority, and be under the same penalties and Restrictions, for the Collecting and paying the same, as by the said acts, by which the said Taxes were assessed, are expressed and directed, until the whole be collected and paid as aforesaid.

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the several Courts of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace and Gaol Delivery, and the Courts of Common Pleas for the said County of Lancaster, shall be holden and kept on the first Tuesday in the months of February, May, August and November, in every year, at some proper place within the said County, until a convenient Court House shall be built; and when the same is built and erected in the county aforesaid, the said several Courts shall then be holden and kept at the said Court House on the Days beforementioned: And the Election of Representatives to serve in General Assembly, Assessors and all other officers of the said County, who are or shall be appointed to be annually elected, shall be made and elected at or near the said Court House, at the same time and in the same manner, as by the Charter of Privileges and Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania, is directed to be done in the other Counties of this Province. And it shall be lawful for the Freemen of the said County for the first year, to choose three persons for Commissioners for raising County Rates and Levies for the said County.

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful to and for Caleb Pierce, John Wright, Thomas Edwards, and James Mitchell, or any three of them, to purchase and take assurance to them and their Heirs, of a Piece of land, situate in some convenient place in the said County, to be approved by the Govern'r in Trust and for the use of the said County, and thereon to erect and build, or cause to be erected and built, a Court House and Prison, sufficient to accommodate the Publick Service of the said County, for the Ease and convenience of the Inhabitants.

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That for the Defraying the Charges of purchasing the Land, Building and Erecting the Court House and Prison aforesaid, it shall and may be Lawful to and for the Commissioners and Assessors of the said County, or a Majority of them, who are hereby required to Assess and Levy so much money as the Trustees, or any three of them, shall judge necessary for purchasing the Land and finishing the said Court House and Prison. Provided always, The sum of money so raised do not exceed Three Hundred Pounds, Current Money of the Province.

"Provided always, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no action or suit now commenced and depending in the county of Chester, against any Person living within the Bounds of the said County of Lancaster, shall be stayed or discontinued by this Act, or by anything herein contained, but the same actions already commenced or depending, may be prosecuted, and Judgment thereupon rendered, as if this act had not been made, and that it shall and may be lawful for the Justices of Chester County to Issue any Judicial Process, to be directed to the Sheriff of Lancaster County, for carrying on and obtaining the Effect of their Suits; which Sheriff shall be obliged to yield obedience in Executing of the said writs, and make due return before the Justices of the Court of the said County of Chester, as if the Parties had been living and residing within the same."

The machinery of the new county was soon in operation, but, as had previously been the case in the old county of Chester, political matters were warm, the contest being between the Scotch-Irish and the Quakers, the latter determined to preserve their supremacy, and having in a great measure the aid of the Germans, especially that portion who were of the Mennonite persuasion. In 1731 the political canvass was violent, the candidates being Andrew Galbraith and John Wright, the former a Scotch-Irishman, the latter an English Quaker. Galbraith was elected, and for several years continued to be returned to the Assembly.

Notwithstanding the previous sales and transfers of land in Pennsylvania, the Five Nations continued to lay claim to the greater portion of the Province east of the Susquehanna and all lands adjoining.

In the summer of 1736 the sachems or chiefs of these nations held a great council at Onondaga, in the Province of New York, and as the old claims had not as yet been adjusted, they resolved that an end should be put to all disputes connected with it. They accordingly appointed their sachems or chiefs with plenary powers to repair to Philadelphia, and there, among other things, settle and adjust all demands and claims connected with the Susquehanna and the adjoining lands. On their arrival at Philadelphia they renewed old treaties of friendship, and on the 11th of October, 1736, made a deed to John Penn, Thomas Penn, and Richard Penn, their heirs, successors, and assigns. The deed was signed by twenty-three Indian chiefs of the Onondaga, Seneca, Oneida, and Tuscarora nations, granted the Penns "all the said river Susquehanna, with the lands lying on both sides thereof, to extend eastward as far as the heads of the branches or springs which run into the said Susquehanna, and all the lands lying on the west side of the said river to the setting of the sun, and to extend from the mouth of the said river northward, up the same to the hills or mountains, called in the language of said nations Tayamentasachta, and by the Delaware Indians the Kekachtannin hills." Thus were the claims of the Indians upon the lands of this part of Pennsylvania relinquished to the Proprietaries, nevertheless surveys had been authorized to be made, and had actually been made west of the Susquehanna prior to 1730 by both the Governor of Maryland and the Governor of Pennsylvania. The last-recited deed comprised all that lay within the limits of the Cumberland Valley and the counties of Adams and York, except that portion north of the Kittochtinny, or Blue Mountain, constituting the northern part of Dauphin and the whole of Perry and Bedford. That portion in Dauphin, north of the Kittochtinny Mountain, was purchased, including a larger tract of country, in 1749.

The deed of Aug. 22, 1749, is as follows:

tion called the Shawanese, in consideration of £500, grant, sell, &c., all that tract or parcel of land lying and being within the following limits and bounds, and thus described: Beginning at the hills or mountains called in the language of the Five Nation Indians Tyanuntasachta, or Endless Hills, and by the Delaware Indians Ketactany Hills, on the east side of the river Susquehanna, being in the northwest line or boundary of the tract of land formerly purchased by the said proprietaries from the said Indian nations, by their deed of the 11th of October, 1736; and from thence running up the said river by the several courses thereof to the first of the nearest mountains to the north side or mouth of the creek, called in the language of the said Five Nation Indians Cantagug, and in the language of the Delaware Indians Maghoniow, and from thence extending by a direct or straight line to be run from the said mountain on the north side of said creek to the main branch of Delaware River at the north side of the creek Lechawachsein, and from thence across Lechawachsein creek aforesaid down the river Delaware by the several courses thereof to the Kekachtany Hills aforesaid, and from thence by the range of said hills to the place of beginning, as more fully appears by a map annexed; and also all the parts of the rivers Susquehanna and Delaware from shore to shore which are opposite said lands, and all the Islands in said rivers, &c."

The death of Thomas Lindley, in 1743, who had served in the Assembly for several years, gave rise to another political commotion in Lancaster County. The same year an election was held to fill the vacancy, and the contest was exceedingly bitter. The Scotch-Irish compelled the sheriff to receive such tickets as they approved, and make a return accordingly. This was not what the Quakers, or those in their interests, were willing to permit. That was a right they reserved to themselves. They were not willing to allow the privilege of free suffrage to the former. The Assembly investigated the subject, and resolutions were adopted by that body as follows:

"Resolved, That the sheriff having assumed upon himself the power of being sole judge at the late election, exclusive of the inspectors chosen by the farmers of the said county of Lancaster, is illegal, unwarrantable, and an infringement of the liberties of the people of the Province; that it gave just cause for discontentment to the inhabitants of said county; that if any disturbances followed thereupon, it is justly imputed to his own misconduct.

"Resolved, That the sheriff of Lancaster County be admonished by the speaker."

The sheriff attended, and being admonished, promised that he "would take care and keep the law in future." He thereupon altered the returns to suit the political managers at that time, allowing Samuel Blunston to take his seat. It was an unwarranted assumption of power, and the poor frontiersmen were thus outrageously deprived of their proper representation.

The Germans about this time began to look to their rights as well as their interests, and they determined to maintain these with firmness. The influence of their Scotch-Irish neighbors was beginning to be felt, and as a consequence feared by the Assembly. The other class of Germans who were allied to the Quakers were not in sympathy with the Lutheran, Reformed, and Roman Catholic Germans. Hence troubles arose and serious disturbance at the polls. Of course, it was the "turbulent Irish" of the New England historians, and the Proprietaries, to settle the matter, or rather to take sides with the political demagogues who controlled the law-making power of the Provincial government, directed, after the organization of the counties of York and Cumberland, "that their agents should sell no more lands in York and Lancaster counties to the [Scotch]-Irish, and to make advantageous overtures to the [Scotch]-Irish settlers in Paxtang, Swatara, and Donegal townships to induce them to remove to Cumberland County." The offer was an exceedingly liberal one, and some few accepted it where it was to their advantage, but that hardy and determined race were not to be so easily swerved from their duty. They remained, save those who desired to follow the fortunes and footsteps of their friends westward of the Susquehanna. As events subsequently proved, it is well they did not accept the spider's invitation to the fly.

By direction of the Provincial Government a road or highway was laid out in 1733 from the Schuylkill River through Chester County to the town of Lancaster. "At a Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held at Lancaster for the county of Lancaster the first day of May, in the twelfth year of his Majesty's Reign, Anno Dom. 1739, before John Wright, Tobias Hendricks, Thomas Edwards, Samuel Jones, Andrew Galbreath, Edward Smout, Thomas Lindley, Anthony Shaw, Samuel Boyd, James Armstrong, and Emanuel Carpenter, Esqrs., justices of our Lord the King, the peace of our said Lord the King in the county aforesaid to keep as also divers Felonies, Trespasses, and other Misdeeds in the said County committed to hear & Determine assigned;" and then and there the following order was made:

Some time in the year 1744, John Armstrong, a trader among the Indians residing on the Susquehanna above Peter's Mountain, on the east side of the river, with two of his servants or men, namely James Smith and Woodworth Arnold, was murdered by an Indian of the Delaware tribe named Musemeelin, on the Juniata River. Seven white men and five Indians went in search of the bodies of those murdered; after some search found and buried them. The murderer was afterwards apprehended, and delivered up by his own nation, and imprisoned at Lancaster, whence he was removed to Philadelphia, lest he should escape, or his trial and execution produce an unfavorable impression on his countrymen about to assemble for a conference with the whites at Lancaster. The Governor directed or required that the property of Armstrong should be returned to his family. He also invited a deputation to attend the trial of Musemeelin, and his execution, if found guilty. The following deposition of the men who went in search of the remains of the murdered, was certified to before James Armstrong, one of his majesty's justices of the peace for the County of Lancaster, dated at Paxtang, 19th day of April, 1744:

"The deposition of the subscribers testifyeth and saith, that the subscribers having a suspicion that John Armstrong, trader, together with two men, James Smith and Woodworth Arnold, were murdered by the Indians. They met at the house of Joseph Chambers, in Paxtang, and there consulted to go to Shamokin, to consult with the Delaware King and Shickelamy, and there council what they should do concerning the affair, whereupon the King and Council ordered eight of their men to go with the deponents to the house of James Berry, in order to go in quest of the murdered persons, but that night they came to the said Berry's house, three of the eight Indians ran away, and the next morning these deponents, with the five Indians that remained, set out on their journey peaceably to the last supposed sleeping-place of the deceased, and upon their arrival these deponents dispersed themselves in order to find out the corpse of the deceased, and one of the deponents named James Berry, a small distance from the aforesaid sleeping-place, came to a white-oak-tree, which had three notches on it, and close by said tree he found a shoulder-bone, which the deponent does suppose to be John Armstrong's, and that he himself was eating by the Indians, which he carried to the aforesaid sleeping-place, and showed it to his companions, one of whom handed it to the said five Indians to know what bone it was, and they, after passing different sentiments upon it, handed it to a Delaware Indian who was suspected by the deponents, and they testify and say that as soon as the Indian took the bone in his hand, his nose gushed out with blood, and directly handed it to another. From whence these deponents steered along a path about three or four miles to the Narrows of Juniata, where they suspected the murder to have been committed, and where the Allegheny road crosses the creek, these deponents sat down, in order to consult on what measures to take in order to proceed on a discovery.

"Whereupon most of the white men, these deponents, crossed the creek again, and went down the creek, and crossed into an island, where these deponents had intelligence the corpse had been thrown; and there they met the rest of the white men and Indians, who were in company, and there consulted to go further down the creek in quest of the corpse, and these deponents further say, they ordered the Indians to go down the creek on the other side; but they all followed these deponents at a small distance, except one Indian who crossed the creek again; and soon after these deponents seeing some Bald eagles and other fowls, suspected the corpse to be thereabouts; and they lost sight of the Indians, and immediately found one of the corpse, which these deponents say was the corpse of James Smith, one of said Armstrong's men; and directly upon finding the corpse these deponents heard three shots of guns, which they had great reason to think were the Indians, their companions, who had deserted from them; and in order to let them know that they had found the corpse these deponents fired three guns, but to no purpose, for they never saw the Indians any more. And about a quarter of a mile further down the creek, they saw more Bald eagles, whereupon they made down towards the place, where they found another corpse (being the corpse of Woodworth Arnold, the other servant of said Armstrong) lying on a rock, and then went to the former sleeping-place, where they had appointed to meet the Indians, but saw no Indians, only that the Indians had been there and cooked some victuals for themselves, and had gone off.

"And that night, the deponents further say, they had great reason to suspect that the Indians were then thereabouts, and intended to do them some damage; for a dog these deponents had with them barked that night, which was remarkable, for the said dog had not barked all the time they were out till that night, nor ever since, which occasioned these deponents to stand upon their guard behind the trees, with their guns cocked that night. Next morning these deponents went back to the corpses, which they found to be barbarously and inhumanly murdered by very gashed, deep cuts on their hands with a tomahawk or such like weapon, which had sunk into their skulls and brains; and in one of the corpses there appeared a hole in his skull near the cut, which was supposed to be with a tomahawk, which hole, these deponents do believe to be a bullet-hole. And these deponents, after taking a particular view of the corpses, as their melancholy condition would admit, they buried them as decently as their circumstances would allow, and returned home to Paxtang, the Allegheny road to John Harris', thinking it dangerous to return the same way they went out. And further these deponents say not.

The first signer was a brother of the murdered man, and resided on the river above Armstrong's Creek. He addressed a letter to Allummapees,¹ king

¹ Allummapees, or Sassoonan, was hereditary king of the Delaware, and originally resided on the Delaware River until after the Indians signed the release for the lands between that river and the Susquehanna in 1718, when he removed to Shamokin, now Sunbury. On the 18th of September, 1718, Allummapees was at the head of a delegation of Indian chieftains at Philadelphia, who signed an absolute release to the Proprietaries for all the "land situated between the rivers Delaware and the Susquehanna from Duck Creek to the mountains on this side of Lechay." The name signed to the deed was Sassoonan. On the 18th of April, 1728, the Provincial Council of Pennsylvania "Ordered, that three match coats be given to James Le Tort and John Scull, to be by them delivered to Allummapees, Mrs. Montour and Manawhytickon, and that a proper message be drawn up that the Indians may be induced to discover what they know touching" certain reports of an intended hostility on the part of some of the Western Indians, in which the name of Madame Montour and Manawhytickon was mixed up.

On July 4th, Allummapees and other Indians arrived in Philadelphia, and on the 5th called the attention of the Council to the settlement of the Palatines on the Tulpehocken lands, which Allummapees asserted were not included in the deed made on the 18th of September, 1718. On investigation it appeared that the settlements were made by permission of the late Governor, Sir William Keith; but by the advice of James of the Delawares, then at Shamokin, touching the death of his brother and some threats made by some Delaware Indians upon his life :

Logan the Indians consented to wait till such time as the matter could be adjusted.

On the 10th of the following October Allummapees and other chiefs arrived in Philadelphia and spent two days in friendly council.

Aug. 4, 1731. Governor Gordon delivered a written message to the Council, in which he said "that such frequent complaints of late had been made of the abuses committed by carrying large quantities of rum amongst the Indians, that it would be necessary for the Legislature to take the same into their consideration and to provide a remedy to so great an evil; that to this pernicious liquor a late unhappy accident in the chief family of our Delaware Indians had been in a great measure owing, viz.: the death of Shackatawin, whom Sassoonan, his uncle, had in a fit of drunkenness killed."

On the 20th of August, 1736, Allummapees and twenty-four other Indians came to Philadelphia. He said "they were not come on any particular business, or to treat about anything of importance, but only to pay a friendly visit." It appeared in the course of the interview that Allummapees was then an old man.

On the 3d of October, 1738, Allummapees, "with divers of their ancient men," and other old and young Indians, came to Philadelphia to visit Governor Thomas Penn. Being called into the Council, he, in behalf of himself and his people said, "That when he was at his own house, he heard his brother, the Governor, was arrived in this country, and thereupon he resolved to come to Philadelphia to visit him, and that now he was glad to see him. His brother, the Proprietor, had told him he should come once a year to visit him, and that he was come on hearing of the Governor's arrival and was glad to see him in good health." He then presented three bundles of deer skins, which he said were a trifle and of little value, but he had no more, and desired the Governor to accept them to make him gloves. The next day the Governor presented Allummapees "a match-coat, laced with silver, and a silver-laced hat."

On the 1st of August, 1740, Allummapees, with sundry Delaware and Mingo Indians, held a council with the government in the Quaker meeting-house in Philadelphia. Allummapees in his address said, "I tell you we came from Allegheny, a long way off." And again he said, "Your young men have killed so many deer, beavers, beas, and game of all sorts, that we can hardly find any for ourselves; therefore, we desire that your people would abstain from hunting, that we may have the benefit of it to support ourselves, for God has made us hunters, and the white people have other ways of living without that. I have brought down my gun and my ax broken as we have no smith living among us and I hope you will get them mended for me. Brother Thomas Penn and Governor, we have brought you one hundred good buckskins, and not one doeskin among them. Brethren, I have said a great deal; I am now grown old, so that I could hardly come down to you for want of a horse, and I have been sometimes obliged to borrow one."

Although Allummapees' name appears as present on the 9th and 12th of July, 1742, at the treaty held in Philadelphia, there is no evidence of his taking any part in the business, and this appears to have been his last visit to Philadelphia.

In the spring of 1743, Allummapees being unable to travel, sent a message to the Governor by Sachsidowa, who delivered it on the 22d of April. At the period of the murder of Armstrong, information was sent to Council that Allummapees was ill.

June the 4th, 1745, Bishop Spangenberg wrote: "We also visited Allummapees, the hereditary King of the Indians. His sister's sons are either dead or worthless, hence it is not known on whom the Kingdom will descend. He is very old, almost blind, and very poor; but withal has still power over and is beloved by his people, and is a friend of the English."

A year later Conrad Weiser writes: "Allummapees has no successor of his relatives, and will hear of none as long as he lives;" and on Sept. 27, 1747, he writes from Tulpehocken: "I understand that Allummapees is dead; I cannot say I am sure of it;" and October 15th he writes: "Allummapees is dead."

Notwithstanding these statements in regard to his having no successor, he had a great-grandson three years of age when he died. John Montour's mother, the first wife of Andrew Montour, was a granddaughter of Allummapees. The evidence of this is as follows: "On the 20th [of April, 1786,] the Indians had a long conference with the Gov-

"PAXTANG, ye 25th April, 1744.

"To Allumoppies, King of the Delawares: Great Sir, as a parcel of our men have murdered my brother and two of his men, I wrote you, knowing you to be a king of justice, that you will send us in all the murderers and the men that were with them. As I looked for the corpse of my murdered brother; for that reason your men threaten my life, and I cannot live in my house. Now, as we have no inclination or mind to go to war with you, our friends, as a friend I desire that you will keep your men from doing me harm, and also to send the murderers and their companions.

"I expect an answer; and am your much hurt friend and brother,
"ALEXANDER ARMSTRONG."

The atrocity of this murder was so aggravating that a Provincial Council was held, and it was resolved that Conrad Weiser, the Provincial interpreter and Indian agent, should be sent to Shamokin to make demands in the name of the Governor for some others concerned in the murder. The following extracts give a detailed account of all the circumstances :

"At a council held April 25, 1744, The Governor, George Thomas, laid before the Board a letter dated April 22, 1744, from Mr. Cookson, at Lancaster, purporting that John Armstrong, an Indian trader, with his two servants, Woodworth Arnold and James Smith, had been murdered at Juniata by three Delaware Indians, and that John Musemeelin and Johnson, of Neshalleeny, two of the Indians concerned in the murder, had been seized by the order of Shickcalamy and the other Indian chiefs at Shamokin and sent under a guard of Indians to be delivered up to justice; that one was actually delivered up in jail at Lancaster, but the other had made his escape from the persons to whose care he was committed.

"His honor then sent to the Chief Justice to consult him about the steps proper to be taken to bring the Indian to his trial, but as he was absent at a Court of Oyer and Terminer in Bucks county, it was the opinion of the Board that the Indian, Musemeelin, should be immediately removed to Philadelphia jail, and that Conrad Weiser should be immediately dispatched to the chiefs of the Delaware Indians at Shamokin to make a peremptory demand in his honor's name of the other murderers concerned, and that Shickcalamy and the other Indians there do order immediate search to be made for the goods of which the deceased was robbed, in order to their being put into the hands of his brother for the satisfaction of his creditors or the support of his family. And at the same time to inform them that the chiefs of the Indians which shall meet at Lancaster on the treaty with our neighboring governments will be desired to depute some of their number to be present at the trial and at the execution of such as shall be found guilty."

Conrad Weiser was accordingly sent to Shamokin. He writes in his journal, Shamokin, May 2, 1744 :

"This day I delivered the Governor's message to Allumoppies the Delaware chief, and the rest of Delaware Indians in the presence of Shickcalamy and a few more of the Six Nations. The purport of which was, that I was sent express by the Governor and Council to demand those that had been concerned with Musemeelin in murdering John Armstrong, Woodworth Arnold, and James Smith; that their bodies might be searched for, and decently buried; that the goods be likewise found and restored without fraud. It was delivered them by me in the Mohawk language, and interpreted into Delaware by Andrew, Madame Montour's son."

In the afternoon Allummapees, in the presence of the aforesaid Indians, made the following answers :

ernor. They put Andrew Montour's children under his care, as well the three that are to be here independent of the mother as a boy of twelve years old, that he had by a former wife, a Delaware, a granddaughter of Allummapees."—Col. Rec., vii. 95. This John Montour held a captain's commission in the Revolutionary war, and served with credit in the West under Col. Daniel Brodhead. He must not be confounded with John Montour, the son of Queen Catharine, who adhered to the Crown.

"Brother, the Governor: It is true that we, the Delaware Indians, by the instigation of the evil spirit, have murdered Jas. Armstrong and his men; we have transgressed, and we are ashamed to look up. We have taken the murderer and delivered him to the relations of the deceased, to be dealt with according to his works.

"Brother, the Governor: Your demand for the guard is very just; we have gathered some of them; we will do the utmost of what we can to find them all. We do not doubt but we can find out the most part, and whatever is wanting, we will make up with skins, which is what the guard are sent for to the woods.

"Brother, the Governor: The dead bodies are buried. It is certain that John Armstrong was buried by the murderer, and the other two by those that searched for them. Our hearts are in mourning, and we are in a dismal condition, and cannot say anything at present."

Then Shickcalamy with the rest of the Indians of the Six Nations there present said: "Brother, the Governor—We have been all misinformed on both sides about the unhappy accident. Musemeelin has certainly murdered the three white men himself, and upon his bare accusation of Neshaleeny's son, which was nothing but spite, the said Neshaleeny's son was seized, and made a prisoner. Our cousins, the Delaware Indians, being then drunk, in particular Allumoppes, never examined things, but made an innocent person prisoner, which gave a great deal of disturbance amongst us. However the two prisoners were sent, and by the way in going down the river they stopped at the house of James Berry; James told the young man, 'I am sorry to see you in such a condition, I have known you from a boy, and always loved you.' Then the young man seemed to be very much struck to the heart, and said, 'I have said nothing yet, but I will tell all, let all the Indians come up, and the white people also, they shall hear it.' And then told Musemeelin in the presence of the people: 'Now I am going to die for your wickedness; you have killed all the three white men. I never did intend to kill any of them.' The Musemeelin in anger said: 'It is true, I have killed them; I am a man, you are a coward; it is a great satisfaction to me to have killed them; I will die with joy for having killed a great rogue and his companions.' Upon which the young man was set at liberty by the Indians.

"We desire therefore our brother, the Governor, will not insist to have either of the two young men in prison or condemned to die: it is not with Indians as with white people, to put people in prison on suspicion or trifles. Indians must first be found guilty of a crime, then judgment is given and immediately executed. We will give you faithfully all the particulars; and at the ensuing treaty entirely satisfy you; in the mean time, we desire that good friendship and harmony continue; and that we may live long together, is the hearty desire of your brethren, the Indians of the United Six Nations present at Shamokin."

The following is what Shickcalamy declared to be the truth of the story concerning the murder of John Armstrong, Woodworth Arnold, and James Smith from the beginning to the end, to wit:

"That Musemeelin owing some skins to John Armstrong, the said Armstrong seized a horse of the said Musemeelin and a rifled gun; the gun was taken by James Smith, deceased. Some time last winter Musemeelin met Armstrong on the river Juniata, and paid all but twenty shillings, for which he offered a neck-belt in pawn to Armstrong and demanded his horse, and James Armstrong refused it and would not deliver up the horse but enlarged the debt, as his usual custom was, and after some quarrel the Indian went away in great anger without his horse to his hunting cabin. Some time after this, Armstrong with his two companions in their way to Ohio passed by the said Musemeelin's hunting cabin, his wife only being at home demanded the horse of Armstrong because he was her proper goods, but did not get him. Armstrong had by this time sold or lent the horse to James Berry; after Musemeelin came from hunting his wife told him that Armstrong was gone by, and that she had demanded the horse of him but did not get him—and as is thought pressed him to pursue and take revenge of Armstrong. The third day in the morning after James Armstrong was gone by, Musemeelin said to the two young men that hunted with him come let us go towards the Great Hills to hunt bears; accordingly they went all three in company; after they had gone a good way Musemeelin who was foremost was told by the two young men that they were out of their course. Come you along said Musemeelin, and they accordingly followed him till they came to the path that leads to the Ohio. Then Musemeelin told them he had a good mind to go and fetch his horse back from Armstrong, and desired the two young men to come along; accordingly they went. It was then almost night, and they travelled till next morning. Musemeelin said, now they are not far off. We will make ourselves black, then they will be frightened and will deliver up the horse immediately, and I will tell Jack that if he don't give me the horse I will kill him, and when he said so he laughed. The young men thought he joked as he used to do. They did not black'n themselves but he did. When the sun was above the trees, or about an hour high, they all came to the fire where they found James Smith sitting, and they also sat down. Musemeelin asked where Jack was? Smith told him that he was gone to clear the road a little. Musemeelin said he wanted to speak with him, and went that way, and after he had gone a little distance from the fire he said something and looked back laughing, but he having a thick throat and his speech being very bad, and their talking with Smith hindered them from understanding what he said they did not mind it. They being hungry, Smith told them to kill some turtles, of which there were plenty, and we would make some bread, and by and by they would all eat together. While they were talking they heard a gun go off not far off, at which time Woodworth Arnold was killed as they learned afterwards.

"Soon after Musemeelin came back and said, why did you not kill that white man according as I bid you, I have laid the other two down? At this they were surprised, and one of the young men, commonly called Jimmy, run away to the riverside. Musemeelin said to the other how will you do to kill Catawas, if you cannot kill white men? You cowards, I'll show you how you must do! and then taking up the English axe that lay there, he struck it three times into Smith's head before he died. Smith never stirred. Then he told the young Indian to call the other; but he was so terrified he could not call. Musemeelin then went and fetched him, and said to him that two of the white men were killed, he must go now and kill the third, then each of them would have died one. But neither of them dare venture to talk anything about it. Then he pressed them to go along with him—he went foremost; then one of the young men told the other as they went along, my friend, don't you kill any of the white people, let him do what he will; I have not killed Smith, he has done it himself; We have no need to do such a barbarous thing. Musemeelin being then a good way before them in a hurry, they soon saw John Armstrong sitting upon an old log. Musemeelin spoke to him and said, Where is my horse? Armstrong made answer and said, He will come by and by; you shall have him. I want him now, said Musemeelin. Armstrong answered, You shall have him. Come, let us go to that fire,—which was at some distance from the place where Armstrong sat,—and let us talk and smoke together. Go along, then, said Musemeelin. I am coming, said Armstrong, do you go before; Musemeelin, do you go foremost. Armstrong looked then like a dead man, and went towards the fire and was immediately shot in his back by Musemeelin and fell. Musemeelin then took his hatchet and struck it into Armstrong's head, and said, Give me my horse, I tell you. By this time one of the young men had fled again that had gone away before, but he returned in a short time. Musemeelin then told the young men they must not offer to discover or tell a word about what had been done for their lives, but they must help him to bury Jack, and the other two were to be thrown into the river. After that was done, Musemeelin ordered them to load the horses and follow towards the hill, where they intended to hide the goods; accordingly they did, and as they were going Musemeelin told them that as there were a great many Indians hunting about that place, if they should happen to meet with any, they must be killed to prevent betraying them. As they went along, Musemeelin going before, the two young men agreed to run away as soon as they could meet with any Indians, and not to hurt any body. They came to the desired place, the horses were unloaded, and Musemeelin opened the bundles, and offered the two young men each a parcel of goods. They told him that as they had already sold their skins, and everybody knew they had nothing, they would certainly be charged with a black action, were they to bring any goods to the town, and therefore they would not accept of any; but promised, nevertheless, not to betray him. Now, says Musemeelin, I know what you were talking about when you stayed so far behind.

"The two young men being in great danger of losing their lives—of which they had been much afraid all that day—accepted of what he offered to them, and the rest of the goods they put in a heap and covered them from the rain, and then went to their hunting cabin. Musemeelin unexpectedly finding two or three more Indians there, laid down his goods, and said he had killed Jack Armstrong and taken pay for his horse, and should any of them discover it, that person he would likewise kill; but otherwise they might all take a part of the goods. The young man called Jimmy went away to Shamokin after Musemeelin was gone to bury the goods with three more Indians, with whom he had prevailed; one of them was Neshaleeny's son, whom he had ordered to kill James Smith, but these Indians would not have any of the goods. Some time after the young Indian had been in Shamokin, it was whispered about that some of the Delaware Indians had killed Armstrong and his men. A drunken Indian came to one of the Tudolous houses at night and told the man of the house that he could tell him a piece of bad news. What is that? said the other. The drunken man said, some of our Delaware Indians have killed Armstrong and his men, which, if our chiefs should not resent, and take them up, I will kill them myself to prevent a disturbance between us and the white people, our brother. Next morning Shickcalamy and some other Indians of the Delawares were called to assist Allumoppies in council. When Shickcalamy and Allumoppies got one of the Tudolous Indians to write a letter to me to desire me to come to Shamokin in all haste, that the Indians were much dissatisfied in mind. This letter was brought to my house by four Delaware Indians sent express; but I was then in Philadelphia, and when I came home and found all particulars mentioned in this letter, and that none of the Indians of the Six Nations had been down, I did not care to meddle with Delaware Indian affairs, and stayed at home till I received the Governor's orders to go, which was about two weeks after. Allumoppies was advised by his council to employ a conjurer, or, as they called it, to find out the murderers. Accordingly he did, and the Indians met, the Sorcerer being busy all night, told them in the morning to examine such and such an one, they were present when Armstrong was killed, naming the two young men. Musemeelin was present. Accordingly Allumoppies, Quiltheyquent, and Thomas Green, an Indian, went to him that had fled first and examined him; he told the whole story very freely; then they went to the other, but he would not say a word, but went away and left him. The three Indians returned to Shickcalamy and informed them of what discovery they had made, when it was agreed to secure the murderers, and deliver them up to the white people. Then a great noise arose among the Delaware Indians, and some were afraid of their lives, and went into the woods. Not one cared to meddle with Musemeelin and the other that could not be prevailed on to discover anything, because of the resentment of their families; but they being pressed by Shickcalamy's son to secure the murderers, otherwise they would be cut off from the chain of friendship. Four or five of the Delawares made Musemeelin and the other young men prisoners, and tied them both. They lay twenty-four hours, and none would venture to conduct them down, because of the great division among the Delaware Indians. And Allumoppies, in danger of being killed, fled to Shickcalamy and begged his protection. At last Shickcalamy's son, Jack, went to the Delawares, most of them being drunk, as they had been for several days, and told them to deliver the prisoners to Alexander Armstrong, and they were afraid to do it. They might separate their heads from their bodies and lay them in the canoe, and carry them to Alexander to roast and eat them, that would satisfy his revenge as he wants to eat Indians. They prevailed with the said Jack to assist them, and accordingly he and his brother and some of the Delawares went with two canoes and carried them off."

Conrad Weiser, in a letter to a friend, dated Heidelberg, 1746, adverts to an interesting incident which occurred at the conclusion of this interview at Shamokin. He says,—

"Two years ago I was sent by the Governor to Shamokin, on account of the unhappy death of John Armatong, the Indian trader (1744). After I had performed my errand, there was a feast prepared, to which the Governor's messengers were invited; there were about one hundred persons present, to whom, after we had in great silence devoured a fat bear, the eldest of the chiefs made a speech, in which he said: 'That by a great misfortune three of the brethren, the white men, had been killed by an Indian; that nevertheless the sun was not set (meaning there was no war), it had only been somewhat darkened by a small cloud, which was now done away; he that had done evil was like to be punished, and the land remain in peace: therefore, he exhorted his people to thankfulness to God;' and, therefore, he began to sing with an awful solemnity but without expressing any words; the others accompanied him with great earnestness of fervor, spoke these words, 'Thanks, thanks be to thee, thou great Lord of the world, in that thou hast again caused the sun to shine, and hast dispersed the dark cloud; the Indians are thine.'"

From this time on, for a period of ten years, we hear of no Indian outrages. The Indian referred to was not, as should have been done, tried and executed. The murder of Armstrong was an atrocious one, and the offender should have been promptly dealt with.

Like escaped murderers in these days, he was lionized by "certain parties," and subsequently returned to his wigwam, from which in after-years he emanated when some scalping party or bloody fray was inaugurated.

In 1745 that pious Moravian, Bishop Spangenberg, in company with two other members of the mission board of the church, undertook a journey to Onondaga to treat with the Six Nations for permission for the Moravian Indians to remove to Wyoming. From his notes of travel, as his route lay through the northern part of Dauphin County, we make such extracts as may be of local interest. The party set out from Bethlehem on the 24th of May. On the 30th, at Tulpehocken, Conrad Weiser and his two sons joined them. Spangenberg then continues,—". . . After travelling ten miles we came to the Kittatinny Hills,¹ which are high and rocky, and difficult for horses to climb. On reaching the top we came to Pilger Ruh,² where we dismounted and rested. After descending we entered Anton's Wilderness,³ where we pitched our first tents, built a fire, pastured our horses, partook of a light supper, and retired to rest. Our course to-day was northwest.

"May 31st. Arose early, looked up our horses, took a little breakfast, and then continued our journey in the name of God, our Saviour. Brother Meurer and Nicke returned to Tulpehocken with letters to Mary Spangenberg, at Bethlehem. After passing the Great Swatara we climbed the Thurnstein,⁴ a high mountain, rocky and almost impassable for horses. On the high summit we refreshed ourselves at Erdmuth's Spring,⁵ which flows through the valleys until it empties into the Susquehanna. We were four hours in crossing the mountain. At Ludwig's Ruh,⁶ at the foot of the mountain, we nooned. Here Laurel Creek⁷ flows past. After dinner our course was northwest. We passed through Anna's Valley,⁸ beautiful and pleasing to the eyes, which lies in among the hills.

² "Pilgrims' Rest," a plain on the top of the mountain. The passage of the mountain was effected at the Great Swatara Gap, called Tobliho by the Indians, corrupted into "The Hole."

³ Anthony's Wilderness is noted on Lewis Evans' map of 1749. It included the valley through which runs Stony Creek. It was named for Anthony Seyfert, one of the nine colonists whom Spangenberg led to Georgia in 1735, where the Moravians proposed establishing themselves with a view of commencing missions among the Creeks and Cherokees.

⁴ Peter's Mountain. It has been stated that this name was given to it by Conrad Weiser, in honor of Zinzendorf, when guiding him to Shamokin in 1742. This is certainly a mistake. As early as 1725, Peter Allen was located at the foot of that mountain, near the Susquehanna, and in 1729 it was thus named, and undoubtedly for him.

⁸ Named in honor of Anna Nitschman, who accompanied Zinzendorf to Shamokin in 1742. It is what is now so widely known as Lykens Valley.

At the Double Eagle,¹ on Benigna's Creek,² we passed the night."

After their stay at Onondaga, about ten days, Spangenberg and his party began their return journey on the 29th of June. On the 10th of July they had reached the Double Eagle, on Mahantango Creek. The journal thus concludes:

"... Here we found encamped a family of Indians, who, on learning from whence we had come, said we must be tired, and the man said to his wife, 'Give them some spits full of venison.' In return, Bro. Spangenberg gave them knives and thimbles. Nooned at Benigna's Creek, and at nightfall came to the Thurnstein. As we were leading our horses down, Bro. Spangenberg, who was in advance, heard the rattle of a rattlesnake and called to us to come and kill it, but it could not be found. Encamped at the base of the Thurnstein on the Swatara.

"July 11. Our course was southeast. We early entered 'Anton's Wilderness,' thence over the Kittatinny Mountain, and nooned on the Little Swatara. From thence we proceeded to Christopher Weiser's."

The year 1740 is remarkable in the annals of Pennsylvania for the labors of the celebrated enthusiastic itinerant Whitefield. He landed at Lewistown in November, 1739, and soon after came to Philadelphia. His arrival disturbed the religious harmony which had hitherto prevailed. He drew to himself many followers from all denominations, who, influenced by the energy of his manner, the thunder of his voice, and his flowing eloquence, were ready to subscribe his unnatural and incomprehensible faith, professing their willingness to endure eternal damnation that they might be forever saved. His disciples were chiefly the illiterate and uninformed, who made up in zeal what they lacked in knowledge. Their number seems to have awed the journalists, who would not venture to correct the misstatements of his friends without an apology for interference. Like most reformers, he turned the force of his artillery against the amusements and pleasures of society. He visited the Susquehanna, and remained some time in and about Harris' Ferry, preaching repeatedly to the people, who flocked from all quarters to hear him. Many of the settlers neglected the cultivation of their farms, and their fields were left unsown. Parson Elder, Mr. Harris, and others remonstrated with them on their improvidence, but ineffectually, and the consequences were likely to prove serious, since not a few at the end of the season found themselves in want.

In 1747 there were great fears of an invasion of the frontiers of Pennsylvania by the French and their Indian allies. The inhabitants mustered for their defense, and two associated regiments were formed in Lancaster County, one on the east, the other on the west side of the Susquehanna. Of the regiment organized east of the river, fifteen of the eighteen companies were raised within the present limits of Dauphin and Lebanon Counties. They were in truth "a fighting people," were strong in defense of their rights, and in true loyalty and patriotism were not equaled by any settlement in the colonies of America. The officers were:

Lieutenant-Colonel.

James Galbraith, of Derry.

Major.

Robert Baker, of Paxtang.

Captain—Hugh Patrick.

Lieutenant—Thomas McDowell.

Ensign—Thomas Grubb.

Captains—James Gillespie,—to lieutenant-colonel of regiment for West End (Cumberland Valley) of Lancaster County.

In the years 1751 and 1752 the cereal crops were very abundant, as we find by the following from the Chronicon Ephratensis. These years were followed by a season of scarceness from 1753 to 1755, and upon this came the Indian war. The Ephrata Chronicle says,—

“The years 1751 and 1752 have been so fruitful in wheat and other grain that men in wanton carelessness sought to waste the supply; for the precious wheat, which might have supported many poor, they used to fatten hogs which afterwards they consumed in their sumptuousness. Besides, distilleries were erected everywhere, and thus this great blessing was turned into strong drink, which gave rise to much disorder.”

Emigration to Pennsylvania was continually on the increase, and by reference to the early warrantees and such assessment-lists as have come down to us, it will be seen that there was a continual stream of Scotch-Irish settlers, who halted a while among their friends and former neighbors in Paxtang, Hanover, and Derry, from whence they followed the tide of migration into the beautiful and fertile valleys to the southward. Homes—permanent homes—were being built, and the hardy pioneer was beginning to look for his reward from the broad acres which began to delight his eye, and the dreams of years were about to be realized when, like a demon of desolation, came the atrocious border wars from 1754 to 1764.

CHAPTER IV.

The French and Indian War—Petition of the Inhabitants for Protection—Braddock's Expedition—The Atrocities of the Savages—Correspondence of John Harris and others relating to the Frontiers.

THERE were few Indian outrages committed within the limits of Dauphin County prior to 1755. The inhabitants, however, were, owing to several murders on the Potomac in Virginia and on the frontiers of Cumberland County, becoming very uneasy. They had little faith in the friendship of the Indians, and they apprehended war, knowing full well the influence of the French over the savages, and whose devilish propensities needed but little prompting to have them desolate the pioneer homes of Pennsylvania. On the 22d of July, 1754, the following petition was laid before the Governor of the Province:

The humble petition of the inhabitants of the townships of Paxtang, Derry, and Hanover, Lancaster Co., humbly sheweth that your petitioners, being settled on and near the river Susquehanna, apprehend themselves in great danger from the French and French Indians, as it is in their power several times in the year to transport themselves, with ammunition, artillery, and every necessary, down the said river; and their conduct of late to the neighboring provinces increases our dread of a speedy visit from them, as we are as near and convenient as the provinces already attacked, and are less capable of defending ourselves, as we are unprovided with arms and ammunition and unable to purchase them. A great number are warm and active in these parts for the defense of themselves and country were they enabled so to do (although not such a number as would be able to withstand the enemy). We, your petitioners, therefore humbly pray that your Honor would take our distressed condition into consideration and make such provision for us as may prevent ourselves and families from being destroyed and ruined by such a cruel enemy; and your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

An alarming crisis was at hand. The French, now hovering around the great lakes, sedulously applied themselves to seduce the Indians from their allegiance to the English. The Shawanese had already joined them; the Delawares waited only for an opportunity to revenge their wrongs; and of the Six Nations, the Onondagas, Cayugas, and Senecas were wavering. To keep the Indians in favor of the Province required much cunning diplomacy and expensive presents. In this alarming juncture the old flame of civil dissension burst out with increased force. The presents to the Indians, with the erection of a line of forts along the frontier, and the maintenance of a military force, drew heavily upon the provincial purse. The Assembly, the popular branch, urged that the Proprietary estates should be taxed, as well as those of humble individuals. The Proprietaries, through their deputies, refused, and pleaded prerogative, charter, and law; the Assembly in turn pleaded equity, common danger, and common benefit, requiring a common expense. The Proprietaries offered bounties in lands yet to be conquered from the Indians, and the privilege of issuing more paper money; the Assembly wanted something more tangible. The Assembly passed laws, laying taxes, and granting supplies, but annexing conditions; the Governors opposed the conditions, but were willing to aid the Assembly in taxing the people, but not the Proprietaries. Here were the germs of revolution, not fully matured until twenty years later. In the mean time the frontiers were left exposed, while these frivolous disputes continued. The pacific principles, too, of the Quakers, and Dunkards, and Mennonites, and Schwenkfelders, came in to complicate the strife; but as the danger increased, they prudently kept aloof from public office, leaving the management of the war to sects less scrupulous. The pulpit and the press were deeply involved in the discussion, and the population was divided into opposing factions upon this question.

In his message to the Assembly in August, 1754, the Governor says, "The people of the upper parts of Lancaster County are so apprehensive of danger at this critical juncture from the nearness of French and savages under their influence, that the principal inhabitants have in the most earnest manner, petitioned me to provide for their protection; representing withal, that a great number would be warm and active in defense of themselves and their country, were they enabled so to be, by being supplied with arms and ammunition, which many of them are unable to purchase at their own private expense. The substance of these several petitions, which I shall likewise order to be laid before you, appears to me, gentlemen, to be of the greatest importance, and well worthy of your most serious attention. You may be assured that nothing which depends on me shall be wanting towards affording them the protection they desire; but you cannot at the same time but be sensible how little it is in my power to answer their expectations without the aid of your house. It becomes then my indispensable duty, and I cannot on any account whatever, excuse myself from pressing you to turn your thoughts on the defenseless state of the Province in general, as well as of our back inhabitants in particular; and to provide such means for the security of the whole, as shall be thought at once both reasonable and effectual to the ends proposed; in which, as in every other matter, consistent with my honor, and the trust reposed in me, I promise you my hearty concurrence."

It soon became known that many of the savages, heretofore "friendly Indians," were disaffected, and favored the French interests in the West, ready to aid them in their schemes. The government of the Provinces of Pennsylvania and Virginia were therefore anxious not only to have the continued friendship of those who still professed to be friendly, but, if possible, to regain the friendship of the disaffected. For that purpose Conrad Weiser was sent, in the month of September, 1754, to Aughwick, where George Croghan, the Indian agent, had quite a number of different tribes under his care. Notwithstanding that Mr. Weiser, as the agent of the government, did all in his power, aided by liberal donations of money, to secure the continued friendly assistance of the Indians, murders were committed by the Indians; and the inhabitants of the frontiers were all in a panic.

At this juncture, the English government became alarmed, and at length determined to put an end to French encroachments, French intrigues, and French-Indian atrocities. Several of the royal regiments were sent to America, in command of whom was Maj.-Gen. Edward Braddock. This army arrived from England early in March, 1755, landing at Alexandria, in Virginia, whence they marched to Fredericktown, in Maryland, preparatory to the contemplated expedition against Fort Duquesne, on the Ohio. The place of debarkation was selected with that ignorance and want of judgment which distinguished the British ministry. That Province could furnish neither provisions nor carriages for the army, while Pennsylvania, rich in grain and well stocked with wagons, could readily supply food and the means to transport the army to any point. The Provincial Assembly, apprehending the general to be prejudiced against them, sent Benjamin Franklin to undeceive him, with instructions, however, not to assume the character of their agent, but to present himself as postmaster-general, disposed to make his office subservient to the general's plans. While Franklin was with the army a return of the wagons obtainable was made, from which it appeared that there were not more than twenty-five, and not all of those serviceable. Braddock was surprised, declared the expedition at an end, and exclaimed against the ministers for having sent them into a country destitute of the means of transportation. On Franklin expressing his regret that the army had not been lauded in Pennsylvania, where such means abounded, Braddock eagerly seized on his words, and commissioned him, on liberal terms, to procure one hundred and fifty wagons and fifteen hundred pack-horses. Franklin, on his return, circulated advertisements through the counties of York, Lancaster, and Cumberland, and by an artful address obtained, in two weeks, all the wagons, two hundred and fifty pack-horses, and much popularity for himself. He stated in his address that he found the general incensed at the delay of the horses and carriages he had expected from Philadelphia, and disposed to send an armed force to seize the carriages, horses, and drivers necessary for the service, but that he, apprehending the visit of British soldiers in their present temper would be very inconvenient to the inhabitants, was desirous to try what might be done by fair and equitable means, and that an opportunity was now presented of obtaining thirty thousand pounds in silver and gold, which would supply the deficiency of the Provincial currency. He expended eight hundred pounds received from the general, advanced two hundred pounds himself, and gave his bonds for the payment of the value of such horses as should be lost in the service, the owners refusing to rely upon Braddock's promise, alleging that he was unknown to them. The claims made against him in consequence of this engagement amounted to twenty thousand pounds, and were not settled by the government until after much delay and trouble.¹

Gen. Braddock removed his army to a post on Wills' Creek, since called Fort Cumberland, where he awaited the wagons and other necessary supplies from Pennsylvania. From this place, confident of success, he informed the Governors of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, that, should he take Fort Duquesne in its present condition, he would, after some additions, garrison it, and leave there the guns, ammunition, and stores he should find in it. But, should the enemy abandon and destroy the fortifications, as he apprehended, he would repair the fort, or construct another. In the latter case he required the necessary means of defense to be furnished by the colonies, and to be forwarded immediately, that he might not be delayed in his progress to Forts Niagara and Frontenac; he also gave information of the enemy's intention to attack the frontier settlements as soon as he should have marched beyond them.

On the 8th of June Gen. Braddock left Fort Cumberland. Scarooyadi, successor to the Half-King of the Senecas, and Monacatoota, whose acquaintance Washington had made on the Ohio on his mission to Le Beuf, with about one hundred and fifty Indians, Senecas and Delawares, accompanied him. George Croghan, the Indian agent of Pennsylvania, and a frontiersman of great value called the "Wild Hunter" or Captain Jack, were also with him. The first brigade, under Sir Peter Halkett, led the way, and on the 9th the main body followed. From that date until the 7th of July following the army had only reached the eastern branch of Bushy Run, called Turtle Creek, and the place of encampment was a short distance northerly of the present village of Stewartsville, Westmoreland Co. It was Gen. Braddock's intention to cross Turtle Creek, and approach Fort Duquesne on the other side; but the banks were so precipitous, and presented such obstacles to crossing with his artillery and heavy baggage, that he hesitated, and Sir John St. Clair went out with a party to reconnoitre. On his return, before night, he reported that he had found the ridge which led to Fort Duquesne, but that considerable work would be necessary to prepare a road for crossing Turtle Creek. This route was finally abandoned, and on the 8th the army marched eight miles, and encamped not far from the Monongahela, west of the Youghiogheny, and near what is called, on Scull's map, "Sugar Run." When Braddock reached this place, it was his design to pass through the narrows, but he was informed by the guide, who had been sent out to explore, that the passage was very difficult, about two miles in length, with a river on the left, and a high mountain on the right, and that much work must be done to make it passable for carriages. At the same time he was told that there were two good fords across the Monongahela, where the water was shallow, and the banks not steep. With these views of the case he determined to cross the ford the next morning. The order of march was given out, and all the arrangements were made for an early movement.

About eight o'clock on the morning of the 9th the advanced division, under Col. Gage, crossed the ford and pushed forward. After the whole army had crossed and marched about a mile, Braddock received a note from Col. Gage giving notice that he had passed the second ford without difficulty. A little before two o'clock the whole army had crossed this ford, and was arranged in the order of march on the river plateau. Col. Gage, with the advanced party, was then ordered to march, and while the main body was yet standing on the plain, the action began near the river. Not a single man of the enemy had before been seen. To the brave grenadiers who had stood firm on the plains of Europe, amid tempests of cannon-balls cutting down whole platoons of their comrades, this new species of warfare was perfectly appalling, and unable longer to breast the girdle of fire which enveloped them, they gave way in confusion, involving the whole army in distress, dismay, and disorder. In such a dilemma, with hundreds of his men falling at every discharge, his ranks converted into a wild and reckless multitude, unable to rally and too proud to retreat, Braddock obstinately refused to allow the Provincial troops to fight the Indians in their own way, but with a madness incomprehensible did his utmost to form the men into platoons and wheel them into close columns. The result was horrible, and the sacrifice of life without a parallel at that time in Indian warfare. The Provincial regiments, unable to keep together, spread through the surrounding woods, and by this means did all the execution that was effected. Every man fought for himself, and rushing to the trees from behind which gleamed the flash of the rifle, the brave frontiersmen often bayoneted the savage at his post. This perilous enterprize, however, was attended with a terrible sacrifice. Out of three full companies of Virginia troops but thirty men were left; of the Pennsylvania forces, much less.

It was the most disastrous defeat ever sustained by any European army in America. Sixty-three officers and seven hundred and fourteen privates were killed or dangerously wounded. There is, perhaps, no instance upon record where so great a proportion of officers were killed. Out of the eighty-six composing the command but twenty-three escaped unhurt. Their brilliant uniform seemed sure marks for the deadly aim of the savage. On that disastrous day the military genius of Washington shone forth with much of that splendor which afterwards made him so illustrious. His courage, energy, bravery, and skill displayed on this occasion marked him as possessed of the highest order of military talents. After the fall of Braddock, with his Provincial troops he covered the retreat, and saved the remnant of the army from annihilation.

Gen. Braddock was taken to Dunbar's Camp, on the summit of Laurel Hill, where he breathed his last, on the fourth day after the battle. His body was interred in the centre of the road, and the entire army marched over the spot in order that the remains of the unfortunate general might not be desecrated by savage hands.

In the correspondence of Gen. Braddock with his government, from the time of his arrival in Virginia to his defeat, he complains that Pennsylvania and Virginia would not give the aid he demanded. The disputes at that period in the Proprietary government, says Duponceau, account in some degree, but not sufficiently, for these results. The Quaker spirit in Pennsylvania may be supposed to have produced them, but it was used as a means instead of a primary cause. It is certain that at that time a leading Quaker, who was Speaker of the Assembly, said in debate, "I had rather see Philadelphia sacked three times by the French than vote a single copper for the war." It is easy to see from this the difficulties Braddock had to contend with. Had he received the earnest support of the Province his success would have been assured. The Scotch-Irish, who settled on the frontiers, were busy protecting their own homes, and although several companies offered their services to Gen. Braddock he did not accept them,—not from the motives ascribed to him by most historians, but from the fact that they were actually required at their own firesides, which had already been invaded by the savage foe.

The consternation at Braddock's defeat was very great in Pennsylvania. The retreat of Dunbar left the whole frontier uncovered, while the inhabitants, unarmed and undisciplined, were compelled hastily to seek the means of defense or of flight. In describing the exposed state of the Province, and the miseries which threatened it, the Governor had occasion to be entirely satisfied with his own eloquence, and had his resolution to defend it equalled the earnestness of his appeal to the Assembly, the people might have been spared much suffering. The enemy, long restrained by fear of another attack, and scarce crediting his senses when he discovered the defenseless state of the frontiers, now roamed unmolested and fearlessly along the western lines of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, committing the most appalling outrages and wanton cruelties which the cupidity and ferocity of the savage could dictate. The first inroads into Pennsylvania were into Cumberland County, whence they were soon extended to the Susquehanna. The inhabitants, dwelling at the distance of from one to three miles apart, fell unresistingly, were captured, or fled in terror to the interior settlements. The main body of the enemy encamped on the Susquehanna, thirty miles above Harris' Ferry, whence they extended themselves on both sides the river below the Kittochtinny Mountains. The settlements at the Great Cove, in Cumberland County, now Fulton, were destroyed, and many of the inhabitants slaughtered or made captives, and the same fate fell upon Tulpehocken, upon Mahanoy, and Gnadenhütten.

Under date of October 29th, John Harris wrote to the Governor: "We expect the enemy upon us every day, and the inhabitants are abandoning their plantations, being greatly discouraged at the approach of such a number of cruel savages, and no sign of assistance. The Indians are cutting us off every day, and I had a certain account of about fifteen hundred Indians, besides French, being on their march against us and Virginia, and now close on our borders, their scouts scalping our families on our frontiers daily. Andrew Montour and others at Shamokin desired me to take care; that there was forty Indians out many days, and intended to burn my house and destroy myself and family. I have this day cut holes in my house, and am determined to hold out to the last extremity if I can get some men to stand by me, few of which I yet can at present, every one being in fear of their own families being cut off every hour (such is our situation). I am informed that a French officer was expected at Shamokin this week with a party of Delawares and Shawanese, no doubt to take possession of our river; and, as to the state of the Susquehanna Indians, a great part of them are actually in the French interest; but if we should raise a number of men immediately as will be able to take possession of some convenient place up Susquehanna, and build a strong fort in spite of French or Indians, perhaps some Indians may join us, but it is trusting to uncertainty to depend upon them in my opinion. We ought to insist on the Indians declaring either for or against us. As soon as we are prepared for them we must bid up for scalps and keep the woods full of our people hunting them, or they will ruin our Province, for they are a dreadful enemy. We impatiently look for assistance. I have sent out two Indian spies to Shamokin, they are Mohawks, and I expect they will return in a day or two. Consider our situation, and rouse your people downwards, and not let about fifteen hundred villains distress such a number of inhabitants as is in Pennsylvania, which actually they will if they possess our provisions and frontiers long, as they now have many thousands of bushels of our corn and wheat in possession already, for the inhabitants goes off and leaves all."

In consequence of these melancholy tidings the Governor summoned the Assembly for the 3d of November, when he laid before them an account of the proceedings of the enemy, and demanded money and a militia law. Petitions were poured in from all parts of the Province,—from the frontier counties, praying for arms and munitions; from the middle counties, deprecating further resistance to the views of the Governor, and requiring, if it were necessary, a partial sacrifice of the property of the citizens for the defense of their lives; and that the religious scruples of the members of the Assembly might no longer prevent the defense of the country.

By the middle of the month the savages had "entered the passes of the Blue Mountains, broke into the counties of Lancaster, Berks, and Northampton, committing murder, devastations, and other kind of horrid mischief," to use the language of Governor Morris, and yet the Assembly delayed the measures of defense required of them. The Governor, astonished at the obstinacy of the Assembly, for such he characterized it, again sent a message requesting that body to strengthen his hands and afford assistance to the back inhabitants, but they plead in excuse that they feared the alienating the affections of the Indians, and in a measure refused to grant the means necessary for the protection of the frontiers.

The cold indifference of the Assembly at such a crisis awoke the deepest indignation throughout the Province. Public meetings were held in various parts of Lancaster and in the frontier counties, at which it was resolved that they would "repair to Philadelphia and compel the Provincial authorities to pass proper laws to defend the country and oppose the enemy." In addition, the dead bodies of some of the murdered and mangled were sent to that city and hauled about the streets, with placards announcing that these were victims of the Quaker policy of non-resistance. A large and threatening mob surrounded the House of Assembly, placed the dead bodies in the doorway, and demanded immediate relief for the people of the frontiers. Such, indeed, were the desperate measures resorted to for self-defense. There was little sympathy by the members of that body, whose phlegmatic temperament could allow them to look calmly upon the victims of their neglect. In preventing protection, as was their sworn duty to do, they were indirectly guilty of the complete sway of the tomahawk and scalping-knife.

Following Braddock's defeat, the French, or rather their Indian allies, encouraged by their success, pushed their incursions into the interior parts of the frontier settlements, into York, Cumberland, Lancaster, Berks, and Northampton Counties. These counties were scenes of murder and rapine for about ten years. The apprehensions of those who feared the direful consequences of the English defeat were sadly realized.

Plans were now devised for the defense of the frontiers. A chain of forts were directed to be erected, but it was not until the succeeding summer that anything like places of defense were actually built. The sad condition of affairs in the interior and western part of the Province is thus described by Governor Robert Morris in his message of July 24, 1755, to the Assembly in relation to Braddock's defeat: "This unfortunate and unexpected change in our affairs deeply affects every one of His Majesty's colonies, but none of them in so sensible a manner as this Province; while having no militia is thereby left exposed to the cruel incursion of the French and barbarous Indians, who delight in shedding human blood, and who make no distinction as to age or sex,—as to those that are armed against them, or such as they can surprise in their peaceful habitations, all are alike the objects of their cruelty,—slaughtering the tender infant and frightened mother with equal joy and fierceness. To such enemies, spurred by the native cruelty of their tempers, encouraged by their late success, and having now no army to fear, are the inhabitants of this Province exposed, and by such must we now expect to be overrun if we do not immediately prepare for our own defense; nor ought we to content ourselves with this, but resolve to drive to and confine the French to their own just limits."

Scarce three months after this disastrous defeat we find the barbarous savages engaged in murdering the whites and setting fire to their houses on the west side of Susquehanna, in Cumberland County, now Union, for on the 15th of October, 1755, a party of Indians "fell upon the inhabitants on Mahanoy (or Penn's) Creek that runs into the river Susquehanna, about five miles lower than the Great Fork made by the juncture of the two main branches of the Susquehanna, killed and carried off about twenty-five persons, and burnt and destroyed their buildings and improvements, and the whole settlement was deserted." Learning of these transactions, John Harris wrote to the Governor, as follows:

"PAXTANG, Oct. 20, 1755.

"May it please your Honor,—

"I was informed last night by a person that came down our river that there was a Dutch (German) woman, who made her escape to

George Gabriel's, and informs us that last Friday evening, on her way home from this settlement, on Mahahony or Penn's Creek, where her family lived, she called at a neighbor's house and saw two persons lying by the door of said house murdered and scalped, and there were some Dutch (German) families that lived near their places immediately left, not thinking it safe to stay any longer. It is the opinion of the people up the river, that the families on Penn's Creek being scattered, that but few in number are killed or carried off, except the above said woman, the certainty of which will soon be known, as there are some men gone out to bury the dead.

"By report this evening I was likewise informed by the belt of wampum, and these Indians here, there were seen near Shamokin, about six days ago, two French Indians of the Canawago tribe. I a little doubted the truth of the report at first, but the Indians have seemed so afraid that they dispatched messengers immediately to the mountains above my house to bring in some of their women that were gathering chestnuts, for fear of their being killed.

"By a person just arrived down our river, brought information of two men being murdered within five miles of George Gabriel's, four women carried off, and there is one man wounded in three places who escaped to Gabriel's, and it is imagined that all the inhabitants on Penn's Creek and Little Mahahony are killed or carried off, as most of them live much higher up, where the first murder was discovered. The Indian warriors here send you these two strings of white wampum, and the women the black one, both requesting that you would lay by all your council pipes immediately, and open all your eyes and ears, and view your slain people in this land, and to put a stop to it immediately, and come to this place to our assistance without any delay; and the belt of wampum particularly mentions that the proprietors and your Honor would immediately act in defense of their country, as the old chain of friendship now is broken by several nations of Indians, and it seems to be such as they never expected to see or hear of. Any delay on our acting vigorously now at this time would be the loss of all Indian interest, and perhaps our ruin in these parts.

"I am your honor's most obedient servant,

"JOHN HARRIS.

"P.S.—I shall endeavor to get a number of my neighbors to go out as far as the murder has been committed, and perhaps to Shamokin, to know the minds of the Indians and their opinions of these times, and to get what intelligence I can from them and to encourage some of their young men to scout about back of the frontiers, to give us notice of the enemy's approach, if possible, at any time hereafter. I heartily wish your honor and the Assembly would please to agree on some method at this time towards protecting this province, as this part of it seems actually in danger now, for should but a company of Indians come and murder but a few families hereabouts, which is daily expected, the situation we are in would oblige numbers to abandon their plantations, and our cattle and provisions, which we have a plenty of, must then fall a prey to the enemy.

"Our Indians here seem much discouraged at the large number of families passing here every day on account of the late murders on the Potomac, and will be much more so if it should happen to be our case. There were two Indian women set out from here two days ago for the Ohio, to bring some of their relations (as they say) down here, and should the French or their Indians hear by them, as they will be inquiring for news, the effect that their late murders has had among our inhabitants it will be a matter of encouragement to them.

"I conclude, your honor's most obedient and most humble servant,

"JOHN HARRIS."

On the 23d of October, 1755, forty-six of the inhabitants about Harris' Ferry went to Shamokin to inquire of the Indians there who they were who had so cruelly fallen upon and ruined the settlement on Mahahony Creek. On their return from Shamokin they were fired upon by some Indians who lay in ambush, and four were killed, four drowned, and the rest put to flight. The following is the report of this expedition:

"I, and Thomas Forster, Esq., Mr. Harris, and Mr. McKee, with upwards of forty men, went up the 2d inst. (October, 1755) to Capt. McKee, at New Providence, in order to bury the dead lately murdered on Mahahony Creek; but understanding the corpse were buried, we then determined to return immediately home. But being urged by John Sokalamy and the Old Belt to go up to see the Indians at Shamokin and know their minds, we went on the 24th, and stayed there all night; and in the night I heard some Delawares talking, about twelve in number, to this purpose: 'What are the English come here for?' Says another: 'To kill us, I suppose; can we then send off some of our nimble young men to give our friends notice that can soon be here?' They soon after sang the war-song, and four Indians went off in two canoes, well armed; the one canoe went down the river, and the other across.

"On the morning of the 25th we took our leave of the Indians and set off homewards, and were advised to go down the east side of the river; but, fearing that a snare might be laid on that side, we marched off peaceably on the west side, having behaved in the most civil and friendly manner towards them while with them; and when we came to the mouth of the Mahahony Creek, we were fired on by a good number of Indians that lay among the bushes, on which we were obliged to retreat with the loss of several men; the particular number I cannot exactly mention, but I am positive that I saw four fall, and one man struck with a tomahawk on the head in his flight across the river. As I understand the Delaware tongue, I heard several of the Indians that were engaged against us speak a good many words in that tongue during the action.

"ADAM TORRANCE."

"The above declaration was attested by the author's voluntary qualification, no magistrate being present, at Paxtang, this 26th October, 1755, before us:

"JOHN ELDER.	THOMAS MCARTHUR.
"MICHAEL GRAHAM.	ALEX. McCLEURE.
"MICHAEL TRAFF.	WILLIAM HARRIS.
"THOMAS BLACK.	SAMUEL LENE.
"SAMUEL PEARSON.	WILLIAM McCLEURE.

"N.B.—Of all our people that were in the action there are but nine that are yet returned."

John Harris, under the date of "Paxtang, ye 28th October, 1755," writes to the Governor an account of the foregoing expedition to Shamokin, and how near they all came to suffer through Indian treachery:

"May it please your Honor

"This is to acquaint you, that on the 24th of October I arrived at Shamokin, in order to protect our frontiers up that way till they might make their escape from their cruel enemies, and learn the best intelligence I could.

"The Indians on the west branch of the Susquehanna certainly killed our inhabitants on Penn's Creek, and there are a hatchet and two English scalps sent by them up the North branch, to desire them to strike with them, if they are men.

"The Indians are all assembling themselves at Shamokin to counsel; a large body of them was there four days ago. I cannot learn their intentions, but seems Andrew Montour and Mona-ca-too-tha are to bring down the news from them. There is not a sufficient number of them to oppose the enemy, and, perhaps, they will join the enemy against us. There is no dependence on Indians, and we are in imminent danger.

"I got certain information from Andrew Montour and others that there is a body of French, with fifteen hundred Indians, coming upon us,—Picks, Ottaways, Oradox, Delawares, Shawanese, and a number of the Six Nations,—and are now not many days' march from this Province and Virginia, which are appointed to be attacked; at the same time some of the Shamokin Indians seem friendly, and others appear like enemies.

"Montour knew many days ago of the enemy being on their march against us before he informed, for which I said as much to him as I thought prudent, considering the place I was in.

"On the 25th inst., on my return with about forty more, we were attacked by about twenty or thirty Indians, received their fire, and about fifteen of our men and myself took to the trees, attacked the villains, killed four of them on the spot, and lost but three more, retreating about half a mile through woods, and crossing the Susquehanna, one of whom was shot off an horse riding behind myself, through the river. My horse was wounded, and, falling into the river, I was obliged to quit him and swim part of the way.

"Four or five of our men were drowned crossing the river. I hope our journey, though with fatigues and loss of our substance, and some of our lives, will be of service to our country, by discovering our enemy, who will be our ruin, if not timely prevented.

"I just now received information that there was a French officer, supposed captain, with a party of Shawanese, Delawares, &c., within six miles of Shamokin, ten days ago, and no doubt intends to take possession of it, which will be a dreadful consequence to us, if suffered. Therefore, I thought proper to despatch this message to inform your Honor. The Indians here, I hope, your Honor, will be pleased to cause them to remove to some place, as I do not like their company; and, as the men of those here were not against us, yet did them no harm, or else I would have them all cut off. Belt (Indian so-called) promised at Shamokin to send out spies to view the enemy, and, upon hearing of our skirmishes, Old Belt was in a rage, gathered up thirty Indians immediately, and went in pursuit of the enemy, as I am this day informed.

"I expect Montour and Monac-too-tha down here this week, with the determination of their Shamokin council. The inhabitants are abandoning their plantations, and we are in a dreadful situation.

"I am, &c.,

"JOHN HARRIS.

"P.S.—The night ensuing our attack the Indians burnt all George Gabriel's houses; danced around them."

The person who was shot off the horse, while riding behind John Harris in crossing the river, was a physician of Paxtang, but in the absence of the assessment-lists we are unable to tell who he was. The Indians alluded to by John Harris as being at Harris' Ferry for some months were those to whom Conrad Weiser refers when writing from that place to the Governor in July (9th) previous, when he said,—

"According to your order, I came to this place last Monday, and found the Indians scolding for me. Yesterday I distributed about two hundred bushels of meal among them; after that was over, they enquired how things stood as to the war. I told them what had happened to some of the back inhabitants, and that the French Indians were like to do a great deal of mischief. They seemed to be very much concerned. There were about thirty of them, and of which number nine offered themselves to go with me, or my son Sammy, to Wills' Creek, and serve as outcasts against the French and their Indians, and to protect the poor people settled about those parts; and I was agreed that they should meet me or my son, at this place in ten days hence; and that in the mean time, I was to obtain your Honor's leave, and a proper pass. This morning Captain Glazier's express from the east arrived at this place, with the agreeable news of the defeat of the French at Nova Scotia, and the taking of the French men-of-war, by Admiral Boscawen.

"I read and explained the printed paper to the Indians, and they expressed a good deal of satisfaction and pleasure with the news. Capt. Glazier gave me to understand that he should be very glad if some of these Indians would accompany him to the English camp with the despatches he had for the general, in this dangerous time. I proposed it to the Indians; they approved of the thing, but having intelligence of our Honor's coming up, and that you would be in Lancaster this day, they would hear and receive your approbation; and they have accordingly desired me to stay with them at this place till your Honor's arrival, which I have promised to do, and have sent the bearer hereof express to let your Honor know of this and to receive further orders."

The Governor was there a few days after, made a short harangue, gave some presents, at which the Indians seemed perfectly delighted, and "the chain of friendship" was to remain "bright and unbroken." The Governor little knew of the perfidy of the savages, and that all their promises were mere ropes of sand.

The near approach of the enemy created the utmost consternation among the outer settlements. The only safety was to flee and leave all to the enemy. They had in vain looked for effectual relief from the Colonial government. Homes that had been occupied; barns filled with the fruits of a rich and plenteous harvest; newly-sowed fields, standing corn, and cattle, sheep, etc., were all abandoned by the hardy and industrious frontier settlers, in order to save themselves from being cut off by the barbarous enemy. Even John Harris and his family were threatened with death, as stated by Mr. Harris himself in the following letter to Edward Shippon, at Lancaster:

"PAXTANG, ye 29th October, 1755.

"Sir,—We expect the enemy upon us every day, and the inhabitants are abandoning their plantations, being greatly discouraged at the approach of such a number of cruel savages, and no present sign of assistance. I had a certain account of fifteen hundred French and Indians being on the march against us and Virginia, and now close upon our borders, their scouts scalping our families on our frontiers daily. Andrew Montour, and others at Shamokin, desired me to take care, that there was a party of forty Indians, out many days, and intended to burn my house and destroy myself and family. I have this day cut loop-holes in my house, and am determined to hold out to the last extremity, if I can get some men to stand by me. But few can be had at present, as every one is in fear of his own family being cut off every hour. Great part of the Susquehanna Indians are no doubt actually in the French interest, and I am informed that a French officer is expected at Shamokin this week, with a party of Delawares and Shawanese, no doubt to take possession of our river. We should raise men immediately to build a fort up the river to take possession, and to induce some Indians to join us. We ought also to insist on the Indians to declare for or against us, and as soon as we are prepared for them we should bid 'em their scalps, and keep our woods full of our people upon the scout, else they will ruin our province, for they are a dreadful enemy. I have sent out two Indian spies to Shamokin; they are Mohawks.

"Sir, yours, &c.,

JOHN HARRIS."

CHAPTER V.

The French and Indian War (continued)—Treaty at Harris' Ferry—Fort Halifax—Fort McKee—Fort Manady—Fort at L's 'is' Ferry—Fort Hunter.

In the latter part of October, 1755, the enemy again appeared in the neighborhood of Shamokin, and in November of that year they committed several murders upon the whites under circumstances of great cruelty and barbarity. Not only the settlers on the immediate frontier, but those residing far towards the interior, were kept in constant alarm, as will be seen by the following address, or appeal to the inhabitants of the Province, issued from the present site of Harrisburg:

"PAXTANG, ye 31st October, 1755.

"From John Harris, at 12 P.M.

"To all His Majesty's subjects in the Province of Pennsylvania, or elsewhere:

"Whereas, Andrew Montour, Belt of Wampum, two Mohawks, and other Indians, came down this day from Shamokin, who say the whole body of Indians, or the greatest part of them in the French interest, is actually encamped on this side of George Gabriel's (about thirty miles north of Harris' Ferry, on the west side of the river), near Susquehanna, and we may expect an attack within three days at farthest; and a French fort to be begun at Shamokin in ten days hence. Tho' this be the Indian report, we, the subscribers, do give it as our advice to repair immediately to the frontiers with all our forces, to intercept their passage into our country, and to be prepared in the best manner possible for the worst events.

"Witness our hands,

"JAMES GALBREATH,	JAMES POLLOCK,
"JOHN ALLISON,	JAMES ANDERSON,
"BARNEY HUGHES,	WILLIAM WORK,
"ROBERT WALLACE,	PATRICK HAYES,
"JOHN HARRIS.

"P.S.—They positively affirm that the above named Indians discovered a party of the enemy at Thomas McKee's upper place on the 30th of October last.

"Mona-ca-too-tha, The Belt, and other Indians here, insist upon Mr. Weiser's coming immediately to John Harris' with his men, and to counsel with the Indians.

"Before me,

"JAMES GALBREATH."

Fortunately, the reports conveyed in Mr. Harris' letter, as well as in the above address, proved to be premature, the enemy confining his depredations to the regions of the Susquehanna, about Shamokin, and the Great or Big Cove in the western part of Cumberland County, a detailed account of which would not come within our province to write.

It was not until the middle of the following year that the Indians, incited, and in some instances officered, by their allies the French, extended their incursions into the interior of the Province, and imagination fails to conceive the peril and distress of the settlers of Paxtang, Hanover, and the other townships of Lancaster, now comprising the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon.

On the 8th of January, 1756, Governor Morris, who had come from Philadelphia by way of Reading, held a conference with the Indians at the house of John Harris. As a part of the history of this locality, it is proper that the record thereof be preserved in this connection :

"At a conference held with the Indians at Harris' Ferry, Jan. 8, 1756, present the Hon. Robert Hunter Morris, Governor James Hamilton, Richard Peters, Joseph Fox, and Conrad Weiser, interpreter; two Indians of the Six Nations, called 'the Belt of Wampum,' a Seneca, and 'The Broken Thigh,' a Mohawk.

"The Governor, finding here only two Indians and their families, he sent for them into council, and spoke as follows :

"Brethren :

"I am glad to see you and your families in good health. You have ever been esteemed our hearty friends, and you show you are really so by residing amongst us, at a time when so much mischief is done on every side of the Province.

"I sent Mr. Weiser to acquaint you that I had kindled a council fire here, and had invited the Indians on Susquehanna to meet me the beginning of this moon, and that I expected you would stay here till I should come, and afford me your assistance in council.

"I thank you for staying here. You see that agreeable to my message, I come at the time appointed, but I find no other Indians here than you two, and indeed I expect no more, as I believe my messengers were prevented going to Wyoming by the ravages of the Indians, which began in their neighborhood at the time they were preparing to set out on their journey.

"Brethren: The public business requires my presence at Carlisle, where I am now going, and I invite you to go along with me. If you incline to take any of your families with you, I shall readily agree to it, and provide a carriage for them and you."

"To this the Belt replied.

"Brethren: I thank you for sending for us to council, and for your kind speech. What you have said is very agreeable.

"Brethren: The sky is dark all around us. The mischief done to you I consider as done to the Six Nations, and am sorry for what has happened, and heartily condole with you upon it, but be not disheartened. As the public business is committed to you, nothing should be suffered to lie on your minds that might, in any wise, impair your judgment, which is now more necessary than ever. Let me, therefore, by this string outreat you to put away all grief from your heart, and to dry up your tears, that you may think and see clearly when you come to council.

"I accept your invitation, and shall follow you to Carlisle."

"GAVE A STRING."

From the minutes of the treaty or conference held at that time it appears there was but one single house and few conveniences to hold a treaty at Harris'— "Mr. Weiser was called in and asked if it might not be better to hold it at Carlisle, where all the business of that county could be done at the same time, and proper entertainment provided as well for the Governor and his company as for the Indians, should they prove numerous."

In the early part of 1756, of the Provincial forces there were stationed at Harris', a sergeant and twelve men; at Hunter's Fort, Ensign Johnson and twenty-four men; at McKee's Store, Ensign Mears and twenty-four men; at Fort Halifax, Capt. Nathaniel Miles and thirty men; and at Fort Munday, Lieut. Miller and sixteen men.

In the spring of 1756 the Provincial troops were well organized, and within the limits of Dauphin County the following stockade forts were erected :

FORT HALIFAX.—This fort, also named the Fort at Armstrong's, was commenced in May, 1756. Col. Clapham, an officer of the Provincial service, selected it "as the most convenient place on the river between Harris's and Shamokin for a magazine on account of its good natural situation above the Juniata Falls, the vast plenty of pine timber at hand, its nearness to Shamokin and a saw within a quarter of a mile, he therefore concludes to erect a fort here, according to a plan enclosed to the Gov'r, and for that purpose had already cut and squared 200 logs and hauled 80 to the spot, each about 30 feet long, and made some progress in laying them, rather than lose time by delay with the troops, & as men sufficient to finish it in a fortnight after the logs were hauled could be had in the neighborhood at a reasonable rate, under a guard of an officer and 30 men, he proposed to proceed on the march with the troops, he has 20 batteaux finished and 2 Canoes to bring up provisions, having already made 5 trips to McKee's store and 2 to this place, two different parties were sent out as scouts towards Shamokin."

On the 8th of June, says the colonel in his report to the Governor, he "was agreeably surprised on seeing a canoe coming down the River with a red flag, having on board an Iroquois Ind'n Chief and his son charged with a belt of wampum from the Six Nations; a Cayuga Indian was at first with them, but landed at Choconotte above Wyoming, being deterred by the reports of Shekelamy."

On the 10th of June, Col. Clapham held a conference there with the Iroquois chief, which is reported as follows :

"At a conference held at the camp at Armstrong's June 10, 1756, between Col. William Clapham and Ogluaghradisha, an Indian chief of the Iroquois, on the waters of Susquehanna.

"Present, Capts. Lloyd and Shippen; Interpreters, James Lowry and Lewis Montour.

"My Brother, Col. Johnston, at my departure, told me thus brother: I find great difficulties in governing and supplying the wants of the Six Nations, in connection with me, 'tis therefore impossible I should also take charge of those seated at a distance on the waters of the Susquehanna, for which reason I have recommended them by you, and this string of wampum to Col. Clapham for Ugcarnthiunth) for that purpose.

"Brother, The Iroquois living on the North Branch of Susquehanna have sent me as a representative of the whole to treat with you (producing a belt of wampum) and will ratify all my contracts. Brother, they agree to your building a fort at Shamokin, but are desirous that you should also build a Fort three day's Journey, in a canoe, higher up the North Branch, in their country, at a place called 'Adjouquay,' and this belt of wampum is to clear the road to that place.

"Brother, If you agree to my proposals in behalf of my nation, I will return and immediately collect our whole force to be employed in protecting your people while you are building a fort in our country at Adjouquay, where there is a good situation and fine soil at the entrance of a deep creek, on a level plain five miles extending, and clear of woods. Adjouquay is fourteen miles above Womung, and an old woman may carry a heavy pack of skins from thence to the Minisuk, and return to Adjouquay in two nights.

"My Brother, the land is troubled, and you may justly apprehend danger, but if you will grant our request we will be together, and if any danger happens to you we will share it with you. My brother, I have known this young man a good while (pointing to James Lowry) and have traveled far with him; he is a proper man, and knows the country well. I should be glad to recommend him as a companion on the march.

"My Brother (laying down a belt of wampum folded in the middle) this describes your path to Shamokin; (unfolding the belt and extending it to its full length) this is your road to Adjouquay."

"Upon which he presented a belt and offered his little son as a pledge of his fidelity, insisting at the same that Col. Clapham should visit their town, escorted by their warriors who, desiring to turn out of their way, would conduct him through the Delaware town to their village in defiance of all opposition whatever."

The orders and instructions to Col. Clapham in regard to the erection of the fort were as follows, although he was subsequently directed to diminish the size, but having proceeded too far with the work, which in his opinion was already too small, he continued on with the dimensions as at first ordered:

"1. With these instructions you will receive a number of blank commissions, under my hand and seal, for subaltern officers in your regiment, which you are hereby empowered to fill up with the names of such men as you judge most fit for the service, having regard to the merit and services of those already employed: taking care that they be of the Protestant religion, and well affected to his Majesty's government, and you will administer to them the oaths to the government, as your name is inserted in the General Dedimus for this Province, under the Great Seal, or cause Major Burd to do it.

"2. Herewith you will also receive two plans of Forts: the one a Pentagon, the other a square, with one Ravelin to protect the curtain where the gate is, with a ditch covered way and glacis; but as it is impossible to give any explicit directions to the particular form of a fort without viewing and considering the ground on which it is to stand, I must leave it to you to build it in such form as will best answer for its own defence, the command of the river, and of the country in its neighborhood; and the plans herewith will serve to show the proportion that the different parts of the works should bear to each other.

"3. As to the place upon which this fort is to be erected, that must be in a great measure left to your judgment; but it is necessary to inform you it must be on the east side of the Susquehanna; the lands on the west, at the Forks, between the branches, not being purchased from the Indians; besides it would be impossible to relieve and support a garrison on that side in the winter time. From all the information I have been able to collect, the land on the south side of the east branch, opposite to the middle of the island, is the highest of any of the lowland thereabout, and the best place for a fort. The guns you have with you will form a rampart of a moderate height, commanding the main river. But as this information comes from persons not acquainted with the nature of such things, I am fearful they are not much to be depended on, and your own judgment must therefore direct you.

"4. When you have completed the fort, you will cause the ground to be cleared about it, to a convenient distance, and openings to be made to the river, and you will erect such buildings within the fort, and place there in such a manner as you shall judge best.

"5. Without the fort, at a convenient distance, under the command of the guns, it will be necessary to build some log houses for Indians, that they may have places to lodge in, without being in the fort, where numbers of them, however friendly, should not be admitted, but in a formal manner, and the guard turned out; this will be esteemed a compliment by our friends, and if enemies should at any time be concealed under that name, it will give them proper notions of our vigilance, and prevent them from attempting to surprise it.

"6. In your march up the river you will take care not to be surprised, and always to have your forces in such a disposition that you may retreat with safety.

"7. You will make the best observations you can of the river and the most difficult passes you meet with in your way, as well by land as water, which you will note upon the map I gave you, that it may be thereby amended, and furnish me with your opinion of the best manner of removing or surmounting those difficulties.

"8. If you should be opposed in your march, or gain any intelligence of the approach of an enemy, for that or any other purpose, you will inform me by express of such intelligence or opposition, the situation you are in, and everything else material that I may send you proper assistance, and be prepared for anything that may happen, and in the mean time you are to use your best endeavors to oppose the enemy and to secure yourself.

"9. As soon as you are in possession of the ground at Shamokin you will secure yourself a breastwork in the best manner you can, so that your men may work in safety, and you will inform me of your arrival there, and let me know what you will have occasion for, that I may apply to the commissioners to supply it.

"10. You will order the company and others in whose hands you may trust any of the public provisions or stores, to be careful and exact in the distribution thereof, and to keep exact accounts of everything committed to their care.

"11. Having suspected hostilities against the Delaware Indians on the east side of the Northeast Branch of Susquehanna, in order to enter into a treaty with them, I send you herewith a proclamation for that purpose, to which you will conform, and any friendly Indians that may join you in your march or at Shamokin, you will treat with kindness, and supply them out of the Province stores with such things as they want and you are able to spare.

"12. Having sent the Indians—New Castle and Jagree—again to the town of Dinoga, accompanied with some of the Jersey Delawares, all our friends, who may and probably will return by the Susquehanna, you will in about a fortnight after this cause a lookout to be kept for them, and, if they return that way, you will receive and assist them in their journey. Their signal will be a red flag, with 'union' in the corner, or, if that should be lost, they will carry 'green boughs' or 'club'd muskets,' will appear open and erect, and not approach you in the night.

"R. H. MORRIS.

"Given under my hand and seal at Arms, Philadelphia, this 12th day of June, 1756."

On the 20th of June, Col. Clapham writes to Governor Morris from the "Camp at Armstrong's":

"Sir,—I received your Honor's of the 12th inst., together with your Honor's instructions, your Honor's answer to the Indian sachem, six blank commissions, and two plans of fortification. Your instructions I shall obey with the utmost pleasure and punctuality. Your answer I delivered with due solemnity. In filling up the commissions I shall be particularly careful to regard your Honor's directions. When arrived at the ground I shall conform as near as possible to the plans, and hope I shall find no difficulty in the execution which industry and application may not surmount, and shall rely on your Honor for the supplies necessary during that time. The progress already made in this fort renders it impracticable for me to comply with the commissioners desire to contract it, at which I am more surprised, as I expected every day orders to enlarge it, it being as yet, in my opinion, too small. I shall leave an officer and thirty men, with orders to finish it, when I march from hence, which will be with all possible expedition after the arrival of the blankets, the rum and the money for payment of battoe-men, for want of which I am obliged to detain them here in idleness, not thinking it prudent to trust them on another trip for fear of their desertion, which may totally impede the service. I could wish the commissioners would invent some expedient to pay these men without money, or, at least without the danger of trusting me with their money, the charge of which I am not ambitious of, or the much envied honor and trouble of expending it. This far is certain, that without such expedient or the money, we cannot stir.

"I have, pursuant to your Honor's command, sent down two Indian Sachems properly escorted, and committed particularly to the care of Mr. Shippen, and hope his coming will fully answer the ends proposed by your Honor and your council. I have found Capt. McKee extremely useful, and have sent him also at the Sachom's particular request.

"The carpenters are still employed in building Battoes and carriages for the canoes, and everybody seems disposed cheerfully to contribute their services towards the public good, if there ever was any prospect or assurance of being paid for it. From your Honor's character of Capt. Busse, I am extremely sorry the Commissioners have not thought proper to comply with your Honor's proposal. I assure myself, your Honor, will omit no opportunity of extricating me from embarrassments arising from the want of money, both for the Battoe men and the soldiers; twenty-six of whom being Dutch (German) are now in confinement for mutiny on that very account. I am with all respect your Honor's obedient servant.

" WILLIAM CLAPHAM.

"P.S.—The Fort at this place is without a name till your Honor is pleased to confer one."

On the 25th of the month the Governor writes from Philadelphia to Col. Clapham, "The fort at Armstrong's I would have it called Fort Halifax." At the same time that official is pleased with its progress, and urges him to leave for Shamokin as soon as possible. The former writes under date of 1st July, 1756:

"Sir,—I received your favor by Commissary Burd, and the £100, which I distributed among the Battoe men in proportion to their several demands, it not being sufficient to discharge the whole. The ship-carpenters have finished the carriages for the canoe, and as soon as they have finished the Battoes in hand, which I expect will be done to-morrow, I shall give them a certificate of their services and discharge them all except one, who will be absolutely necessary in the passage, and without whose assistance we may probably lose more than his pay can cost the Province; now if my people are to be depended on in case of an accident on the water, and I can assure your Honor that I find fatigue and difficulties enough to conduct so amphibious an expedition with all the assistance I can possibly command. I shall leave a sergeant's party at Harris' consisting of twelve men, twenty-four at Hunter's Fort, twenty-four at McKee's store, each under the command of an ensign; and Capt. Miles, with thirty men, at Fort Halifax, with the inclosed instructions, as I have removed all the stores from Harris' and McKee's to this place; Mr. Galbreath's presence does not seem very necessary at either of those two places, and his refusal to attend here has laid me under the necessity of appointing a person to act in that capacity under the direction of Commissary Burd till your pleasure shall be known. I am at present extremely engaged in embarking the regiments, stores, etc., for Shamokin, expecting to march to-night on the west side of Susquehanna, about five miles above Fort Halifax, and promising myself the pleasure of congratulating your Honor from Shamokin; and in the mean time very respectfully your Honor's most obedient, humble servant.

" WILLIAM CLAPHAM.

"P.S.—There are still one hundred blankets wanting in the regiment."

The fort was left in charge of Capt. Nathaniel Miles, with the following instructions, dated "Fort Halifax, 1st July, 1756:"

"Sir,—You are to command a party of thirty men at Fort Halifax, which you are to finish with all possible expedition, observing not to suffer your party to straggle in small numbers into the woods, or to go any great distance from the fort unless detached as an escort, or in case of special orders for that purpose. You are to build barracks within the fort for your men and also a store-house thirty feet by twelve, in which you are carefully to lodge all provisions, stores, etc., belonging to the province; if the boards purchased for that purpose are not sufficient to finish the banquettes and execute the other designs herein recommended, your men are to be employed in sawing more out of the pine-logs now lying near the fort. You are to keep a constant guard, and relieve regularly, to have continual one sentry in each bastion, and in case of an attack to retreat to the fort and defend it to the last extremity.

"If anything extraordinary occurs you are immediately to dispatch notice thereof to his honor the governor, and to signify the same to me if any relief or instruction may be necessary.

" WILLIAM CLAPHAM."

On the 17th of August there was very little ammunition here, and on October 9th, according to a return by Capt. Jameson, "the Garrison consisted of two Serjeants, two Corporals, forty-two privates—ammunition, 160lbs Gunpowder, 300lbs. musket balls, and 60lbs. shot and lead,—provisions 14000lbs. fresh beef, 1 Bbl. salt beef, and 700lbs. flour. An escort is ordered of fifteen men under a serjeant to conduct the Waggon Master General, Mr. Irwin, from Hunter's to Fort Halifax, there join a detachment from Capt. Jameson's Company, to be commanded by Lieut. Anderson, and march to Fort Augusta. To preserve communications between the inhabitants and Augusta and for conveniency of Escorts and Transportation of provisions and ammunition there should be one hundred in Garrison at Fort Halifax." In July, 1757, a petition was presented to the Governor for a removal of the garrison from Halifax to Hunter's, the defense of the former being considered of little account to the inhabitants south of the mountains. It is supposed this removal was soon effected, for we hear nothing more of its occupancy. It was situated on the east bank of the Susquehanna, near the mouth of Armstrong's Creek, about half a mile above the town of Halifax.

FORT MCKEE.—With regard to the time of the erection of this fort and its precise locality we are ignorant. But as we find instructions to Thomas McKee, dated Jan. 26, 1756, we suppose it to have been erected in 1756. He is directed "to receive from the officer commanding the detachment of Capt. Reed's company at Hunter's Mill, and who you are to relieve, such arms, accoutrements, blankets, tools, and stores as he may have in his hands belonging to the Province, with which you are to furnish your company; but if that should not be sufficient, you are to apply to Capt. Frederick Smith for a further supply out of what he will receive from Capt. Reed and Capt. Hendricks." He is afterwards appointed, under a commission, captain of a company, to consist of twenty-eight men and two sergeants, besides himself and lieutenants. He is ordered to "proceed immediately to raise the company; when complete, they are to be mustered before James Galbraith, Esq., and after being mustered they are to march to a place called Hunter's Mill, on the Susquehanna River, and either complete the fort already begun there, or build another at such convenient place as James Galbraith shall advise; and in case it should be thought necessary to erect a new fort, you are to build it of the form and dimensions herewith given to you." The next notice of it is in a letter from Edward Shippen, dated Lancaster, April 19th, where he says, "I have been at Capt. McKee's fort, where I found several Indians—several women very sick in bed. John Shekellamy was there, but did not like his situation"—"there is no room scarce at Capt. McKee's fort for provisions"—"the enemy can come over the hills at five miles from McKee's Fort"—"there are several bad passes as far as McKee's plantation, where I have been, it is but 25 miles from Hunter's Mill." Colonel Clapham says to Governor Morris, "I shall have 24 men at McKee's store under the command of an Ensign, as I have removed all the stores from Harris' and McKee's to this place (Halifax). May 17. They have very little ammunition at McKee's." It was named for Thomas McKee, the Indian trader, who had a plantation on the Susquehanna, near the falls which still bear his name. It was situated on the East Branch of the Susquehanna, between Forts Halifax and Augusta. It was probably a stockade, nothing more.

FORT MANADY.—This fort was erected in 1755, and was situated on or near the Manady Creek, in East Hanover township, Dauphin Co., probably near the gap in the mountain of the same name as the fort. It was sometimes called the stockade at Robertson's Mill, and in the centre between Fort Hunter and Swatara.

But little seems to have been known of this fort, or rather stockade, for it was probably nothing more. The creek still retains its name, and is a branch of Swatara. Here Col. Burd, in February, 1758, promised the country people to station an officer and twenty-five men, which gave the people content. Jan. 26, 1756, in instructions to Adam Reed, it is said, "Having appointed Captain Frederick Smith to take post with an independent company at the Gap where the Swatara passes the mountains, and to station a detachment of his company at Manady, there will be no necessity of your continuing longer upon guard in that part of the frontier; you will therefore dismiss the men now employed in that service and deliver to Captain Smith such arms and accoutrements, blankets, and stores, belonging to the Province, as have at any time come to your hands." And under same date, after instructing Captain Frederick Smith to leave a part of his company at Swatara, he is directed "to proceed to the Gap, where the River Manady passes the mountains, and either take possession and strengthen the stockade already erected there, or erect a new one as you shall judge best," and then return to the fort at Swatara. He is to "leave 20 men, under the command of a commissioned officer, at the Fort at Manady." Capt. Smith is to communicate his instructions to the officers he shall have at the fort at Manady. Col. Weiser, in a letter to Governor Morris, July 11, 1756, says, "9 men are to stay constantly in Manady Fort, and 6 men to range Eastward from Manady toward Swatara, and 6 men to range Westward towards Susquehanna, and each party to reach the fort before night." James Galbraith says, in a letter to Edward Shippen, dated Derry, 9th August, "there were two soldiers killed and one wounded about two miles from Manady." Justice Reed informs Edward Shippen, in October, of Indians being at the house of Philip Robertson, whose son being on the corner of the fort, watching others dressing flesh by him, observed an Indian, who fled, but was fired upon by the watchman, who missed him. This was about three-quarters of a mile from Manady Fort. The journal of James Patterson, from Fort Hunter, says, "I took with me 19 men, and ranged this fort as far as Robinson's Fort, where I lodged, keeping guard of 6 men and one corporal on sentry that night. On the 6th of July I sent a sergeant and corporal, with 15 men, along the frontiers of Paxtang and Manadys, about 14 miles from this fort, and on the 7th they returned to said fort (Hunter), having seen some Indians who ran off."

FORT AT HARRIS' FERRY.—This was simply a stockade. On the 29th of October, 1755, John Harris writes to Edward Shippen at Lancaster that he has advice that forty Indians "are out many days and intend to burn my house and destroy myself and family. I have this day cut holes in my house and is determined to hold out till the last extremity if I can get some men to stand by me, few of which I can at present, every one being in fear of their own families being cut off every hour (such is our situation), he recommends building a strong fort up Susquehanna [p. 656]." Governor Morris held a conference with the Indians, Jan. 8, 1756, at Harris', there being then but "one single house and few conveniences;" "but two Indians and their families" attended, and the conference was adjourned to Carlisle by advice of Col. Weiser, where they met January 13th, and then to Lancaster, and the result seems to have been a determination to erect a chain of forts along the Susquehanna. On April 19, 1756, Mr. Shippen writes the Governor that "John Harris has built an excellent Stockade round his house, which is the only place of security that way for the provisions for the army, he having much good cellar room, and as he has but six or seven men to guard it, if the Governor would order six more men there to strengthen it, it would in my opinion be of great use to the cause, even were no provisions to be stored at all" . . . "this stockade of Harris' ought by all means to be supported." John Harris, writing on the 5th of November, the same year, says, "Here is at my fort two prisoners that came from Shamokin." Again he writes to the Governor, "I hope your honor will be pleased to continue some men here during these calamitous times in our frontiers, as this place and the conveniences here may be of service if defended," . . . "we have had a town-meeting since the murders committed in Hanover township, and have unanimously agreed to support twenty men in our township at the mountain, there to range and keep guard, or watch day and night for one month."

FORT AT ROBINSON'S.—This was probably only a private fort, erected about 1755, at the house of Samuel Robinson, in Hanover township. Governor Morris, in a letter to him on Nov. 11, 1755, says, "At the request of the people of Hanover Town, in your neighborhood, I have ordered one hundredweight of gunpowder and two hundredweight of lead to be delivered to you, which you will carry to the fort at your house and distribute among the inhabitants in as equal a manner as may be, and recommend it to them to be careful of it." In December, 1758, James Patterson, in his journal, at Fort Hunter, says, "I took with me nineteen men and ranged from this fort as far as Robinson's Fort, where I lodged, keeping a guard of six men and one corporal on sentry that night." It is probable that this last, as well as the former paragraph, alludes to Fort Manady, which was situated in Hanover township, and was sometimes known as the "stockade at Robertson's Mill," and in the centre between Fort Hunter and Swatara. (See "Fort Manady.")

FORT HUNTER.—When or by whom this fort was erected is not certainly known from the records. It was probably as early as 1755, as in an order to Adam Reed, Jan. 10, 1756, a fort is spoken of at Hunter's mill. It is there said that "the commissioners thinking that the company of fifty men under your command are sufficient to guard the frontier along the Kittochtinny Hills from your own house to Hunter's mill, have refused for the present to take any other men in that quarter into the pay of the government, and requested me to order, and I do hereby accordingly order you to detach twenty-five of the men now at your house to the fort at Hunter's mill, upon the Susquehanna, under the command of your lieutenant or officer next under yourself, to range the woods along and near the mountains towards your house," and another party to "range towards Hunter's mill." To these are to be added twenty more men of Paxtang township, making thirty for that service. Thomas McKee was appointed to take post at or near Hunter's mill, and to receive from the commanding officer there the detachment of Capt. Reed's company, with arms, etc., belonging to the Province. On the 26th of January, 1756, James Galbraith is told by the Governor that "Thomas McKee is instructed to advise with him whether to finish the fort already begun at Hunter's mill or to build a new one, and as to the place where it would be best to erect such new one."

Governor Morris writes to Col. Clapham, on the 7th of April, 1756, "As a magazine of provisions and other warlike stores will very soon be formed at or near Hunter's mill upon the river Susquehanna, I think it necessary for the protection thereof and for other purposes, to order that you appoint the said place called Hunter's mill, or some convenient place near it, for the general rendezvous of the regiments now raising, and that you order all the men already enlisted, not employed on some other service, to march immediately to the said rendezvous, and all your recruiting parties to send their recruits thither from time to time. You will order proper guards upon the magazine, and upon the boats and canoes which shall be collected there pursuant to my orders you will give directions that the officers and men keep themselves in good order, and ready to go upon duty at an hour's warning." On April 16, 1746, the Governor informs the commander that he has ordered "Colonel Clapham to rendezvous his regiment at or near Hunter's mill, where he has ordered a number of canoes to be collected and fitted for transporting the stores to Shamokin."

Col. Weiser is ordered to send two of the most trusty Indians to Hunter's mill for intelligence. There is great confusion among the Indians up the West Branch of the Susquehanna. Col. Clapham says, July 1, from Halifax, "that he shall leave at Harris' a serjeant's party consisting of 12 men, 24 at Hunter's fort. The fort here wants ammunition." Edward Shippen, speaking, on the 19th of April, of Harris' as a storehouse, says, "Hunter's house indeed would answer such a purpose were it stockaded; but as it is quite naked and stands 5 or 600 feet from the fort, the enemy may surprise it and kill the people and set the roof on fire in three or four places at once, and if the sentries should discern the fire as soon as it begins to blaze, it might be too difficult a task for them to quench it without buckets or pails. Hunter's mill is but 25 miles from Capt. McKee's plantation." This Capt. McKee is spoken of on 24th February as having had the command "of a fort at Hunter's mill, near the place where the blue hills cross the Susquehanna."

Col. Clapham writes to the Governor on the 11th of June, 1756, "I have also stationed a party of 24 men under the command of Mr. Johnson, at Hunter's fort, with orders to defend that post and the neighborhood, and to escort any provisions that should come to him up to McKee's store." On the 25th of November the commanding officer is ordered "to take great care of the batteaux," and "to weigh the two cannon which now lie in the water."

On the 13th of November the state of the garrison was, "2 serjeants, 34 privates—ammunition, 4½ pounds powder, 28 pounds lead—provisions, 1000 pounds flour, 2000 pounds beef—2 men's times up." Robert Erwin, on his way from Philadelphia with horses, applies to Mr. Mears, commandant, for an escort of fifteen men from the garrison, as he understood from Maj. Burd, at Augusta, Col. Clapham had ordered to be furnished, but was refused, saying, "Colonel Clapham had no command of him or his men." Learning that there was the greatest want of horses at Augusta, Mr. Erwin pursued his journey without the escort.

Governor Denny writes to the Proprietaries, 9th April, 1757, "The long frontier between the Susquehanna and Delaware was to be defended by Col. Weiser's battalion, and all the forts reduced to three (of which this fort does not appear to be one), with a garrison of one hundred men." Rev. John Elder, 30th July, 1757, says, "The defense of Halifax is of no advantage, but a garrison at Hunter's, under the command of an active officer, will be of great service. It will render the carriage of provisions and munitions for the use of Augusta more easy and less expensive, and by encouraging the inhabitants to continue in their places will prevent the weakening of the settlements." James Galbraith, writing from this fort Oct. 1, 1757, says, "Notwithstanding the happy situation we thought this place was in on Capt. Bussé's being stationed here, we have had a man killed and scalped this evening within twenty rods of Hunter's Fort. We all turned out, but night coming on so soon we could make no pursuit." And Capt. Bussé writes that "twelve Indians were seen, but rainy weather prevented pursuit." James Patterson with his men were at this fort, and in his journal gives an interesting account of his operations against the Indians, who were constantly appearing. On the 9th of February, 1758, there was one company of fifty-four men in the pay of the Province. Adj. Kern, on the 5th, returns under Capt. Patterson and Lieut. Allen forty men, with forty-four Provincial arms, three having their own; fifteen pounds powder, and twenty pounds lead. Barnabas Hughes was commissary here and at Swatara, which was twenty-four miles from this fort. James Burd in his journal (February 18th) "arrived at the fort at dark, and found Capt. Patterson and Davis there with eighty men, who informed him they had not above three loads of ammunition per man. He ordered Barney Hughes to send up a barrel of powder and lead; answerable in the mean time; borrowed of Thomas Gallaher forty pounds of powder and one hundred pounds of lead. On the 19th he reviewed "Captain Patterson's company, and found them complete 53 men, 44 province arms, and 44 cartouch boxes—no powder nor lead—divided $\frac{1}{2}$ pint powder and lead in proportion a man; found in this fort four months provision for the garrison." "Captain Davis with his party of 55 men was out of ammunition, divided a $\frac{1}{2}$ pint powder and lead in proportion to them. Captain Davis has got 12000 pounds of flour for the batteaux; sundry of the batteaux are leaky, that they can't swim and must be left behind. Captain Patterson can't scout at present for want of officers; 3 men sick here." "Hence he went to Crawford's, 14 miles from Hunter's." G. Price writes Governor Denny, from whom he had a commission, from Fort Hunter, on the 20th July, 1758, "I was left in the garrison of Fort Hunter and received orders from General Forbes to repair it, and sent an engineer to inspect into its condition, who found necessary to stockade it, for which purpose I was to get the country people; and accordingly applied to the several justices for the townships of Paxtang and Donegal, from whom he had no answer except by Parson Elder, who said nothing could be done till after harvest. The stockades are cut." Joseph Shippen, Jr., 23d

June, 1763, was engaged at Fort Hunter in receiving and forwarding to Augusta, by bateaux and canoes, provisions and other necessaries as they arrived from Philadelphia in wagons.

Such are all the important facts to be collected from the records.

The site of Fort Hunter is situated exactly six miles above Harrisburg, on the Susquehanna River, at its junction with Fishing Creek. There are no remains of this fort, as upon its ancient foundations there is a very large storehouse, built by Archibald McAllister in 1814. The situation of this house is very commanding, about eighty feet above the river Susquehanna, and the surrounding scenery is of the most romantic character.

During the Revolutionary war and the early periods of our history, the block-house or fort occupied the site upon which now stands the large stone residence owned by the estate of Daniel D. Boas. This fort was called the "English Fort Hunter." About a mile above this point, where the river has evidently forced its way through a mountain-pass, and where the river is narrow, deep, and swift, immediately below the romantic village of Dauphin, where immense rocks (not yet worn away by the hand of time or the friction of the water) jut out of the water, at this point, at the very base of the Kittochtinny Mountains, the river is called Hunter's Falls.

In distinction from the "English Fort Hunter," there was another fort about one mile below this on the summit of the Second Mountain, a very high peak, entirely commanding the Susquehanna River, overlooking Harrisburg, and called the "Indian Fort Hunter." At this point, tradition informs us, the Indians had some sort of an erection from which they would occasionally emerge, and after committing great depredations, would again retire to their stronghold, which was the terror of the country.

CHAPTER VI.

The French and Indian War (continued)—Second Treaty at Harris' Ferry—The Indian Barbarities—Letters from Adam Reel—Journal of Rev. Charles Deatty in 1756—Officers and Men from Dauphin in the Provincial Service.

IN the spring of 1757, Col. George Croghan, deputy Indian agent for North America, was instrumental in gathering at Harris' Ferry a large representation of the Six Nation Indians, of the Delawares and the Shawanese. Information was at once sent to the Governor. The following are the minutes of the proceedings held at this point:

"At a meeting of the Six Nations and their allies and George Croghan, Esq., Deputy agent to the Hon. Sir William Johnson, Baronet, his Majesty's sole agent and superintendent of affairs of the Six Nations, their allies and dependants, and by his special order, at John Harris', the first day of April, 1757.

Present: The Revd. John Elder, Capt. Thomas McKee, Mr. James Armstrong, Mr. Hugh Crawford, Mr. John Harris, William Prentup, Interpreter.

"Mohawks: Tihansorea, Connadagaughia, Sogeo-lanna, Peter, with thirty-one others, men, women, and children.

"Oneidas: Thomas King, Scarroyady, Tawnaquan-agis, with thirty others, men, women, and children.

"Tuscaroras: Reet King, with twenty-six others, men, women, and children.

"Onondagoes: Ossaratonqua and his two brothers, with eighteen others, men, women, and children.

"Nanticokes: Robert White, Joshua, with fourteen more, men, women, and children.

"Cuyugas: Ogarawtawrea, Orranoquare, Jenkasa-rone, with twenty others, men, women, and children.

"Delawares: Samuel, Joseph Peepy, Thomas Evans,
Jonathan, with twenty men, women, and children.

"Senecas: George, with eight more, men, women, and children.

"Connestogoes: Sahays, Captain John, with twenty-nine men, women, and children."

The greater part of the proceedings were at Lancaster; the following were at Harris' Ferry:

"Brother: You and our brother Onas wisely considered the ancient custom of our forefathers, in condoling with us and mixing your grief with ours. And as we make no doubt but some of your wise connections are dead since we were here, and many of our brethren have been killed by the evil spirit, we wipe the blood off your council-seats and put them in order with this belt of wampum. (Gave a belt.)

"Brother: After wiping the blood off your council-seats, we, with those few skins, wrap up the bones of our brethren that died or were killed by the evil spirit, and cover their graves. (Gave a small bundle of skins.)

"Brother: We, by this belt of wampum, wipe the tears from your eyes, and desire you may mourn no more. (Gave a belt of wampum.)

"Brother: We, with this belt of wampum, disperse the dark clouds, that the sun may always shine upon us in friendship; we heal your heart and free your mind from troubles, that we may meet each other in council and brighten the chain of friendship made by our forefathers, and that the council-fire may burn clear we throw a few chips on it." (Gave a belt.)

The same evening, Col. Croghan had a meeting of the sachems, and proposed going to Philadelphia to hold the treaty; but he could not prevail on any of them to go there, except the Mohawks; the rest were afraid of sickness. When he found they were not to be prevailed on to go there, he called a council, and with a belt of wampum removed the council-fire to Lancaster; to which place they all agreed to go and wait the arrival of Teedyuscung, with the Senecas, Delawares, and Shawanese. He gave a belt to remove the council-fire to Lancaster, and on the 7th of April arrived at Lancaster from John Harris', where a treaty of amity was concluded, to the satisfaction of all concerned it would seem; but the result proved the perfidy of the Indian, who accepted the white man's presents and, returning from the treaty, murdered the unsuspecting settlers.

Notwithstanding the ranging of the troops along the mountains, and the extraordinary measures taken to defend the frontiers, the marauding savages stole through the mountain fastnesses and committed their atrocities. James Galbraith, writing from Derry township under date of 10th of August to the Governor, says,—

"HONORED SIR:

"There is nothing here, almost every day, but murder by the Indians in some parts or other. About five miles above me, at Manada Gap, there were two of the Province soldiers killed and one wounded. There were but three Indians, and they came in among ten of our men and committed the murder and went off safe. The name, or sight of an Indian, makes almost all in these parts tremble; their barbarity is so cruel where they are masters; for, by all appearance, the devil communicates, God permits, and the French pay, and by that the back parts, by all appearance, will be laid waste by flight, with those who are gone and going; more especially Cumberland County.

"Pardon my freedom in this wherein I have done amiss.

"Sir, your most humble servant,

"JAMES GALBRAITH."

Squire Reed, writing from Hanover under date of the 7th of August to Edward Shippen, of Lancaster, gives this account of the foregoing affair,—

"Sir,—Yesterday Jacob Ellis, a soldier of Capt. Smith's, at Brown's, about two miles and a half over the first mountain, just within the Gap, having some wheat growing at that place, prevailed with his officers for some of the men to help him to cut some of the grain: accordingly ten of them went, set guards and fell to work. At about ten o'clock they had reaped down and went to the head to begin again, and before they had all well begun three Indians, having crept up to the fence just behind them, fired upon them and killed the corporal, and another who was standing with a gun in one hand and a bottle in the other was wounded; his left arm is broken in two places so that his gun fell, he being a little more down the field than the rest. Those who were reaping had their fire-arms about half-way down the field standing at a large tree. As soon as the Indians had fired, and without loading their guns, they leaped over the fence right in amongst the reapers—one of them had left his gun on the outside of the field—they all ran promiscuously while the Indians were making a terrible haloo, and looked more like the devil than Indians. The soldiers made for their fire-arms, and as three of them stood behind the tree with their arms, the Indian that came wanting his gun came within a few yards of them and took up the wounded soldier's gun and would have killed another had not one perceived him, fired at him, so that he dropped the gun. The Indian fled, and in going off, two soldiers standing about a rod apart an Indian ran through between them they both fired at him yet he escaped. When the Indians were over the fence a soldier fired at one of them, upon which he stooped a little; the three Indians escaped. Immediately after leaving the field, they fired one gun and gave a haloo. The soldiers hid the one that was killed, went home to the fort, found James Brown, who lives in the fort, and one of the soldiers missing.

"The lieutenant, accompanied by some more, went out and brought in the dead man; but still Brown was missing. Notice was given on that night. I went up next morning with some hands. Capt. Smith had sent up more men from the other fort; these went out next morning; against I got there, word was come in that they had found James Brown, killed and scalped. I went over with them to bring him home.
He was killed with the last shot, about twenty rods from the field, his gun, his shoes, and jacket carried off. The soldiers who found him said that they tracked the three Indians to the second mountain, and they found one of the Indian's guns a short distance from Brown's corpse, as it had been not worth much. They showed me the place where the Indians fired through the fence, and it was just eleven yards from the place where the dead man lay. The rising ground above the field was clear of standing timber and the grubs low, so that they had kept a lookout.

"The above account you may depend on. We have almost lost all hopes of everything, but to move off and lose our crops that we have cut with so much difficulty.

"I am your Honor's servant,

"ADAM REED."

Some time in the latter part of October the Indians again visited Hanover township, where they murdered, under circumstances of much cruelty, several families, among whom was one Andrew Berryhill. On the 22d of October they killed John Craig and his wife, scalped them both, burned several houses, and carried off Samuel Ainsworth, a lad about thirteen years old. The next day they scalped a German, whose name has not been given.

On the 14th of the month Squire Reed addresses a letter to Edward Shippen and others on the situation of affairs in his neighborhood. The transactions mentioned partly occurred in what is now Lebanon County, and we have referred to them in the history thereof, but now give the letter in full :

" Friends and Fellow Subjects :

" I send you in a few lines the melancholy condition of the frontiers of this country. Last Tuesday, the 12th inst., ten Indians came to Noah Frederick while ploughing, killed and scalped him, and carried away three of his children that were with him,—the oldest but nine years old,—and plundered his house, and carried away everything that suited their purpose, such as clothes, bread, butter, a saddle, and a good rifle gun, &c., it being but two short miles to Capt. Smith's fort at Swatara Gap, and a little better than two miles from my house.

" Last Saturday evening an Indian came to the house of Philip Robinson, carrying a green bush before him, said Robinson's son being on the corner of his fort watching others that were dressing flesh by him; the Indian perceiving that he was observed, fled; the watchman fired, but missed him; this being about three-fourths of a mile from Manady Fort; and yesterday morning, two miles from Smith's Fort at Swatara, in Bethel township, as Jacob Farnwell was going from the house of Jacob Meylle to his own, was fired upon by two Indians and wounded, but escaped with his life; and a little after, in said township, as Frederick Hewly and Peter Sample were carrying away their goods in wagons, were met by a parcel of Indians and all killed, lying dead in one place and one man at a little distance. But what more has been done has not come to my ears, only that the Indians were continuing their murders.

" The frontiers are employed in nothing else than carrying off their effects, so that some miles are now waste. We are willing, but not able, without help—you are able, if you be willing (that is, including the lower parts of the county), to give such assistance as will enable us to recover our waste land. You may depend upon it, that, without assistance, we, in a few days, will be on the wrong side of you; for I am now on the frontier, and I fear that by to-morrow night I will be left two miles.

" Gentlemen: Consider what you will do, and don't be long about it; and don't let the world say that we died as fools died! Our hands are not tied, but let us exert ourselves and do something for the honor of our country and the preservation of our fellow-subjects. I hope you will communicate our grievances to the lower part of our county, for surely they will send us help, if they understood our grievances.

" I would have gone down myself, but dare not; my family is in such danger. I expect an answer by the bearer, if possible.

" I am, gentlemen, your very humble servant,

" ADAM REED.

" P.S.—Before sending this away I would mention, I have just received information that there are seven killed and five children scalped alive, but have not the account of their names."

On the 16th of May, 1757, eleven persons were killed at Paxtang by the Indians, and on the 19th of August following fourteen people were killed and taken from Mr. Sankey's congregation, and one man killed near Harris' Ferry. At this period negotiations for peace commenced with the powerful chieftains of the Delaware and Shawanese tribes, when the barbarities of the Susquehanna Indians somewhat abated. But the French and Western Indians still roamed in small parties over the country, committing many depredations.

From the Pennsylvania Gazette, in 1757, we glean the following: " We hear from Lancaster that six persons were taken away by the Indians from Lancaster County on the 17th of August. . . . Since our last we learn from Lancaster that there was nothing but murdering and capturing among them by the Indians; that on the 17th of August one Beatty was killed in Pextan; that the next day James Mackey was murdered in Hanover, and William and Joseph Barnett wounded; that on the same day were taken prisoners a son of James Mackey, a son of Joseph Barnett, Elizabeth Dickey and her child, and the wife of Samuel Young and her child, and that ninety-four men, women, and children were seen flying from their places in one body, and a great many more in smaller parties. So that it was feared the settlements would be entirely forsaken.

. . . Our accounts in general from the frontiers are most dismal; all agree that some of the inhabitants are killed or carried off, houses burned and cattle destroyed daily, and at the same time they are afflicted with severe sickness and die fast. So that in many places they are neither able to defend themselves when attacked nor to run away."

A letter from Hanover township, dated Oct. 1, 1757, says that the neighborhood is almost without inhabitants, and on that day and the day before several persons were killed by the savages in Hanover. On the 25th of November, Thomas Robeson and a son of Thomas Bell were killed and scalped by the Indians in that township; but the Indians immediately went off after committing other murders. The following letter was written to Governor Denny by the commandant at Fort Hunter :

" FORT HUNTER, the 3d of October, 1757.

" May it please your Honor:

" In my coming back from ranging the frontiers, on Saturday, the 3d inst., I heard that the day before, twelve Indians were seen not far from here. As it was late and not knowing their further strength, I thought to go at daybreak next morning, with as many soldiers and battaux men as I could get; but in a short time heard a gun fired off, and running directly to the spot, found the dead body of one William Martie, who went into the woods to pick up chestnuts where the Indians were lying in ambush. I ordered all the men to run into the woods, and we ranged until it got dark. The continued rain we have had hindered me from following them. A number of the inhabitants had come here to assist in pursuing the Indians, but the weather prevented them. There were only three Indians seen by some persons who were sitting before Mr. Hunter's door, and they say all was done in less than four minutes. That same night I cautioned the inhabitants to be on their guard; and in the morning I ranged on this side of the mountain; but the next day, my men being few in number by reason of fourteen of them being sick, I could not be long from the garrison; and it seems to me there is a great number of the enemy on this side of the river.

" The townships of Paxtang and Derry have agreed to keep a guard some time in the frontier houses from Manady to Susquehanna, and expect that your Honor will be pleased to reinforce this detachment.

" If these townships should break up the communication between fort Augusta and the inhabitants, they would be greatly endangered.

" I am with great respect, etc.

" CHRISTIAN BRACK."

On the 17th of October, as four of the inhabitants near Hunter's Fort were pulling their Indian corn, two of them—Alexander Watt and John McKennet—were killed and scalped, their heads cut off, the other two scalped. Hearing of it Capt. Work, of the Augusta regiment, went down with some men from Fort Halifax, met the savages on Peter's Mountain, about twenty of them, when they fired upon him at about forty yards' distance, upon which his party returned the fire, and put the enemy to flight, leaving behind them five horses, with what plunder they had got; and one of the Indians was supposed to have been wounded by the blood that was seen in their tracks. None of Capt. Work's men were hurt. The newspapers of the period and the State archives are full of these atrocious and brutal murders.

An Indian council was held in Easton in October, 1758, at which the chiefs both of the Six Nations and the Delawares were present, and met the agents of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and George Croghan, the agent of Sir William Johnson. The causes of the late war were fully discussed, complaints of the Indians concerning land were listened to, and all differences amicably adjusted; and a message was sent by the Six Nations ordering the Shawanese and Twigtwees, on the Ohio, to desist from their hostilities on penalty of being attacked by them. Teedyuscung at this treaty received one of those insulting taunts from the Six Nations by which they too often exhibited their national superiority; taunts, however, which were deeply revenged upon the whites in after-years, when the Delawares had thrown off the galling yoke. Teedyuscung supported his station with dignity and firmness, and refused to succumb; and the different Indian tribes at length became reconciled to each other. That treaty in some measure calmed the apprehensions of the people, and for a time the settlers of this region enjoyed a period of rest.

During the war, among the Provincial officers was Rev. Charles Beatty, who was appointed chaplain to one of the Pennsylvania battalions. His journal of the year 1756 contains facts relating to this locality which are to be found nowhere else, and that is our excuse for printing it.

JOURNAL KEPT IN 1756.

"Having received his honor, the Governor's commission to be chaplain to the regiment of foot in the Provincial service under the command of Col. William Clapham, and having the advice and concurrence of the Commission of the Synod, who appointed supplies for the congregation in my absence—set out from home in order to join the regiment at Harris' Ferry, Monday, May 3, 1756. I was accompanied as far as Schuylkill by my elders, and some other friends—and having stopped at a friend's house, not far from the road to refresh myself, reached as far as the sign of the ship on the Lancaster Road, at which I lodged. Felt my need of the Divine presence to be with me in my dangerous or at least difficult undertaking.

"Tuesday, May 4th.—Set off very early in the morning; breakfasted at Rev. Mr. Smith's, at Pequea, who accompanied me as far as Mrs. Caldwell's where I parted with my good friend Mr. Daniel McMan, who accompanied me from home thus far. Reached Lancaster in the afternoon—put up at Mr. Saunders'. Col. Clapham and Capt. Lloyd came to see me, and telling me that the Governor was in town, I waited upon his honor in the evening, who received me very kindly. Went to bed early, as I had been wet with the rain on my journey.

"May 5th.—Left Lancaster about ten o'clock, in company with the Governor, colonel, and several other officers and gentlemen, and having dined at B. Hughes', reached Harris' Ferry in the evening. A little after our arrival the soldiers were ordered to attend prayers, but while I was waiting with the Governor and other gentlemen for the men

Harris' house took fire, and the alarm and confusion was such as to prevent public prayer.

"6th.—Had morning prayer. Met with an accident when lifting up poles for a tent, the ridge pole fell and cut me just above the eye, and the blood settled about it.

"Sabbath, 9th.—Preached from Exod. xxxiii. 15. This I thought a proper subject to begin with, as we are going on a very important affair.

"Sabbath, 16th.—Preached twice to a number of country people, as well as to the soldiers, with freedom to myself, and the audience seemed serious, and some impressed.

"Tuesday, 18th.—Preached at Roan's meeting house, in Paxtang, at the invitation of the people, with liberty and sweetness. The attention of the people engaged and some affected. Called after sermon to see Mr. Elder, but found him not at home.

"Thursday, 20th.—Preached at Yellow Breeches, over Susquehanna, at a meeting house belonging to the Presbytery of Donegal, at the people's invitation. Returned in the evening to camp. One of my pistols went off as I was laying it down, but God be praised, did no hurt.

"Friday, 21st.—This being appointed by the Governor to be kept as a day of Fasting and Prayer—his honor, the Governor, being present, it was generally observed. Preached twice to a great audience, many attending from both sides of the river—in the forenoon from Luke xiii. 3.

"Lord's Day, May 23d.—Preached but once, as the people were engaged.

"Tuesday, 25th.—The Governor left the camp in order to return to Philadelphia, at which the men were drawn up under arms, the cannon fired. Accompanied him with most of the officers belonging to the Regiment, as far as Swatara creek, and returned to camp in the evening. Crossed Susquehanna with my good friend Mr. Armstrong; went as far as Tobias Hendricks', where we lodged, prayed in the family. Next morning conversed with the landlord, who had been sometime sick.

"Wednesday, 26th.—Reached Carlisle; prepared to preach in the evening at the desire of the people, but it raining prevented.

"Thursday.—Preached in the afternoon to a considerable number, with freedom, and had reason to think that it was blessed to some of God's people. Returned to Mr. Armstrong's.

"Friday.—Preached at William Abernethy's. Returned safely in the evening camp.

"Sabbath, May 30th.—Preached twice—in the afternoon to the country people.

"Monday, 21st.—Set off from Harris' in company with Dr. Lloyd and several officers; and a company of men followed. Arrived safely at McKee's store, where we found the Colonel. The reason of our staying so long at Harris' was to get batteaux built to transport our stores and provisions to Shamokin. Had but a poor night's lodging, not having my tent or any bedding.

"June 4th.—Major Burd with the last division of the regiment joined us. Second Lieutenant, George Allen, and forty men, dressed as Indians, sent out as scouts to Shamokin.

"5th.—The Colonel in the afternoon marched with four companies. Reached Foster's, about three miles, where we encamped.

"Sunday, 6th.—Rose early; and after prayers, began our march; halted for breakfast after four miles, then marched on to Armstrong's, where we encamped.

"Monday, 7th.—Began to fell timber for building a Fort 160 feet square, called Fort Halifax.

"Tuesday.—Scouts returned, having gone only 18 miles when they imagined they were discovered and surrounded by the Indians. Many alarms, reports, and detentions.

"Sabbath, 13th.—Preached from Rev. iii. 12. Received a proclamation from the Governor of a cessation of arms against the Indians on the East side of the Susquehanna for 30 days, and at the same time an account of several persons killed and scalped at the forks of Swatara, supposed to be by those Indians discovered at Lee's house on the 8th inst.

"Saturday, 19th.—A number of the soldiers mutinied, chiefly Dutch.

"Sabbath, 20th.—A general court-martial to try the prisoners, most of whom were discharged as innocent. This prevented most of the officers from attending. Preached upon conscience, with a particular application to those who mutinied.

"Friday, 25th.—Ensign Atley came to camp, and brought up under guard two Dutchmen, deserters, who had sacrilegiously mutilated an Indian in his grave.

"Sabbath, 27th.—Were alarmed by the advance guard firing at a mark. The whole regiment were under arms, advanced immediately, expecting to engage every minute, which prevented sermon in the forenoon. So, just as service began in the afternoon, had another alarm, but few, alas!

seemed to regret the disappointment. Wickedness seems to increase in the camp, which gives me a great deal of uneasiness.

"Wednesday, 30th.—Orders were given that all should march the next morning.

"Thursday, July 1st.—Up early to prepare for marching. Desired the Colonel to leave the women behind, according to his promise, especially those of bad character. Accordingly they were all ordered to be paraded, and the Major had orders to leave such as he saw fit behind; but when this came to be done, one of the officers pleaded for one, and another for another, saying that they could wash, &c., so that few were left of a bad character, and these would not stay but followed us that night, and kept with us.

"Friday and Saturday.—Crossed the river by batteaux, officers and men. Then started to march in seven divisions, Indian file, instantly expecting an attack. Before starting had prayer and exhortation.

"Sabbath, 4th.—One of the batteaux which had on it a cannon was upset, which occasioned a great deal of labour, and what profane swearing was there. If I stay in the camp my ears are greeted with profane oaths, and if I go out to shun it, I am in danger of the enemy—what a dilemma is this? But my eyes would be toward the Lord.

"Monday.—Marched twelve or fifteen miles, and saw many traces of the enemy as near at hand. That night under cover of darkness we recrossed the river in batteaux, the Colonel and myself in the first division.

"Tuesday.—The Colonel and Captain Shippen went out in a boat, and from the river saw five Indians in the Fork, and with a glass saw others skulking on the hills. After breakfast and prayers, marched and reached Shamokin about 10 o'clock, and immediately set about securing ourselves by a fascine breast-work—fixed our swivels and blind bushes, mounted some of our cannon as well as we could. The situation is fine.

"Wednesday.—The batteaux having been unloaded were sent down to Halifax for the remainder of the stores, under an escort commanded by Lieut. Davis, who was advised to encamp on the Islands to prevent surprise by the enemy, signs of whom were seen in every direction.

"Sabbath, 9th.—The camp was alarmed by the bellowing of the cattle, and it was supposed the Indians were driving them off, and a surprise was expected. Two parties were sent out, which recovered eleven of the twenty cattle, but saw no Indians. This postponed preaching until afternoon.

"Monday.—Capt. Young, the paymaster, arrived from Philadelphia, under an escort of forty men from Halifax, and with alarming accounts from the Governor about the Indians high up the East branch.

"Sunday, the 18th.—Some alarms of Indians, and the going off of Capt. Lloyd's detachment, made a sermon later than usual, and but few of the officers attended. Was enabled to bear a solemn testimony for God against sin and vice in general, and particularly that so common amongst us.

"Friday, July 23d.—This morning very early the scouts, which consisted of about 100 men, dressed like the Indians, some being blacked, others painted, crossed the river into the Fork, in order to go toward the West, with ten days' provisions; thus by taking the Indians in their own way, hoped to be able to beat them in their turn. Was grieved that they seemed to have little regard for the blessing of God, which alone can make them successful. Had an inclination to go with them, but they did not seem very desirous of it, and the Colonel thought it best for me to stay, so I took this as a hint of Providence.

"Sabbath, July 25th.—Preached twice to-day—most of the officers attended as well the men. Was enabled to speak with freedom and power. Two men arrived to-day from Philadelphia with a letter that France had declared war against England on the 10th of May.

"Monday, 26th.—The Colonel let me know that if I had a mind to go home and see my family, he would grant me leave by a furlough to go with the batteaux to Harris'."

Dobson, Matthew, dis. April 13, 1766.	McKee, William.
Finny, Thomas.	Nesmith, John.
Fitzer, George Adam.	Rimby, Courad.
Goodwin, Edward.	Rourk, Michael.
Gotthieb, George.	Smith, Richard.
Holmes, George.	Vernin, Henry.
	Young, Andrew.

In 1760, among the officers of the Pennsylvania regiment were:

Colonel.

James Burd, April 12, 1760.

Lieutenants.

George Dixon, April 23, 1760. John Baird, April 18, 1760.

Ensigns.

Arthur Wallace, April 30, 1760. William McClure, May 11, 1760.
 David Harris, May 10, 1760. Matthias Mease, April 24, 1760.

Of the officers of the Pennsylvania regiment, commanded by the Hon. John Penn, Governor of the Province, in 1764, we have the following. It may be here stated that the officers thereof participated in the land grants by the Proprietaries for services in Bouquet's expedition 1763-64:

FIRST BATTALION.

Surgeon.

John Wiggins, Dec. 20, 1763.

Lieutenants.

James Hayes, Nov. 29, 1763. John Lycan, July 15, 1763.

Ensigns.

Alexander Boyd, Nov. 29, 1763. James Forster, Aug. 4, 1763.
 William McMeen, Dec. 10, 1763.

SECOND BATTALION.

Burgom.

William Plunket, Sept. 7, 1763.

Quartermaster.

Robert Clark, June 7, 1764.

Captains.

Samuel Lindsay, July 13, 1763. Timothy Green, July 18, 1763.

Lieutenants.

William Maclay, July 4, 1763. James McAllister, July 17, 1763.
 Charles Stewart, July 18, 1763.

Ensigns.

William Buchanan, July 14, 1763. Thomas Askey, July 15, 1763.
 Thomas Completon, Nov. 1, 1763.

On the 1st of June, 1764, there were stationed on the frontiers of Lancaster County Provincial troops as follows:

At David Patten's, Paxtang township, Capt. Samuel Hunter, 1 sergeant, 16 men.

Monoſy Gap, Hanover township, Lieut. John Lyons, 1 sergeant, 15 men.

Fort Hunter, Paxtang township, Ensign James Forster, 15 men.

John Cameron's, Hanover township, Capt. Timothy Green, 1 sergeant, 15 men.

John McFarling's, Hanover township, Lieut. Charles Stewart, 1 sergeant, 15 men.

Godfried Young's, Hanover township, Ensign Thomas Completon, 15 men.

CHAPTER VII.

The French and Indian War (continued)—Gen. Forbes' victory—Conspiracy of Pontiac.

WITH the defeat of the French in Canada, their expulsion from the Ohio by Gen. Forbes, and the erection of Fort Pitt on the ruins of Fort Duquesne, the Province of Pennsylvania looked for the enjoyment of a long and undisturbed peace, since her mild and forbearing policy had conciliated the Indians, and their dangerous neighbors, the French, were removed. But the sources in which they sought for safety were fruitful of dangers. The unprotected state of the frontiers, consequent on the discharge of the forces of the middle and southern colonies, held forth irresistible temptations to the whetted appetite of the border savages for plunder. Their hostility had been rewarded rather than chastised by Pennsylvania; every treaty of peace was accompanied by rich presents, and their detention of the prisoners was overlooked upon slight apologies, though obviously done to afford opportunities for new treaties and additional gifts. The mistaken and perverted humanity of the Quakers had softened down their offenses, and its apologies gave them confidence in their allegations of injuries received from the whites. These reasons, however, are insufficient to account for the wide extension of the Indian confederacy, which was probably caused by motives of profound policy. The aborigines beheld the French driven out of their whole country, themselves threatened by forts commanding the great lakes and rivers, and they felt that an immediate and mighty effort was necessary to restrain the tide, which now, unimpeded, would spread itself over the continent.

For boldness of attempt and depth of design the Pontiac war of 1763, so named by the frontier inhabitants, was perhaps unsurpassed in the annals of border warfare. Schemed by such renowned chiefs, Kiyasuta, head of the Senecas, and Pontiac, of the Ottawas, the numerous tribes lying within the reach of their influence were easily commanded for the prosecution of any new project. Not only in possession of these grand facilities to engage numerous warriors for the present purpose, they availed themselves of additional means to secure a powerful confederacy by calling in aid their eloquence to represent the necessity there was for defense of their own rights in making a deadly repulse against the encroachments of the English colonies, which they represented as having finally in view the hostile displacement or extermination of every Western tribe from the region they now occupied.

The grand scheme projected by these Napoleons of the West seems to have been to arouse the tribes severally of the country, and all those they could reach, to join in striking a decisive blow on the frontiers, and, as it were, throw terror into the very heart of the colonies, and thereby effectually and forever repulse them from encroachments into the valley of the Ohio. A certain day was set apart, it seems, for making the general assault, while the scheme was to be kept in profound silence, that they might come upon their victims in an unguarded hour. All the forts were to be simultaneously attacked, as well as the settlements, and all individuals whom they could come upon, and with one bold sweep, as it were, raze to the earth everything bearing the marks of their doomed enemies. The season of harvest was chosen that the attention of the people might at the time be drawn to their crops, as well as the work of havoc then be greater by their destruction of them.

When the attack was made it was found not to be simultaneous. That on Fort Pitt and vicinity was made almost two or three days before the time agreed upon for the general attack, although it was done with the belief at the time that the day had arrived. The misunderstanding was said to proceed from the officiousness of a Delaware squaw, who was desirous that their plans might be deranged. At the grand council held by all the tribes for the appointment of the day for the general attack and making the necessary arrangements for it a bundle of rods had been put into the hands of every tribe, each bundle containing as many rods as there were days till the day when the general attack was to be made. One rod was to be drawn from the bundle every morning, and when a single one remained it was the signal for the outbreak. The squaw spoken of had purposely extracted two or three rods unknowingly to the others, thinking it might materially disconcert, if not defeat their project. From this circumstance was said to arise the untimely action of the Indians about Fort Pitt. But everywhere else the attack had been simultaneous, so correct and in such concert had they moved.

The Shawanese and Delawares appear to have been the most active, and in pursuance of their bold and bloody project, the moment arriving for the general assault, the first intelligence their fated enemies had of the preconcerted work of death was a murderous attack made upon them without discrimination wherever met with. The frontier settlements of Pennsylvania and the neighboring provinces of Maryland and Virginia were immediately overrun with scalping parties, "marking their way with blood and devastation wherever they went, and all the examples of savage cruelty which never fail to accompany an Indian war."

Almost every fort along the lakes and the Ohio was instantly attacked, and those that did not fall under the first assault were surrounded, and a resolute siege commenced. In a short time, so vigorous were the savages, that eight out of eleven forts were taken,—Venango, Le Bœuf, Presqu'Isle, with the chain of stockades west of the Ohio,—Fort Pitt, Detroit, and Niagara alone maintaining. These, being better garrisoned, were prepared to withstand an attack with but little danger.

After the first panic had passed away the refugee settlers associated themselves together, and, under the care of divisions of the regular troops and militia, succeeded in collecting and saving the remnant of their crops.

During this time Fort Pitt remained in the most hazardous condition. And what may have been its situation already, apprehensions for the worst were entertained, for no accounts from it had been received of late, and in fact nothing definite since it had been attacked, when it had been surrounded by the Indians "and all communication cut off from it even by message." Placed at so great a distance from the inhabited portions of the Province, and rendered still more inaccessible from the then almost impassible mountains that intercepted the way, it could not be conveniently heard from, nor could assistance be rendered it without great expense of labor and time; and a considerable force being requisite for their own safety to undertake a march so distant, some delay could not be avoided. Endeavors in the Province to raise men proving nearly abortive, although the Assembly at the first outbreak of the savages had ordered seven hundred men to be raised for the protection of the frontiers during harvest, yet all attempts now seemed to have little effect. The delay which had thus been occasioned increased the alarm for those at Fort Pitt, from whom no intelligence still was had, while the audacity of depredating parties was increased as they discovered the settlers fleeing before them and no very apparent effort being made to check them.

All exertions proving fruitless to raise the requisite forces, Gen. Amherst, commander-in-chief of the army in America, promptly dispatched Col. Bouquet to the relief of Fort Pitt. Gathering together "the shattered remnants of the Forty-second and Seventy-second Regiments, lately returned from the West Indies," comprising in all scarcely five hundred men, the gallant Bouquet set out for a long and tedious march through the forests. His little army were indeed invalids, "reinforced with the last man that could be removed from the hospital," and many were so infirm that about sixty were conveyed in wagons; but these had been brought along more with a view of being left as reinforcements at the small posts by the way. Accompanying this little force, however, were six companies of rangers from Lancaster and Cumberland Counties, amounting to two hundred, all that could possibly be spared from the Provincial volunteers, who were guarding their own homes from the inroads of the enemy.

Reaching Carlisle, Col. Bouquet found nothing had been done to carry out the orders which had been given to prepare a convoy of provisions on the frontiers. All was terror and consternation; the greatest part of Cumberland County, through which the army had to pass, was deserted, and the roads were covered with distressed families flying from their settlements, and destitute of all the necessaries of life. In the midst of this confusion, says Bouquet in his journal, the supplies required for the expedition became very precarious, nor was it less difficult to procure horses and wagons for the use of the troops. However, in about two weeks after his arrival at Carlisle, by the prudent and active measures pursued by the commander, joined to his knowledge of the country and the diligence of those he employed, the requisite provisions and articles of conveyance were procured, and the army proceeded.

On the 5th of August, Col. Bouquet determined to halt at Bushy Run, now Westmoreland County, and there rest the troops till towards evening, and pass the deep and dangerous defiles of Turtle Creek during the ensuing night; but when within about a half-mile from the creek, the advanced guard of the army was suddenly surprised by an ambuscade of Indians opening a brisk fire of musketry upon them. Being speedily and firmly supported by bringing up the rear, a charge of bayonets was ordered, which effectually routed the savages, when they were pursued a short distance. But no sooner was the pursuit given up than they returned and renewed the attack with redoubled vigor, while at the moment a most galling fire was opened by the parties who had been concealed on some high ground that skirted the flanks of the army. A general charge with the whole line was now made, which proved effective, and the savages were obliged to give way; but withal to no purpose, for no sooner was the pursuit again given up than the Indians renewed the attack with their wonted ferocity. The action continued without intermission the whole afternoon,—a confused and irregular attack by the forces of both parties. The enemy, routed from one skulking-place, would retreat to another. But Col. Bouquet made it an object as much as possible to keep his troops collected, that they might not be broken in upon and dispersed by the enemy. The battle ended with the day, without any decided advantage to either.

With the first dawn of morning the war-whoop was again raised, and in a moment there seemed a thousand startling yells to break in every direction around. At this signal a rush was made by the Indians on all sides, but the lines ready formed were not to be taken by surprise, and effectually repulsed the savages in every attempt. Betaking themselves to the trees, the Indians poured an incessant fire with great precision into the little army. Fatigued with the previous day's march and the battle of the preceding evening, combined with the exposure to a hot August sun, with no water within their reach, the troops began indeed to be dispirited. Attacked with a dogged determination, and fired upon without intercession, they could neither retreat nor proceed. It became obvious, therefore, that a desperate effort must be made to save the army from total destruction. The commander happily bethought himself of a stratagem that might prove successful, which, as the troops were still disposed in a circle from the previous night, consisted in making a manœuvre of the appearance of a precipitate retreat from one side so as to entrap the assailants in pursuit, who would rush as thoughtless within the inclosure of lines which lay in ambush.

The snare was set in direction of the enemy's deadliest fire, and most happily succeeded in enticing them from their places of concealment. Before aware, they were under a most destructive fire of the troops; and ere they could retreat, they received so deadly a charge from the regulars that they fled with the utmost precipitation. This secured the victory. The woods around were immediately abandoned by the others, and the conflict ceased.

This had been the whole Indian force from Fort Pitt, who, after lying around that place for three months, keeping up a vigorous siege, and being on the alert for a force to come against them from the settlements, early became apprised of the approach of Col. Bouquet, and informed duly by their spies of the movement of the enemy, they determined, as was expected, to await them on the most advantageous ground, aware that if they succeeded in defeating the troops, the extent of country they had already gained sway over by their sudden and bold movements would not only be maintained, but a probability follow that they might strike consternation into the very heart of the settlements. It is indeed impossible to say what influence might have been exerted over the settlements of Pennsylvania in particular had this little army been cut off. It is certain possession of the country might not have been regained till the work of destruction had been completed west of the mountains. But so stunning were the results of this battle to the savages, dismay at once seized them and confidence was lost. Though looked upon as a small engagement, there doubtless hung upon it results nigh as important to the colonies as the issue of the more renowned battle on the Plains of Abraham, when a Wolfe and a Montcalm met to decide the destinies of their respective nations. The little battle of Bushy Run was the means of disheartening the Indians and causing them to abandon designs which, if they had continued to execute with the same rigor that had characterized them for a little more than three months since they had commenced the assault, might have effected much that would be fearful to relate.

In this engagement Col. Bouquet lost about fifty men and had sixty wounded, the savages about sixty of their best warriors and many of their most distinguished chiefs. Their forces were made up with warriors from the Delaware, Shawanese, Mingo, Wyandot, Mohiccan, Miami, and Ottawa tribes, and doubtless the flower of their nations, for the importance of the issue of the first decisive engagement had most likely been well weighed by them, and therefore an effort made for the victory.

The army again pursued their route, and in four days reached Fort Pitt, with but little interruption, except "a few scattering shots from a disheartened and flying enemy." The Indians immediately withdrew and retired beyond the Ohio. Fort Pitt relieved, found its little group of inhabitants again breathing the open air after a constant siege of more than three months, and the uplifted tomahawk and scalping-knife of the red savage was stayed.

CHAPTER VIII.

The French and Indian War (continued)—The so-called "Paxtang Boys' Insurrection"—The Manor of Conestoga—The Conduct of the Provincial Assembly—The Perfidy of the Friendly Indians—Insecurity of the Frontiers from their Maraudings—Destruction of the Indians at Conestoga and Lancaster.

BY virtue of a warrant from the commissioners of property, dated "the 1st day of the 12th month (February), 1717-18," there was "surveyed for the proper use and behoof of William Penn, Esq., Proprietary and Governor-in-chief of the Province of Pennsylvania," a tract of land containing sixteen thousand acres, lying on the east side of the Susquehanna River from the mouth of Conestoga Creek northward. This was the Manor of Conestoga. At the date of its survey by the deputy surveyor of Chester County, Isaac Taylor, there were no Indians dwelling within that reservation, and this is a fact which our historians have lost sight of, whether ignorantly or designedly we shall not at this time say. Previous to the laying out of the manor all the Indians had removed higher up the Susquehanna,—the Shawanese to their brethren westward, the Conoys to the Great Island, uniting their destinies with the Six Nations.

A few years later, however, several Indian families located upon the manor on a little stream emptying into the Conestoga near its mouth, about three miles from the Susquehanna, and about five miles southeast of the present town of Columbia. For almost a period of forty years their number was increased or diminished by Indian tramps wandering in the guise of friends among the white settlements, intent on spying out objects for savage cruelty, and claiming to belong to the Conestoga town.

It was during the Pontiac war that the Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania, in reply to the earnest appeals for help and protection, said he could give the frontiersmen no aid whatever, but commends their zeal and urges them to act with caution; while the Assembly paid no heed to the supplications of the distressed inhabitants, and instead of redress and aid, abused and insulted those who asked for protection. One member of that body, Nathaniel Grubb, of Chester County, mild and placid Quaker, used this bland-like expression in referring to the "back inhabitants," "A pack of insignificant Scotch-Irish, who, if they were all killed, could well enough be spared!" The leading Quakers, who controlled the affairs of the Province of Pennsylvania from 1682 until towards the beginning of the Revolution, when Quaker rule and British supremacy sank to rise no more, were designing political demagogues, and the private correspondence of the Penns themselves are proofs of their duplicity and artfulness.

Neither the Governor of the Province or the controlling power of the Assembly showed the proper spirit. It was at a time when the tomahawk, the scalping-knife, and the torch were desolating the country. The frontier counties became wretched and deplorable beyond description. "The Indians," said the Paxtang volunteers in their "Apology," "set fire to houses, barns, corn, hay, in short, to everything that was combustible; so that ye whole country seemed to be in one general Blaze and involved in one common Ruin. Great Numbers of y^e back Settlers were murdered, scalped, and butchered in the most shocking manner, and their dead Bodies inhumanly mangled," but further details as given by them are too horrid for recital. "None," further say they, "but those who have been spectators or eye-witnesses of these shocking scenes can possibly have any adequate Ideas of our sufferings. Nay, even those very persons who are so hardened and destitute of the common Feelings of Humanity, as to be able to extenuate these horrid Barbarities, under the Charitable Plea of its being their Custom of making war, would we doubt not be softened, had they but shared with us in the lightest parts of our sufferings." Then Paxtang became truly the frontier, for west of the Susquehanna, so great was the terror, that scarcely an inhabitant was left. At this juncture the Rev. John Elder, the long and revered pastor of Paxtang and Derry Churches, organized his rangers, under authority, however, of the government. They were mostly members of his own and Hanover congregations. These brave men were ever on the alert, watching with eagle eye the Indian marauders who, during Pontiac's war, swooped down upon the defenseless frontiers of Cumberland and Lancaster Counties. "High mountains, swollen rivers, or great distances never deterred or appalled them. Their courage and fortitude were equal to every undertaking, and woe betide the red men when their blood-stained tracks once met their eyes." The Paxtang rangers were truly the terror of the red men, swift on foot, excellent horsemen, good shots, skillful in pursuit or in escape, dexterous as scouts, and expert in manœuvring.

On the 4th of August, 1763, Col. Elder wrote to the Governor, "The service your honor was pleased to appoint me to I have performed to the best of my power, though not with success equal to my desires. However, both companies will, I imagine, be complete in a few days. There are now upwards of thirty men in each, exclusive of officers, who are now and have been employed since their enlistment in such service as is thought most safe and encouraging to the frontier inhabitants, who are here and everywhere else in the back counties quite sunk and dispirited, so that it is to be feared that at any attack of the enemy a considerable part of the country will be evacuated, as all seem inclinable to seek safety rather in flight than in opposing the savage foe."

Unfortunately they were prohibited by law from going over the boundaries of the purchased lands after the enemy, and it is not to be supposed, therefore, they could guard successfully the entire line of outposts.

During the subsequent harvest the reapers of Paxtang, Hanover, and Derry took their guns and ammunition with them into the fields to defend themselves from the sudden attacks of the enemy. On the Sabbath the trusty rifle was taken to the sanctuary, and the pastor of Paxtang had at hand his weapon of defense.

In August, Col. Armstrong, the "hero of Kittanning," with two hundred Paxtang and Hanover rangers and a few soldiers from Cumberland County, marched to the Indian town on the Big Island. While en route, learning that a party of fifty Indians were on their way to the settlements, a portion of the volunteers followed them and routed them on Muncy Hill. The rest of Col. Armstrong's force proceeded to the Indian town, but found it deserted, the Indians having been apprised of the approach of the volunteers. The latter returned home, enraged at learning that the Conestogas had sent messengers to inform their friends of the expedition.

Subsequently, on the 9th of September, 1763, a few of the rangers who had encamped in Berks County were apprised of the approach of the Indians by their out-scouts. The Indians advanced cautiously to take them by surprise. When near, with savage yells, they rushed forward; but the rangers, springing to their feet, shot the three in front. The rest fled into a thicket and escaped. The Indians were armed with guns and provided with ammunition. These Indians were on their way from the Moravian Indians in Northampton County to the Big Island. Runners were sent to the different parties of rangers with information, and others set out in pursuit of those who fled. The rangers who started in pursuit were baffled by the superior skill and artifice of the Indians. That they went to the Big Island was beyond a doubt. The Paxtang band were now determined to watch with scrutinizing eyes the Indians who visited Conestoga and the Moravian towns, and ascertain the treacherous.

The Provincial commissioners, however, on being informed of the foregoing particulars, inquired into the facts with the Governor, and reported the result to the Assembly on the 21st of October: "Upon inquiry made before the Governor into the late conduct of the Moravians and their Indians at Nain and Wichetunk, it was their opinion that the said Indians have been, and still are, secretly supplied by the Brethren with arms and ammunition, which they, the said Indians, having an intercourse with our enemies on the frontiers, do barter and exchange with them, to the great danger of the neighboring inhabitants, and that there is much reason to suspect the said Moravian Indians have also been principally concerned in the late murders committed near Bethlehem, in the county of Northampton, which renders it absolutely necessary to remove them into the interior parts of the Province, where their behavior may be more closely observed. It was ordered by the House of Assembly that the Indians be invited down and lodged at some convenient place, and supported at the public expense. Some were placed in the barracks, others on Province Island."

About the middle of October, when the murder of the Stinson family and others reached the ears of the Paxtang men, they solicited their colonel, the Rev. Mr. Elder, to obtain permission of the Governor to allow them to make an excursion against the enemy. Another object had in view was "to destroy the immense quantities of corn left by the New England men at Wyoming, which, if not consumed, would be a considerable magazine to the enemy, and enable them with more ease to distress the inhabitants." At the most earnest solicitation, therefore, of his men, Col. Elder allowed the companies of Capts. Stewart and Clayton to proceed to Wyoming. They marched in three days and a half one hundred and ten miles on foot. When they reached Wyoming they learned that the bloodthirsty savage had preceded them, entering the valley from the direction of Northampton County, and then taken their departure up the river, murdering all the settlers. Col. Elder, in his letter to Governor Hamilton, was under the impression that, owing to the exposed condition of that region of country, the New England men had fled from the valley. Dispirited and shocked at the Indian atrocities, the rangers, after burying the massacred, burned the Indian houses and a quantity of corn left standing, and returned to their homes.

By what evidence we know not, nor by what power of reasoning, but our Connecticut friends have recently laid the destruction of the New England colonists to the rangers under Stewart and Clayton, the bare supposition of which we can only characterize as infamous. All the documents go to show that the inferences thrown out are the imaginings of an addled brain. Neither Quaker falsehoods or Yankee ingenuity did we ever suppose would go to such lengths.

Indians had been traced by the scouts to the wigwams at Conestoga, and to those of the Moravian Indians in Northampton County. Suspicion was awakened; the questions, "Are these Indians treacherous? Are their wigwams the harbors of our deadly foe? Do they conceal the nightly prowling assassin of the forest, the villain who, with savage ferocity, tore the innocent babe from the bosom of its mother where it had been quietly reposing and hurled it in the fire? The mangled bodies of our friends cry aloud for vengeance." Such were the questions, surmises, and expressions of the exasperated people. The Paxtang rangers were active in endeavoring to discover the perpetrators of those acts of violence, and they succeeded. Their scouts traced the Indian marauders to the Conestoga town. It was not alone the few miserable, squalid wretches who had been caressed and supported by the Quaker government, but strange Indians were there harbored and protected. Capt. Lazarus Stewart, one of the boldest men of the frontiers, who commanded a company of rangers, proposed to Col. Elder to capture the murderers; but the merciful colonel dissuaded him from the attempt. It was then, under date of September 13 (1763), that the Rev. Elder wrote to Governor Hamilton,—

"I suggest to you the propriety of an immediate removal of the Indians from Conestoga, and placing a garrison in their room. In case this is done, I pledge myself for the future security of the frontiers."

Capt. (afterwards Col.) Timothy Green, on the 15th of the same month, wrote to His Excellency,—“We live in daily fear of our lives. At the Indian town the incarnate devils are secreted, and the people here demand that those Indians be removed from among us.”

John Harris had previously made a similar request: “The Indians here I hope your Honor will be pleased to cause to be removed to some other place, as I don't like their company.”

Subsequently, on taking charge of the executive affairs of the Province in October, Governor John Penn replied as follows: “The Indians of Conestoga have been represented as innocent, helpless, and dependent on this government for support. The faith of this government is pledged for their protection. I cannot remove them without adequate cause. The contract made with William Penn was a private agreement, afterwards confirmed by several treaties. Care has been taken by the Provincial Committee that no Indians but our own visit Conestoga. Whatever can be faithfully executed under the laws shall be as faithfully performed.”

This “contract with William Penn” was the excuse given to the Governor by those who controlled the government,—the Quakers,—and the Governor wrote without examining into the truth of the matter. The fact is, as we have heretofore remarked, that the original Indian settlers had removed before the laying out of the Manor of Conestoga, and those who then occupied it were not the possessors of the land, but lived on it simply by sufferance. William Penn had not assigned any land to any Indians on the Conestoga save to the Shawanese, but they had removed westward forty years previously. So much for Governor John Penn's objection, yet a bad excuse sometimes is better than none.

The rangers, finding their appeals to the authorities useless, resolved on taking the law into their own hand. The safety of the frontier inhabitants demanded it, there was no alternative. It was at first decided to capture several of the most notorious and try them by due course of law. This was found to be impossible, as referred to in Capt. Stewart's declaration, which we shall farther on present. The destruction of the Conestogas, so called, was not then projected. That was the result. The capture of the Indians was approved of by Col. Elder, but the attempt failing, as an officer of the Province it was his duty to prevent extreme measures. Parkman and Rupp state that Col. Elder, learning of an attempt to destroy the entire tribe, as they were about to set off rode after them commanding them to desist; that Stewart threatened to shoot his horse, and much more. Such was not the case.

In the first place, no descendant of the Puritans can properly understand the character of the Scotch-Irish, and we must say the same of Mr. Rupp, whose sympathies, learning, and researches were to the German element. Whether these historians were biased in their judgment by Quaker coloring we know not, but true it is, without making due inquiry, authentic records have been cast aside and the willful misinterpretation of Quaker fiction given as current historical truths. From a letter dated Paxtang, Dec. 16, 1763, written to Governor Penn, he says, "On receiving intelligence, the 13th inst., that a number of persons were assembled on purpose to go and cut off the Conestoga Indians, in concert with Mr. Foster, the neighboring magistrate, I hurried off an express with a written message to that party, 'entreating them to desist from such an undertaking, representing to them the unlawfulness and barbarity of such an action, that it's cruel and unchristian in its nature, and would be fatal in its consequences to themselves and families; that private persons have no right to take the lives of any under the protection of the Legislature; that they must, if they proceeded in that affair, lay their accounts to meet with a severe prosecution, and become liable even to capital punishment; that they need not expect that the country would endeavor to conceal or screen them from punishment, but that they would be detected and given up to the resentment of the government.' These things I urged in the warmest terms in order to prevail with them to drop the enterprise, but to no purpose."

Not to be deterred, the rangers reached the Indian settlement before daylight. The barking of some dogs discovered them, and a number of strange Indians rushed from their wigwams, brandishing their tomahawks. This show of resistance was sufficient inducement for the rangers to make use of their arms. In a few moments every Indian present fell before the unerring fire of the brave frontiersmen. The act accomplished, they mounted their horses and returned severally to their homes. Unfortunately, a number of the Indians were absent from Conestoga, prowling about the neighboring settlements, doubtless on predatory incursions. The destruction at the Manor becoming known, they were placed in the Lancaster work-house. Among these vagabonds were two well known to Parson Elder's scouts. In addition, several Indians of notorious character made their way to Philadelphia and were secreted among the Moravian Indians protected in that city.

An express being sent to Philadelphia with the news, great excitement ensued, and Governor Penn issued a proclamation relative thereto. Notwithstanding its fine array of words, it fell upon the Province harmless. Outside of the Quaker settlements, every one heartily approved of the measures taken by the Paxtang rangers.

The presence of the remaining Indians at Lancaster became a cause of great uneasiness to the magistrates and people. Their removal to Philadelphia was earnestly requested by Edward Shippen and others.

Governor Penn proved very tardy, and we are of the opinion he cared little about them, or he would have acted promptly. Day after day passed by, and the excitement throughout the frontiers became greater. The rangers, who found that their work had been only half done, consulted as to what measures should be further proceeded with. Capt. Stewart proposed to capture the principal Indian outlaw, who was confined in the Lancaster work-house, and take him to Carlisle jail, where he could be held for trial. This was heartily approved of, and accordingly a detachment of the rangers, variously estimated at from twenty to fifty, proceeded to Lancaster on the 27th of December, broke into the work-house, and but for the show of resistance would have effected their purpose. But the younger portion of the rangers, to whom was confided this work, were so enraged at the defiance of the Indians, that before their resentment could be repressed the unerring rifle was employed, and the last of the so-called Conestogas had yielded up his life. In a few minutes thereafter, mounting their horses, the daring rangers were safe from pursuit. George Gibson, who, from his acquaintance with the principal frontiersmen of his time, in a letter written some years after, gives the most plausible account of this transaction, which bore such an important part in the early history of the Province. He says, "No murder has been committed since the removal of the friendly Indians and the destruction of Conestoga,—a strong proof that the murders were committed under the cloak of the Moravian Indians. . . . A description of an Indian who had, with great barbarity, murdered a family on the Susquehanna, near Paxtang, was sent to Lazarus Stewart, at Lancaster. This Indian had been traced to Conestoga. On the day of its destruction he was on a hunting expedition. When he heard that the rangers were in pursuit of him he fled to Philadelphia. . . . The three or four who entered the work-house at Lancaster were directed by Stewart to seize on the murderer, and give him to his charge. When those outside heard the report of the guns within, several of the rangers alighted, thinking their friends in danger, and hastened to the door. The more active of the Indians, endeavoring to make their escape, were met by them and shot. No children were killed by the Paxtang boys. No act of savage butchery was committed."

CHAPTER IX.

The "Paxtang Boys" Insurrection (continued)—Excitement in the Province—Characteristic Letter of Parson Elder—The Declaration of the Frontier Inhabitants.

IF the excitement throughout the Province was great after the affair at Conestoga, this last transaction set everything in a ferment. "No language," says Rev. Dr. Wallace, "can describe the outcry which arose from the Quakers in Philadelphia, or the excitement which swayed to and fro in the frontiers and in the city." The Quakers blamed the Governor, the Governor the Assembly, and the latter censured everybody except their own inaction. Two proclamations were issued by the Provincial authorities, offering rewards for the seizure of those concerned in the destruction of the Indians, but this was impossible, owing to the exasperation of the frontiersmen, who heartily approved of the action of the rangers.

On the 27th of December the Rev. Mr. Elder hurriedly wrote to Governor Penn, "The storm, which had been so long gathering, has at length exploded. Had government removed the Indians from Conestoga, as was frequently urged without success, this painful catastrophe might have been avoided. What could I do with men heated to madness? All that I could do was done. I expostulated, but life and reason were set at defiance, and yet the men in private life were virtuous and respectable, not cruel, but mild and merciful. . . . The time will arrive when each palliating circumstance will be calmly weighed. This deed, magnified into the blackest of crimes, shall be considered one of those youthful ebullitions of wrath,

To this extenuating and warm-hearted letter came a reply, under date of Dec. 29, 1763, from the Governor: "As it is absolutely necessary, for the preservation of peace and good order in the government, that an immediate stop be put to such riotous proceedings, I beg you will continue to use your best endeavors to discourage and suppress all insurrections that may appear among any of the people over whom you have an influence, and that you will be pleased to take all the pains in your power to learn the names of the ringleaders and perpetrators of those barbarities, and to acquaint me with everything you can discover concerning them. The commissioners, not thinking it necessary any longer to keep in pay more than one person to command the troops on the east side of the Susquehanna, came yesterday to a resolution to discontinue the pay of yourself and Mr. Seeley as commanders of the companies in Lancaster and Berks Counties, which are for the future to be put under the direction of Maj. Clayton, as well as those in Northampton. I therefore desire you will deliver over to him all the Provincial arms, accoutrements, ammunition, and other military stores remaining in your possession, with an exact account of those you have distributed among the two companies. I return you thanks for the good services you have performed, and for the care and prudence with which you have conducted your military command from the beginning."

From the foregoing letter of Governor John Penn it is evident that the commissioners, or rather the Provincial Council, intended to punish both the frontier commanders, or that with the destruction of the Conestogas there was little or no danger of Indian atrocities. The latter proved to be the case, but the authorities were cognizant of the fact that the Paxtang boys were correct in their surmisings, and that peace would follow the removal of the friendly Indians. It shows, also, that, believing thus, the Provincial authorities were culpable to a great degree in allowing the Indians to remain on the Manor, despite the representations of Col. Elder, John Harris, and Edward Shippen. The Rev. Mr. Elder quietly laid by his sword, feeling confident that time would vindicate his course.

Subsequently Col. Elder wrote Governor Penn, and from the original letter in our possession we will give what he had to say relative to the then crisis of affairs:

"PAXTON 30th Jan^y 1764.

"Sir

"The Resolution the Commissioners have taken, to put these two Companies under the direction of another person, is very agreeable to me; & in consequence thereof I have on the 24th of this Ins^{ts} deliver'd to Major Clayton the military Stores remaining at Mr Harris's with an account of what have been distributed to the Troops, and resigned to him the whole of my military charge.

"I'm greatly obliged to yr Hon^r that you have kindly approved of my proceedings in the discharge of the Trust repos'd in me; and shall from time to time, use my best Endeavours to promote peace among the people with whom I have any Connections.

"But, I'm much concerned to find that, the rash proceedings of a few inconsiderate persons are likely to be attended with fatal consequences: For, howmuchsoever the facts committed by them, are & have been disliked by the most thinking judicious men; yet the indulgence shown to savages, gives a general disgust: It's thought hard that, any such under the Title of friends, but unjustly, as is commonly thought, shou'd be so much carressed, & such numbers of them taken under the protection of the province, & plentifully suppl'd at it's expense, as an additional weight to the heavy burden it already groans under; while many frontier families, his Majesty's loyal & faithful subjects, are driven from house & home, reduced to poverty and want and little provision made for them; these things, with many others I might mention make a deep impression, & influence the minds of many; but such prudent measures will, I hope, be taken by the Legislature as may happily prevent the ill effects thereof.

"Were it in my power to learn the names of any concerned in the late Riots; I should think it advisable, on many accounts, to use silence in that case: That of an Informer is a Character too odious for a gentleman to bear: Besides the Office I have the hon^r to be invested with in the Church requires that I shou'd do nothing that may have a tence to mar my usefulness in that station; but any thing else that may be thought necessary to promote his Majesty's service, or beneficial to the province may at all times be expected from

Some one has indorsed on the back of this letter "Judicious man with noble spirit," with which we heartily coincide.

The first week in January, as had been agreed upon as early as the preceding November, meetings were held in all the frontier counties for the appointment of delegates to go to Philadelphia in person and demand a redress of grievances. Recent events gave interest and zest to the meetings. Paxtang, Donegal, Derry, and Hanover selected each three. Similar delegates were chosen in the non-German townships of Berks County and from Cumberland and Northampton, about forty delegates in all, persons who were not in anywise connected with the transactions at Lancaster or Conestoga. This gathering of the frontiersmen in public meeting to petition and demand of the Provincial Assembly proper redress and representation in that body was stigmatized as seditious and riotous, and hence the "hue and cry" which heralded the contemplated visit of the delegates from the frontier.

Governor John Penn, writing at this time to his uncle, Thomas Penn, at London, a letter which has never appeared in print, gives this view of affairs, it puts a different phase upon passing events: . . . "You will see by the commotion the Province has been in for a long time past, the impossibility of apprehending the murderers of the Conestoga Indians. There is not a man in the county of Lancaster but is of the rioters' party. If we had ten thousand of the king's troops I don't believe it would be possible to secure one of these people. Though I took all the pains I could even to get their names, I could not succeed, for indeed nobody would make the discovery though ever so well acquainted with them, and there is not a magistrate in the country would have touched one of them. The people of this town [Philadelphia], save a certain class, are as inveterate against the Indians as the frontier inhabitants. For it is, beyond a doubt, that many of the Indians now in town [referring to the Moravian Indians on Province Island], have been concerned in committing murders among the back settlers; and I believe, were it not for the few of the king's troops who are here to protect them, that the whole power of the Government would not be able to prevent their being destroyed. Nothing can satisfy these people in flying in the face of Government in the manner they have done, although what they have suffered from these cruel savages is beyond description. Many of them have had their wives and children murdered and scalped, their houses burnt to the ground, their cattle destroyed, and from an easy, plentiful life are now become beggars. In short, this spirit has spread like wild-fire, not only through this Province, but the neighboring Governments, which are fully as inveterate against the Indians as we are. The 14th of this month we suspect a thousand of the rioters in town to insist upon the Assembly granting their request, with regard to the increase of Representatives, to put them upon an equality with the rest of the counties. They have from time to time presented several petitions for the purpose, which have been always disregarded by the House; for which reason they intend to come in person."

And what does Col. Elder say in regard to the expedition to Philadelphia? In writing to Col. Shippen at this time he remarks, "This much may be depended on, that they [the Paxtang men] have the good wishes of the country in general, and that there are few but what are now either one way or the other embarked in the affair."

The Moravian Indians, who had been confined in the barracks at Philadelphia since November, were removed to Province Island at the reported march of "a large body of rioters (?), who were bent on destroying them also." This has been always denied, as merely a wild rumor, which, like many other reports, spread consternation and alarm in the city. The Assembly resolved to resist any attempt to destroy the Indians, but the latter, frightened at the reports of their threatened destruction, petitioned the authorities to send them, a hundred and fifty in number, with their two ministers, to England. But this being impracticable, the Governor furnished them an escort to proceed through New Jersey and New York to Sir William Johnson, under whose protection they were desirous to place themselves. William Franklin, then Governor of New Jersey, granted them a passport; but Governor Colden, of New York, by advice of his Council, refused to admit them within his Province. The Council of New York were offended by Governor Penn sending so large a body of Indians into their colony without their consent, and professed themselves more disposed to punish than to protect the Indians from the east side of the Susquehanna, whom they considered as their worst enemies, composed of the rogues, thieves, and runaways from other Indian nations. They also condemned the policy which returned these men to strengthen their nation. The progress of the Indians being thus obstructed, Gen. Gage, who had succeeded Gen. Amherst in the chief command of the English forces in America, directed two companies of the Royal Americans to re-escort them to Philadelphia, where they were secured in the barracks.

The "Declaration" adopted to be transmitted to Philadelphia is herewith given,—

"We, Matthew Smith and James Gibson, in behalf of ourselves and his Majesty's faithful and loyal subjects, the inhabitants of the frontier counties of Lancaster, York, Cumberland, Berks, and Northampton, humbly beg leave to remonstrate and lay before you the following grievances which we submit to your wisdom for redress.

"First. We apprehend that as Freemen and English subjects, we have an indisputable title to the same privileges and immunities with his Majesty's other subjects who reside in the interior counties of Philadelphia, Chester, and Bucks, and, therefore, ought not to be excluded from an equal share with them in the very important privilege of legislation; nevertheless, contrary to the Proprietor's charter and the acknowledged principles of common justice and equity, our five counties are restrained from electing more than ten Representatives, viz., four for Lancaster, two for York, two for Cumberland, one for Berks, and one for Northampton, while the three counties and City of Philadelphia, Chester, and Bucks, elect twenty-six. This we humbly conceive is oppressive, unequal, and unjust, the cause of many of our grievances, and an infringement of our natural privileges of Freedom and equality; wherefore, we humbly pray that we may be no longer deprived of an equal number with the three aforesaid counties to represent us in Assembly.

"Secondly. We understand that a Bill is now before the House of Assembly, wherein it is provided that such persons as shall be charged with killing any Indians in Lancaster county, shall not be tried in the county where the fact was committed, but in the counties of Philadelphia, Chester, or Bucks. This is manifestly to deprive British subjects of their known privileges, to cast an eternal reproach upon whole counties, as if they were unfit to serve their country in the quality of jurymen, and to contradict the well-known laws of the British nation in a point whereon life, liberty, and security essentially depend, namely, that of being tried by their equals in the neighborhood where their own, their accusers, and the witnesses' character and credit, with the circumstances of the fact, are best known, and instead thereof putting their trials in the hands of strangers, who may as justly be suspected of partiality to as the frontier counties can be of prejudices against Indians; and this, too, in favor of Indians only, against his Majesty's faithful and loyal subjects. Besides, it is well known that the design of it is to comprehend a fact committed before such a law was thought of. And if such practices were tolerated, no man could be secure in his most valuable interest. We are also informed, to our great surprise, that this bill has actually received the assent of a majority of the House, which we are persuaded could not have been the case, had our frontier counties been equally represented in Assembly. However, we hope that the Legislature of this Province will never enact a law of so dangerous a tendency, or take away from his Majesty's good subjects a privilege so long esteemed sacred by Englishmen.

"Thirdly. During the late and present Indian war, the frontiers of this Province have been repeatedly attacked and ravaged by skulking parties of the Indians who have, with the most savage cruelty, murdered men, women and children without distinction, and have reduced near a thousand families to the most extreme distress. It grieves us to the very heart to see such of our frontier inhabitants as have escaped savage fury with the loss of their parents, their children, their wives, or relatives, left destitute by the public, and exposed to the most cruel poverty and wretchedness, while upwards of an hundred and twenty of these savages, who are with great reason suspected of being guilty of these horrid barbarities, under the mask of friendship, have procured themselves to be taken under the protection of the government, with a view to elude the fury of the brave relatives of the murdered, and are now maintained at the public expense. Some of these Indians, now in the barracks of Philadelphia, are confessedly a part of the Wyalusing Indians, which tribe is now at war with us, and the others are the Moravian Indians, who, living with us under the cloak of friendship, carried on a correspondence with our known enemies on the Great Island. We cannot but observe with sorrow and indignation that some persons in this Province are at pains to extenuate the barbarous cruelties practiced by these savages on our murdered brethren and relatives, which are shocking to human nature, and must pierce every heart but that of the hardened perpetrators or their abettors; nor is it less distressing to hear others pleading that although the Wyalusing tribe is at war with us, yet that part of it which is under the protection of the government may be friendly to the English and innocent. In what nation under the sun was it ever the custom that when a neighboring nation took up arms, not an individual should be touched, but only the persons that offered hostilities? Who ever proclaimed war with a part of a nation and not with the whole? Had these Indians disapproved of the perfidy of their tribe, and been willing to cultivate and preserve friendship with us, why did they not give notice of the war before it happened, as it is known to be the result of long deliberations, and a preconcerted combination among them? Why did they not leave their tribe immediately, and come among us before there was ground to suspect them, or war was actually waged with their tribe? No, they stayed amongst them, were privy to their murders and revenges, until we had destroyed their provisions, and when they could no longer subsist at home, they come, not as deserters, but as friends, to be maintained through the winter, that they may be able to scalp and butcher us in the spring.

"And as to the Moravian Indians, there are strong grounds at least to suspect their friendship, as it is known they carried on a correspondence with our enemies on the Great Island. We killed three Indians going from Bethlehem to the Great Island with blankets, ammunition, and provisions, which is an undeniable proof that the Moravian Indians were in confederacy with our open enemies; and we cannot but be filled with indignation to hear this action of ours painted in the most odious and detestable colors, as if we had inhumanly murdered our guides, who preserved us from perishing in the woods, when we only killed three of our known enemies, who attempted to shoot us when we surprised them. And, besides all this, we understand that one of these very Indians is proved, by the oath of Stinson's widow, to be the very person that murdered her husband. How, then, comes it to pass that he alone of all the Moravian Indians should join the enemy to murder that family? Or can it be supposed that any enemy Indians, contrary to their known custom of making war, should penetrate into the heart of a settled country to burn, plunder, and murder the inhabitants, and not molest any houses in their return, or ever be seen or heard from? Or how can we account for it that no ravages have been committed in Northampton County since the removal of the Moravian Indians, when the Great Cove has been struck since? These things put it beyond doubt with us that the Indians now at Philadelphia are his Majesty's perfidious enemies, and, therefore, to protect and maintain them at the public expense while our suffering brethren on the frontiers are almost destitute of the necessaries of life, and are neglected by the public, is sufficient to make us mad with rage, and tempt us to do what nothing but the most violent necessity can vindicate. We humbly and earnestly pray, therefore, that those enemies of his Majesty may be removed as soon as possible out of the Province.

"Fourthly. We humbly conceive that it is contrary to the maxims of good policy, and extremely dangerous to our frontiers, to suffer any Indians, of what tribe soever, to live within the inhabited parts of this Province while we are engaged in an Indian war, as experience has taught us that they are all perfidious, and their claim to freedom and independency put it in their power to act as spies, to entertain and give intelligence to our enemies, and to furnish them with provisions and warlike stores. To this fatal intercourse between our pretended friends and open enemies, we must ascribe the greatest of the ravages and murders that have been committed in the course of this and the last Indian war. We, therefore, pray that this grievance be taken under consideration and remedied.

"Fifthly. We cannot help lamenting that no provision has been hitherto made, that such of our frontier inhabitants as have been wounded in defense of the Province, their lives and liberties, may be taken care of, and cured of their wounds at the public expense. We, therefore, pray that this grievance may be redressed.

"Sixthly. In the late Indian war this Province, with others of his Majesty's colonies, gave rewards for Indian scalps, to engage the seeking them in their own country, as the most likely means of destroying or reducing them to reason, but no such encouragement has been given in this war, which has damped the spirits of many brave men, who are willing to venture their lives in parties against the enemy. We, therefore, pray that public rewards may be proposed for Indian scalps, which may be adequate to the dangers attending enterprises of this nature.

"Seventhly. We daily lament that numbers of our nearest and dearest relatives are still in captivity among the savage heathen, to be trained up in all their ignorance and barbarity, or to be tortured to death with all the contrivances of Indian cruelty, for attempting to make their escape from bondage; we see they pay no regard to the many solemn promises they have made to restore our friends who are in bondage amongst them. We, therefore, earnestly pray that no trade may hereafter be permitted to be carried on with them until our brethren and relatives are brought home to us.

"Eighthly. We complain that a certain society of people in this Province, in the late Indian war, and at several treaties held by the King's representatives, openly loaded the Indians with presents, and that J. P., a leader of the said society, in defiance of all government, not only abetted our Indian enemies, but kept up a private intelligence with them, and publicly received from them a belt of wampum, as if he had been our Governor, or authorized by the King to treat with his enemies. By this means the Indians have been taught to despise us as a weak and disunited people, and from this fatal source have arose many of our calamities under which we groan. We humbly pray, therefore, that this grievance may be redressed, and that no private subject be hereafter permitted to treat with, or carry on a correspondence with, our enemies.

"Ninthly. We cannot but observe with sorrow, that Fort Augusta, which has been very expensive to this Province, has afforded us but little assistance during this or the last war. The men that were stationed at that place neither helped our distressed inhabitants to save their crops, nor did they attack our enemies in their towns, or patrol on our frontiers. We humbly request that proper measures may be taken to make that garrison more serviceable to us in our distress, if it can be done.

"N.B.—We are far from intending any reflection against the commanding officer stationed at Augusta, as we presume his conduct was always directed by those from whom he received his orders.

"Signed on behalf of ourselves, and by appointment of a great number of the frontier inhabitants.

"MATTHEW SMITH.
"JAMES GIBSON.

"FEBRUARY 13th, 1764."

The declaration, it will be perceived, is the Paxtang boys' defense of the affair at Conestoga. They begin by professing to be, to a man, loyal subjects of the king. They state at length the unwarrantable favor shown to the Indians; reiterate their opinion that they are spies and murderers, and state, as the great grievance, which showed the animus of all the rest, that when in the preceding summer Col. Bouquet's forces marched through the Province, almost as a forlorn hope, to defend the frontiers and save Fort Pitt, and when Gen. Amherst, the royal commander-in-chief, demanded assistance, provisions, etc., the Assembly of Pennsylvania did not "stir hand or foot," did not furnish a man, provisions, or assistance of any kind, yet that the moment Indians were in distress they were helped by the authorities and influential men. That every abomination committed by Indians was excused, and that they were encouraged and protected while cutting the throats of the borderers, and then, when at last deserted by the government the frontiersmen had protected themselves, and after fighting the Indians every other way, had at last cut off the source of their calamities, a price was set upon the heads of those who defended their country, their children, and their firesides, and so they conclude, "God save the King!"

CHAPTER X.

The "Paxtang Boys' Insurrection" (continued)—The Approach of the Delegates to Philadelphia—The Fears of the Quaker Metropolis—The Conduct of the Quakers and Dr. Franklin—The Pamphleteers.

On the afternoon of Saturday, the 5th of February, reports reached Philadelphia that the frontier settlers were coming en masse to Philadelphia, "their principal object," say Quaker historians, "being to put all the Indians confined in the new barracks to death." Some declared there were thousands of the invaders on the march. Without ascertaining the truth of the various exaggerated rumors which reached the Governor's ears, that functionary called a public meeting at the State House (Independence Hall) the same evening. The weather was rainy, but there were some three thousand persons present. Many were expected who did not attend. Those who were absent were principally the Germans, which, according to the Rev. Henry Muhlenberg, gave the Governor much chagrin, and led him to suspect that the Germans "were about to place their heads under the same hood with the discontented or rebels, so-called," terming thus the brave frontiersmen. At this meeting the act which passed the Assembly on the previous day, extending the Riot Act of George I., Chap. I., to the Province of Pennsylvania, was proclaimed, and proposals were at once made for the enrollment of one hundred and fifty gentlemen to assist the soldiers in guarding the barracks that night; also that upon any alarm in the night, bells should be rung, upon which the inhabitants were expected to turn out with their arms, and repair to the barracks, or, if the town was attacked, of which there seemed to be a general fear on the part of the Quakers, to meet at the Court-House, and take measures to defend the city. Four cannon and ammunition were sent from the State-House to the barracks, carpenters were employed to erect works there, and spies were sent out upon the different roads to watch the movements of the Paxtang boys.

The next day was Sunday; but the weather being fine, though very cold, vigorous means of defense were made. A redoubt was built in the centre of the parade at the barracks in the Northern Liberties, and fortified the gate-ways with angles of thick planks, which had places left for the soldiers to fire through. Several pieces of cannon were likewise hauled up, and the best preparations made that the time would admit of. The excitement was intense, and Philadelphia Quakers never desecrated the Lord's Day before or since with such warlike preparations.

Towards midnight of Sunday an express arrived bringing an account of the approach of the Paxtang boys, and another about two o'clock. The alarm was forthwith given by the ringing of bells and the beating of drums. The inhabitants arose from all quarters, and ran to obey the summons. The remains of an old artillery company were mustered, and two pieces of cannon brought from the magazine and stationed before the court-house. All business was suspended, the shops and stores were closely shut, and every person seemed anxious to know what would be the issue of all this tumult. The number of persons in arms that morning was about six hundred, and it was expected that the so-called "rioters" would attempt to cross at the middle and upper ferries of the Schuylkill. Orders were sent to bring the boats to the city side and take away the ropes. Couriers were now seen continually coming in, their horses all of a foam, and the people running with the greatest eagerness to ask them where the enemy was and what were their numbers. The answers to these questions were various. Sometimes they were at a distance. Sometimes they were a thousand strong, then five hundred, then fifteen hundred. In short, all was doubt and uncertainty.

The call to arms was responded to in a manner which had not been expected, many of the Quakers joining in the companies. "It seemed almost incredible," writes the Rev. Mr. Muhlenburg in his diary, "that several young and old Quakers formed companies and took up arms, particularly so to the boys on the streets, for a whole crowd of boys followed a distinguished Quaker, and in astonishment cried out, 'Look here! a Quaker with a musket on his shoulder.' It was by many people looked upon as a wonderful sign to see so many old and young Quakers marching about with swords and guns, or deadly weapons, so called. What increased the wonder was that the pious lambs in the long French, Spanish, and Indian wars had such tender consciences, and would sooner die than raise a hand in defense against those dangerous enemies, and now at once, like Zedekiah, with iron horns, rushing upon a handful of our poor, distressed, and ruined fellow-citizens of the frontiers." This, bear in mind, is the language of an intelligent Lutheran clergyman.

The boats at the Schuylkill ferries near the city had been secured and guards placed at them, but it was afterwards recollected that the ferry-boat at the Swede's Ford had been neglected. This was of great importance, for the river being high at the time, the securing of that boat would have obliged the Paxtang men to march some distance up the river before they could cross. A party therefore immediately set off for that ferry, but they were too late, for the delegates had crossed the stream and proceeded to Germantown.

During the confusion and alarm which prevailed at the time the Paxtang force were momentarily expected to arrive, a circumstance occurred which came near producing a fatal result, and we allude to it in this place from the fact that it subsequently became one of the subjects for satire and caricature. A large body of mounted men appeared at the upper end of Second Street, and the cry was instantly raised, "The Paxtang boys are coming! the Paxtang boys are coming!" The peaceable Quaker military primed their muskets, the artillerymen threw themselves into order, and the people ran to get out of danger. A troop of armed men on horseback were seen coming down the street, and on their approach one of the artillerymen was just applying the match to his gun when a person near by, discovering the mistake, quickly placed his hat over the touch-hole and prevented the discharge. A most unfortunate result was thus avoided, for the approaching troop proved to be a company of butchers and porters who had collected and organized themselves to aid in the defense of the city, but who had neglected to give the proper notice of their coming.

Bearing the declaration, approved of and recommended by over fifteen hundred of the frontier inhabitants, with letters from prominent personages, the delegates, mostly on horseback, pursued their march to the Quaker city, little imagining the warlike preparations to receive them. They sent word to Governor Penn of the hour they would be at Germantown. On their arrival at that place did they have the first intimation of the action taken by the mild and peaceful Quakers? There they halted.

We are of the opinion that after all the Paxtang Boys were not such terrible bugaboos, for we have it from the journal of a Moravian minister (not by any means biased in their favor) that "a large number of persons went from the city to view them, and from the best accounts that could be obtained their number did not exceed one hundred, although it was inferred their whole force had not come in yet. This dreaded body of frontiersmen consisted of a fine set of fellows dressed in blanket coats and moccasins. They were armed with rifles, and some few had pistols. They behaved very well in Germantown, talked civilly to the people, and expressed great surprise that arms had been taken up against them, for they had only come to lay their grievances before the people." Now this is a contemporary account.

At Germantown, the Paxtang men were met by commissioners sent out by Governor Penn, to whom they made known their intentions. Col. Matthew Smith and James Gibson accompanied the commissioners to Philadelphia, where they met the Governor and the Assembly, to whom they presented their grievances in the declaration alluded to, which the latter body term in their minutes the declaration of the rioters, and the petition of the back inhabitants. In the mean time, with a few exceptions, the remaining delegates returned to their homes, and the inhabitants of the city to their peaceful avocations. And thus ended the "Paxtang Boys' Insurrection."

The publications which followed the so-called "Paxtang Boys' Insurrection" were numerous, and no transaction from the founding of the Province to the present day takes up as large a share of the bibliography of Pennsylvania. Some of the pamphlets on both sides were bitter and vindictive. The Quakers took up the pen to hold up the deed to execration, and, to be candid, neither truth nor decency were held in regard. Others seized the opportunity to defame the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians as ignorant bigots and lawless marauders. The Presbyterians, as a matter of course, were not to be kept quiet. On the side of the Quakers were chiefly Israel Pemberton, Benjamin Franklin, and Joseph Galloway; on the popular side, or that of the Paxtang Boys, were Rev. John Ewing, Rev. Gilbert Tennent, and Dr. Dove.

Dr. Franklin seems to have taken the lead with his "Narrative of the Late Massacre of Indians in Lancaster County," etc., a pamphlet which we can characterize in no milder terms than an ingenious fabrication. Among the great men of America, next to Washington, we have ever placed that eminent Pennsylvania statesman whose reputation is cosmopolitan,—the sage and philosopher, Benjamin Franklin. Nevertheless, he was but human, and if we repeat in plain terms that, like many another great man, he had his faults, and pandered to political demagogism, we hope not to lessen him in the reader's estimation. But in the light of history and of this very transaction which is brought to their attention, we cannot pass over his glaring faults. His object in writing the pamphlet is better given in his own words. In the "Memoirs of Lord Kames" appears a letter from Franklin, under date of June 2, 1765, and from London:

"MY DEAR LORD:

"... In December, 1763, we had two insurrections of the back inhabitants, by whom twenty poor Indians were murdered, that had from the first settlement of the Province lived among us under the protection of our government. This gave me a great deal of trouble, for as the rioters threatened further mischief, and their actions were approved by an increasing party, I wrote a pamphlet entitled 'A Narrative of the Late Massacre in Lancaster County of a Number of Indians, Friends of this Province' (Penn.), to strengthen the hands of a weak government by rendering the proceedings of the rioters unpopular and odious. I had by this made myself many enemies among the people, and the Governor, thinking it a favorable opportunity, joined the whole weight of the Proprietary interest to keep me out of the Assembly, which was accordingly effected at the last election.

"Yours, etc.,

"B. FRANKLIN."

Had Franklin made this acknowledgment during his lifetime at home, where the "Narrative" had been freely circulated as an electioneering document, we should have had a higher opinion of the philosopher. It is this document which for a hundred years has furnished food for historians of a sensational turn of mind. As to its general untruthfulness, Franklin's own acknowledgment is sufficient evidence.

Following the "Narrative" came the Rev. Dr. Ewing's "Conduct of the Paxtang Men Impartially Represented," which roused up all the Quaker bigotry and animosity with "An Answer to the Pamphlet, 'Conduct of the Paxtang Men Impartially Represented,' wherein the Ungenerous Spirit of the Author is Manifested, etc., and the Spotted Garment plucked off." Then followed "The Quaker Unmasked, or Plain Truth;" that by "Remarks on the Quaker Unmasked, or Plain Truth to be Plain Falsehood," and "The Author of the Quaker Unmasked Stript Stark Naked, or the Delineated Presbyterian Played Hob with." The latter by "Remarks upon the Delineated Presbyterian Played Hob with, or Clothes for a Stark Naked Author," and that by "A Looking-Glass for Presbyterians." Then came "The Paxtang Boys, a Farce, translated from the original French by a native of Dunnegal;" and "A Scene in the First Act of the New Farce, published as a specimen, printed in the year of the New Hegira Secundus, the Paxtonian Expedition." "The Paxtoniade, by Christopher Gymnast," followed with "A Battle! A Battle! A Battle! A Squirt!

Where no man is killed, and no man is hurt . . ."

to which is added the Quaker's Address versify'd, and King Wampum, or, Harm Watch, Harm Catch!

"'Tis safe and common in a Friend's disguise
To mask Hypocrisy, Deceit, and Lies;
As safe and common as the thing might be,
The Poet thought it was rank Villainy!"

"Printed and sold at the Blue Nose, near Brazen Nose College." King Wampum was the nick-name of Israel Pemberton.

These titles may give some idea of the virulence of the pamphleteers.

In addition to the pamphlets appeared a large number of broad-side caricatures. Among these was a large copper-plate engraving entitled "The Paxtang Expedition," "inscribed to the author of the Farce by H. D." It represented a scene at the courthouse (located at Market and Second Streets). Four pieces of cannon are placed in position, two pointing down Second Street and two up Second Street. The troop of butchers are represented, and the cannoniers are ready to fire. On the sides of the market-stalls companies are represented with arms. The courthouse steps are crowded; a company is drawn up on the south side of Market Street in front of the Quaker meeting-house; armed men occupy the yard of this peaceful conventicle, and others are in the door-way and at the upper windows. From the mouth of one of those below proceeds a label with the words "Success to the new barracks," while those up-stairs proclaim "Bring the grog up stairs." A great number of labels containing exclamations and remarks proceed from the mouths of various persons. Probably one hundred figures are engraved upon this curious picture, which has some verses below descriptive of the scene.

Another caricature is divided into three compartments. On one side is a representation of Israel Pemberton embracing an Indian squaw. In the middle a company of Quakers are under arms, with a cannon pointed towards the Paxtang boys in the distance. Beneath this picture are the lines,—

"When danger is threatened, 'tis mere nonsense
To talk of such a thing as conscience.
To arms! to arms! with one accord,
The sword of Quakers and the Lord;
Fill bumpers, then, of rum or arrack,
We'll drink success to our new barrack!"

On the left of the plate is a representation of Benjamin Franklin in his study, with the inscription,— "Fight dog, fight bear, you're all my friends,

By you I shall attain my ends;
For I can never be content
Till I have got the Government;
But if from this attempt I fall,
Then let the Devil take you all!"

A third caricature represents the author of the "Narrative" (Dr. Franklin) on the left of the picture, the scene being a wild one in the country, intended for the frontiers. In his hand Franklin holds a paper having on it, "Resolved, ye Prop'r a knave and tyrant. N. C. D. Gov'r do. (ditto)." A Quaker is approaching him, riding on the back of a Scotch-Irishman, who carries a gun. The Quaker holds a rope, which is fastened around the neck of a German, who is blind-folded. Upon his back is mounted an Indian with a tomahawk; upon the back of the latter is strapped a bale of furs marked I. P. (Israel Pemberton). In the foreground lie the bodies of murdered settlers, and in the background are deserted farm-houses. The inscription beneath is,—

"The German bleeds and bears the furs
Of Quaker lords and savage curs;
The Hibernian frets with new disaster,
And kicks to fling his broad-brimmed master;
But help at hand resolves to hold down
The Hibernian's head or tumble all down."

Another caricature represented Israel Pemberton in the act of distributing tomahawks to Indians from a cask, while still another, "Humbly Inscribed to the Saturday Night's Club in Lodge Alley," contained about one hundred and fifty lines, principally abusing the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians. Two advertisements were at the bottom, one of "a curry-comb for the itch," the other of "an ointment of brimstone and butter."

CHAPTER XI.

The "Paxtang ~~King's~~ Insurrection" (continued)—Reward for Capt. Lazarus Stewart—His Eloquent Declaration—A Summary of the Affair.

GOVERNOR JOHN PENN, from the papers placed in his hands and the representations made by Edward Shippen, the chief magistrate at Lancaster, was disposed to let the whole matter pass into oblivion, but the majority of the Assembly was of a different opinion, and urged him to have Stewart arrested and brought to Philadelphia for trial. Capt. Stewart had repeatedly offered to go to Lancaster or York for trial, but the Quakers demanded otherwise. For five years Stewart resided at Paxtang secure from arrest, but to cajole the Assembly, in 1769, the Governor consented to offer a reward for his capture, giving the matter into the hands of the sheriff of York County. It was then that he sent forth his declaration:

Capt. Lazarus Stewart's Declaration.

"Let all hear! Were the counties of Lancaster, York, Cumberland, Berks, and Northampton protected by government? Did not John Harris, of Paxtang, ask advice of Col. Croghan, and did not the colonel advise him to raise a company of scouts, and was not this confirmed by Benjamin Franklin? And yet, when Harris asked the Assembly to pay the scouting party, he was told 'that he might pay them himself.' Did not the counties of Lancaster, York, Cumberland, Berks, and Northampton, the frontier settlements, keep up rangers to watch the motions of the Indians, and when a murder was committed by an Indian, a runner with the intelligence was sent to each scouting party, that the murderer or murderers might be punished? Did we not brave the summer's heat and the winter's cold and the savage tomahawk, while the inhabitants of Philadelphia, Philadelphia County, Bucks, and Chester 'ate, drank, and were merry?"

"If a white man kills an Indian it is a murder far exceeding any crime upon record; he must not be tried in the county where he lives, or where the offense was committed, but in Philadelphia, that he may be tried, convicted, sentenced, and hung without delay. If an Indian kill a white man it was the act of an ignorant heathen, perhaps in liquor; alas, poor innocent! he is sent to the friendly Indians that he may be made a Christian. Is it not a notorious fact that an Indian who treacherously murdered a family in Northampton County was given up to the magistrates that he might have a regular trial; and was not this Indian conveyed into Bucks County, and is he not provided with every necessary and kept secured from punishment by Israel Pemberton?"

"Have we not repeatedly represented that Conestoga was a harbor for prowling savages, and that we were at a loss to tell friend or foe, and all we asked was the removal of the Indians? Was not this promised by Governor Penn, yet delayed? Have we forgotten Renatus, that Christian (?) Indian?"

"A murder of more than savage barbarity was committed on the Susquehanna; the murderer was traced by the scouts to Conestoga; he was demanded, but the Indians assumed a warlike attitude, tomahawks were raised, and the fire-arms glistened in the sun; shots were fired upon the scouts, who went back for additional force. They returned, and you know the result: Conestoga was reduced to ashes. But the murderer escaped. The friendly and unfriendly were placed in the work-house at Lancaster. What could secure them from the vengeance of an exasperated people? The doors were forced and the hapless Indians perished."

"Were we tamely to look on and see our brethren murdered, our fairest prospects blasted, while the inhabitants of Philadelphia, Philadelphia County, Bucks, and Chester slept and reaped their grain in safety?"

"These hands never shed human blood. Why am I singled out as an object of persecution? Why are the blood-hounds let loose upon me? Let him who wished to take my life, let him come and take it,—I shall not fly. All I ask is that the men accused of murder be tried in Lancaster County. All I ask is a trial in my own county. If these requests are refused, then not a hair of those men's heads shall be molested. Whilst I have life you shall not either have them or me on any terms. It is true, I submitted to the sheriff of York County, but you know too well that I was to be conveyed to Philadelphia like a wild felon, manacled, to die a felon's death. I would have scorned to fly from York. I could not bear that my name should be marked by ignominy. What I have done was done for the security of hundreds of settlers on the frontiers. The blood of a thousand of my fellow-creatures called for vengeance. I shed no Indian's blood. As a ranger I sought the post of danger, and now you ask my life. Let me be tried where prejudice has not prejudged my case. Let my brave rangers, who have stemmed the blast nobly and never flinched, let them have an equitable trial; they were my friends in the hour of danger, to desert them now were cowardice.

"What remains is to leave our cause with our God and our guns.

"LAZARUS STEWART."

Brave and defiant ranger! Words which thrill the soul and fire the heart even to-day, coming down through the cathedral aisles of time for over a century with all its pathos and its eloquence.

The strife at Wyoming between the Connecticut settlers and Pennsylvania gave Stewart and his rangers an opportunity not only to gratify their love of adventure, but for their more perfect security and to show their hostility to the Proprietary government. The democratic tendencies of the Susquehanna Company and the vesting of the title of lands in the occupants of the soil had strong attractions for men of Stewart's cast of mind. In December, 1769, Stewart¹ went to Connecticut to negotiate with the Sus-

No sooner had the mass of the settlers left the valley than the forces of Ogden and Jennings commenced the plunder of all the property left behind. Cattle, horses, and sheep were driven to the markets on the Delaware, and their grain-fields plundered and destroyed.

quehanna Company. In consideration of certain lands he proposed to unite his forces with those of the company and effect the occupation and settlement of Wyoming. The proposition was accepted. He returned to Paxtang and informed his comrades that he had obtained the grant of a township of land for himself and them, provided they would settle thereon and defend the soil.

behind. Cattle, horses, and sheep were driven to the markets on the Delaware, and their grain-fields plundered and destroyed.

This state of affairs aroused the settlers to active and earnest efforts to recover possession of their homes and property. In their extremity they made overtures to the Paxtang boys to come and join them in recovering possession, promising them a township of land to the fifty who should join them at Wyoming on or before the 1st of February, 1770. The proposition was accepted, the Paxtang boys came on as agreed.

Again the opposing forces met in battle array, the settlers being reinforced from Connecticut and well provided with arms and ammunition, and having the Paxtang boys as their allies.

After a protracted struggle, in which Maj. Durkee commanded on the side of the settlers, and Capt. Ogden on the side of the invaders, Ogden was compelled to surrender, and articles of capitulation were entered into on the 29th April, 1770.

Thus by the aid of the Paxtang boys the settlers recovered possession of their homes, and the Paxtang boys obtained the township of Hanover for their services, where they settled and became a component part of the settlers of the valley, and took part in all the subsequent struggles to retain possession.

The following is the reply of the committee of the company to the application of the Paxtang men:

"COLONY OF CONNECTICUT,

"WINDHAM, Jan. 15, 1770.

"GENTLE'N.—We received a letter some time ago directed to Major John Durkee, wherein it was proposed by John Montgomery, Lazarus Young, and others, that as we have been so unjustly treated, in removing our settlers off from the Wyoming lands, that if we would give unto the said Montgomery, Young, and their Associates, to the number of Fifty, a township of land, six miles square, in our purchase, At some suitable and commodious place, that the said Montgomery &c. to the number of Fifty, would immediately enter on our lands at Wyoming, Take Care of our houses and effects, and with our people that are their, and as such as shall from Time to Time join them on said land, and hold possession of those lands with us. We have with the advice of a large Committee of said Company considered of sd proposal, and do in behalf of ourselves and the Susquehanna purchase, agree to, and with the said Montgomery, Young, and their associates, to the number of Fifty, that they shall have a good township of land of six miles square, within sd purchase, invested with the same right to sd Township as the said Company now have, and shall further promise to be laid out when it shall be convenient, for the purposes aforesaid and not so as to prejudice but in aid of our settlers, that have already been on. And it is to be understood that the said Montgomery, Young, &c. are to become parcel of our said settlers, and under the same regulations, with our settlers as such. And we have sent herewith two of our proprietors as a Committee to treat with you on the affair and go with you to Wyoming, to wit, Capt. Zebulon Butler, and Mr. Ebenezer Backus, and to lay out said Township as they and you shall agree, if you think best. Capt. Butler to remain at Wyoming with you, Mr. Backus to return and bring us advice as soon as the circumstances of the case will permit. You may Expect Maj. Durkee to join you as soon as his affairs will permit, And whereas many of the Settlers that will join you soon, we have a good deal of reason to Expect success with our assembly in May.

Of the subsequent events in the history of that brave partisan leader we shall not here refer.

Col. Elder, writing to Col. Burd about this period, says, "Lazarus Stewart is still threatened by the Philadelphia party; he and his friends talk of leaving. If they do, the Province will lose some of its best friends, and that by the faults of others, not their own, for if any cruelty was practiced on the Indians at Conestoga or at Lancaster, it was not by his or their hands. There is great reason to believe that much injustice has been done to all concerned. In the contrariness of accounts we must infer that much rests for support on the imagination or interest of the witnesses. The characters of Stewart and his friends were well established. Ruffians nor brutal they were not, but humane, liberal, and moral, nay, religious. It is evidently not the wish of the party to give Stewart a fair hearing. All he desires is to be put on trial at Lancaster, near the scenes of the horrible butcheries committed by the Indians at Tulpehocken, etc., where he can have the testimony of the scouts and rangers, men whose services can never be sufficiently rewarded. The pamphlet has been sent by my friends and enemies; it failed to inflict a wound; it is at least but a garbled statement; it carries with it the seeds of its own dissolution. That the hatchet was used is denied and is it not reasonable to suppose that men accustomed to the use of guns would make use of their favorite weapons? . . . The inference is plain Deed of John McDonner to Zebulon Butler, 22d of February, 1770, Westmoreland Records, vol. 1., p. 163 (consideration £5), for ye whole of my settling right of lands at Wyoming that I have or may have or be entitled to by my coming on and Taking possession with Capt. Butler, in February, 1770.

S. Parsons, of Connecticut, under date of March 12, 1770, writes to Capt. Zeb Butler, at Wyoming, on Susquehanna, congratulating him on his successful Expedition to Wyoming with 200 settlers. He also sends his compliments to the Paxtang boys, stating that he is under obligations to them for saving the settlers from the rapacious mouths of the grasping Pennsylvania proprietors.

that the bodies of the Indians were thus mangled after death by certain persons to excite a feeling against the Paxtang boys. This fact Stewart says he can and will establish in a fair trial at Lancaster, York, or Carlisle. At any rate, we are all suffering at present by the secret influence of a faction,—a faction who has shown their love to the Indians by not exposing themselves to its influence in the frontier settlements."

After this hurried glance at the history of this transaction, we believe we have made good the following:

1st. The notoriously bad character of the Indians at Conestoga. Apart from the various affidavits taken before Edward Shippen, of Lancaster, and Thomas Forster, of Paxtang, we have the opinion of Gen. Amherst, commander-in-chief of the British forces in America, of Lord Halifax, and of Governor Colden, of New York.

2d. The reiterated demands for their removal, and that if this was done peace to the frontiers was guaranteed.

3d. The so-called insurrection or riot, as stigmatized by historians and by the Assembly of the Province, was nothing of the kind. It was a right guaranteed by the charter for the people to meet in assembly and demand or petition for redress of grievances.

4th. The oft-repeated slander that the men who composed the Paxtang volunteers came to untimely ends is only in keeping with the marked untruths used by Quaker historians and Quaker pamphleteers. It is greatly to be lamented that all the names of those brave Paxtang boys have not been preserved to us, but those we have are sufficient to enable us to hurl back the imputation cast upon their memory. With the exception of lion-hearted Lazarus Stewart, who fell in that terrible Indian, Tory, and British massacre which devastated the valley of Wyoming on the 3d of July, 1778, the heroes of Conestoga lived long, valuable, and respected lives. Two of them were subsequently elders in Old Hanover Presbyterian Church. Those who followed Rev. Sankey into the Valley of Virginia became some of the most influential citizens of the Old Dominion. Two at least of the signers of the Mecklenburg Declaration were Paxtang men, and one of the descendants of another became President of the United States. Several became honored ministers, and one the president of a college.

5th. Peace from Indian incursions was forever secured to the settlers of Paxtang.

Three important questions now agitated and inflamed the public mind:

1. Whether a Proprietary government or one with kingly powers was the government best adapted for this Province?

2. Was the destruction of the Indians in Lancaster County justifiable on the plea of necessity?

3. Was the policy adopted by Proprietary government and the Assembly in treating with the Indians judicious?

THE CHARACTER OF THE INDIANS.

[Governor Colden, of New York, to Governor John Penn.]

The Indians on the east side of the Susquehanna are the most obnoxious to the people of this Province of any, having done the most mischief. They consist of a number of rogues and thieves, runaways from the other nations, and for that reason not to be trusted.

[The Council of New York.]

This government is rather disposed to attack and punish than to support and protect them, whom they still consider their enemy.

CONDUCT OF THE PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES—COTEMPORARY OPINIONS.

[Letter of Gen. Amherst to Governor Hamilton, Oct. 26, 1763.]

I cannot help repeating my surprise at the infatuation of the people in your Province, who tamely look on while their brethren are butchered by the savages, when without doubt it is in their power by exerting a proper spirit not only to protect the settlements, but to punish any Indians that are hardy enough to disturb them.

[Earl of Halifax to Governor Hamilton, Oct. 19, 1763.]

His Majesty has commanded me to express to you his surprise and displeasure at a conduct so inconsistent with the security of the lives and properties of his subjects in Penn'a in particular, as well as to the duty they owe to the public safety in general.

[Lieutenant-Governor John Penn to his uncle, Thomas Penn.]

The five frontier counties are now preparing petitions to the House for an increase of Representatives, which I am of opinion they (the Assembly) will never come into, as it will be the means of lessening the power of the governing few in this Province. . . .

"THE PAXTANG BOYS."

Among the number of those heroic men of 1763-64, writes Hon. John Blair Linn, author of "Buffalo Valley," was Capt. John Reed, who removed to the Buffalo Valley prior to the Revolution. He married, in September, 1772, Margaret, daughter of William Blythe, but died in 1778, leaving three children, William, James, and a daughter, who subsequently married John Armstrong. The family left the valley with the "great runaway," and resided for several years in the Cumberland Valley. The widow subsequently married Capt. Charles Gillespie, of the army of the Revolution, and raised a second family. When a second time a widow she took refuge with her son, William Reed, where she died, and is buried in the old Kiester graveyard on Penn's Creek. William Reed, the eldest, had a son James, whose children are Robert Reed, formerly county commissioner of Union County, and subsequently a merchant at Clearfield; Dr. Uriah Reed, of Jersey Shore; and a daughter, who is the wife of ex-Governor William Bigler. Capt. Reed's second son removed to the West in early life, but was never heard from.

REMINISCENCES OF THE OLD HOME.

Those who were on terms of intimacy with the late Robert Gillmor, Esq., will remember with what pleasure he related incidents connected with the Grahams and Fergusons, especially after his return from one of his visits to some of the descendants of those families resident in Kentucky. These are forcibly brought to our mind as we peruse a letter written by the late John Graham, of Hardin County, Ky., under date of Sept. 28, 1867. He was then upwards of eighty-five years of age, and the letter, written in lead pencil, betokens neither age or tremulousness. He thus alludes to events of the by-gone, being a native of Hanover:

" . . . You allude to the massacre of the Conestoga Indians near Lancaster. I have often heard my grandmother speak of that affair, and of the Paxtang boys or rangers. It was something like the tea-party at Boston. The men who done it were not known. Old Parson Elder was the colonel of the regiment; the rank and file who were engaged in the affair were the most respectable of men. I had an old uncle, Thomas Bell (he was married to my grandfather's sister); he was an elder in Hanover Church when I can recollect him first, and died an elder in 1815. My grandmother always said that Uncle Bell was one of the squad who were at Conestoga, but was not an elder in the church at the time. The reason for killing those Indians was that then and long before there were a great many murders committed, and the friendly Indians harbored the strange Indians, who were the guilty parties. It was the only thing to do, and every person on the frontiers approved of the act."

THE PAXTANG BOYS.

Charles Miner, the impartial historian of Wyoming, during the preparation of his valuable work, opened up a correspondence with most of the historic students of his day. From one of his letters, written to a gentleman of this locality, whose information concerning the Paxtang boys was superior to that of any one then living, we take the following extracts:

"The history in which my pen is engaged is confined to Wyoming. But a portion of the Paxtang boys settled here and took a conspicuous part. I had read in early life, with unmitigated horror, the publications of the day reciting that crimson tragedy and not an alleviating circumstance mentioned. Whether to note their being here, their agency, etc., or to pass it over in silence as one of those dark occurrences of which the least said the better, was matter of doubt. But I resolved to investigate, and finally wrote a paper to be inserted or not, as should, on reflection and consultation, be thought best. That paper is, I believe, in the hands of one who married a daughter of Stewart. I therefore, from memory, give the heads of my argument.

"On settling in Luzerne, I found Hanover, a valuable township, full of most worthy and respectable inhabitants, which had been specially allotted to and settled by the Paxtang boys.

"1. Not only were they esteemed for humanity, integrity, and virtue, but so also had those been who were gone to the grave, for Col. Denison, our most staid, sober-minded, religious man had named his oldest son for Lazarus Stewart. He could not have been ignorant of his true character. If he was the bloody-minded demon who, without provocation, had murdered women and children, he would not, he could not, have done it.

"2. Connecticut—religious, moral, politic, or cunning—in establishing a settlement at Wyoming would have gone counter to principles, policy, and common sense by engaging in their cause a set of men whom the moral sense of mankind had excommunicated from society for crimes involving cowardice and wanton cruelty. It could not be so. There must be some other version of the affair. So I looked as far as my vision could extend into the times when, and immediately preceding the event, and found,—

"3. That the preceding summer the Indians had murdered the Wyoming settlers. Massacre, conflagration, and ruin were driven like a whirlwind on all the white settlements from thirty to forty miles west of the Susquehanna to the mountains. So audacious had the Indians become that they descended below the Blue Mountains, and committed murders in the neighborhood of Bethlehem. The whole frontiers were aroused to despair and madness. Under these general provocations and that frenzy of excitement the deed seems to have been done, deeply to be deplored and the victims to be pitied.

"4. Fifty Paxtang boys entered Lancaster in open day. It was known they were coming. If not welcome, why did not the people rise five hundred strong, as they might easily have done, and effectually expelled the assailants?"

"5. But there was also a Highland company of regulars stationed at Lancaster. They neither pulled a trigger or presented a bayonet. Is it not evident that authorities and people did not look upon the deed as a cruel, unprovoked murder? but that they connived at it, if they did not participate, believing that the cruelties of the Indians justified their cutting off. Without such influence the conduct of the troops and the people of Lancaster would be unaccountable."

The foregoing are the opinions of one whose research, Intelligence, and impartial Judgment "puts," as he himself expresses it, "a very very different face upon it (the transactions at Conestoga and Lancaster) than has been given heretofore," and to those who have imbibed their ideas from historians warped in their judgment by partisan rancor and puritanical zeal, we commend Mr. Miner's conclusions. Our opinions we have from time to time given, not unsubstantiated, nor with the view of detracting from the fair fame of any class of people, but for the purpose of throwing aside the veil of obloquy which fanatical fury for over a century has covered the gallant frontiersmen of Paxtang, who loved their homes and their darling ones too well to tolerate a nest of copper-colored vipers in their midst.

THE APOLOGY OF THE PAXTANG VOLUNTEERS.

Addressed to the candid & impartial World.

As our late Conduct at the Conestoga manner & Lancaster has occasioned much Speculation, & a great Diversity of Sentiment in this & ye neighbouring Governments; some vindicating & others condemning it; some charitably alleviating the Crime, & others maliciously painting it, in ye most odious and detestable Colours, we think it our Duty to lay before the Public, ye whole matter as it appeared and still appears to us.

But in order to have a just Idea of our Conduct, it is necessary to recollect a few things which are recent in the memories of thousands in this Province, & which they will ever have Reason to remember. When ye Province of Pennsylvania was flourishing in Prosperity & Plenty, & ye peaceful Inhabitants suspected no Danger from the Incurursions of their savage Neighbors; all their fair prospects were suddenly exchanged for scenes of ye most melancholly Distress and Horror. By the breaking out of an Indian war, ye State of four Frontier Counties in this Province became wretched and deplorable beyond Description. The Indians set Fire to Houses, Barns, Corn, Hay, in short to everything that was combustible; so that ye whole Country seemed to be in one general Blaze & involved in one common Ruin. Great Numbers of ye Back Settlers were murdered, scalped and butchered in the most shocking manner, and their dead Bodies inhumanly mangled; some having their Ribs divided from ye chine with the Tomahawk, others left expiring in ye most exquisite Tortures, with their legs and arms broken, their skulls fractured, & ye Brains scattered on the ground. Many children were either spitted alive and roasted or covered under the ashes of a large Fire before their helpless Parents eyes. Ye Hearts of some taken out and eaten reeking hot, while they were yet beating between their Teeth and others, where Time and opportunity would admit of it were skinned, boiled and eaten. Hundreds were carried into ye most miserable Captivity, separated from all the Endearments of their Friends & ye Privileges of ye Christian Church and are daily tortured to Death in every method of Cruelty which Indian Barbarity can suggest. Let any man, that has any Sentiments of humanity or any Bowels of Compassion for the miserable imagine himself in the midst of those scenes that were exhibited on every attack that is made on our Frontiers; there to see the Husband butchered in the Presence of his helpless wife, while ye Children are clinging round his Knees; or in another Place ye widowed mother reserved to be a Spectator of ye inhuman massacre of her tender Family, before she receives ye friendly hatchet that closes her Eyes on ye shocking Scene. Look round & behold, and those that are with Child ripped open & mangled in ye most delicate manner. On the other hand you see hundreds of miserable Refugees flying to ye nearest Frontier Town, with a Part of their Families leaving ye remainder of them in the Hands of ye Enemy, or wandering till they perish in ye Woods. On this Side you see hundreds reduced from plentiful and independent Circumstances, to a State of Deggery and Despair; taking Shelter in the Hovels and Stables to secure their helpless Families, from ye Inclemency of ye Night or ye Season; while others cannot even obtain this, but are obliged to make Fires in ye woods and live even worse than the Savages themselves. And on that Side You hear ye Screams of Children deprived of their nearest Relatives, that know not perhaps what is become of them, the fruitless Sighs of the disconsolate Widow, or ye Groans of a broken hearted Father mourning for a darling Son or Daughter, whom he had dedicated to God, but who is now abandoned to the Service of the Devil, and who perhaps on a future Day may help to make a Party to murder and Scalp some of his nearest Relatives. There you see whole Families butchered while they are asleep, or whole Garrisons put to Death by ye Savages. None but those who have been spectators or Eye witnesses of these shocking Scenes can possibly have any adequate Ideas of our Sufferings. Nay even those very Persons, who are so hardened and destitute of the common Feelings of Humanity, as to be able to extenuate these horrid Barbarities, under the charitable Plea of its being their Custom of making war, would we doubt? not be softened, had they but shared with us in the lightest Parts of our sufferings.

But let us next enquire into the causes of these Calamities, under which we have laboured these seven or eight years, during the last and ye present War. Different Persons ascribe them to different causes, either from their ignorance of some Facts, which are necessary to be considered; or from some sinister Views or bad Designs. All seem to be agreed that the French instigated ye Indians, first to strike us, & used every method to retain them in their Interest, untill their own Power was broken and destroyed in America. But ye weak, defenceless state of our long extended Frontier, was another Cause of ye War, or at least of our feeling ye Calamities of it as severely as we did. We had no Militia in the Province to come to our assistance, no stockades or Forts to repair to for Safety; the Inhabitants living formerly in Peace were unaccustomed to the use of arms, & unacquainted with ye Indian method of making war; so that we were unable to defend ourselves against ye first Incurursions of our Savage Enemies, & knew not where to look for Help. In this miserable Situation we continued for more than a year, while our Distresses were daily increasing, many were murdered, many captivated, & more than 200 miles of a Frontier Country was laid waste & deserted. But ye defenceless state of our Frontiers is not sufficient to account for our Distresses. For one would think that a Government might do something to help a bleeding Frontier in less than a year; & who could suspect that ye men in Power refused to relieve ye Sufferings of their fellow Subjects. Unnatural as this appears, yet many of us were but too well convinced of it & constrained to mourn in Silence over our hard Fate. When we applied to the Government for Relief, the far greater Part of our Assembly were Quakers, some of whom made light of our sufferings & plead Conscience, so that they could neither take arms in Defence of themselves or their Country, nor form a Militia Law to oblige the Inhabitants to arm, nor grant ye King any money to enable his loyal Subjects in ye Province to reduce the common Enemy. If they were conscientious in this matter, & found that it was inconsistent with their Principles to govern in a Time of War, why did they not resign their Seats to those who had no Scruples of this kind. One would think, that if they really sympathized with us in our Sufferings, this is ye least they could have done. But this they did not do, untill they were forced to it, till their Friends in England interposed, & insisted upon it; lest a Bill should pass in Parliament to Disqualify such Persons having any share in Government in time of war. But this is not all; altho' our Charter secures to each County an equal Number of Representatives, four at least, and more if the Governour & Assembly at any Time think proper, yet they allowed our five Frontier Counties but ten Representatives in Assembly, while ye three Interior Counties have twenty-four. Is not this a flagrant Instance of Injustice and what can we think of a Sect, that could do such an act, and yet would have ye world believe that they were inspired & led by the Holy Spirit, & that they were ye true Disciples of the holy Jesus. Can they who had it in their power to remove this complaint be Friends to Liberty, which they can deliberately & persevere in such a notorious Violation of our Charter, and such a scandalous Encroachment on so important a Privilege as being equally represented in Legislation? Can there be any Reason for this Inequality, if it be not, that ye Quakers being ye majority in ye three Interior Counties, they are resolved at any Rate to fill ye House of Assembly & rule ye Province? However others may think of this, we are certain, that if we had had a proper Number of Representatives in Assembly agreeable to ye stipulations of ye Charter so many of our Brethren had not been murdered & captivated. Something would have been done sooner for our Relief & Assistance. We can ascribe this to no other cause, than to their insatiable Thirst of Dominion, which may be gratified tho' at ye Expense of the Lives of thousands of their fellow Subjects. Let this unjust Infringement of our Rights be removed before they ever pretend to be influenced by the Principles of Common Justice, ye Dictates of Conscience or ye miseries of their fellow Subjects? 'Tis true they gave up some of their Seats in ye Assembly in the last War, when they could no longer hold them & when we were obliged to deny some of our murdered Brethren ye Privilege of a Grave untill we had brought them to Philada. & exposed them with all their wounds to open view; if peradventure we might thereby excite their Compassion for our distresses. But still they left ye Root of ye Evil, & retained ye Power of filling the House when they pleased; which Power they have again exercised; & had not Providence favoured us ye last summer in preserving Coll. Boquet with his little army they had again involved our Frontier in one general Devastation. Notwithstanding previous & warm Remonstrances against their Resolutions of affording him no assistance, they persevered in their Determinations, & absolutely put it out of ye Power of ye Governour & Provincial Commissioners to send any Escort with him to Fort Pitt; when every Person in ye Government saw that if he was defeated or cut off on his march that important Fortress must have shared ye same Fate with ye unhappy Presque Isle, Sandusky, Mesbillemakenc, Miamus, St. Mary's, & St. Joseph's which must have fallen a Sacrifice to Indian Cruelty; & four whole Counties must have inevitably deserted their Habitations, & left ye means of their Subsistence in ye Hands of ye Savages. Quakers may talk what they will of ye Happiness & Justice of their Administration, but these are such glaring Evidences of their unjustifiable Usurpation, their thirst of Power, their want of ye Principles of Justice & ye common Feelings of human Nature for the Distressed; that we cannot but blame them as ye cause of many of our Sufferings.

Does this Conclusion seem too severe to any or not sufficiently supported? Let us attend a little to some other Facts, which appear to us to confirm ye same Judgment of them. 'Tis true that the Assembly last year voted 800 men to guard the Frontiers. But had the Design been to have sent so many men to have only looked on the Ravages that were committed amongst ye back settlers without giving them ye least assistance, it could not have been more effectually executed. They were prohibited by Law from going over ye Boundaries of the purchased Lands after the enemy altho' this Power was granted to ye Govt by ye Royal Charter. Every Person in the Province saw that this was only to insult their Distresses. For 100,000 Men could not have guarded 200 miles of a Frontier against ye Incurious of ye Savages in this manner, whereas 800 men might have done great service, had they been allowed or authorized to follow them into their own Country. There were a thousand Chances to one that men stationed on the Frontiers in the manner appointed by ye Assembly would not see a single Enemy during ye whole season, even tho' ye Inhabitants should be murdered every day. The Assembly well knew that their Conduct would be severely animadverted on, if they would make no Provision for assisting a bleeding Frontier; yet they found a Way to save the Lives of ye Enemy & to suffer ye Inhabitants to be murdered, while they had the Shelter of a Vote of the House. What was this but to load us with unnecessary Taxes, when we were already reduced to the most abject Poverty? Was this like sympathizing with us or assisting us in our Distresses? Had they been in the Interest of the Enemies of his Majesty, what could they have done more for them? Pardon the Expression, they have found means to do much more for them in the last War. When the Quakers could no longer keep their Seats in the Assembly, & thereby prevent any assistance being given to us, a Number of their leading men immediately erected an Association, & collected 6000 Pounds, which they have by their own Confession mostly distributed in Presents to the Indians; under the Pretence indeed of buying Peace with them. Under this Pretext they encouraged them to go to Philadelphia, where we are credibly informed, they treated them as Friends, entertained them at their Houses & loaded them with Presents, while they were boasting thro' the Town to ye Inhabitants, how many white People they had killed or led into Captivity, in which such of them as have not made their Escape with ye utmost Danger or were tortured to Death for attempting it, continue till this Day. Nay under a Pretence of holding Treaties with them they constantly kept Intelligence with them, sent Messages to them, & rec'd a string of wampum from them as if they had ye Power of making and at all Treaties had Commissioners to make them Peace & War Presents, to furnish them with Arguments, to vindicate their making War with us & to condemn the Proprietaries as the Occasion of the War. And after these Treaties, when the Indians were returning with Presents, they seldom ever failed to murder some of us. Now would any Person believe, that the Quakers would be so liberal to Savages, and at ye same Time not contribute a single Farthing as a Society to help our Distresses ye last Summer altho' applied to for this Purpose, when near a thousand Families of our Frontier Inhabitants were obliged to abandon our Habitations, when every other religious Society in ye City of Philadelphia did? They did Nothing for us. And can any Man believe after all this, that we judge wrong when we ascribe a great Share of our Sufferings to the Quakers. If these things are not sufficient to prove an unjustifiable Attachment in ye Quakers to Indian Savages, a fixed Resolution to befriend them & an utter Insensibility to human Distresses, let us consider a few more recent Facts. When we found the last Summer that we were likely to get no assistance from the Govt some Volunteers went out at our own Expence determined to drive our Enemies from our Borders; & when we came near to the great Island, we understood that a Number of their warriors had gone out against our Frontiers. Upon this we returned & came up with them & fought with them at ye Munsey Hill, where we lost some of our men and killed some of their warriors and thereby saved our Frontiers from this stroke. But no sooner had we in another Expedition destroyed their Provisions on the great Island, & ruined their Trade with ye good People at Bethlehem, but these very Indians who were justly suspected of having murdered our Friends in Northampton County, were by ye Influence of some Quakers taken under ye Protection of the Govt to screen them from the resentments of ye Friends & Relations of the murdered, & to support them thro' the Winter. Many hundred Pounds were readily granted for ye support of about one hundred & twenty of these Enemies; when but three hundred Pounds were charitably voted for the Relief of more than four thousand Persons, that were driven from their Habitations & destitute of the necessaries of Life. Is not this glaring Partiality in Favour of Indian Enemies? When were any Surgeons sent by the Quakers to cure our wounded on the Frontiers? and did not some of them send a Doctor even to Fort Augusta to cure a wounded Indian? Nay when we came down to Germantown to remonstrate against ye Government's supporting our Enemies at ye public Expence; did not ye Quakers openly pull off the mask & take up Arms to defend them against us, when they suspected that we designed to kill them. These Persons must love the Indians much, when they would even sacrifice their Religion & Consciences for them, which they would not do for their King & Country. But this is not all: did they not apply to the Governour to send an Express to ye Enemy Indians to let them know, that altho' we came to Philadelphia to destroy their Friends in the Baracks, ye Citizens had arrived in their Defence, so that they were still alive & safe? 'Tis true that ye Pretence was, lest ye Enemy Indians hearing Nothing from their Friends at Philadelphia, would upon a supposition that they were killed by ye white People, take a severe Revenge upon ye Frontiers. But the Governour declared in ye most peremptory Terms, that he would do no such thing; judging we suppose, & on very good Grounds, that ye most natural Consequence of such an Intelligence would be, to influence ye Enemy Indians with the greater Revenge against ye Frontier Inhabitants, & occasion their falling upon us with redoubled Fury. But notwithstanding this, did not the Quakers send such an Express lately to ye Indians at War with us. Could any person believe that ye Quakers are so little acquainted with human Nature or so bad Politicians, as not to foresee these fatal consequences to our back settlers? To what cause then can we ascribe this Action of theirs, but to what we have long suspected, a disloyal attachment to Indian Enemies.

But how comes it to pass, that ye Indians, who are confessedly at war with us, should expect any Intelligence from ye Indians at Philadelphia? It is said, that before they went to Philada ye Enemy Indians told them that ye white People would kill them upon which they promised to send them an account before an appointed Day if they were still alive, but if they rec'd no Express they might conclude that they were cut off. But why this agreement between enemy Indians, & those that are said to be in ye Interest of the White People, if they really were in our interests? Are they to be accounted our Friends, who can hold Correspondence with our Enemies? Are they not of ye same Tribe? And is it our hard Fate to be at War with a Tribe, while a part of it is supported at ye public Expence & furnishing their Brethren with constant Intelligence about ye State of affairs among us? Have not we given, in our Remonstrance laid before the Governour, as full Proof, as the Nature of the Affair can admit of, that ye Indians now at Philada carried on a secret Correspondence & Trade with our Enemies on the great Island, & therefore should also be treated as Enemies? Has any Quaker even attempted amongst all ye bitter scurrilous things that are published against us to show that we concluded against these poor Innocents as they affect to call them from false or weak Promises we have not better Evidence that any particular Tribe or Nation of Indians have been at War with us, than that all ye Indians that lived amongst us were also our Enemies. We have long been convinced from sufficient Evidence that ye Indians that lived as independent Commonwealths among us or near our Borders were our most dangerous Enemies, both in the last & present War, altho' they still pretended to be our Friends. The Wyalusing Indians, who lived on the Susquehanna are confessedly at War with us; & we are certain that that part of them who lived at Bethlehem carried on a Correspondence with our Enemies, & furnished them with Implements of war & are justly suspected of committing murders in Northampton County; as one of them is proved upon Oath to be ye Person that murdered Stinton with his family. The Rum-Je-bauched & Trader-corrupted Thieves & Vagabonds that lived on Susquehanna & Ohio are indisputably unfaithful & perfidious. Scarcely were ye most public Treaties concluded with them, when they murdered the Inhabitants; nay in ye very Time of them, they were forming Schemes how they might destroy us, after they had received Blankets, Ammunition, & other Presents from ye white People. The five Nations, that have ever retained some Reputation for Honour & Fidelity have told us, that they have reproved the Delawares &c. & shook them by the Hair of the Head, as they express it; & have lately gone to war against them & have taken 40 of their Warriors prisoners. The Commonwealths of Indians permitted contrary to ye maxims of good Policy to live in a time of War in our Bounds have been our most dangerous Enemies; as they murdered our Inhabitants, lead them into Captivity, were Guides to other Indians reported our weak & defenceless state to ye French together with all our motions & Dispositions against them; & at ye same Time wearing the Cloak of Friendship, they could readily obtain Provisions, Ammunition, & Warlike Implements to convey to our Enemies. Their well known claim to Freedom & Independency put it in their Power to harbour Spies & give Intelligence. They have ever asserted & exercised the Right of making War & Peace as independent Nations, never came under our Laws, nor acknowledged Subjection to our King & Government; but they always governed themselves by their own Customs, & exercised ye Power of Life & Death over their own People. 'Tis true that ye little Commonwealth at Conestogoe have in one Point stipulated with us that if an Indian killed a white man, ye Indian should be tried by our Laws; which is still consistent with their being a free & independent State. Mournful Experience has convinced us that no Nation could be safe especially in a Time of War, if another State or Part of a State be allowed to live among the free & independent, claiming & exercising withu themselves all ye Power of Government, ye Powers of making War & Peace, harbouring & corresponding with ye Enemies of ye state wherein they live, receiving their spies, giving them Intelligence, & furnishing them with ye means of support & Implements of War. No such Privilege has been granted to any Commonwealth in any civilized Nation in the World. But this has been allowed to Indians amongst us, we justly complain of it as ye Source of many of our Calamities, as they have all proved perfidious.

Knowing that the little Commonwealth of Indians at Conestogoe, that pretended to be our Friends, had done us much mischief, and were in Reality our most dangerous Enemies in Number of Persons living amongst us, who had seen their Houses in Flames, their Parents and Relatives butchered in ye most inhuman manner, determined to root out this Nest of perfidious Enemies; accordingly cut them off. This action has occasioned much warm Debate; & some have maliciously represented it as an unparalleled inhuman Massacre of an innocent and harmless People. But let us consider ye matter impartially, & we hope to give such Evidence, as we think, will make it appear unreasonable, to conclude so severely against us.

We hope that it will not be disputed but that if the Conestogoe Indians were in Confederacy with our open Enemies, gave them constant Intelligence of what we were doing, were frequently amongst our Enemies, were trusted and depended upon by the French as their Friends, had gone to War against us & had actually murdered some of us, they were as much our Enemies as any other Tribe of Indians on the Continent. We trust that it will also be readily granted, that their living amongst us put it in their Power to be a more dreadful Enemy than any other Tribe that consisted of no more Persons & that their aggravated Perfidy justly exposed them to an aggravated Destruction. And we hope that if we are able to bring as good Evidence of their being Enemies as ye Nature of ye Thing can admit, our adversaries will be satisfied with it. We have been long fully convinced & upon ye plainest Evidence that they were Enemies; but for ye satisfaction of others we have since collected many Oaths sworn at different Times, before different Magistrates & by Persons of undoubted Probity and Veracity, to prove this Point; which we shall lay before ye impartial World. And any Person that will take the Trouble may collect as many more of the same kind as he pleases.—

Before me the Subscriber chief Burgess of the Borough aforesaid personally appeared Anne Mary La Roy of the Borough aforesaid, & made Oath on the holy Evangelist, that in the year 1755, when her Father John Jacob Laro & divers others were murdered by the Indians at ye great Makanal, She this Deponent & her Brother with others were made Prisoners, and taken to ye Kittitanman an Indian Settlement, and that she remained a Prisoner with the Indians untill ye year 1759, in which year she with three other Prisoners made their Escape.

That during her Captivity with the Indians; the French officers were furnished with the Pennsylvania Gazette weekly, or once in two weeks; so that a frequent Correspondence was carried on; That she saw strange Indian messengers come with Intelligence; and that ye French officers and Interpreters, with whom she was employed, told her this Deponent, that these Messengers were ye Conestogoe Indians, and that the English had not one Indian in their Interest but one, and that was Isaac, and farther added that all the Conestogoe Indians were willing to take up the Hatchet against the English when the French requested them. And this Deponent farther deposed & saith, that since ye Time of her Escape from the Indians, Bill Sock's reputed Mother came to her at Lancaster, & after some Enquiry about ye Indian Family she was Prisoner with, she this Deponent enquired, whether she ye s^d Bill Sock's Mother had been out in any of ye back Parts, who replied that she never had, but that her Son Bill had been out often & would go out again, & that he was good for Nothing, or words to that Purpose.

That some Time during this Deponents Captivity aforesaid an Indian named Jo Compass appeared at ye Kittitanman afores^d having two children of one Peter Leek's Prisoners, & told her that he had killed both their Father & Mother; & this Deponent farther deposed, that she knew ye s^d Peter Leeks & his wife before they were killed, & knew their children afores^d before they were made Prisoners; and that ye s^d Jo. Compass frequently went out to war from ye same Kittitanman whilst she was Prisoner there, & was said to be sent out against Swatarrah, Taulpahakin, Canegogig, & the South Branch; & that she saw ye same Indian Jo. Compass at ye last Indian Treaty held at Lancaster.

Personally appeared before me one of his Majesties Justices of ye Peace for s^d County, Robert Armstrong, & being qualified as ye Law directs saith as follows, viz. an Indian named Seahaes with several others lived near my House in the year 1762; some of them were so impudent as to say, that they had been at War with the white People & would soon be at War again, particularly one Isaac, who called Seahaes his Uncle. In the year 1762 as ye Indians were coming down to the Treaty, they happened to stay at my House in Halifax; a Man whose Name as near as I can remember was William Phillips & his wife, being both prisoners, told me they would be qualified, that ye Indians held two Councils, & agreed that they would go to Philadelphia & get what they could, & so return & cut off the back settlements. On their Return ye Indians stayed four Days about my Place & proved very insolent, took about six acres of corn, killed several Hogs, & took ye Fruit of about 150 bearing Trees, and farther saith not.

N.B.: Seahaes & Isaac were Conestogoe Indians.—

Lancaster County, &c.:

Before me the Subscriber one of this Majesty's Justices of ye Peace in & for the County of Lancaster, personally appeared John Hambright of ye Borough of Lancaster, who being duly sworn on the holy Evangelists doth depose & say that about August in the Year 1767, he this Deponent being an officer in ye Fort Augusta to Hunters for Provisions for that Garrison; that on his way down he halted under Cover of the Bank of ye River Susquehannab, to rest & refresh his men at McKee's old Place, having a Centry fixed on ye Bank behind a tree to prevent a surprize; that the Centry informed after some Time that there were Indians coming up the Road, upon which this Deponent crawled up the Bank, & discovered two Indians, one of whom he knew to be Bill Sock, one of the Indians lately killed at Lancaster—that he suffered ye Indians come pretty near, & then discovering himself called to Bill Sock to come to him imagining he was going as usual to Fort Augusta, where he had often seen him among the Indians; that the Indians then immediately halted, & after considering about a minute ran off with their greatest speed; which at That much surprized this Deponent, as the Sock had always pretended Friendship & no Violence or Threats were then offered to them, and neither this Deponent nor any of his Party had any Intention to injure them: That upon this Deponent proceeded down to Hunter's, he was informed that an Old Man had been killed in that Neighborhood the Day before; and as no other Mischief was done at that Time, in those parts, nor no account of any other Indians being seen or heard of on that Quarter at that time, ye Sock & his Companion a strange Indian were suspected & believed to be the Perpetrators of that Murder. That he this Deponent before this Time had frequently seen Bill Sock with his Brother and others of Conestogoe Indians at Fort Augusta & often met them on ye Communication carrying up Keggs of Whiskey & other things to trade with ye other Indians there, but that after this murder ye Sock did not appear at that Garrison for near four months, and then came there with a Number of other Indians from up the River above the Fort, at which Time he behaved in a different manner than usual, not coming into the Fort nor being so familiar as formerly. And farther this Deponent saith not.

It would be endless, & we apprehend unnecessary, to transcribe Oaths upon this Head. We have it in our Power to prove upon the Oath of a Person of unquestionable veracity who was present at & heard a Conversation between George Sock a Conestogoe Indian & another strange Indian who came down to ye Treaty at Lancaster; that when ye s^d Indian reproached s^d Sock that he was no man & had no Business at ye Treaty, said Sock replied, that altho' he had taken no Prisoners, yet he had during ye course of war killed six white men; upon which ye other Indian rose up, took him by the Hand & drank to him as a Brother. It can also be proved that Canay Sam called the s^d Sock a Thief, for that he among ye white People has stolen six Scalps, & had brought them. The Indian Town where s^d Sam was at ye Time and it is a thing notorious that strange Indians were frequently seen among ye Conestogoe Indians at their manor, would tarry some Time, have a War Dance, & then depart. From the evidence that we have laid before the World, it appears that not only the Conestogoe Indians, but also those that lived at Bethlehem, & in other Parts of the Province were all perfidious,—were in the French Interest & in Combination with our open enemies,—furnished them with our public Papers every week or fortnight,—gave them Intelligence of all the motions & Dispositions of ye Province Army against them—were frequently with the French and Indians at their Forts & towns,—supplied them with Provisions & warlike stores,—entertained strange Indian spies,—joined with them in their War Dances, and in their Parties that made Incursions on Frontiers,—were ready to take up the Hatchet against the English, when the French requested it,—murdered and scalped our Brethren,—insolently boasted of the horrid murders they had committed, when they saw that our Blood was tamely covered at ye last Treaty, & themselves loaded with Presents,—Confessed they had been at War with us again,—and even went so far as to put one of their Old Warriors to Death when he refused to go to War against us. This is but a small Part of the Evidence upon which we proceeded, when our Neighbors cut off that perfidious Remnant of a Tribe at Lancaster & Conestogoe manor, & when we came to Germantown to petition the Governour for ye Removal of ye Bethlehem Indians now in Philadelphia out of the Province. And what Evidence can we expect to be sufficient, to prove any Indian Commonwealth our Enemies, if this is not? What then means all ye malicious Clamour against us, as if we had murdered our innocent Friends? Are we not as justifiable in getting off this Tribe of Enemies as any other? Can their living amongst us justify their Perfidy, or entitle them to commit Ravages upon his Majesty's loyal Subjects with Immunity?

We know it has been said by their Friends; if there was sufficient Evidence to convict any of the Conestogoe or Bethlehem Indians of being Enemies; why were not ye particular Persons named & actions brought against them, so that they might have the Benefit of a fair Trial; especially as they have publickly stipulated to be tried in our Courts of Justice, if any of them should be accused of killing any of his Majesty's Subjects?

This could never be understood as a Stipulation to take Place when ye Tribe became Enemies to his Majesty, but only to provide for the Trial of murderers in a Time of Peace. In this Respect it was absolutely necessary, as they were an independent Commonwealth in ye Heart of the Province, but it would be absurd when they were at war with us. When they gave up this Power to us, they notwithstanding retained their claim to Freedom & Independence, & exercised all ye Power of a free state, the Power of making War & Peace, of exercising criminal Jurisdiction &c. And can any Person be so little acquainted with the Law of Nature, as to suppose that their giving up this single article to us, would secure to every Individual of them the Benefit of a Trial by our Laws, when they were Enemies or tie up our Hands so that we could not chastize them, when they broke their Treaties with us, in ye same manner that we chastize our other Enemies. With as much Reason might it be demanded of us, not to move beyond our own Borders after our Enemies, but patiently suffer ourselves to be murdered & scalped until we could take some of our Murderers alive & bring them to Trial in our Courts of Justice. For most of ye Ravages on our Frontiers have been committed by Tribes of Indians, that have made ye same agreement with us in a Time of Peace. But who does not see the Absurdity of such a Demand in Favour of a Tribe either openly or secretly at War with us? And lastly what Nation under ye Sun ever dealt with Individuals of another Nation at War with them, & not with ye whole Body or Nation?—And here we cannot but observe to aggravate ye matter, & to involve us in the unjust charge of Disloyalty to our gracious King, whom we have faithfully served with success through ye late & present Indian wars; we understand that it is said, that the Conestogoe Indians were under the Protection of the Government; and therefore it was flying in the Face of lawful authority to kill these Indians, especially such of them as were in the Work-House in Lancaster. We are of a very different Opinion in this Particular, & believe that altho' ye Indians were by the Consent of the Magistrates of Lancaster in the Work House there. For there is Power in any Government to protect its Enemies, that is, to ruin itself. 'Tis true that ye Governour for the Time being is vested in the 16th Article of ye Royal Charter, with ye Power & Office of a Captain General, to levy muster & train all sort of men, of what Condition soever, wheresoever born, in the Province, to make War, & pursue all Enemies, Robbers, &c. as well by Sea as by Land even without ye Limits of the Province, & by God's Assistance to vanquish & take them, & when taken to put to Death by the Law of War, or to save them at Pleasure. But no Justices of ye Peace have nor can have this Power. The Legislature, Executive & Federal Powers of Government are distinct in themselves & belong to different Officers; & a Commission to exercise one of these Branches of Power can never authorize any Person to exercise another. The Legislative & Executive Powers of making & executing Laws respect only the Subjects of ye Government; & ye Business of those, that are vested with them by proper Commissioners is only to determine matters that concern the members of the Community. But the Federative Powers of Government, which respect foreign independent States, and which include the Power of sending Embassadors, making War & Peace, treating with or punishing Enemies, giving military Commissions, constituting Courts martial &c. belong only to the Governour as Captain general. Every other Inhabitant of ye Province is prohibited in ye 15 Sect: of ye aforesd Charter from maintaining any Correspondence with any other King, Prince or State or with any of their subjects that shall be at War with his Majesty. From whence we conclude that it is absolutely repugnant to the Law of Nations, to ye British Constitution & to the Royal Charter granted to our Proprietors, for any Person, however vested with ye legislative or Executive Powers of Government, to interfere at Treaties with foreign independent States or Commonwealths of Enemies, or carry on a correspondence with them in Time of War: nor have they any thing to do with them, but as private Persons in time of Peace. Therefore whether ye civil Magistrates at Lancaster, looked upon that free State of Indians that lived in their Neighborhood, as Friends or Enemies, they neither had nor could have a Power by Virtue of their Commissions, to protect these Enemies of his Majesty against the Resentments of his injured Subjects. And it appears to us that they were sensible that their Commissions did not authorize them to protect these Indians for they never attempted to defend them. Indeed the very attempt would argue either Ignorance of their office or Rebellion against his Majesty, neither of which can be justly laid to their charge. So that we conclude that we insulted no lawful authority, nor flew in ye Face of Government, but acted as loyal Subjects of his Majesty when we cut off these his enemies.

But let us even suppose that the Magistrates were mistaken about ye extent of their Power (for a'l Men are fallible), and that they thought they had Power & it was their Duty to protect these Indians. Would it therefore be right to defend his Magesties Enemies, merely because they thought they should do it, or did not know that they were Enemies. "By no means," you will say: "but 'tis wrong to resist ye civil Magistrate when he happens to be mistaken." 'Tis readily granted that we should not resist him when he happens to mistake in the Execution of his Office, or in determining any matter that lies within his proper sphere: but his Commission as a civil officer cannot warrant him to do anything that lies out of his Province, or entitle him to a tame Submission from ye Persons, that might suffer from such an usurpation. Would it not be right to resist a Constable that would plead his commission as giving him a Right to sit on the Bench with the Magistrates? Would it not be right to respect a Member of Assembly who would plead that his being a Representative of the free Men of the Province entitled and authorized him to usurp ye federative Powers of Government, & interfere at public Treaties with Enemies? And would it not be right to resist a Justice of the Peace if he would plead his commission as giving him a Power of making Laws, striking money, proclaiming War, making Peace, trying Criminals & hanging Malefactors? And can it be wrong to resist a civil Magistrate, if he should presume upon his Commission to protect his Majesty's most dangerous Enemies? Would not ye attempt argue Disloyalty to his Majesty & Disaffection to his Government? And can it be wrong to oppose what arises from so dangerous a Principle? Can it be wrong to suppose what must necessarily terminate in ye Subversion of all Order & government?

But we understand that ye manner of our coming down to Germantown has been severely condemned as illegal & subversive of government. We need not say much upon this Head. We injured no man on the Road, used no Violence to any; payed for everything that we had, and were guilty of no Irregularities. We came down to remonstrate and petition his honour the Governour and ye honourable Assembly of the Province for a Redress of the many Grievances under which we groan. We had the Satisfaction to find that ye Attorney-General of ye Province, the Mayor of the City, with some Members of the Assembly & other Gentlemen whom the Governour condescended to send out to converse with us at Germantown declared in the plainest Manner that we had hitherto done Nothing inconsistent with our Duty to ye Government, or ye Character of good Subjects. And we can assure ye Publick that ye same was proclaimed in ye most public Manner by Appointment ye next Day in the City of Philadelphia. And when ye Gentlemen whom we had the Honour to converse with in Germantown promised us a Redress of our Grievances we immediately dispersed and returned in Quietness to our Respective Places of Abode.

CHAPTER XIII.

The War for Independence—Resolves of Hanover—Resolves of Middletown—The Liberty Association of Londonderry—The Pennsylvania Articles of Association—Capt. Matthew Smith's Company of Paxtang.

THE discussions which ensued upon the Paxtang boys' affair may truly be said to have sown the seeds of the Revolution; and in a letter of Governor John Penn to his brother in England, written at this time, he thus alludes to the inhabitants of Paxtang: "Their next move will be to subvert the government and establish one of their own."

No wonder, then, when the first mutterings of the storm was heard, that the people of this entire section were ripe for revolution. The love of liberty was a leading trait of the people who settled this delightful valley. The tyranny and oppression of Europe drove them to seek an asylum among the primeval forests of America. Persecution for conscience' sake compelled alike the Scotch-Irish and the German of the Palatinate to come hither and rear their altars dedicated to God and freedom to man. With them independence was as much their dream as the realization. Their isolated position—placed on the frontiers, unprotected by the Provincial authorities—early instilled into their minds those incentives to action, that when the opportune moment arrived they were in the van. Two years before the declaration by Congress the people had assembled at their respective places of rendezvous, and heralded forth their opinions in plain and unmistakable language, while the citizens of the large towns were fearful and hesitating.

As early as the spring of 1774 meetings were held in the different townships, the resolves of only two of which are preserved to us. The earliest was that of an assembly of the inhabitants of Hanover, Lancaster Co., held on Saturday, June 4, 1774, Col. Timothy

Green, chairman, to express their sentiments on the present critical state of affairs, and it was unanimously resolved,—

"1st. That the recent action of the Parliament of Great Britain is iniquitous and oppressive.

"2d. That it is the bounden duty of the people to oppose every measure which tends to deprive them of their just prerogatives.

"3d. That in a closer union of the colonies lies the safeguard of the liberties of the people.

"4th. That in the event of Great Britain attempting to force unjust laws upon us by the strength of arms, our cause we leave to heaven and our rifles.

"5th. That a committee of nine be appointed, who shall act for us and in our behalf as emergencies may require."

The committee consisted of Col. Timothy Green, James Caruthers, Josiah Espy, Robert Dixon, Thomas Koppenheffer, William Clark, James Stewart, Joseph Barnett, and John Rogers.

The foregoing declarations are worthy of perpetual record. They struck the key-note of the proceedings which eventuated in the separation of the colonies from England. It is worthy of remark in this connection that, while Philadelphia and the lower counties were hesitating and doubting, the Scotch-Irish districts were firm yet dignified in their demands for justice and in the denunciation of British tyranny and wrong. These Hanover resolves preceded those of the Mecklenburg Convention, showing that the liberty-loving Scotch-Irish of Pennsylvania were the head and front of the American rebellion of 1776.

So much for patriotic Hanover. Following in the footsteps of these brave men, on Friday following, June 10, 1774, a similar meeting was held at Middletown, Col. James Burd, chairman, at which these stirring resolves were concurred in, and which served as the text of those passed at the meeting at Lancaster subsequently:

"1st. That the acts of the Parliament of Great Britain in divesting us of the right to give and grant our money, and assuming such power to themselves, are unconstitutional, unjust, and oppressive.

"2d. That it is an indispensable duty we owe to ourselves and posterity to oppose with decency and firmness every measure tending to deprive us of our just rights and privileges.

"3d. That a close union of the Colonies and their faithful adhering to such measures as a general Congress shall judge proper, are the most likely means to procure redress of American grievances, and settle the rights of the Colonies on a permanent basis.

"4th. That we will sincerely and heartily agree to and abide by the measures which shall be adopted by the members of the general Congress of the Colonies.

"5th. That a committee be appointed to confer with similar committees relative to the present exigency of affairs."

Not to be behind their Scotch-Irish neighbors, the German inhabitants, located in the east of the county, met at Frederickstown (now Hummelstown) on Saturday, the 11th of June, at which Capt. Frederick Hummel was chairman, resolving to stand by the other townships in all their action.

Oppression, taxation without representation, and a host of other political evils, kindled a feeling of animosity to the mother-country in the breasts of the people of America.

In December, 1774, the general committee of Lancaster County was formed, consisting of delegates from all the townships. At the first meeting the present Dauphin County was represented by the following gentlemen:

Paxtang.—James Burd, Joseph Sherer, John Backenstose.

Hanover.—Timothy Green, William Brown, James Cooper.

Derry.—Castle Byers, William Laird, Robert McKee.

Upper Paxtang (above Kittochtinny Mountain).—William Patton.

In 1775 appeared from

Paxtang.—Joseph Sherer, William Brown, John Harris.

Hanover.—John McCune, John Rodgers, William Cathcart.

Londonderry.—William Hayes, Robert Clark, Jacob Cook.

Upper Paxtang.—Adam Werts, James Murray, Samuel Taylor.

This locality was ripe for revolution, and when the stirring battle-drum aroused the new-born nation, the inhabitants of Dauphin valiantly armed for the strife.

Within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the news of the battle of Lexington the able-bodied men of this entire region were organized for the defense of their liberties. The performance of military duty was no new thing to men who had been cradled amidst the clash of arms in the protection of the frontiers made desolate so many years by the ruthless savages,—the merciless Delawares and the perfidious Shawanese. The document we publish here-with gives the names of the first company of the associators we have yet seen. Almost the entire company were residents of Londonderry township. Its commanding officer, Capt. Jacob Cook, was prominent in organizing the troops throughout the war, at the same time being one of the Provincial magistrates, and as such continued by the convention of July 15, 1776. First Lieut. William Hayes rose to be a lieutenant-colonel in the Flying Camp in 1776-77, doing gallant service in the Jerseys and at Brandywine and Germantown. The McQueens, Robert and David, were subsequently connected with the Flying Camp, and, if we mistake not, were at Fort Washington at its capture. Of the men who composed this first Londonderry company, several served through the war from Quebec to Yorktown, while others fell martyrs to the cause of independence. The articles of association to which the men all subscribed are worthy of preservation :

"The Association of the Liberty Company in Lancaster County.

"In order to make ourselves perfect in the art of Military, &c., We, the subscribers, have associated, and severally Agree, Promise, and Resolve as follows, viz.:

"1st. That Jacob Cook be the Captain, William Hay the first Lieutenant, Robert M'Queen the second Lieutenant, and David M'Queen the Ensign of the Company in London Derry called the Liberty Company, which said Officers, according to their respective stations, to have the Command of said Company whilst under Arms, Mustering, or in actual Service, and that the said Officers shall remain till altered by a Majority of the Officers and two-thirds of the Company.

"2d. That none of the Subscribers or Company shall disobey the Orders of either of the said Officers whilst under Arms or Mustering, or in actual Service, under the Penalty of paying a sum not exceeding Twenty Shillings for every disobedience, to be inflicted and judged of by a Majority of the Officers.

"3d. That each Person of the Company shall (if not already done) as soon as possible, provide himself with a good Gun or Musket, in good order and repair, with a Cartouch-Box or Shot-Bag, and Powder-Horn, a half a Pound of Powder and two Pounds of Lead.

"4th. That each of the said Company shall attend weekly on Saturday, and on such other Times as the officers or a majority of them shall appoint, in the Town of Lancaster, or in the county of Lancaster, at such places as the said officers shall deem necessary, under the Penalty of forfeiting and paying the sum of One Shilling, for every absence, Sickness of the person or Business out of the Town or Townships, to excuse. This is to be judged of by a majority of the Officers; but in case of absence at any Meeting, the Party so absenting to show Cause to the Officers against the next succeeding Meeting, or the Fine to be absolute; every Person is to appear at such Meeting with his Arms and Ammunition as aforesaid under the Penalty of forfeiting the said Sum of One Shilling, for every default, unless a Majority of the Officers shall remit such Fine.

"5th. That no Person of the said Company shall appear drunk, or curse or swear whilst under Arms Mustering, or in actual service, under the Penalty of paying Three Shillings for the first offence; Five Shillings for the second offence, and for the third offence to be expelled the Company, a Majority of the Officers are also to judge of these offences.

"6th. That should any of the Soldiers, by their conduct render themselves unworthy of being a Member of said Company, a Majority of the Officers and Company may expel him; and in such case the Party expelled shall yet be obliged to pay off all arrearages of Fines.

"7th. All Fines to be paid or exacted in consequence of the Resolutions or Regulations of this Company, are to be paid to the Captain for the time being, or the Person appointed by him for that purpose, and are to be laid out for use of the said Company.

"8th. That the said Company shall be increased to any number, not exceeding One Hundred Men.

"9th. That the said Company shall not be obliged to march out of this Province, without the Direction of a Majority of the officers, with the consent of a Majority of the soldiers.

"10th. That in case it be thought expedient the Companies of this County should form themselves into Battalions or Regiments, we do hereby empower the Officers aforesaid, to join with the other officers of the County, in choosing Field Officers to command such Battalion or Regiment.

"11th. That this Association to continue for the space of Eight Months next following, unless the time be enlarged by a Majority of the subscribers, or the Association dissolved by two-thirds of the Subscribers.

"12th. That this Company and every member thereof shall also comply with any other Resolutions that shall be entered into by a majority of the officers and a majority of the Company for the Regulation, Government or Support of this Company.

"13th. That a majority of the officers shall appoint the Sergeants, Corporals, and Drum for the Company.

"14th. That the officers are to be fined for offences equal with ye privates.

"In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our Hands, the seventeenth day of May, 1776.

The foregoing articles of association preceded any other adopted in the colonies, and formed the basis of the Articles of Association of Pennsylvania, read and approved by the Council of Safety on the 12th of August, 1775. They read as follows :

"We, the officers and soldiers, engaged in the present association for the defence of American Liberty, being fully sensible that the Strength and Security of any Body of Men, acting together, consists in just regularity, due subordination, and exact obedience to command, without which no individual can have that confidence in the support of those about him, that is so necessary to give firmness and resolution to the whole, Do Voluntarily and Freely, after consideration of the following articles, adopt the same as the Rules by which we agree and resolve to be Governed in all our Military concerns and operations until the same, or any of them, shall be changed or dissolved by the Assembly, or Provincial Convention, or in their recess by the Committee of Safety, or a happy reconciliation shall take place between Great Britain and the Colonies:

1st. "If any Officer make use of any profane Oath or execration, when on duty, he shall forfeit and pay for each and every such Offence, the sum of Five Shillings. And if a Non-Commission'd Officer or Soldier be thus guilty of Cursing or Swearing, he shall forfeit and pay, for each and every such offence, the Sum of One Shilling.

2d. "Any Officer or Soldier who shall refuse to obey the Lawful orders of his Superior Officer, may be suspended from doing duty on that day, and shall, upon being convicted thereof before a Regimental Court Martial, make such concessions as said Court Martial shall direct.

3d. "Any Officer or Soldier who shall begin, excite, accuse, join in, or promote any disturbance in the Battalion, Troop or Company, to which he belongs, or in any other Battalion, Troop or Company, shall be cenured according to the nature of the offence, by the judgment of a Regimental Court Martial.

4th. "Any Officer or Soldier who shall strike his Superior Officer, or draw or offer to draw, or shall lift up any Weapon, or offer any Violence against him, being in the execution of his office, shall, upon conviction before a Regimental Court Martial, be dismissed, and shall be deemed to be thereby disgraced as unworthy the Company of Freemen.

5th. "Any Commanding or other Officer who shall strike any person when on duty, shall, upon conviction before a General Court Martial, be in like manner dismissed and disgraced.

6th. "Any Officer, non-Commissioned Officer or Soldier, who shall make use of insolent, provoking or indecent language while on duty, shall suffer censure or fine as shall be inflicted by a Regimental Court Martial, according to the nature of the offence.

7th. "If any Officer or Soldier should think himself injured by his Colonel, or the Commanding Officer of the Battalion, and shall upon due application made to him, be refused redress, he may complain to the General of the Pennsylvania Associators, or to the Colonel of any other Battalion, who is to summon a General Court Martial, and see that justice be done.

8th. "If any inferior Officer or Soldier shall think himself injured by his Captain, or other Superior Officer in the Battalion, Troop or Company to which he belongs, he may complain to the Commanding Officer of the Regiment, who is to summon a Regimental Court Martial, for the doing Justice according to the Nature of the case.

9th. "No Officer, Non-Commissioned Officer or Soldier shall fail of repairing with their arms, ammunition and accoutrements upon any regular alarm, or at the time fixed, to the place of parade or other rendezvous appointed by the Commanding Officer, if not prevented by Sickness or some other evident necessity, or shall go from the place of parade without leave from the Commanding Officer before he shall be regularly dismissed, on penalty of being fined or censured according to the nature of the offence, by the sentence of a Regimental Court Martial. But no Officer or Soldier shall be obliged to attend to learn the Military Exercise more than once in a week.

10th. "Any Officer or Soldier found Drunk when under Arms, shall be suspended from doing duty in the Battalion, Company or Troop on that day, and be fined or censured, at the discretion of a Regimental Court Martial.

11th. "Whatever Sentinel shall be found sleeping upon his post, or shall leave it before he is regularly relieved, shall suffer such penalty or disgrace as shall be ordered by a Regimental Court Martial.

12th. "Whatever Commissioned Officer shall be convicted before a General Court Martial, of behaving in a scandalous or infamous manner unbecoming the Character of an Officer and a Gentleman, shall be dismissed from the association with disgrace.

13th. "Every non-Commissioned Officer or Soldier who shall be convicted at a Regimental Court Martial of having sold, carelessly lost, wilfully spoiled or wasted, or having offered for sale any ammunition, arms or accoutrements belonging to this Province, shall be dismissed such Battalion, Troop or Company, as an unworthy member and be prosecuted as the law directs.

14th. "All disorders and neglects which Officers and Soldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of the good order and Military discipline of the Association of this Colony, are to be taken cognizance of by a General or Regimental Court Martial, according to the nature and degree of the Offence, and be censured at their discretion.

15th. "That on the first Meeting of every Battalion, after subscribing these articles of association, and from thence forward on the first meeting of every Battalion after the third Monday in September annually, there be chosen two Persons, such as are entitled to Vote for Members of Assembly, out of each Company in the respective Battalions, by the non-Commissioned officers and privates, whose duty and office shall be for the year following, to set and join with the officers in Court Martial, which persons so chosen shall be styled Court Martial Men.

16th. "Every General Court Martial shall consist of thirteen Members, Six of whom shall be Commission'd Officers under the Rank of a Field Officer and Six Court Martial Men, who shall be drawn by lot out of the whole number, and these twelve are to choose a president, who shall be a field Officer and have a Casting Voice.

17th. "Every Regimental Court Martial shall be composed of Seven Members, three Officers, three Court Martial Men and a President, who is to be a Captain, and to be chosen by the Six, and also to have a Casting Voice.

18th. "In all Courts Martial not less than two-thirds of the members must agree in every sentence for inflicting penalties, or for disgracing any Associator, otherwise he shall be acquitted.

19th. "The President of each and every Court Martial, whether Regimental or General, shall require all witnesses in order to trial of offenders to declare on their Honor, that what they give in as evidence is the truth, and the Members of all Courts Martial shall make a declaration to the President, and the President to the next rank, upon their Honor, that they will give Judgment with impartiality.

20th. "All non-Commission'd Officers, Drummers, Fifers, or others, that shall be employed and receive pay in any of the Battalions, Companies or Troops, shall subscribe these rules and Regulations, and be subject to such fines, to be deducted from their pay, and to such penalty as a Regimental Court Martial shall think proper, upon being convicted of having transgressed any of these regulations.

21st. "All Associators called as Witnesses in any case before a Court Martial, who shall refuse to attend and give evidence, shall be censured or fined, at the discretion of the Court Martial.

22nd. "No Officer or Soldier being charged with transgressing these Rules, shall be suffered to do duty in the Regiment, Company or Troop to which he belongs, until he has had his Trial by a Court Martial; and every person so charged, shall be tried as soon as a Court Martial can be conveniently assembled.

23d. "The Officers and soldiers of every Company of Artillery, or other Company, Troop or Party, that is or shall be annexed to any Battalion, shall be subject to the command of the Colonel or Commanding Officer of said Battalion, and the Officers shall sit as members of Courts Martial in the same manner as the officers of any other Company.

24th. "No Penalty shall be inflicted at the discretion of a Court Martial, other than degrading, cashiering or fining, the fines for the Officers not to exceed three pounds, and the fine for a Non-Commissioned Officer or Soldier, not to exceed twelve Shillings for one fault.

25th. "The Field Officers of each and every Battalion shall appoint a Person to receive such fines as may arise within the same, for breach of any of these articles, and shall direct those fines to be carefully and properly applied to the relief of the Sick, wounded, or necessitous Soldiers belonging to that Battalion, and such person shall account with the Field Officers for all fines received, and the application thereof.

26th. "The General or Commander-in-Chief of this Association, for the time being, shall have full power of pardoning or mitigating any censures or penalties ordered to be inflicted for the breach of any of these articles by any General Court Martial; and every offender convicted as aforesaid, by any Regimental Court Martial, may be pardoned, or have his penalties mitigated by the Colonel or Commanding Officer of the Battalion, excepting only where such censures or penalties are directed as satisfaction for injuries received by one Officer or Soldier from another.

27th. "Any Officer, Non-Commissioned Officer, or other person, who having subscribed these articles, shall refuse to make such concessions, pay such fines, or in other matter refuse to comply with the judgment of any Court Martial, shall be dismissed the service, and held up to the publick as unfriendly to the liberties of America.

28th. "Upon the determination of any point by a Regimental Court Martial, if the Officer or Soldier concerned on either side, thinks himself still aggrieved, he may appeal to a General Court Martial; but, if upon second hearing, the appeal appears groundless and vexatious, the person so appealing shall be censured, at the discretion of the General Court Martial.

29th. "Upon the death, resignation, promotion, or other removal of an Officer from any Battalion, Troop, or Company (except field Officers), or any Court Martial Men, such vacancy is to be filled by the Person or persons such Troop or Company shall elect.

30th. "No Officer or soldier shall be tried a second time for the same Offence, except in case of appeal.

31st. "All Officers and Soldiers of every Battalion, Troop, Company, or party of Associators, who shall be called by the Assembly, or Committee of Safety in recess of Assembly, into actual service, and be on pay, shall, when acting by themselves, or in conjunction with the Continental Forces, be subject to all the rules and articles made by the Honourable Congress for the Government of the Continental Troops.

32d. "No Commissioned, non-commissioned Officer or private, shall withdraw himself from the company to which he belongs, without a discharge from the Commanding Officer of the Battalion, nor shall such person be received into any other company without such discharge.

"In Testimony of our approbation and consent to be governed by the above regulations, which have been deliberately read to, or carefully perused by us, we have hereunto set our hands."

Congress, by a resolution of 14th June, 1775, provided for raising six companies of expert riflemen in Pennsylvania, two in Maryland, and two in Virginia, which, as soon as completed, were to join the army near Boston. By a resolution dated June 22d, the "Colony of Pennsylvania" was directed to raise two more companies, which, with the six, were to be formed into a battalion, and be commanded by such officers as the Assembly or convention should recommend. This resolution having been communicated to the Assembly, it resolved, June 24th, "that the members of Congress deputed by this Assembly be a committee to consider of and recommend proper officers of the said battalion."

The form of enlistment was: "I have this day voluntarily enlisted myself as a soldier in the American Continental Army for one year, unless sooner discharged, and do bind myself to conform in all instances to such rules and regulations as are or shall be established for the government of the said army." Each company was to consist of one captain, three lieutenants, four sergeants, four corporals, a drummer or trumpeter, and sixty-eight privates. The pay of the officers and privates was as follows: Captain, twenty dollars per month; a lieutenant, thirteen and one-third dollars; sergeant, eight dollars; a corporal, seven and one-third; a drummer or trumpeter, the same; privates, six and two-thirds, to find their own arms and clothes.

One of the first companies raised in the colonies was that of Capt. Matthew Smith, of Paxtang. Within ten days after the receipt of the news of the battle of Lexington this company was armed and equipped for service, and when the orders of Congress came it was ready. At the same time a company had been raised in and around the town of Lancaster, which information reaching the Congress, both were accepted into the Continental service. The patriotism of Pennsylvania was evinced in the haste with which the companies of the First Pennsylvania (Thompson's) Battalion were filled to overflowing, and the promptitude with which they took up their march for Boston. The Philadelphia Evening Post of Aug. 17, 1775, publishes a New York item: "That between the 28th of July and 2d instant the riflemen under the command of Capts. Smith, Lowden, Doudel, Chambers, Nagel, Miller, and Hendricks passed through New Windsor (a few miles north of West Point), in the New York government, on the way to Boston." From a letter dated at Hartford the latter part of July it is stated: "Yesterday came to town a number of Paxtang boys, dressed and painted in the Indian fashion, being part of a body of two hundred volunteers who are on their way to Gen. Washington's army at Cambridge. Several of them we hear are young gentlemen of fortune." Capt. Smith's company was the first to arrive at Boston, coming south of the Hudson River. It was subsequently ordered to join Gen. Arnold in his unfortunate campaign against Quebec, and the most reliable account of that expedition was written by a member of this very Paxtang company, John Joseph Henry, afterwards president judge of Lancaster and Dauphin Counties. They were enlisted for one year. The following facts are chiefly from contemporary records. Capt. Chambers, who commanded a Cumberland Valley company in Col. Thompson's battalion, writes under date of 13th of August:

"We arrived in camp on the 7th ultimo, about twelve o'clock. We were not here above an hour until we went to view the lines where the English camp is all in plain sight. We crossed the lines, and went beyond the outposts to a small hill, within musket-shot of a man-of-war and a floating battery, and not farther from the works at the foot of Bunker Hill, where we could see them very plainly. While I was standing there some of our riflemen slipped down the hill about a gun-shot to the left of us and began firing. The regulars returned it without hurting our men. We thought we saw one of the red-coats fall. Since the riflemen came here, by the latest accounts from Boston, there have been forty-two killed and thirty-eight prisoners taken at the light-house, twelve of the latter Tories. Amongst the killed are four captains, one of them a son of a lord, and worth forty thousand pounds a year, whose name I cannot recollect. The riflemen go where they please, and keep the regulars in continual hot water.

"They are every day firing cannon at our people, but have not yet killed a man. We expect six wagons loaded with powder here in two or three days, and when they arrive our twenty-four pounders will begin to play on their ships and the lines on Bunker Hill. It is difficult for our men to get within shot of them, as they have floating batteries that flank the end of Winter Hill and men-of-war on the other side, though our boys think they killed several of them. About an hour ago I saw a small cannonading between two of the enemy's boats and one of our batteries to the north of Boston. We can see all the town distinctly from our fort on Prospect Hill, and it is a very pretty place. Two deserters came to us last night."

Thacher, in his military journal of the Revolution, under date of August, 1775, describes this battalion:

"They are remarkably stout and hardy men; many of them exceeding six feet in height. They are dressed in white frocks or rifle shirts and round hats. These men are remarkable for the accuracy of their aim, striking a mark with great certainty at two hundred yards distance. At a review a company of them while on a quick advance, fired their balls into objects of seven inches diameter, at the distance of two hundred and fifty yards. They are now stationed in our lines, and their shot have frequently proved fatal to British officers and soldiers who expose themselves to view, even at more than double the distance of common musket shot."

This battalion formed the picket guard of the two thousand Provincials who, on the evening of the 26th of August, took possession of and threw up intrenchments on "Ploughed Hill," and on the morning of the 27th met with its first loss,—private Simpson, of Capt. Smith's company, who was wounded in the leg and died therefrom. "Poor Simpson," wrote Lieut. Col. Hand, "had one of his legs shattered by a cannon ball. The director-general took it off, but the poor lad was buried this evening."

On the 5th of September, Capt. Matthew Smith's and Capt. William Hendricks' companies were ordered to parade upon the common in Cambridge, and join the detachment "to go upon command with Col. Arnold." For a full and interesting account of the hardships and sufferings of these two companies, see Judge John Joseph Henry's narrative (Lancaster, 1812). These companies led the advance under Captain (afterward Col.) Daniel Morgan, through the wilderness of Maine. At Fort Western, on the Kennebec, says Henry, it was decided to dispatch an officer and seven men in advance, for the purpose of ascertaining and marking the paths which were used by the Indians towards the heads of the river, and ascertain the course of the river Chaudiere. Arnold found it necessary to select an officer of activity and courage. The choice fell upon Lieut. Archibald Steele, of Smith's company, who selected as his companions Jesse Wheeler, George Merchant, and James Clifton, of Morgan's company; and Robert Cunningham, Thomas Boyd, John Tidd, John McKonkey, and John Joseph Henry, of Smith's company.

These companies participated in the attack on Quebec, on the morning of the 31st of December at Palace Gate, where, as the dispatch of the day reads, "that excellent young officer, Capt. William Hendricks, of Pennsylvania, fell, and the rest of the command, after desperate fighting, were forced to surrender. The survivors were paroled on the 7th of August, 1776, and after being exchanged for the most part, re-entered the service, following the fortunes of the Pennsylvania Line with Gen. Wayne, down into Georgia, resisting the fearful night attack made upon Wayne's camp, near Sharon, Ga., on the 24th of May, 1782; entering Savannah in triumph with him on the 11th of July; Charleston on the 14th of December, 1782, and only returning in the month of July, 1783, when the last of the Pennsylvania troops embarked at James Island, S. C., on board of transports for Philadelphia.

Roll of Capt. Matthew Smith's Company.

[Capt. Smith was allowed a bounty of one dollar each for eighty men enlisted. Henry states that sixty-five of their number reached the Plains of Abraham in November. Of the whole company, nearly captured on the 1st of January, scarcely thirty, he states, remained in prison. They arrived at New York, Sept. 11, 1776, and were exchanged, in 1778, for the St. John's prisoners, captured by Gen. Montgomery.]

In the same battalion (Col. Samuel Miles') was another Dauphin County company, raised in the Hanovers. Capt. John Marshall, who commanded this company, was a native of Ireland, but came to America and settled in Hanover township about 1770. He was an early associator, and in March, 1776, was commissioned captain of the company raised by him. At the battle of Long Island, Aug. 27, 1776, the company, like the battalions, was badly broken up. Owing to injuries received in that conflict, Capt. Marshall resigned in February following. After the close of the Revolution he removed, with many of his Hanover neighbors, to Washington County, Pa., where he died. He was on the Pennsylvania pension-list as late as 1820.

Roll of Capt. John Marshall's Company.

COL. JAMES BURD'S BATTALION.

In addition to the soldiers in the Pennsylvania battalions raised in Dauphin County, the following associated battalions were formed. In March, 1776, the Fourth Battalion of Lancaster County Associators, Col. James Burd commanding, were in the field, and from that period until after the battles in and around Philadelphia they were almost constantly in service. These rolls form the most complete battalion of minute-men of the Revolution we have yet seen.

Capt. James Cowden's Company.

[The following roll contains one hundred and fourteen names, officers and privates. During the campaign of the year 1776 they were in active service; quite a number were captured at Fort Washington, and several lost their lives. Many of the younger portion subsequently enlisted in the Pennsylvania Line, remaining in the patriot army until its close. By reference to the names of these departed heroes of a century ago, it will be seen how many of their descendants remain in our midst.]

Capt. James Murray's Company.

[This company, with others, first went into service in November or December, 1775, and were present at the battles of Trenton and Princeton. We give the roll as we find it, although a number of the names are evidently misspelled. The members of the company nearly all resided in what was then Upper Paxtang towaship, or in the section of country from the present town of Dauphin extending to Halifax. Beyond and around the latter locality was Capt. Reed's company, the roll of which is given subsequently. There is one name on the list, that of John Ayres, who was a member of Capt. Matthew Smith's company of Paxtang, and was left with several others sick at Boston when that brave body of men marched to Quebec. The probabilities are that as they were returning home, about the time of the arrival from Philadelphia, he at least joined his friends and neighbors and shared with them the hardships and endurance of that brief winter campaign on the Delaware.]

Capt. John Reed's Company.

[Capt. John Reed, the commander of the following company during the Jersey campaign of 1776-77, was the son of James Reed, who located near the mouth of Powell's Creek probably as early as 1728. On maps prior to 1800 the location is marked "Reed's." John Reed had been a ranger on the frontiers during the French and Indian wars, and when the war of the Revolution came he was ready for the conflict. He organized the company of associators which is herewith given, and was in service until after the battles in and around Philadelphia. Capt. Reed died in 1789. His son William was quite prominent in the Upper End, and it was for him that Reed township was named. On the roll are the names of many whose descendants remain in this locality.]

[The company of Capt. Deibler was in active service for nearly a year, returning home in January, 1777. A portion of the command was captured at the battle of Long Island, and were not released from captivity until the year 1778. During that and the following year the company was commanded by Capt. John Hoffman, and under him they were on the frontiers, protecting the defenseless inhabitants from the encroachments of the Indians and Tories who had their headquarters in Southern New York, and against whom Gen. Sullivan's army was successfully sent in 1779. The little company from Upper Paxtang did valiant service, and all through the Revolution were a well-disciplined body of men.]

CHAPTER XV.

The War for Independence (continued)—Col. Timothy Green's Battalion—Rolls of Captains Koppenheffer's, McQuown's, Brown's, Rogers', McCallen's, and Rutherford's Companies.

COL. TIMOTHY GREEN'S BATTALION.

WITHIN the limits of the present county of Dauphin it has been stated that at least two thousand patriots were mustered for the army of the Revolution, serving their God and country faithfully, and shedding the best blood of the country at all the sanguinary conflicts from Quebec to Yorktown. Authorities have been questioned, but it will be found that the documents which we furnish will greatly augment the number given of actual participants in the struggle for independence. Among the first of the associators to enroll themselves was the Hanover Rifle Battalion of militia of Lancaster County associators, Col. Timothy Green commanding. The battalion was formed in the fall of 1775, and a portion of the companies went into active service during the ensuing spring, while the balance followed in August, 1776. Some never returned, having fallen in one of the numerous skirmishes during the Jersey campaign, while others, wounded in their country's cause, dragged their maimed limbs down to the close of their brave lives, deriving a pension-pittance from the government they had established, yet sustained by the reverence and respect of their fellow-citizens, with the satisfaction of having done their duty faithfully.

Capt. Richard McQuown's Company.

[Capt. Richard McQuown, or McEwen, as the name is at present spelled, who commanded the following company, was a native of Hanover, the son of John McQuown, who located in that township as early as 1735. Of Capt. McQuown's subsequent history to the campaign in the Jerseys, where he seems to have borne a distinguished part, we know but little. In 1777 the company was under the command of Capt. Ambrose Crain, whose services during that year at Brandywine and Germantown are certainly deserving of proper recognition at our hands. He was a member of Old Hanover Church during the first years of the pastorate of Rev. Mr. Snodgrass. He went to the Valley of Virginia and died there. James McCreight, who was second lieutenant, was prominent in Hanover, and a magistrate for many years. He died the 25th of August, 1807, aged sixty-six years. David Ramsey, the next in rank, died on the 18th of September, 1787, aged forty-two years, and with his fellow-officers in the Revolution lies interred in the old church graveyard in Hanover. Although the descendants of many of the members of this band of patriots have passed out from the homes of their ancestors, a few, as will be noticed by reference to the names, are properly represented in the county, and, it is to be hoped, all worthy children of honored sires.]

Capt. James Rogers' Company.

[Capt. James Rogers, whose company follows, was a native of Hanover township, born in 1735. His father located on the Manada prior to 1730, and left a large family of children. James seems to have been quite prominent on the frontiers, was a member of the Hanover congregation, a non-commissioned officer during the French and Indian wars, and at the outset of the Revolution became an ardent patriot. He raised a company of associators, and during the struggle for independence was quite active. He died on the 18th of April, 1790, and is buried in Hanover Church graveyard.]

James Wilson, first lieutenant, is to be distinguished from the other James Wilsons as Capt. James Wilson. He died in October, 1806, well advanced in years. He is buried in Hanover.

Henry McCormick, second lieutenant, was born in Hanover. He evidently died about the close of the Revolution, leaving sons, William, Henry, David, and daughters, Isabella and Mary.

Andrew Rogers, third lieutenant, was a brother of Capt. James Rogers. He was born in Hanover in 1745, and died on the 19th of September, 1782.

The fourth lieutenant, Robert Martain, or Martin, was the son of John Martin, one of the earliest settlers on the Manada. He died about 1805.

The descendants of the foregoing officers, as also of the majority of the privates, are scattered over the various States of the Union.]

Capt. Robert McCallen's Company.

[The McCallens were early settlers in Derry and Londonderry. Out in old Derry Church burial-ground lie the remains of Capt. Robert McCallen, the officer who commanded the band of associators which follow. Little else is known about the brave captain, save that he was in active service during the years 1776 and 1777. He was a member of Derry congregation, and his name is in the lead among the subscribers to the graveyard wall.]

Concerning Lieuts. Matthew Hays and David McQueen we have but little information. They both took the oath of allegiance as required by the State of Pennsylvania in August, 1778, before Jacob Cook, justice for Londonderry.

Ensign Thomas McCallen, a brother of the captain, was also a native of Derry, and lies interred in the old graveyard. He married, Feb. 4, 1768, Mary Boyle, of Derry. He died Oct. 12, 1806, aged seventy-one years; his wife Oct. 16, 1812, aged seventy-one years. On their tombstone is this significant sentence,—

"Respected by their friends,
But without a child to mourn their loss."

This family name has probably died out in this locality, the last of whom we had any knowledge dying a few years ago.]

A military convention representing the fifty-three battalions of the associators of Pennsylvania met at Lancaster on the 4th of July, 1776, to choose two brigadier-generals to command the battalions and forces of Pennsylvania. A complete report of this meeting is given with the Revolutionary history of Lebanon County, to which we refer our readers.

The Declaration of Independence was passed by the Continental Congress at Philadelphia on the same day when the military convention met at Lancaster, to wit, on July 4, 1776. On that day the thirteen Confederate Colonies dissolved their allegiance to the British crown and declared themselves free and inde- pendent, under the name of the Thirteen United States of America. From the Philadelphia Packet we find that the Declaration was received in Paxtang on the 8th of July, and on the day following was proclaimed in the following order: "Col. Burd and the other field-officers of his battalion repaired to John Harris', the light infantry companies marching there with their drums beating, fife playing, and the standard (the device for which is the Thirteen United Colonies) which was ordered to be displayed. After that the Declaration was read by Maj. Cornelius Cox aloud to all who were assembled, who gave their hearty assent with three loud huzzas, discharged their field-pieces, and fired in platoons."

The advice of Congress in May, 1776, that governments sufficient to the exigencies of affairs should be established in such colonies as they did not already exist was seized upon by the zealous Whigs of Pennsylvania as the excuse for the abrogation of the old government. A convention to form a new Constitution was called the 15th of July. That the necessity for some change in the government was thought indispensable is obvious from the faint resistance that was made to the choosing of delegates.

When the work of the convention was made public it called forth the opposition of a number of Whigs in and around Philadelphia who had not lost faith in the old government. While giving a hearty support to the cause of the Revolution, they thought the true interests of Pennsylvania could be best served by the election of men of undoubted patriotism to office under its original charter. The motives of the men who formed that convention have remained unquestioned. Unlearned in state-craft, they framed what they thought the best form of government for the people they represented. The members of that body, which closed its labors on the 28th of September, included two from this section,—Capt. Joseph Sherer, of Paxtang, and Maj. Philip Marsteller, of Lebanon.

On the 31st of July, 1776, the commissary-general of Pennsylvania made a contract with "John Bennett, of Harris' Island, opposite the town of Harrisburg," to transport provisions, stores, and munitions of war from the town of Marietta, on the bank of said river, to Wyoming fort, near the town of Wilkes-Barré. "Said Bennett to convey the goods safely by water, in keel-boats or in flat-boats, from Marietta to the fort within fourteen days, whenever notified of their arrival by wagon from Philadelphia. A guard of three soldiers will be detailed to accompany and protect each boat or fleet of boats when ready to start." This protection was from vicious Tories and from Indians.

The boats used by Bennett were flat-boats of a suitable size, such as we have seen in use to ferry across rivers, and, in fact, were owned by him to carry his produce, his horses and cattle to and from the main land to the village of Harrisburg, and he then farmed and lived upon the large island in the middle of the Susquehanna on which the two sections of the great bridge rest which was built many years afterwards. We may well suppose the volume of water in the river was greater in those days of almost uncut forest throughout the river water-shed, as a great freshet which occurred that very spring rose so high as to submerge the island, and Bennett only saved his family and all the farm cattle he had by placing them in his three flat-boats and securing them to the largest trees, fifteen feet from the ground. Such a freshet since the bridge was built would sweep itself and the abutments from the island.

He also provided keel or Durham boats, so called from Durham Creek, up the Delaware, near Easton. These kinds of boats continued to be the means of transporting iron, flour, grain, etc., from the upper portions of the Delaware, Schuylkill, and Susquehanna to the cities below, and of taking back again the groceries and other goods needed up the country. They will be remembered by the older inhabitants as being used upon the Schuylkill until the building of Fairmount dam in 1819, and on the Delaware until the completion of the Lehigh and the Delaware Division Canals, about 1825, rendered them obsolete.

The channel—so called by the boatmen—of the Susquehanna is peculiar, with a very rocky bed, and almost a mile wide. A boat drawing one or two feet of water, in low or moderate stages of water, would soon strike upon the rocks and be wrecked unless kept to the channel. This, even in low water, is usually about five feet deep, and runs swifter than the shallower portion checked by the scattered rocks, and it shifts and crosses the river from side to side as the largest portion of water is curved and thrown over by the foot of projecting mountains.

To force the loaded boats up against the swift current at about ten miles a day, Bennett and his men would have to walk twenty miles, and perform work harder than Napoleon's soldiers when they dragged cannon up the Alps some thirty years later. The boatmen, generally three to each side, used setting-poles about ten feet long. Standing near the bow, they thrust the larger end against the ground or the stones at an inclination, and placing the upper end against their shoulder, pushed the boat forward, in fact, walked the boat from the bow to the stern, making it move forward just her own length. The impetus kept the boat from falling back until, having drawn their poles up, they walked forward again to the bow and repeated the operation, and so on to the end of the day. The supplies were thus transported from Philadelphia across to the Susquehanna, via Lancaster, in Conestoga wagons, occupying about four days, thence pushed by toilsome steps against the descending current of the Susquehanna for ten or fourteen days; then requiring two weeks of time and toil, now six and a half hours, with one man to feed an iron horse with fuel and another to control his speed and stop him.

Capt. John Rutherford's Company, 1776-77.

[This company was in active service throughout the campaign in the Jerseys during 1776, and the roll as here given was as the company stood when they assembled at Middletown on the 12th of August, 1777, preparatory to their participation in the campaign around Philadelphia. The four additional names are on the roll for September of that year, probably joining the company prior to the battle of Brandywine. We have no note as to what battalion they were connected with.]

CHAPTER XVI.

The War for Independence (continued)—Names of Persons who took the Oath of Allegiance, in Paxtang, Londonderry, and Hanover Townships—Assessments of Non-Associators, 1777.

A HISTORY of the Test Oath in Pennsylvania is an interesting subject, but we can only refer our readers to vol. iii., second series "Pennsylvania Archives," for a summary thereof. Suffice it to say that owing to the large number of Tories in and around Philadelphia during the Revolution, it was decided necessary by the Convention of July 15, 1776, which adopted the first Constitution of the State, and by the first Assembly acting under it, to adopt an oath of allegiance, a measure which was absolutely necessary to restrain the insolence of the Tories.

To this measure of self-protection the Quakers of Chester, Bucks, and Philadelphia made stern resistance, and a number of the more prominent of them were exiled to Virginia, as an example to others of the fate which awaited those persisting in a refusal to take the oath. In the interior counties there was little or no objection. The people were patriotic from the first, and had an inborn hatred to British oppression and British tyranny.

NAMES OF PERSONS WHO TOOK THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE TO THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA IN PAXTANG TOWNSHIP, 1777-79.

In connection therewith we give the following copy of the certificate given each person subscribing to the oath or affirmation of allegiance:

At this period, notwithstanding the large force of men from this section in service, there were many who were exempt through some cause or other from military duty. These were assessed at three pounds ten shillings each. We have the lists of all the townships.

CHAPTER XVII.

The War for Independence (continued)—Roll of Capt. John Marshall's Company—Indian Incursions—Abolition of Slavery—Register of Slaves—Rolls of Captains McAllister's, Walker's, and Weaver's Companies—The Close of the War—Continental.

In the State regiment of foot, commanded by Col. John Bull, subsequently by Col. Walter Stewart, 1777-78, was a Dauphin County company,—that of Capt. John Marshall. It suffered severely at Brandywine and Germantown. Towards the close of the year 1777, by a resolution of Congress, the State regiment was annexed to the Pennsylvania Line and formed the Thirteenth Regiment.

John Harris, in writing to President Wharton on the situation of public affairs, under date of Paxtang, 29th January, 1778, gives an opinion which is just as worthy consideration to-day as it was over a century ago,—that in dealing with the Indian question should never act upon the defensive, but attack the savages in their own country at all hazards. His letter runs thus:

“Sir: The bearer, Col. William McAlevey, is an honest man, and a true friend to the glorious cause of liberty, going down for aid to defend our frontiers against the encroachments of the savages. I am of opinion that the Indians will take an active part next spring (for or against us), as their young men don't understand acting as neutrals in time of war; and unless they, the Western Indians, delivers up hostages to the United States immediately, or sends a number of their warriors to our camp to join us, we may depend upon an Indian war taking place against us, and ought to prepare for it as well as our present circumstances will admit. A defensive war against savages will never do the needful.

“However prudent and necessary it may be to grant assistance to several parts of the frontiers, etc., at particular times, and when we are assured that a general Indian war will take place, we must attack them in their own country at all hazards. If a French war takes place, I hope we may be eased of an Indian war, which will be a great mercy. I make free to give your honor my sentiments of the time, and conclude.”

As Harris supposed, in the early part of spring the situation of the people of Northumberland County and the West Branch was imminently critical. A large party of Indians, Tories, and English deserters entered the county and commenced a war of extermination upon the settlers, who were without the means of defense, the greater portion of the able-bodied men, with their trusty rifles, being in the service. On the 8d of June, John Harris writes to Vice-President Bryan,— appears absolutely necessary that some person should receive, store, provide, and forward any stores the public may order up the Susquehanna, Juniata, etc., during the present Indian war. A quantity of flour is wanted; not a cask or bag to put it in. The inhabitants are leaving said county in great numbers. I pity my bleeding country, and am willing to assist the supplying the county of Northumberland by any means in my power, or forward any article up the different branches of this river from time to time. I am as good a judge of the navigation, in either boat or canoe, on our river as can be found. I expect to send up a quantity of stores to the lead mines, up Juniata, at Water Street as soon as I receive a letter from Mr. Roberdeau, which I hourly expect. The present flood to convey by water should not be lost, as perhaps no other may happen till next fall. The quartermaster can furnish provisions for boatmen or any necessary escorts, etc. If the inhabitants in their fright are suffered to move off as they are doing, and assistance not soon sent up, the crops will be lost in many frontier places, that may be saved by their getting timely aid from the public. A quantity of arms, some powder and lead, is here for Northumberland County, which I expect will be forwarded to-morrow. There's two good store-houses at my dwelling-plantation, exclusive of a cellar fifty feet by forty, under my dwelling-house so that there's plenty of store room for the public use if wanted. There's a great concourse of public wagons, etc., with stores, on the Reading road, too few flats at the ferry here, and what there is will not be properly attended, that the public may suffer for want of a few men employed by the public (to assist in my opinion). I have rented my tavern, ferry, etc., and am at leisure to assist the transporting stores, etc., up the Susquehanna as offered, if proper instructions are sent me. You'll please write to me by bearer, Mr. Whitbill, if you judge necessary.”

In July, 1778, a large number of the survivors of the Wyoming massacre* arrived at Harris' Ferry in boats and flats to seek protection from the enemy. Matthew Smith, writing from Paxtang, July 12th, says,—

“I am this moment arrived at Harris' Ferry, and just now beheld the greatest scene of distress I ever saw; the numerous poor ran away from their habitations, and left their all, and several families lost, part killed and scalped on their retreat; the most cruel butcheries ever known are practiced; wounded and others thrown into fires while yet living. The inhabitants, however, are much distressed; the Wyoming people are undoubtedly, by last accounts, entirely defeated. Northumberland county is evacuated. Not more than one hundred men with Col. Hunter at Sunbury; the Blue Mountain (five miles above Harrisburg) is now the frontier; and I am afraid Lancaster county will shortly follow the example of the other county. The stores at Carlisle are something very considerable. I doubt not their object is to destroy that place. I am informed there is not that care taken that should be. I think it would be necessary to appoint some careful officer at that place, that would do the duty more punctually.

“This party is large, having Col. Butler at their head, one hundred regular troops at first; about the same number of Tories, but is increased in two or three times that number; seven hundred Indians, all around in a most formidable manner, every one of them, exclusive of guns and tomahawks, as usual, each one has a large sponoon, and as soon as engaged, rushes on in a most dreadful manner. It is said they have field-pieces, or swivels, and a number of light horse.

“It is the earnest request of all friends of their country, as well as your humble servant, that something shall be done in the greatest haste. Be pleased to send an order for what arms are ready at Lancaster and Hummelstown, also for ammunition, and I shall exert every nerve in forwarding matters to the spot the men shall collect.”

The year following another Indian maraud was feared, and the struggling settlers of Northumberland made an earnest appeal for succor. During the month of April the sixth class marched to Bedford County for the protection of the inhabitants there while putting in their spring crops. Orders were issued by Col. Robert Elder, sub-lieutenant of the county of Lancaster, to Capt. John Rutherford, who commanded the following detachments from the several companies mentioned, marched to Bedford, where they remained about six weeks, until relieved by ranging companies recruited for the purpose:

For the relief of the Northumberland people Col. Matthew Smith raised a company, and by a letter to President Reed, dated 3d of August, 1779, informs that functionary that he "had arrived at Sunbury with sixty Paxtang boys," and that "the neighboring townships turns out a number of volunteers. Cumberland County will give a considerable assistance; to-morrow at twelve o'clock is fixed for the time of march;" that "provisions is scarce," but that "they will follow the savages and hope to come at them, and if they do will give a good account."

In 1780, on the 1st of March, the Assembly of Pennsylvania passed an act for the abolition of slavery. A full reference with the law is given in the history of Lebanon County. To William Brown, of Paxtang, much credit is due for this humane measure. In 1777, in the first Assembly under the State Constitution, he proposed a similar law, which was at the period referred to enacted. The record of the slaves then held in this county is herewith given:

"In Witness whereof I hereto set my Hand.

"JOHN HUBLEY,

"Clerk of the Peace for the County of Lancaster."

The rolls of companies of soldiers in the various regiments of the Pennsylvania Line after 1776 are very imperfect or not in existence, which is greatly to be regretted. Dauphin County men are scattered in most of the commands, especially in the artillery and German regiments, and it is a difficult matter at this late day to designate all. In Col. Thomas Hartley's regiment, one of the additional battalions ordered by Congress, we find the company of Capt. Archibald McAllister, a roll of which we have compiled from that officer's account-book:

Roll of Capt. Archibald McAllister's company of Col. Thomas Hartley's Regiment.

Captain.

Archibald McAllister.

Lieutenant.

Isaac Sweeney.

Sergeant.

John Lesly; served three years; was in the actions of Germantown, Chestnut Hill, Sullivan's campaign; died in Berkeley County, Va., June 4, 1825, aged ninety years.

Williams, William, May 7, 1778-81.

In the early part of the year 1781, the Tories of South Carolina and Georgia, by the aid of British dragoons under Tarleton, created great distress in many sections of those colonies. They held cruel sway, killing such of the male inhabitants who were Whigs, burning their dwellings, and driving the women and children from those sections, who fled to Maryland and Pennsylvania. Such was the destitute condition of these people that prompt measures were taken for their relief by the various county committees. Paxtang township was appealed to by the chairman of the Lancaster committee, but although "silver and gold they had none," they gave of their substance. Several loads of flour and other provisions were procured and hauled to Philadelphia from Frey's and Elder's mills. The following letter, written in reply to the committee's request, is sufficiently explanatory. It was, as we have stated, followed by a liberal offering:

"PAXTANG, 10th October, 1781.

"SIR:—On the Rect. of yours, I communicated the matter to a number of the Inhabitants of the Township, who seem'd willing to comply with the benevolent design, and to contribute freely to the Relief of the distressed Exiles from the States of South Carolina and Georgia. But as the Inhabitants are not possessed of hard money, we concluded that an attempt to raise a Contribution in that way would be to no purpose, we agreed to consult some friends in Philada. whether a quantity of wheat or flour would answer the end; and as soon as an answer is Rec'd from Town we intend to forward this matter with the utmost dispatch. I am, Sir, with great esteem, Yr. most obed't and very humble Servt.

"JOHN ELDER.

"JASPER YEATS, Esq. in Lancaster."

The Indians in the spring of 1781 were again threatening the West Branch Valley, and to afford the inhabitants protection, Capt. John Rutherford's company, of Paxtang, and Capt. Martin Weaver's, of Upper Paxtang, were ordered to their relief until the spring planting should be completed. They were absent one month. The muster-roll of the former has been given. That of Capt. Weaver's is as follows. Capt. Weaver was connected with Capt. Matthew Smith's company of 1775, and probably was among those who returned home sick from Boston, as he seems to have been second lieutenant in Capt. Deibler's company in the spring of 1776. We regret we are unable to give the roll of the company as organized in 1778-79. The descendants of the Hoffmans, Deiblers, Sallada, Steever, Seal, and others, whose names are enrolled among these heroes of the "times which tried men's souls," will no doubt be gratified to learn of the valor, the bravery, and undying courage of their ancestors. As they read over these names, let their hearts be imbued with the lofty spirit of patriotism which fired the souls of their forefathers, and cherish faithful remembrance of their glorious deeds of a century ago, in behalf, not of themselves, but of posterity.

The campaign of 1781 terminated with the surrender of Cornwallis' army at Yorktown, as did also the war for independence. Dauphin County was well represented in that battle. One brave soldier at least became conspicuous. In Feltman's diary of the Pennsylvania Line at the siege of Yorktown, under date of Oct. 19, 1781, it is recorded:

"At one o'clock this day Maj. Hamilton with a detachment marched into town and took possession of the batteries and hoisted the American flag." This gallant officer, James Hamilton, was commissioned captain in the First Pennsylvania, Continental Line, March 10, 1776; made a prisoner of war Nov. 2, 1777; subsequently exchanged and promoted major of the Second Pennsylvania Dec. 10, 1778, and retired the service Jan. 1, 1783. The parents of Maj. Hamilton came from the North of Ireland with the Calhouns, Polks, and other emigrants who located on the Swatara and its branches about 1730-35. At the close of the war for independence, Maj. Hamilton was in the Southern Department. There he married Elizabeth, the daughter of Thomas Lynch, Sr., whose son, Thomas Lynch, Jr., was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence from South Carolina. Their son, Gen. James Hamilton, was Governor of South Carolina, 1830-32. He married a granddaughter of Thomas Hayward, who was also a signer.

It may naturally be supposed there was great rejoicing at the Yorktown capitulation. A letter from John Harris to Col. John Montgomery, of Carlisle, giving him the news of Cornwallis' surrender, brief though it be, expresses the jubilant feeling prevailing:

"PARTANO, Oct. 27, 1781.

"SIR, - We have good news from the southward. Cornwallis and his whole army surrendered to Gen. Washington on the 19th. As soon as we get up the Province cannon we will fire a feu de joie. The bearer is waiting and I must close.

"Your very h'ble servt.,

"JOHN HARRIS."

On the 7th of November, 1782, John Dickinson, the author of the "Farmer's Letters," and at the outset of the Revolution one of the most energetic in the cause of American rights, was elected by the Assembly of the State and the Supreme Executive Council President of the State of Pennsylvania under the Constitution of 1776. Although Mr. Dickinson was foremost in the defense of the liberties of the colonies, when the resolutions for independence came before the Continental Congress, he believed, and no doubt sincerely, too, that the "Declaration" was premature, and was one of the members who was not returned to Congress by the Convention of July 15, 1776. There is no doubt that, had he been chosen, his name would have been affixed to that instrument. His course during the debates on Mr. Lee's resolve made him unpopular, and for several years he was not in active life. Nevertheless, he was not an idle spectator, and in October, 1777, he was made a brigadier-general in the Pennsylvania militia, having previously been in command of a Philadelphia battalion doing active service in the Jerseys during Washington's campaign there. It was at this period that the officers of the Lancaster battalion became acquainted with the statesman, Dickinson. Gen. Dickinson, in 1779, was chosen by Delaware as one of her representatives in the Confederated Congress, and in 1781 he was President of that State. In obedience to the call from Pennsylvania, he accepted its Presidency, when at once it was maliciously reported that he was inimical to the independence of the States. At this juncture his compatriots in arms sought his defense. The Ninth Battalion, commanded by Col. John Rodgers, of Hanover, as brave and gallant an officer as ever wielded a sword, met and issued the following:

"To the Colonels of the Lancaster County Militia:

"DEAR SIR: The officers and representatives of the ninth battalion of Lancaster County militia, upon consultation, have concluded, from the complexion of the present House of Assembly, that the Constitution and Liberty of the State are at stake in some measure, and sensible of the importance of what has cost us so much blood and treasure, we have thought it incumbent upon us to exert ourselves for their preservation as far as our influence extends, and to warn all who would wish to be free from the dangers that seem to impend, not doubting at the same time but you are ready to take the alarm, as you must be sensible of the same danger. We do not think it necessary to multiply words tending to inspire your spirit, for we are of opinion that you possess the same and have been only waiting to know the sentiments of your fellow friends to Liberty. Let us not then coolly and simply suffer any of our rights to be taken from us by any men, especially as our Constitution invests us with full power to oppose any such attempt. Perhaps our fears are groundless; but in case of apparent danger, which undoubtedly is our present case, a wise man will be on his guard; and therefore let such a number of persons as you will please to appoint meet us at Manheim on the 15th day of January next, in order that we may mutually contrive such measures as may have a tendency to preserve our good and estimable Constitution, and our dear Independence and sweet Liberty. Be active and do not fail to fulfill our request. By order of the whole.

"JOHN RODGERS, Colonel."

"In pursuance of the foregoing circular, the deputies from the different battalions met at Manheim, on the 15th of January following. There were present at that meeting the following:

"Colonels.—Thomas Edwards, Zeigler, Alexander Lowry, George Ross, John Rodgers, and Robert Elder.

"Majors.—Jacob Cook, Kelly, Hays, and Herr.

"Captains.—Ewing, Joseph Hubley, and Laird.

"Mr. Clark, and Mr. Chambers.

"On motion, Colonel Rodgers was unanimously chosen Chairman and Captain Joseph Hubley, Secretary.

"Colonel Rodgers made a neat and appropriate speech explaining the objects of the meeting, that a rumor was in circulation calculated to do much injury, 'that the President of the State of Pennsylvania was hostile to the Independence of America.'

"On motion, this question was put to each battalion:

"Is it the opinion of the members present that they approve of the appointment of John Dickinson, Esq., as President of the State of Pennsylvania, or not?

"Answer. The members of the Second Battalion are unanimously of the opinion that a better choice of a President could not be made.

"Colonel Zeigler—same opinion.

"Seventh Battalion—Same.

"Eighth Battalion—Same.

"Ninth Battalion—We hope the Assembly have made a good choice, and if they have we thank them.

"Colonel Elder agrees in opinion with the Ninth.

"The following resolves, after being duly prepared and unanimously agreed to, were ordered to be forthwith communicated to the Assembly, the Supreme Executive Council, and to every battalion in the State.

"Resolved, unanimously, That the people have a right to assemble together for their common good, to instruct our Representatives, and to apply to the Legislature for redress of grievances, by address, petition, or remonstrance.

"Resolved, unanimously, That in the opinion of the deputies from the different battalions now met, that the complexion of the present House of Assembly is such that we have no reason to doubt that the Independence and Constitution of this State are safe, and that we highly approve of the appointment of his Excellency John Dickinson, Esq., as President.

"Resolved, unanimously, That we approve of Colonel Rodgers' calling this meeting, as it has tended to remove doubts and unjust charges that were in circulation to the disadvantage of his Excellency the President of this State, and two of our Members of Congress, James Wilson and John Montgomery, Esquires; and we conceive such meetings have a tendency to suppress false and malicious reports, and that thereby virtue may meet with its just reward and vice be depicted in its true deformity.

"JOHN ROBERTS, Chairman.

"J. HUBLEY, Secretary."

A history of the struggle for independence would be imperfect without some reference to the war-measures of the government, the most important of which was the issuing of the so-called Continental money. When the Congress began to feel in sore need of funds it adopted the device, so dear to the ignorant heart, of "making money." One patriotic member declared that he would never consent to tax the people as long as he could "get a cartload of money by simply going to the printing office for it." Ignorance like this gave birth to the Continental currency. The Congress solemnly resolved that the stuff it had printed "ought to pass current in all payments and dealings, and be deemed equal in value to the Spanish milled dollars. The currency did what it ought to for nearly eighteen months. Until fourteen million dollars had been issued there was no great depreciation. Prices rose, but only a trifle. Early in 1777, however, this limit was passed; five million dollars more was printed off, and the whole volume of the currency sank sixty-six per cent. below par. This shrinkage must be something of a puzzle to inflationists of to-day, for all the conditions which they deem necessary to be observed in issuing paper were true of our forefathers' rag-money. The Continental bills were based on the faith and resources of the country. Congress, early in 1777, called public attention to the fact that the people were bound to redeem the currency according to the full value expressed in the respective bills. Moreover, the State Legislatures passed laws inflicting penalties and forfeitures upon persons who sold anything for these bills without taking them at par, and they were solemnly declared to be "a lawful tender" for all debts. Nevertheless, they went steadily down. Aug. 15, 1777, an issue of one million dollars enabled the authorities to buy three hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars' worth of gold. Nov. 7, 1777, an issue of the same amount passed current for only two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in cash. By April, 1778, one gold dollar was worth six in paper. The military successes of the year and the aid given by France caused a tiny appreciation. In November, 1778, Congress got nearly one million seven hundred thousand dollars' worth of ammunition for only ten million dollars in paper. This showed a depreciation of only eighty-three per cent. But in May, 1779, ten million dollars' of new paper brought only four hundred and sixteen thousand dollars in cash. Twenty-four dollar bills were worth only one real dollar. In November matters were still worse. An issue of ten million dollars brought less than two hundred and sixty thousand dollars in cash. A year from this date the paper dollar, based on the faith and resources of the whole country, was worth just one cent. In May, 1781, it was worth one-fifth of a cent. These figures are taken from a table compiled by Thomas Jefferson. A writer in the Philadelphia Packet, in 1780, says, "I had money enough to buy a hogshead of sugar. I sold it again and got a good deal more money than it cost me; yet what I sold for when I went to market again would buy but a tierce. I sold that, too, for a good deal of profit, yet the whole of what I sold it for would afterwards buy a barrel. I have now more money than I ever had, and yet I am not so rich as when I had less. I am sure we shall grow poorer and poorer unless we fall on some method to lower prices, and then the money we have to spare will be worth something."

On the 12th of March the first news was received of the signing of the treaty of Nov. 30, 1782, acknowledging the independence of the United States. This was the first measure necessary in the negotiations for peace between all the belligerents. On the 20th of January, 1783, the preliminary treaty of peace was signed. On the 11th of April Congress issued a proclamation enjoining a cessation of hostilities, and on the 16th of the same month the Supreme Executive Council made public announcement of the happy event at the court-house at Philadelphia. The State flag was hoisted, church bells were rung, and expressions of joy at the happy relief from the miseries of war, were universal.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Formation of the County of Dauphin—Remonstrances Against—Act for Erection of—The County in 1789—Opposition to the Federal Constitution.

A PROPOSITION to divide the county of Lancaster was discussed about the commencement of the Revolution, but that ordeal of arms for several years quieted the agitation for the formation of a new county. When, towards the close of the war, the courts were crowded with business, when military fines were being sued out against non-associators, compelling many of the citizens from remote sections of the county to appear at the county town, the question of the formation of a new county embracing that portion of Lancaster County north of the Conewago with a portion of the county of Berks, seriously disturbed not only the citizens of both counties, but the Assembly, and petitions pro and con were frequently presented. The county of Berks was early in the field; they were not in favor of a dismemberment, and at the session of 1782 several remonstrances bearing upon this point had the effect of confining the new county enterprise to Lancaster County alone. At the ensuing session of the Assembly the subject of a division was again agitated, when the following petition, prepared by Judge Jasper Yeates, of Lancaster, was presented. The remonstrance, however, is only worth preserving as a part of the history of those times:

"To the Honorable the Representatives of the Freemen of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met:

"The Remonstrance and Petition of Divers Freeholders and Others, Inhabitants of the County of Lancaster, Most Humbly Sheweth:

"That your petitioners conceive themselves bound to remonstrate against the prayers of two petitions proposed to the Legislature at the last session respecting a division of the said county of Lancaster, and beg leave to suggest to your Honorable Body the following remarks:

"That a frequent division of counties must naturally occasion a distrust in the faith of government—persons who, confiding in the acts of the Legislature, having purchased lauded property near a county town long established by law, suffering considerable losses from such division.

"That the creating new counties necessarily tends to increase the public expenses, and to derange in some sort the policy of a government.

"That nothing but the most manifest public expedience arising from the welfare of the community at large, independent of individual interests, can justify such measures in an old established county; and that though the bringing the courts of justice near to the doors of every man may in some wise conduce to his private interests, yet in other instances a remoteness of the station may be in some degree advantageous, as it tends to repress a litigious spirit in many who might be desirous of vexing their neighbors at law at a much less expense.

"Your petitioners beg leave further to observe, that as to the petition which points out the precise limits of a new county attaching thereto a part of Berks county, your petitioners concur fully in the state of facts submitted to your honorable House by the inhabitants in general of the said county of Berks in their late petition and remonstrance, to which we humbly refer you.

"As to the erecting of a county town at Harris' Ferry, we submit to the wisdom of the Legislature the propriety, expedience or justice of the measure. If a central situation has been ever deemed most eligible and convenient to the public at large for the site of a county town, the spot proposed is deficient in this particular, the western boundary not exceeding one mile. If the trade of the back country on the Susquehanna is the real object of the petitioners, the streams of traffic will equally find their way to the capital of the State, whether there be a new county town erected pursuant to their wishes or not; and if the inhabitants who live beyond Peter's Mountain find themselves aggrieved by their remote situation, it is submitted to the Legislature whether it would not be more natural and easy to attach that settlement to Northumberland county. It is apprehended with due deference to the sense of your Honorable House, that measuring the petition for a county town at Harris' Ferry by the large scale of national good, and detracting therefrom a few individual interests, the prayer of that petition will be thought utterly inadmissible.

"Your petitioners take the liberty of adding that the present bounds of the county of Lancaster are not found to be inconvenient or unreasonable.

"That it will be utterly impracticable by the House to gratify the wishes of individuals in every instance when they complain of being aggrieved.

"And that when the division of counties is forced as a measure, of course your Honorable House will have much of their time engrossed by petitions for such divisions from the interested views of private people, which the claims of the public demand for objects of much greater magnitude.

"That in the present exhausted state of the country at large, when the public demands occasion the levying of heavy taxes, it would be highly grievous to many that new assessments should be laid for the purpose of building court-house and jail, and other expenses incident to a new county; for though many have signed the petition, it may fairly be presumed there are many others within the several districts averse to such additional impositions.

"Whereupon your petitioners most humbly pray that your Honorable Body, upon full deliberation had of the two petitions herein first before noted, will not grant the prayers thereof or either of them."

That portion of the proposed new county in and around Middletown and at Lebanon were also opposed to the new county if Harris' Ferry was to be the county-seat. We have referred elsewhere to the opposition from Lebanon. The following memorial of the inhabitants of Middletown is herewith given. It must be acknowledged there was some grounds for the course taken, as the latter place was a village of considerable size, and of unusual business importance, while Harrisburg contained only a handful of people, and at that period was of little account. The memorial reads,—

"To the Honorable the Representatives of the Freemen of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly: The petition of the inhabitants of Lancaster County humbly sheweth, That

"WHEREAS, The said county being very extensive, and the increase of the inhabitants becomes very great, renders the attendance upon courts and other business burdensome and expensive to your petitioners, occasioned by their situation being so far distant from the county town. And whereas, It seems to be the intention of a respectable number of the inhabitants of the county to make application to the honorable house for redress of this burdensome grievance, to have the county divided into two separate counties for the ease and welfare of the said inhabitants; and when any grievances or inconveniences arise to the inhabitants of the State, petition to the honorable house is the mode to make them known to your honors; and as by experience we are made sensible of your strong inclination to remove any inconvenience that at any time and from time to time may arise to your constituents; you first being made sensible that the inconvenience complained of is real and well founded, and if you should be of opinion, after mature consideration, that it is real and well founded, we make no doubt but that you would permit us humbly to intimate to you our ideas of the mode of relief which we would beg leave to do, leaving the ultimate determination to your better judgment. If you should think proper to divide the county we would presume to recommend the town of Middletown, in the lower end of Paxton township, as by far the most proper place for the county town for many clear and obvious reasons, which we think would naturally occur to the honorable house, but lest they should not, we beg to mention ours: First, Middletown will be as central as any other place that can be thought of. Then its situation upon the river Susquehanna, accommodated with the finest, indeed, we may venture to say, the only fine safe harbor upon the said river, and the public utility of the said river Susquehanna to the State of Pennsylvania and to the city of Philadelphia in particular, is unquestionable; that river being a fine navigable river for boats from ten to twelve tons burden coming down said river, the river Juniata and other streams leading into the Susquehanna some hundreds of miles, from a fine fertile country on all sides of the river; and we must further presume that the time is not far distant when a communication will be effected from this river to the western waters and the great Lake Erie, attended with very trifling land carriage between the heads of the two waters. Another great advantage to the State, and particularly to the city of Philadelphia, will naturally accrue, and that is instead of great quantity of produce of different kind being carried from the counties of York and Cumberland to the town of Baltimore, they will be carried through the channel of the town of Middletown to the city of Philadelphia. It may not be improper to observe that Middletown is situated at the very lowest end of the navigable water of said river Susquehanna, so that the trade of that extensive river will at all events centre in that town and be carried from thence to the city of Philadelphia, and consequently will draw off from the city a very considerable quantity of merchandise of all kinds to the new country upon and beyond the Susquehanna River. And, further, that it is not improbable that in time the trade will be carried from Middletown to the city of Philadelphia, by water carriage, via the river Swatara and other waters to the river Schuylkill, as we stand informed that this water communication was viewed some years ago by a number of gentlemen of eminence appointed by the House of Assembly for that purpose and reported very practicable. And also that Middletown has the great advantage of being seated upon such high ground that they need never to be apprehensive of an inundation even in the lowest part of the town by the overflowing of Susquehanna and Swatara Rivers.

"That the honorable house may appoint Middletown for the county town is the earnest desire of your petitioners, and by granting the same we as in duty bound shall ever pray, etc.

The memorials were of no avail, however, and the subject being constantly brought to the attention of the Assembly, that body by its act of March 4, 1785, passed the following act, erecting the county of Dauphin and fixing the county-seat at Harris' Ferry :

" AN ACT for erecting part of the County of Lancaster into a separate County.

" Whereas, The Inhabetance of the upper part of Lancaster County have by Petition set forth to the General Assembly of this State that they have long labored under many inconveniences from their being situated at so great a distance from the seat of Judicature in the said County, and have prayed that they may be relieved from the said inconveniences by erecting them into a separate County, and as it appears but just and reasonable that they should be relieved in the premises.

" Be it therefore enacted and it is hereby enacted by the Representatives of the Freemen of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, and by the Authority of the same, That all that part of Lancaster County lying within the Bounds and limits hereafter described shall be erected into a separate County,—that is to say, beginning on the west side of the River Susquehanna, opposite the mouth of Conawago Creek; thence up the middle of said Creek to Moors Hill; and from thence to the head of said creek; and from thence by a direct Line to the South East Corner of Heidelberg Township, where it strikes the Berks County line; thence north west by the Line of Berks County to Mahantango Creek; thence along the same by the Line of Northumberland County and Crossing the River Susquehanna to the Line of Cumberland County; thence down the Susquehanna on the West Side thereof by the line of Cumberland County, and that part of the Line of York County to the place of beginning, on the west side of the river Susquehanna, to be henceforth known and called by the name of Dauphin County.

" And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Inhabitants of the said County of Dauphin shall at all times hereafter enjoy all and singular the Jurisdiction, Powers, Rights, Liberties, and privileges whatsoever which the Inhabitation of any other County of this State do, may, or ought to enjoy by the Constitution and Laws of this State.

" And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the district elections for the said County of Dauphin shall be held for the Townships of Derry and Londonderry at Hummels Town in the township of derry aforesaid, for the township of upper Paxtang on the north side of Peter's Mountain at Peter Hoffman's in said township, for the township of Lower Paxtang on the South side of Peter's Mountain, and West Hanover at the Court House of the said County, or at John Harris' until such Court House shall be erected, and for the Townships of Lebanon, East Hannover, Heidelberg, and Bethel at the Town of Lebanon in the said Township of Lebanon, Where they shall elect at the times and under the Regulations stipulated and directed by the Constitution and Laws of this State, a Councillor Representative to serve them in General Assembly, Censors, Sheriff, Coroners, and Commissioners, which said Officers when duly elected and qualified shall have and enjoy all and singular such powers, Authorities, and privileges with respect to their said County as such officers elected in and for any other County, may, can, or ought to do. And the said Election shall be Conducted in the same manner and from and Agreeable to the same rules and regulations as now are or hereafter may be in force in the other Counties of this State.

" And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the said County of Dauphin shall elect four members, and the County of Lancaster shall elect seven Members to represent them respectively in the General Assembly of this Commonwealth from and after the passing of this Act until the same shall be altered agreeable to the Constitution and the Laws of this State.

" And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Justices of the Supreme Court of this State shall have like Powers, Jurisdctions, and Authorities in the said County of Dauphin as in the other Counties of this State, and are hereby authorized and impowered to Deliver the Gaoles of the said County of Dauphin of Capital and other offenders in like manner as they are authorized to do in other Counties of this State.

" And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Justices of the Courts of quarter Sessions and Common pleas now commissioned within the Limits of the County of Dauphin and those that may hereafter be Commissioned, or any three of them, shall and may hold Courts of General quarter Sessions of the Peace, and Gaol Delivery, and County Courts for holding of pleas, and shall have all and singular such powers, rights, Jurisdctions, and Authorities, to all intents and purposes, as other Justices of The Courts of General quarter Sessions and Justices of the County Courts for holding of pleas in the other Counties of this State may, can, or ought to have in their respective Counties, which Courts shall sit and be held for the said County of Dauphin, near Harris Ferry, on the third tuesday in the months of February, May, August, and november yearly for the dispatch of the publick Business of the said County.

" And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful to and for Jacob Aw, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowdan, and William Brown, of Paxtang, or any three of them to take assurance to them and their heirs of such Lot or pees of Ground as Shall be laid out and approved of Ly the said Commissioners or any three of them for the erecting a Court House and Gaol thereupon, in trust and for the use of the Inhabitants of the said County of Dauphin, and thereupon to erect a Court house and prison sufficient to accommodate the publick Servis of the said County.

" And be it further enacted by the authorities aforesaid, That for the defraying the charges of building, erecting, and finishing the Court house and Prison aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful to and for the Commissioners and Township assessors of the said County or a Majority of them to assess and levy, and they are hereby required to assess and levy in the manner directed by the act for raising County Rates and levies to such money as the said Trustees or any three of them shall judge necessary for building and finishing the Court house and prison aforesaid, Provided always that the sum of money so to be raised do not exceed the sum of fifteen hundred Pounds, and that the said Trustees shall from time to time render a faithful account of the expenditures of the same not only to the Commissioners, but the Grand Jury of the County when called on, or any other officer may be appointed by Authority for the inspection of the accounts of the County. Provided also and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no action or suit now commenced or that may be commenced in the County Courts of Lancaster before the first day of April next against any Person living within the bounds of the County of Dauphin, shall be stayed or discontinued by this act or by anything in the same Counties, but the same actions now commenced or that may be commenced as aforesaid may be proceeded to final issue and Judgement thereupon rendered in the like manner as if this act had not been made, and it shall be lawful for the Justices of Lancaster County to issue Process to the Sheriff of the County of Lancaster for carrying on and obtaining the full and Legal effects of such suits in the same manner as if the parties resided in the same County of Lancaster.

" And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Sheriff, Coroners, and public officers of the County of Lancaster shall continue to exercise the duties of their respective Offices within the County of Dauphin until similar Officers are appointed agreeable to Law, within the said County of Dauphin, and that all arrearsages of excise and public Taxes shall be paid into the hands of the present Collectors to be by them accounted for in manner and form as if this act had never been passed.

" And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Sheriffs, Treasurers, Collectors of Excise, and all such Officers as have heretofore usually given ball for the faithful discharge of their respective Offices who may hereafter be appointed or elected in the said County of Dauphin before they or any of them shall enter upon the execution of their respective Offices shall give sufficient security in the like sums in the like manner and form and for the like uses, trusts, and purposes as such Officers are obliged by Law for the time being to do in the County of Lancaster.

"And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That Joshua Elder, Thomas Clark, John Glendellor, Bartram Galbraith, James Cunningham, or any three of them shall be Commissioners to run and mark the County Line, in the same manner as is before in the second section of this act, which line when so run and marked shall be the boundary between the Counties aforesaid, and that the said Commissioners shall receive for their Services at the rate of twenty-two shillings and sixpence per day each, and no more, to be paid half by the County of Lancaster, and half by the County of Dauphin by draughts from the Commissioners of the respective Counties on the Treasurer of the same, which the said Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to grant.

"Signed by order of the House.

"JOHN BAYARD, Speaker.

"Enacted into a Law at Philadelphia on Friday, the fourth Day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty five.

"Inrolled 4th June, A.D. 1785."

The name DAUPHIN was derived from the eldest son of the king of France, that country at this period, in consequence of its efficient aid to the colonies, being uppermost in the affections of the people. The enthusiasm was unbounded, and, as we shall refer to hereafter, carried to extreme lengths. The name was suggested by the prime movers for the formation of the new county. The seat of justice was fixed at Harris' Ferry, then a village of about one hundred houses, although the towns of Lebanon and Middletown were then more important places within the new county. A letter written about this period by Capt. Alexander Graydon to Jedediah Morse, the geographer, gives us perchance the best account of the county of Dauphin as then organized, extant, and we present it therefore in full :

"LOUISBOURG, March 5th, 1780.

"SIR: A Hurry of Business added to a want of Health has hitherto prevented me from paying that Attention I could have wished to your Questions respecting the County of Dauphin. I now give you the Result of my Enquiries upon the different heads you propose, arranged in the order of your Queries.

"Answer to 1st Q^y. Dauphin, formerly contained within the Limits of Lancaster county, but divided from it and erected into a separate County by Act of Assembly passed March 4th 1785.

"Answer to 2d Q^y. It's Boundaries on the West and South West are the Western Shore of the River Susquehanna (the River being within the Limits and Jurisdiction of the County) on the South East Conawago Creek as far as the Head of it and from thence running in a direct Line to the south East Corner of Heidelberg Township where it strikes the Berks County Line thence north West by the Line of Berks County to Mahantango Creek thence along the same by the Line of Northumberland and crossing the Susquehanna to the Line of Cumberland County. It is thus described in the Act of Assembly, but perhaps it may be best for your purpose to say, That it is bounded on the West and south West by the Counties of Cumberland and York, on the South and South East by Lancaster County—on the East & North East by Berks and on the north by Northumberland, the greater and best part of the County lying in the valley between the Blue or Kittatinny Mountain, and the Conawago Hill or South Mountain, which latter Name it obtains in Cumberland County. Its form is triangular and its Extent along the Susquehanna about forty-five miles from thence to the Line of Berks County about thirty-five Miles and from thence to the same River along the Line of Berks and Northumberland Counties about fifty-five miles.

"Answer to 3d Q^y. There are 3250 taxable Inhabitants in Dauphin from whence perhaps it may be estimated that there are not less than 16 or 18,000 souls. These consist with a very few Exceptions of German and Irish or what are in Pennsylvania called Scotch Irish and their descendants. I think about two-thirds of the Inhabitants are Germans or of that Extraction. The principal religious denominations among them are Lutherans and Calvinists perhaps about an equal number of each—there is also a small Congregation of Moravians who have a place of worship about a mile from the Town of Lebanon. There are besides a good number of Menonists and a small Society of Roman Catholics who have a Chapel in Lebanon Township.

"The religious Profession of the Irish families is the Presbyterian. They have three meeting houses, one in West Hanover, one in Paxtang and one in Derry Township. There are also a few Seceders and Covenanters who being too inconsiderable in number to form distinct societies have generally fallen in with the before mentioned Congregations. The English Episcopalians, Quakers, &c., of which we have a few are by no means numerous enough to have places of Worship.

"Answer to 4th Q^y. The soil is generally good and in some parts remarkably fertile more particularly in Lebanon and Heidelberg Townships and in that part of Paxtang lying along the River. A great portion of the County is Lime stone land but as it approaches the Kittatinny Mountain which runs through it a Distance of near thirty Miles it is generally a gravelly or light slaty soil which however produces very good and certain Crops of excellent Wheat, Rye, &c. Beyond the mountain to Northumberland County, which Tract of Country comprehends upper and middle Paxtang Township, the quality of the soil is much inferior to the other parts and is very little cultivated. It is generally timbered with pine & white oak and watered with a number of fine Streams which enable the Inhabitants to erect Saw Mills and drive on a very beneficial Trade in Boards, &c. but tho' the soil of this County is somewhat sandy & in other parts wet as may be inferred from the timber, yet it produces pretty good Grain and affords a great deal of good meadow Ground. From the best information I am inclined to think that the proportion of the Land under Cultivation will average at less than an half. The trade to Philadelphia and the Mills on the Road thither, our principal Export being Wheat and flour—we also export Bar Iron and the neighboring Country is supplied with Boards, Scantling, &c., from Louisbourg and Middletown which are situated on or near Susquehanna, down which great quantities of these Articles are rafted in the Spring and Autumn at which Seasons the waters being high the navigation is rendered safe and easy. Our Exports (except what are taken off by the watermen who bring down lumber and Grain) are conveyed by Land, the navigation of the Susquehanna being at present too much obstructed below Middletown by Rocks, Falls, &c., to make it eligible to convey them by Water to Baltimore and other Markets in the Chesapeake which may possibly be the case in future, when the Country has ability to remove these Obstructions.

"Our chief Imports besides the Articles brought down the River as already mentioned are European and East and West India Merchandises brought from Philadelphia. The natural Growth of the Soil is generally Hickory, Oak, Chestnut, Poplar, and near the River Walnut, Locust, Linn or Linden, Maple, Ash, Beech, &c., with the Herbage usual in other parts of the State. Its productions from Culture are Wheat, Rye, Oats, Barley, Indian Corn, Flax, Hemp, &c.

"Answer to 5th Q^y. The Rivers are the Susquehanna, the Swatara a large stream which has its source in Berks County and after watering a considerable Extent of Country in its windings empties into the Susquehanna at Middletown—the Quitapahilla which discharges itself into the Swatara, and the Tulpehocken which empties into Schuylkill (about a mile from Reading) between the Head waters of which (i.e. the Tulpehocken) and the Quitapahilla which approach within a mile of each other near the town of Lebanon it has been in Contemplation to cut a Canal and thereby by means of Locks, &c., to open a navigable Communication between the Schuylkill and Susquehanna, a work which though at present laid aside will probably one day be carried into Execution. There are besides these several less important Streams, vizt. Paxtang, Conawago, Spring Creek, Clark's Creek, Sturgeon's, Armstrong's, Beaver Creek, Monady, Wickonisky, little Swatara, &c., most of which afford seats for Mills & Every kind of water works.

"I know of nothing remarkable in the Mountains of which there are several in the County, vizt. the Blue Mountain already mentioned and several other Ridges in its Neighborhood such as Peter's Mountain, Berry's Mountain, &c., and the Conawago Hill, in which there is a Mine of Iron Ore belonging to the Estate of the late Mr. Grubb (part whereof is in Lancaster Co'ty) which appears to be inexhaustible.

"There is a Spring near the foot of the Blue Mountains much celebrated and resorted to by the Country People on Account of its supposed Efficacy in the Cure of Rheumatic and other chronic Disorders, but from what I can learn if it possesses any virtue it arises chiefly from its excessive coldness.

"There is also a Cave on the Banks of the Swatara about a mile from Hummel's town in Derry Township deemed a great Curiosity by those who have seen it. It's Aperture being under a pretty high Bank is from 15 to 20 feet wide and from 7 to 10 in Height. You enter by a gradual Descent and in your Progress pass through a number of Passages and Apertments of various Dimensions, some low and narrow others very high and spacious, vaulted by magnificent Canopies fretted with a variety of depending Petrifications, some of which are drawn to a great Length by means of their continued Exudation. But much of their original Beauty and Transparency is obscured by the smoke of the Torches from time to time employed in conducting the curious Traveller through this gloomy recess. From the Entrance of the Cavern to a small Fissure or Outlet at the Extremity which is barely large enough to admit the Body of a Man is about 200 yards measured in a strait Line on the surface of the Ground under which it passes, but the Distance must be much greater to those who have the Courage to trace it in its subterraneous Windings. This is the only natural Curiosity in the County that I have heard of, and I know of no Antiquities or artificial ones.

Answer to 6th Qn. The Country was first settled by Emigrants from Ireland.

Answer to 7th Qn. The state of Agriculture is much the same as in the neighboring Counties & will doubtless admit of much Improvement. The same may be said of the Manufactures, though some Branches seem to merit a particular mention vizt. A nail factory at Lonsbourg which is carried on by means of a stamping Machine much cheaper and more expeditiously than in the usual mode of drawing—also a Powder Mill of Lebanon Township in which is manufactured Powder of a very Superior Strength and Quality. Besides these I cannot omit a Grist Mill within a Mile of Middletown seated very advantageously on the Swatawa & about half a mile from the mouth of it. It is a very large and handsome stone Building, has four pair of Stones and is perhaps in every respect one of the most complete in Pennsylvania. But what is perhaps more deserving of Attention is the Race a Canal from twenty to thirty feet in Breadth and carried with such a degree of Boldness to a Length of 476 perches through Rocks and Hills and every Obstacle which occurred in its Course as cannot fail to excite a very high Idea of the enterprising Spirit & persevering Industry of Mr. George Frey, the undertaker and owner.

"We have as yet no Academy or public schools but shall in common with the other Counties of the State have a Tract of Land granted & appropriated by the Legislature for the Establishment of one, besides which we are entitled to the annual proceeds of a Ferry across the Susquehanna at present rented for £.55 per Ann which should it—as in all probability it will be applied to this Use will constitute a very respectable Fund.

Answer to 8th Qn. The County comprehends ten Townships vizt. Paxton (or Paxtang which is the original Indian name), upper Paxtang, Middle Paxtang, East Hanover, West Hanover, Derry, Londonderry, Lebanon, Bethel, and Heidelberg—and ten Towns, vizt. Lonsbourg or Harrisburgh containing about 120 dwelling-houses, a Gaol being a plain stone Building and a German Church a Log Building—Lebanon containing about 180 Houses and two German Churches built of Wood. Middletown containing 90 old Houses & one German Church of Wood. Hummel's town containing about 35 Houses & one German Church of Wood—Anville or Miller's town containing about 35 houses; Heidelberg, or Shaffer's town containing about 70 Houses & 2 German Churches one of which is a handsome stone Building—Newman's town containing about 25 houses—Williamsburg or Jones' town containing about 40 houses and one German of Wood. N. B. In Lebanon one of the Churches belongs to the Lutheran the other to the Calvinists, as in Heidelberg, but in the other Towns where there is but one, it generally belongs to both societies and is used by them alternately.

Answer to 9th Qn. The Name of the principal Town or Seat of the Courts is Lonsbourg so styled by the Supreme Executive Council in their proceedings as well as in those of the Courts, altho' it is more generally known by the name of Harrisburgh—it is a fine, flourishing place & its progress amazing, having been laid out a little better than 3 years. It lies between the 40th and 41st degree of Latitude and is somewhat more than a degree & a half West of Philada. Its Distance from that place 100 Miles and its Bearing about West and by North.

"This is the most accurate Information I could obtain with respect to the Objects of your Inquiry. I have probably been more minute than necessary in some Cases, but agreeably to your desire was willing to give as full an Answer as possible and shall be happy if it affords you any Assistance in your very useful Undertaking, in which I wish you Success, and

"Am Sir, Your very hble Servt,

"ALEX. GRAYDON.

"To Mr. JEREDIAH MORSE."

At this period the entire country was seriously agitated by the adoption of the Federal Constitution.

Within the limits of Dauphin County there was much opposition. In the convention which was called by the Pennsylvania Assembly to ratify that instrument, the delegates from Dauphin, William Brown, Adam Orth, and John A. Hanna, signed the protest that the Constitution, "consistent with its idea of consolidation, contains no reservation of the rights and privileges of the State governments," and the authority "vested in Congress is unlimited in its nature, nay is comprehensive and boundless."

On the 3d of September, 1788, there was held at Harrisburg a conference of those who were opposed to the adoption of the Federal Constitution. The minutes of this conference, which marks an important epoch in the history of this locality and of the State, as it was the first political convention ever held in Pennsylvania, we give in full:

"Agreeably to a circular letter which originated in the county of Cumberland, inviting to a conference such of the citizens of the State who conceive that a revision of the Federal system, lately proposed for the government of the United States is necessary; a number of gentlemen from the city of Philadelphia and the counties of Philadelphia, Bucks, Chester, Lancaster, Cumberland, Berks, Northumberland, Bedford, Fayette, Washington, Franklin, Dauphin, and Huntingdon, have assembled at this place for said purpose."

Gallatin, of Westmoreland County, who seemed to be one of the leaders in this revolt, if so it may be termed, presented the following resolutions:

"1st. Resolved, That in order to prevent a dissolution of the Union, and to secure our liberties and those of our posterity, it is necessary that a revision of the Federal constitution be obtained in the most speedy manner.

"2d. That the safest manner to obtain such a revision will be, in conformity to the request of the State of New York, to use our endeavors to have a convention called as soon as possible; Resolved, therefore, that the Assembly of this State be petitioned to take the earliest opportunity to make an application for that purpose to the New Congress.

"3d. Resolved, That in order that the friends to amendments to the Federal Constitution, who are inhabitants of this State, may act in concert, it is necessary, and it is hereby recommended to the several counties in the State, to appoint committees, who may correspond one with another, and with such similar committees as may be formed in other States.

"4th. Resolved, That the friends to amendment to the Federal Constitution in the several States be invited to meet in a general conference to be held at —, on —, and — members elected by this conference who, or any of them, shall meet at said place and time, in order to devise, in concert with such other delegates from the several States as may come under similar appointments, on such amendments to the Federal Constitution as to them may seem most necessary, and on the most likely way to carry them into effect."

There seemed to be a diversity of opinion in the conference, and although the members did not actually reject Gallatin's resolves, which were much more decided, adopted those of a different temper and likely to be effective before the people. The object of the founders of a party, at the moment in hopeless minority, was to present a record upon which any aspiring politician could place himself. They were successful to such a degree that the destiny of the State and nation were in the party thus called into being for fifty years afterwards, almost without interruption. Whatever intermediate occurrences took place, deliberation announced the decision of the conference to be,—

"1st. Resolved, That it be recommended to the people of this State to acquiesce in the organization of the said government; but although we thus accord in its organization, we by no means lose sight of the grand object of obtaining very considerable amendment and alterations which we consider essential to preserve the peace and harmony of the Union, and those invaluable privileges for which so much blood and treasure have been recently expended.

"2d. Resolved, That it is necessary to obtain a speedy revision of said Constitution by a general convention.

"3d. Resolved, That, therefore, in order to effect this desirable end, a petition be presented to the Legislature of the State requesting that honorable body to take the earliest opportunity to make application for that purpose to the new Congress."

The address to the people of the State was brief, and in few words proceeds to state that the "Constitution in its present form contains some principles which may be perverted to the injury of the citizen and prove incompatible with order and government," expressing the opinion "that considerable amendments are essentially necessary;" further, that they are "sensible that a large number of the citizens, both in this and other States, who gave their assent to its being carried into execution previous to any amendments, were actuated more by fear of the dangers that might arise from any delays than by a conviction of its being perfect," concluding with the hope that "prudence and policy" will soon bring about the amendments which those with whom they were in harmony in other States "are pressing so earnestly."

Subsequently to the action of the "conference" its opponents issued a circular directing public attention to the fact that an election by general ticket for eight members of Congress was to be held on the fourth Wednesday of November, calling upon "the friends of the new Constitution to be on their guard, lest the names of persons opposed to the same or of doubtful sentiments should be circulated in the counties and in the city, especially let them beware of counterfeits, for such are abroad." The committees circulating this also informed the people that "the smuggling business which took place at Harrisburg with the ostensible purpose of procuring amendments to the Constitution, but in fact to form a ticket for representatives in Congress," should be watched!

On the 3d of November the Federalists, as they called themselves, met at Lancaster to form a ticket for members of Congress. This meeting did not openly attack the opponents of the Constitution. Indeed, so confident were they of success that it was not deemed dignified or in any way necessary to do so. But so unexpectedly strong was opposition developed, as the returns from "the back counties" reached Philadelphia, "that very great surprise was created at the course of public sentiment." And no wonder, for when all the returns came to hand it appeared that the voters were divided into two nearly equal parts, "giving most of the advantages of political success to those who favored amendments to the Constitution." The vote was as follows:

HARRISBURG TICKET.		LANCASTER TICKET.
Robert Whitehill.....	6860	Fred. Augustus Muhlenberg	8697
Wm. Montgomery.....	6339	George Clymer.....	8087
Daniel Heister.....	7405	John Allison.....	7074
Peter Muhlenberg.....	7415	Stephen Chambers.....	7053
Wm. Findley.....	6587	Thomas Scott.....	8068
Charles Pettit.....	6484	Henry Wynkoop.....	8052
Clair McClanahan.....	6227	Thomas Hartley.....	8163
Gen. Wm. Irvine.....	6493	Thomas Fitzsimmons.....	8086

About fifteen thousand votes were polled at this the first State election in Pennsylvania. The population was less than four hundred thousand.

CHAPTER XIX.

Military Organization in 1786-1790—Union Canal—The Whiskey Insurrection; DeWees' Journal of—Scott's Description of Dauphin County in 1805.

THE close of the war for independence did not check the military ardor of the people, and militia battalions were organized in the different sections of the county. The officers of the militia from 1786 to 1790 were as follows:

FIRST BATTALION.

Commanded by Lieut.-Col. Thomas Murray.

Captains.

Charles Stewart.	Arthur Bell.
Richard Swan.	Andrew Stewart.
Samuel Cochran.	William Johnston.
Michael Limes.	Martin Weaver.

SECOND BATTALION.

Commanded by Lieut.-Col. Robert Clark.

Captains.

James Willson.	Philip Wolfersberger.
Robert McKee.	James Clunie.
James Kelly.	Frederick Hummel.
John Barnett.	Patrick Hayes.
Peter Shuster.

THIRD BATTALION.

Commanded by Lieut.-Col. Samuel Jones, and afterwards Lieut.-Col. Valentine Shouffler.

Captains.

John Reighard.	Samuel Ainsworth, 1789-
James McCreight.	90.
Melchior Behny.	Abraham Sehbolt, 1789-
Daniel Bradley.	90.
Ambrose Crain, 1786-88.	William Young, 1789-90.
Matthias Henning, 1788-89.

FOURTH BATTALION.

Commanded by Lieut.-Col. Baltzer Orth.

Captains.

Christopher Uhler.	Jacob Embich, 1788-90.
George Bowman.	Christian Ley, 1788-90.
Alexander Martin.	Leonard Immel, 1789-90.
Peter Ensminger.	Peter Gloninger, 1789-90.
John Grumm.	Henry Shell, 1786-88.
George Nol.

The encroachments of the European powers upon American rights compelled the Congress to organize what was called a provisional army in 1792. In obedience therewith the militia of Dauphin County, as then constituted, were fully organized and the officers of the several battalions and companies elected in October. They were as follows :

FIRST BATTALION.

Lieutenant-Colonel.

William Allen.

First Company.

Captain—Robert McKee.

Second Company.

Captain—James Kelly.

Third Company.

Captain—Michael Kutzner.

Fourth Company.

Captain—Jacob Wolfley.

Fifth Company.

Captain—Peter Eberly.

Sixth Company.

Captain—John Barnett.

Seventh Company.

Captain—James Wallace.

Eighth Company.

Captain—Philip Wolfersberger.

SECOND BATTALION.

Lieutenant-Colonel.

Valentine Shouffler.

Major.

William Wray.

First Company.

Captain—Jacob Gettle.

Lieutenant—Jacob Cassel.

Ensign—Frederick Hoover.

Second Company.

Captain—Daniel Bradley.

Lieutenant—John Harper.

Ensign—Christopher Winter.

Third Company.

Captain—John Martin.

Lieutenant—William Hedrick.

Ensign—John Ainsworth.

Fourth Company.

Captain—William Young.

Lieutenant—John Wallace.

Ensign—Vendel Smith.

Fifth Company.

Captain—Melchior Behny.

Lieutenant—Martin Walburn.

Ensign—Adam Wingelbleck.

Sixth Company.

Captain—John Reighard.

Lieutenant—Michael Leydick.

Ensign—Peter Toy.

Seventh Company.

Captain—Hugh Andrew.

Lieutenant—David Strain.

Ensign—William Ward.

Eighth Company.

Captain—Abraham Sebbold.

Lieutenant—Christian Shouffler.

Ensign—Ulrick Felty.

Light Infantry Company.

Captain—Lewis Kreider.

Lieutenant—Samuel Ainsworth.

Ensign—Daniel Weidel.

THIRD BATTALION.

Lieutenant-Colonel.

John Andre Hanna.

Major.

Thomas Forster.

First Company.

Captain—John McElhenny.

Lieutenant—John Whitehill.

Ensign—Zachariah Stephen.

Second Company.

Captain—William Glass.

Lieutenant—John Krause.

Ensign—Anthony Seyfert.

Third Company.

Captain—William Murray.

Lieutenant—Simpson Stengever.

Ensign—James Foulks.

Fourth Company.

Captain—John Brubaker.

Lieutenant—George Clark.

Ensign—John Meetch.

Fifth Company.

Captain—Samuel Sherer.

Lieutenant—Richard Fulton.

Ensign—Michael Newling.

Sixth Company.

Captain—Robert McClure.

Lieutenant—Martin Shell.

Ensign—John Syder.

Seventh Company.

Captain—Richard Swan.

Lieutenant—Michael Whitley.

Ensign—William Johnston.

Eighth Company.

Captain—Martin Weaver.

Lieutenant—John Sheesly.

Ensign—Daniel Steever.

FOURTH BATTALION.

Lieutenant-Colonel.

James Woods.

Major.

George Bowman.

First Company.

Captain—Jacob Teiss.
Lieutenant—David Teiss.
Ensign—Joseph Bowman.

Second Company.

Captain—Jacob Embich.
Lieutenant—John Kohr.
Ensign—Henry Kelker.

Third Company.

Captain—John Gram.
Lieutenant—George Wiland.
Ensign—Henry King.

Fourth Company.

Captain—Peter Ensminger.
Lieutenant—Gottlieb Orth.
Ensign—Henry Orth.

Fifth Company.

Captain—Thomas Millard.
Lieutenant—Michael Bowen.
Ensign—Frederick Trion.

Sixth Company.

Captain—Christian Ley.
Lieutenant—John Krill.
Ensign—John Kuster.

Seventh Company.

Captain—Michael Singer.
Lieutenant—Charles Reighard.
Ensign—Joseph Martin.

Eighth Company.

Captain—Daniel Hening.
Lieutenant—Henry Berry.
Ensign—Daniel Straw.

Light Infantry Company.

Captain—Abraham Doebler.
Lieutenant—John Bowman.
Ensign—Adam Ritscher.

In the history of the county of Lebanon we have referred to the construction of the Union Canal in full. In this connection we can only say that it extends from Middletown, on the Susquehanna River, to Reading, on the Schuylkill River, being seventy-nine miles in length, with a navigable feeder seven miles in length. There are fifty-four locks on the east, with a descent of three hundred and seven feet, and thirty-four locks on the west, with a descent of one hundred and ninety-three feet. There is a tunnel northwest of Lebanon seven hundred and twenty-nine feet in length, cut in the solid rock, and this was the first tunnel constructed in the United States. The summit was filled with water obtained from the Quitopahilla and Swatara Creeks, although other streams have been tapped.

The first survey of it was made in 1762, by David Rittenhouse and Dr. William Smith, although its feasibility is said to have been suggested by William Penn as early as 1690. In 1764 operations were commenced, and after many discouragements and financial disasters were completed in 1837, when the first boat, the "Alpha of Tulpehocken," passed Lebanon on its way westward. Identical with the completion and operation of this maritime highway the material prosperity of this county, and especially Lebanon dates. The population increased, business increased, and to it belongs the honor of laying the corner-stone of the prosperity of those sections which it traverses. It has lost the prestige of its commerce and importance, but is still a line of cheap transportation for coal, lumber, iron-ore, iron, and other manufacturing material. The railroads have succeeded it in the popular sense of quick transportation, but it forms a prominent part in the history of the Swatara Valley, and as such will always be held in grateful remembrance. Its first construction was made for boats of fifteen tons, but the enlargement between 1853 and 1857 gives a safe passage to boats of heavier capacities. It has the honor of being the first canal built in the country.

In the year 1793 occurred that terrible scourge the yellow fever at Philadelphia. The deaths were numerous, and many of the principal citizens of the metropolis fell victims to the epidemic. As is the case when yellow fever or cholera or other direful diseases prevail in a certain locality, places distant from the infected districts are affected by diseases somewhat allied to those of the more malignant type; and during this period Harrisburg, Columbia, Reading, and other towns, suffered severely. In the chapters devoted to Harrisburg we have referred to this matter in full.

The opposition to the excise law in Western Pennsylvania culminated in 1794 in what was termed the "Expedition to the Westward," or the Whiskey Insurrection. Troops were enrolled, and the county of Dauphin well represented. We fully expected to obtain complete rolls of the troops in the departments of Washington City, but investigation and research have not been successful. In the general pay-roll of the Second Regiment Pennsylvania Militia we have the following officers from this section:

Lieutenant-Colonel.

Thomas Forster.

Major.

Frederick Hummel.

Paymaster.

John Brown.

Sergeant-Major.

Philip Stoehr.

Capt. John Wallace's company consisted of one captain, one lieutenant, one ensign, four sergeants, two corporals, and thirty-two privates.

Capt. Samuel Ainsworth's company consisted of one captain, one lieutenant, one ensign, two sergeants, one corporal, and nineteen privates.

Capt. Devin's rifle company consisted of one captain, one lieutenant, four sergeants, four corporals, and thirty privates.

That there were other companies there is no doubt. We have the journal of Capt. Samuel Dewees, who was on the Western Expedition, and from this we gather many important facts. Dewees says,—

"Lawyers Fisher, Dentsel, Elder, and a storekeeper of the name of Reitzel, and others of the citizens were engaged in raising a volunteer military company. Lawyer Fisher was elected captain, Lawyer Dentsel ensign, Reitzel first lieutenant, and ——— second lieutenant. The company was a large one, and each member uniformed and equipped himself in handsome style. Capt. Fisher found out the residence of a drummer of the name of Warriour, who then lived some two or three miles from Harrisburg. Warriour had been a British drum-major, but had at an early stage of the Revolutionary struggle deserted from the British and joined himself to the Continental army, and had beat the drum for it until the end of the war. Warriour was chosen drum-major in Capt. Fisher's company, and I was chosen fife-major. Warriour was decidedly the best drummer that I had ever seen or heard beat during the Revolution. His music was not of the loudest kind, but it was sharp, clear, well-timed, and rich in its spirit-stirring melodies. Capt. Fisher's company was composed of the most patriotic, intelligent, respectable, and wealthy young men of Harrisburg and vicinity, who prided themselves very much in exercising and perfecting themselves in the school of the soldier.

"... Capt. Fisher received orders for his company to march on to Carlisle. We all got in readiness, paraded through the principal streets of Harrisburg, and then marched for Carlisle. When we left Harrisburg we crossed over the Susquehanna River in flats. These were a kind of boat twenty or thirty feet long and ten or twelve feet wide, with sides a foot and a half or two feet high. The banks of the river on the town side were covered with women and children, and there were great weeping and mourning. Our country called, and duty was clearly spread out before our eyes. We had, therefore, to steel our hearts against the cries of mothers and children, and brave up against the tide of weeping and wailing by playing and beating up merrily 'Charley over the Water.' This we continued to do until Harrisburg was partly lost in the distance behind us."

As many of the incidents detailed in Dewees' account are new, and referable in the main to Capt. George Fisher's company, we make full extracts therefrom:

"... Upon our arrival at Carlisle we pitched our tents upon the commons beyond the spring, and very soon after the camp was formed ten or twelve men were detached from our company to join Gen. Washington's quarter-guard. President Washington had arrived but that day or the day previous at Carlisle. He had been there, however, several times previous to our marching thither. Warriour and myself played the detached portion of our company up to the court-house, where the general's quarter-guard was stationed, and then returned to camp.

"In a few days after our arrival at Carlisle, President Washington issued his orders for all to be in readiness to march. On the next or second day thereafter, in the morning, we were ordered to beat up the 'General.' This was a signal tune. As soon as we would commence to play it, all the men would set themselves about pulling up the tent-pins, and arranging matters for a general strike. At a certain roll in this tune (called the 'General'), all things being in readiness, the tents would be all thrown down in one direction, and all fall at once, in the same movement, or as nearly so as could be done. This done, some of the soldiers would then engage in rolling them up, whilst others would carry them to the wagons and pack them, camp kettles, etc., therein. For the amusement and use of my young readers, I will here insert a part of two old verses (now recollected) which was set to the tune of the 'General':

"Come, brave boys, it is almost day, Strike your tents and march away."

"Don't you hear the general say, Strike your tents and march away."

"After we had beaten up the 'General' our tents were all struck to the ground at the signal, rolled up, and they with all other camp equipage, packed in our baggage-wagon. When this task was accomplished, the long roll was then beat up, and all formed into line. The army then formed by regiments into marching order, then marched and formed the line in the main street of Carlisle. The regiment to which Capt. Fisher's company was attached, was formed in the main line of regiments, and upon the right of that line. Capt. Fisher's company occupying the right of that regiment, constituted the extreme right of the entire line, and rested in the main street, opposite the court-house. The rear of the main column or line rested at a great distance from town on the old Philadelphia road, and beyond the 'gallows ground.' This line, besides being formed preparatory to the march, was also established for the purpose of passing the review. All the officers were at their posts in front of the line in order to receive and salute the commander-in-chief and suite. President Washington, the Governors of States then at Carlisle, formed at the head of the line. The brigade and field officers that accompanied the President and Governors took their positions in the line preparatory to the review.

"All things being in readiness, the President and suite moved on to a review of the troops. The method of salute was, each regiment as the commander-in-chief and suite drew near was ordered to 'present arms.' Field officers, captains, lieutenants, etc., in line in advance of the troops saluted by bringing the hilts of their swords to their faces and then throwing the points of their swords towards the ground at some little distance from their bodies on their right side, the musicians at the same time playing and beating a salute. The flag-bearers at a certain roll of the drum would also salute by waving their colors to and fro. The musicians in this grand line of military varied very much in their salutes. Some drummers no doubt knew what tune was a salute, and could have beaten it well, but their fifers could not play it, and some fifers knew how to play it, but their drummers could not beat it. An acquaintance of mine of the name of Shiye, who played the fife for a company from Philadelphia could have played it, and well too (for many a time we had played it together during the Revolution), but his drummer knew nothing about it. Some musicians played and beat one thing and some another. One fifer, I recollect (within hearing distance of us), played 'Yankee Doodle,' and his drummer no doubt beat it well too, but it was not a salute. When President Washington and his suite arrived at our regiment I struck up and Warriour beat the old 'British Grenadier's March,' which was always the music played and beat, and offered to a superior officer as a salute during the Revolutionary war.

"President Washington eyed us keenly as he was passing us, and continued to do so, even when he had passed to some distance from us. After this duty was performed, upon the part of the soldiery, Washington, in conversation with the officers, asked Capt. Fisher if his musicians (Warriour and myself) had not been in the Continental service during the Revolution? Capt. Fisher informed him that we had been; upon which the President replied that he had thought so, from the manner of playing and beating, and observed that we performed the best of any in the army, and were the only musicians that played and beat the old (or usual) revolutionary salute, which he said was as well played and beat as he had ever heard it during the Revolution. Capt. Fisher was very proud of our having so far excelled as to attain the just praise of the President, and said to us upon his return, 'Boys, you have received the praise of President Washington to-day for having excelled all of the musicians in the line in playing and beating up Washington's favorite revolutionary salute, for he says not a musician in the whole army has played it to-day but yourselves.' If Capt. Fisher was proud of Washington's commendation of us, my readers may judge that we were not less proud of it than himself.

"In the course of an hour or two after the troops had been reviewed by President Washington, at Carlisle, the order of 'forward' was given. The whole army then took up its line of march westward, and in the evening of that day it reached Mount Rock, and encamped. This place was about seven miles from Carlisle. The next day we passed through Shippensburg and reached Strasburg, at the foot of the mountain, where we encamped. I do not recollect whether we remained at this place longer than a night or not, but think that we were a day and two nights encamped there before we began to ascend the mountain.

"We broke our encampment at Strasburg and set out upon the march up the mountain. It is nothing to travel over the mountains now to what it was then; the roads were both narrow and steep, as well as crooked. Owing to the zigzag nature of the road, soldiers in the front could behold very many soldiers towards the rear, and the soldiers in the rear could behold many of the soldiers that marched between it and the front. This march not being a forced one, ample time was given us to ascend to its summit. Nature had strewn her moss-covered seats about in profusion upon its side, and we, grateful to her for the favor, occupied them often in our laborious journey, as well upon this mountain as others, upon all the other mountains which laid in our way between Cumberland Valley and Pittsburgh.

"Soon after our arrival at that place [Bedford], portions of our army were reorganized. Here we lost our captain (Fisher), who was promoted to the rank of major. Lieut. Reitzel became our captain, and Ensign Dentzel became lieutenant. After these changes were made we had to hold an election for ensign.

"Shortly after this there was intelligence received that the 'Whiskey Boys' in great numbers were lying in ambush awaiting our approach. Some believed the report, others scouted at the idea. The whole army received an ample supply of ammunition. The rifle companies were ordered to mould a great many bullets, and much preparation was made to repel any attack which the insurgents might feel disposed to make. The orders to march upon a certain day were general. Each man drew a double or triple quantity of provisions, and received orders to cook the same.

"All things being in readiness, we then took up the line of march and pushed for the Allegheny Mountains. I do not recollect anything worthy of notice until we were descending the western base of the Allegheny Mountains in our approach to the 'Glades.' Here we had a hard time of it. It was now November, and the weather was not only quite cold but it was windy and rain was falling. By an oversight we were pushed on a considerable distance in advance of our baggage-wagons, and at length halted at an oil waste barn that we supposed belonged to some one of the insurgents, for had it not been so our army would not have been permitted to burn the fences thereon. We collected rails and built fires, but owing to the rain and the marshy nature of that section of country, the ground around our fires with our continued tramping became quite miry.

"My readers may judge of the land's surface and of the state of the roads through the Glades when I inform them that when some of the wagons arrived in the forenoon at where we halted the night previous they had each from twelve to twenty horses attached to them, and the axle-trees were sweeping or shoving the mud and water before them as they moved onwards. None but regular wagoners could have navigated these mud swamps, and none but regular teamsters or men acquainted with bad roads, or roads in their worst state can conceive the impassable state of the roads through the Glades in the year 1794.

"We next made a halt at Greensburgh, in Westmoreland County, and the next halt that we made was not far from the 'Bullock Plains,' known by many as Braddock's Fields. When we arrived at Braddock's Fields we formed our camp and laid there a few days. Whilst there, the soldiers, many of them, amused themselves by climbing up into the trees for the purpose of cutting out leaden bullets which had been lodged there in 1755 when Gen. Braddock was defeated by the Indians in the campaign of that year. From Braddock's Fields we moved on to Fort Pitt (now Pittsburgh), and encamped within a mile of the town.

"What we laid at Fort Pitt I obtained permission to visit the town every day or two. The old fort (Duquesne) which had been built for the protection of this post, I do not recollect whether it was occupied by any of our troops, but believe it was not. It was so built as to command the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers above and at their junction, as also the Ohio River below. The hills around Pittsburgh, particularly those on the opposite sides of both rivers, were very high. The hills above Pittsburgh and between the two rivers were (some of them) quite high, and were called different names, as Grant's Hill, Scotch Hill, Forbes' Fields, &c.

"Instead of being met, as was threatened, by a formidable foe, we saw nothing in the form of enemies. The disaffected had disbanded and gone quietly to their homes. The insurrectionary spirit was every day growing weaker and weaker, and in proportion as this had manifested itself the insurgent force had diminished. Mustering from seven to ten thousand men only, and they promiscuously and hastily drawn from their homes, young and old, without proper leaders, proper discipline, military stores, etc., they had thought it altogether futile to attempt to resist (or cope with) a well-disciplined army of upwards of fifteen thousand strong. After a number of the more active leaders were captured and handed over to the proper authorities, to be dealt with according to the laws of the land, the expedition was considered at an end. Governor Lee, believing that it was altogether necessary and loudly called for, left Gen. Morgan with a strong detachment in the centre of 'this disaffected country.' The main body of the army was then withdrawn from Pittsburgh and the surrounding country, and were marched on their way homeward. Many who sought discharges obtained them; some of these enlisted in the United States regular service and marched on to join Gen. Wayne, who was then engaged in a war with the Indians on the Miami, in Ohio.

"After climbing and descending alternately for a number of days together the different mountains which laid between Greensburgh and the Cumberland Valley, I at length arrived at Strasburg. Settling out from Strasburg, in Franklin County, it was not long until I reached Harrisburg. A number of days elapsed before Capt. Fisher's (then Dentzel's) company arrived at Harrisburg."

In 1805, Joseph Scott published "A Geographical Description of Pennsylvania; also the counties respectively in the order in which they were established by the Legislature, with an alphabetical list of the townships in each county, and their population in 1805." The account of Dauphin at this period is worth reproducing in this connection, as it contains facts nowhere else found:

"DAUPHIN COUNTY.—A mountainous county, established, by the legislature, the 4th of March, 1785. It was taken from Lancaster county. Dauphin is bounded N. by Mahantango creek, which separates it from Northumberland, N. E. by Berks, S. E. by Lancaster, W. and S. W. by the Susquehanna, which divides it from Mifflin, on the N. W.: by Cumberland on the W.: and York on the S. W. It is 45 miles in length, and 26 in breadth. The principal waters are Swatara, and its numerous branches, Paxtang, Fishing, Stony, Clark's, Powell's, Armstrong's, and Wikinisky creeks, also Manady and Beaver creeks, both important streams, and flowing into the Swatara from the east side of the county, besides Mahantango, which is the N. boundary of the county, and Conewago, which is its S. boundary; all of which flow westerly, and fall into the Susquehanna. The principal mountains, beginning N. are Mahantango, Wikinisky, Peters' Little, Second, and the Blue Mountain; besides the Conewago hills, partly in this, and Lancaster county. The lands south of the Blue mountain, including about one-half of the county, are considerably fertile, and not inferior to the lands generally in Lancaster county. The valleys between the mountains are very narrow, except Luken's valley S. of Mahantango mountain, and a large irregular valley, on each side of Armstrong's creek, between Wikinisky mountain on the N. and Peters' on the S. Abundance of iron ore is found in some of the mountains. Two furnaces and 2 forges have been erected: they manufacture pig, bar-iron, hollow-ware, &c. This county contained in 1805, 72 grist-mills, 77 saw-mills, 6 oil-mills, 4 fulling-mills, 2 hemp-mills, 1 paper-mill, 127 distilleries, a boring and a powder-mill. Dauphin contained, in 1790, 17,965 free inhabitants, and 212 slaves; and in 1800, 22,177 free inhabitants, and 193 slaves. It sends 3 representatives to the general assembly; and, in 1805, gave, on the election of governor, 3,151 votes.

"Harrisburg, a borough, and post town, in which the courts of Justice are held for the county. It is agreeably situated on the E. side of the Susquehanna, in a large fertile valley, between the Conewago hills on the S. and the Blue mountain on the N. It was regularly laid out in 1785, and consists of 4 streets, which extend parallel to the river, as Front, Second, &c., intersected by 6 others at right angles, called Mulberry, Chestnut, Market, Walnut, Locust, and Pine streets, with an alley 20 feet wide, extending both ways, through the middle of each square, parallel to the streets. Market and Second street, are each 90 feet wide; and all the others 52½ feet. At the intersection of Market and Second street is an oblong square, 520 feet long, by 160 broad, in which are two brick market-houses. The town is built upon ground about 60 feet above the level of the river. The rising ground from the river to Front street, several hundred feet in breadth, belongs to the public. It can only be built upon one side. The river, up and down, with Maclay's island in front, presents to the eye, a beautiful view from this point. It serves for piling the large quantities of lumber, which is annually brought in rafts down the river. The trade in lumber contributed largely to the rapid improvement, which continued for 6 years, when a mill-dam was erected in the neighborhood. The place soon became extremely sickly, which obliged the inhabitants to purchase the mill, and clear out the dam, which has restored its ancient salubrity; and it is now improving with its former rapidity. Harrisburg contains about 400 houses; about one-third are of brick. The public buildings are an elegant brick court-house, 91 feet in front, including the offices, and 50 feet deep; with an elegant cupola, a large hall, and town clock. The offices at each end, which contain the records of the county, and the public library, are fire-proof. A stone jail, two stories high, with a spacious yard surrounded by a stone wall, 18 feet in height; a brick and a log meeting house. An elevated piece of ground, containing about 4 acres, which commands a beautiful view of the town and neighborhood, is reserved for the accommodation of the general assembly, in case they fix on that as their permanent seat of government. In several parts of the town are wells of excellent water. The inhabitants may also be supplied from several streams, that issue from the heights, behind the town, and which may be conveyed, at a small expense, through every street, except the lot appropriated for the use of the legislature.

"Harrisburg was erected into a borough the 13th of April, 1791. It is 107 miles N. W. of Philadelphia, and 142¹ from Washington city. Lat. 40° 16' N. lon. 1° 42' W.

"Campbell's-Town, a small town, situated near a branch of the Quittapahilla, on the lower road between Harrisburg and Reading. It is 13 miles E. of Harrisburg, and 96 N. W. of Philadelphia.

"Easteron, a village on the E. side of the Susquehanna, 4 miles above Harrisburg.

"Halifax, a small post-town, on the E. side of the Susquehanna, 18 miles above Harrisburg, and 160 from Washington city.

"Hummel's-Town, a handsome post-town, on the S. side of Swatara river, 6 miles N. of Middletown, and 10 E. by N. of Harrisburg. It contains about 100 houses.

"Jones' Town, a small post-town, situated in the forks of Swatara and Little Swatara, 23 miles N. E. by E. of Harrisburg, and 174 from Washington city. It has a German Calvinist church.

"Lebanon, a handsome borough, and post-town, agreeably situated on the S. side of the Quittapahilla creek. The plan of the town is regular. It contains about 300 houses; a German Lutheran and a German Calvinist church. About a mile and a half E. of the town is the Susquehanna and Schuylkill canal, connecting the waters of the Tulpehocken, a navigable branch of the Schuylkill with the Quittapahilla, a navigable branch of the Swatara.

"Lebanon was incorporated the 28th of March, 1799. It is 25 miles E. by N. of Harrisburg, 82 N. W. by W. of Philadelphia, and 167 from Washington city.

"Middletown, a considerable post town, situated near the N. W. branch of Swatara, about 2 miles above its confluence with the Susquehanna.² The inhabitants carry on a brisk trade, in wheat and flour, by means of the Susquehanna, and its E. and N. W. branches. Contiguous to the town is one of the largest merchant-mills in the United States. Middletown is 15 miles S. E. of Harrisburg, 92 W. by N. of Philadelphia, and 142 from Washington city.

"Myers' Town, a village on the Tulpehocken, a few miles below the canal. It is 32 miles E. by N. of Harrisburg, and 77 from Philadelphia.

"Newman's Town, a small town on the E. side of Mill creek, containing about 40 houses. It is 39 miles E. by N. of Harrisburg.

"Palm's Town, a small post-town, 157 miles from Washington city.

"Stump's Town, a village situated on a branch of Little Swatara, containing about 25 houses, and a German Lutheran and Calvinist church. It is 27 miles E. N. E. of Harrisburg.

"Heidelberg, a handsome town, situated at the head of Hamner Creek, a branch of Cocalico Creek, which joins the Conestoga. It contains about 100 houses, a German, Lutheran, and Calvinist Church. It is 33 miles E. by N. of Harrisburg, and 74 N. W. by W. of Philadelphia."

CHAPTER XX.

The War of 1812—General Officers—Rolls of the Companies of Captains Carothers, Crain, Dietrick, Elder, Fetterhoff, Graham, Henry, Knight, McElhenny, Moorhead, Smith, Todd—Peace—Association of the Soldiers of the War of 1812.

WE shall not here refer in full to the causes which led to the second war with England, that of 1812-14, save to say that the difficulties arose from the deprivations of the latter power in assuming the right to search American vessels, and against which the United States had earnestly protested. On the 18th of June, 1812, Congress declared war against England, voted five millions of dollars for war purposes, and authorized a call for one hundred thousand troops. In the history of Lebanon County we have given in full the address of Governor Snyder, of Pennsylvania, calling upon the volunteer soldiery of the State "to rally around the constituted authorities of the Union." Such was the enthusiasm of the hour that in response to the Governor's call three times as many troops tendered their services as were required. The disappointment of some was so great that money was freely offered to secure a place among those accepted by the authorities.

Dauphin County was not backward. In 1812 and 1813 none of the companies which offered themselves were called, but certain ones were held in readiness for any emergency which might arise.

When the news of the battle of Bladensburg and the capture of Washington City reached the capital, the old-time patriotism was aroused, and responsive to the call of the hour the following companies were mustered into service, and hastened to the front and to the relief of the beleaguered city of Baltimore. Some of the companies never marched farther than York.

Brigade-Inspector.

Christian Spayd, 1814.

¹ The uniform of the Pennsylvania volunteers, as directed by General Orders, was as follows:

"GENERAL OFFICERS.—Their coats to be blue, faced and lined with buff. They may embroider the button-holes on the collar. Their epaulettes, sword mounting, buttons, spurs, buckles, and trimmings to be gold or gilt. Buff vests, breeches, or pantaloons.

"THE GENERAL STAFF AND FIELD OFFICERS.—To wear chapeaux of the following form: The fan not less than six and a half, nor more than nine inches high in the rear, nor less than fifteen, nor more than seventeen inches from point to point, bound round the edge with black binding half an inch wide. The wearing of feathers is dispensed with. The company officers may, with the consent of the field officers of the regiment to which they belong, wear any other uniform hat than the chapeau.

"The coat of the infantry and artillery shall be blue, edged with red. It shall be single-breasted, and have ten buttons, the length to reach to the bend of the knee. The standing collar to rise to the tip of the ear. The cuffs shall be plain, of the same color of the coat, and not less than three nor more than three and a half inches wide; the bottom of the breast and two hip buttons to range. Vest, breeches, and pantaboons white. Blue pantaloons may be worn in the winter. Vest, single-breasted, without pocket-flaps.

"Epaulettes, sword mounting, buttons, spurs, buckles, and trimmings of the Artillery, gold or gilt; those of the Infantry, silver or plated. The sword to be of the sabre form.

"Black stock, of leather or silk; cockade blue and red, of leather or silk. It is recommended that the cockade be always worn on duty, or in service, or when in requisition. Volunteer corps may select their own uniform, but the cockade of the State cannot be dispensed with. It is earnestly recommended to the officers of the militia to use their best exertions in their several commands to induce the non-commissioned officers to wear worsted epaulettes. That the expense may not be an obstacle, it is ordered that their uniform be a gray coat and pantaloons of the same color. In summer, hunting shirts and trowsers may be worn. A round black hat, the rim not to exceed three inches. Any particulars not above prescribed may be supplied by reference to the regulations prescribed for the army of the United States.

"As a due proportion of military pride and uniformity of dress is important to form the character of a soldier, it is expected that every man who may be called upon to defend his home, his country, and his rights, will exert himself promptly to carry these orders into complete effect. It is judged proper to embrace this occasion to recommend to officers and men to procure all the materials for clothing and equipments of American manufacture."

On the 24th of December, 1814, a treaty of peace was signed by the American and British commissioners. The news did not reach America until the 11th of February. On the 14th, The Oracle of Dauphin issued the following announcement:

Oracle Extra.

Tuesday, February 14, 1815.

PEACE WITH ENGLAND.

The Editor of the Oracle hastens to gratify his Customers with the following heart-cheering News:

Office of the New York Gazette,
Saturday Evening 11th Feb. 9 o'clock.

It has pleased the Almighty to restore to us the blessings of PEACE. Participating in the deep and general Joy on this great and interesting occasion, we can only state the fact, that

We have just seen HENRY CARROLL, Esq. Secretary to the American Legation. He informs us, that he has arrived in the British Sloop of War Favorite, with the TREATY OF PEACE, signed by the American and British Commissioners, on the 24th of December; and that he is to depart for Washington in the morning. The vessel is below and will be up to-morrow.

The foregoing highly important and heart-cheering news, was received yesterday by Robert Adams, Esq. of this city, by an express from New-York.—Mr. Adams politely favored us with a copy which was immediately issued from this office in a "Freeman's Journal Extraordinary."

We congratulate our readers on this most auspicious event, and fervently pray that Divine Providence may continue to our country, for ages to come, the inestimable blessing of PEACE with all nations of the earth.

On the 17th of February the treaty was approved by the Senate of the United States.

ASSOCIATION OF THE SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Death and removal rapidly decimating the ranks of the "Old Defenders," the surviving members met on the 4th of July, 1856, and agreed to form themselves into an association. The following Constitution was prepared and signed, and as death removed one of their number the date of the decease was added thereto. In connection with the record of those who served in the war of 1812 in the minute-book kept by the secretary, David Harris, Esq., are certain facts which are worth preserving:

CONSTITUTION.

"For the purpose of preserving old recollections, and of cherishing those kindly feelings of fellowship which should always exist among those who in times past were banded together in defense of their common country, WE, SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812, residing in Dauphin County and vicinity, whose names are hereunto subscribed, do agree to form ourselves into an Association, and to be governed by the following Constitution.

"1. The Association shall be known by the name of 'The Association of Soldiers of the War of 1812, residing in Dauphin County and its vicinity.'

"2. The officers of the Association shall consist of a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Treasurer, a Secretary, and a Marshal.

"3. It shall be the duty of the President, or in his absence either of the Vice-Presidents, to preside at all meetings of the Association, and to call all extra meetings at such times and places as he, or either of them in his absence, shall designate.

"4. The Treasurer shall take charge of and account for all funds which may be raised by the voluntary contributions of the members.

"5. The Secretary shall keep a fair record of all proceedings of the Association, and insert in his minutes the names of all the members who participate in the annual celebration of the Fourth of July, as well as the names of those who may die during their membership, so far as he can ascertain the same.

"6. The Marshal shall form and command the Association at all public parades.

"7. There shall be an annual parade of the Association on the Fourth of July, on which occasion the members will march from the parade-ground to the place previously designated for celebrating the day by a dinner or otherwise, the expense of which shall be borne by the members participating therein in equal proportions.

"8. Any soldier of the war of 1812 who does not subscribe to this Constitution before the first meeting of the Association may be permitted to become a member upon application to the president and secretary.

"9. It shall be competent for the Association to adopt at any time such rules and regulations for its proceedings as a majority of the members present may deem expedient.

"10. All political or religious sectarian questions or conversations are strictly prohibited at all meetings of the Association.

The first chairman was Dr. John Heisely, and the secretary David Harris. From its organization until the last meeting of the association the following memoranda must suffice:

July 4, 1857.—There were present twenty-nine members. Joseph Wallace was chosen president, David Harris secretary, with other officers. The day was celebrated on Forster's Island, the Declaration of Independence read by John C. Kunkel, and an oration delivered by Samuel A. Holman, and after dinner, prepared by Curry Taylor, the usual patriotic toasts were offered. The music—the drum and fife—was furnished by Samuel Holman, Sr., Jacob Dubba, and David J. Krause.

February 22, 1858.—The drum belonging to Jacob Dubba was presented to the association. At this meeting the following address to the Congress of the United States and resolutions were reported by the committee, consisting of Thomas L. Wilson, John Maglaughlin, John Heisely, Charles Carson, and Jacob Fiesler, and unanimously adopted:

"The soldiers of the war of 1812, here assembled, respectfully request the Congress of the United States to pass the bill now before it, with the amendment hereafter suggested, for the relief of those who perilled their lives in the defense of their country during the second contest for its national independence. In making this request, they are not seeking for the introduction of any new system of pensions into the practice of the government. That system was very justly, although tardily, incorporated into the various acts rewarding those venerated men whose sacrifices and services in the field brought the war of the Revolution to a triumphant conclusion. The value of the self-sacrificing services of these defenders, who have passed from the stage of action, is attested by the unexampled progress and prosperity of our common country; and there can be no man now living so insensible to every patriotic feeling of national gratitude as to desire that one line of the record bestowing some evidence of that gratitude should be blotted out. We, in common with the remnant of the band of defenders of the war of 1812, stand now in the same position before the assembled representatives of a free people, whose civil and religious rights we aided in preserving, as our fathers of the Revolution did in past years.

"Nearly forty-six years have elapsed since the nation called upon her sons to enroll themselves in her defense against the arrogant pretensions and unjustifiable encroachments upon her public honor made by a foreign power. In the prime of life, and at a period of manhood when a natural prudence dictates a strict attention to those pursuits to which all men look as the means of sustenance and comfort in their declining years, the soldiers of 1812, abandoning all such selfish considerations, and animated solely by that spirit of patriotism which it is to be hoped may never be extinguished in the bosom of a single citizen of the Republic, promptly and on all occasions obeyed the call thus made upon them. No mercenary motive was mingled with this cheerful performance of a duty which, it is freely admitted, is imposed upon every citizen of a free government when the existence of that government is threatened by foreign aggression or internal violence. A very large proportion of the men who rendered service in the war of 1812 have crossed that narrow stream which divides Time from Eternity. Their surviving comrades, comparatively few in number, are now naturally standing on the brink of that stream. A number of them have already passed the threescore years and ten allotted to man's pilgrimage upon earth; and the time that has elapsed since their services were performed proves that their junior comrades have nearly reached that point of mortal existence.

"It is respectfully submitted to Congress whether these sacrifices and these services, rendered in a period of extreme danger to the perpetuity of our national institutions, are not deserving of some substantial evidence of the gratitude of the country? It was justly extended to the soldiers of the Revolution: why withhold it from those who formed the bulwark of that country's defense in the second war for independence? One nobly secured the liberties of the people, the other preserved them from foreign violation.

"Whilst the government has made large donations from the public treasury for improving the condition of the rising generation, and has now large projects before it for the same purpose, in the shape of grants of public lands, the objection cannot now be raised that the state of the public funds justifies that government in withholding an act of justice from those who, in years gone by, made serious sacrifices in its defense. Any attempt at argument on this point would be an impeachment of the intelligence of the national legislature.

"Such being the views entertained by the meeting, be it, therefore,

Resolved, That Congress are respectfully urged to pass such a bill for the relief of the soldiers of 1812 as will render equal justice to all who served in that war.

Resolved, That in the bill before Congress, if it should become a law, many of our old companions in arms will receive but half pay.

Resolved, That we regard that portion of the bill as unjust and unequal. A large number of our associates left their homes and marched to the points of attack or defense for an indefinite period, subject to such time as the government might require their services, but being discharged prior to the expiration of six months, the bill places them upon half pay.

Resolved, That we trust that the pending bill will pass with such an amendment as to make no distinction in the time of service, but that all who marched to the defense of their country in that war will be allowed full pay.

Resolved, That the advanced age of these soldiers renders it imperative that any measure for their relief should be passed without delay.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting are tendered to those members of the past and present Congress who have exerted themselves to render justice to us and to our comrades in arms.

Resolved, That a copy of these proceedings be forwarded to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth, with the request that they will lay them before their respective bodies.

JOSEPH WALLACE, President.

DAVID HARRIS, Secretary.

July 5, 1868.—The annual celebration was held on Forster's Island, at which there were present twenty-six soldiers of the war of 1812. John Maglaughlin was chosen president, William Allison and George J. Heisely vice-presidents, and other officers. The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the Association be perpetuated by the members present nominating who shall succeed them, and who, upon signing the constitution, shall become members."

Agreeable therewith the following nominations were made:

Charles Carson	nominated	John Carson.
James R. Boyd	"	John R. Boyd.
William Allison	"	John Allison.
Andrew Krause	"	John A. Krause.
Samuel Shoeh	"	John G. Ingram.
William Bostick	"	William H. Bostick.

David Harris	nominated	Phillip S. Harris.
Samuel Holman	"	William S. Holman.
Samuel Himmelright	"	John Himmelright.
George McKnight	"	William Snyder.
George J. Heisely	"	Charles C. Bombaugh.
Jonah Oglesby	"	George A. Oglesby.
Jeremiah Rees	"	Cyrus J. Rees.
David J. Krause	"	John D. Black.
John Maglaughlin	"	John J. Maglaughlin.
George Wyant	"	Samuel Wyant.
Dr. John Heisely	"	Frederick Trace.

The oration was delivered by John H. Berryhill, who also presented the drum belonging to their late member, Jacob Dubbs.

July 4, 1859.—The association, twenty-seven in number, went to Mechanicsburg as the invited guests of the "National Blues," of that place. They were met at the depot by the Blues, a military company from Churchtown, the Washington Engine Company, and a committee of citizens, escorted to their quarters, and subsequently to Coover's Grove, where the day was properly celebrated. William S. Holman, of Harrisburg, read the Declaration of Independence, and addresses were delivered by R. M. Henderson and Thomas M. Biddle, of Carlisle. The association returned to Harrisburg at six p.m., having in the mean time elected George J. Heisely president.

February 22, 1860.—A convention of "old soldiers" was held at Harrisburg. The committee of reception were Messrs. Maglaughlin, Bostick, J. R. Boyd, Prince, Carson, Wilson, and Shannon.

July 4, 1860.—The association celebrated the day on Independence Island, at which there were present twenty-four "old soldiers." George Prince was elected president. R. A. Lamberton delivered the annual address.

February 22, 1861.—The association having accepted the invitation of the committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania to be present at the raising of the national flag on the dome of the capitol, the following "old soldiers" participated:

From Harrisburg and Vicinity.—George Prince, George J. Heisely, Jacob Kuhn, Samuel Himmelright, George Wyant, Jacob Bender, Jacob Fiesler, John Heisely, George Hiney, Joseph Thornton, John Johnson, John Stahl, Darius Ayres, David J. Krause, George McKnight, Samuel Holman, Michael Lentz, John Shannon, William Bostick, Capt. Wigdon, Allen Sturgeon, Jonah Oglesby, James Corbett, Charles DeHass, Andrew Krause, Philip Stimmel, David Harris, George Hammon, Charles Carson, James R. Boyd, Richard Uplegrove, — Hopkins, Isaac Rutter, Daniel Shell, Rev. William R. DeWitt, William Euterline, —36.

From Pittsburg.—William Graham, N. Patterson, F. F. Pratt, James Chambers, John Park, W. H. Hart, E. Sanders, Charles Doyle, Hazen Ray, Jacob Fedder, Aug. F. Heisely, George McCombs, Thomas McFadden, William Stewart, Col. William Deihl, —15.

From Cumberland County.—William Armstrong, Michael Longsdorf, —2.

From other Counties.—George Sweeted, Centre; J. Criswell, Mifflin; Gen. E. Middlecoff, Franklin; David Reese, York; Capt. William P. Brady, Clinton, —5.

Total, 59.

July 4, 1861.—A procession of citizens and "old soldiers" was formed, marched to the capitol, where the Declaration was read by James McCormick, Jr., and an oration delivered by Rev. Charles A. Hay. Dinner was prepared at Brant's Hall. James R. Boyd was chosen president, Rev. William R. DeWitt, D.D., chaplain, and David Harris secretary. The deaths of Messrs. Rees, Wilson, Isett, Taylor, Gallagher, Russel, and Hammon were announced.

July 4, 1862.—The day was celebrated on Independence Island, twenty being present. Charles Carson was chosen president. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, a few of the remaining soldiers of the war of 1812, most cordially approve of the course pursued by his Excellency Andrew G. Curtin, Governor of Pennsylvania, in reference to the present war for the suppression of the wicked rebellion now raging against the government, and especially of his increasing care for the sick and wounded of the soldiers from Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of the association be appointed to prepare a memorial to the President of the United States that he may recommend to Congress the passage of a law granting pensions to the few surviving soldiers and the widows of soldiers of the war of 1812.

Resolved, That some person be appointed to solicit the signatures of the soldiers of the war of 1812 in Dauphin and adjoining counties to offer their services to the President of the United States to defend any particular point, believing that they could fight and not run away, and that they still believe they are able to defend their country in her time of need."

May 16, 1863.—Twenty members of the association attended the reception of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

June 25, 1863.—In consequence of the rebel raid into our State the association resolved to form themselves into a military company for the protection of the city, and offer their services to the Governor. The following officers were elected:

Captain.—Charles Carson.

First Lieutenant.—Andrew Krause.

Second Lieutenant.—George Prince.

First Sergeant.—David Harris.

July 4, 1863.—The association met after parade and elected Samuel Holman president, with the other officers.

July 25, 1863.—The "Old Home Guards" met at the court-house this morning. The company was formed and marched to the capitol, where, after a complimentary address by Governor Curtin, was mustered out of service, and delivered their arms and accoutrements to the State authorities.

January 19, 1864.—By invitation the association participated in the ceremonies attending the inauguration of Governor Curtin, thirteen members being present.

June 6, 1864.—By invitation the association joined in the reception of the Pennsylvania Reserves.

July 4, 1864.—The day was celebrated by a dinner on Independence Island, fifteen members present. The Declaration was read by John B. Cay. Dr. John Heisely was chosen president, and the deaths during the year announced of Messrs. Himmelright, Holman, Shell, Ayres, and Brady.

July 4, 1865.—The association met, seven members only present, and after the election of James R. Boyd, president, with the other officers, adjourned. This was the last general meeting, save to attend the funeral of their comrades, who one by one passed from off the stage of life.

CHAPTER XXI.

The Bucksshot War—The Causes which Led to It—The Proclamation of the Governor—The Call to Arms—Proceedings in the Legislature.

AT the October election, 1838, David R. Porter, of Huntingdon County, the Democratic candidate, was chosen Governor of the State, after a hotly-contested political canvass, over Governor Joseph Ritner, the candidate of the Whigs and Anti-Masons, the majority for Porter being five thousand five hundred and four votes. Immediately upon the result of the election being made known, on the 15th of October, Thomas H. Burrows, Secretary of the Commonwealth and chairman of the Anti-Masonic State Committee, issued a private circular "To the friends of Governor Ritner," calling upon them to demand an investigation of the alleged frauds committed at the polls, and advising them to "treat the election held on the 9th of October as if it had never taken place." This circular had the desired effect, and the defeated Anti-Masonic and Whig candidates for the Legislature in different parts of the State contested the seats of their successful Democratic competitors upon the slightest pretext.

The election took place on the 9th of October, the Legislature met on the 4th of December, and the new Governor was not to be inaugurated until the 15th of January following, it being the first inauguration under the then new Constitution. As trouble was anticipated upon the assembling of the Legislature, a large number of excited people, especially from the districts in which contests were pending, flocked to Harrisburg to witness the result of the struggle. The House of Representatives then consisted of one hundred members. Of these, eight were from Philadelphia, whose seats were contested; and of the remaining members, forty-eight were Democrats and forty-four Whigs and Anti-Masons. The majority of the Senate belonged to the latter party, and consequently promptly organized by the election of Charles B. Penrose as Speaker. The House met with all the contesting delegates present. The clerk read the names of those members which had been handed to him by the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Upon reaching the returns of Philadelphia County it was discovered that the legal returns had been withheld, and fraudulent ones, signed by only six of the seventeen return judges, substituted. This had been anticipated and provided against by the Democrats, who produced and had read the true returns, duly certified by the prothonotary of Philadelphia. The reading of these returns and the seating of the two sets of contesting delegates from Philadelphia County caused the greatest excitement in the House, during which Thaddeus Stevens, then a member of the Legislature from Adams County, moved that that body proceed to the election of a Speaker. The clerk then called the roll of Whig and Anti-Masonic members, and declared Thomas S. Cunningham, of Beaver County, elected Speaker. He was conducted to the Speaker's chair and took his seat. The Democrats paid very little attention to the movements of the opposition, and elected William Hopkins, of Washington County, as Speaker. Two members escorted Mr. Hopkins to the Speaker's platform, where Cunningham had been already seated. It is said Col. Thomas B. McElwee, of Bedford County, one of Hopkins' escorts, ordered Cunningham, in a peremptory manner, to surrender the Speaker's chair to Hopkins, and he obeyed, taking another that stood near by on the platform. The Pennsylvania House of Representatives thus enjoyed a double-headed organization. The members of the House of each party were then sworn in by their respective officers. After qualifying all their members and electing officers, and appointing a committee to wait upon the Governor, and one to wait upon the Senate to inform them that the House was ready to proceed to business, both parties adjourned their respective bodies to meet the next day at ten o'clock. But the Cunningham party did not wait until the time appointed. In the afternoon they met again in the hall, and after their Speaker had called them to order, he requested Mr. Spackman, of Philadelphia, to act as Speaker pro tem. Some Philadelphians being in the lobby of the hall as spectators, and feeling very indignant at the proceedings of the Cunningham body, then went up to the platform and carried pro tem. Speaker Spackman off and set him down in the aisle. This interference from outsiders the Cunningham House had not the power to resent, and it immediately adjourned in confusion. It afterwards met in Matthew Wilson's hotel, now known as the Lochiel House.

During these exciting scenes inside the State-House large crowds of people gathered outside the capitol who were more or less boisterous. Determined and desperate men were there on both sides, threats were made, defiance hurled back and forth, and to the timid the aspect of affairs appeared alarming. On the night of the first day of the session a large public meeting was held in the court-house, over which Thomas Craig Miller, of Adams County, presided, with a number of vice-presidents. The meeting was addressed by Col. J. J. McCahan, E. A. Penniman, of Philadelphia, and George W. Barton, of Lancaster. A committee on resolutions was appointed, who reported the following, which were adopted :

"Resolved, That we recommend to the citizens generally to pursue a prudent and a calm course, awaiting the events of the day with that firmness which freemen in a free country have resolved upon.

"Resolved, That neither those in power, who endeavor to perpetuate their reign through unlawful and fraudulent returns, or citizen-soldiers, who have the same feelings and interest with us, will intimidate people resolved upon having their rights."

A committee was also appointed by the meeting to wait on Thomas H. Burrowes, Secretary of the Commonwealth, and request of him forthwith to furnish the clerks of the Senate and House of Representatives the full legal returns of the election. A Committee of Safety, consisting of fifteen persons, was also appointed. About the time of the assembling of the meeting, Governor Ritner, acting under the advice of his political advisers, Messrs. Stevens, Burrowes, and Penrose, issued the following proclamation :

"In the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, by Joseph Ritner, Governor of the said Commonwealth :

"A PROCLAMATION.

"WHEREAS, A lawless, infuriated, armed mob from the counties of Philadelphia, Lancaster, Adams, and other places have assembled at the seat of government, with the avowed object of disturbing, interrupting, and overawing the Legislature of this Commonwealth, and of preventing its proper organization, and the peaceable and free discharge of its duties ;

"And whereas, The said mob have already, on this day, entered the Senate Chamber, and in an outrageous and violent manner, by clamoring, shouting, and threatening violence and death to some of the members of that body and other officers of the government, and, finally, by rushing within the bar of the Senate Chamber, in defiance of every effort to restrain them, compelled the Senate to suspend business ;

"And whereas, They still remain here in force, encouraged by a person who is an officer of the General Government from Philadelphia, and are setting the law at open defiance, and rendering it unsafe for the Legislative bodies to assemble in the Capitol ;

"THEREFORE, This is to call upon the civil authority to exert themselves to restore order to the utmost of their power, and upon the militia force of the Commonwealth to hold themselves in instant readiness to repair to the seat of government, and upon all good citizens to aid in curbing this lawless mob, and in reinstating the supremacy of the law.

"Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, at Harrisburg, this fourth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight, and of the Commonwealth the sixty-third.

"By the Governor :

"THOMAS H. BURROWES,
"Secretary of the Commonwealth."

The State arsenal was taken possession of by a force in the interest of Governor Ritner, and large quantities of powder, cartridges, and other ammunition taken there. Ritner's proclamation and call for troops and the seizure of the arsenal, filled the citizens of Harrisburg and the people who had assembled here with intense alarm. There had been no actual outbreak, but the situation now began to assume a grave aspect, and large numbers of people flocked into the city, attracted by curiosity, to participate in the impending struggle. As an offset to the Governor's proclamation, the sheriff of Dauphin County deemed it his duty to issue a counter proclamation, in which he stated that at no time had there been any riotous proceedings upon the part of the people, nor any disturbance which rendered necessary his interposition as a civil officer to preserve the peace.

The excitement among the people continued to grow, and a large crowd flocked to the arsenal, determined to prevent the arms and ammunition there stored from being seized by the Governor and his party for the purpose of subduing them. These excited people would probably have captured the arsenal if Maj. George Ford, of Lancaster, and Joseph Henderson, a committee appointed by the State authorities, had not appeared at this juncture before the Committee of Safety and made the following pledge for themselves and for those who sent them :

"That, as men of honor, no ordnance, arms, muskets, or ammunition should, by any order of the Governor, or any other authority whatever, be taken from the arsenal for the purpose of arming any forces that might collect in obedience to the proclamation of the Governor ; and that if any use of them should so be made, they would hold themselves personally responsible for the consequences."

This pledge was satisfactory to the Committee of Safety, who believed that the only object of the people in making a demonstration upon the arsenal was, not to employ the public arms themselves, but, if possible, to prevent their adversaries from making use of them.

At this time a large multitude had collected around the arsenal, having been attracted thither by the intelligence that a quantity of ammunition had been taken there, and that their adversaries had stationed in the building a body of armed men as a rendezvous to subdue the people. The excitement had become tremendous, and for the purpose of acting in good faith on the part of the committee, on motion of L. Kidder, it was

"Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to go and address the people, make known the pledge of Messrs. Ford and Henderson, and urge them quietly to disperse."

Whereupon L. Kidder, Gen. Adam Diller, and Lewis S. Coryell were appointed the said committee, who immediately retired to discharge their duties.

Afterward the above-mentioned committee, by L. Kidder, reported that they had successfully discharged the duties assigned to them, and that they had severally addressed the people, who manifested every disposition to preserve the peace and to act on the defensive, and that the multitude had already quietly dispersed. The report was adopted.

On the 5th of December the Governor made a special requisition on Maj.-Gen. Robert Patterson, commanding the First Division Pennsylvania Militia, for a force of troops sufficient to quell the "insurrection," and march them immediately to the seat of government. Upon receiving orders, and before leaving Philadelphia, Gen. Patterson obtained from the United States Arsenal at Frankford a supply of ammunition, of which the following is an official inventory:

"Twelve thousand four hundred and eighty musket-ball and buckshot cartridges, 600 pistol cartridges, 400 priming tubes, 68 6-pounder strapped shot, fixed; 132 6-pounder cannon-balls, 200 musket-flints, 100 pistol-flints, 20 pounds slow-match.

"GEORGE D. RAMSEY,
"Capt. of Ord.

"FRANKFORD ARSENAL, Dec. 7, 1838."

The regulation ammunition for the infantry then was buckshot cartridges, which consisted of twelve buckshot, each as good as a bullet. The headquarters of the Whig party during these troubles was the Shakespeare Hotel, on Locust Street, where Shakespeare Hall now stands. A report was circulated upon the streets that a number of men at this hotel were engaged in making buckshot cartridges to be used on the "mob." A watch was set to prevent these cartridges from being taken to the arsenal, and this watch intercepted a negro who had been employed to deliver them. He was compelled to surrender the cartridges, which were distributed among those present, and some are yet preserved as mementoes of the "Buckshot war." From these incidents the name "Buckshot war" is derived.

About one hundred of the troops arrived on Saturday night (December 8th) following, and obtained quarters in the court-house; and at four o'clock P.M. the next day the main body, numbering about eight hundred, under the command of Maj.-Gen. Patterson and staff, arrived below town, and halted until communication could be had with the State authorities, which was effected in about an hour, when the troops entered the town, and, after marching through several of the streets, proceeded to the public ground in front of the State Arsenal, where they were divided off into detachments, who severally obtained quarters in the arsenal, the Exchange, where the United States post-office is now erected, the court-house, the Lancasterian school-house on Walnut Street, and the Presbyterian Church, on Second below Chestnut Streets.

Gen. Patterson's command to the seat of government, but on the 5th of December addressed a letter to Capt. E. V. Sumner, U.S.A., then in command of Carlisle Barracks, with a small body of United States dragoons, requesting him to march his troops to Harrisburg for the protection of the State authorities. To this appeal, and one made to him by Charles B. Penrose, Capt. Sumner replied that he did not deem it proper to interfere in the troubles then existing at Harrisburg, which appeared to him to proceed from political differences alone. On Friday, December 7th, Governor Ritner wrote to President Van Buren, laying before him a full account of the affair, and requested the President to take such measures as would protect the State against violence. In this communication the Governor stated that he had the day before made a formal application to Capt. E. V. Sumner for aid, inclosing a copy of his formal request, together with a copy of Sumner's reply. He also inclosed a copy of the proclamation he had issued, and a published statement of the facts connected with the riot in the Senate Chamber, signed by a majority of the Senators, and sworn to by the Speaker and other members of the Senate. He also deemed it proper to state to the President that the most active leaders of the "mob" were J. J. McCahan, of the Philadelphia post-office; Charles F. Muench, a deputy marshal of the Middle District of Pennsylvania; and E. A. Penniman, said to be an officer of the custom-house of Philadelphia. The President replied to this communication through Joel R. Poinsett, Secretary of War, declining to interpose until it appeared certain that convening the Legislature was impracticable.

The Governor's party, finding that Gen. Patterson refused to install them in power, and would obey only such orders as he regarded proper after the orders had been given him by the Governor, made a requisition on Samuel Alexander, major-general of the Eleventh Division of the State militia, a citizen of Carlisle, and an ultra Whig in politics. There were at this time three volunteer companies at Carlisle, mustering in all about ninety men, but only sixty-seven participated in the Buckshot war. The Carlisle infantry was officered as follows: William S. Ramsey, captain; Robert McCartney, first lieutenant; George L. Murray, second lieutenant; and Alexander S. Lyne, orderly sergeant. Carlisle Light Artillery: Capt., E. M. Biddle; First Lieut., William Porter; Second Lieut., Robert A. Noble. Washington Artillery, formerly the Marion Riflemen: Capt., William Crop; First Lieut., Alfred Creigh; Orderly Sergt., Thomas B. Thompson. The battalion was in command of Col. Willis Foulk, an ardent Democrat, who was ignored by Gen. Alexander. The troops received orders on December 15th to march to Harrisburg, and on the following morning embarked for the seat of war. On reaching the western side of the river they disembarked and marched across the wagon-bridge, breaking step to keep from jarring the structure. Gen. Patterson and his command had already taken their departure for Philadelphia when the troops from Carlisle reached Harrisburg. They marched into the city market, and thence to the arsenal, where they were quartered for a week. There was no actual necessity for any troops at any time during the continuance of the dead-lock of the Legislature, for no disturbances occurred or were threatened that the civil authorities could not have quelled. The appearance of armed troops, however, upon the streets, and close to the halls of legislation, only added to the excitement. It was estimated that there were in the borough at this time "between thirty and fifty thousand strangers." When the Carlisle troops arrived the contest was approaching its end, and the soldiers regarded their trip as a frolic, and enjoyed themselves.

On the 17th of December, Messrs. Butler and Sturdevant, of Luzerne County, and Montelius, of Union, three legally Whig members, abandoned their associates and were sworn in as members of the Hopkins House, which gave it a legal quorum over and above the eight Democratic members from Philadelphia, whose right to seats the "Rump House," as it was contemptuously called, disputed. Finally, on Tuesday evening, December 25th, a majority of the Senate, finding that it was impossible to accomplish the designs of the revolutionists, by a vote of seventeen to sixteen, agreed that a committee should be appointed to inform the Hopkins House that the Senate was organized and ready to co-operate with it, which ended the difficulty.

In the Senate the troubles were of a more complicated character. There were contests for seats in this body from several senatorial districts. Upon the floor were members of the House, among them Thaddeus Stevens, of Adams, the leader of the "Stevens Rump House," and the Secretary of the Commonwealth, Thomas H. Burrowes, of Lancaster, who had gone there with the minority returns. In the lobbies at the rear of the Senate chamber was a dense crowd of spectators, composed of excited and enraged citizens, some of whom were there out of curiosity and others with the determination of preventing the seating of Hanna and Wagner, the illegally-returned senators from Philadelphia, either by the form prescribed by law or by intimidation. The spectators were noisy and demonstrative, and the sight of Stevens, Penrose, of Cumberland County, and Burrowes exerting themselves to exclude senators legally entitled to their seats aroused the lookers-on to such an extent that threats of personal violence were indulged in. At last Speaker Penrose, unable to stem the current any longer, abandoned his post, and with Stevens and Burrowes escaped from a window in the rear of the Senate chamber, and under shelter of the night from the State-House inclosure. A paper published at Harrisburg at this time states that "Mr. Penrose, the Federal Speaker of the Senate, in effecting his retreat from the Senate chamber on the first day of the session, jumped out of a window twelve feet high, through three thorn-bushes, and over a seven-foot picket-fence."

In the midst of the excitement and turbulence it was impossible for the Senate to proceed with business, and after the Speaker abandoned his post, that body adjourned to meet the next day. When the hour arrived no quorum was present,—the Whig members being absent by agreement,—and of course the Senate was adjourned until the following day, and so on day after day until December 17th, when, as before stated, Messrs. Butler, Sturdevant, and Montelius left the Cunningham or Ritner branch of the House, and were sworn in as members of the Democratic House under Speaker Hopkins. This gave to the latter body a quorum of fifty-one members whose seats were not disputed, so that no legal obstacle could longer prevent the Senate from recognizing it as the legitimate House. Accordingly, on the 27th of December, in the Senate, Mr. Michler, of Northampton, submitted the following preamble and resolution, which, after various fruitless attempts to amend, were adopted by a vote of seventeen yeas and sixteen nays:

"WHEREAS, Difficulties have arisen in the organization of the House of Representatives, and two bodies have for some time been in existence, each claiming to be the regularly constituted House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, but neither having had a constitutional quorum of members whose seats were regularly returned, and neither has yet been fully recognized by the Senate;

"And whereas, The House organized by the election of Mr. Hopkins as Speaker is now composed of a constitutional quorum of regularly returned members and being thus brought within the pale of the Constitution, the Senate ought no longer to refuse to recognize the said House as the proper constituted House of Representatives of Pennsylvania; therefore,

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to inform said House that the Senate is now organized and ready to proceed to business."

The committee so appointed immediately waited upon the House, and a joint committee was appointed by both branches to inform the Governor that the Legislature was organized.

At the meeting of the House on the morning of the 27th, Mr. Cunningham, with some twenty of the members of his division, were present and duly qualified. Mr. Hopkins, the Speaker, then resigned, but was immediately re-elected. Gen. Patterson's command evacuated the borough on Sunday, the 16th of December, and the battalion from Cumberland County on the 23d following, and thus ended the "Buckshot war," one of the most exciting political events in the history of Pennsylvania.¹

"At the time of the Buckshot war I was in command of the troops that marched from the city to restore order and quell the riot. The difficulty arose from a few of the leaders of the party then in power trying to treat the election as a nullity and to retain possession of the government for three years longer. Governor Ritner, a perfectly honest and well-meaning man, was persuaded to co-operate in the matter. The

CHAPTER XXII.

The War with Mexico—Organization of the Cameron Guards—Their Services in Mexico—Who raised the first American Flag in the Citadel of the City of Mexico—Roll of the Cameron Guards.

It is not necessary in this connection to state the causes which led to the war between Mexico and the United States. Suffice it to narrate that during the friends of David R. Porter, who had received a decided majority of the votes, the Democratic candidate, were determined not to submit, and assembled in Harrisburg in immense numbers. They were led and commanded by about twenty-five officers of the old regular army of the war of 1812. The mob, if I may use the word, surrounded the capitol and entered the Senate Chamber and took possession, the Speaker and some of the senators jumping out of a back window to save themselves from the fury of the rioters. Whereupon an order was sent to me by the Governor of the State to proceed with my division of fifteen hundred men to Harrisburg. I, of course, wished to go prepared for emergencies, and obtained from the United States arsenal at Frankford a full supply of ammunition, for the infantry mainly buckshot cartridges, which consisted of a cartridge with twelve buckshot, each as good as a bullet. I did this certainly not from any desire to kill many of those then in possession of the Senate Chamber, many of whom were personal friends and old associates in the army. Instead, I was prompted by a desire to save my own people, in the event of a conflict at close quarters, by rapidly laying over a few and dispersing the remainder. I had good reason for this, as my command consisted in the main of the flower of Philadelphia, the best young men in it in fact. The exceeding good conduct of the officers and men of that command prevented a conflict between the troops and the mob. If blood had been shed the whole State would have been involved in a civil war. On my arrival at Harrisburg I, with my staff, reported to the Governor at his residence. Such was the panic at that time in Harrisburg that the Governor deemed it expedient to have his door locked and barred, and we could not get in until, after repeated knockings, a second-story front window was opened, raised, and the Governor in person leaned out and asked who was there and what was wanted. I looked up, gave him my name, told him I was there with my division in obedience to his orders, and had taken possession of the arsenal and put my command in a good position. He at once came down, opened the door, and asked us in. After we were seated, I asked for his instructions, and desired to know what he wanted me to do. He said he wished to have his cabinet about him and sent for them. Four or five responded, and he and they asked a variety of questions, among others, if I would obey the order of the Speaker of the Senate. I replied I would not, for that would be sustaining a party who, in my judgment, had acted very improperly and who ought not to be sustained. I said that I had not come for any political purpose, and would not sustain any party in the wrong; that my command was composed of both parties, nearly as many of the one as the other, who would obey any command I gave, because they knew me well enough to know I would not give an improper one. I was also asked if I would obey an order from the Speaker of the House. I said I would not, for two reasons: First, they had organized themselves into two Houses, a Democratic House and a Whig House, and that I then did not know which was the right one. But if there was a regular Speaker I would not obey him, as he had no right to give me orders. I was there in obedience to the commands of the Governor, and would obey no one else, but that I would protect the capitol and the public property and preserve order.

"I was then asked, and pressed for an answer by some of the council or cabinet, if I would obey the orders of the Governor. I replied that I would obey all orders that the Governor had a right to give. One of the questions following was, 'What would you consider a proper order?' I replied, 'I will consider that when the order is given. If ordered to clear the capitol and install in the chair either or both of the Speakers, I would not do it. That must be settled by the senators and representatives themselves. If ordered to fire upon those they chose to call rebels, I would not do it, nor would I permit a single shot to be fired, except in self-defense if assailed by the rebels or in the protection of public property.'

"The result was the entire restoration of order in a few days, both Houses reorganizing and electing their Speakers, and David R. Porter being installed as Governor, as he ought to have been.

"I desire to exonerate Governor Ritner from all that was wrong in last days of the Tyler administration a joint resolution passed Congress, which was approved by the President, providing for the annexation of Texas, although the formal admission of that State dates Dec. 24, 1845. In anticipation of a difficulty with Mexico, which never recognized the independence of Texas, and had repudiated the treaty made by Gen. Santa Anna, the President of that country, claiming the country as her own, Gen. Zachary Taylor, then stationed at Fort Jessup, Louisiana, was ordered to form "an army of occupation." In August, 1845, he advanced with about four thousand men to Corpus Christi, at the mouth of the river Neuces, which was claimed by Mexico to be the western boundary of Texas. This precautionary measure was not intended by the United States government as a hostile demonstration, and strict orders had been given the commander not "to commit any overt act." In January, 1846, Gen. Taylor was directed to move his forces to the Rio Grande, the boundary claimed by Texas, and also by the United States. This measure brought on the conflict, and the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma resulted, in which the American arms were victorious.

President Polk at once announced to Congress, then in session, that Mexico had "invaded our territory and shed the blood of our fellow-citizens on our own soil." That body formally declared that war with Mexico existed, authorized the President to accept fifty thousand volunteers, and appropriated the sum of ten millions of dollars to carry on the war.

In the patriotic enthusiasm which supervened, three hundred thousand men offered their services to the government. To Pennsylvania two regiments were awarded, and upon Governor Shunk's call for troops, really ere the call was issued, the number of companies tendered exceeded ten times the requisition. At the capital there were several well-disciplined volunteer companies, all of whom expressed a willingness to go to Mexico.

At this juncture, Capt. E. C. Williams, of the Dauphin Guards, raised a company whose services were offered the Governor. These were the Cameron Guards. It was an entirely new organization, some of the men raw recruits, when Capt. Williams presented the roll to Governor Shunk. As stated, there were offers of old organized companies, drilled and equipped, to the number of two hundred; some, however, hesitated to enlist for "during the war."

The Governor did not at first accept Capt. Williams' company on account of its not being a regular organization, and absolutely refused the tender of this matter, and it was altogether wrong, because I believed then and believe now that he was forced into it by a set of unscrupulous officials who had surrounded him.

"I heard afterwards that some of the so-called rebels had given as high as five dollars for buckshot cartridges to take home with them to show the savage disposition of the soldiery and the terrible dangers they had gone through."

men. Nothing daunted, through the earnest solicitations of Col. James Ross Snowden, Gen. Purviance, Hon. Jesse Miller, Secretary of the Commonwealth, Col. Henry Petriken, his deputy, and Col. Jacob Seiler, chief clerk in the latter department, and that the capital of the State should be represented in the war, Governor Shunk yielded, finally accepting the company.

The Cameron Guards left Harrisburg on the 26th of December, 1846, with one hundred and seventeen men, fully equipped, for Pittsburgh, via Chambersburg. From the latter point the company marched the entire distance, arriving at Pittsburgh the fourth day, traveling one hundred and fifty miles, encountering in the mountains fifteen inches of snow. The difficulties of the march were amply compensated by the hospitable treatment of the citizens along the entire route.

At Pittsburgh the company were at once mustered into the United States service by Lieut. Field, U.S.A., on the 2d of January, 1847, and shortly after embarked on a steamer for New Orleans, which city was reached in about five days. The troops were encamped on the historic battle-field where the American army under Gen. Jackson defeated the British force on the 8th of January, 1815. Here they were detained several days, when they embarked on sailing vessels destined for the island of Lobos, in the Gulf of Mexico. The vessel on which were the Cameron Guards was forty-one days on the passage, encountering northeast storms one after the other, and it was supposed that all had gone down in one of the severe squalls. While on shipboard the small-pox made its appearance through two men who were taken from the hospital at New Orleans. Under the skill of Dr. James Grimshaw, a sergeant of the Cameron Guards, the disease was modified, and all save Capt. Williams took it in its mild form. In consequence they were not allowed at first to land at Lobos, and hoisted the yellow flag until the entire army and navy had left for the island of Sacrificias. Had it not been, says Capt. Williams, in his "Reminiscences of the Mexican Campaign," for the kindness of Capt. Samuel D. Karns, the sutler, and Capt. George D. Lauman, the command would have greatly suffered, but those gentlemen, at the risk of arrest and punishment, supplied gratuitously the wants of the troops.

On the departure of the army the company was disembarked, and the vessel thoroughly disinfected. As soon, however, as it was deemed perfectly safe the command left for Vera Cruz, reaching there on the evening of the capture and surrender of the fortress, March 29, 1846.

On the 8th of April the American army under Gen. Scott advanced towards the city of Mexico. No resistance was met until the Americans reached the village of Plan del Rio, near the mountain-pass of Cerro Gordo. Here they encountered Santa Anna and his army strongly intrenched. The Mexicans were routed, and the following day the Americans entered Jalapa. Here the Cameron Guards and other Pennsylvania troops halted until the arrival of Gen. Cadwalader, when they moved forward towards Pueblo. Capt. Winder's company of the First Artillery and Capt. Williams' company were ordered in the advance. On reaching the pass at La Hoya, the former occupied the hills on the left, the Cameron Guards on the right, where they remained until the entire army passed that point. They were then directed to make their way to the front and report to Gen. Childs. They had reached their place in line, the troops having halted, when some scouts came riding in at full speed and reported to Gen. Childs, upon which Capt. Williams was ordered one-fourth mile to the front on the main road. He deployed his company as skirmishers to the left, encountered over two hundred Mexicans, fired upon them, killing a number and recapturing a number of horses belonging to the celebrated Texan Ranger, Capt. Walker. Shortly after, firing to the right was heard, when the company, obeying previous orders, advanced in that direction. Reaching the road, Capt. Williams met Lieut. Cochran, of the Voltigeurs, with two mountain howitzers. Moving along together, they soon came upon Capt. Walker and his men, who, dismounted, were in conflict with four or five times their number of Mexicans. The Cameron Guards "went in with a yell," when the Mexicans began to retreat in disorder, all the American companies pursuing them as far as Los Vegas, a village which in the conflict was set on fire. Expecting to be placed under arrest for the latter accident, the officers were considerably relieved when, on the approach of Gen. Childs, he rode up to Capt. Williams and said, "Captain, didn't we show the Mustangs how to fight guerrilla?" From this time that term was applied to the enemy.

The Cameron Guards remained with Winder in the advance until Pueblo was reached, which was on the 15th of May. Here the inhabitants, flocking to see the troops, were grievously disappointed by the plain blue which contrasted so greatly with the gaudy Mexican uniform. They could account for the defeat of their armies only by saying "the American leaders are gray-headed men." The time of enlistment of many of his regiments (one year) expiring, Gen. Scott was compelled to check his victorious career for a while. It was not until the beginning of August that he resumed the march with ten thousand men. The route was a toilsome one over steep ascents to the crest of the Cordilleras, where the beautiful valley of Mexico burst upon their view. Rapidly descending, the army soon reached Ayotla, only fifteen miles from the capital. Thenceforward the route bristled with fortifications.

The command under Winder was ordered to move forward by way of Peñan fortified castle, the Second Pennsylvania in advance, the Cameron Guards in front of it as they came in full view of the stronghold. At that juncture orders came that Col. Duncan had discovered a road which flanked Pefian, which was taken.

Nothing of importance transpired relating to the part taken by the Cameron Guards in the siege of Mexico until the bombardment of the citadel of Chapultepec. At the commencement, Capt. Williams, with two companies, was thrown into a ditch, where they remained a day and a night. On the morning thereafter, having been relieved in the evening, they were again ordered into the ditch to protect Drum's battery, with further instructions that when the Second Pennsylvania, New York, and South Carolina regiments would come down the road to take their place in line to join the storming party on Chapultepec.

As soon as these commands appeared on the road beyond Drum's battery, Capt. Williams and Capt. Hire's companies took their place, the Second Pennsylvania being in the rear. The regiments charged in that position. Between the road and the citadel there were numerous ditches, only one, that nearest the wall of the castle, containing water. The firing was terrific. The New York and South Carolina regiments took to the ditches, while the Second Pennsylvania volunteers crossed the field and ditches by flank and reached the wall in good order. Capt. Fairchild and two or three of his men were all the troops which had reached there when the Second Pennsylvania passed through the breach in the wall made by Drum's battery. It advanced up the hill in the face of a galling fire by right of companies, under command of Maj. Brindle, Col. Geary being wounded. Gen. Pillow's command had just preceded the Second Pennsylvania, and the latter were over the ditch and in the castle almost the same moment.

Capt. Samuel Montgomery and Capt. E. C. Williams raised the first American flag on the citadel of Chapultepec, and kept it flying there until the commander-in-chief, Gen. Scott, rode up the causeway to the citadel. It may be here stated that the Mexican flag was hauled down by a color-sergeant of the Fifth or Sixth United States Infantry, and he was holding the regimental flag at the flagstaff when Capts. Williams and Montgomery reached the top of the castle. The only other flag there besides those mentioned was one held by a captain of the Voltigeur regiment, who was wounded in the head, and that at the first ditch previously referred to. He was Capt. Bernard, of Philadelphia, and the colors a small blue flag.

In this gallant charge the Cameron Guards lost eighteen men in killed and wounded, and Capt. Williams received a slight wound in the shoulder.

A forward movement was soon made, the regulars advancing on Casa Mata causeway, while Drum's battery and Quitman's and Shields' brigades were to protect them from being attacked on the San Antonio causeway by the Mexicans from the Garreta de Belina.

Shields and Quitman were to hold the enemy in check and not to attack the Garreta, as it was deemed almost impregnable. The first arches of the aqueduct being filled with large stones up to the first Mexican battery that was soon captured, and thus the Americans approached the city, capturing arch after arch until the gates of the Mexican capital were reached. At 4 P.M. the Second Pennsylvania were inside the city, with the mounted rifles on foot. The firing ceased as the darkness cast its shadows upon the scene, when the Pennsylvanians filled sand-bags for temporary breastworks for protection. This was a labor of great difficulty, owing to the scarcity of implements necessary and the hardness of the soil. However, on the approach of early dawn, a Mexican officer with a flag of truce appeared, and the city of Mexico—the halls of the Montezumas—surrendered to the gallant Quitman.

The general immediately ordered Lieut.-Col. Geary to take command of the citadel with his regiment. On reaching there Capt. Williams had the honor of being made officer of the day, and raised the flag which had been raised at Chapultepec, and when Gens. Quitman and Shields marched with the remainder of their brigades to the Grand Plaza, the troops saluted and cheered this flag as they passed by. We make mention of these facts, for subsequently in the Senate of the United States a resolution was offered to present a sword to Capt. Brooks, of the regular army, for raising the first American flag in the city of Mexico, but it failed from the fact that a statement was presented by Gen. Quitman, Col. Geary, and others to the effect that the first flag raised in the city was by a company in the Second Pennsylvania Regiment. Why Col. Geary should have said "a company of his regiment" when he saw Capt. Williams raise the colors of the Union is unaccountable,—"honor to whom honor's due."

And thus ended the war with Mexico. Within six months Gen. Scott had stormed the strongest places in the country, won battles against armies double, treble, and even quadruple his own, and marched without a single reverse from Vera Cruz to Mexico. He had lost fewer men, made fewer mistakes, and caused less devastation in proportion to his victories than any invading general of former times. When the Duke of Wellington was asked by a great soldier what he thought of Scott's Mexican campaign, his reply was, "It was a war of miracles!"

The capture of the city of Mexico finished the war. The treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo was concluded Feb. 2, 1848. New Mexico and Upper California were ceded to the United States, and the western boundary of Texas was fixed at the Rio Grande del Norte. In return the United States agreed to pay fifteen millions of dollars, and to assume the debts due American citizens by the Mexican government to the amount of three million five hundred dollars. The war cost the United States about twenty-five thousand men (most of whom had died by disease) and one hundred and sixty million dollars.

The Army of Mexico was soon on their way homeward, especially the volunteers, the regulars occupying the acquired territory or the boundary on the Rio Grande. The Cameron Guards, out of one hundred and seventeen, returned with thirty-two men. From the time the company left the city of New Orleans until they reached Harrisburg it was one continuous ovation. At Harrisburg, which they reached on the — day of July, 1848, the citizens turned out en masse to welcome the gallant survivors of that brave band. The company was met at the foot of Market Street by the citizens and military, who, after escorting it through the principal streets of the borough, amid the ringing of bells and the firing of cannon, repaired to the public grounds in the rear of the State Capitol, where the survivors were publicly welcomed by Edward A. Lesley, Esq., on behalf of the citizens, in an eloquent speech replete with patriotic allusions. The entire multitude then sat down to an elegant and plentiful repast, which had been provided for the occasion free of all expense.

The Cameron Guards left Harrisburg, as stated, with one hundred and seventeen men. At Pittsburgh it was found that the company had more than the maximum number, and the surplus were transferred to other commands. This statement will account for the number on the muster-roll herewith given, which contains the names of ninety-four men, rank and file, not including three privates subsequently connected with the company.

James Elder, late captain United States army; Sergt. William H. P. Derry; Private Henry B. Wood, attorney-at-law, residing in New Jersey.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The War for the Union—War Meeting at Harrisburg—Arbitrary Arrests—First Northern Invasion by the Army of Lee—The Gettysburg Campaign—The Close of the Rebellion—The Assassination of President Lincoln.

It will be impossible within the limits of a local history to present all the details connected with Dauphin County and the city of Harrisburg in the war for the suppression of the Rebellion. We propose, however, to give the main facts of that eventful period. On the causes which led to it we shall not dwell. Suffice it to say that when the news reached the North of the firing upon Fort Sumter there was but one feeling actuating the people of that section,—to put down civil rebellion at all hazards. The North was united, and the history of this locality was not to be misunderstood. Harrisburg being the capital of the State, it became the theatre of much of interest connected with the Rebellion.

On Tuesday afternoon, April 17, 1861, called together by the exigency of events, the people of Harrisburg and the county of Dauphin assembled in mass-meeting at the court-house, William H. Kepner, mayor of the city, presiding. The meeting was exceedingly large and enthusiastic, and neither before or since did such a gathering of the staid, substantial, and honored citizens of this city assemble. Upon the organization of the meeting the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"WHEREAS, War has been commenced by the seceded States of South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Florida, and Texas upon the American Union without just cause, and against the dictates of reason and justice; and,

"WHEREAS, Fort Sumter, erected by the common treasure of all the American people and garrisoned by a noble but feeble band of American soldiery, has been assailed and conquered by an overwhelming force acting under the authority of the self-styled Southern Confederacy; and,

"WHEREAS, Threats have been openly and boldly made by high officials in the seceded States that the capital of the Union would be speedily attacked and subjugated and the Northern States invaded; therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the people of the capital of Pennsylvania, actuated by a sincere love for the institutions bequeathed us by the fathers of the Union, pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor in defense of our national flag and the Constitution of the United States, and that we will resist unitedly and firmly all acts of aggression on the part of those who have wantonly insulted our government, outraged our honor, and assailed our rights as citizens of a great and hitherto happy country.

Resolved, That we hold it to be the duty of all good citizens, no matter what their political predilections may be, to respond promptly to the demand of the President of the United States for men 'to maintain the honor, the integrity, and the existence of our national Union and the perpetuity of our popular government, and to redeem the wrongs already long enough endured,' and that those who by voice or act endeavor to prevent the accomplishment of these ends, and thus give aid and comfort to our enemies, can only be considered as traitors and the abettors of treason.

Resolved, That the message of Governor Curtin recommending that measures be taken to place the militia of Pennsylvania in an efficient condition was eminently appropriate and patriotic; and the prompt and liberal manner in which the Legislature responded to that demand, as well as its more recent act pledging all the resources of the Commonwealth to aid in the defense of the Federal government, is gratifying to all loyal citizens and true patriots.

Resolved, That the martial spirit evinced by our gallant volunteers and citizens generally in rallying at their country's call to arms in its defense is conclusive evidence that they are not degenerate sons of a sire who fought for liberty and honor in the Revolution and in the war of 1812, and is a certain guarantee that the Keystone State will remain true to its principles, as she was in the late war with Mexico, foremost in the maintenance of our national rights."

On motion of Mr. George Bergner, the following were unanimously adopted additional thereto:

Resolved, That we hail with proud satisfaction the unanimous passage of the following resolution by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and that we adopt the same as our motto, viz.:

"Resolved by the Senate, etc., that the faith, credit, and resources of the State in both men and money are hereby pledged to any amount and to every extent to which the Federal government may determine to subdue the Rebellion, to punish treason, to enforce the laws, to protect the lives, liberties, and property of the people, and to maintain inviolate the Constitution and sovereignty of the people."

A. B. Hamilton offered the following resolution, which was also unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That Gen. E. C. Williams, Capt. Isaac S. Waterbury, and Maj. Leander N. Ott be requested to serve as a committee to act for this meeting as collectors and custodians of such money as may come to their hands as a fund for the support and sustenance of those citizens of Dauphin County who may volunteer under call of the President during the time of their preparatory services at home, and as far as possible to comfort and sustain the families of those who shall be thus absent, engaged in the service of their country."

In accordance with the resolution, A. B. Hamilton and George Bergner subscribed fifty dollars each for this object; and a paper pledging the subscribers as loyal citizens of Pennsylvania and the United States was then signed by all who could approach the table, after which the meeting adjourned with three hearty cheers for the Union. After the meeting Col. Worrell, being called upon, addressed the meeting in earnest advocacy of the Union cause.

In the mean time (April 13th) a meeting of young men of Harrisburg had been held at Exchange Hall for the purpose of organizing a military company, and thirty-five persons signed the roll. The company thus formed took the name of State Capital Guards, and elected Isaac S. Waterbury captain, through whom their services were tendered to Governor Curtin. The Cameron Guards tendered their services about the same time, and the Constitutional Guards were organized soon after in the north committee room of the capitol. At this juncture of affairs Governor Curtin requested Capt. E. C. Williams to take possession of the grounds of the Harrisburg Park Association, adjoining the northern boundary of the city, and to make all necessary arrangements for all troops arriving in the city. Col. Seneca G. Simmons being present and an officer of the United States army, Capt. Williams was immediately mustered into service, being the first volunteer in the war. The order was to organize the fair grounds as a camp and name it Camp Union, but upon taking possession of it named it Camp Curtin, by which it was known not only by all the State volunteers, but by the citizen-soldiers of different sections of the Union. At once Harrisburg and Camp Curtin became important points for the concentration of the Federal troops and the centre of military operations for a period of four years.

In the following pages are preserved the record of companies and regiments, with such historic data as we have been able to ascertain. Much more ought to be given, and will probably be looked for by the interested reader, yet the details and itinerary of each command, valuable though they may be, are too voluminous.

The first scene at Harrisburg in the terrible tragedy enacted in the struggle for the Union was the call to arms and the establishment of the military camp, the march of the soldiers to the sanguinary fields of the hitherto fair South; the next when, after the second battle of Manassas, the rebel army threatened Pennsylvania; the third when the second invasion of the enemy brought the conflict to our very doors; and the fourth when the sound of victory went through the land, followed by the martyrdom of the lion-hearted Lincoln. These are chapters in the history of this locality which it is necessary to dwell upon, leaving to other pens at a future time the various incidents of the march to the front, the return home, and other facts connected with that military epoch.

We come now to a portion of war history that is not very creditable to the government authorities at the time. We had thought at the first to avoid alluding to the matter at all; but the occasion demands some reference, and as a faithful chronicler the subject cannot be dismissed. During the Rebellion the War Department made every other power subservient to it, and many arrests and trials took place which were not only arbitrary and unconstitutional, but at the time wholly unnecessary and without justification, palliation, or excuse, and our reference is a case in point.

The Constitution of the United States has provided in the third article that "the trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and such trial shall be held in the State where such crime shall have been committed." And then in the amendments to the Constitution, Article v., that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia when in actual service, in time of war or public danger," "nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." And in Article vi., "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury in the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law."

Our State Legislature, in order to prevent any person from giving aid or assistance to the Rebellion, passed an act on the 18th of April, 1861, by which, in one lengthy section they provide for every possible case in which any person could give aid or comfort to the "enemies of this State or the United States of America," and also where any one should persuade any person or persons from entering the service of this State or the United States, "or induce any person to abandon the service," and enacting that "every person so offending, and being legally convicted thereof, shall be guilty of a high misdemeanor, and shall be sentenced to undergo solitary imprisonment in the penitentiary at hard labor not exceeding ten years, or be fined in a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars, or both, at the discretion of the court."

In a strong legal paper prepared by the late Herman Alricks, since we are referring to military arrests, are some facts which are well worth reproducing in this connection. He writes,—

"The people of this whole land ought to understand that the Constitution of the United States is the foundation of our government, and the Supreme Court of the United States is the judicial expounder of the Constitution. If the Supreme Court of the United States can be so manipulated by Congress as to become a political partisan institution instead of a judicial one, and the Constitution can be construed in such a way as to contravene the whole genius of our government in establishing a military despotism over the whole land because of a partial rebellion, that there is an end to all appeal to civil government. The people must either submit to this military despotism in the hands of the War Department or offer open resistance and stand upon their rights guaranteed to them by our form of government. It would be useless to talk of amending the Constitution or making a new one, for if a Constitution framed by Washington and the men of the Revolution can be treated with contempt and disregarded no reasonable man would suppose that a Constitution made by the men of the present day or by the men of any future generation would be regarded. . . . It was never intended by the framers of the Constitution to confer upon the military the powers that have been claimed and exercised by them in the late war. . . . It is very evident that the construction put upon the Constitution by the War Department in the late war on the subject of military arrests and military trials leaves to the citizen living in a State not in rebellion no personal security whatever, and treats him as if he lived in a land where the government is a sheer military despotism. Whether the people of the United States are willing to allow the construction of the War Department to stand as a precedent in case of another insane rebellion or not is a question of such vast import as ought to command the attention of the people of this whole land from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

On the 6th of August, 1862, the editors and proprietors of the Harrisburg Patriot and Union were arrested by Provost-Marshal Lafayette C. Baker, of Washington, D. C., on complaint of Capt. R. I. Dodge, then acting as mustering officer and provost-marshal at Harrisburg. The arrests were made under authority of Gen. Halleck, general-in-chief of the army, whose order was executed by Brig.-Gen. James Wadsworth, acting Military Governor of the District of Columbia, assisted by Provost-Marshal Baker, Capt. Dodge, and Chief of Police Campbell. Gen. Wadsworth at once conveyed the prisoners to Washington, where they were incarcerated in the Old Capitol Prison. The offense of which they were accused was the publication of a handbill discouraging enlistments. This handbill was as follows:

"ATTENTION, COLORED MEN!

"The great Gen. James Lane has arrived in this city to-day, and will address the colored citizens of Harrisburg in front of the Market-House at four o'clock this (Monday) afternoon. Men and brethren, come along.

"The government having granted him permission to raise two COLORED REGIMENTS, he will be prepared to swear in all able-bodied colored men who may offer, and he confidently expects to raise one company in this place.

"Arms, equipment, uniforms, pay, rations, and bounty the same as received by white soldiers, and no distinction will be made. Come one, come all.

"J. H. TOMPKINS,

"Recruiting Officer for Lane's Colored Regiments."

The effect of this publication, it was claimed by the friends of the administration, was to excite the prejudices of those persons who, though in favor of crushing the Rebellion, were opposed to the employment of colored troops, and to embarrass the recruiting officers in the work of procuring enlistments. The Patriot and Union declared on the morning after the arrest that the placard was "got up by frolicsome printer boys without the knowledge of the editors or proprietors of that newspaper," but the Telegraph asserted that evidence had been procured showing that the handbill had been printed in the Patriot and Union establishment, and that two of the boys in the office had confessed "that they had 'set up' the bill calling on colored recruits, and that Uriah J. Jones had concocted and written the same." Acting upon this evidence, Provost-Marshal Dodge telegraphed to the War Department for instructions, and the result was the arrest as stated. After an examination before Judge-Advocate Turner, in the presence of Gen. Wadsworth, the prisoners were released on the 22d of August, 1862, having first made the statement under oath that they were unconscious of having committed any offense against the Constitution, the government, or the laws of the land. They left Washington on the following morning, Aug. 23, 1862, and arrived at Harrisburg on the evening of the same day. They were greeted by a large assemblage of citizens, who escorted them to their homes.

The order for the arrests, it may be here stated, directed also that the provost-marshal should "seize the presses, type, fixtures, and all the property found in the Patriot and Union printing establishment, and turn the same over to the United States quartermaster at Harrisburg, Pa., who shall forward the same to Washington City." This portion of the order, however, was never executed, and the publication of the Patriot and Union was continued without interruption.

On the 5th of September, 1862, after the second battle of Manassas, the Confederate army under Gen. Lee crossed the Potomac River near the mouth of the Monocacy, and advanced northward through Maryland, threatening Harrisburg among other important points. An invasion of Pennsylvania seemed imminent and the excitement was widespread. While the main body of the army remained at Frederick, Md., the Confederate cavalry entered Pennsylvania, their number being greatly exaggerated by rumor. In the excited state of the people it was believed that the whole army was advancing towards the State capital with the purpose of moving thence upon Philadelphia. In anticipation of the advance of the enemy northward, Governor Curtin on the 4th of September issued a proclamation recommending "the immediate formation throughout the commonwealth of militia companies and regiments in conformity with the militia act of 1858." In accordance with this recommendation, the citizens of Harrisburg met in their respective wards on the afternoon of the 5th, for the purpose of organizing companies to aid in repelling the advance of the enemy. The places of business were generally closed to enable the employes to participate in the movement. After an informal organization the companies from the different wards marched to the capitol grounds, where they assembled around the steps of the rear of the main building and were addressed by Governor Curtin, ex-Governor Porter, "Parson" Brownlow, and Rev. Francis Moore, of the Locust Street Methodist Episcopal Church. News of the invasion of Maryland reached Harrisburg on the night of Saturday, September 6th. The dispatch stated that the rebels had entered Frederick with forty thousand men, and were marching on Hagerstown. "This of course," said the Telegraph of September 8th, "aroused our citizens considerably, believing that the enemy might march undisturbed down through the Cumberland Valley." A dispatch contradicting this report was received on Sunday morning, and the people of Harrisburg were kept in a state of suspense throughout that day and part of Monday. On Monday afternoon, however, the Telegraph announced that it had direct information from several gentlemen who had left Frederick on the previous day that a portion of the Confederate army had reached that place. Further reports by telegraph added that all the government stores had been removed from Hagerstown, Md., to Chambersburg, and that a large number of Union men had left the former town for places of safety in Pennsylvania.

On the 9th of September the appointment was announced of A. K. McClure, Assistant Adjutant-General of the United States, with the rank of major, and detailed for special duty in Pennsylvania, where he was assigned the service of arranging such defenses in the State as the emergency demanded. In the mean time, in view of the threatened danger from the rebel advance, recruiting proceeded rapidly. The ranks of the Reserve Brigade and Home Guard soon filled up, and new companies were raised in nearly every ward in the city. On the 10th, Governor Curtin issued General Order No. 35, in which he stated that, "In view of the danger of invasion now threatening our State by the enemies of the government, it is deemed necessary to call upon all the able-bodied men of Pennsylvania to organize immediately for the defense of the State and be ready for marching orders upon one hour's notice, to proceed to such point of rendezvous as the Governor may direct." Organizations called into the field under this order were to be held for service for such time only as the pressing exigency for State defense continued. On the following day (September 11th) the Telegraph said, "We have the gratifying intelligence that the people are turning out en masse to defend the free soil of Pennsylvania. Dispatches from all the adjoining counties were received last night at headquarters, offering any number of troops for the defense of the capital of the State. . . . Gen. Wool takes command to-day. A number of competent engineers are here to complete the fortifications." In the same issue it was noted that "the train from Chambersburg brought a considerable number of passengers from beyond that town," from whom it was learned that "the excitement and panic in that direction are intense and fearful." On the same train came "a large number of contrabands." On the afternoon of the same day Governor Curtin issued the following proclamation :

"HEADQUARTERS PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA,
"HARRISBURG, Sept. 11, 1862.

"General Order No. 36.

"By authority of the President of the United States, fifty thousand of the freemen of Pennsylvania are hereby called for immediate service, to repel the now imminent danger from invasion by the enemies of the country.

"Officers in command of company organizations, as authorized by General Order No. 35, dated September 10th, will at once report by telegraph the place of their headquarters, so that orders may be issued from these headquarters for transportation to Harrisburg for such companies as may be ordered to move.

"Further calls will be made for additional forces as the exigencies of the service may require. The formation of companies under the General Order of September 10th should continue to be made as rapidly as possible, until all the able-bodied, loyal men of Pennsylvania are enrolled and ready for service.

"By order of

"A. G. CURTIN,
"Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

"A. L. RUSSELL, Adjutant-General, Pennsylvania."

On the 12th Mayor Kepner issued the following proclamation :

"TO THE CITIZENS AND OTHERS NOW WITHIN THE CITY OF HARRISBURG.

"In pursuance of the command of his Excellency A. G. Curtin, Governor of this commonwealth, dated this day, to me directed, I forbid every able-bodied man from leaving the bounds of this city upon the pain of being arrested and held in charge by the military authorities under the instructions given to them for that purpose by the Governor.

"All railroad companies and their agents located at this city are also hereby notified and positively forbidden to carry off or furnish transportation for the purpose of carrying off any and all able-bodied men from this city.

"The Provost Guard detailed for duty in this city are hereby directed to take care that the above proclamation be enforced.

"WM. H. KEPNER,
"Mayor.

"MAYOR'S OFFICE, HARRISBURG, September 12, 1862."

At this date it was noted in the local press that the most active measures were being put in force to assemble a large army to resist invasion, "and if possible save the capital and State from devastation and outrage from the enemies of the government. By this evening fifty thousand men will be in motion. All the rolling stock of the different railroads in the State will be taken possession of for the purpose of conveying troops to this city. An engineer corps is at work on the other side of the river, surveying the ground in all directions, and arranging the plans for the erection of works."

Meanwhile the troops raised for the defense of the Cumberland Valley and Harrisburg were concentrating at Chambersburg under the command of

Gen. John F. Reynolds, of the regular army. Col. Charles Campbell was appointed with the rank of brigadier to the command of a force from the camps at Harrisburg, which was ordered to proceed up the Cumberland Valley. Capt. G. D. Hand was acting adjutant-general, Capt. Elbridge McConkey acting assistant adjutant-general, Maj. R. H. McCoy, chief quartermaster. On the 13th it was announced that over two hundred companies had reported themselves to the Governor for service, and that Governor Curtin had left Harrisburg on the previous day to visit the forces in the field at Chambersburg and other points in the valley. A strong reserve was maintained at Camp Curtin, ready to march at a moment's notice. From Saturday evening, September 13th, in the night which followed and all day Sunday, as fast as one train of cars on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Lebanon Valley, and the Northern Central could discharge its living cargo another steamed into the city filled with volunteers. Tents were erected on the capitol grounds for the accommodation of the fresh levies, and the medical department had a large hospital tent immediately in front of the arsenal, where the recruits were supplied with medicine and medical advice. Gen. Reynolds arrived in the city on Saturday evening, September 13th, and immediately organized his staff and issued his first order as follows:

"HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF PENNSYLVANIA,
"HARRISBURG, Sept. 13, 1862.

"General Order No. 1.

"I. In pursuance of orders from War Department and His Excellency, Governor Curtin, the undersigned assumes command of the forces assembled for the defense of Pennsylvania.

II. The following-named officers are announced as the staff of the general commanding, and will be obeyed and respected accordingly:

"Capt. C. Kingsbury, Jr., assistant adjutant-general.

"Edward McPherson, volunteer aide-de-camp.

"Lieut. C. Sanborn, aide-de-camp.

"Lieut. William Biddie, aide-de-camp.

"JOHN F. REYNOLDS,

"Brigadier-General Volunteers.

"Official.

"C. KINGSBURY, JR.,

"Assistant Adjutant-General."

Troops continued to pour into Harrisburg until, on the 16th, it was announced that there were volunteers in the city from every county in the State. "Camp Curtin," it was stated, "is full to overflowing; the capitol grounds are now literally covered with tents; the Senate and House of Representatives are used as barracks; every room in the capitol, not occupied for other purposes, is now filled with troops; the vacant rooms in the court-house are appropriated to the soldiers; wherever there is a spot that will accommodate a weary soldier it is seized upon and used according to 'the articles of war.' The hotels are like bee-hives, swarming; private houses are open, their accommodations at once cordial and free to all who choose to enter; and thus the State capital is one vast camp, where the soldier is at liberty to bivouac on the street-corner, in our most elegant mansions, the capitol grounds or the capitol buildings."

The First Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, under command of Col. Henry McCormick, composed mainly of residents of Harrisburg, left the city on September 13th for Chambersburg, and went into camp at a point about two miles above Chambersburg, on the Franklin Railroad, the military station being known as Camp McClure.

The Dauphin County cavalry, commanded by Capt. E. Byers, with Lieuts. Boyd, Peters, and Murray, and Charles C. Rawn, as orderly, accompanied the regiment. Capt. James Gowan also recruited a company of cavalry in Dauphin County at this time.

On the 17th it was announced that the troops were in possession of every public building in Harrisburg. Churches, schools, hose- and engine-houses, and the capitol buildings, the depots, and in fact every accessible edifice which could be used for the shelter and accommodation of troops was secured by the authorities or voluntarily given up for the purpose. As fast as transportation could be secured the troops were moved off in the direction of the Cumberland Valley. During this critical period the duties of provost guard in Harrisburg were performed by the First City Zouaves, Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Capt. F. Asbury Awl. The Harrisburg Greys (Ex-empts), Valentine Hammel, Jr., captain, also remained in the city, prepared to render their services should occasion arise.

On the 18th of September the following card from the Secretary of the Commonwealth was telegraphed to the principal postmasters in the State, with the request that they would place it in some conspicuous position:

"HARRISBURG, Sept. 18, 1862.

"The number of wounded in Gen. McClellan's recent battles is very large; most of them will probably be brought into Pennsylvania. The surgeon-general appeals to the ladies for the immediate contribution of such articles as are needed for their comfort. All packages should have contents marked outside, and be addressed to Gen. Hale, Harrisburg.

"ELI SLIFER,

"Secretary of Commonwealth."

Sept. 19, 1862, the appointment was announced of Brig.-Gen. Harry Longnecker to the command of a brigade composed of a portion of the regiments called out by Governor Curtin for the defense of the border, with Col. John J. Patterson as aid. The battle of Antietam, which was fought on the 16th and 17th of September, resulted in the retreat of Gen. Lee's army across the Potomac, and dissipated all apprehensions of a Confederate advance upon Harrisburg at that time. During the morning of the 16th, Capt. George Brooks, of Harrisburg, of the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania Regiment, was shot and fatally wounded.

After the result at Antietam orders were telegraphed to the various military headquarters throughout the State that the militia companies then organizing in the different localities need not march to Harrisburg, as the exigency which made it necessary to call out the militia had been surmounted, and all danger of invasion passed. On the 20th of September, Gen. Reynolds issued an order that the Pennsylvania militia should return to their own border, and on the 21st orders were issued to break up the military camps on the capitol grounds at Harrisburg. In a short time the men were on the march to the depot, and trains soon began to depart with the troops on their way home. On the 23d, Mayor Kepner was instructed by the Governor to remove the restrictions on travel, and persons were once more free to leave the city without passes.

On the 24th the Harrisburg companies, forming part of the First Regiment, which had arrived the evening before, marched through the principal streets of the city, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Robert A. Lamberton. On the same day, Governor Curtin issued a proclamation, thanking the troops, congratulating them on the character of the service they had rendered, and discharging them from further duty. In this proclamation the Governor said,—

"Although not required by the terms of the call to pass the borders of the State, our brave men, unused to the rigors of war and untrained in military movements, not only entered Maryland, but held Hagerstown against an advancing foe, pressed forward to the Potomac, and resisted the threatened movement of the rebels upon Williamsport, until troops in the United States service arrived and relieved them. Their timely and heroic action has saved the State from the tread of an invading enemy, whose necessities made even military strategy subordinate to plunder."

The brigade which held the position at Williamsport, referred to by Governor Curtin, was commanded by Col. Henry McCormick, acting brigadier, and the First Regiment (from Harrisburg) was stationed on the extreme left in the position of honor and danger.

After defeating the Northern army under Gen. Hooker at Chancellorsville, May 2 and 3, 1863, Gen. Lee determined if possible to transfer the scene of hostilities north of the Potomac. His design having become apparent at the North, Governor Curtin, on the 12th of June, issued a proclamation announcing that the President had erected two new departments, one in Eastern Pennsylvania, commanded by Maj.-Gen. D. N. Couch, and the other in Western Pennsylvania, commanded by Maj.-Gen. Brooks, and urging upon the people of Pennsylvania the importance of immediately raising a sufficient force for the defense of the State. An engineer force began on the 15th the erection of earthworks and other defenses on the Cumberland side of the Susquehanna River, immediately opposite Harrisburg. To these the name of Fort Washington was given. Other works were erected at other points, both along the river and on the different railroads. On the same day Lieut.-Col. Romford, appointed assistant provost-general for the State of Pennsylvania, arrived at Harrisburg and entered upon the discharge of his duties, and Governor Curtin issued a proclamation calling for fifty thousand troops to repel the threatened invasion of Pennsylvania. A meeting of citizens of Harrisburg was also held at the court-house on the 15th to devise measures for the protection of the city. On motion, Gen. Simon Cameron was called to the chair. After explaining the object of the meeting and urging immediate action, Gen. Cameron suggested that committees be appointed to wait upon the Governor and Gen. Couch and ask them to be present and explain what they desired the citizens to do and how to assist in the defense of the city. In accordance with this suggestion, George Bergner, Dr. A. Patterson, and Judge McKinney were appointed the committee to wait upon the Governor; William Bostick, Sheriff Boas, and Hon. John C. Kunkel to wait on Gen. Couch. A committee to wait on Maj. Romford was also appointed, consisting of Col. T. C. MacDowell, D. J. Unger, and Weidman Forster. On motion it was resolved that one hundred scouts be sent up the valley, and Col. F. K. Boas offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we individually and collectively pledge the last dollar and last man in defense of the State in its present emergency."

Mr. Bergner, from the committee, introduced the Governor, who explained the state of affairs and urged all to prepare at once for self-defense. Gen. Couch was then introduced, and spoke in a similar strain. Col. Kunkel offered a roll which he had prepared, the signers of which pledged themselves to defend the city to the uttermost. The roll was at once signed by a large number, headed by Gen. Simon Cameron. Mr. Snyder had prepared a roll calling upon the young men to organize, which was also numerously signed.

A call was immediately issued, as follows:

"All loyal men who desire to enter the service with the undersigned will form companies at once and report at my residence, No. 43 North Second Street, in this city, immediately."

"Remember there is no time to lose, as the rebels are now at Hagerstown, and are pushing for this city. Let there be no delay, unless you wish to see the capital of the State and your own firesides laid in waste by the invading rebels."

The following notices were issued at the same time:

"All persons who wish to join a cavalry company are requested to meet at the livery office of Frank Murray, in Fourth Street near Walnut, this evening at seven o'clock, for the purpose of organizing a company."

"The members of the Fourth Ward company of Pennsylvania militia are earnestly urged to meet promptly this evening at seven o'clock at the Hope Engine house to prepare to defend our homes."

"K. CURZON, Captain."

"June 15, 1863."

"Attention, firemen and citizens of the Fifth and Sixth Wards! A meeting will be held at the Good Will Engine house this evening at seven and a half o'clock to form a military company to fight in defense of Harrisburg."

"W. K. VERBEKE,

"President of the Good Will Fire Company."

"Attention, Russell Guards! A meeting of Company F, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, will be held at the Hope Engine house this evening at seven o'clock."

"The members of Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, are requested to meet at the captain's office this evening at six o'clock to take action on the call of the Governor for men to repel the threatened invasion of our State."

"First City Troop of Harrisburg will meet at the public-house of Quartermaster Peters, Farmers' Hotel, this (Wednesday) evening at seven o'clock. J. B. Boyd, first lieutenant."

"The young men of the city of Harrisburg desirous of connecting themselves with an organization for State defense will meet at Wagner's Hotel, corner of Second and Chestnut Streets, this evening at seven o'clock."

"First City Zouaves.—The old members of this corps, and all others desirous of joining the same, are requested to repair to the headquarters at once. . . . Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment, is also cordially invited to join with us in a common cause."

"Capt. Val. B. Hummel, late a member of the Anderson Body-Guard, which did such effectual service under Gen. Rosecrans during the year and a half they were with him, is raising a volunteer cavalry company in this city. . . . A meeting will be held at the Exchange this evening at seven o'clock for the purpose of organizing the company."

"This morning a call was made by Capt. E. C. Wilson, assistant quartermaster, U.S.A., at this post, for one thousand men to assist in throwing up the intrenchments on the opposite side of the river. The engineers have already selected the ground for these defenses, and the men as soon as employed are sent over the river and put to work."

"Gen. Cameron publicly declared to-day that he was willing to pledge his entire fortune in defraying the expenses of a regiment to assist in repelling this invasion. He made this offer in good faith to pay the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment at least as long as it would be required for the present emergency."

After this offer had been received from Gen. Cameron the following notice was issued:

"ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

"HARRISBURG, PA.,

"June 15, 1863.

"To the men composing the late One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and all others who desire to aid in the defense of the State in the present emergency:

"The enemy are in force at Hagerstown, Md., and are hourly expected to invade the State and destroy by fire and sword our property and lives. Every volunteer and citizen capable of bearing arms is required to come to the rescue forthwith and defend our State from the intruder. Arrangements have been made for the payment of the troops coming forward under this call, and they will only be required to serve during the present emergency. All are requested to bring with them all the accoutrements they may have, and be uniformed as far as possible. The men will elect the company officers, and the captains will elect the field officers.

"WILLIAM W. JENNINGS,

"Late Colonel One Hundred and Twenty-seventh P. V."

Harrisburg was the general rendezvous of the troops, who, on arriving at the capital, were organized into regiments by Gen. Couch, as part of the army corps of the Susquehanna, which was composed of men who had volunteered "for the protection and defense of public and private property" in the department, to serve during the pleasure of the President or the continuance of the war. On the 18th it was announced that Gen. Milroy had arrived in Harrisburg, and was in consultation with Gen. Couch.

On the same day the following notice appeared:

"Rally, old men! All persons over forty years of age not attached to other military organizations, and willing to defend their homes and families on the Cumberland side of the Susquehanna, will meet in front of the Morgan House, corner of Second and Pine Streets, at ten o'clock A.M. on the 19th inst., to organize and appoint their officers and be ready to march at a moment's warning.

"A SOLDIER OF 1812."

The Twenty-sixth Regiment of militia, largely composed of Harrisburg companies, was organized as rapidly as possible. In addition to the troops from various portions of Pennsylvania which now began to pour into Harrisburg, regiments from other States, notably New Jersey and New York, also came to take part in resisting the threatened invasion. At 9 A.M. on the 18th, Capt. Dodge, chief mustering officer, commenced mustering the troops at Harrisburg. Those at Camp Curtin were sworn in there, and all others were sworn in on Capitol Hill.

On June 19th, at a meeting of citizens too old to be enrolled in the militia, but anxious to do something in defense of their homes and families, at which E. M. Pollock presided, it was

"Resolved, That in order to carry out our intention we proceed to elect officers."

Maj. John Maglauchlin was elected captain, James Porter first lieutenant, and George Krichbaum second lieutenant.

It was also resolved that we hold ourselves in readiness to march at the call of the captain,—at one moment's warning.

On the same day the following proclamation was issued:

"MAYOR'S OFFICE,

"HARRISBURG, June 18, 1863.

"For the preservation of peace and good order in the city it is enjoined on all keepers of retail liquor establishments and lager beer shops to close their bars precisely at 5 P.M. until 5 A.M. the next morning. The mayor expects from every good citizen a faithful and cordial observance of this order.

A. L. ROCKFORD,

"Mayor."

The commandant of Camp Curtin was Gen. James A. Beaver. The Twenty-third New Jersey Regiment was encamped at Camp Yahoo, in Harris' Park. The police of Harrisburg were reinforced by a company of police from Philadelphia, who were armed with muskets in addition to their other weapons. On June 22d a local journal said, "Troops are continually pouring into this city; Camp Curtin, Capitol Hill, the court-house, and every available avenue is filled with men." On Tuesday, June 16th, the Harrisburg Telegraph did not issue a paper, owing to the enlistment of its compositors. It resumed publication, however, on the following day. On June 22d, Capt. James S. Brisbin was appointed chief of cavalry in the Department of the Susquehanna, and established his headquarters at Camp Curtin. A company known as the Curtin Horse Guard, Capt. Jones, was recruited at Harrisburg, and on June 22d was reported as being nearly full. The Twenty-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia completed its organization on the 23d, and was the first in the field from Camp Curtin under the Governor's call.

On the 24th of June news came that the rebels were in the vicinity of Shippensburg, forty-five miles from Harrisburg, and that Gen. Ewell with six brigades was about to march on the latter city. "The farmers in Cumberland Valley," it was added, "are bringing their horses, cattle, and everything movable across the river, and, unless matters change within the next twelve hours, we presume our non-fighting population will again be on the move." On the 25th Capt. Brisbin established a cavalry camp east of the city on the residence of A. Boyd Hamilton, which was known at first as Camp Couch, and afterwards as Camp Brisbin.

The 25th was a day of excitement in Harrisburg, owing to the ingress and egress of people from the Cumberland side of the river, who passed through the city and hurried to a place of safety with their valuables. Their numbers were increased by accessions of refugees from Harrisburg. In view of the popular agitation, Mayor Rounsfort issued another proclamation closing the taverns and shops of retail dealers, and forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquor until further notice. On the same day the veterans of 1812 called upon Governor Curtin, and tendered their services through Capt. Goslin. The Governor accepted their offer with grateful acknowledgments.

On June 26th, Gen. W. F. Smith was in command of the volunteers on the west bank of the Susquehanna, and it was stated that the fortifications were progressing favorably. On the same day Capt. Edward De Rue announced that he had been requested by a number of persons residing in Harrisburg to raise a company to be the flank company of any regiment to which the members might wish to attach themselves, and stated that he would proceed to do so at once.

On the 26th of June, Governor Curtin issued a proclamation announcing that the enemy was advancing in force into Pennsylvania, with a strong column, twenty-three miles from Harrisburg, and other columns moving by Fulton and Adams Counties, and calling for sixty thousand men to come forward promptly to defend the State. On June 27th it was stated that two companies of colored troops had been organized in Harrisburg within a week. One was commanded by Capt. Henry Bradley, the other by Capt. Thomas M. Chester. On the same day, W. K. Verbeke, president of the Good-Will Fire Company, issued a call for persons to attend at the Good-Will Engine House to form a volunteer company. Similar meetings were held at the court-house, where the Sharpshooters organized, and at the Second Ward House, Second and Market Streets. . . . On the 29th it was stated that the fortifications at Harrisburg had been finished, and guns were mounted and ready for action. The Citizen Fire-Engine and Hose Company was impressed into active service for the purpose of supplying the troops at the fortifications with water. Colored men were impressed to do the pumping, under the management of George C. Fager, chief engineer. It was also announced that at the tap of the court-house bell, all men able to bear arms within the city were required to assemble at the bridge and attach themselves to some one of the companies organized for the protection of the city.

June 29. Capt. J. Wesley Aul issued a notice calling upon all persons who had received rifles from the Friendship Engine-house to meet there for the purpose of organizing.

June 30. It was reported that skirmishing had been going on during the afternoon of the 29th, about five miles from Harrisburg. Several shots were fired by the rebels at Union pickets, without doing any damage. It was added that Dr. Malone had established a hospital in the brick tavern at the end of the bridge, west side; and that Sullivan S. Child had been appointed mustering officer at Harrisburg.

Capt. Forster's company, sworn into service on the 29th, was placed on duty near Harrisburg, and on the 30th Capt. F. Asbury Aul's company was placed on duty in the city. The Hope Volunteer Fire Company, Capt. H. H. Hummel, was organized on the same day.

July 1. It was stated that the Southern troops had retreated from the vicinity of Harrisburg and were concentrating between Carlisle and Gettysburg. The Confederate movement culminated in the battle of Gettysburg, fought July 1, 2, and 3, 1863, after which Harrisburg was no longer menaced with danger from Gen. Lee's army.

The war virtually closed with the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox Court-House. The soldiers who had fought on many a field, surviving the bitter conflict of the fratricidal strife, were looking for the peace which was dawning. In the midst of the joy which was filling the breasts of a great and thankful people, in an unlooked-for hour, the hand of the infamous assassin felled the Chief Executive of the Union; Abraham Lincoln fell a martyr to the sworn performance of a high duty. In every portion of the North preparations were being made to celebrate the glorious victory and the return of peace. At Harrisburg these were extensive, and the entire county was invited to participate with the State authority. Alas! how frequently it is realized that "man proposes, but God disposes." The cheer, the joy, and the bright smile gave place very suddenly to the sorrow and gloom and grief at the loss of the noble Lincoln.

On the receipt of the news of the assassination of President Lincoln (April 14, 1865) notice was issued by A. L. Russell, chief marshal of the demonstration to be had at Harrisburg on the 15th, in honor of the victories of the Union army, that the intended procession would be postponed, and all citizens were requested to lower to half-mast the flags provided for the celebration and to drape them in mourning. Citizens were also requested to suspend all business during the day. A public meeting was held at the court-house, which was called to order by Gen. A. L. Russell, who nominated Hon. John J. Pearson as president. Hon. David Fleming and Henry McCormick were chosen vice-presidents, and George W. Crabb and George Bergner, secretaries. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. J. Walker Jackson, and addresses deploring the calamity were delivered by Mayor Roumfort, Herman Alricks, John C. Kunkel, and Rev. J. W. Jackson. At noon all the bells in the city were tolled, and in the afternoon a religious meeting was held in Locust Street Methodist Episcopal Church. A national salute was fired at noon.

On Wednesday, April 19th, the day of the obsequies, the business places in Harrisburg were closed from eleven to three o'clock, and guns were fired from Capitol Hill every half hour from sunrise to sunset. The churches were opened from twelve to one o'clock for religious exercises, and the bells were tolled from eleven to twelve and from one to two. The post-office was closed from eleven to three o'clock. A. L. Roumfort, mayor of Harrisburg, issued a proclamation, requesting that the bells be tolled and that places of business be closed. On the morning of Wednesday, Governor Curtin received a dispatch from Brig.-Gen. Townsend, acting adjutant-general, stating that the President's remains would leave Washington on Friday morning at eight o'clock, to go by way of Baltimore and Harrisburg, and thence to Philadelphia and New York, and inviting the Governor to meet the remains with his staff at such point as he might designate. Governor Curtin at once replied that he proposed to take charge of the remains at the line of the State, and to accompany them until they left the State. He further proposed that they should be placed in the State capitol while in Harrisburg, and added that all military and civic honors would be shown them. In accordance with this arrangement, Gen. Cadwallader, commanding the department of Pennsylvania, was instructed to meet the remains upon their entry within his jurisdiction and accompany them to Harrisburg. Governor Curtin then issued the following proclamation:

"The remains of the murdered patriot, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, will arrive in the State on Friday evening next on their way to the place of interment in Illinois. They will come from Baltimore to Harrisburg; thence will on Saturday be conveyed to Philadelphia, and thence on Monday morning to New York. I shall meet them at the State line and take charge of them while in the Commonwealth. I recommend that all business be suspended during their passage through the State, and that the local authorities and people everywhere join the State authorities heartily in paying honor to the memory of the martyred statesman who has fallen a victim to the savage treason of assassins.

"By the Governor.

"ELI SLIVER,

"Secretary of the Commonwealth.

"A. G. CURTIN."

At one o'clock on Friday Governor Curtin and staff left Harrisburg for the State border, there to receive the remains of the murdered President. He was accompanied by Maj.-Gen. George Cadwallader and Maj.-Gen. Heintzelman. The funeral train reached the west bank of the Susquehanna at half-past eight o'clock on Friday evening, and its arrival was announced by the report of a cannon from Capitol Hill. This was immediately followed by the ringing of bells, and the people began to flock to the court-house. An immense assembly soon collected at this point, and at the railroad depot there was another great gathering of people. As soon as the train stopped the pallbearers, in connection with the officers charged with the duty of guarding the body from Washington to Springfield, took charge of the coffin and deposited it on the hearse which had been specially constructed for the occasion. It was drawn by four white horses led by sergeants acting as grooms. The body was escorted to the capitol by a procession headed by Col. Henry McCormick, chief marshal, with Cols. H. C. Alleman, E. C. Williams, and W. W. Jennings, and Maj. David McCormick as aids. Then came the clergy of Harrisburg, and then the hearse. Following the latter came a number of leading citizens, including Mayor Roumfort, and then the Governor and his staff. These were followed by the State authorities, including members of the Legislature, judges of the courts, members of the bar, Common Council of Harrisburg, Committee of Arrangements, delegations from abroad, soldiers of the war of 1812, honorably discharged soldiers of the civil war, fire department, civic associations, secret societies, etc. There was also a military escort of artillery and cavalry, and the Sixteenth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, under the command of Col. T. S. Mather. The route of the procession was illuminated by means of chemical lights. When the head of the line reached the west gate of the capitol, the cavalry and artillery in the escort drew up in open order, while the infantry and civic portion of the column proceeded to the capitol in charge of the hearse. There was an immense gathering of people on Capitol Hill, and notwithstanding the storm which prevailed during the night, the greater portion of the mass of human beings that awaited the arrival of the remains was composed of ladies. At half past nine o'clock the corpse was placed on the catafalque erected for its reception immediately in front of the clerk's desk in the House of Representatives. As soon as the lid of the coffin had been removed, the doors for ingress and the windows for egress were opened, and the throng began to pour in.

All the trains which arrived at Harrisburg Friday night and Saturday morning were crowded with people from every portion of the State anxious to obtain a view of the remains. On Saturday morning a wreath and cross of flowers from the ladies of Harrisburg were placed on the coffin. At ten o'clock the doors of the rotunda were closed, and soon after the funeral procession moved to the depot, where the remains were placed on the train for Philadelphia.

And thus the war closed, save when the troops returned to their homes, but the gladness of the welcoming was saddened by the memories of a martyred President.

CHAPTER XXIV.

The War for the Union (continued)—Officers from Dauphin County in other Pennsylvania Regiments—Dauphin County in the Three Months' Service—The First, Second, Tenth, Fifteenth, and Twenty-fifth Regiments.

[FOR the rolls herewith given and the major portion of the history connected therewith, we are indebted to the "History of the Pennsylvania Volunteers, 1861-65," published by the State. As these rolls and accounts contain so many inaccuracies we were in hopes of having the record of each organization carefully revised. In several instances this has been done by the survivors of the organization. In others where it has been just as important we have failed to secure the desired aid. The present was an opportunity to have all errors corrected, but those familiar therewith who have neglected to take any interest in this matter are alone responsible for perpetuating blunders of fact or opinion.]

FIRST REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

On the 20th of April the First Pennsylvania Regiment of volunteer militia for the service of the national government was organized. Previous to the receipt of marching orders the men were furnished with muskets and muslin haversacks, and provided with hard-tack and bacon and about twelve round of ball-cartridge, which, for want of cartridge-boxes, were carried in their pockets. On the night of the 20th of April the regiment, under the command of Brig.-Gen. George C. Wynkoop, left Harrisburg and proceeded to a point near Cockeysville, on the Northern Central Railroad. This movement was made with the design of protecting the bridges on this road and eventually of opening communication with Washington, which, since the passage of the Massachusetts troops, had been broken. But, upon the representation of leading public men of Maryland that a military occupation and a resort to violent measures at this time might precipitate a collision and lead to the secession of the State, the authorities ordered a retrograde movement, and on the following Monday evening the command retired to Camp Scott, near the town of York. The regiment remained there, drilling in anticipation of immediate service in the field, until the 14th of May, when it was detailed to guard the Northern Central Railroad from the Pennsylvania line to Druid Park, near Baltimore.

On the 25th of May, having been relieved by the Twelfth Pennsylvania Regiment, Col. Campbell, it was ordered to move to Catonsville, Maryland, to guard the roads leading to Frederick City and Harper's Ferry. Tents and camp equipage were here supplied, which had hitherto been wanting, all efforts to obtain them having proved fruitless. On the 29th it was ordered to advance about five miles to the village of Fraunklinton, where it was posted, and remained guarding the same avenues as before.

On the 3d of June the regiment was ordered to Chambersburg to join the forces there concentrating. It was placed in camp, remaining several days, engaged in drill and field discipline. It was assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division of Gen. Patterson's army. The brigade was soon after ordered to Hagerstown, and advanced to and encamped near the village of Funkstown. While at this place upon one occasion the whole encampment was aroused at midnight in anticipation of the enemy and hurriedly marched to Williamsport, on the Potomac, which was reached at day-break. Remaining until the following evening, no enemy being discovered, it was ordered to return to camp, reaching it about midnight. The regiment was here supplied with new uniforms. Previous to this time the men had suffered for the want of adequate clothing, though the destitution had been greatly relieved by a partial supply sent by kind friends at Easton. A few days later, on the 21st of June, orders were received from the commanding general to prepare three days' cooked rations, and, taking transportation and ten days' rations, to move with all possible dispatch and occupy Frederick, Maryland. In obedience to this order the regiment struck tents the same evening, and on the 22d arrived at Frederick and reported to Governor Hicks. The regiment remained here about two weeks, constantly improving in field exercises and military discipline. It was next ordered to Martinsburg, Virginia. Returning through Boonsborough, it encamped the same night on Kennedy's farm, and on the following day arrived at Williamsport. Forging the Potomac, it advanced to Falling Waters. Next day, resuming the march, it arrived at Martinsburg, meeting the whole division commanded by Gen. Patterson.

When, on the 14th of July, the division under Gen. Patterson moved towards Bunker Hill, the First Regiment, in obedience to this order, remained at Martinsburg, which had now become the base of supply. Two days later the regiment was ordered to Charlestown, where it again met and rejoined the division. Here, on the 17th of July, an order was received to have the men prepared with ten days' cooked rations in haversacks, and be ready to move without baggage. On this day it had been arranged that a battle should be fought by the army under McDowell, but was delayed till four days later.

The plan of campaign, as disclosed by the orders of the general-in-chief, contemplated that the army under Patterson should keep in front of the enemy and prevent his advance into Maryland or Pennsylvania, and make demonstrations in favor of the army operating under McDowell in front of Washington, with a conditional purpose of striking the enemy a damaging blow, if a favorable opportunity offered. These demonstrations were continued till it was supposed that the contemplated battle before Washington had been fought. Gen. Scott had given notice to Gen. Patterson that the movement would commence on the 16th, again that it had been commenced on the 17th, and finally that the decisive battle would be fought on the 18th. On the 21st, the regiment was ordered to move to Harper's Ferry, from whence, on the 23d, it marched to Sandy Hook, and on the same evening took the train for Harrisburg, where the men were honorably discharged and mustered out.

During the time that the regiment was in service, it did not participate in any battles; but its timely arrival in the field accomplished much good by checking any rash movement on the part of rebels in arms along our borders. The duties it was called upon to perform were faithfully done, and its good conduct, under all circumstances, was appreciated and acknowledged by its superior officers.

SECOND REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Second Regiment was formed from companies hastily recruited in obedience to the call for volunteers. Recruiting commenced on the 15th of April, 1861, and as fast as companies and squads were accepted they reported at Camp Curtin, Harrisburg. On the 21st of April, the officers of ten companies were ordered to hold an election at York for field officers of a regiment, at which the following were chosen and duly commissioned: Frederick S. Stumbaugh, of Chambersburg, colonel; Thomas Welsh, of Columbia, lieutenant-colonel; James Given, from captain of Company G, of West Chester, major. Isaac S. Waterbury was appointed adjutant.

On the evening of Saturday, April 20th, the same day on which the regiment was organized, it left Harrisburg by rail for Washington, but halted at Cockeysville, Md., at daylight on Sunday morning, the railroad bridge at that point having been destroyed. After remaining in bivouac and under arms for about forty-eight hours, the regiment was ordered back to York, Pa., where it remained in camp of instruction till the first day of June, when the command was ordered to Chambersburg. In the army organization which here ensued, the Second Regiment was assigned to the Second Brigade of the Second Division.

Gen. Robert Patterson had been assigned by Governor Curtin on the 16th of April to the command of Pennsylvania troops, and a few days thereafter, while busily engaged in organizing and sending them forward to points threatened, he was, by the order of Lieut.-Gen. Scott, placed in command of the "Department of Washington," embracing the States of Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, with headquarters at Philadelphia. The quota of Pennsylvania troops, with an excess of some ten regiments, having been organized and placed in the field, and all the lines of communication leading to Washington having been opened and securely guarded, Gen. Patterson proceeded, on the 2d of June, to Chambersburg, where a camp had been formed under Maj.-Gen. William H. Keim, and assumed command, with the design of operating against the rebel army in the Shenandoah Valley, which was now threatening the contiguous parts of Maryland and Pennsylvania.

As early as the 20th of June, Gen. Scott had requested Gen. Patterson to propose to him a plan of operations. On the 21st the latter submitted one, which in substance proposed to occupy Maryland Heights with a brigade, and to fortify and arm with heavy artillery; to make Frederick, Md., the base of supply, with a guard which should act as a sustaining force to the command on Maryland Heights; to send all other available force, horse, foot, and artillery, across the Potomac to unite with Col. Stone at Leesburg, to operate from that point as circumstances should demand. This plan was not approved by Gen. Scott, and on the 25th of June he gave peremptory orders to Gen. Patterson to keep in front of the enemy while he remained in force between Winchester and the Potomac. The army having been ordered to move to Williamsport, the Second Regiment broke camp at Chambersburg on the 16th of June, and moving by rail to Hagerstown, went into camp at the village of Funkstown. Remaining here until the 23d, it was ordered forward towards the Potomac and encamped about four miles from the river. Crossing the Potomac with Gen. Patterson's combined army on the 2d of July, it advanced to Martinsburg. The enemy, having been pushed back from point to point, had finally established himself in an intrenched camp at Winchester. On the 15th of July, leaving two regiments at Martinsburg to guard his supplies, Gen. Patterson marched with the remainder of his force to Bunker Hill, driving Johnston's advanced guard from the place, and on the 16th of July, the day on which, according to the telegrams of Gen. Scott, Beauregard was to be attacked at Manassas, he made a demonstration in force, driving the enemy's pickets in upon his main line. On the 17th of June, Gen. Patterson transferred his whole command by a rapid movement to Charlestown. The term of service of the Second Regiment having already expired, it moved on the 23d of July from Charlestown, and marching to Harper's Ferry, was taken by rail to Harrisburg, where, on the 26th of July, it was mustered out of service.

FIFTEENTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The "Verbeke Rifles," constituting Company E of the Fifteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, was emphatically a Harrisburg company, and although the third in the field from the city of Harrisburg, is claimed as the first volunteer organization of the county raised under the President's first call for troops to put down the Rebellion. The Cameron Guards and the State Guards were both militia organizations, and were recruited to their maximum number after the President's first proclamation for volunteers was issued, and they formed constituent parts of the First and Second Regiments of Pennsylvania Volunteers. The patriotism of William F. Verbeke, Esq., of Harrisburg, was fired by the treasonable attack of the rebels on Fort Sumter, and promptly, on the call of the government for volunteers to defend her honor, Mr. Verbeke was foremost in the good work at Harrisburg in recruiting men for the military service. He was untiring in his energy, and lavish in the expenditure of his money in raising troops for the government. He quartered and fed the recruits at his own expense, and threw wide open the doors of his private residence to soldiers generally, generously feeding the hungry, lodging the weary, and nursing the sick. The compliment of naming the company in his honor and giving him the nomination of its officers was most worthily bestowed upon a true patriot, a generous-hearted and most exemplary citizen. The nominations of John Nevin for captain, H. C. Alleman for first lieutenant, and Henry Lyne for second lieutenant were unanimously ratified by the company. The company marched into Camp Curtin on the 30th of April, and were at once mustered into the United States service by Capt. Seneca G. Simmons, U.S.A., for the period of three months. The Verbeke Rifles completed the organization of the regiment, and its colonel, R. A. Oakford, was placed in command of Camp Curtin, and Lieut. Alleman was made post-adjutant. The regiment was ordered to Lancaster, Pa., and on the 13th of May encamped on the Fair Grounds near that city, where they were formed into a brigade under Gen. James S. Negley. Here they drilled until the 3d of June, when they embarked for Chambersburg, going into camp about six miles beyond that town, where they remained one week, and then marched to Hagerstown, Md., where they formed a part of the Second Division, under Maj.-Gen. Keim. Near this town they encamped a few days, and then marched to the Potomac River, near Williamsport, on the famous battle-field of Antietam, where some of them afterwards fell in that sanguinary struggle. On the 1st of July they forded the Potomac River at Williamsport, under Maj.-Gen. Patterson, and constituted a portion of the reserve at the battle of Falling Waters. They occupied Martinsburg on the following day, and celebrated the 4th of July by placing the "stars and stripes" on the Berkeley County court-house. Halting here a few days while armed recognizances were constantly thrown out to feel the whereabouts and strength of the enemy, a march to Bunker Hill was made, driving in the pickets of the rebel general, Joseph E. Johnston, who was found strongly fortified at Winchester, as was demonstrated by our recognizance. After a rest here of two days the army made a demonstration against Johnston's lines and then directed to the left, occupying Charlestown on the 12th of July, where they remained until the following Sunday, when they marched homewards and occupied Harper's Ferry, hearing distinctly the booming of the distant cannon at the battle of Bull Run. Remaining one week at Harper's Ferry, the regiment marched back to Hagerstown, and were mustered out of service at Carlisle on the following 8th of August, when they were paid off in gold. This company lost three of its men by death. Lieut. Lyne resigned just previous to the regiment crossing the Potomac, and was succeeded by First Sergt. Samuel Wolfe, who was afterwards, as a lieutenant of the Forty-sixth Regiment, killed at the head of his command. During the last two months of their term of service Capt. Nevin and Lieut. Alleman acted upon a general court-martial in conjunction with their company duties, Lieut. Alleman being the judge-advocate of the court. With scarcely an exception all of the survivors of this company returned to the field, and while many of them became distinguished for gallantry, nearly all of them were promoted during the war to the grades of line-officers, while some of them reached the highest rank of field-officers. The Verbeke Rifles did their full duty, and its members acquitted themselves in subsequent organizations with credit to themselves, and honor to the good old county of Dauphin.

FORTY-SIXTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

Company D of this regiment, recruited in Dauphin County, had been in the three months' service. The other companies, as a general thing, served in the first campaign, and were recruited in Allegheny, Berks, Potter, Luzerne, and Northumberland Counties.

Rendezvousing at Camp Curtin, the regiment was organized on the 1st of September, 1861, by the selection of the following field-officers: Joseph F. Knipe, of Dauphin County, who had served during the three months' campaign on the staff of Gen. E. C. Williams, colonel; James L. Selfridge, from captain of Company

C, lieutenant-colonel; Arnold C. Lewis, major. On the 22d of September, Maj. Lewis, while attempting to enforce discipline in a case of insubordination, was shot and instantly killed by a private of Company I, who afterwards suffered the extreme penalty of the law for his offense. Capt. J. A. Matthews, of Company A, was promoted to major.

Upon the resignation of Gen. Patterson from the command of the Army of the Shenandoah, Gen. Banks was appointed to succeed him. His forces were posted on the Upper Potomac, along the Maryland shore, in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry. Soon after its organization, the Forty-sixth was ordered to Gen. Banks' command. Upon its arrival it was assigned to the First Brigade (under Gen. S. W. Crawford) of the Second Division of his corps. Little of interest, save the usual drill and camp duty and an occasional skirmish with the enemy, occurred until the opening of the spring campaign. In January, 1862, Stonewall Jackson, with a well-appointed force of all arms, having for some time occupied the Shenandoah Valley, had pushed out as far west as Hancock, where he was met and driven back by Gen. Lander. Lander pursued but soon after died, and was succeeded in command by Gen. Shields, who continued the pursuit to Winchester. On the 24th of February, Gen. Banks commenced crossing the Potomac at Harper's Ferry, and occupied, in turn, Leesburg, Charlestown, Martinsburg, and Winchester. Shields continued the pursuit of Jackson as far as New Market, whence he returned to Winchester. In the mean time Banks had dispatched one division of his corps to Centerville, and had himself departed for Washington. Considering himself superior to the Union force remaining, Jackson turned upon Shields, and a severe engagement ensued in the neighborhood of Kernstown. Three companies of the Forty-sixth, under command of Maj. Matthews, arrived upon the field in time to participate in the conflict. Jackson was beaten, and Banks returning gave chase, which was continued to Woodstock. In this pursuit the Forty-sixth was conspicuous, Col. Knipe manifesting his usual enterprise and daring.

Jackson, who was fearful of a union of the forces of Fremont and Banks, marched hastily across the mountain to McDowell, where he encountered the head of Fremont's column, under Milroy and Schenck, and defeated it, inflicting considerable loss. Returning with his characteristic celerity of movement, and masking his progress by his cavalry, he fell suddenly upon Col. Kenley, occupying an outpost at Front Royal, and, routing his small force, was making for the rear of Banks' army, before the latter was aware of an enemy's presence in his front. Turning his trains towards the Potomac, and dispersing the rebel cavalry which appeared upon his rear, Banks commenced his retreat down the valley. Finding that he must make a stand to save his trains, he drew up his little army in line of battle in front of Winchester, and with an entire force of only about seven thousand men prepared to meet Jackson with not less than twenty thousand. For five hours the unequal contest was maintained, the Forty-sixth holding its ground with unexampled coolness and bravery. At length, finding himself outflanked and likely to be overpowered, he withdrew and made his way to the Potomac, where his trains had already arrived and crossed in safety. In this engagement the Forty-sixth lost four killed, ten wounded, and three taken prisoners. The loss to the Union force in withdrawing through the streets of the town was considerable, the inhabitants, both male and female, vying with each other in pouring forth insults and deadly missiles. "My retreating column," says Gen. Banks in his official report, "suffered serious loss in the streets of Winchester, males and females vied with each other in increasing the number of their victims by firing from the houses, throwing hand grenades, hot water, and missiles of every description."

Upon the appointment of Gen. Pope to the command of the Army of Northern Virginia, the scattered forces upon the Rappahannock, the Shenandoah, and in West Virginia were concentrated and were organized in three corps, commanded respectively by Sigel (formerly Fremont), Banks, and McDowell. On the 7th of August, 1862, Crawford's brigade was stationed at Culpeper Court-House. The divisions of Ewell and Stonewall Jackson, followed by that of Hill, a force twenty-five thousand strong, had already arrived upon the Rapidan, and had commenced crossing, driving back the Union cavalry. On the 8th, Crawford was ordered forward towards Cedar Mountain, and on the following morning Banks followed with the rest of his corps, consisting of seven thousand men. Jackson, having pushed forward his columns with celerity, had taken position with his artillery on Cedar Mountain, at an elevation of two hundred feet above the surrounding plain, but had kept his infantry masked under the shadow of the forests. Four guns had been advanced farther to the front and lower down the side of the mountain. These, with the more elevated ones, opened on Crawford's brigade, and at five o'clock p.m. the Union forces in two columns advanced to the attack. The position of the Forty-sixth fell opposite the enemy's advanced pieces, and upon these the men charged with desperate valor. But before reaching them they had to pass an open field, now covered with shocks of full-ripened wheat. Here they were fearfully exposed, and the enemy's artillery, and his strong lines of infantry concealed from view, poured in a merciless storm of shot and shell. Three times was it led to the charge across that fatal plain, when Col. Knipe fell severely wounded, and the regiment was withdrawn. "Had victory been possible," says Greeley, "they would have won it. . . . The best blood of the Union was poured out like water. . . . Gen. Crawford's brigade came out of the fight a mere skeleton." The loss in the Forty-sixth was thirty killed, thirty-four severely wounded, and six prisoners. Among the killed were Lieuts. Robert Wilson, S. H. Jones, and William P. Caldwell, and among the wounded Col. Knipe, Maj. Matthews, Capts. Lukenbaugh, Brooks, and Foulke, and Lieuts. Selheimer, Caldwell, Craig, and Matthews.

In the battle of Antietam, Banks' corps was commanded by Gen. Mansfield, and early in the day of September 17th was led to the support of Hooker, battling with a heavy force of the enemy on the extreme right of the line, across Antietam Creek. Crawford's brigade was sent to the support of Ricketts' division, and advanced carrying the woods to the right of and beyond the cornfield, and maintained its position until relieved by Sedgwick's division of Sumner's corps. The Forty-sixth was here led by Col. Knipe, although suffering from the effects of his wounds. The loss was six killed and three severely wounded. Capt. George A. Brooks, of Harrisburg, was among the killed. Soon after the battle of Antietam, Col. Knipe was promoted to brigadier-general, and assigned to the command of the brigade; Lieut.-Col. Selfridge was promoted to colonel; Maj. Matthews to colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Pennsylvania, which was assigned to Knipe's brigade; Capt. William L. Foulke, of Company B, to lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. Cyrus Strouse, of Company K, to major. Upon the inauguration of the Fredericksburg campaign, the Forty-sixth, which was then lying with the division at Fairfax, was ordered forward, but did not arrive upon the field in time to be engaged.

In the reorganization of the army, which was made upon the accession of Gen. Joseph Hooker to the chief command, Knipe's brigade became the Second of the First Division of the Twelfth Corps, the division being commanded by Gen. A. S. Williams, and the corps by Gen. Slocum.

On the 27th of April, 1863, the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps, which had been lying near Falmouth during the winter, marched north to Kelly's Ford, where they crossed the Rappahannock, thence to Germania Ford, where they crossed the Rapidan, and arrived at Chancellorsville without encountering serious opposition. Here it was joined by the Fifth Corps, and on the 30th by the Third Corps. There were three roads centring at Chancellorsville, the main direction of each being eastward. Upon each of these Hooker ordered an advance on the morning of the 1st of May, Meade upon the left, Sykes commanding a division of regulars belonging to the Fifth Corps in the centre, and Howard upon the right. At two o'clock p.m., the movement commenced, and after proceeding some three miles the central column encountered the enemy in considerable force, and Knipe's brigade was sent to its support, where it was engaged, and lost some men; whereupon Hooker ordered a retrograde movement and a concentratiop upon the line of the previous night with the Chancellor House as headquarters, Meade on the left, Slocum in the centre, and Howard somewhat in the air on the right. Desultory fighting continued during the day of the 2d of May, when, at near nightfall, Stonewall Jackson, with twenty-five thousand men, burst like an avalanche upon Howard's corps, resting unsuspecting of danger, and drove it in rout and confusion upon the centre. This brought the enemy upon Slocum's right, and during the early part of the night a sharp conflict was kept up, wherein Knipe's brigade was engaged, losing many in killed and wounded, and a considerable number of prisoners. Here fell Maj. Strouse, his body riddled with bullets, while attempting to escape when called on to surrender. At midnight a countercharge was made by Birney's division, and a part of the guns lost by Howard, and his abandoned rifle-pits, were regained, and the enemy thrown into some confusion. On the morning of the 3d, Williams' brigade was sent to the support of Birney, and here the battle raged with great fury, the enemy losing heavily, and being broken and driven in great confusion. Upon the return of Hooker to the north bank of the Rappahannock the regiment occupied its old camp, where it remained until the advance of the army into Pennsylvania. The loss in the Chancellorsville campaign was four killed, a considerable number wounded, two severely, and two taken prisoners. Maj. Strouse and Lieut. O. R. Priestly were among the killed.

Early in June, Lee commenced a movement north, marching down the Shenandoah Valley, and crossing the Potomac at Williamsport. On the 1st of July he met the Union army at Gettysburg. On the evening of the same day the Twelfth Corps arrived upon the field, and was posted on the right of the line holding the summits of Culp's Hill, where a formidable breastwork was thrown up. On the afternoon of the 2d the First and Second Divisions were ordered to the support of the left, leaving their works unoccupied, save by a thin line of Green's brigade, of the Second Division. During their absence the enemy attacked and carried the left of the works, and, upon their return at evening, they found the rebels in possession. Dispositions were promptly made to retake them. Before dawn of the 3d a heavy fire of infantry and artillery was opened upon the enemy, and after an obstinate resistance of several hours he was driven back at the point of the bayonet. The Forty-sixth held the extreme right of the line, and after the reoccupation of the breastworks, was pushed across an open space beyond Spangler's Spring, and held a piece of wood fringing Rock Creek. The loss, owing to the sheltered position which the regiment occupied, was inconsiderable.

Upon the withdrawal of Lee into Virginia, the Union army followed up his line of retreat, at the same time covering Washington until it reached the Rapidan. Here the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps were detached from the Army of the Potomac and ordered to the support of Rosecrans in Tennessee and Northern Georgia. Marching to Washington, the regiment proceeded by rail to Nashville. Here the First Division was detailed to guard the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad from Tullahoma to Bridgeport. The country through which the road passes was infested with guerrillas and rebel cavalry, ever watchful for an opportunity to destroy the road and to wreck the trains. It was vital to the existence of the army that this line should be kept open and that it should be operated to its utmost capacity. The vigilance and fidelity with which this service was performed on the part of the Forty-sixth elicited the warm approval of its superior officers.

Early in January, 1864, a large proportion of the officers and men of the regiment having re-enlisted for a second term of three years, insuring its continuance as an organization, they were given a veteran furlough and proceeded to Pennsylvania.¹ Here its ranks were rapidly recruited, and upon its return the division rejoined the corps in winter-quarters in and about Chattanooga.

On the 6th of May Sherman's army, seventy thousand strong, with one hundred and fifty guns, broke up winter-quarters and moved on the ever memorable Atlanta campaign. At Dalton, where Johnston, who commanded the rebel army, was first met, the enemy was turned out of a position strong by nature and well fortified by a flank movement through Snake Creek Gap, which had already been captured by Geary's division.

Following up the retreating enemy, Sherman found him well entrenched at Resaca, prepared to dispute his further progress. Here Sherman again attempted a movement by the right flank; but Johnston, taking advantage of his antagonist's weakened lines in front, delivered a heavy and well-sustained attack, falling upon the divisions of Hooker and Schofield. He found Hooker not unprepared for the encounter, and after a bloody conflict Johnston was driven, with a loss of four guns and many prisoners. In this engagement the Forty-sixth participated, losing three killed and five wounded.

Pushing the enemy steadily back, on the 25th of May the regiment was again engaged at Pumpkinvine Creek and at New Hope Church. The country is

Henry Weidensaul, named above, was first sergeant of Capt. Brooks' company. He was first wounded at Cedar Mountain in August, 1862, where he was taken prisoner and was confined in Libby Prison for nearly five weeks. He was again wounded at Atlanta.

here broken and the enemy was well entrenched, his lines stretching across Lost, Pine, and Kenesaw Mountains, from Dallas to Marietta, presenting an unbroken front. From the 25th of May until near the middle of June, Sherman, always fruitful in resources, operated against the enemy's lines, compelling him, by constant battering and picket firing and by frequent assaults gradually to give ground, taking first Pine Knob, then Lost Mountain, and at length the long line of breastworks connecting the latter with Kenesaw. Finally, on the 22d of June, the enemy, finding himself slowly but surely pushed from his strong position, suddenly assumed the offensive and made a furious attack upon Hooker's corps, in position near the Culp House. It fell principally upon Knipe's brigade and was led by Hood, but signally failed. Hood was repulsed with heavy loss, including some prisoners. "Williams' division," says Gen. Thomas in his official report, "skirmished itself into position on the right of Geary's division, the right of Williams resting at Culp's house, on the Powder Spring and Marietta road. About 4 P.M. the enemy in heavy force attacked Knipe's brigade in its advanced position before his men had time to throw up any works, and persisted in the assault until sundown, when they withdrew, their ranks hopelessly broken, each assault having been repelled with heavy loss." In the various engagements at Dallas, Pine Knob, Kenesaw Mountain, and Marietta, in all of which the Forty-sixth participated, the loss was fourteen killed and about thirty wounded. Capt. D. H. Chesebro and Lieut. J. W. Phillips were among the killed.

On the 16th of July Sherman crossed the Chattahoochee River, and sweeping around to the left, began closing in upon Atlanta, McPherson reaching out to strike the Augusta Railroad. While these movements were in full progress and the army only partially across Peach Tree Creek, a considerable stream running in a westerly direction in front of Atlanta, Hood again attacked, leading a heavy force and precipitating it with great violence upon the Union columns, falling principally upon Newton's and upon Hooker's corps. The Forty-sixth was much exposed and suffered severely; but with ranks undismayed, led by Col. Selfridge, who was in the thickest of the fight, conspicuous by his white, flowing locks, encouraging and steadying his men, they hurled back the rebel hordes at the point of the bayonet. With columns sadly decimated, Hood retreated from the field, leaving five hundred dead, one thousand severely wounded, and many prisoners in the hands of the victors. The loss in the regiment was ten killed and twenty-two wounded. Capt. S. T. Ketrer, Lieuts. H. J. Davis, Samuel Wolf, and David C. Selheimer, and Adj. Luther R. Whitman were among the killed.

off the railroads and invest the city on the south, when Hood, detecting the movement, again fell upon the Union lines only partially formed. The attack was made with the rebel leader's characteristic impetuosity, but it fell like the beating of the mad waves of the sea against the immovable cliff. The regiment lost here six killed and a considerable number wounded.

On the 1st of September Atlanta surrendered and Sherman's victorious columns entered the city in triumph. The hard fighting of the regiment was now ended. Gen. Knipe was here transferred to the command of cavalry and Col. Selfridge to the brigade, leaving Major Patrick Griffith in command of the regiment. On the 11th of November Sherman commenced his march to the sea. On the 21st of December he reached Savannah, and after a brief conflict at Fort McAllister took possession of the city. With but a brief respite he faced his columns to the north, and on the 17th of February Columbia, the capital of South Carolina, was taken without resistance, and a month later he reached Goldsborough, the end of his hostile wayfaring. Johnston surrendered on the 26th of April, and the army immediately commenced its homeward march. On the 16th of July, 1865, the Forty-sixth Regiment, after nearly four years of faithful service, was mustered out near Alexandria, Va.

FIFTY-FOURTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

This regiment, recruited principally in the counties of Cambria, Somerset, Dauphin, Northampton, and Leligh, in 1861, rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, and was organized by the selection of the following field-officers: Jacob M. Campbell, of Cambria County, colonel; Barnabas McDermit, of Cambria County, lieutenant-colonel; John P. Linton, of Cambria County, major. Col. Campbell and many of the officers and men had served during the three months' campaign, and Lieut.-Col. McDermit possessed military experience acquired in the Mexican war. The men were drilled by squads and companies while in camp, and Company F, Capt. Davis, for some time performed guard duty at the State arsenal. On the 27th of February, 1862, the regiment was ordered to Washington, and upon its arrival went into camp near Bladensburg Cemetery. Here the altered flint-lock muskets furnished by the State were exchanged for the Belgian rifles. On the 29th of March the regiment was ordered to proceed to Harper's Ferry, and report to Col. Miles. Upon his arrival Col. Campbell was directed to make a disposition of his force along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and Company F, Capt. G. W. P. Davis, was stationed at Sleepy Creek Bridge, seventeen miles west of Martinsburg. The country through which that portion of the railroad runs, which the regiment was required to guard, was considered by the rebels as their own territory, and the majority of the population in the vicinity was rebel at heart. Numerous guerrilla bands, led by daring and reckless chieftains, roved the country, pillaging and burning the property of Union inhabitants, and watchful for an opportunity to burn the railroad bridges, cut the wires of the telegraph, and destroy the road. To guard this great thoroughfare, of vital importance to the government, to suppress guerrilla warfare, to afford protection to the harassed and helpless people, was the duty which the regiment was assigned to perform. Col. Campbell at once assumed the offensive, and hunted them instead of waiting to let them hunt him. Almost daily, from some part of the line, squads were sent out to engage and capture these roving bands led by such partisans as Edwards, White, Imboden, and McNeil, and many were brought in.

On Sunday morning, the 25th of May, 1862, all the locomotives on the railroad west of Harper's Ferry were hurried through to Cumberland, the engineers bringing the first intelligence of the retreat of Banks and the approach of Stonewall Jackson to Martinsburg. At nine o'clock that night Col. Campbell received the following dispatch from Col. Miles: "Concentrate your regiment at South Branch. Gen. Banks defeated and driven through Martinsburg. Expect an attack here hourly. Mean to fight." The success of Jackson, and the consequent withdrawal from the road, had inspired the roving bands with new life, and they became more troublesome than ever, wandering up and down the country, pillaging indiscriminately from friend and foe. The several companies were kept constantly on the alert, and with an energy and enterprise rarely equaled, the territory was scoured, many of the squads penetrating the interior twenty and thirty miles, capturing and dispersing the guerrillas, restoring stolen property, and successfully protecting and preserving the road.

The rebel army having defeated McClellan upon the Peninsula, and Pope at Bull Run, was now advancing into Maryland on the Antietam campaign. On the 11th of September his advance guard reached Back Creek. Communication with Col. Miles was severed, and soon after Harper's Ferry was invested by Jackson, the post, garrison, and immense military stores falling into the hands of the enemy. Col. Campbell telegraphed to Gen. Kelly, in command in West Virginia, for orders. Kelly declined to give any, but advised the withdrawal from the road. This the colonel decided not to follow and clung to his position, which had now become perilous, his little band of nine hundred men, without artillery or cavalry, being the only Union forces at that time in the hostile territory of Virginia.

After the battle of Antietam, Gen. McClellan, unaware of the presence of any Union troops south of the Potomac, sent a cavalry force to picket the Maryland shore. Seeing soldiers in blue across the river they regarded Col. Campbell's men as rebels in disguise, and it was with difficulty that they could be undeceived. Upon the surrender of Miles the brigade to which the regiment belonged had disappeared. A report to the general-in-chief soon brought an order attaching it to Gen. Franklin's command.

Soon afterwards the regiment was attached to the command of Gen. Morrell, left for the defense of the Upper Potomac, and subsequently, upon the organization of the Eighth Army Corps, it was assigned to the Third Brigade of the Second Division, commanded by Gen. Kelly. On the 29th of January, 1863, the Fifty-fourth was attached to the Fourth Brigade of the First Division, department of West Virginia, Col. Campbell in command of the brigade, and Lieut.-Col. Linton of the regiment. On the 3d of April, the enemy having attacked a forage train above Burlington, the Fifty-fourth, with a battalion of cavalry, was sent in pursuit. At Purgitsville the rebel cavalry was encountered and driven, and some prisoners taken. The regiment continued here, scouting the country and capturing guerrillas who infested the region, until the 30th of June, when it moved to New Creek in anticipation of an attack upon Grafton. On the 6th of July, Gen. Kelly moved his command, by forced marches, to co-operate with the Army of the Potomac, now driving the enemy from the field of Gettysburg. On the 10th he came upon the rebel pickets, and upon the withdrawal of the rebel army into Virginia he followed up the retreat, and on the 19th was heavily engaged. During the night he learned through a scout that the enemy in force was moving on his rear and immediately retreated into Maryland, leaving the Fifty-fourth alone upon the Virginia shore. The enemy approached and threw a few shells into its lines, but soon retired. On the 6th of November the brigade moved to Springfield, where a reorganization of the command took place, the Fifty-fourth being assigned to the First Brigade of the Second Division, Col. Campbell in command.

On the 4th of January, 1864, Gen. Kelly apprehending an attack upon Cumberland, Col. Campbell, with part of his command, was ordered to its defense. A month later Company F, while guarding the railroad bridge at Patterson's Creek, was attacked by a party of the enemy under the notorious Harry Gilmor in the garb of Union soldiers. By this deception the rebels reached the picket line unsuspected, when they dashed into the camp, and after a short struggle compelled its surrender. Three of the company were killed and several wounded. After the surrender, Gilmor, with his own hand, shot and instantly killed Corporal Gibbs, an act which should stamp its perpetrator with infamy. Col. Campbell, at his own request, was relieved from the command of his brigade and assumed charge of his regiment.

About this time Gen. Sigel relieved Gen. Kelly, and immediately commenced preparations for a campaign in the Shenandoah Valley. On the 15th of May, while pushing his column up the valley, Sigel struck a force of the enemy, unexpectedly large, under Gen. Breckinridge, near New Market, prepared to offer battle. Confident of his ability to drive the opposing force, Sigel disposed his troops for battle. At the opening of the battle, the cavalry in passing to the rear threw the infantry into some confusion, breaking through its lines. Steadily the enemy moved forward to the attack, his long lines overlapping both flanks of Sigel's force. The artillery was plied with excellent effect, but could not stay the rebel columns. Arriving within easy musket range, the infantry of both sides opened simultaneously a heavy and mutually destructive fire. For some time the battle raged with great fury, but the enemy's superiority of numbers at length prevailed, and the Union lines were forced back, the Fifty-fourth retiring in good order, returning the fire of the enemy until he ceased to pursue. Sigel retreated to Cedar Creek, where he threw up defensive works. The loss of the regiment in this engagement was one hundred and seventy-four killed, wounded, and missing.

During the remaining summer months the regiment participated in the marches and counter-marches of the command, the exact object of which was probably best known to its leader. Upon the assumption of the chief command by Gen. Sheridan, the army was reorganized and prepared for an active campaign. The Fifty-fourth marched with the command to Cedar Creek, participating in a series of heavy skirmishes, and with it fell back to Halltown. Here it remained until August 28th, when the enemy having disappeared from its front the whole force marched to Charlestown, and on the 3d of September to Berryville. On the day of its arrival a severe engagement occurred, lasting far into the night and ending in the complete repulse of the enemy. For four days the Army of West Virginia, now known as the Eighth Corps, bivouacked near Berryville, and was then transferred from the extreme left of the infantry line to the extreme right, at Summit Point. Here the Fifty-fourth remained until the 19th, repairing, as far as possible, the ravages of the campaign, distributing supplies, and assigning recruits, convalescents, and veterans returned from furlough.

On the 19th of December the main body of Sheridan's army marched from the valley to join Grant in front of Petersburg. The Fifty-fourth moved to Washington and thence to City Point, arriving on the 23d, and encamped on Chapin's farm. It was assigned to duty in the Army of the James.

Upon the muster out of service of the Third and Fourth Reserve Regiments in May, 1864, the veterans and recruits were at first organized into an independent battalion, which was subsequently united to the Fifty-fourth. On the 7th of February, 1865, the term of original enlistments having expired, an order from the War Department directed that the two organizations should be consolidated under the name of the Fifty-fourth Regiment. This was effected, and it was assigned to the Second Brigade, Independent Division of the Army of the James, commanded by Gen. Ord.

On the morning of the 2d of April the regiment was ordered to join in the general forward movement of the army, and proceeding with the brigade crossed the rebel works near the Boydton Plank Road, now abandoned, and approached Fort Gregg. Here a spirited resistance was offered, and it was not until a hot fire of infantry and artillery had been brought to bear upon the enemy that he yielded. In this brief engagement the regiment lost twenty killed and wounded.

The rebel army having been routed from its works about Petersburg, was retreating rapidly towards the North Carolina border. On the 5th of April two regiments, the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania and the One Hundred and Twenty-third Ohio, Col. Kellogg, with two companies of the Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, Col. Washburn, were ordered to make a forced march to High Bridge and effect its destruction for the purpose of cutting the enemy's way of retreat and delaying his columns. Arrived at Rice's Station, Gen. Read, of Ord's staff, took command, and when within sight of the bridge made his dispositions for the attack. Before the column could be formed, word was brought that the vedettes at Rice's had been driven; nothing daunted, the little force promptly attacked. But the enemy had taken ample precautions for the safety of this their main avenue of escape, and after a desperate struggle, in which Gen. Read was killed, Cols. Kellogg and Washburn wounded and taken prisoners, and a large proportion of the command killed or prisoners, surrounded on all sides by the main columns of the enemy's infantry and cavalry, it was forced to surrender. The loss of the Fifty-fourth was twenty-one killed and wounded. The captives were taken back to Rice's, where, to their astonishment, they beheld Longstreet's corps intrenched, having come up but a few moments after Read's column had passed in the morning.

The attack, though failing in its immediate purpose, subserved the main end; for Lee's columns were thereby delayed several hours, enabling Sheridan to sweep around the enemy's rear and complete the destruction and capture of that once proud and defiant army. For four days, without rations, the captives marched with the retreating rebel army, when to their great joy they were released from their captivity and their starving condition by Grant's victorious columns. From Appomattox Court-House the regiment was sent to Camp Parole, at Annapolis, Md., and on the 15th of July was mustered out of service at Harrisburg.

FIFTY-FIFTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Fifty-fifth Regiment was recruited, under authority granted by Governor Curtin to Col. Richard White, during the summer and autumn of 1861, of which Company G was raised in Dauphin County. The regiment rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where an organization was effected by the choice of field-officers. Three of the companies, B, E, and G, were for a time stationed at Camp Cameron, near Harrisburg, under the command of Col. Thomas A. Zeigle, and were instructed by regular army officers.

On the 22d of November the regiment, thirty-eight officers and seven hundred and fifty-seven men, left Camp Curtin and proceeded to Fortress Monroe. Drill and discipline, which had been commenced at Camp Curtin, was here resumed, and the command was brought to a good degree of efficiency. On the 8th of December, in company with the Forty-fifth, Seventy-sixth, and Ninety-seventh Regiments, it embarked for South Carolina, arriving at Port Royal on the 12th. The Fifty-fifth was immediately sent out to guard the small islands and approaches to the west of Hilton Head, where it remained until the 25th of February, 1862, when it was transferred to Edisto Island. While on duty here a series of attacks were made by the enemy in large force upon the companies, scattered as they necessarily were in holding the Union outstretched lines upon the coast. The most determined of these was made on the 29th of March, when Companies E, F, and G, posted at the head of the island, nearly twelve miles from the headquarters of the regiment, were attacked by a force of the enemy estimated at two thousand. The action which ensued was severe, but the rebels were signally repulsed, with a loss to the three companies of about twenty killed and wounded. Gen. Evans, who was in command of the enemy, afterwards reported to the rebel government that he had made a reconnaissance upon Edisto Island, and had found the enemy six thousand strong.

During the summer the only troops upon the island were those of the Fifty-fifth, and the duty, performed beneath a Southern sun, was very severe. On the 21st of October the regiment accompanied Gen. Brannan on an expedition, consisting of about four thousand troops, up Broad River. The command landed, under cover of gunboats, at Mackey's Point, and immediately advanced on Pocotaligo Bridge, the object of the movement being to destroy the Charleston and Savannah Railroad. At eight o'clock on the morning of the 22d the enemy was met at Caston, but were soon driven. At Frampton he made another stand, and after a sharp engagement was again driven, and retreated across the Pocotaligo River, burning the bridge as he withdrew. Here he took a strong position, and being largely reinforced from Charleston, held his ground during six hours, in which the battle fiercely raged. Unable to gain an advantage, the ammunition being nearly exhausted, the Union forces withdrew under cover of night and returned to Hilton Head. The Fifty-fifth lost in this engagement twenty-nine killed and wounded. Near the close of the action, while bravely leading his men against a masked battery, Capt. Horace C. Bennett was killed.

The regiment was now stationed at Beaufort, S. C., where it remained for more than a year, performing picket duty at Port Royal Ferry, ten miles from the town, and also serving in the capacity of heavy artillery upon the fortifications.

On the 1st of January, 1864, the majority of the men re-enlisted for a second term of three years, and on the 22d departed for Harrisburg, where, upon their arrival, they were dismissed for a veteran furlough. On the 23d of March the veterans and recruits returned to South Carolina, where the regiment, now numbering twelve hundred and fifty effective men, remained for three weeks engaged in drill and guard duty. On the 12th of April it embarked for Virginia, and landed at Gloucester Point, opposite Yorktown. Here the regiment was assigned to the Third Brigade (Col. Richard White), Third Division, Tenth Corps, Army of the James.

Gen. Butler was here organizing his forces, consisting of about forty thousand men, to operate against Richmond by the right bank of the James. Embarking upon transports, the Tenth Corps moved up the river and landed at Bermuda Hundred, with the design of seizing and fortifying the peninsula between the Appomattox and the James as a base of operations. Advancing ten miles west, encountering little opposition, the troops were set to work throwing up intrenchments across the head of the peninsula, and soon had the neck of the "bottle" closed.

On the 9th of May, Ames' division moved out of the works and destroyed the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad for a distance of two miles. Gen.

Ames then marched upon the turnpike towards Petersburg as far as Swift Creek, where he met the enemy well posted, and immediately attacked, the contest continuing until evening. Early on the following morning Ames learned that Terry's division, in his rear, had been attacked. Facing his columns about and advancing, he soon encountered the rebel forces, and drove them as far as Drury's Bluff, near Richmond. On the 13th the Union forces were again pushed forward towards Richmond, but found the enemy strongly intrenched in a double line of works behind Proctor's Creek. The outer line was carried, and Gillmore's troops continued the contest during the 14th and 15th, flanking the rebel position. But he had now been reinforced by troops from Charleston, and Gen. Beauregard was in command. Seeing that the Union lines were greatly extended, and in many parts thereby greatly weakened, the rebel leader moved out of his intrenchments at night, and early on the morning of the 16th, under cover of a dense fog, fell upon the left flank with sudden and overpowering force. The Fifty-fifth occupied a position near the extreme left, and felt the full force of the enemy's blows. Again and again he advanced to the charge. Portions of the line gave way. The Fifty-fifth stood side by side with the Fourth New Hampshire and gallantly held its ground, until, outflanked and nearly surrounded, it was in danger of being captured. Col. White, as a last resort, selected three companies, C, D, and E, of his own regiment, and charged full upon the head of the advancing column. But it could not be broken, and the line was forced to yield. The loss in this engagement was very severe, being in killed, wounded, and prisoners, including those from May 9th, when the fighting commenced, fifteen commissioned officers and three hundred enlisted men. The colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and adjutant were among the prisoners, and Lieut. John H. Barnhart was among the killed. The command of the regiment devolved upon Capt. John C. Shearer.

The army now fell back to its intrenched line at Bermuda Hundred, and the regiment was subsequently engaged in several minor skirmishes. On the morning of the 20th of May the enemy attacked the picket line on Forster's plantation at daylight. One-half of the Fifty-fifth was in position and made a stern resistance, holding its ground until the yielding of the forces on right and left made it necessary for it to fall back to save itself from capture.

Butler, having completed his preparations, was upon the point of moving upon the enemy's lines about Petersburg, when he received orders from Grant to detach a heavy force under Gen. "Baldy" Smith and send it to the support of the Army of the Potomac. The Fifty-fifth was one of the regiments selected for this purpose, and was assigned to the First Brigade (Gen. Stannard), Second Division (Gen. Martindale), Eighteenth Corps. Moving in transports down the James and up the York Rivers, the corps debarked at West Point, and marched via White House to Cold Harbor, where, on the 1st of June, it met the enemy, who was engaging the Sixth Corps. The line of battle was immediately formed and charged the enemy's works, capturing a line of rifle-pits and taking a large number of prisoners. The contest was continued during the 1st and 2d, but the principal charge was made on the morning of the 3d. Stannard's brigade was selected for the attack, and was formed in columns of regiments, in which the Fifty-fifth was the third. As it swept forward to the desperate work the intense fire of the enemy caused the front lines to waver, and finally to fall back in confusion upon the third, which was also momentarily deranged. Capt. Shearer, in command, was wounded, and scarcely had the next in rank, Capt. Nesbitt, assumed it when he also was stricken down, and it devolved upon Capt. Hill, who soon restored order and held his position, now in the front line. During the night breastworks were thrown up, which were occupied until the night of the 12th, when the entire army withdrew. The loss in killed and wounded was four commissioned officers and one hundred and thirty-four enlisted men. In conducting this withdrawal from the enemy's front the Fifty-fifth was deployed in the front line of works, while the regiments successively fell back in the stillness of the night until all had retired without casualties or disturbance.

Marching back to White House, the corps again embarked on transports, and moved, via the Pamunkey, York, and James Rivers, to Point of Rocks, on the Appomattox, where it debarked, and early on the morning of the 15th advanced on the enemy's works in front of Petersburg, capturing eighteen guns and four hundred prisoners. On the following morning Gen. Stannard ordered Capt. Hill to go forward with his regiment as skirmishers. He promptly advanced in the face of a hot fire and gained a position close up to the enemy's lines, but not without serious loss. On the 18th, Stannard's brigade, occupying the extreme right of the line, resting on the Appomattox, was again deployed for a charge. In front was an open field, commanded by the enemy's infantry and artillery, across which it must pass. Never faltering, the Fifty-fifth, which faced the ground most exposed, pushed forward obedient to command, and in less than ten minutes, while crossing this open field, it lost three commissioned officers and eighty enlisted men,—more than half of its effective strength,—a large proportion killed.

On the evening of the 29th the corps moved to the rear of the position held by the Ninth Corps, and upon the explosion of the mine, on the morning of the 30th, it was held in readiness to support the assaulting column; but the attack failed, and without being called into action, it returned to its old position on the Appomattox. For two months the regiment was engaged in duties incident to a siege, being constantly exposed to the fire of artillery, and the musketry of the pickets and sharpshooters, scarcely a day passing without some loss.

During the night of September 28th the regiment crossed the James, and marched to participate in the attack about to be made by the Army of the James upon Chapin's Bluff. The capture of Fort Harrison was effected on the morning of the following day, but the Fifty-fifth being held in support of the attacking troops, did not become engaged. In the afternoon it was determined to carry the works beyond, and at four o'clock, Col. Jourdan, in command of the brigade, ordered the Fifty-fifth to charge, and take a redoubt in the enemy's second line. The One Hundred and Fifty-eighth New York was deployed to support it, by advancing through the woods on the left, and the One Hundred and Forty-eighth New York to act as skirmishers on the right. The Fifty-fifth advanced over the open ground in front, a quarter of a mile, under a concentrated fire from three redoubts, supported by a heavy body of infantry. Bravely stemming a torrent of shot and deadly minie-balls, it moved steadily on, and reached a point within twenty yards of the work, when its ranks almost annihilated, and supports failing to come up, it was forced to fall back, leaving the dead and most of the wounded upon the field to fall into the hands of the enemy. Of five commissioned officers and one hundred and fifty enlisted men who marched at the word of command, three officers and seventy-eight men were either killed, wounded, or missing. Lieut. Blaney Adair was among the killed, and Capt. John O'Niel mortally wounded. On the following day the rebels made three attacks on Fort Harrison, but in each they were repulsed with terrible slaughter.

In November, the colors which had been originally presented to the regiment by the Governor before leaving the State, carried in all its campaignings, and latterly almost constantly enshrouded in the smoke and fire of battle, having become badly tattered, application was made for a new stand, which was promptly forwarded. The staff and the few remaining shreds of the old one were deposited in the capitol.

In December the white troops of the Tenth and Eighteenth Corps were consolidated, and formed the Twenty-fourth Corps. The Fifty-fifth was assigned to the Fourth Brigade of the First Division, and was henceforward engaged in performing picket and guard duty on the left bank of the James. On the 10th of December, while stationed at the redoubt on Signal Hill, near the extreme right of our lines, it was attacked by a portion of Longstreet's corps. The demonstrations were feebly made, and were easily repulsed. On the 21st of December, upon the muster out of service of Lieut.-Col. Bennett, at the expiration of his term, Maj. Fuller was promoted to succeed him, and Capt. James Metzger was promoted to major.

On the 27th of March, 1865, the First and Second Divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps, and one division of the Twenty-fifth Corps, under command of Gen. Ord, broke camp, and crossing the James and the Appomattox, proceeded by the rear of the army to Hatcher's Run, and on the morning of the 29th relieved the Second Corps, which moved out still farther to the left. During the 30th and 31st a part of the regiment was on the picket-line near the run, and in the general advance which was made, skirmished with the enemy, losing two men killed, and one commissioned officer and seventeen enlisted men wounded.

On the morning of April 2d, in breaking through the enemy's lines, the Fourth Brigade, to which the regiment belonged, commanded by Gen. Fairchild, with the balance of the division, charged Forts Gregg and Baldwin, which, after a strong resistance, were carried, the Fifty-fifth being the first to occupy the latter. The loss here was one commissioned officer killed, and one commissioned officer and four enlisted men wounded. On the morning of April 3d, having ascertained that the rebels had evacuated Petersburg during the previous night, Gen. Ord's column was pushed forward to cut off their line of retreat at Burksville Junction. By a forced march along the South Side Railroad, Ord reached the Junction on the evening of the 5th, a distance of about sixty miles. Resuming the march on the following morning, it hastened forward, seven miles farther, to Rice's Station, the Fifty-fifth leading the column as skirmishers, and losing nine men wounded. At the Station Ord held his position, cutting off the direct way of retreat to Danville, and forcing the rebel column towards Lynchburg. At daylight on the 7th, Ord resumed the march, with the design of again cutting the rebel line of retreat. He reached Appomattox Court-House, a distance of forty-two miles, early on the morning of the 9th, in advance of Lee's columns, and with Sheridan's cavalry held firmly the only avenue of escape. "Sheridan," says Greeley, "was with his cavalry near the court-house, when the Army of Virginia made its last charge. By his order his troops, who were in line of battle, dismounted, gave ground gradually, while showing a steady front, so as to allow our weary infantry time to form and take position. This effected, the horsemen moved swiftly to the right and dismounted, revealing lines of solid infantry in battle array, before whose wall of gleaming bayonets the astonished enemy recoiled in blank despair, as Sheridan and his troopers, passing briskly around the rebel left, prepared to charge the confused, reeling masses. A white flag was now waved by the enemy, before Gen. Custer, who held our cavalry advance, with the information that they had concluded to surrender."

The First and Second Divisions of the Twenty-fourth Corps remained at Appomattox Court-House until the 17th, when they proceeded to Richmond via Farnville, Burksville, and Amelia Court-House, arriving on the 25th. The regiment encamped on the outskirts of the city, and performed fatigue and guard duty until the latter part of July, when it was ordered to report to Maj.-Gen. Hartsuff, at Petersburg. It was stationed at different points, in detachments in Chesterfield, Buckingham, Cumberland, Powhatan, and Amelia Counties, acting under orders from the Freedmen's Bureau. On the 30th of August the regiment was mustered out of service at Petersburg, whence it proceeded to Harrisburg, where it was paid and finally disbanded.

EIGHTIETH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The authority to raise this regiment was given on the 27th of August, 1861, to William B. Sipes, then of Harrisburg, by the Secretary of War. The companies were recruited, for the most part, by their officers and at their expense, the grade of their commissions depending, as a general rule, upon their success in securing men. Their military experience was in general limited to the three months' service. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Cameron, near Harrisburg, where a regimental organization was effected, and George C. Wynkoop, of Pottsville, was commissioned colonel. Clothing was promptly issued to the men upon entering camp, and the regiment was regularly exercised in dismounted drill. Side arms were received while at Camp Cameron, and horses were supplied, but not issued until after leaving it. On the 18th of December the colors were presented by Governor Curtin from the steps of the State capitol, and on the following day, in pursuance of orders from the Secretary of War, the regiment started for Louisville, Ky., where, upon its arrival, it reported to General Buell, in command of the Department of the Cumberland, and was placed in camp of instruction at Jeffersonville, Ind. Towards the close of January, 1862, the regiment broke camp, and, moving leisurely southward, through Kentucky, arrived at Nashville, Tenn., soon after its occupation by Union forces. Here the three battalions were separated, the first, under Major Wynkoop, in which was Capt. Davis' company, being assigned to Gen. Negley's brigade, and sent with him to Columbia; the second, under Col. Wynkoop, to the command of Gen. Dumont, garrisoning Nashville; and the third, under Maj. Given, to Col. Duffield's command, two companies being stationed at Murfreesborough, and two at Lebanon. The duty imposed at this time consisted in scouting in Western and Middle Tennessee, and as far east as the Cumberland Mountains. The cavalry was kept actively employed in defending the flanks of the army against the irregular bands of the enemy's horse that were prowling on every hand. On the 1st of July the First Battalion, under command of Maj.

Wynkoop, moving with Gen. Smith's brigade, occupied Manchester. On the following day, Capt. C. C. Davis, of Company I, with nine men, was captured while on the picket line, but shortly after exchanged.

When Buell, in September, made his retrograde movement through Kentucky, and subsequently his advance, the First Battalion, under Maj. Wynkoop, accompanied him, participating in the battle of Perryville, losing four men wounded and three taken prisoners. The Second and Third Battalions remained with the garrison at Nashville, and was attached to Gen. Negley's command. They were employed in scouting and foraging, and in assisting to defend the city.

Early in November, 1862, Gen. Rosecrans, who had superseded Gen. Buell in command of the Army of the Cumberland, made a complete reorganization. Up to this time the cavalry had not been formed in brigades and divisions, but had been scattered over Tennessee, Kentucky, and a portion of Alabama, doing very hard duty but accomplishing very little. Gen. D. S. Stanley was now assigned to the command of the cavalry, and made a thorough organization of it for efficient service, the Seventh being assigned to the First Brigade of the Second Division. Little of importance transpired to break the monotony of the picket and outpost duty until the 26th of December, when the army advanced on the enemy at Murfreesborough. The First Brigade led the centre on the Nashville and Murfreesborough Pike, the regiments alternating daily, which brought the Seventh at the head of the column on the 27th. The entire march from Nashville to Stone River was a continuous battle between the cavalry of the two armies. Upon the arrival of the division at Stone River, on the 29th, the resistance was found too strong for the cavalry to move, and it was withdrawn to the right flank and rear. On the 30th a battalion of the Seventh Pennsylvania and one of the Third Kentucky formed a chain of vedettes in rear of the line of battle, with orders to drive up all stragglers. On the same day, Wheeler captured the train of the Twenty-eighth Brigade, on the Jefferson Pike, between Stewart's Creek and Lavergne. Taking a battalion of the Seventh and the Fourth Michigan, Col. Minty moved to its relief. "I met the enemy," says Col. Minty in his report, "who were chiefly dressed in our uniforms. The Seventh Pennsylvania drove them until after dark." On the 31st the brigade, now reduced to about nine hundred and fifty men, took position, after crossing Overall's Creek, about three-quarters of a mile from the Murfreesborough and Nashville Pike, Capt. Jennings' battalion being posted in the woods near the right of the Fourth Michigan. "The enemy," says Col. Minty, "advanced rapidly with two thousand five hundred cavalry, mounted and dismounted, and three pieces of artillery, all under command of Gens. Wheeler, Wharton, and Buford. They drove back the Fourth Michigan to the line of the First Tennessee skirmishers, and then attacked the Seventh Pennsylvania with great fury, but met with a determined resistance. I went forward to the line of dismounted skirmishers, and endeavored to move it to the right to strengthen the Seventh Pennsylvania, but the moment the right of the line showed itself from behind the fence where it was posted, the whole of the enemy's fire was directed on it, turning it completely around. At this moment the Fifteenth Pennsylvania gave way and retreated rapidly, leaving the battalion of the Seventh Pennsylvania and the dismounted men entirely unsupported, and leaving them no alternative but to retreat." When, on this day, the right wing of the army was driven back in confusion, many of the men of the battalion, on the line of the vedettes, were captured by the enemy while endeavoring to drive forward the straggling infantry. After the battle was over, and the enemy was making the best of his way from the field, the cavalry was sent in pursuit. "About six miles out they met the enemy in force; a sharp skirmish ensued. The Fourth Cavalry, First Tennessee Infantry, and the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry having to bear the brunt of the fight on our side. The enemy was driven from the field with heavy loss, and we returned to within a mile and a half of Murfreesborough and went into camp." The loss of the regiment in this entire battle was two killed, nine wounded, and fifty missing.

On the 31st of January, the First Brigade was ordered to proceed to Rover and break up a rebel outpost. Arriving near the place, his pickets were encountered and driven in by the Fourth Michigan, when the Seventh Pennsylvania was ordered to draw sabre and charge, which was executed with a cheer, breaking the rebel line and utterly routing his entire command. The pursuit was maintained for ten miles, causing a loss of half his force. After scouting inside the rebel lines for two weeks, inflicting considerable damage upon the enemy, the brigade returned to camp at Murfreesborough. Shortly afterward learning that the enemy had reoccupied Rover in force, and had strengthened it by an entrenched infantry and artillery camp at Unionville, a town five miles from Rover, and sixteen from Shelbyville, where a large part of the rebel army was in camp, Gen. Sheridan was ordered to move with his division to Eagleville, three miles west of Rover, for a diversion in favor of the cavalry. When, therefore, at sunrise on the 4th, the First Brigade attacked the enemy at Rover, the surprise was complete. After a sharp skirmish the pickets were driven in, and the Seventh was ordered to charge with the sabre. It was made in column, half platoon front, and received the concentrated fire of over two thousand rifles; but without faltering, being supported by the Fourth United States on the right, and the Fourth Michigan on the left as carbineers, it dashed forward, broke the centre of the rebel line, and drove it in confusion towards Unionville. Not satisfied with his success, Col. Minty threw the flanking regiments into columns, on roads parallel with the pike on which the Seventh was moving, and, sounding the charge along the whole line, burst upon the astonished rebels at Unionville, entering their camp on the heels of the flying fugitives from Rover. But little resistance was offered, only one regiment of infantry attempting to form line, the artillery having been moved the day before to resist the threatened advance of Sheridan. The Seventh charged through the camp, and then gave chase to the rebel cavalry retreating towards Shelbyville. The loss of the Seventh was two killed and seven wounded.

On the 4th of March, 1863, Maj. Charles C. Davis was in command of the Seventh Cavalry when the attack was made on the Fourth Alabama, Col. Russell, nine hundred men, the Seventh numbering one hundred and ninety-two. The latter charged with the sabre, captured their camp and all their personal effects, pursued them seven miles, captured their wagon-train of seventeen, six of which were mule teams. One hundred and six of the Confederates were killed, wounded, and taken prisoners, twenty of the latter within one hundred yards of Gen. Hood's camp.

From Unionville the command marched the same day to Eagleville, where it joined Sheridan, and with him proceeded to Franklin, then to Columbia, skirmishing with Van Dorn and Forrest at Spring Hill and Rutherford Creek. The Seventh afterwards returned to Murfreesborough via Franklin, reaching camp on the 15th of March. The command was engaged with Morgan at Snow Hill, near Liberty, on the 3d of April, with a loss of one killed and one wounded; fought Duke's brigade on the 20th; assisted in the capture of McMinnville, May 6th; repelled a rebel demonstration on Murfreesborough on the 14th; and fought Morgan at Alexandria on the 3d of June, in all of which the Union forces were victorious except the last.

On the 24th, Gen. Rosecrans commenced his advance on Tullahoma and Shelbyville. The cavalry, under Gen. Stanley, moved on the right flank of the army. On the morning of the 27th, Col. Minty was ordered to charge and carry Guy's Gap, on the Murfreesborough Pike. With the Fourth Michigan Cavalry leading the advance, and the First Division supporting the flanks, he moved rapidly on through the gap, driving the rebels towards Shelbyville, and making captures on every hand. Arrived within five miles of the town, the enemy opened with artillery from his intrenchments. Col. Minty promptly deployed the Fourth Michigan and Fourth United States, as skirmishers, mounted, and held the Seventh in column. The advance was sounded, when from some cause the men commenced cheering, the skirmish line charged, and Col. Minty, taking advantage of the favorable moment, ordered the Seventh to charge also. Dashing forward with wild shouts, the intrenchments were stormed and taken with many prisoners, and, nerved by their success, pushed on after the flying foe. A mile from town a rebel regiment was hemmed in in an open field and captured, offering little resistance. As the troops advanced towards the town they were suddenly checked by the rapid fire from a battery of six pieces, posted in the public square. Col. Minty at once brought up two pieces of artillery, and, directing the Fourth United States and the Fourth Michigan to take a parallel street to the right, Col. Jordan, with the Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry, of the First Division, the first street to the left, and three companies of the Seventh, under Capt. Davis, to take the centre, the signal to charge was given. The Seventh was obliged to move in the face of the rebel guns, which were trained full upon it, and were served with great rapidity, at first dealing shot and shell, and then double-shotted canister. But, unmindful of the storm, Davis dashed up the narrow street, filling it from curb to curb, the shouts of the men ringing above the noise of battle. As they came near, they were saluted by a shower of bullets from the rifles and pistols of the enemy. A short run brought the column hand to hand with the hostile force, and a brief struggle ensued over the guns; but the slash of the sabre and the rapid rounds from pistols and carbines proved too much for rebel valor. He was driven in confusion, and the powerful battery was captured, as few have been, by a direct charge of cavalry. After the loss of his artillery, a panic seemed to seize the enemy, and he fled in consternation to the bank of Duck River, a mile away, where he attempted to form a line to cover the passage of his trains. But it was a vain attempt. Charge after charge was delivered with an impetuosity inspired of success, and, finally Shelbyville, with all its military stores, fell into Union hands, and a powerful impetus was given to the retreat of the entire rebel army. Wheeler's boasted cavalry was broken, and never afterwards recovered from the blow.

On the 3d of July the regiment was engaged in a skirmish at Elk River, on the 17th of August at Sparta, and early in September moved with the army on the Chickamauga campaign. The march was wearisome to man and beast, obliged to move with rapidity and to cross rugged mountains. From the 18th to the 22d, in the preliminary operations, and during the progress of the battle the regiment was in constant motion, and performed important service. On the 1st of August it marched with the cavalry in pursuit of Wheeler, passing through East and Middle Tennessee into Alabama. This march lasted eighteen consecutive days and nights, with little rest and frequent running fights.

Early in the year 1864, while stationed at Huntsville, Ala., a large part of the regiment re-enlisted and was given a veteran furlough. Upon returning, the numbers having been swelled by recruits to about eighteen hundred, rank and file, it was stationed at Columbia, where it was ordered to drill and make preparation for the opening of the spring campaign. While upon furlough, Col. Sipes, who had succeeded to the command, drew Spencer carbines, improved sabres, and horse equipments for the entire regiment, and when freshly mounted, as it was at Nashville, it was well prepared for active service. On the 30th of April the regiment, under his command, broke camp and, joining Garrard's division, set forward with Sherman towards Atlanta. On the 15th of May it was engaged at Rome, and on the 27th at Dallas and Villa Rica Road, at the latter place having a sharp skirmish, losing three killed, six wounded, and one taken prisoner; at Big Shanty, on June 9th, with one killed, two wounded, and two prisoners; at McAfee Cross-Roads, on the 11th, with two killed and four prisoners; at Monday Creek, on the 20th, with one killed, ten wounded, and six prisoners; at Kenesaw Mountain, on the 27th; in a raid on the Augusta and Atlanta Railroad, on the 18th of July; in a raid on Covington and the destruction of the railroad, on the 21st; at Flat Rock, on the 28th, with a loss of two wounded; and on the 1st of August entered the trenches in front of Atlanta. On the 17th it moved with Kilpatrick on his raid, on the 19th had a skirmish at Fairburn and Jonesboro', and on the 20th a sharp engagement at Lovejoy Station, in which Capt. James G. Taylor and Lieut. Chauncey C. Hemans were among the killed. The loss in this raid was five killed, twenty-four wounded, and fifteen missing. On the 12th of October it was engaged in the battle at Rome, and on the following day made a charge with the sabre on infantry, routing them and capturing two pieces of artillery, losing one killed and four wounded. Two weeks later it was engaged at Lead's Cross-Roads, which closed the campaign. The regiment having suffered severely in men, horses, and equipments during a campaign rarely equaled for severity, was no longer fit for the field, and was ordered to Louisville, Ky., to be remounted, equipped, and prepared again for active duty. While here many of the officers, whose three years' term of service had expired, were mustered out.

On the 22d of March, 1865, the Seventh was ordered on the expedition from Eastport, Miss., across the Gulf States. On the 1st of April it was engaged in the battle of Plantersville, Ala., and on the following day arrived in front of Selma, in the assault upon the works of which it participated. On the 16th of April it was in the engagement near Columbus, and on the 20th it arrived at Macon, Ga., where, the war having substantially closed, it remained until the 18th of August, when it was mustered out of service.

EIGHTY-FOURTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Eighty-fourth Regiment was recruited under the direction of William G. Murray, in the counties of Blair, Lycoming, Clearfield, Dauphin, Columbia, Cameron, and Westmoreland. The men rendezvoused at Camp Crossman, near Huntingdon, and subsequently at Camp Curtin. Recruiting commenced early in August, and towards the close of October an organization was effected by the choice of the following field-officers: William G. Murray, colonel; Thomas C. Macdowell, lieutenant-colonel; Walter Barrett, major.

On the 31st of December the regiment was ordered to Hancock, Md., arriving Jan. 2, 1862. Here it received arms, Belgian muskets, and crossing the Potomac, proceeded rapidly to Bath, where a portion of the Thirty-ninth Illinois, with a section of artillery,

Lieut. Muhlenberg, was posted, confronting the enemy. Upon his arrival Col. Murray assumed command of the entire force, and at four o'clock on the morning of the 4th advanced to the eminence beyond the town and deployed in line of battle. He soon learned that Stonewall Jackson, with a well-appointed force of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, greatly superior to his own, was in his front. At eight o'clock Jackson began to press upon him, driving in his skirmishers. By skillful manoeuvring, preserving a bold front, he kept the enemy at bay until near nightfall, when he fell back to Hancock, with the loss of but one man, drowned in crossing the stream. During the night Gen. Lander arrived and assumed command, and Jackson, who had approached and was shelling the town, sent Col. Ashby, on the morning of the 5th, with a flag of truce, to demand its immediate surrender. Lander defiantly refused, and having been reinforced with Parrott guns, a spirited cannonade ensued, which was kept up during the entire day following. But this demonstration on the part of Jackson was to cover his movement upon Romney, and Lander, as soon as he discovered his antagonist's purpose, hastened away to secure its evacuation, which he did, bringing his forces into Cumberland. The Eighty-fourth made a forced march to the latter place, arriving on the 12th. Jackson having been foiled in his expedition to Romney by the rapid movement of Lander, returned to Winchester, and the Eighty-fourth was posted successively during the winter at the North Branch Bridge, at the South Branch Bridge, and at Paw Paw, points along the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. On the 2d of March Gen. Lander died, the command devolving on Col. Kimball, and soon after the regiment moved on to Winchester. Here Gen. Shields took command of the division, and about the middle of the month drove the enemy up the valley, four miles beyond Strasburg, skirmishing with his rear-guard, who destroyed bridges and obstructed the way as he went. As Shields returned to Winchester, Jackson, reinforced, followed closely on his track, the Eighty-fourth marching on the 20th from its camp near Strasburg, without a halt, to Winchester. At five P.M. on the 22d it returned at double-quick through the town, and moved to the support of the Union cavalry, posted at the west end, which the enemy was engaged in shelling. Soon after the regiment arrived upon the ground Gen. Shields was struck by a fragment of shell and disabled, the command again devolving on Col. Kimball. The Eighty-fourth was ordered to fix bayonets in anticipation of a charge, but the enemy soon after retreated, and was driven about two miles in the direction of Kernstown, where the regiment bivouacked for the night. On the following morning it was engaged in laying out the ground for a camp, when the enemy, at eleven A.M., attacked, and it was immediately ordered into line in support of artillery. Under cover of a wooded eminence on the right the enemy advanced, and with infantry and artillery gained a foothold upon the flank, behind rocks and a stone wall, where he seriously threatened the integrity of the Union line. This position the Eighty-fourth was ordered to charge. Forming upon the high ground near the Kernstown road, it moved gallantly through an open valley and up towards the wooded eminence, where were the guns. As it gained the crest the rebel infantry rose up from behind rocks and the fence where they had been concealed, and poured upon it withering volleys. The fire was returned with good effect; but, standing without shelter and at close range, it was fearfully decimated. Col. Murray's horse was struck, when he dismounted and advanced on foot. A moment later, while at the head of his men, and leading them on for the capture of the guns, he was himself struck in the forehead by a minie-ball and instantly killed. At this juncture, being without a field-officer, with two of its captains fallen, the regiment fell into some confusion, and a part of it fell back under the shelter of the crest. The remainder, led by Lieut. George Zinn, taking shelter behind trees, kept up a steady fire. At this juncture the Fifth Ohio came up on the right, and, with other troops, forced the enemy from his position. A general advance was ordered along the entire line, and the foe was driven in utter rout. Three hundred prisoners, two guns, four caissons, and a thousand stand of small-arms were taken. Out of two hundred and sixty of the Eighty-fourth who went into battle twenty-three were killed and sixty-seven wounded. Col. Murray, Capt. Patrick Gallagher, and Lieut. Charles Reem were killed.

After the battle the Eighty-fourth, under command of Maj. Barrett, was assigned to provost duty in the town of Berryville, where it remained until the 2d of May. It then joined in the general advance up the valley, and passing through Strasburg and Front Royal, proceeded to Fredericksburg. Scarcely had it reached its destination, when it was ordered back to Front Royal, where it arrived on the 30th. On the following day a smart skirmish was had on the Winchester road, after which the brigade,—the Fourth of Shields' division,—commanded by Col. Carroll, moved on towards Port Republic, arriving on the 8th of June. "We charged," says an officer of the Eighty-fourth, "what we took to be a wagon-train, but soon found that it consisted of about thirty pieces of artillery with wagon covers, which gave us a warm reception. The next day, June 9th, the enemy came out in large numbers, and advanced to the attack. He came up in fine style, and fought hard to turn our right flank, but was repulsed with great loss. While we were following up our advantage, however, his forces outflanked us on the left, and came in on our rear. We then faced about, and the Third Brigade of our division coming up, we had them between two fires, and they soon fled v. the mountains. He had by this time reformed his lines in front, and was coming down in such numbers as to make a resistance out of the question, and the general gave the order to fall back. Now commenced a running fight. He followed us for several miles, and kept his batteries at work in a manner that showed that he was familiar with the route. His cavalry made repeated charges, but was repulsed by the steady fire of our infantry. We finally came upon the First and Second Brigades, drawn up in line, with Gen. Shields in command, when the enemy gave over the pursuit and rapidly retired."

From Port Republic the division marched to Alexandria, whence the First and Second Brigades proceeded to the Peninsula, and the Third and Fourth went into camp near the town. The campaign had been a severe one, the marches long and difficult, the men poorly clad, and much of the time subsisting on scanty rations. On the 25th of June, Samuel M. Bowman, of Columbia County, late a major in the Fourth Illinois Cavalry, who had seen service under Grant and Sherman in the Western army, was commissioned colonel, Maj. Barrett was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and Adj. Thomas H. Craig to major. In July the regiment broke camp and marched out to join Pope's army. Carroll's brigade was here attached to Ricketts' division of McDowell's corps. In the battle of Cedar Mountain, which occurred on the 9th of August, the regiment was not under fire until after dark, when a few of the enemy's shots and shells reached its ranks. On the 14th it joined in pursuit of the enemy, following him up to the Rapidan, occupying the line of the river until the 19th, when it retired to the Rappahannock. Here for a week the rebels were held at bay, the fighting being general along the entire line, for the most part with the artillery. As soon as it was ascertained that the enemy had turned Pope's right flank, Ricketts' division was sent to Thoroughfare Gap, to check the progress of Longstreet's corps on its way to join Jackson, already at Manassas Junction, in Pope's rear. In the engagement which ensued the regiment took little part. On the 29th it moved into position on the right flank of the army, near Groveton, and on the morning of the 30th was warmly engaged. It remained upon the field until after dark, and for several hours after the mass of the army had crossed Bull Run. It was finally charged by a force of the enemy which approached under cover of darkness. Uncertain whether it was friend or foe advancing, Lieut. Alban H. Nixon volunteered to go out and ascertain his true character. He passed the outer pickets without discovery, and soon found himself in the very midst of Gen. Pender's South Carolina troops, who were moving upon the flank of the brigade, and only waiting the signal that its retreat was cut off to move upon and capture it entire. At the peril of his life Nixon shouted, "They are the enemy, boys!" when a timely retreat was ordered, and the greater part of the brigade was snatched from the clutches of Pender's troops. Enraged at having their well-laid plans thus suddenly frustrated, they threatened Nixon with instant death, and were only prevented from executing it by a fellow-prisoner, who seized him by the arm and exclaimed, "You will not shoot an unarmed man?" He was spared, and with other officers and men found upon the skirmish line was marched away to Richmond. When the regiment arrived within the defenses of Washington it had scarcely seventy men in its ranks fit for duty. In consequence of its severe losses it was ordered to light duty at Arlington Heights, in the command of Gen. Whipple, where it remained during the Antietam campaign. In the mean time, through the exertions of patriotic citizens of Pennsylvania, some of whom accepted commissions, headed by Col. Bowman, about four hundred recruits were added to its ranks, which, with the return of men from hospitals and from furlough, brought its numbers up to the full standard of a regiment.

About the middle of October it proceeded to rejoin the army, near Berlin, and marched with it to the neighborhood of Fredericksburg. In the campaign which followed it continued in Gen. Whipple's independent division. On the second day of the battle of Fredericksburg, Gen. Griffin called on Gen. Whipple for Carroll's brigade. It was promptly ordered forward, and moved up through the town under an incessant shower of shot and shell. Taking temporary refuge in a cut of the Fredericksburg and Richmond Railroad, the officers dismounted. At the word of command, climbing the steep acivity at double-quick, the entire brigade rushed on and soon reached the front. Such was the spirit and daring of the movement that two companies of the Eighty-fourth reached a point considerably in advance of the line of battle, whence they had to be recalled. During the following night the enemy approached stealthily under cover of darkness, with the expectation of surprising and forcing the part of the line where lay the Eighty-fourth and One Hundred and Tenth Pennsylvania, but was handsomely repulsed. At the close of the action the regiment retired with the army, and went into winter-quarters. Gen. Carroll, in his official report, says, "Where all did so well it seems unvidious to particularize; but I cannot forbear mentioning Col. S. M. Bowman and Maj. Milton Opp, of the Eighty-fourth, and Lieut.-Col. Crowther, of the One Hundred and Tenth, whose coolness, judgment, and unsparing bravery were conspicuous."

Under Gen. Hooker the army was reorganized, and the Eighty-fourth and One Hundred and Tenth Pennsylvania and Twelfth New Hampshire constituted the Second Brigade of the Third Division (Whipple's) of the Third Corps, and Col. Bowman was assigned to its command. During the winter the principal duty consisted in guard and picket, in which the regiment shared, frequently meeting parties of the enemy, who made their appearance on the north bank of the river. By close scrutiny Col. Bowman discovered that permits, or what purported to be permits, from Union authorities were used by the enemy to come within our lines. These irregularities were reported and effectually broken up.

The part taken by the regiment in the Chancellorsville campaign is clearly shown by the following extract from Maj. Opp's official report: "After severe marches, occupying a period of five days from the 28th of April, we were brought in contact with the enemy on the afternoon of the 2d of May. In a reconnoissance made by two divisions of the Third Corps to the left of Chancellorsville, and in the vicinity of an old furnace, the regiment was ordered to advance in line, with flanking companies thrown forward as skirmishers, to unmask the position of the enemy. Under the immediate supervision of Col. Bowman, commanding the brigade, the object was successfully and handsomely attained, with the loss of only two men wounded. On the morning of the 3d, at daylight, we were judiciously and strongly posted to the left of the plank-road, and to the left of Chancellorsville, as a reserve force. The attack of the enemy had continued but a short time, when one line to the front of us gave way. Col. Bowman's orders to the Eighty-fourth and the One Hundred and Tenth to advance and occupy the position just abandoned were promptly and gallantly executed. The old lines were regained, and held for about an hour and until all the regiments on the right and left of the Eighty-fourth had retired, leaving us in an isolated and exposed position. In the hope that reinforcements would arrive, I still held the men in place, maintaining a steady and effective fire to the front. It was discovered, however, that a large force of the enemy had succeeded, by making an extensive detour under cover of a dense wood, in gaining our rear, where he was supported by a vigorous enfilading fire from several guns planted on an eminence to our front and left. It became obvious that to remain was equivalent to capture in a body, while to retreat was perilous in the extreme. The latter alternative was adopted. The retreat was executed in good order, but not without heavy losses and severe fighting. In numerous instances the men clubbed their muskets in hand-to-hand encounters. Parties who had been overpowered, seizing opportune moments, took up guns at hand, demanded and obtained the surrender of many of their captors. Lieut. Farley, of Company F, who had been captured in the strife, headed a number of our men, and succeeded in extricating himself, and in capturing one captain, two lieutenants, and twenty-five men. These, with five men captured before the retreat began, made an aggregate of thirty-three rebel prisoners taken by the regiment. Our own losses were necessarily heavy from the peculiarity of the situation. Of three hundred and ninety-one officers and men engaged, two hundred and nineteen were killed, wounded, and missing. Capt. Jacob Peterman was among the killed, and Capt. C. G.

Jackson, Lieuts. William Hayes, Albert Steinman, John R. Ross, George S. Good, and Asst.-Surg. John S. Waggoner severely wounded, most of whom fell into the enemy's hands."

The regiment participated in the operations of the brigade on the new line taken up on the morning of the 4th, but without further casualties. Gen. Whipple was killed in this engagement, and the losses of his division were so great that it was broken up and the regiments assigned to other commands. The Eighty-fourth became part of Gen. Carr's brigade of the Second Corps, and was separated from the One Hundred and Tenth, with which it had served from its entrance to duty. On the 11th of June, Col. Bowman was ordered to special duty, and never afterward rejoined the regiment. In December previous, Maj. Milton Opp had been promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. George Zinn to major.

In the Gettysburg campaign, the regiment upon its arrival at Taneytown, Md., was detailed as guard to the corps train, and immediately proceeded with it to Westminster, where it was employed in forwarding supplies to the battle-field, a vitally important duty, but one devoid of heroic incident.

Upon the return of the army to Virginia, the regiment was engaged at Wapping Heights on the 24th of July, in the neighborhood of Thoroughfare Gap on the 10th of October, at Freeman's Ford in a sharp skirmish on the 13th, at Bristoe Station on the 14th and again on the 19th, at Kelly's Ford on the 7th of November, at Jacob's Ford on November 27th, at Locust Grove on the 28th, and at Mine Run on the 30th, losing four men mortally wounded, five slightly wounded, five missing, and one officer, Lieut. Good, captured. At the conclusion of the campaign the regiment returned to the neighborhood of Brandy Station, where it went into winter-quarters. In January, 1864, a considerable number of the regiment re-enlisted, and were given a veteran furlough. On the 6th of February the enemy crossed the Rapidan in some force, and the Eighty-fourth moved with the column sent against him. He was driven back and one hundred of his men were taken prisoners.

Upon the opening of the Wilderness campaign the regiment moved with the corps by the Germania Ford, and while marching on south along the Fredericksburg road, on the afternoon of the 5th of May, the enemy was discovered moving down in heavy force upon its flank. Line of battle was immediately formed and advanced to meet him, the fighting becoming general along the whole line, extending for miles. On the following day the fighting was very severe, and proved particularly disastrous to the Eighty-fourth, resulting in the loss of many brave men. Lieut.-Col. Opp, while leading in a charge, received a wound through the right lung which proved a mortal hurt. He was a brave man, and sincerely mourned by his men. On the 7th the regiment moved on towards the left, and on the 8th, near Spottsylvania Court-House, Company K had a brisk skirmish. At Pamunkey River, on the 10th, the regiment was again engaged, driving the enemy across the stream. On the morning of the 12th it joined in the brilliant charge of Hancock's corps, carrying elaborate lines of works, and making large captures of men and guns. The following extract from a diary of Capt. L. B. Sampson will convey some idea of the arduous service of the regiment in this campaign: "May 14th skirmished, moved to the right, skirmished all the afternoon; 16th, lay in line all day; 17th, fought on the picket line, drove the enemy into his works; 18th, skirmished all day; 19th, marched to Spottsylvania Court-House; 20th, lay in line of battle all day, received a good shelling; 21st, marched to Guiney Station, thence to Bowling Green, thence to Milford Station on the Po River; 22d, rested all day; 23d, marched to the North Anna, charged and carried the rebel works, Company K volunteering to hold a bridge,—a warm time they had of it; 24th, crossed the river under a heavy fire; 25th and 26th, rested; 27th, marched to the Pamunkey and crossed at Hanover City; 29th, skirmished and built works; 30th, lay in the works all day; 31st, our brigade, Col. Blaisdell commanding, fought the first battle of Pleasant Hill; June 1st, our regiment had a sharp skirmish at Pleasant Hill,—we lost a good many men for a small fight." In this latter engagement, Lieut. Nixon, who had saved the regiment from capture at Bull Run by his timely signal, even at the peril of his life, was again severely wounded with the loss of his left arm.

Such was the general character of the service until the regiment reached the James on the 14th of June, when it crossed and was at once engaged in the operations of the siege of Petersburg. Advancing the lines, building fortifications, and defending the ground gained, interspersed with occasional assaults, filled up the measure of its duty until the 27th of July, when it recrossed the James, and had part in the engagement at Deep Bottom. Returning to the lines in front of Petersburg, it was again engaged in the varied duties of the siege until the 14th of August, when it again moved to Deep Bottom, and in the sharp engagement which ensued the enemy was driven out of his works at Charles City Cross-Roads and some prisoners taken. Returning again to Petersburg, it resumed its place upon the works. On the 1st of October it moved by rail with the corps to Yellow House, and thence marched to the extreme left of the lines. The first line of the enemy's works was charged and carried. The second line was charged, but the column was repulsed. Lieut.-Col. Zinn had command of the assaulting party, and while urging on his men in the final charge was severely wounded.

In October the men whose terms of service had expired were mustered out, and the veterans and recruits were organized in a battalion of four companies, which remained on duty until the 13th of January, 1865, when it was consolidated with the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania, and thenceforward until the end of the war formed part of that organization. The battalion participated in the operations of the corps upon the Weldon Railroad on the 27th of October, and again on the 9th of December, in the latter destroying the road as far as Bellefield Station. Upon the consolidation of the battalion with the Fifty-seventh, Lieut.-Col. Zinn became colonel, George W. Perkins lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. Samuel Bryan major. The Fifty-seventh was finally mustered out of service on the 29th of June, 1865.

NINETY-SECOND REGIMENT (NINTH CAVALRY).

The Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry, Ninety-second of the line, at first known as the Lochiel Cavalry, was organized on the 29th of August, 1861, in compliance with an order of the Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, with Edward C. Williams, of Harrisburg, as colonel, Thomas C. James, of Philadelphia, as lieutenant-colonel, and Thomas J. Jordan, of Harrisburg, as major. Under this authority the officers above named appointed the necessary line-officers, and directed them to proceed at once to recruit men for their respective companies. The place of rendezvous was at Camp Cameron, near Harrisburg. The regiment was composed of twelve companies, principally raised in the counties of Dauphin, Luzerne, Lancaster, Huntingdon, Perry, Cumberland, Mifflin, Blair, Wayne, Chester, Lehigh, Susquehanna, and in the city and county of Philadelphia. The field and many of the line-officers and privates had served for the short term in 1861, and Col. Williams had served in the militia as early as 1832; had served with Gen. Scott in Mexico from the capture of Vera Cruz to the first surrender of the capital, receiving a wound at the storming of Chapultepec, and had commanded, with the rank of brigadier-general, the brigade known as the Scott Legion of Philadelphia in the three months' service.

By the 1st of October the companies were full, and the men, by drill and discipline, fitted for the field. On the 20th of November, by order of the Secretary of War, the regiment moved by rail to Pittsburgh, and thence by boat to Louisville, Ky., where upon its arrival it was reported to Gen. Buell, in command of the Department of the Cumberland, and placed in camp at Jeffersonville, Ind., opposite to Louisville. Mounted drill was at once commenced, a school for officers established, and by the 10th of January, 1862, by constant hard work and strict discipline, the regiment had acquired such proficiency that it was ordered to the front, the enemy occupying the line of Green River. On the advance of Gens. Buell and Mitchell, in the early part of February, upon Gen. A. Sidney Johnston's position at Bowling Green, in compliance with an urgent request made by citizens and the Legislature of Kentucky, the regiment was ordered to remain for the protection of the State, and was posted, the First Battalion, under command of Col. Williams, at Grayson Springs, the Second, under Lieut.-Col. James, at Calhoun, in Western Kentucky, and the Third, under Maj. Jordan, at Bacon Creek, on the line of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

On the 5th of March the regiment was ordered into Tennessee, the First Battalion to Springfield, the Second to Clarksville, and the Third to Nashville. Soon after reaching Nashville the Third Battalion was moved to Gallatin, and on the 4th of May it first met the enemy under Morgan at Lebanon, where, with the Seventh Pennsylvania and the Third Kentucky Cavalry, it most signally defeated that daring partisan, capturing two hundred and ninety-three of his men, with Lieut.-Col. Wood, Morgan's second in command, Morgan himself narrowly escaping capture by the fleetness of his celebrated steed to the Cumberland River, which he swam, leaving the animal a prize to the regiment. On the 14th of May the Third Battalion marched from Lebanon to Livingston, in Overton County, after Morgan, who was again in the field, and at Spring Creek came upon his rear-guard, where after a spirited action the guard was captured, with the quartermaster of Morgan's brigade. Pushing on after Morgan, who declined fighting, he was forced to the Cumberland Mountains at Sparta, where his command scattered upon the various roads leading to Chattanooga. On the 3d of June the Third Battalion marched from Lebanon, Tenn., to Tompkinsville, Ky., and on the 6th, Capt. Hugh McCullough was warmly engaged at Moore's Hill, defeating Col. Hamilton, who had a largely superior force, with a loss of the leader, Capt. McCullough, and four men killed and ten badly wounded. Capt. McCullough, a brave and competent officer, was shot through the stomach while leading his men to the charge. On the 9th of July, 1862, Morgan, with a force of over two thousand men, advanced against Tompkinsville. To meet this force Maj. Jordan, who was in command of the post, had but two hundred and thirty, and after maintaining an unequal contest for two hours, finding himself being surrounded, he retired to Burksville, Ky. In this engagement fifty-seven of the enemy were killed and one hundred and forty wounded, while the loss in the battalion was only ten killed, fourteen wounded, and nineteen taken prisoners. Among the latter was Maj. Jordan, who had his horse killed in the action. Lieut. Aaron Sullivan was among the killed.

In the mean time the First Battalion remained at Springfield, and the Second at Clarksville. Finding that the enemy was penetrating Kentucky in large force, the regiment was again united under Col. Williams, at Lebanon, Ky., early in August, and was employed in keeping the State clear of Morgan and his bands and in watching the advance of Kirby Smith. After the disastrous battle of Richmond, Ky., on the 30th, in connection with the Ninth Kentucky Cavalry, it covered the retreat of Gen. Nelson to Louisville, fighting daily the enemy's advance under Jenkins and Col. Scott, of the First Louisiana Cavalry, who displayed great activity, attacking at every favorable point. At Shelbyville it had a sharp encounter, defeating Jenkins, killing twenty-seven of his men and capturing forty-four. After reaching Louisville it was employed in guarding the roads in the direction of Tennessee, on which Gen. Buell was marching for the relief of Kentucky. Upon Gen. Buell's arrival, in conjunction with the Second Michigan, it took the advance to Perryville, and by its boldness in pushing the enemy's rear brought on the sanguinary battle fought there, sustaining the fire of his infantry until relieved by McCook's corps. It then formed on the right of the line, and by its steadiness foiled every attempt of the enemy's cavalry to turn its flank. In this action it had ten killed and twenty-seven wounded. In general orders issued after the action Gen. Buell says, "The Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry behaved most bravely, being at one time compelled to stand for three-quarters of an hour under the concentrated fire of three batteries of the enemy's artillery, and only retiring when ordered to do so."

By hard service the regiment had by this time become much weakened, and about one-half of the men were dismounted. It was accordingly ordered to Louisville for fresh horses and equipments. After receiving these, in company with the Second Michigan, it marched to Nicholasville to prepare for a raid into East Tennessee upon the railroads communicating with the rebel capital, by which succor should be prevented from reaching Gen. Bragg before the advance of Rosecrans to Stone River. On the 22d of December the expedition, under command of Gen. Carter, left Nicholasville, and on reaching Big Hill all the commissary stores and one hundred rounds of ammunition per man were distributed, roads and civilization were left behind, and the command took to the deer-paths of Pine, Cumberland, and Clinch Mountains. To one unacquainted with the way it is difficult to form any adequate conception of the hardships which the troops encountered on this march. These mountains, cheerless and dark, and savage as when Boone first saw them, are at this point one hundred miles wide, and can only be crossed by following the paths worn by the deer and the Indian ages before. Over these paths, in single file, marched the regiments, traveling day and night, swimming the Cumberland and Clinch Rivers, and fording the numerous creeks on the route, until the 1st of January, 1863, when it reached the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad at the bridge spanning the Watauga. This was defended by a company of about one hundred strong from the command of Gen. Humphrey Marshall, well intrenched. As time was all important, the cavalry was dismounted, the place carried by assault, and the bridge, a structure of two long spans, was burned. As it was deemed unwise to cumber the column with prisoners, the captured party was at once paroled, and the command moved down the railroad ten or twelve miles to the point where it crosses the Holston River. The bridge here was defended by a force of two hundred and fifty men, having stockades and intrenchments skillfully constructed for its defense. Without delay these were stormed, and the entire rebel force taken prisoners. In this action the Ninth lost six killed and twenty-five wounded. Among the latter was Sergt. Ellis T. Hamersly, who was shot through the thigh, the missile inflicting a painful and dangerous wound. All the badly wounded were left with the paroled enemy, the command being without ambulances, with the exception of Sergt. Hamersly, who resolutely refused to remain, and succeeded in keeping his horse and moving with the column until it reached Kentucky. After leaving the Holston bridge, and destroying a trestle-work of nearly a mile across a swamp, the command faced for Kentucky, and by skillful strategy, joined with signal enterprise and rapidity of movement, succeeded in eluding the enemy, eight thousand strong, under Marshall, and recrossed the Cumberland Mountains, returning by the same paths by which it advanced. The success of this raid, in the face of a greatly superior force of the enemy, was the cause of so much chagrin to the rebel chieftains, that Marshall, the commander, was relieved and never afterwards restored to his command.

The regiment reached Nicholasville from this raid on the night of the 13th of January, with two-thirds of its men dismounted, the animals for more than one hundred miles while crossing the mountains being without food. In the mean time, Col. Williams, for some cause of difficulty involving a question of rank, had resigned, and Lieut.-Col. James on the 13th of January died. Maj. Jordan was accordingly promoted to colonel. After a few days' rest, the regiment marched to Louisville, where it was remounted, and thence by rail to Nashville. On the 8th of February, two days after its arrival, it proceeded, by order of Gen. Rosecrans, to Franklin, where, after a sharp skirmish, Gen. Forrest's brigade of the enemy was driven from the town. Col. Jordan's command here formed the right wing of the Army of the Cumberland, which was now confronting the enemy at Liberty on the left, Shelbyville and Tullahoma in the centre, and Triune and Franklin on its extreme right. At Spring Hill, fourteen miles in front of Franklin, was the extreme of the left wing of the enemy, commanded by Gen. Van Dorn, Wheeler and Forrest commanding divisions under him, with a force of twelve thousand cavalry. The advance brigade of this force was at Thompson's Station, nine miles out on the Columbia pike, the Eighth Mississippi doing picket duty three miles nearer Franklin, and the Fourth Mississippi performing the same duty five miles to the right, on the Carter's Creek pike. For eighteen days the Ninth, aided by three hundred men from the Second Michigan Cavalry, without other support, confronted this strong rebel force, and daily, to deceive the enemy, made strong attacks upon his advance positions. This bold strategy was entirely successful, and the weakness of the post was not discovered by Van Dorn until the morning of the 4th of March, when he advanced in force to storm the place; but a division of infantry, under Col. John Coburn, of Indiana, having reached Franklin during the night of the 3d, the whole command marched out on the morning of the 4th, and four miles from Franklin met the enemy. After a hotly-contested engagement, which lasted from nine in the morning until three in the afternoon, the enemy was finally driven back to his position at Thompson's Station. In this action the regiment suffered severely, having twelve killed and fifty-one wounded. On the following morning, Col. Coburn, who had assumed command, determined to pursue and drive the enemy from the station, his chosen ground. Immediately after daylight, Col. Jordan was ordered to advance with his regiment and drive the enemy into position. As Jordan moved out skirmishing opened, and every moment became heavier. At the hills in front of the station the enemy made a determined stand, but the First Battalion, under Lieut.-Col. Savage, and the Second, under Maj. Detweiler, by a most gallant charge, drove him from his position and held the ground until the infantry had formed and advanced to their relief. This action proved disastrous to the Union arms, and Col. Coburn, with three thousand eight hundred infantry, was captured. Col. Jordan, with the cavalry, fought his way back to Franklin, bringing off two hundred and twenty prisoners, together with the entire artillery and baggage-train of the army and all the wounded that the ambulances could bear. For the heroic part borne by the regiment in this action it was mentioned honorably in special orders by Gen. Rosecrans.

In the campaign against Bragg in Tennessee, which culminated in the battle of Chickamauga, the regiment took part, and with the First Brigade, First Division of the cavalry, under Gen. Stanley, led the advance of our army. In the initial movements it fought in the battles of Rover, Middletown, and Shelbyville, and at the latter place charged the left flank of the enemy, while the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry charged the centre, and in a most stubborn hand-to-hand encounter succeeded in capturing nearly a thousand prisoners, with the enemy's battery, breaking up entirely his cavalry organization, and driving the few who escaped as mere fugitives upon the main force at Tullahoma. Among the killed was Capt. Gilbert Waters. It also participated in the action at Elk River, and by passing the stream above the right flank of the enemy and boldly attacking him, forced him from his position at the fords in front of Gen. Turchin, enabling his command to pass the river and follow the retreating columns. At Cowan, a few days later, near the foot of the Cumberland Mountains, the regiment captured two hundred of the rear-guard of Bragg as he was passing. A few days previous to the battle of Chickamauga it penetrated to a point near Lafayette, Ga., and captured by a gallant charge a part of the advance guard of Gen. Longstreet, then marching from the army of Lee in Virginia to reinforce Bragg, and was thus enabled to give Rosecrans the first positive information of Longstreet's presence. At Chickamauga the regiment held the right of our line, and after the defeat of McCook's corps closed on the right of Gen. Thomas, and defended his flank during the remainder of the battle. For its conduct in this desperate encounter it received from Gen. Thomas a complimentary notice, and Col. Jordan was commended for his gallantry in the most flattering terms.

During the winter of 1863 and spring of 1864 it was in East Tennessee, and fought in the battles of Dandridge, New Market, Mossy Creek, and Fair Garden, capturing at the latter place the artillery of the enemy. The regiment having re-enlisted was given a furlough of thirty days, and returned to Pennsylvania early in April. By the latter part of May it was again in the field at Louisville, having recruited its thinned ranks in the mean time to twelve hundred men. While at Louisville receiving arms and horses, Gen. John H. Morgan made his last raid into Kentucky, and was pushing for Frankfort, at which place he designed crossing the Kentucky River, and then by overpowering the detachments scattered along the Louisville and Nashville Railroad as guard, breaking up the track and burning the bridges, cut off Sherman, who was then far on his march to Atlanta, from his base of supplies, and compel him to fall back to Chattanooga. Col. Jordan at once volunteered to defend Frankfort, and seizing all the horses necessary to mount his command, and arming his men with common muskets, he marched by night to the capital, fifty-four miles, and successfully held the place, compelling Morgan to abandon his well-laid scheme, and fall back towards Pound Gap, near which place he was badly defeated by General Burbridge, who had a division of cavalry in his rear.

The regiment soon after marched to Nashville, and thence to Chattanooga, arriving on the 2d of September. Here it was ascertained that the rebel Gen. Wheeler was crossing the mountains into Middle Tennessee, with all his cavalry. By order of Gen. J. B. Steedman, then in command at Chattanooga, the regiment at once started in pursuit, crossing the mountains direct to McMinnville, thence to Murfreesborough, where it arrived on the 5th. On the morning of the 6th it marched out twelve miles on the Woodbury and McMinnville Road to Readyville, where it attacked and utterly defeated Gen. Dibberell's brigade of Wheeler's command, taking two hundred and ninety-four prisoners, a large proportion of whom were wounded with sabre cuts. The charge in this action was led by Maj. D. H. Kimmel, in a most gallant manner. The next day by order received by telegraph from Gen. Thomas, Col. Jordan was placed in command of all the cavalry in Tennessee, and directed to pursue the retreating enemy. He marched the same afternoon, and at Woodbury, just at dusk, met and defeated a part of the rebel Gen. Williams' division, under Col. Anderson. On the following morning he continued the pursuit to McMinnville, and the day following to Sparta, Gen. Williams constantly avoiding an action, though he had more than double the force under Col. Jordan. At Sparta the enemy took to the mountains and passed into East Tennessee. For his conduct in refusing to fight, Gen. Williams was placed under arrest by Gen. Wheeler, from which he was not released until the end of the war. In acknowledgment of the good conduct of Col. Jordan and the troops under his command, of which the Ninth Pennsylvania constituted two-thirds, complimentary orders were issued by Gen. Van Cleve, at Murfreesborough, Gen. Milroy, at Tullahoma, and Gen. Steedman, at Chattanooga.

The regiment then marched to join Gen. Sherman at Marietta, Ga., and on the 14th of November started on its march with that great chieftain to the sea. Previous to moving it was assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division of Cavalry, the whole under command of Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, and was assigned to the right wing of the army under Gen. Howard, leading his advance to Macon and Milledgeville. On the 16th, the first day out from Atlanta, it encountered Gen. Wheeler, who with his cavalry occupied the old works of the enemy at Lovejoy Station, on the Macon Railroad. The position was a formidable one, having been well intrenched by Gen. Hood. As the brigade moved to the attack the enemy opened a galling fire from four guns, but after a short and sharp encounter, by a most gallant charge, the regiment gained a lodgment in the works, driving the enemy from his guns and capturing them with more than three hundred prisoners. The guns were at once manned by the regiment, and were retained by it until the end of the war. They were the same guns that had been surrendered to the superior forces of the enemy near Macon by Gen. Stoneman some months previous.

Early in December, while marching on Macon, it skirmished heavily with the enemy, and with the brigade pushed the cavalry of Wheeler within the defenses of the city. On the day following, in conjunction with Walcott's brigade of Wood's division, Fifteenth Corps, it fought in the battle of Bear Creek or Griswoldville, defeating Wheeler, but not without severe loss, having ninety-five men killed and wounded. Moving through Milledgeville to the left flank of our army, it demonstrated in the direction of Augusta, and after crossing the Ogeechee at the falls turned southeast towards Millen, one of the prison-pens for Union soldiers. When within one day's march of Waynesborough, Wheeler made a sudden night attack, but was defeated, though he followed up the command closely to Waynesborough, where he again made a fruitless night attack. On the day following, it having been discovered that the Union prisoners had been removed from Millen, and the necessity for proceeding farther in this direction obviated, the command turned toward Louisville, Ga., to form a junction with Gen. Baird's division of infantry, which would cross the Ogeechee at that point. During the day Wheeler followed closely, and at Buckhead Creek made a heavy attack upon the Ninth, which was in the rear, in the hope of cutting it off from the rest of the column already across the stream. By a bold charge the enemy was beaten off, and the regiment was enabled to join the remainder of the command, now in line of battle and awaiting attack. It had scarcely gained its position when the enemy advanced, but was met with such a galling fire that he was compelled to draw off, and the brigade marched on unmolested to Louisville. In all these engagements Wheeler's cavalry outnumbered that opposed to him.

Two days later, the infantry having come up, it again moved on Waynesborough. Gen. Dibberel's division of Wheeler's cavalry was found in line of battle at Buckhead Church and defeated. Pushing forward from its camp at Waynesborough, where it remained one day, the command on the following morning again attacked Wheeler, who had barricaded himself within cannon-shot of our front. The Ninth Pennsylvania had the centre, while the Ninth Ohio was on the right and the Fifth Ohio on the left, with the Third and Fifth Kentucky and Eighth Indiana in reserve. In this order the command moved over a beautifully undulating plain, and in twenty minutes the barricades were stormed and Wheeler was in full retreat. At Waynesborough he again made a stand, and after a severe action he was driven from the town, and retreated across Brier Creek, on the road leading to Augusta. On the same day the command faced towards Savannah, where it arrived with the whole army on the 21st of December.

After a month's delay the regiment again took the field, and entering South Carolina at Sister's Ferry marched through Robertsville and Barnwell to Blackville, on the Charleston and Augusta Railroad, where it encountered and defeated a portion of Wheeler's command, and following the railroad towards Augusta, two days later, developed the strength position of the enemy at Polecat Ponds, near Aiken, where he had been reinforced by Hampton's division. On the day following Wheeler and Hampton attacked with their whole force, but were signally defeated. Without pausing, the brigade moved towards Columbia, the capital of the State, and after taking Lexington and capturing a portion of Wheeler's rear-guard, moved in the direction of Charlotte, N. C., as far as Black Stake's Station, on the Columbia and Charlotte Railroad, where it met and defeated a force of the enemy. Crossing the Catawba at Rocky Mount, and marching thence by Lancaster and Chesterfield Court-House, it entered North Carolina, crossing the Great Pedee River near the southern line of the State, and occupied Rockingham. On the morning of the 11th of March the command reached Fayetteville, the enemy retiring, skirmishing slightly. After a few days of rest it moved towards Goldsborough, and on the 16th, at Averyborough, was engaged in a most determined action, lasting from six in the morning until two in the afternoon, against a division of the rebel army led by McLaws, which resulted in the capture of a large number of prisoners, with Gen. Rhett of the First Brigade South Carolina Heavy Artillery. In this action Capt. E. A. Hancock of the Ninth lost a leg, and Capt. John Boal was killed, and in the brigade every twelfth man was killed or wounded. The infantry coming up took up the fighting and carried the rebel breastworks, capturing the artillery and a large number of prisoners. In February Col. Jordan was promoted to brigadier-general, the command of the regiment still resting with Lieut.-Col. Kimmel, who had been promoted to that rank in September previous.

On the 17th the command marched toward Bentonville, on the left flank of the Twentieth Corps, and with it participated in the battle which ensued on the 19th, the cavalry assisting materially in securing a triumph on that hotly-contested field. After refitting and resting near Goldsborough, the cavalry on the 9th of April again took the field, and while the infantry moved directly on Johnston's position at Smithfield, it moved by a more circuitous route by the old battlefield of Bentonville, to reach the rear of the enemy and capture Raleigh. To accomplish this purpose required constant marching day and night. On the morning of the second day the cavalry struck the head of the enemy's retreating columns, and after a fierce and sanguinary conflict compelled the enemy to march by the flank, between Raleigh and Neuce River, towards Hillsborough. In this action Asst.-Surg. James Moore was wounded in the left lung while gallantly assisting by his presence in urging on the men.

On the morning of the 13th the First Brigade, under Gen. Jordan, entered Raleigh, the city having been surrendered promptly by the civil authorities on his approach. Passing through the city the enemy under Wheeler and Hampton was found in position on the Hillsborough road, and was immediately attacked. In the engagement which ensued the Ninth bore the brunt of the action. The enemy fell back, hotly pursued by the cavalry for ten miles, to Morrisville, where he again made a stand. The line was quickly formed, the charge sounded, and the position carried, the enemy retreating in the wildest confusion over the plain, broken into fragments by the plunging fire of the artillery from the heights overlooking the valley. The column being again formed, started in pursuit, when a flag of truce was discovered approaching. It was received by the Ninth, under which was delivered the letter of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, directed to Gen. Sherman, asking for a meeting to determine the terms of surrender of the army under his command. This was the last fighting done, and the last guns fired in Sherman's command were from the battery of the Ninth Pennsylvania Cavalry. From Morrisville the command marched to Durham, and the escort to Gen. Sherman when he proceeded to the Burnett House to meet Gen. Johnston, and again upon the occasion of agreeing to the terms of surrender, was furnished by this regiment, Maj. John M. Porter being in command. After the surrender the command moved through Greenville to Lexington, where it remained until the 18th of July, when it was mustered out of service. Returning to Harrisburg, it was finally disbanded, and the war-worn veterans retired to their homes and the peaceful avocations of life.

On the 7th of July, 1862, William W. Jennings, a citizen of Harrisburg, received authority to recruit a regiment for nine months' service. Seven companies, A, B, C, D, F, G, and H, were recruited in Dauphin County, Company E was recruited in Lebanon; I, in Adams and Lebanon; and K, in Lebanon and Schuylkill. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, when, on the 16th of August, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field-officers:

William W. Jennings, colonel; Henry C. Alleman, lieutenant-colonel; Jeremiah Rohrer, major. Company A was detached from the regiment soon after its organization by order of Gen. Wool, in command of the department, and assigned to provost duty in the city of Harrisburg. Just previous to the expiration of its term of service this company was ordered to Washington, but never rejoined the regiment. The remaining nine companies, eight hundred and sixty-nine strong, broke camp on the 17th and proceeded to Washington. The Peninsula campaign had terminated disastrously, and the legions of Lee were moving down upon Pope in the valley of Virginia. For ten days the regiment was encamped on Arlington Heights with other new regiments. It was brigaded with the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-eighth New Jersey, and the Twenty-seventh Connecticut, and on the 23d assigned to duty in guarding Chain Bridge, where it remained until the opening of winter, Col. Jennings commanding the brigade, and Lieut.-Col. Alleman the regiment.

At the beginning of December, upon the eve of Burnside's movement upon Fredericksburg, Col. Jennings was ordered to proceed with his regiment to Falmouth, where he arrived on the 9th, and was assigned to the Third Brigade,¹ of the Second Division, Second Corps. During the night of the 10th the engineers commenced laying pontoon bridges in front of the town, but before they were completed, the workmen were driven away by the enemy's sharpshooters, concealed in houses along the water's edge. Defeated in his first essay, Burnside ordered up his heavy guns, and opened upon the town. During the bombardment the regiment supported batteries, and when this failed of effect, Burnside called for volunteers to cross in boats and drive out the rebel sharpshooters. A party from Hall's brigade was chosen, among whom were members of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh, and leaping to the boats, and pulling lustily in the face of a shower of bullets, they succeeded in reaching the opposite shore. After a brief struggle the enemy was driven and the bridge was completed. Hall's brigade was the first to cross, and immediately commenced skirmishing to clear the town. Concealed in houses and coverts, from which they could fire with impunity upon the advancing troops, the rebels clung to their shelter, and by their unerring aim caused grievous slaughter. Capt. William Fox was the first man in the regiment hit, being instantly killed while crossing the river. Half of the town was thus skir-mished through, the enemy leaving the houses from one side as the Union troops were entering at the other, when the brigade was ordered to halt and occupy the ground gained, and the columns of Sumner commenced crossing. During the night of the 11th a sergeant and a squad of eleven men were captured and carried prisoners to Richmond. A fierce fire of artillery was opened upon the town on the following morning, and the streets were torn by solid shot; but the brigade held manfully to its work. At a little after noon of the 13th, when repeated attempts to carry the heights in front of the town had failed, Owen's brigade, to which the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh was temporarily attached, was led to the assault. Moving out to the low, open ground to the left of the city, all the while under a fierce fire of artillery in front, and a flank fire from a deflection in the hills to the right, Owen formed his men in line of battle, the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh on the left of the One Hundred and Sixth, and dashed forward to his desperate task. Braver hearts never beat than filled the bosoms of the men in that devoted line. Onward they went over the prostrate forms of the dead and the dying, and up to within seventy-five yards of the enemy's lines. But the storm of deadly missiles was here too terrible to breast, and they dropped prostrate upon the ground, and commenced screening themselves behind the dead bodies of their fallen comrades, with which the whole plain was strewn. To raise a head was instant death. In this perilous position the regiment lay for hours, exposed to a pitiless fire of musketry and artillery, and until night had put an end to the contest, when it was relieved with the brigade, and returned to the town. At the conclusion of the battle it retired to its former camp beyond Falmouth. The loss in the engagement was very severe, being two hundred and fifty-seven killed and wounded. Capt. William Fox and Lieut. James S. Shoemaker were among the killed, and Col. Jennings, Lieut.-Col. Alleman, Adjt. A. L. Chayne, Capt. James Henderson and John J. Ball, and Lieuts. James B. Keene, Marcus Novinger, Hudson Denny, Jerome W. Henry, J. W. Dougherty, and William R. Orth, among the wounded, the latter mortally.

The regiment was soon after settled in comfortable quarters, and was employed during the winter in picket and guard duty. On the 27th of April, at the opening of the Chancellorsville campaign, the Second Division, now commanded by Gen. Gibbon, moved out to the front of Fredericksburg, and having laid a pontoon bridge, crossed on the 3d of May. Gibbon was joined in the town by Sedgwick's corps, which had crossed below, and during the night had moved up to the city. An assaulting column was formed, and those frowning heights which had been so successfully defended by the enemy on the previous December were now triumphantly carried, prisoners, small-arms, and guns falling to the hands of the victors. Lieut.-Col. Alleman was wounded in the side and thrown from his horse. The enemy retreated towards Chancellorsville, and was closely followed by Sedgwick as far as Salem Church, where Lee, having turned back from Hooker's front, fell upon and crushed Sedgwick's corps, compelling it to withdraw to the left bank of the Rappahannock by Banks' Ford. In the mean time Gibbon, who had been left to hold Fredericksburg, took position around the city, and commenced throwing up rifle-pits. With no barrier left to oppose him, the enemy pushed forward from his triumph over Sedgwick, and soon made his appearance in Gibbon's front, where sharp skirmishing ensued. His position was held until the morning of the 4th, when, under cover of a dense fog, he recrossed the river. The loss of the regiment in the engagement was fifty-three killed and wounded. Lieut. Jacob R. Knisley was among the killed, and Lieuts. David Hummel, Jr., William P. Carmany, and J. W. Dougherty were among the wounded. The nine months' term of service of the regiment expired on the 14th, and in pursuance of orders it was relieved and returned to Harrisburg, where, two days thereafter, it was mustered out of service. During its brief term of duty at the front, of a little more than five months, it was engaged in two pitched battles unsurpassed in severity, and lost an aggregate of four officers and eighteen men killed, fourteen men who died of wounds, sixteen who died of disease, thirty-eight who were discharged by reason of disability, eleven who were captured, ten officers and one hundred and twenty-two men who were wounded, and three officers who resigned.

In General Orders No. 77, Brig.-Gen. Gibbons, commanding the Second Division of the Second Corps, bears this testimony to the services of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment:

"HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, SECOND CORPS.
"NEAR FALMOUTH, VA., May 13, 1863.

"The adjutant-general's office having corrected the date at which the time of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers expires, and decided after representation made from the headquarters that the time expires on the 14th inst. instead of the 20th inst., the regiment is hereby relieved from all duty with this army and will repair to Harrisburg, Pa., there to be mustered out of service. In bidding farewell to this regiment the general commanding the division recalls with pride and satisfaction that although in it, as well as in several other regiments in the service, a difference of opinion has existed in regard to the expiration of the time of the men, this difference has never interfered with their duty as soldiers, and they can now return to their homes with the proud consciousness of duty well and faithfully performed. Your comrades will be glad to welcome you back to their ranks.

"By command of Brig.-Gen. Gibbons.

"Captain and Assistant Adjutant-General."

TWO HUNDRED AND FIRST REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

The Two Hundred and First Regiment, composed of men from Dauphin County, except Company K, from Franklin, and detachments from the iron works at Duncannon and Fairview, opposite Harrisburg, who formed part of Company D, was recruited at Harrisburg for one year's service, in compliance with an order of Governor Curtin dated July 29, 1864, issued under the call of the President of the United States of July 18th for five hundred thousand men. Pennsylvania's quota was ten regiments of one thousand men each, and this was the first ready for duty, its ranks having been filled to the maximum strength in less than thirty days. The men rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were organized into companies, clothed, armed, and equipped. A regimental organization was completed on the 29th day of August, with the following officers: F. Asbury Awl, colonel; J. Wesley Awl, who had recruited Company B, lieutenant-colonel; and John T. Morgan, who had recruited Company D, major. The field-officers had already been in the service, Col. F. Asbury Awl as adjutant of the Eleventh and captain in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh; Lieut.-Col. J. Wesley Awl as lieutenant in the First and captain in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh; and Maj. John T. Morgan as lieutenant in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Pennsylvania Regiment, and large numbers of the line-officers and enlisted men had previously been in the field.

On the 29th day of August, 1864, the regiment proceeded to Chambersburg with orders to report to Maj.-Gen. Couch, commanding Department of the Susquehanna, and went into camp five miles from the town, near the point where the pike crosses Back Creek. On the 1st of September Company B was ordered to Carrick Furnace, in Path Valley, and Company F to the mountain road leading from Fannettsburg to Burnt Cabins, and employed in erecting a line of works as a protection against an expected rebel raid across the mountain. On the 14th of September the regiment, with the Keystone Battery, marched through St. Thomas, Bridgeport, Cashtown, and Ruth Corner for exercise. On the 17th of September Company H, Capt. Ashenfelter, was sent to York, Pa., where it remained on duty at the United States General Hospital until the 21st of October, when it rejoined the regiment at Gainsville, Va. The same day Company F, Capt. Maloney, and Company G, Capt. Ensminger, under command of Maj. John T. Morgan, marched from camp near Back Creek to Bloody Run, Pa., with orders to report to Brig.-Gen. O. T. Ferry, commanding the Juniata District; Assistant Surgeon John H. McCreary accompanied the battalion. Shortly afterwards Company F was stationed at McConnellsburg, Pa. During the succeeding fall and winter these two companies were employed in the disagreeable and dangerous, but arduous, duty of arresting deserters, nearly five hundred being apprehended and sent to the front. The companies were mounted to assist them in the performance of the duty assigned. In December, Gen. Ferry being relieved, Maj. Morgan was placed in command of the Juniata District. These Companies F, G, and H never rejoined the regiment until ordered to Harrisburg for muster out.

On the 18th of September, Company C, Capt. McNally, was sent to Scranton, Pa., with orders to report to the provost-marshal of the Twelfth Congressional District.

On the 22d of September, Col. F. A. Awl was placed in command of the United States troops encamped near Back Creek, and on the following day they (the Keystone Battery, Patasco Guard, Maryland Volunteers, First Battalion One Hundred Days' Pennsylvania Volunteers, the Two Hundred and Second Regiment, and the Two Hundred and First Regiment) marched to Loudoun, Cove Gap, and Camp Hill, by way of Mercersburg and Shimpstown, Upton, and Greencastle, to Marshall roads, and back to camp. The regiment was regularly drilled at this camp, and an officers' school established, to which non-commissioned officers were admitted for tactical instruction. It was largely attended, and had beneficial results. On the 28th of September the six companies of the regiment were ordered to Greene County, Pa., where trouble was anticipated, arising from resistance to the draft then being made, and had proceeded on its way as far as Huntingdon, when it was met by orders to return to Washington, D. C., and report to Maj.-Gen. C. C. Augur, commanding Department of Washington, for orders. Lieut.-Col. J. W. Awl, in connection with his duties as president of a general court-martial, was placed in command of the troops near Chambersburg.

The regiment, having arrived at Washington, was ordered to report to Brig.-Gen. J. P. Slough, Military Governor at Alexandria, Va., and was by him sent to Manassas Junction, Va., where it arrived on the 4th of October, with orders to assist the Two Hundred and Fourth Pennsylvania Regiment, Col. George S. Gallupe, which had been sent out to cover the construction trains, in guarding the Manassas Gap Railroad, its property and trains. Gen. Sheridan had, a short time before, begun his campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, which finally terminated so gloriously at Cedar Creek. This railroad was to be used for the transportation of supplies to the army in the Shenandoah Valley. To keep this line open was of vital importance to the government, to break it up, hinder, and destroy trains the unceasing effort of the disloyal dwellers in the vicinity, aided as they were by Mosby and his guerrillas, who throughout the war had made this locality their favorite line of operations. The regiment had proceeded but a short distance beyond Manassas Junction when the peculiar tactics of the guerrillas became apparent. The train had stopped in the vicinity of a steep embankment for the purpose of putting off a detachment. The night was dark; and just in the middle of the embankment, the train fortunately moving slowly on account of the previous stoppage, the rails were discovered to be removed from the ties for a considerable distance, with the evident intention of wrecking the train with its load of human freight. While the track was being repaired the troops scoured the woods, drove off some guerrillas, who, being mounted, escaped pursuit, and arrested all citizens living in the vicinity.

The favorite pastime of Mosby and his men, aided by the residents, was to waylay trains, throw them from the track when at full headway by the process named, and attack the train and its defenders when in the confusion and distress of the overthrow. The regiment was stretched along the line of this road from Manassas Junction to Thoroughfare Gap, with headquarters at Gainville. The duty assigned was exceedingly arduous and harassing. If a soldier went outside the lines he was waylaid by skulking guerrillas, constantly on the watch, and suffered either death or captivity. Unceasing watchfulness and activity were essential, while frequent alarms kept every one on the stretch in anticipation of attack. The duty was intensely unpleasant, in constant danger, with scarcely an opportunity of winning honorable distinction, yet was faithfully performed with the loss of but few men. After the complete occupation of the road the secret removal of rails was scarcely probable, but attacks were frequent at selected points, under cover of which the rails were torn up, and thus the moving of trains delayed until repairs were made. These annoyances became so frequent that various expedients were resorted to to check them. The arrest of all citizens living in the vicinity of a raid on the road, or an attack proving ineffectual, the placing of a number of prominent rebel citizens and captured guerrillas upon each moving train proved a thorough protection thereto, and the free rides completely cured the desire to throw trains from the track or fire into them by ambushed guerrillas.

On the 7th of November, 1864, one lieutenant, the regimental commissary-sergeant, several non-commissioned officers and thirty-three privates of Companies E and H, were discharged by order of the War Department. The reason given was that they "had furnished acceptable substitutes." These discharges were peremptory, without desire or previous knowledge on the part of those concerned. The two companies named were largely made up of former employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The railroad desired their services, and, failing to secure the voluntary consent of the men, had them peremptorily discharged the service, both commissioned officers and enlisted men. No doubt the railroad company had furnished substitutes.

Shortly after the battle of Cedar Creek the Two Hundred and First Regiment with the others engaged in this guard duty by order fell back to Manassas Junction, tearing up and bringing away with them the material of the road. On the 13th of November the regiment was ordered to Alexandria, Va., relieving at that point the Twelfth Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps, and the companies of the Two Hundred and Second Pennsylvania on duty in the city. The regiment went into camp at Cattstown, and formed part of the guard in the line of defenses south of the Potomac, besides furnishing train guards on the Orange and Alexandria, and Loudon and Hampshire Railroads, and frequent escorts to detachments of stragglers and deserters forwarded from the camp of distribution to the various armies in the field.

Alexandria at this time contained the military prisons, which were filled with deserters and bounty-jumpers awaiting trial. It also contained the Soldiers' Rest, which was also a camp of distribution, into which all detachments of enlisted men were gathered previous to being forwarded to their regiments in the various armies. The furnishing of escorts to these detachments was part of the duty assigned to the Two Hundred and First. Quite a large number of the officers were detailed as members of the many general courts-martial then sitting at Alexandria for the trial of prisoners collected from the army East and West in the military prisons at that point.

On the 13th of May, 1865, Lieut.-Col. J. Wesley Aul was appointed commandant of the Soldiers' Rest and camp for distribution at Alexandria, in which position he remained until ordered to Harrisburg for muster out with the regiment. On the 24th day of May, 1865, Company G was ordered from Bloody Run, Pa., to Pittsburgh, and placed on provost duty at that point, with Capt. John T. Ensminger as provost-marshal. On the 27th day of May the regiment was ordered to Fort Delaware, Delaware, where it remained on duty until the 16th day of June, 1865, when it was ordered to Harrisburg for muster out. The scattered detachments joined the regiment at that point, and the muster out was completed on the 21st of June, 1865.

CHAPTER XXX.

The War for the Union (continued)—The Militia of 1862—First Regiment—Sixth Regiment—Independent Companies—Twenty-sixth, Thirty-sixth, and Thirty-seventh Regiments.

THE rebel army had no sooner achieved its triumph in the second battle of Bull Run than it hastened northward, and commenced crossing the Potomac. The southern border of Pennsylvania lay in close proximity, all unprotected, and by its rich harvests invited invasion. The Reserve Corps, which was originally organized for the State defense, had been called away to the succor of the hard-pressed army of McClellan upon the Peninsula, and was now upon the weary march, with ranks sadly thinned in the hard-fought battles of Mechanicsville, Gaines' Mill, Charles City Cross-Roads, and the second Bull Run, to again meet the foe, but powerless to avert the threatened danger. The result of the struggle on the plains of Manassas was no sooner known than the helpless condition of the State, which had been apparent from the first, became a subject of alarm. On the 4th of September, Governor Curtin issued a proclamation, calling on the people to arm and prepare for defense. He recommended the immediate formation of companies and regiments throughout the commonwealth, and, for the purpose of drill and instruction, that after 3 P.M. of each day all business houses be closed. On the 10th, the danger having become imminent, the enemy being already in Maryland, he issued a general order, calling on all able-bodied men to enroll immediately for the defense of the State, and to hold themselves in readiness to march upon an hour's notice; to select officers, to provide themselves with such arms as could be obtained, with sixty rounds of ammunition to the man, tendering arms to such as had none, and promising that they should be held for service for such time only as the pressing exigency for State defense should continue. On the following day, acting under authority of the President of the United States, the Governor called for fifty thousand men, directing them to report by telegraph for orders to move, and adding that further calls would be made as the exigencies should require. The people everywhere flew to arms, and moved promptly to the State capital. One regiment and eight companies were sent forward during the night of the 12th, and others followed as fast as they could be organized. On the 14th the head of the Army of the Potomac met the enemy at South Mountain, and hurled him back through its passes, and on the evening of the 16th and day of the 17th a fierce battle was fought at Antietam. In the mean time the militia had rapidly concentrated at Hagerstown and Chambersburg, and Gen. John F. Reynolds, who was at the time commanding a corps in the Army of the Potomac, had assumed command. Fifteen thousand men were pushed forward to Hagerstown and Boonsboro', and a portion of them stood in line of battle in close proximity to the field, in readiness to advance, while the fierce fighting was in progress. Ten thousand more were posted in the vicinity of Greencastle and Chambersburg, and "about twenty-five thousand," says Governor Curtin in his annual message, "were at Harrisburg, on their way to Harrisburg, or in readiness and waiting for transportation to proceed thither." The Twenty-fifth Regiment, under command of Col. Dechert, at the request of Gen. Halleck, was sent to the State of Delaware to guard the Dupont Powder-Mills, whence the National armies were principally supplied. But the enemy was defeated at Antietam, and retreated in confusion across the Potomac. The emergency having passed, the militia regiments were ordered to return to Harrisburg, and in accordance with the conditions on which they had been called into service, they were, on the 24th, mustered out and disbanded. The train on which the Twentieth Regiment was returning over the Cumberland Valley Road collided when nearing Harrisburg, with one passing in the opposite direction, by which four men were killed and thirty injured.

In a letter addressed to Governor Curtin by Gen. McClellan, thanking him for his energetic action in calling out the militia and placing them in the field, the general adds, "Fortunately, circumstances rendered it impossible for the enemy to set foot upon the soil of Pennsylvania, but the moral support rendered to my army by your action was none the less mighty. In the name of my army, and for myself, I again tender to you our acknowledgments for your patriotic course. The manner in which the people of Pennsylvania responded to your call, and hastened to the defense of their frontier, no doubt exercised a great influence upon the enemy." In an order issued by Governor Bradford, of Maryland, soon after the battle, he says, "To Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, and the militia of his State, who rallied with such alacrity at the first symptoms of an invasion, our warmest thanks are also due. The readiness with which they crossed the border and took their stand beside the Maryland bridge show that the border is, in all respects, but an ideal line, and that in such a cause as now unites us Pennsylvania and Maryland are but one."

THE FIRST REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

The following record of the campaign of the First Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, prepared by a private of Company K, is not only interesting, but worth preservation in this connection:

"With the general history of the struggle our people are familiar. But it has occurred to me, as I read over some old papers, which brought so vividly to mind scenes both tragic and comic connected with the invasion of 1862, that one or two sketches of the incidents of that campaign, gathered from the material before me, might not prove uninteresting, both to those who were participants and to those whose husbands, brothers, and sons went forth when all was uncertainty and gloom, to stand between them and the approaching foe. I know it is common to speak in terms of ridicule of the 'Militia,' and especially is this the case when we have all around us the scarred veterans of the recent conflict, who can tell of battles lost and won, while we can only speak of those that might have been. But there are one or two things to be remembered. In the first place, we were raw militia, sent forth without training or experience, to be brought into collision, if needs be, with Lee's skilled veterans, flushed with their recent success at the second Bull Run. In the second place, the first regiment, of which the Harrisburg companies formed a part, was sent down the valley alone, almost to the rebel lines, just before the battle of South Mountain, and at a time when neither Governor Curtin nor Gen. McClellan had any idea of the numbers of the enemy, or how far they had penetrated towards Chambersburg. The truth was that Longstreet's division was lying this side of Hagerstown on the Sunday morning when the cars landed us about two and a half miles beyond Chambersburg. It is very pleasant now to crack jokes at the expense of the militia, and make light of their perils and services in that brief campaign, but it was anything but a joke then, to men who were leaving families and homes with the possibility that they might be shot down upon the border, or perhaps captured en masse and consigned to the tender mercies of a Southern prison. We have since learned what kind of a fate that would have been.

"Said a gentleman of Hagerstown to the writer a year after the invasion of 1862, 'You Pennsylvania militia had no idea of the danger you were in when here, and it was well you had not;' and then he spoke of the fact, well known to the people there at that time, that a considerable rebel force had crossed the river on the night after the battle of Antietam, and were within a short distance of our lines. Had they known we were raw militia they would probably have captured us all. But, lastly, the facts to be mentioned have a local interest, and the narration is intended only for local readers; so without further apology I proceed. And I cannot better introduce my journal than by the following extract from Governor Curtin's message to the Legislature of 1863:

"In the month of September, 1862, after the second disaster at Bull Run, it became evident that the enemy had adopted an aggressive policy, and was about to invade the Northern States through Maryland and the southern border of Pennsylvania. Under the sanction of the President of the United States, on the 11th day of that month, I issued my proclamation, calling into immediate service fifty thousand of the freemen of this State. Under this call twenty-five regiments and four companies of infantry, fourteen unattached companies of cavalry, and four batteries of artillery were immediately organized and sent to the border, the greater portion advancing beyond the State line into Maryland. Gen. John F. Reynolds, at that period commanding the Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, was temporarily assigned by the Secretary of War to the command of these troops, by whose order they were returned to Pennsylvania, and by my proclamation disbanded on the 24th of the same month. In acknowledgment of the services rendered by the men of Pennsylvania, Maj.-Gen. McClellan, commanding the Army of the Potomac, by letter dated the 27th of September, 1862, acknowledging the service and thanking the State, uses the following language:

"The manner in which the people of Pennsylvania responded to your call, and hastened to the defense of their frontier, no doubt exercised a great influence upon the enemy;" and the Governor of Maryland, His Excellency A. W. Bradford, in an order dated September 29, 1862, used the following language in regard to these troops: "The readiness with which they crossed the border and took their stand beside the Maryland brigade, shows that the border is in all respects but an ideal line, and that in such a cause as now unites us, Pennsylvania and Maryland are but one."

"The proclamation of which the Governor speaks had been expected for some time. Rumors of coming danger filled the air, and for a week or ten days companies had been organized in most of the wards of the city, and every afternoon was spent in drilling. But when the order to march finally came, it was found that a good many of the incipient soldiers belonged to the Home Guard of which we read, who resolved 'never to leave their homes except in case of an invasion.' In one of the wards, where two full companies had been drilling for a week, so many were missing when the arms were distributed that the two had to be consolidated, and thus one full company was formed.

"The proclamation was read to the companies at the close of drill on Thursday, Sept. 11, 1862. On Friday they were ordered to be ready to start to Chambersburg at short notice, and the same afternoon they were marched to the arsenal and supplied with haversacks and canteens, and afterwards with muskets. The company to which the writer was attached was for some reason furnished with minies, while the others were armed with the old style of muskets, shooting buckshot and ball. On Saturday morning the regiment was organized, made up of three companies from Harrisburg and the remainder from different points in the Cumberland Valley. After being kept in the capitol yard the whole day, we were marched about half-past five o'clock in the evening to the round-house and there embarked in freight-cars for Chambersburg. As we proceeded down the valley we took in companies at Shiremansstown, Mechanicsburg, Carlisle, and other points, so that by the time we reached Chambersburg the regiment was full.

"We arrived in the vicinity of the town about midnight. Some of us, wearied with the tediousness of the journey, had innocently imagined that we should be quartered in some comfortable building for the night, and thus get at least a few hours of sleep. But alas for our expectations! After a brief delay the order was given to move on, and creeping around the town we were pushed out on the Franklin Railroad some two miles towards Hagerstown, and at length halted at the edge of a piece of woodland. The moment the train stopped cartridges were distributed and the men ordered to load their muskets and keep perfectly quiet. The prospect was not a pleasant one. We knew but little of the situation. Whether the rebel forces were within one mile or twenty of us was very uncertain, and the orders which had just been issued were not calculated to allay the excitement. If a volley had suddenly been poured in upon us or a troop of cavalry had surrounded the train and demanded our surrender we would not have been much surprised.

"But neither happened, and as the night wore on, the men assumed various recumbent postures and tried to get a little sleep. This was by no means easy. Neither the seats nor the floor of the cars were very soft, and the night was quite cold. The writer has a distinct recollection of seeing one of the editorial fraternity of the city rolling over the floor as if trying to find a soft place, groaning in spirit, and occasionally knocking his head against the butt of a loaded musket to the imminent peril of those whom the muzzle might hit if it fell. The reader, if a veteran, will excuse us. It was our 'first night out,' and we hadn't got used to it yet. We learned a little afterwards.

"But morning at length came, and with it the idea of breakfast. It opened gloomily, and with signs of the coming equinoctial. It was a strange Sunday to many of us. We heard the church bells ringing in Chambersburg, but we could not attend. All day long the boys were busy in erecting booths made of fence-rails, covered in with branches of trees, straw, &c., and by afternoon they had prepared a very comfortable shelter. About eleven o'clock we were furnished with breakfast—beef and bread, and an abominable decoction called 'dandelion' coffee. We can pardon the State authorities for providing this latter, considering the exigency; but we don't want any more of it. To do them justice, they afterwards furnished the genuine article.

"In the evening the regiment had its first dress parade in an open field adjoining the camp. The officers told us, by way of encouragement, that we performed exceedingly well for raw men, even though the muskets didn't all move together, and the 'orderlies' did get a little mixed up in coming to the front. It was observed by some of the men that our colonel, as he stood in front of the line with his arms folded, looked very much like the pictures of the 'Little Corporal.' As darkness came down upon us the camp-fires were lit, and at nine o'clock the drum-beat summoned us to repose. We laid us down beneath the shelters erected, some of us to sleep, others, to whom the whole scene was so novel and strange that it banished slumber, to pass a weary and wakeful night. During the day we had several times heard the distant report of artillery, and we knew not what the morrow might bring forth. We afterwards learned that we were listening to the sounds of the conflict at South Mountain.

"Monday and Tuesday, September 15th and 16th, were passed on the ground on which we first encamped, which was named 'Camp McClellan.' Part of each day was spent in drilling by squads, companies, and in battalion. Our camp was bounded on one side by the railroad, and on the other by the turnpike leading to Chambersburg. Towards noon on Monday we were roused by the shouts of the guards on the turnpike side of the woods, and a rush was made by the men to discover the cause of the excitement. We found that it arose from the passage along the road towards the town of a considerable number of ammunition wagons which had been captured from Longstreet's division of the rebel army by a party of Illinois cavalry, who were retreating from Harper's Ferry. Some of the wagons were driven by 'contrabands,' whose grins of delight, in view of their capture by Federal troops, were unmistakable. On the afternoon of the same day Capt. Byers' company of cavalry from Harrisburg passed by our camp on their way to Greencastle and Williamsport.

"On Tuesday some of us got leave to go into Chambersburg, where the luxury of a good wash and a good dinner at the 'Franklin Hotel' was something we fully appreciated. That evening the regiment received orders to make a forward movement early the next morning.

"Wednesday, the 17th, dawned upon us with a murky atmosphere and a drizzly rain. The regiment was formed into line about eight A.M., and marched about a mile and a half on the road towards Greencastle. Here we encamped anew, and supposing that we were to remain for a season, the men turned in and built new shelter-booths, levying contributions for that purpose upon the neighboring fences, and cutting boughs and gathering straw wherever it could be found.

"By this time other regiments of militia had been organized at Harrisburg, and pushed forward into the valley, and they were scattered around us at points not very far distant. Shortly after we reached our new camp-ground a Philadelphia regiment passed us, one of whose officers, after taking a survey of the booths which had been erected by our own men, astonished the writer by inquiring whether we were not going to build some for them also. He was politely informed that in this matter each regiment looked out for itself, and that there were still 'a few more fences left' to which they could have recourse. This turned out to be a memorable day in the history of the war. From an early hour in the morning we were conscious that a great battle was raging somewhere south of us. All day long the smothered roll of artillery could be heard, like distant thunder, and the men were gathered in groups at the edge of the woods, listening to the sounds of the conflict and anxiously speculating as to the result. It was the day of Antietam, and although we knew it not, the destinies of the country were for a time suspended upon the issue of the struggle. Our feelings were peculiar. Out of sight, but within hearing of one of the decisive battles of the war, and utterly uncertain whether our own or the rebel flag would be triumphant at its close. Had McClellan's army been defeated, we lay right in the pathway of the advancing foe, who would of course cross the border and push down the valley. What could a few thousands of raw militia do to stop his progress and save our homes? It was not until the next morning that the cheering news of McClellan's victory reached us.

"On Wednesday afternoon we were ordered to pull stakes and march to a new camp-ground, where, fortunately for us, we found very comfortable booths awaiting us, which had been built and then deserted, as ours were, by another regiment. Here we received orders to prepare rations and be ready to move early the next morning. To what point we were not told, but the rumor was—and it afterwards proved correct—to Hagerstown. In the morning we were roused at 4 A.M., and told to get everything ready, as we would start at daylight; but the sun rose and the day wore on, and still we tarried, hearing every hour fresh rumors from Gen. McClellan's army. The rebels were said to be badly whipped, and yet it seemed to be understood that the presence of the militia was needed in that quarter for some purpose or other. What that purpose was could only be conjectured, but various were the surmises of the sapient ones among us. One suggestion, which was met with a storm of indignation, was that we were to be detailed to assist in burying the dead on the Antietam battle-field. Another learned gentleman entertained his hearers by describing a sort of net into which the rebels had been driven by McClellan, the aforesaid net having but a single outlet, and that outlet we were to guard.

"One thing, however, was certain, and that was that we were to enter Maryland; and this raised the interesting question whether the Governor, who had called us out to repel a threatened invasion of our own soil, had any right to march us across the border. Many were the opinions pro and con. Some there were who resolutely declared that they would go no further than the Pennsylvania line. But the discussion was brought to a close about four o'clock in the afternoon by shipping us on board a train of cars which carried us rapidly towards the Potomac.

"And so it happened that, without giving us any opportunity of planting our feet firmly upon that line and holding it against the foe, we were shot across it almost before we knew it.

"The regiment reached the camping-ground this side of Hagerstown about eight o'clock in the evening. It was very dark when the train halted, and the first order given was to load our muskets and keep perfectly quiet as we passed through the town, the design apparently being to march us out towards Williamsport. A second order, however, directed us to leave the cars and encamp in the woods for the night. We had stopped in a deep cut, and it was necessary to lay planks from the cars to the top of the bank, on which, with some difficulty, the men clambered up. It had rained heavily during the day, and the ground was very wet. But worse than that was in store for us. We found ourselves on the camp-ground which had been occupied on the previous Sunday by Longstreet's division of the rebel army, who had left it in a perfectly filthy condition. It was hard to find a clean spot to sit or lie down upon. But the darkness was soon dispated to some extent by the camp-fires of the regiment, and after a hasty supper the men wrapped themselves in their blankets and stretched themselves upon the wet ground with their feet to the fire. It was the first night since we encamped at Chambersburg that we had not something dry to lie upon and some kind of shelter over us. The writer remembers being on guard that night, and in the intervals of duty trying to find a place to rest on the soft side of a rock, wrapped in a gum blanket.

"Friday morning opened upon us with a clear sky and a cool wind, which, with the aid of the sun, soon dried the ground. About ten o'clock we were startled by the sound of artillery, and a heavy cannonading was commenced and kept up for about two hours, apparently some six or eight miles south of us in the direction of the river. The discharges were rapid and continuous, and we could distinctly see the smoke rising in the clear morning atmosphere. Towards noon the regiment was addressed by the colonel, who asked the men if they were willing to go forward towards Williamsport. This was followed by a speech from Governor Curtin urging us to advance towards the river, telling us that he would lead the Pennsylvania troops himself, and would take us into no danger that he would not share with us. The men responded with enthusiastic cheers, and preparations were immediately made for a forward movement. Directly after dinner the regiment, in connection with several others encamped near us, the whole forming a brigade, took up the line of march through Hagerstown, and out on the Williamsport turnpike. About two miles and a half beyond Hagerstown the troops were halted and thrown out upon a ridge of ground cut by the turnpike, and extending to the right and left as far as the eye can see. It was known by the name of 'Brier Hill.' Here a regular line of battle was formed, facing towards the river, and stretching on both sides of the turnpike. In the centre, and right on the pike, a barricade was thrown up, and behind it was planted Miller's Philadelphia battery of light field-pieces. To the right of this battery, and within supporting distance, was stationed the First Regiment. In this position, during Friday night, the troops slept on their arms, and twice in the night an alarm was sounded, and they were roused in anticipation of an attack. There can be no question that a rebel force was between us and the river that night, and it was reported that a small body of cavalry passed very near our lines. In fact, so threatening seemed the danger that Governor Curtin, who was in Hagerstown at the time, was called up at midnight and hurried back in a special train to Chambersburg. If that seemed like deserting the men whom he had led forward, and whose danger he had promised to share, it may be said, by way of apology, that a Pennsylvania Governor would have been too rich a prize to run the risk of capture by the rebels. Had he fallen into their hands, only the end of the war would have seen his return to the North, and his subsequent services would have been lost to the country. What was the design of the rebel troops in crossing the Potomac that night can only be conjectured. Perhaps they were after the Governor, and perhaps after the military stores gathered at Hagerstown. They would hardly have ventured very far from the river with McClellan's army in their rear.

"It was during this afternoon and night that Gen. Reynolds, who had been placed in command of the militia, was first seen by our men. He was not recognized at first, as his 'stars' were concealed by an overcoat, and some rather amusing stories are told of encounters between him and some of the 'irregulars,' of whom the general seemed to have but a poor opinion. The 'boys' had heard of his disparaging remarks, and revenged themselves the next morning, in their own way, when he appeared on the field with Gen. Kenley, of Maryland.

"The night passed away without further disturbance, and Saturday morning dawned with a cloudless sky and a cool atmosphere. The writer, who had been detested with others to guard and bring up the baggage from the former camp-ground, rejoined the regiment about ten o'clock, and found the troops in the position before described, the line of battle being still kept up, but the men lying down or sitting about with their muskets stacked in the rear. The day was a beautiful one, and if the men had felt any trepidation during the darkness of the night, when the several alarms occurred, it had all passed away, and the brightness of the morning and the exhilarating atmosphere had given them new courage. The position occupied by our troops was quite an elevated one, and the view from it in either direction very pretty. In the rear you looked back upon Hagerstown, distant a couple of miles, and in front, not much farther off, are the hills which border the valley of the Potomac. It is a fact worthy of mention here, that on this same ridge Gen. Lee intrenched himself the following summer, on his retreat from Gettysburg, to prevent pursuit by Meade, while his troops slowly recrossed the river, then swollen by recent rains. A few months later the writer saw the remains of his rifle-pits and earthworks for cannon, and recognized the spot as the same on which our line was formed in September, 1862.

"While enjoying the beauty of the day and the surroundings, and listening to the chatting of the men about the occurrences of the preceding night, very suddenly the scene changed and a new alarm ran along the lines. Upon the turnpike next us all was bustle and haste. The wagons which had brought up our provisions and ammunition went hurrying back towards Hagerstown at full speed. Couriers went dashing backwards and forwards, the drums beat, and orders immediately reached us to reform the line of battle, somewhat broken in upon, and see that our guns were loaded and in proper condition for service. The men hurriedly grasped their weapons, closed up the line, and some fifty or sixty rounds of cartridges were served out to each. In a few moments Gen. Reynolds, accompanied by Gen. Kenley, of Maryland, came riding along the line, and as they reached the position occupied by our regiment, some of the boys called out, 'Three cheers for Gen. Kenley!' They were given with a will, and the general, pausing for a moment, turned towards the troops, and with a bow of acknowledgment, exclaimed: 'Men of Pennsylvania, I want you to form that line!' Gen. Reynolds slowly rode on, without seeming to notice the incident.

"About this time the Maryland brigade, which had arrived that morning, came marching along the turnpike, in full uniform, with drums beating and colors flying, passed on in front of the line down the turnpike towards the river, and were then thrown out on the extreme left of the line of battle. Their presence was very inspiring, as they were the only portion of the troops who had seen service and looked like regulars. A short time later, while the excitement was still at its height, Company K of the First Regiment, which, as before remarked, was the only company of the regiment armed with mintage muskets, was ordered out from the line to be thrown out as skirmishers. Down on to the pike we were marched, out through the barricade, behind which the field battery was stationed, and thence along the road towards the river, perhaps a half a mile, when we passed into a piece of woods skirting the road, and were ordered to deploy and form a skirmish line. The reader, even if a veteran, will readily see that all this looked like an impending fight, and this was our fixed impression. We learned then and there, if nothing more, something of the feeling, often talked of, of a raw recruit just as the battle opens. That hearts beat very rapidly just then and cheeks grew paler cannot be doubted; but the men could not afford to show cowardice in the presence of the thousands who were behind them, and the company marched out to the post assigned them as steadily as though they were on parade. Probably one-half of this company was composed of young men from Harrisburg, under age, and some of them several years below their majority. The writer will be excused for saying that he saw with astonishment the alacrity with which they, especially, moved out to what seemed like a speedy collision with the rebel forces.

"From the position we now occupied we could look back and see the long line of troops drawn out upon the ridge behind us, the Maryland brigade, with its blue uniforms, being conspicuous on the extreme left. We looked and waited anxiously for what should occur next, expecting each moment to hear the first sounds of battle. But we could see nothing in advance of us, and no hostile shot broke the stillness. The day passed on, the excitement gradually subsided, and with the exception of a continual riding of mounted men up and down the turnpike, nothing occurred to renew the alarm. About five o'clock in the afternoon the Philadelphia battery was moved farther up the road, and commenced firing, probably shelling the woods in advance of them. In a little while we saw the old line in our rear broken up, and the troops marched forward, with their drums beating, passing our skirmish-line, and taking up a new position about a mile nearer the river. No orders were given to us that night to rejoin our regiment, and the company remained where they were until the next morning. The other troops slept on their arms in their new position.

"During Saturday night, as the troops remained in their advanced position, they could see the flash of the rebel cannon across the river, and the flight of the shells thrown apparently to this side, though not reaching our lines. On Sunday morning Company K, which, as before stated, had remained in their old position all night, rejoined the regiment about ten o'clock. They were immediately ordered to the extreme front again, and, crossing some corn-fields, reached the brow of a hill some distance to the left of the turnpike. From this point half of the company were deployed and sent out upon the picket line, extending to the left for perhaps half a mile. It was a lovely autumnal morning, and at this time everything was still around us. Sheltered, as we were, in a pleasant woods, some of us were hoping that we might enjoy a quiet Sabbath, free from the excitements of the two preceding days. In a short time, however, one of the advanced pickets came rushing in, in breathless haste, with the tidings that a large force, supposed to be rebels, were advancing along a road which ran in front and to the left of us, leading probably to Williamsport. Clouds of dust had been seen riding along the road, and the force seemed to be composed of cavalry, artillery, and infantry. A messenger was immediately sent to the commanding officer of the troops in our rear, and in a few moments we saw the effects of the news upon the long line which stretched over the fields behind us. The excitement of the day before was renewed. The drums beat and the straggling line assumed a more compact shape.

Presently a number of mounted officers, accompanied by orderlies, rode rapidly past us over the fields, going out to the front of our line of pickets. We waited anxiously for further news, and in a short time they were seen returning, and word passed along the line that the troops advancing, instead of rebels, were Couch's division of McClellan's army, on their way to Williamsport.

"The tidings were very satisfactory, for they not only assured us of the presence of veterans between us and the rebels, but put an end, for the present at least, to the danger of an invasion of Pennsylvania, and showed us that our brief campaign was ended. Company K was at once ordered to its place in the regiment, and in a short time the regiment itself was in motion on its return march to Pennsylvania. And then began a long and weary tramp which some of us at least thought might have been spared us. Worned with the exciting scenes of the past forty-eight hours, a quiet rest during the remainder of the Sunday afternoon in some shady spot would have been very grateful to the men, and prepared us for a long march as was needful on Monday. But instead of this we were, without halting, marched back through Hagerstown, and out on the road leading towards Chambersburg. All the long, hot afternoon the march continued along the dry and dusty road, until about eight o'clock in the evening we reached the vicinity of Greencastle, a distance from our starting-point of about fourteen miles. Here we encamped in an open field near the town, and the wearied men were glad to throw themselves down anywhere to get a little rest and sleep. The writer was so fortunate as to gain admission to a barn adjacent to the camp-ground, where, stretched upon the hay, he enjoyed the best night's rest he had had since the regiment left Harrisburg.

"All day Monday we remained encamped in the open field beneath the burning sun, without even a tree to shield us from its rays. Little shelter-tents were put up during the day, in each of which two or three men could sit or lie down, but not stand erect. The men, however, were allowed to scatter, and many of us went into Greencastle, where we enjoyed the privilege of eating dinner once more at a table. At the nine o'clock drum-beat we turned in, as we supposed for the night, but in about an hour were roused again and ordered to strike tents and march to the cars. At Greencastle we embarked about midnight in freight cars, and started for home. Our progress was very slow, as the road was blocked up with troop- and provision-trains, and just before daylight our train and another collided in the suburbs of Shippensburg, smashing the locomotives and knocking many the men off their seats. The good people of the town were very hospitable, kindly opening their houses to us, and furnishing the entire regiment with a good breakfast.

"The accident detained us until noon, when we started again, and ran as far as Carlisle. Here we were kept waiting until six o'clock in the evening, when the train got in motion once more, dropping companies at Mechanicsburg and Shiremanstown, and about half-past seven the Harrisburg companies were safely landed at the foot of State Street. Here we found quite a crowd awaiting us, who greeted us with cheers, and really seemed glad that we had not been gobbled up by the rebels and carried to Southern prison pens. It was a pleasant thing thus to be welcomed by our fellow-citizens, even though we had shed no blood in their defense, and were returning with unbroken numbers. We had at least helped to maintain the honor of the State, and especially of its capital city, by responding promptly to the call of the Governor and forming part of the first regiment which had gone forth to the border when danger seemed impending. Now that it was all over, and we had safely reached our homes, we probably felt a little self-satisfaction as we looked back upon the events of the past ten days, during part of which we had stood side by side with the Maryland brigade, some ten miles beyond the border. If so, the reader will pardon us, more especially if he be one of those who refused to come at the Governor's call and remained quietly in the security of his home, perhaps to speak jestingly of the Pennsylvania militia."

SIXTH REGIMENT PENNSYLVANIA MILITIA.

From an interesting sketch of the orderly sergeant of Company K we glean the following relating to this command and its service in the war:

"Arriving at Harrisburg, we were enrolled as Company K, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, J. Armstrong, colonel. Some details concerning the organization of the regiment were not completed. Delay was experienced at the arsenal on account of the great rush for arms. We were obliged to await our turn, ordered into quarters, our company in one of the school-houses of the city, where we remained until the morning of the 15th, the patriotic citizens meanwhile taking care that we did not suffer for want of provisions. We made good use of our time drilling, and provided ourselves with rubber and woolen blankets, and other necessaries which the State was not prepared to furnish. On the morning of the 15th, about eight o'clock, we were marched to the arsenal, where each soldier received a musket and twenty rounds of ammunition. Immediately after receiving these, the regiment was formed on Fourth Street, in the rear of the capitol, preparatory to marching to the cars, which awaited us on the Cumberland Valley Railroad. Here we stood for the space of an hour or more, holding no communication with the concourse of people which lined the western slope of Capitol Hill, many of whom had come to see us off and bid us a last farewell, but were prevented from approaching by certain sabred veterans on horseback, who galloped incessantly up and down the lines, and who, judging from their fierce countenances, would have decapitated any venturesome spirit daring to cross their path. Many of this throng, particularly the female portion, were weeping, probably at the thought of the terrible fate which awaited those unfortunate rebels who might be called upon to stand against us in battle. Here and there could be discerned the sweet and kindly face of mother, sister, wife, or sweetheart. Their presence cheered as well as saddened our departure.

"About eleven o'clock we boarded the cars, and were soon on our way to the front. The train was composed of freight-cars of various descriptions, but principally of the box pattern, air-tight everywhere excepting at the two side-doors. Towards evening, September 15th, the train reached Chambersburg, and the soldiers were quartered for the night in various parts of the town, our company with some others in the court-house. Next morning we took up the line of march towards Hagerstown. The weather was very warm and the road dusty. After marching what seemed to us about ten miles, but in reality only three, we arrived at Camp McClure, a beautiful piece of woodland near the road. Here we were halted until the First Regiment, Col. McCormick's, marched out of camp, when the Sixth marched in and took their places. Space was assigned each company, and we were ordered to stack arms and make ourselves as comfortable as circumstances would permit. Many of the companies found booths already constructed on their grounds, but on the space assigned to Company K there were no improvements. A large force was, therefore, detailed to bring in rails and corn-fodder, and construct a wigwam large enough to accommodate the whole company. The men worked with a will, and before night a very comfortable and spacious wigwam was erected, and the ground within littered with straw obtained from a neighboring barn. In the mean time the cook had prepared supper, and we partook of our first meal of hard-tack, mess-pork, and army coffee. Most of us had never seen hard-tack before, and were at a loss how to manage it. Fortunately our cook and second sergeant had been in the three months' service, and were able to enlighten us.

"The following order, issued soon after we arrived in camp, will serve to show how our time was spent:

"6TH REGT. PA. MILITIA,
"CAMP McCLURE.

"Captains of the several companies will order squad drill by company from 9.30 to 11.30 A.M.

"Squad drill in the afternoon from 1.30 to 3, and company drill from 3.30 to 5 o'clock. Dress parade at 5.30 P.M.

"Morning reports must be made to these headquarters before 7.30 A.M. daily. By order.

"J. ARMSTRONG,
"Colonel Commanding."

"On the evening of the 16th, Capt. James D. Dougherty's company of artillery arrived in camp, and took position on the low ground along the creek which skirted the edge of the camp. This was a well-appointed company of four guns; several of the officers and some of the men were said to be experienced artillerymen. Their horses, however, were unused to the service, and some of them balky, so that it required considerable skill and much patience to convey the pieces from camp to the drilling-ground on the heights above. We were glad to see this company, for theirs were the only familiar faces in camp since the departure of the First Regiment.

"On the 17th we heard the booming cannon, which continued all day long, and seemingly at no great distance, but we could get no news, yet we felt confident that a great battle was in progress; all else was conjecture and uncertainty. That night, about ten o'clock, the regiment received orders to be ready to march at a moment's notice. Our company was ready, and formed at once in front of the wigwam. We stood in position probably an hour, awaiting orders from headquarters. None came, however, and the captain, who was a humane man, ordered us to break ranks, and each man make himself as comfortable as he could, without unpacking his knapsack. We sat down among the trees, with our guns in our hands, passing a tiresome and sleepless night. Towards morning more definite news of the battle was received, and at daylight the order for a forward movement was countermanded. It was intimated that the emergency was about over, and that the next order would probably be one to go home.

"On the morning of the 23d, we were ordered to the railroad and embarked for home. After a long and tedious ride in freight-cars we reached Harrisburg towards evening, and encamped for the night on Capitol Hill. The next day we 'turned in our guns' (the ammunition having been expended shooting mark in Camp McClure), and were discharged, having been in the service exactly eleven days."

CHAPTER XXXI.

The Early Courts—Where First Held—The Bar in 1789—The Court-Houses—The President Judges of the County—Reminiscences of the Bar, and Roll of Members.

THE first courts in Dauphin County were held in a log house which stood until about the year 1840 near "the lower ferry," and the record of the first court reads thus:

"At a Court of Quarter Sessions holden near Harris' Ferry, in and for the county of Dauphin, &c.," on the "third Tuesday of May, in the year of our Lord 1785," before "Timothy Green, Samuel Jones and Jonathan McClure, Esqrs., Justices of the same court."

These justices were not "learned in the law," which was the requirement under the Constitution of 1790. The sheriff of Lancaster County exercised the same office in Dauphin County. The names of the attorneys at the bar admitted that day were Stephen Chambers, John Wilkes Kittora, John Clark, Joseph Hubley, John Andre Hanna, James Riddle, John Joseph Henry, Peter Huffnagle, Jacob Hubley, Collinson Reed, George Ross, and John Reilly,—quite an array of legal talent, most of whom rose to occupy the highest positions at the bar or in the halls of legislation.

The earliest record of a punishment is the account of one inflicted on William Courtenay and James Lachey, who were sentenced to receive eighteen lashes and pay fifteen shillings sterling, on the 18th of August, 1785, between the hours of four and six o'clock in the afternoon, and to stand in the pillory. This instrument of judicial vengeance stood about sixty yards below the grave of John Harris, the elder, or just above the ferry house, at the junction of Front and Paxtang Streets.

The names of the jurymen were James Cowden (foreman), Robert Montgomery, John Gilchrist, Barefoot Brunson, John Clark, Roan McClure, John Carson, John Wilson, William Crain, Archibald McAllister, Richard Dixon, John Parthemore, James Crouch, Jacob Awl, William Brown, Andrew Stewart, James Rogers, Samuel Stewart, John Cooper, Alexander Berryhill.

Alexander Graydon was the first prothonotary; Anthony Kelker, the first sheriff; and Rudolph Kelker, the first deputy sheriff.

In the Freeman's Journal for March 4, 1789, is the following squib: "From a lawyer who could not attend Dauphin Court to his friend, a lawyer at Harrisburg.

"At Dauphin Court, tho' fond of sport,
The prospect is so barren.
I can't attend, my dearest friend,
Where there's more crow than carrion.

"There's Wilkes and Andra, John and Joe,
And Peter, too, so pliant;
If you but flinch and stir an inch
They're sure to nab your client.

"There's Father Smith and Brother Yeates,
And little Tom and Stephen,
When one sits down the other prates,
And so they both are even.

"With hooks and crooks and musty books,
Whilst candles waste in sockets,
The court perplex and juries vex,
And pick their client's pockets.

"When Court is out, away they scout,
Sworn enemies to quiet,
Drink wine at Orab's, kiss dirty drabs,
And spend the night in riot."

By reference to the early portion of the roll of practicing attorneys it will readily be seen to whom the stanzas allude.

Among the early cases which came before the court was one for "blasphemy," the first, and perhaps the only, case of trial and conviction for that crime under an old Provincial law. We present the account to show how our ancestors, who were just as tolerant as we, treated blasphemy with proper severity. The foundation of our government and our advancement in civilization rests upon the upholding of the revealed religion of the Christ of Nazareth, and if the law of God is of no avail, the civil law should stretch out its arms and check the headlong career of all blasphemers. We copy the account from the Oracle of Sept. 17, 1799:

"At the Court of Oyer & Terminer, held in this town on the 11th ult., one ———, tobaccoist and fiddler, a man who has a wife and several young children, was convicted on an indictment for BLASPHEMY. In order to give the reader a more perfect idea of the magnitude of the crime, we extract from the indictment the following:

"The Grand Inquest for the body of the county of Dauphin upon their oaths and affirmations respectively do present, that ———, tobaccoist, not having the fear of God in his heart, but being moved and seduced by diabolical instigation, and contriving and intending Almighty God, and our blessed Saviour Jesus Christ to blaspheme and dishonor, the first day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine, at the county aforesaid, and within the jurisdiction of this Court, in the presence and hearing of divers liege subjects of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, well understanding the English and High Dutch languages, falsely, impiously and blasphemously did say, speak, and with a loud voice pronounce and publish in the High Dutch language, these false, impious and blasphemous words, to wit: 'Christ (our blessed Saviour Jesus Christ meaning) is a . . . If Christ is the Son of God (meaning the Almighty God) then God hath . . . To the great dishonor and contempt of Almighty God and our Saviour Jesus Christ—to the evil example of all others in like manner offending, contrary to the laws, and the act of General Assembly of this State in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, &c.

"The prisoner being arraigned, plead not guilty, but afterwards retracted his plea and submitted to the Court. Whereupon the Court gave judgment that he pay a fine of £10, for the use of the poor of the county of Dauphin, suffer three months' imprisonment in the jail of said county, and pay the costs of prosecution. The Court also directed that he be bound to keep the peace and be of good behavior to all the liege citizens of the United States for seven years, himself in 400 dls. and one surety in the like sum of 400 dls."

The courts were afterwards held in the old log jail, which stood until recently on the northwest side of Strawberry Alley, a short distance northeast of Raspberry Alley, and also in a log house which formerly stood on the lot now occupied by No. 311, on the east side of Market Street near Dewberry Alley. From 1792 to the year 1799 inclusive were occupied in the construction of the first court-house; at least, the expenditures¹ for the erection thereof cover that period, as we attain from the records in the office of the county commissioners. The old jail was erected about 1790, perchance a year or two earlier, as among the earliest accounts are sums of money paid for the erection of "a stone wall around the goal."

When the capital was removed from Lancaster to Harrisburg the court-house was given up to the uses of the Legislature, by which it was occupied until the completion of the State capitol, on the 2d of January, 1822. During a portion of this period the building now known as the White Hall, on Market Street, was used by the courts until the commissioners of the county erected the brick buildings on the northwest corner of Walnut Street and Raspberry Alley, into which the court moved and which it occupied until the Legislature vacated the old court-house. This building, of which a representation is given, was an antique-looking structure of brick, two stories high, with wings and a semi-rotunda in front, the whole surmounted with a circular wooden cupola containing a bell. On the grounds of the residence of Rt. Rev.

Bishop Shanahan this cupola can be seen, while on the barn of the Calder estate, adjoining the new reservoir at Harrisburg, is the Indian warrior which surmounted the old cupola. The semi-rotunda was added to the main building by the State at the time of its occupancy by the Legislature, the Senate convening in the main room on the second floor, and the House of Representatives on the first floor. The former room was afterwards used for public meetings, lectures, and by the different religious denominations prior to their permanent organization as a place of worship.

Becoming too small for the different offices, as well for the courts, the building was taken down and the present modern and capacious edifice erected.

In this connection, and as a part of the history of the courts of the county, we give the reminiscences

THE PRESIDENT JUDGES OF DAUPHIN COUNTY.

[As before noted, the following interesting incidents are from the pen of the late George Washington Harris. It will be perceived that he does not refer in this connection to the first president judge learned in the law, William Augustus Atlee.]

"Judge Henry was, I understand, a native of Lancaster County. He was a large man, perhaps above six feet in height, and he was lame from a rheumatic affection, contracted probably when in the military service. He had been in the Revolutionary army, and was in the Quebec expedition in 1776, and subsequently wrote a narrative of that expedition, which is now a scarce book. I do not distinctly recollect of ever seeing him. I know nothing personally of his ability as a judge, but never heard it questioned. He presided, in the year 1798, at the trial of Hauer and McManus for the murder of Francis Sheetz, and from the report of that case I would judge quite favorably of his capacity. He also wrote the will of George Frey for the foundation of the Emaus Orphan-House. He died when in Lancaster, Lancaster County forming a part of his judicial district. His family lived in Harrisburg after his death for several years, and several of his daughters were zealous, active members of the Methodist Church.

"The case of Hauer and McManus, as I have intimated, was reported. It was one of the most interesting murder trials which ever took place in the State. It was devised by Hauer for the destruction of the lives of Francis and Peter Sheetz, his brothers-in-law, by whose death he desired his wife to come into possession of a considerable estate. McManus was a young Irishman, who, when executed, was not twenty-one years of age. He had led rather an irregular life in his own country, and was seduced into this outrage through Patrick Donagan, who lived for a time with John Hauer. Donagan and others were also indicted for the murder, but none were convicted but Hauer and McManus.

"A degree of ability was displayed by the counsel in this case which has seldom been equaled at any criminal trial in the interior of this State. Charles Smith, of Lancaster, Charles Hall, of Sunbury, and Matthew Henry, who, I understand, was a brother of Judge Henry, were concerned on the part of the Commonwealth. Thomas Duncan, of Carlisle, afterward Judge Duncan of our Supreme Court, James Hopkins, William Montgomery, of Lancaster, George Clymer, of Reading, who had been a member of the convention which formed the Constitution of the United States, and Messrs. Fisher, Elder, and Laird, of Harrisburg, were concerned for various of the prisoners. Messrs. Duncan, Fisher, Elder, Laird, and Clymer were concerned for Hauer.

"A bill had been at first found against John Hauer and Peter McDonough as principals, and against Patrick Donagan, Francis Cox, Hugh McDonough, and Elizabeth Hauer, who was the wife of John Hauer, as accessories before the fact.

"Hauer was put upon trial. It was intended on his trial to use McManus as a witness on the part of the Commonwealth, as he alleged that the murder had been committed by Hauer and Peter McDonough while he held their horses at the end of the lane. But on the trial Hauer sent for the resident and Judge Gloninger and made a confession of his guilt as an accessory before the fact, but denied that he was present at the commission of the murder, which he alleged had been committed by McManus and Peter McDonough, and that the rest of the prisoners were accessory before the fact. It appearing probable that McManus was present at the murder and was the person who shot the deceased, he was not examined as a witness on the trial of Hauer. The jury was discharged from giving a verdict as to Hauer and the cases were continued until the next term. In this proceeding the counsel of Hauer declined to interfere as they had not been consulted by Hauer as to his confession, and they considered that he had by that act taken his case out of their hands. At the next term a bill was found against McManus as the person who committed the murder with a pistol or axe, and one against Hauer and others for procuring and abetting it.

"McManus was tried and convicted on his own confession.

"When the case of Hauer and others was called up, it was objected by Duncan, Fisher, and Clymer that Hauer was in law discharged, as the jury in his case at the former term had been discharged without his consent, and it was alleged that he could not be put in jeopardy of life twice for the same offense. Able and learned arguments were made by them, and by Mr. Hall and Smith on the part of the Commonwealth. It was contended by them that the proceeding which should bar a second trial must be an actual acquittal by verdict on the general issue (p. 36); and further that there must have been a verdict of not guilty on an indictment free from legal error, and that in this case of Hauer the first indictment was defective, it not having been alleged in it that Francis Sheetz died of the wounds received. Judge Henry held that such omission was fatal to the indictment and was conclusive in the matter; and that it was therefore unnecessary to decide the other question. As Hauer therefore could not have been legally convicted on the first indictment, his case and that of Donagan and Cox was called up. On being called on to plead, Hauer stood mute. The court, considering that he stood mute from obstinacy, directed the plea of not guilty to be entered for him.

"Donagan and Cox objected to being tried with Hauer, but the court decided that the matter was within the discretion of the prosecuting officer, and they were accordingly tried together. The confession of Hauer was used against him, and testimony given as to Donagan and Cox. Hauer was convicted and Donagan and Cox acquitted. A bill was found against the wife of Hauer and Hugh McDonough, but no evidence was given on the part of the Commonwealth and they were acquitted. It would appear to me probable that if Hauer had not made confession of his guilt he would not have been convicted, as the persons present in the room where Francis Sheetz was killed (he was first shot with a pistol and then struck with an axe) could not identify the murderers, they having their faces concealed, and the candle in the room being extinguished by accident.

"The case was another illustration of the saying that 'murder will out.' As observed by Webster in the Crowninshield case, the secret is often too deep for concealment and must be confessed. Hauer, in this case, confessed and acknowledged his written confession on being arraigned on the first indictment, but when arraigned on the second indictment he did not speak and never spoke publicly afterwards, and was eventually hanged without publicly speaking a word. However, it is worthy of remark that when the jury were ready to deliver their verdict, and the clerk proclaimed, 'John Hauer, hold up your hand,' he held it up.

"McManus made a confession subsequently, which was published. In this he persisted that he was not present at the house when the murder was committed, but that he held the horse at the end of the lane. He also declared that when Hauer and himself were confined in the same apartment in the jail, Hauer declared that he would behave in such a manner as to induce a belief that he was insane.

"A report of the trial was published by Mr. Wynth, from which I have made up this statement. Hauer and McManus were executed on Capitol Hill in July, 1798.

"Judge Henry was followed in the judicial office by Walter Franklin, of Lancaster, who was commissioned on the 18th of January, 1811. He lived in Lancaster when appointed by Governor Snyder, and was a man of very gentlemanly appearance. His judicial administration was not satisfactory to the bar in Lancaster County, where he afterwards presided, and when acting as judge in that county at least two attempts were made before the Legislature to effect his removal, either by address or impeachment. On one of those occasions he was defended by James Hopkins, a veteran attorney of Lancaster. During the proceeding one of the managers of the House concluded his address late in the afternoon. Mr. Hopkins rose and asked that the House adjourn till the next day to afford him an opportunity for more special preparation. The House, however, was fatigued with the length of the proceeding and refused to adjourn, and Mr. Hopkins, being obliged to proceed, rose and stated that he would divide his proposed argument into a considerable number of heads, and the first head of his argument into various parts. A member immediately rose and moved that the House adjourn in order to afford to the counsel an opportunity to condense, and the House accordingly adjourned.

"On the first proceeding before the Legislature in his case the judge came off successfully, but on a second or third proceeding it was said that he had written on both sides of some political question; and this was considered to be so grave an offense, that, fearing a more unfavorable result, the judge resigned.

"In one of the proceedings against Judge Franklin, one of the managers on the part of the House was Andrew Stewart, of Fayette County, who was a candidate for Congress in 1870, against Mr. Foster, the former member, and Mr. Stewart was then the last survivor of the Legislature to which I have referred. On one of the same proceedings, perhaps the same one, against Judge Franklin, my old friend Richard Coulter, afterwards a judge in the Supreme Court, was also a manager on the part of the House. He was frequently poetic in speech and in writing. I recollect one of his figures on the occasion referred to. He said substantially that the judiciary of Pennsylvania should be like the guardian angel of old, standing on the battlements of the Constitution, waving the sword of justice to and fro, to keep corruption from its base.

"As I was on quite friendly terms with Judge Coulter during my appointment as reporter, I desire to be excused for referring in this place to another eloquent passage from one of his judicial opinions. It is in his opinion, in the case of Supplee vs. Hansell, reported in 5 Harris Reports, 388-9. An individual granted a piece of ground for the erection of a church and for the use of a burial-ground, reserving the right to him and his wife to build a vault or vaults in it, and to keep the same in repair. Some of the grandchildren had another vault made, appropriating four burial-lots on the ground. This was objected to by the trustees of the church, and the decision of the Supreme Court was adverse to the claim of the defendants in the case.

"Judge Coulter, who delivered the opinion in the case, observed 'there is room yet in the family sepulchre; but if the grandchildren do not like the cold and lonely dampness of that place, but prefer that their narrow house should be visited by the glimpses of the sun and moon, and be fanned by the breezes (and the thoughts and feelings of this life often linger about the grave), they can enjoy that preference by being buried as most other people are buried, and like other members of the church, in the bosom of mother earth, with the green sod over them.'

"The successor of Judge Franklin was Amos Ellmaker. He was born in Earl township, Lancaster Co., on the 2d of February, 1787. After graduating at Princeton, he studied law for one year with James Hopkins, of Lancaster, then a year at the Litchfield Law School, and concluded his studies with Thomas Elder, of this place, whose daughter he married. He was admitted to the bar at December term 1808. He was elected to Congress, but declined to serve, and twice refused a tender of a commission as a judge of the Supreme Court. He continued in the practice of the law at Harrisburg until his removal to Lancaster, in June, 1821. He went to Baltimore in the year 1814 as an aid to Gen. Foster. He was commissioned as judge in July, 1815, and occupied the bench till December, 1816. He was reputed to be a good lawyer. His addresses to the jury, when at the bar, were clear, distinct, and argumentative, but by no means oratorical. He left the bench in December, 1816, for what reason I do not know. He held an elevated position here, and was appointed attorney-general by Governor Findlay. He, however, contracted the odium of the Governor's friends by refusing to defend him before the Legislature, when unjustly assailed by a Philadelphia faction, headed by the celebrated John Binna. This refusal may have been owing to the fact that Mr. Thomas Elder, his father-in-law, was one of those who urged the prosecution.

"The Governor was defended by George M. Dallas, of Philadelphia. The chairman of the committee of the House was William Wilkins, of Pittsburgh, who made a report favorable to Governor Findlay. Mr. Wilkins was afterwards rewarded for his action by appointment as a judge in the Pittsburgh district, to fill a vacancy, opportunely for him, happening through the death of Judge Roberts, a few days, perhaps within two days, before the termination of Governor Findlay's official term. He was appointed on the 18th of December, 1820, Mr. Findlay having been inaugurated on the 16th of December, 1817, his executive term being for three years.

"Mr. Ellmaker, as before observed, afterwards removed to Lancaster, and was, after the lapse of some years, a candidate for the Vice-Presidency, on the ticket with the celebrated William Wirt. He died in November, 1851.

"Mr. Ellmaker was succeeded as judge by David Scott, who was appointed by Governor Snyder, and was commissioned in December, 1816. He was a native of New England, but was settled in Bradford County at the time of his appointment. He is said to have been a good lawyer. He is also said to have been pugnacious in his temper. I have heard it observed that if he had been in military life he would most probably have been distinguished. I have no recollection of ever seeing him on the bench, but saw him after he had left Harrisburg as his place of residence, and when I saw him he was somewhat deaf. He resigned his position as judge of this district, having been appointed to another district in the northern part of the State.

"Knowing little of Judge Scott, I addressed Judge Woodward, late of our Supreme Court, for information as to him.

"Judge Woodward states that Judge Scott was a native of Connecticut, and that he settled in Bradford County. When Judge Scott was appointed to this judicial district, Judge Gibson was the president judge in the Bradford District, to which he had been appointed by Governor Snyder. A vacancy happening on the Supreme Bench, Judge Gibson was appointed by Governor Snyder as a supreme judge, and Judge Burnside was appointed to the Bradford district, then consisting of the counties of Luzerne, Pike, Wayne, Susquehanna, and Bradford. Judge Burnside, after presiding in that district for above a year, resigned, and Judge Scott was appointed, the district having been reduced to the counties of Luzerne, Pike, and Wayne. Judge Woodward states that Judge Scott presided in that district with great ability until the year 1838, when in consequence of increasing deafness he resigned in favor of Nathaniel B. Eldred; but Governor Ritner appointed Judge Jemup instead of Mr. Eldred. Judge Scott lived several years afterwards, and died at Wilkes-Barré. Judge Woodward states that Judge Scott while on the bench also acted as canal commissioner for several years, but without compensation; and Judge Woodward further writes that Judge Scott was a man of great clearness and force of intellect. He had not been thoroughly educated either in literature or law, but he supplied his deficiencies by application and force of character. He was an honest, upright judge, a little overbearing sometimes, and always of irascible temper; and on the whole an excellent officer both as judge and canal commissioner. He was the founder of the Episcopal Church in Wilkes-Barré, and instituted in his office there the first Sunday-school that was organized in northeastern Pennsylvania.

"Judge Scott was succeeded in this district by Judge Franks, who was commissioned by Governor Findlay in 1818.

"Samuel D. Franks and George B. Porter, the first of Reading, and the latter of Lancaster, had been in the military service, having gone to Baltimore in 1814, when it was threatened by the British forces. They were not engaged in any battle, but when the Legislature met, after the Pennsylvania forces, volunteers and militia, had returned home, the two came to Harrisburg, and both clerks of the House, as I think, not having gone into the military service, they were elected clerk and assistant clerk of the House of Representatives. They were efficient officers, and Franks was an excellent reader. He was useful to the members and was quite popular. It was unfortunate for him that he did not continue in that position; but after the election of Mr. Findlay as Governor he applied for appointment as judge, that being at that time an appointment during good behavior. He was possessed of considerable talent, and it was supposed that with industry he might make a respectable judge, and unfortunately he was appointed. He was an amusing companion. He had considerable talent for mimicry, and if he had adopted the stage as his pursuit in life he probably would have been distinguished as a comic actor. He was possessed of much humor, and abounded in anecdotes. I have heard of one told by him relative to a charge by an associate judge to a jury in Lehigh County. A man was on trial before the associate judges for some offense. The evidence did not show him to be guilty, but the judge charged the jury that though the case was doubtful they might as well convict the defendant, for that there had been a great deal of rascality about there lately.

"I have also heard that he was called on for a toast on an agricultural occasion at Philadelphia, and that he gave as a sentiment, 'Agricultural societies; the Rampart of American Industry and the Bull-work of National Independence.'

"He was a large man, with a large head; and though not handsome, yet had a fine face. He had a large Grecian nose, a florid countenance, and red hair. He said he was the best red (or read) judge in Pennsylvania. But the law as a science had few charms for him. The business of the court languished excessively while he was in office, perhaps not more than twenty verdicts being taken in a year. The younger members of the bar, of whom I was one, suffered in consequence, and after two attempts before the Legislature we succeeded in having him displaced. He resigned when the second proceeding was in progress. I recollect of one argument which took place before him which excited considerable interest at the time.

"A person in Harrisburg who had been largely engaged in speculation in real estate died insolvent. Judge Bucher, who was an associate judge on the bench with Judge Franks, administered on the estate. Mr. Elder brought a considerable number of suits against the administrator. The counsel employed by the administrator simply entered an appearance, without pleading a want of assets. At the usual time, on settling the docket, judgments by default were taken. After some years Mr. Elder issued writs of scire facias to revive the judgments. Judge Bucher became alarmed, and his attorney, Mr. Fisher, asked to have the judgments opened, and the plea of want of assets put in. This was objected to by Mr. Elder, who alleged that the time for such pleading was passed. This gave rise to a lengthened discussion. Mr. Fisher, in arguing his motion, produced many authorities. Mr. Elder, in turn, produced others, and Mr. Fisher rejoined. In the second argument, in addition to commenting on the cases adduced by Mr. Elder, Mr. Fisher cited other authorities. Mr. Elder claimed the right to reply to those additional authorities, and, though Mr. Fisher objected, alleging that he was entitled to conclude the argument, Mr. Elder was heard. In the course of his reply he also adduced new authorities. Mr. Fisher, in turn, claimed the right to reply to them. The court would get wearied with the discussion, and would occasionally adjourn for days or a week or more, and after these see-sawing, turn-about-Jim-Crow operations the judgments were opened and the administrator let into a defense, and this terminated the contest. The case was so long in argument that it was said that during the period of discussion Mr. Elder went to Lykens Valley, and Mr. Fisher built a barn.

"This attempt to compel an administrator to pay out of his estate the debts of an insolvent decedent was rather an ungracious proceeding; and it has since been enacted that 'no mispleading or lack of pleading' shall render any executor or administrator personally liable beyond the amount of assets of the estate received or receivable by him.

"During the presidency of Judge Franks, Tom McElhenny was tried for the murder of Sophia German. This case excited very considerable interest at the time. He had been a candidate for the sheriffship, and desired to be a candidate at the next election. On the morning of the day when she disappeared McElhenny had an interview with her at her residence, and it was offered, on the part of the commonwealth, to show that when on the same day, and after McElhenny had gone, she was about to leave with her child, of which he was reputed to be the father, she said she was going to meet McElhenny, in pursuance of an arrangement with him. This was overruled by the court, and there being no direct evidence against him he was acquitted by the jury. He was not, however, acquitted by public sentiment.

"The manner of discovering the body of Sophia German was very singular. After she had been missing for several days, a man was walking along the hill bordering Swatara Creek. A dog, which he had with him, ran down the hill and barked. The man went down to see the cause of it, and found that the dog was barking at a domestic cat on a tree. On his return to the path he saw a bonnet, which he lifted and hung upon a tree. The bonnet being subsequently shown to the mother of Sophia German, she pronounced it to be that of her daughter. Search was soon made along the side of the hill for the body of Sophia German, and on going along some one laid hold of a bush, which drew out of the ground, and on examination, the body of Sophia German and her child were found in the same grave.

"Calvin Blythe succeeded Judge Franks. He was a native of Adams County, in this State. He had settled at the town of Mifflin, in Mifflin County, where he was elected to the House of Representatives, and was subsequently appointed attorney-general by Governor Shulze, the appointment being made on the 5th of February, 1828. He was also secretary of the commonwealth under the same executive. He was a man of medium size, of respectable appearance; was possessed of excellent understanding, and was of undoubted integrity. He was well versed in legal principles, but not in a knowledge of cases, from the fact of his practice in the law having been interrupted by several official positions. He was indulgent to the bar, rather diffuse in his charges to the jury, and frequently was considered too lenient in the punishment of criminals. But he never avoided responsibility, and acted on the case in hand to the best of his judgment. He was much respected in the community. He received the appointment of collector of customs at Philadelphia, and resigned his judicial office.

"I remember an incident which occurred in the court-house during the presidency of Judge Blythe, which was of an amusing character and which tended to show the deliberateness and unexcitability of the judge.

"A civil case was on trial. Mr. Alexander, of Carlisle, was one of the counsel, and the elder McIntyre, of Perry County, was probably a witness. Suddenly a loud crash was heard, and it seemed as if the upper floor and ceiling of the court-room was giving way. The jury, counsel, witnesses, and spectators rushed to the door. I was among them, and as I went out of the room turned my head and looked back, but saw no dislocation of the building, but in the excitement I kept on until I reached the pavement. McIntyre continued on across the street, and he was without his hat. I went back to the court-room, and the house was as we left it, but it had been cleared by all except the judge and, as I have since been told, by Mr. Alexander. The judge merely rose and walked back to the window which looked into the yard to see what was the matter. When the occurrence was investigated, it appeared that the front wall of the cellar in the yard of the court-house was lined with boards and plank, and that a cart-load of coal had been dumped down upon it, and this produced the noise which sounded like the crash of the building. The judge and Mr. Alexander, it would seem, were the only persons present who were not frightened. The affair, when understood, afforded much amusement.

"Judge Blythe was succeeded by James M. Porter.

"Judge Porter was a good-looking man, rather above the common size. He was generally considered to be an excellent lawyer, and he was possessed of great industry. He was a brother of Governor Porter, and was appointed by him, it was supposed, to settle some political matters which had happened in the course of his election. He held the office for about a year and a half, when he was succeeded by Anson V. Parsons. Judge Porter was for a while Secretary of War under President Tyler, but was not confirmed by the Senate.

"Judge Parsons was from one of the New England States, and when a young man settled at Williamsport, where he resided when appointed as judge. He was above the medium size, of thin visage, was possessed of steambot energy, in the sessions was a rigid disciplinarian, and in that respect contrasted strongly with Judge Blythe, who was rather mild in his judicial action in the sessions.

"Judge Parsons was transferred to Philadelphia, and Judge Blythe was then reappointed to this district, and remained until he was again appointed to the custom-house at Philadelphia, under the administration of President Tyler. After he was superseded in that position he engaged in the practice of law in Philadelphia, where I became associated with him in the practice. He became paralyzed, and so on after died.

"Judge Blythe was an honest man, was possessed of a kind disposition, but was too generous, liberal, and inconsiderate for his own interest, and though he received a considerable amount of money as collector of the port of Philadelphia, yet he died poor. He was a soldier in the war of 1812, and was in the battle of Bridgewater and at the subsequent attack on the fort at Lake Erie.

"He was succeeded as judge by Nathaniel B. Eldred, who was appointed in March, 1843.

"Judge Eldred was a man of medium size, of an angular face, rather unhandsome, but of a genial expression. He was of a social disposition. He came from Wayne County in this State. He was a man of integrity, and was considered by Chief Justice Gibson to be possessed of excellent legal judgment, but he could scarcely be considered a profound lawyer. Whilst occupying his judicial position he was engaged in business matters elsewhere. He was extensively engaged in lumber operations in the West, which induced his absence, and thus interfered materially with his attention to his official duties. He was translated to the Wayne County district, and was succeeded by John J. Pearson, of Mercer County, who was appointed by Governor Johnston in April, 1849. After the termination of the period for which he was commissioned he was elected to the same position in October, 1851, re-elected in 1861, and again in 1871, retiring in 1881.

"These repeated elections, and all without any opposing candidates, were highly creditable to him as evidence of the estimation, for legal qualification and judicial integrity, in which he was held by the people of the district in which he had so long presided. It is also proper to remark that, in addition to the ordinary business of the district, it had been his province to preside on appeals from the decision of the accounting officers of the State, a branch of business not only arduous to him but of great importance to the revenues of the Commonwealth. This had rendered him widely known not only throughout the State, but beyond it.

"Judge Pearson was born in Delaware County, in this State, but in his infancy was taken by his father to Mercer County, where he read law, and was admitted to practice, and was residing in Mercer County when appointed as judge for this district in 1849. He had been elected to Congress for one term, serving there during the administration of Gen. Jackson, and was a member of our State Senate during the administration of Governor Ritner. He has also held courts in other districts, and his ability as a judge is generally acknowledged. He is perhaps better acquainted with the land laws which prevailed in Western Pennsylvania than any other man now living. Titles were held in various counties west of the Allegheny under the laws of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, under the conflict of jurisdiction prevailing as to portions of that region.

"In addition to the preceding judges, Dauphin County for a while had a District Court, in which cases were tried where the value in controversy was of a defined amount, perhaps five hundred dollars. The place was for a while occupied by Judge Bradford, from Sunbury, who was considered as an inefficient judge. He afterwards presided in the York district. Charles Smith, from Lancaster, was also for a while our district judge. He was the compiler of the first five volumes of the laws of Pennsylvania, and the author of a learned note in volume two of that work relative to the land laws of the State. He was a superior lawyer and was prompt and decisive in his action as judge.

"The District Court sprang from the arrearage of business on the dockets of the county, and was dispensed with when its existence was no longer required. The judges of the Supreme Court also for awhile held Circuit Courts here and in other parts of the State. An appeal from their decision lay to the court in banc. It was a matter of observation in relation to these courts that the judge who tried the cause in the court below generally adhered to the opinion expressed on the trial. The effect usually was that, as far as his opinion was concerned, the case was not a review, but an affirmation of his previous opinion. The same usage exists in the Supreme Court of the United States, the circuit judge before whom the case was tried being present at the final decision of the case. This I consider a usage which should be abrogated. If the supreme judges try causes they should have no vote on the final decision. We have copied, in this respect, the usages in England, where the twelve judges hold courts of Nisi Prius and try causes. We in the arrangement relative to our Supreme Court of the United States walk super antiquas vias, instead of appointing district circuit judges, whose rulings may be reviewed by a supreme tribunal of which they form no part and where they have no voice to influence the final decision."

The list of attorneys admitted to the Dauphin County bar is herewith given. We have endeavored to make it full and complete, and it is far more so than any list ever published:

NOTE.—We have not been able to ascertain the exact time of admission to the Dauphin County bar of the following:

John C. Kunkel, about 1842. Louis W. Hall, about 1868.

Mr. Harris, in his reminiscences of the various members of the bar of Dauphin County, herewith given, has preserved us many facts, and in the opinions expressed by him in this and the previous sketch, we believe they were free from prejudice and as impartial as any legal mind can possibly be.

REMINISCENCES OF VARIOUS MEMBERS OF THE BAR OF DAUPHIN COUNTY.

"The county of Dauphin was taken from the county of Lancaster. It was established by act of Assembly of 4th March, 1785. The town of Harrisburg was laid out afterwards in the same year. The first Court of Common Pleas was held near Harris' Ferry on the third Tuesday of May, 1785, before Timothy Green as president of the court, and Samuel Jones and Jonathan McClure as Justices, and the courts continued to be held before justices of the peace until the November term of 1791, when the court was held before William Augustus Atlee, who was judge of the Supreme Court, and John Carson as associate judge. Judge Atlee was, as before stated, a judge of the Supreme Court. (See a notice of him in a biographical history of Lancaster County, by Alexander Harris, published about a year ago.) Judge Atlee continued to hold the court till June term, 1793, inclusive. At September and December terms of 1793 he was not present, and the court was held before associate judges, who were Judges Gloninger, Carson, and John Kean at the September term, and at the December term Thomas Forster appeared as an additional associate judge.

"At March term, 1794, John Joseph Henry appeared as president judge of this judicial district. Judge Henry had been engaged in the invasion of Canada in the year 1776, and has published a narrative of the expedition.

"The members who have been admitted to the bar of this county since the organization of the county exceed three hundred.

"On the first day of the holding of the court in May, 1785, on motion of Stephen Chambers, Esq., on his own behalf, he was admitted an attorney of the court; and next, on his motion, were admitted as attorneys, John Wilkes Kittera, John Clark, Joseph Hubley, John Andre Hanna, James Riddle, John Joseph Henry, Peter Huffnagle, and Jacob Hubley.

"On the same day, it is stated, that on motion of Stephen Chambers, James Biddle and Collinson Read were admitted.

"Next, on motion of John Joseph Henry, George Ross was admitted; then, on motion of John Wilkes Kittera, John Reily was admitted. On motion of Stephen Chambers a rule was adopted that the admission of attorneys in this court shall be regulated by the same rules as have been adopted in this respect in the county of Lancaster. This ended the list of attorneys admitted on that day; but subsequently were admitted James Smith, of York; Thomas Duncan, of Carlisle; Jasper Yeates, Charles Smith, and William Montgomery, of Lancaster; William R. Atlee, of Lancaster or Philadelphia; Messrs. Hamilton and David Watts, of Carlisle; Mr. Hartley, of York; and Messrs. Fisher, Elder, Patterson, Laird, and Wallace, of Harrisburg, and afterwards numerous others.

"James Smith was admitted August, 1786. He was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. He was also a member of several important State conventions, held a high rank at the bar, and was a man of great wit and good humor. He came from Ireland very young, and died at York 11th July, 1806, at the age of about ninety-three years. The above is from Day's 'Recollections.' In a note to Graydon's 'Memoirs,' it is said that he was educated at the college of Philadelphia, and after he was admitted to the bar there, he removed to the vicinity of Shippensburg, Pa., and there established himself as a lawyer and surveyor. From this he removed to York, in this State, where he continued to reside during the remainder of his life. In 1775 he was elected to Congress, and retained his seat in that body until November, 1778, when he resumed his professional business, from which he withdrew in 1800, and died in 1806. In Sanderson's 'Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence' is a more extended notice of him.

"Mr. Alexander Graydon was for a short time in York when a young man. He says that 'there was in that place at that time an oddity; this was Mr. James Smith, the lawyer, then in considerable practice. He was probably between forty and fifty years of age, and was possessed of an original spark of drollery. This, as may perhaps be said of all persons in this way, consisted more in the manner than the matter, for which reason it is scarcely possible to convey a just notion of it to the reader. In him it much depended on an uncouthness of gesture, a certain ludicrous cast of countenance, and a drawing mode of utterance, which, taken in conjunction with his eccentric ideas, produced an effect irresistibly comical, though, on an analysis, it would be difficult to decide whether the man or the saying most constituted the jest. The most trivial incident from his mouth was stamped with his originality; and in relating one evening how he had been disturbed in his office by a cow, he gave inconceivable zest to his narrative by his telling how she thrust her nose into the door and roared like a Numidian lion.'

"Mr. Graydon further remarks 'that there was then at York a certain judge who resided in Philadelphia. He was a Scotchman; was a man of erudition, and was fond of displaying his historical knowledge; but that Mr. Smith used to set him raving by some monstrous anachronism, as, for instance, 'Don't you remember that terrible, bloody battle which Alexander the Great fought with the Prussians, near the straits of Babemandel?' 'What, sir,' said the judge, repeating with the most ineffable contempt, 'which Alexander the Great fought with the Prussians? Where now did you get your chronology?' Said Smith, 'That you will find is recorded in Thucydides or Herodotus.'

"Mr. Graydon adds that after one of these exhibitions, while every one at the table was holding his sides at the expense of the judge, he, on his part, had no doubt that Smith was the object of laughter, as he was of his disdain. Thus everything was as it should be, all parties were pleased.

"Stephen Chambers was from Lancaster, and, as I understand, was a brother-in-law of John Joseph Henry, who was appointed president judge of this county in December, 1793. John Wilkes Kittera was from Philadelphia, but had settled at Lancaster. John Clark was from York, and had been an officer in the Revolutionary army. He died at York in the present century. He is mentioned in Day's 'Historical Collections.' Joseph Hubley was from Lancaster. John Andre Hanna was a native of New Jersey. He settled in Harrisburg about the time of the organization of the county and laying out of Harrisburg. I saw him once, but do not recollect his personal appearance. From information as to him, he would seem to me to have been an obliging, estimable man. He is noticed favorably, and, as I think, justly, in the narrative of the Duke de Rochefoucault, who visited Harrisburg in the year 1793, and the notice of him has been lately republished here. He says that Gen. Hanna was then 'about thirty-six or thirty-eight years of age, and was brigadier-general of the militia.' He was the brother-in-law of my father, Robert Harris, and was one of the executors of the will of John Harris, the founder of Harrisburg. John Hanna Briggs, lately deceased, one of his grandsons, was named after him. The name of Mr. Hanna is marked on the dockets of the court as counsel as late, at least, as the fall of 1795. How much longer I have not specially examined. He was elected to Congress from this district, and served from 1797 till 1806, in which year he died.

"Of James Riddle I know nothing certain. He may have been subsequently of Chambersburg.

"John Joseph Henry, Peter Huffnagle, and Jacob Hubley, were from Lancaster. James Biddle, I suppose John Marks Biddle, was from Reading; and so was Collinson Read, who was the compiler of Read's 'Precedents,' a book formerly much in use.

"Mr. Biddle was a man of very gentlemanly appearance, of courtly manners, and was afterwards, if not at the head, a leading member of the Reading bar. George Ross was from Lancaster. John Riley was from Lebanon County, then a part of Dauphin County, and was the father of Dr. Luther Riley, the well remembered physician of this place.

"Other attorneys, heretofore named, were Thomas Duncan, of Carlisle, afterwards a judge of the Supreme Court. Jasper Yeates, of Lancaster, who was also afterwards a judge of our Supreme Court, and was the compiler of Yeates' 'Reports.' Charles Smith was from Lancaster, and was afterwards the first judge of our District Court. Mr. Atlee and Mr. Montgomery were from Lancaster. Mr. Hamilton, afterwards Judge Hamilton, and Mr. Watts, were from Carlisle; and Mr. Hartley was from York.

"Col. Thomas Hartley was a native of Berks County, born in September, 1748. He studied law in York and commenced practice there. He entered the army at the opening of the Revolution, and soon became distinguished. He commanded a corps in the Wyoming and Susquehanna Valleys after the descent of Butler and the Indians. He was a member of Congress in 1788, and continued to hold the office during twelve years, and held several distinguished offices in this Commonwealth. He died 21st December, 1800, aged fifty-two years. This notice is from Day's 'Historical Collections of Pennsylvania.'

"Mr. Galbraith Patterson resided in Harrisburg. He was a son of Col. William Patterson, perhaps of Lancaster, a gallant officer of the Revolution and in Indian wars preceding. He was well educated and prepared for the study of law, which he pursued in the office of Jasper Yeates, of Lancaster, afterwards, as before stated, a judge of our Supreme Court. How long Mr. Patterson remained in Harrisburg is not known; but perhaps about 1799 or 1800 he removed to the west branch of the Susquehanna near to Williamsport, where he had a considerable tract of land, and he died not long afterwards.

"When Mr. Patterson was in legal practice there were few published reports of decisions of our Supreme Court; and from the commonplace book which Mr. Patterson left, which was prepared with neatness and care, it would appear that he was extensively read. It is said that he was quite a handsome man and of agreeable address. He was a contemporary of Mr. Fisher and Mr. Elder, of Harrisburg, and John Marks Biddle and Charles Evans, of Reading, who, I have been informed, spoke of him with respect and esteem. He was the father of the wife of Judge Hayes, of Lancaster, and of the late Dr. Edmund B. Patterson, of Lewis-town, who was exceedingly popular as a man, and was distinguished as a physician; and of whose geniality of temper, liberality and friendliness of disposition, it affords me pleasure, from a familiar acquaintance, to speak. Galbraith Patterson contributed to the improvement of Harrisburg by building the brick house on the Market Square, the second house below the Jones House.

"The late William Graydon, of Harrisburg, was one of the early members of our bar. He was the compiler of the book of legal forms, which was formerly in extensive use. He was a man of medium height, of very gentlemanly manners, of dark lively eyes, neat, if not precise in dress, and of an intelligent countenance. He was rather too diffident to encounter the asperities of the bar, and seldom, or perhaps never, was engaged in the trial of causes. He was for many years a justice of the peace. He was an honest Christian man, and was long an elder in the Presbyterian Church. His portrait, painted by Francis, is in existence, and is an excellent representation. He wore a coat, tied with a ribbon, and had his hair powdered. He died in October, 1840, aged nearly eighty-two. He was a brother of Alexander Graydon, who was the first prothonorary of this county, he having been appointed to the office, in the year 1785, by the Supreme Executive Council of the State, of which John Dickinson was then the president. Mr. Alexander Graydon was the author of Graydon's 'Memoirs,' which is quite an interesting book. On pages 334-35 of the edition by Littell, is an account of his election. Mr. Alexander Graydon was a gentleman of very respectable appearance, of sprightly agreeable manners, very polite, and, as his book shows, a ready and intelligent writer.

"Our courts were attended occasionally by Mr. James Hopkins, of Lancaster. Mr. Hopkins I have often seen and heard at the bar and in the House of Representatives. He was of medium height, and somewhat robust in form. He was considered to be an excellent lawyer, but was so deliberate in expression and, perhaps, it may be said, inanimate in manner, as to become rather tiresome in his discussions in court. He could, apparently without much exertion, speak for half a day or a day on a point of evidence in order, in endeavoring to enlighten the court, or to consume time till a witness was brought into court, or until some other unprepared-for event was accomplished. He was, in his practice at the bar, the very opposite of Thaddeus Stevens, who finally settled in Lancaster, who never occupied the time of the court when he had nothing to say that was material to the matter in hand, and who seldom occupied more time than was useful to it. I have heard that Mr. Elder considered Mr. Hopkins one of the few lawyers in this part of the State who were especially conversant with the law and practice relative to the Orphans' Court. It never appeared to me, however, that there was special intricacy as to such learning; but Mr. Elder had a great deal of such practice, and put a high estimate upon the knowledge necessary to understanding it.

"Charles Hall, of Sunbury, also occasionally practiced here. He was concerned with Charles Smith, afterwards the judge of our District Court when first established, on the part of the Commonwealth, on the trial of Hauer and others, in 1797 or 1798. He was rather above the common height, stout in person, of ruddy complexion, smooth, handsome face, of gentlemanly appearance and manner, of a highly respectable character, and of considerable ability in his profession. My impression is that he was a ready and agreeable speaker. I think that in the latter part of his life he did not seek practice, and that his family, having an ample estate, he probably retired from professional business. He died about 1824 or 1825, aged, perhaps, above sixty.

"When I was a boy going to school, Mr. Laird, Mr. Fisher, and Mr. Elder were the prominent members of the bar residing in Harrisburg. Mr. David Watts and Mr. Thomas Duncan, of Carlisle, the latter afterward on the bench of the Supreme Court, occasionally attended here.

"Mr. Watts was of rough exterior, careless of his dress, and by no means choice in his language. He seemed generally to be not at all reluctant to say what he thought, without regard to the feelings of the object of his remarks. Mr. Duncan, on the contrary, was a man of polished manner, neat and careful in dress, and never rude or wantonly disrespectful to others. They were the rival practitioners at Carlisle. I have heard of an anecdote which somewhat illustrates their respective characters. On one occasion in court, when Mr. Watts was annoyed by a remark of Mr. Duncan, he said, 'You little' (using some offensive expression), 'I could put you in my pocket.' 'Then,' said Mr. Duncan, 'you would have more law in your pocket than ever you had in your head.'

"I was present at the trial in this place of an indictment in which Mr. Watts was counsel for the defendant. It was an indictment for perjury in qualifying to the return of property by a debtor on his application for the benefit of the insolvent laws. The act of Assembly required the applicant to make return of his property. He submitted a schedule, to which he had been qualified, which he declared was a schedule of his property. It was alleged, on the part of the Commonwealth, that there were fraudulent omissions, and that the deponent had thus sworn falsely. But Mr. Watts made the point that the applicant in swearing that the exhibit was a statement of his property was not to be understood as declaring that it was a schedule of all of his property, and therefore that he was not guilty of perjury. The court, Judge Franks being on the bench, instructed the jury to that effect, and the defendant was acquitted. It may be said this instruction was more in accordance with the dictates of humanity than of law. In other words, that it was not common sense, and common law is said to be the perfection of reason or of common sense. There is a caricature of law in an old English play which represented an entertainment of servants in the absence of the master of the house. The conversation turned on law. One of the party said that a position spoken of as law was not law, that it was mere nonsense. 'Oh,' said the other, 'it may be nonsense, but still it may be very good law for all that.'

"Mr. Watts once, at the Carlisle bar, quoted from 'Teague O'Regan,' Judge Hamilton asked, 'What book is that you read from?' "'Modern Chivalry,' your Honor.' It is not a proper book to read from in court,' said the judge. 'I wish,' said Mr. Watts, 'that your honor could write such a book;' and he proceeded with the argument.

"There was a case which was, at the time, the occasion of much merriment at the expense of Mr. Watts. A man and woman were in his office in relation to some legal matter in which their marriage was material. They had been cohabiting together, and Mr. Watts inquired whether they had been married. Not being assured of it, he directed them to stand up. He asked the man whether he took the woman to be his lawful wife. To which he answered in the affirmative. To the question to the woman whether she took the man as her lawful husband, or in words to that effect, she replied, 'To be sure, he is my husband good enough.' The reporter of the case states that Mr. Watts advised them to go before a magistrate and repeat the ceremony, but this was not done. The Supreme Court, decided that though marriage is a civil contract, requiring no religious ceremonial, yet that it must be entered into in words implying a present agreement to contract it; that in this case the woman referred only to a past cohabitation, and this was insufficient for the purpose. The case is that of Hantz vs. Sealy, and reported in 6th Binney Reports.

"Mr. Watts was an impassioned, forcible, and fluent speaker, and was conceded to be an able lawyer. There was a striking contrast in the appearance of Mr. Watts and Mr. Duncan. Mr. Watts was apparently a strong powerful man, Mr. Duncan was a small man. Their voices were very dissimilar, that of Mr. Watts was strong and rather rough, that of Mr. Duncan was weak, and sometimes quite shrill when excited in pleading.

"Mr. Duncan was appointed a justice of the Supreme Court by Governor Snyder in 1817, in the place of Judge Yeates, deceased. Judge Tilghman, a man of very gentlemanly manners and a model judge, was then the chief justice, and Judge Gibson was the other associate. Judge Duncan eventually removed to Philadelphia, and resided there till his death, in November, 1837. A further notice of him exists in Day's 'Historical Collections,' page 265.

"Since writing the above notice of Mr. Watts and Duncan, I have perceived the following in Brackenridge's 'Recollections of Places and Persons in the West,' the time referred to being in or about 1807. He says that he attended court at Carlisle, where there were two very able lawyers, Messrs. Watts and Duncan. 'The former was possessed of a powerful mind, and was the most vehement speaker I ever heard. He seized his subject with an Herculean grasp, at the same time throwing his Herculean body and limbs into attitudes which would have delighted a painter or sculptor. He was a singular instance of the union of great strength of mind with bodily powers equally wonderful.'

"Mr. Duncan was one of the best lawyers and advocates I have ever seen at any bar, and he was, perhaps, the ablest judge that ever sat on the Supreme Bench of the State. He was a very small man, with a large but well-formed head. There never was a lover more devoted to his mistress than Mr. Duncan was to the study of the law. He perused Coke upon Littleton as a recreation, and read more books of reports than a young lady reads new novels. His education had not been very good, and his general reading was not remarkable. I was informed that he read frequently the plays of Shakespeare; and from that source derived that uncommon richness and variety of diction by which he was enabled to embellish the most abstruse subjects, although his language was occasionally marked by inaccuracies, even violation of common grammar rules. Mr. Duncan reasoned with admirable clearness and method on all legal subjects, and at the same time displayed great knowledge of human nature in examination of witnesses and in his addresses to the jury. Mr. Watts selected merely the strong points of his case, and labored them with an earnestness and zeal approaching to fury; and perhaps his forcible manner sometimes produced a more certain effect than that of the subtle and wily advocate opposed to him.'

"Mr. Brackenridge further remarks: 'Among the younger members of the bar, John Bannister Gibson, now chief justice of the State, was the most conspicuous. He, even then, had a high reputation for the clearness and soundness of his judgment and the superiority of his taste.' As to this latter remark I add, that Judge Gibson had a nice musical taste, and was a superior performer on the violin.

"Judge John Bannister Gibson, whose subsequent distinction as a jurist and in other respects has been so eloquently portrayed by Chief Justice Black in his biographical notice, printed in the preface to 7th Harris' Reports, was, in his younger days, rather democratically inclined. In the celebrated case of Eakin vs. Raub, reported in 12th Sergeant & Rawle's Reports, Judge Gibson dissented from the opinion of Chief Justice Tilghman, and in a lengthy opinion contended that though the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania had the power to declare an act of our Legislature to be unconstitutional where it conflicted with the Constitution of the United States, yet it had not such power when it conflicted merely with the Constitution of the State. But Judge Duncan, in an elaborate opinion in the case, demolished such a distinction; and Judge Gibson afterwards acknowledged the correctness of the decision of the majority of the court in the case of Eakin vs. Raub, in two opinions,—one in the case of Menges vs. Wertmen, reported in 1st Barr, 223, and the other the case of De Chastellux vs. Fairchild, reported in 3d Harris.

"Judge Duncan also delivered an able opinion in another case on an important question in practice. It had been a question whether the decree of the Orphans' Court, on the account of an executor or administrator, was subject to re-examination in a suit in the Common Pleas; and I recollect of a case which had been tried before Judge Gibson, holding a circuit in Lebanon County, in which items of an account were held liable to be overhauled. But in the case of McPherson vs. Cunliff, reported in 11 Sergeant & Rawle, it was decided that the decree of the Orphans' Court on a question clearly within its jurisdiction was conclusive as to the parties to it, except only on appeal to the Supreme Court. The case had been argued before the Supreme Court by very distinguished counsel, Mr. Parker Campbell, of Washington, Pa., and Mr. Biddle, of Pittsburgh, on the one side, and Mr. Baldwin and Mr. James Ross, of Pittsburgh, on the other. No sketch of the arguments of counsel is given in the report of the case, but the opinion of Judge Duncan is learned and elaborate.

"When I knew Mr. Samuel Laird, which was about the time of the war of 1812-15, he seemed to be declining in business and in health. He was a tall, good-looking man, of a mild, gentle disposition, very gentlemanly and kind in manner, and was considered to be a good lawyer. In the year 1811 he erected the three adjoining three-story brick buildings on Second Street, in one of which I live, and which were then considered to be quite creditable to the place. He died about 1815.

"Two gentlemen read law under the direction of Mr. Laird towards the close of his life,—I mean Mr. John M. Forster and Mr. Jacob B. Weidman. Each of them was a member of the bar for twenty or thirty years, Mr. Forster settling at Harrisburg, and Mr. Weidman at Lebanon, from which county he had come.

"Mr. Forster never had an extensive practice, but was for a number of years the counsel of the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania at this place, of which Mr. Lesley was cashier. He conducted with ability the prosecution of McElhenny, who was tried in April, 1827, for the murder of Sophia German. He was not a ready lawyer or speaker, but was possessed of good legal judgment when he had time for preparation. His ability lay in another direction. He had a taste for the military profession, and in that line of life might have been distinguished. He was of medium size and was well formed. He was an excellent penman, an accomplishment in which many of the bar are deficient.

"Mr. Weidman was a lawyer of great industry, and had for many years an extensive and the leading practice in Lebanon County. He was rather above the common size, stout in body, of florid countenance, of genial and jovial manners, and seemed to enjoy excellent health. He was not a fluent speaker, but was pertinacious in the conduct of his causes, and was slow to compromise, having confidence in his management of them. He understood the German language, which was of great advantage to him in Lebanon County, where that was then the common language, half or more of the witnesses in court then testifying in German. He enjoyed the confidence of the people of that county in his judgment and integrity to a great degree. Mr. Forster was his intimate friend, and frequently took part with him in the trial of his causes. I add that even at this time perhaps half of the witnesses at the Lebanon County Court testify in the German language, and that religious societies exist in that county in whose charters the use in their meetings of any other language than the German is expressly forbidden, and schools exist in that county in which the English language is not taught. Judge Pearson has wisely refused to approve of the charter of any religious society with such a prohibition, as being against public policy and the best interests of the people themselves.

"There was another member of the Harrisburg bar who was well known in his day. His name was William Wallace.

"Mr. Wallace was a native of this county. I understand that he studied law under the direction of Mr. Kittera, perhaps either in Lancaster or Philadelphia. He was admitted to the bar of this county in June, 1792. He removed to Erie, Pa., where he continued to reside till 1811, when he returned to this place; and when the Harrisburg Bank was established under the bank act of 1814 he was elected its president.

Before the banking act of 1814 was passed there was no bank of issue in this place. That act provided for one at this place and for nearly forty others in different parts of the State. Governor Snyder was then in office, and he vetoed the bill; but the banks provided for in the bill were so numerous that the bill was passed over his veto. Perhaps most of the banks established under it were put into operation, but in many cases, being improvidently managed, and not being required by the business of the community, they produced great injury in their respective neighborhoods.

"The city of Reading had one or more under that bill. Their mode of management was not generally understood by the community; and I have learned that on one occasion a man, unsophisticated in banking matters, came to the bank with his own note and applied for a loan. He was told that he must have an indorser. He innocently asked where the indorsers lived, supposing that there was a class of men designated by law to indorse notes.

"Another man in Berks County, supposing that he could make money out of the operation, gave out that he would indorse notes for ten per cent. of the proceeds; but the result was unfavorable to him, as his liabilities became greater than his receipts.

"Harrisburg was an advantageous location at that time for a bank from its being on the river and under the influence of the lumber trade, which gave it the advantage of a large and extensive circulation; and the Harrisburg bank was a success. It has always maintained a fair reputation, and is considered as one of the soundest of such institutions in the State. The present cashier, Mr. James W. Weir, has for many years been connected with it in that capacity, and enjoys, in a high degree, the respect and confidence of the community.

"From the establishment of the bank until near the time of his death Mr. Wallace was its president, and it may be inferred that his course in relation to it was judicious.

"I was too young, and was then too much absent from home at college, to know him otherwise than by sight. He was one of the examiners of Col. Roberts, when on examination for admission to the bar, and he expressed himself as much gratified at the gentlemanly conduct of Mr. Wallace on that occasion, he interfering when a question of practice was put, a point with which, in his opinion, Mr. Roberts was not reasonably supposed to be acquainted. The acquaintance continued, and Mr. Roberts entertained towards him much respect as a lawyer and a gentleman. He does not seem to have been extensively engaged in the practice of law here, yet the respectability of his character rendered him a credit to the bar of this county. His wife was a daughter of William Macloy, who was a senator with Robert Morris, from Pennsylvania, in the First Congress. Mr. Wallace was the father of the widow of the late Rev. William R. DeWitt, late of this place, and of the Rev. Benjamin J. Wallace, of Philadelphia. He died in this place in May, 1816, in the forty-sixth year of his age. The Rev. Benjamin Wallace was the author of an interesting article relative to the early settlements of this State, containing remarks relative to the killing of the Indians at Conestoga and Lancaster, and a eulogy of the Susquehanna, which has a place in the history of this society.

"It may be remarked that establishing the strength of a republican system of government and its adaptation to a wide expanse of country, and the extending of 'liberty throughout the land and to all the inhabitants thereof,' were not the only beneficial results of the late partition and feudal war. Another highly beneficial result was realized: the furnishing a currency of general circulation throughout the Union, supported by the government, instead of that existing during a great part of this century, viz., notes entirely, if not utterly, worthless; and others, though sound, yet of such varied description as to plates as to require critical and judicious examination to distinguish the genuine from the spurious; and even as to notes issued in the same State, from the multiplicity of banks and the variety of notes, calling for a degree of knowledge and skill as to the condition of the banks and genuineness of their issue which was difficult of attainment.

"From 1810 till 1840, or some time afterwards, Mr. Fisher and Mr. Elder were in their prime. They were men of very different characteristics.

"Mr. George Fisher was possessed of mild, gentlemanly manners, and was kind in his intercourse with the young members of the bar. He had a ruddy complexion, a fine face, and handsome head. He was a large man; in his youth was probably quite strong, and was quite fleshy toward the end of his professional career. He was remarkable for the musical character of his voice and the distinctness of his utterance. When standing at his office-door on the southwest corner of the market square, where the Presbyterian Church is now erected, he could be heard, with considerable distinctness, fifty yards off. He had also re-markedly strong eyes. I have seen him reading in court, with a candle (we had then no gas) held in one hand and a book or paper in the other, and the candle held so far forward that he seemed to look almost through it.

"He seemed to have been extensively engaged in litigation in ejectment cases depending on original title, which were then a fertile subject of dispute in our courts and in those of the neighboring counties. He occasionally, and perhaps for a number of years, attended the Sunbury court. In my time at the bar he was frequently, so far as respected the facts of his case, not ready for trial, though when he got them fully out he would often manage them well. He seemed to be fond of the study of the law, and had a considerable law library. When Judge Franks resigned, Calvin Blythe, then, I think, Secretary of the Commonwealth, was spoken of as his successor. Mr. Fisher also desired the appointment, and said that experience at the bar was necessary for that position, and that Calvin Blythe had not had a sufficiency of it. Judge Blythe was, however, appointed. It happened, after a while, that a suit was on trial before him in which Mr. Fisher was the defendant, and it was one of considerable magnitude. Judge Blythe charged in favor of Mr. Fisher. This effected a revolution of opinion concerning the judge in the mind of Mr. Fisher, and he said that he began to think that the fellow would make a pretty good judge. Several years before his death he retired from practice at the bar and resided on his farm below Middletown.

"Mr. Thomas Elder led the bar here in amount of business for perhaps twenty or more years. He was remarkably industrious, being generally in his office late at night. When in court and not engaged in the trial of a cause, or with business in the Orphans' Court, of which he had a very large share, he usually was engaged, not in conversation like other members of the bar, but in writing. He was nearly always ready for the trial of his cause, and was usually quite familiar with the facts of his case. It was not common for him to ask a continuance of a case when with reasonable vigilance he could have been ready; but Mr. Fisher was frequently in a condition to render a continuance desirable. Mr. Elder was merely a lawyer and man of business. He had little imagination; and his reading, except of law, appeared to have been very limited. He had an extensive acquaintance throughout the county; and when he had important cases on hand looked well to the connection between parties and jurors. He seldom indulged in recreation; his time was pretty much occupied by attention to his profession and to the care of his property, of which he had a large share. He was for many years the president of the Harrisburg Bank, which fact probably contributed to the extension of his business. He had also a large professional business in Lebanon County; but I never knew of his attending court in any other county. He was possessed of strong prejudices, and it is probable that it would have been difficult for him to forgive any one who had offended him in any material matter. But he was not without generous impulses. When he took a fancy to a person he would sometimes be social and liberal, not merely in words, but in a pecuniary way; but when he entertained a dislike, he was rather unrelenting. He read law with Gen. Hanna.

"When Mr. Fisher and Mr. Elder were pitted against each other in the trial of a case, it seemed to be as much a personal conflict between them as professional zeal in behalf of their respective clients. Mr. Elder was frequently personally offensive; Mr. Fisher was without malice, but, like a trained boxer, stood up to the fight as long as his opponent carried on the personal contest. Mr. Elder was about six feet in height, and was large in proportion, though not fleshy. His countenance was without color, not pleasant, but his person was remarkably straight and was impressive. In his young days he was exceedingly agile. I have heard that when he was studying law a raftsmen from up the river made a banter to jump with any one in the town. Mr. Elder was called on at the office of Gen. Hanna, and was persuaded to engage in the contest. The river man in a running jump leaped nineteen feet, but Mr. Elder leaped four inches farther. He left the bar ten or more years before his death. He left a large real estate. He was a son of Parson Elder, of the Paxton and Derry Churches.

"Mr. Fisher was not so tall as Mr. Elder, but heavier in person. He was the son of George Fisher, the founder of Middletown. Both had superior constitutions and enjoyed excellent health till near the period of their respective deaths. Mr. Fisher died in February, 1853, aged eighty-seven, and Mr. Elder died in April, 1853, aged above eighty-six. They were born within six months of each other, and within six miles of each other, and in the same township in this county. Mr. Fisher was admitted to the bar in November, 1787; Mr. Elder was admitted in August, 1791.

"Mr. Elder was a very successful lawyer. When our district court was established in this county, Mr. Charles Smith being the judge, a considerable number of causes were set down for trial. Mr. Elder put down quite a number, and being one of the oldest practitioners, his cases were at the head of the list. He was concerned in nearly every case tried during the two weeks' court. About twenty verdicts were taken in that time, and Mr. Elder succeeded in obtaining verdicts, if not in all but one of the cases he tried, in all but one, two, or three. Charles Smith was a superior lawyer, and as a judge very ready and decided.

"Neither Mr. Elder or Mr. Fisher contributed to the improvement of Harrisburg by the erection of any substantial building; the houses which they occupied had been built by others.

"Amos Ellmaker was admitted to the bar in this place at the December term, 1808, but removed to Lancaster in 1821. He is mentioned in my article relative to the president judges of Dauphin County. He was possessed of fine conversational powers, and was accessible and pleasant in intercourse.

"From 1810 till 1825 or 1830 there were no other lawyers here, except perhaps Mr. Ellmaker, who had anything near the extent of practice enjoyed by Mr. Fisher and Mr. Elder. There was, however, a member of the bar who was widely celebrated. This was Mr. Moses McClean. He was a native of Adams County, in this State, and was admitted to the bar in 1807.

"Mr. Maclean was possessed of decided literary tastes; but he was not deficient in his argument on legal points when he took the trouble to understand them. His addresses to juries were generally briefly expressed and to the proper points. He was exceedingly indolent, and did not strive to obtain business. He had a fine poetic vein, and some of his productions in that line are highly creditable. His verses on the Scriptural passage (see Luke xxii. 24), 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,' are exceeding beautiful, and deserve to be extensively circulated. I quote as follows:

"Come, mourning souls, rejoice, be glad,
Drive every fear away;
Come listen to the dying God,
And hear the Saviour pray.

"Legions of angels were his own,
Obedient to His word;
With zeal the immortal warriors burned
To vindicate their Lord.

"Michael, of heaven's own army prince,
Thou didst no succor bring,
Nor grasp'd thy spear, hell's terror once,
To save thy suffering King.

"To earth no thunders dared to roll,
No lightnings flamed abroad,
For meek-eyed love their vengeance chained
Fast to the throne of God.

"Father, forgive them, Jesus cried,
Let vengeance not pursue;
Father, forgive them, was his prayer,
They know not what they do.

"Come, mourning souls, again rejoice,
Cause every doubt to flee,
Thy Saviour for his murderers prayed,
And he will pray for thee.

"Should persecution's eager shaft
Pursue us while we live,
Jesus, benevolent, divine,
Oh, teach us to forgive."

"Little of his poetry is now remembered, though some may be found in one or more newspapers of the day. I recollect a couple of verses, in a different strain from the preceding, which were written by him as a New Year's Address for a carrier of one of our newspapers. He addressed in these verses persons of various occupations, and those to the innkeepers and storekeepers were substantially to this effect:

"Ye innkeepers, who furnish us brandy and wine,
Nice roast beef and turkey on which we may dine,
When you spread out your table give the traveler his fill,— Let him think of his belly and not of his bill.

"Ye storekeepers, who sell us good coffee and tea,
Don't charge us two dollars for stinking Bohea;
When you handle the yardstick, keep your thumb to the spot;
If it slip, slip it forward, or else slip it not."

"He was a Federalist in politics, but during the governorship of Simon Snyder he conceived the idea of being appointed judge. He gave at some celebration a toast, 'Simon Snyder: he distinguishes merit, and rewards it.' Some one asked him when he became a Democrat. 'Why,' he said, 'he helped to carry the lantern.' But this was after the election.

"He was inclined to humor. He once entered a dark room with a gentleman who immediately opened a window. Mr. McClean then observed that a philosophical idea had just occurred to him. 'Well, what was it?' 'Why, when you opened the window, did the light come in or the darkness go out?' The reply was expressive but not complimentary.

"He had a bald head. He said of it that the soil over gold-mines was always barren. He was occasionally called on for toasts at public celebrations, and he was sometimes quite happy in expression. One I recollect was, 'Our Country, a Hercules in its infancy, what will it be in its manhood?' On one occasion a man from Philadelphia was dining here on the advantages in Philadelphia over those in Harrisburg. 'Why,' says he, 'here you have trouble to get milk; in Philadelphia it is brought to our doors.' 'Oh,' says Mr. McClean, 'that is the reason you have so many calves in Philadelphia.' It is to be regretted that his life had not been more carefully conducted, and that he had not devoted more of his time to study and literary pursuits. He might have left an elevated reputation. He was rather above the common height, inclined to fatness, of large head, not unpleasant countenance, of genial, social manners, and was exceedingly careless in his dress. He went to reside at Huntingdon, in this State, where he died. He married a daughter of John Hamilton, formerly of Harrisburg, and at one time extensively engaged here in mercantile operations.

"Francis R. Shunk, afterwards Governor of the State, was admitted to this bar in September, 1816. He did not enjoy much practice in the profession here, his other avocations—as clerk of the House of Representatives and to the board of canal commissioners, etc.—occupying most of his time. He was a superior penman and an excellent reader. He was a social, kind-hearted man, a very cheerful, pleasant companion, fond of and abounding in anecdote, and not given to evil speaking of others. He was very popular in this place. He removed to Pittsburgh, where he was somewhat engaged in professional avocations, and was residing there when elected as Governor. He was re-elected, but resigned in July, 1848, having discharged with characteristic probity the duties of the executive office.

"Mr. Shunk was very tall, being two or three inches over six feet in height. He was at the head—being the tallest—of the military company in which he marched as a private soldier to Baltimore in 1814. His frame was large, but not fleshy. His appearance was rather ungainly, but his address was so frank and genial that the defects of his form were little considered by those in his company. He was nearly in extremis when he resigned, and he died a few hours afterwards.

"Mr. Abiathar Hopkins was for several years a member of the Harrisburg bar. He was from one of the New England States, and for several years taught a female seminary in Harrisburg. He then studied law and was admitted to the bar, and practiced with credit for several years. After an absence from home for a number of years he went on a visit to his family in New England, and about the time he reached home he took sick and died. He possessed an excellent character, gentlemanly manners, and was much respected here.

"Mr. Samuel Douglas came here from Pittsburgh. He was a member of the Legislature, and it being supposed that there was an opening here for a lawyer of the Democratic side of politics, he removed here. He was appointed attorney-general by Governor Wolf in his first term. He was possessed of ready and animated elocution, and was decided and positive in his expression of opinion and argument. He was considered to be a good criminal lawyer, but was not considered by the profession as distinguished in other departments of the law. He was an Irishman by birth, as was indicated by his speech. He was about six feet in height, thin in person, of plain appearance, and rather awkward in manner. He was a man of fair reputation, and was a member in communion of the Presbyterian Church in this place. He died in this place above twenty years ago.

"Another member of the bar who practiced with considerable success, and with whom I was on specially friendly relations, was William McClure. Though not possessed of the graces of oratory, he had a legal mind of a high order. His judgment on questions of law was excellent. I had great faith in his professional opinion. His memory, too, was remarkable. He kept no docket, but seemed to have but little difficulty to trace up the history of his cases. He was fond of reading, and was possessed of considerable information outside of the law. He was successful in business, and left a considerable estate. He was a native of this county, was a graduate at Cannonsburg, and died in August, 1852. He was at one time one of the representatives of this county in the House of Representatives.

"Judge David Krause was a member of this bar for fifteen or more years. He was a native of Lebanon County, and read law in the office of Judge Walker, who was United States judge, residing in Pittsburgh. Robert J. Walker, afterwards senator and Secretary of the Treasury, was a student in the same office at the same time. Mr. Krause settled for a while at Lebanon, but about the year 1825 came to Harrisburg to act as private secretary to Governor Shulze. He afterwards purchased an interest in the Intelligencer newspaper, printed at Harrisburg, and was connected therein with Gen. Cameron. He subsequently sold his interest in the paper, and was admitted to the bar of this place, commencing practice here about 1828 or 1829. He was a representative from this county in the House of Representatives for one term. In 1845 he was appointed by Governor Porter judge in the Norristown district and removed to Norristown, where he remained till his death. He was a fluent speaker, and possessed of considerable ability both as a writer and speaker. He was of medium height, slight in form, dark hair, of a bright, intelligent countenance, of agreeable manners, and of kind disposition. He died about a year ago, aged about seventy-three.

"Archibald Findlay read law in the office of Mr. Ellmaker, and was admitted to the bar in this county in December, 1820. He subsequently settled at Chambersburg, and died not many years afterwards. He had a fine intellect, and was possessed of refined literary taste. Had he lived he might have become distinguished. He was a son of Governor Findlay and a brother of Judge Findlay, of Philadelphia. He had a remarkably fine person, a highly intellectual countenance, and had bushy red hair. He and I started for college together. We read law in the same office, and were admitted to the bar at the same time.

"Samuel Shoch read law at the same time in the office of Mr. Ellmaker, and was admitted in March, 1820. He is a native of Harrisburg. He was a member of one of the military companies, viz., that of Capt. Craue, which marched from this place to Baltimore in 1814, and which acquired credit without much glory in the expedition, as there was no enemy there to combat whilst they were in the service. In one of the other companies, viz., that of Capt. Walker, were Charles and R. Ferdinand Durang, the latter of whom adapted for 'The Star Spangled Banner,' which had just been written, the tune to which it is now sung. The two brothers, after it was sung in camp, sung it on the stage of the Holiday Street Theatre, in Baltimore. (See an account of it in Harper's Magazine of July, 1871.) C. and F. Durang had been members of a theatrical company which had on several occasions visited Harrisburg, and to which belonged the celebrated comedian Blissett and the elder Jefferson, who was quite distinguished as a comic actor. Jefferson subsequently died in Harrisburg, and over his remains a stone was put by the direction of Chief Justice Gibson and Judge Rogers.

"Mr. Shoch was for years the collecting attorney of the Harrisburg Bank. I was concerned with him in the proceeding in the Frey estate at Middletown, as to which application was made in or about May, 1823, to the Supreme Court at Lancaster, under the act of 1818, relative to charitable trusts. George Frey was a native of Germany. He had long been engaged at Middletown in merchandising and milling. He had no children, and he desired to devote his large estate, consisting of above eight hundred acres of land, with a valuable water-power on the Swata Creek, to charitable purposes. He determined to found an institution not merely for the education, but for the maintenance and education of orphan children, who as a part of their education were to be instructed in the tenets of the Lutheran Church. He did not seek to perpetuate his own name in the title of the institution, but gave it one commemorative of an interesting scene in the life on earth of the Saviour after his crucifixion by calling it 'The Emaus Orphan House.' His will was dated in 1806, and was written by John Joseph Henry, president judge of the courts of Dauphin County. It was an elaborate one, and contained minute and special directions. It is reported in the case ex-parte Casael and Spayd, in 3d Watts' Reports. The estate after his death was mismanaged, and the orphan house became decayed and no school was kept. The Lutheran clergyman at Harrisburg, the venerable Mr. Lochman, considering that the children to be maintained and educated in the institution were to be instructed in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church, felt interested in the subject, and applied to Mr. Shoch, whose family belonged to his church, to endeavor to have some action taken on the subject.

"As the will contained a provision for settlement of accounts of the trust in the Courts of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County, application was made to that court, of which Judge Franks was then president.

Months elapsing after the application without any decision, Mr. Shoch applied to me as an assistant, and it was concluded to make application to the Supreme Court at their session at Lancaster, under the act of 1818, before referred to. In the course of the proceeding a question might be raised as to obtaining a status in court, inasmuch as no school existed, and consequently no children were in it who were interested in its maintenance. But the will provided for the education of orphans. As an orphan was sometimes defined to be a child who had lost one parent, we concluded to make application in the name of Charles F. Muench, of Harrisburg, as the guardian of certain minor children whose deceased father (the mother, however, surviving the father) had been a member of the Lutheran Church. We did so by petition directed against the former principal, who had resigned, and also against the principal then in charge of the estate, and also against certain of the trustees provided for in the will. This was in May, 1829.

"At the time appointed there appeared against us Mr. Buchanan, a distinguished member of the Lancaster bar and afterwards President of the United States, and Mr. Hopkins, a veteran lawyer of the same bar.

"Mr. Buchanan contended that application having been made to the court of Dauphin County, an election of that forum had been made. Also that the Supreme Court had no jurisdiction of the matter; that the act of 1818 had provided only for cases where no other redress existed, and that in this case the will provided for action in the court of Dauphin County. He ridiculed certain provisions of the will, alleged that no orphan had applied for admission, and that this was the case with regard to the wards of the petitioner.

"After the close of Mr. Buchanan's argument, Mr. Hopkins made some remarks, one of which was that 'if the court will read the will, they will see that it is the will of a foolish man.' To which Judge Huston said, 'We are not going to read the will now, nor is it necessary that we should.' The court sustained the application and directed an account before auditors of their appointment.

"It is proper to remark that on the will being offered for probate in or about the year 1806, the court directed an issue of derisariæ rei non, in which the jury found in favor of the will. The character of the will, as well as the sanity of the testator, were of course examinable on the trial of that issue.

"Also it was scarcely competent for the principal, holding office under the will and enjoying advantages under it, to object to its validity. And, further, that if there were provisions in the will of an absurd, unreasonable, or impracticable character, they should scarcely have been permitted to nullify the reasonable, practicable, and meritorious provisions in it.

"In the course of the proceedings before the auditors Mr. Shoch laboriously examined the books of accounts and made abstracts. Being dissatisfied with the auditors' report, we filed exceptions to it, and after argument before the Supreme Court a decree was made which terminated in large charges against the two principals who had charge of the estate.

"Application was then made by us for a change of management, and on the hearing of this proceeding Mr. Stevens appeared and claimed an appointment of the principal on nomination by the Lutheran Synods. In objection to this an animated and impressive address was made by Mr. Shoch. Our nominee was appointed, a substantial building has been erected, an act of incorporation has been obtained, and a school established, which is now in operation, and in which the English as well as the German language is taught.

"On the argument in the Supreme Court on the exceptions filed, Mr. Fisher and Mr. Elder were for parties in the case, and Mr. Herman Alricks, then a young man and now a highly respectable member of the Harrisburg bar, appeared for the first principal under the will and contended that he should not be held accountable, alleging that he was under the supervision of and subject to removal by the trustees. The Supreme Court, however, decided differently.

"Mr. Shoch subsequently was for some time the clerk of the House of Representatives of this State; was afterwards secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1838, and is now the respectable, intelligent, and successful cashier of the National Bank of Columbia.

"There is one provision in the will of George Frey which I do not consider to be authoritative, viz., the provision that no part of the real estate devised shall ever be sold. I conceive that the law-making power has control over all the landed property within the limits of the State, and that where the public interests imperatively require its sale, its sale may be directed, the proceeds, in cases of trust, to be applied to the same uses as declared in the trust. A conversion is not a diversion. It must sometimes, if not frequently, be a great public inconvenience or a positive evil that real estate remain in the same condition and subject to the same uses as those for which it has been devised or conveyed. It is not reasonable that one or more persons, whose life cannot in the course of nature long endure, shall impress upon property of which he or they happened to be possessed a character, either as to sale or partition, which shall bind the public in all time and under all circumstances and conditions. The earth is for the living and not for the dead, and though wills of decedents and agreements of individuals are entitled to and should receive reasonable respect, yet to such considerations the public interests are paramount. See Norris vs. Clymer, 2 Barr, 277.

"In conclusion as to the will of George Frey:

"The application to the Supreme Court on the part of members of the Lutheran Church not being successful, an act of Assembly was obtained in 1846 for the appointment of the trustees on the nomination of the two Lutheran Synods lying east and west of the Susquehanna. The case arising under the act was taken to the Supreme Court, who in the case of Brown vs. Hummel, reported in 6th Barr, decided that the act was unconstitutional, and that the trustees in office could not be removed without a hearing at law. Now, it was sought by the act of 1846 to obtain a change of trustees in the interests of the Lutheran Church and not on account of misconduct on their part, and therefore a trial at law would not have effected the object, but the act of 1846 may have been objectionable as limiting the choice of trustees to those of a particular church, whereas the will of the founder provided that 'members in good standing of any of the Protestant Churches' should be eligible.

"The judge who delivered the opinion of the court in the case of Brown vs. Hummel declared that the charter or act of incorporation of the institution was a contract between the government and individuals, and the case of the Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, reported in 4th Wheaton, was referred to in support of the position. Now it may be somewhat difficult to see how the act of incorporation of a public charity is a contract, and not merely an act of ordinary legislation liable to alteration by the Legislature which enacted it or by a subsequent one, especially where no money is paid to the Commonwealth or required by the act to be expended, which might not, under the terms of the will, be expended without the act. But such it has been declared to be in the case of Brown vs. Hummel, before referred to.

"It may not be improper to add that if the obligations of a contract rest upon the Commonwealth as to every act of incorporation of a charitable, literary, or banking institution, horse or other railroad, or act of incorporation for any other purpose, and if any evil provision cannot be repaired except something be done beyond the terms of the act of incorporation, and even then not directly by the enacting power, acting by its own force or by such instrumentality as it may choose (but always according to the requirements of justice), but necessarily through a proceeding in court, then the law-making power ought to be especially careful as to the privileges granted or contained in them. The legislative will may otherwise turn out provisions which may be unpalatable to the public taste or injurious to the health of the body politic.

"The Constitution of the United States was not framed till 1787. It contains the brief provision that no State shall pass any law 'impairing the obligation of contracts.' It does not explain whether the contracts meant are simply contracts between individuals, or also contracts between individuals and the government. The Dartmouth College case did not refer to a charter granted in this country and since the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, but to one granted to the trustees of Dartmouth College in 1769 by the British crown, and it was to this literary institution, thus formed, that the Supreme Court of the United States applied the inhibition to the States to pass any law 'impairing the obligation of contracts,' and this antique case was referred to in support of the decision in Brown vs. Hummel.

"Is it not true that the Dartmouth College case and other kindred decisions, no matter by what authority supported,—and they are supported by the authority of great names,—be repudiated, but not limiting the negation to charters of literary or charitable institutions, but giving it a wider scope, and the power of the Legislature to control them be acknowledged?

"It has been argued and alleged that where Congress, or, by parity of reasoning, a State Legislature acts within its constitutional power in repealing or changing the terms of an act of incorporation, the justice which should certainly attend such proceeding should legally be measured by a proceeding at law. But if Congress or the Legislature of a State possess the power of repeal or alteration, why should not the proper measure of justice be administered in such manner or by such instrumentality as the legislative power shall direct? And is it not worthy of consideration whether the prohibition to the States as to interfering with contracts refers simply to contracts between individuals, and not to contracts between individuals and the government itself? It is a legal principle, in the construction of statutes, that the sovereign is not included unless expressly named. See Broom's Legal Maxims, 73. Why should not this principle be applied to the provision as to contracts in the Constitution of the United States?

"The Supreme Court of the United States also decided, in the case of the State of New Jersey vs. Wilson (see 1 Kent's Com. 414-15) that the power of taxation could be permanently surrendered. Now 'the taxing power is an incident of sovereignty, an essential part of every independent government.' (Black, C. J., in the case of the Bank of Pennsylvania vs. the Commonwealth, 7th Harris, 152.) How, then, can it be surrendered by a temporary legislature? 'Taxation to be just must be equal, and to be equal must be universal.' 'To exempt some would be to increase the burdens of others.' (Idem.) Why, then, should the property of institutions, not for burial or religious objects or for purposes of general charity, be relieved of a burden to which that of the poor is subjected?

"The occasion to which I have referred was not the only one on which I have heard Mr. Buchanan. I heard him frequently in our State Legislature when he was a young man, and I then much admired him. His voice was agreeable, very clear, with a ringing sound, and loud; his enunciation was exceedingly distinct; he was fluent in speech, though deliberate, but not unpleasantly so; his manner usually animated, and his language unexceptionable. I also heard him in the Senate at Washington, just previous to the inauguration of Gen. Harrison. He spoke in opposition to an impracticable, absurd resolution, introduced by Mr. Crittenden, soon to be one of the new cabinet, prohibiting officers of the general government from interfering in elections. An earnest discussion took place, the Senate being addressed by Mr. Crittenden, Mr. Clay, Mr. Mangum, Mr. Wright, Robert J. Walker, and perhaps by Mr. Calhoun, and in my estimation Mr. Buchanan was not surpassed by any one on that occasion. He was an agreeable speaker, and very able and impressive in debate; but he was considered to be timid and irresolute when required to assume responsibilities on occasions of extraordinary importance to himself or to the public interests. When secession was threatened or actually begun, had he possessed the resolution and intrepidity which, at such a crisis, should have been displayed by the head of the government, the South would not have been in doubt whether secession would be met by mere protestation, acquiescence or entreaty, or fought to the bitter end. But Mr. Buchanan appears to have been fitted for action in quiet times, rather than the stormy scenes of politics or revolution.

"Mr. Buchanan was tall in person, his form large and well developed. His head, however, from some diseased condition, or from malformation in his neck, hung to one side. He dressed carefully, and his appearance was gentlemanly and impressive.

"Two young men read law in the office of Mr. Shunk when he was in practice here, viz., William M. Hall and James Findlay, and they were admitted to the bar in November, 1822.

"Mr. Hall was a native of Harrisburg. His mother was a daughter of William Maclay, and she resided at the time of her death in the stone house on the corner of Front and South Streets, in this place, which had been built about the year 1794 by her father, and which was the second stone house built within the present limits of Harrisburg, the one erected in 1766, near the lower end of Front Street, by the second John Harris, subsequently the founder of Harrisburg, being the first.

"Mr. Hall settled at Lewistown, in the county of Mifflin, where he soon got into practice; and had he continued at the bar, from his marked ability and great industry, would probably have attained a high rank in the profession. But his mind becoming religiously impressed, he abandoned the practice of law, studied divinity, and became a clergyman in the Presbyterian Church, and was widely known throughout the State. His health became impaired, and he died in middle age at Bedford, in August, 1831. His mind was too active and energetic for the frail tenement in which it was lodged. His bodily strength was not sufficient for attaining a knowledge of two professions. His eyes were prominent and he was near-sighted, but he did not discover the imperfection till he was well grown, when, hearing some boys speak of seeing something on the island opposite, he at first disbelieved that the island could be seen distinctly from the town, and it was then he discovered his defect of vision. Mr. Hall was a very honest, upright man, reliable in his friendships, and a sincere Christian. One of his sons is now a member of this bar.

"James Findlay was a son of Governor Findlay, four of whose five sons were admitted to the bar. He settled in Greensburg, Westmoreland Co., where he had been appointed the prosecuting officer, and from which county he was afterwards elected to the Legislature, where he soon became distinguished. He was subsequently appointed Secretary of the Commonwealth by Governor Wolf. He eventually removed to Pittsburgh, where he was joined in the profession by Mr. Shunk a short time before his nomination for the office of Governor. He there died, unmarried, in middle age, about the year 1844. James Findlay and his elder brother, Archibald, heretofore mentioned, were men of gentlemanly instincts and manners, and were each of rather superior ability and of fair reputation.

"I here take occasion to mention that Governor William Findlay, for whose memory I entertain a youthful respect, has been confounded with William Findlay, of Westmoreland County. See Graydon's 'Memoirs,' edited by Littell, pages 356 and 373.

"Mr. McCormick was known to most of the present members of the bar. He was a superior lawyer, and from his unexcitable temperament might have been well fitted for the bench. When actively engaged in his profession he had a more extensive practice than any other of those who came into practice with him. His opinions on matters of law were generally reliable, and he was extensively called on for counsel after, from loss of sight, he ceased to be able to try causes in court. He was an effective speaker, and when he lost a cause it might generally be considered that he had the wrong side of it. He was of medium size, and of intellectual countenance. It would seem that after arriving at manhood he never enjoyed good health. He was sedentary in his habits, taking but little exercise either in walking or otherwise. He was rather unsocial in intercourse, but seemed to enjoy the company of his friends when in his office. His eyesight, perhaps owing to his sedentary life, and perhaps excessive and incautious use of his eyes, became impaired, and he became blind. The affection, however, did not seem to affect his spirits, and in his office he seemed much as usual. Though sorely afflicted for many years, he bore his affliction, at least publicly, with little murmur or complaint. He died in January, 1870, aged sixty-nine.

"John C. Kunkel was of quite prepossessing appearance. He was of medium height, slight, but well formed, had a ruddy countenance and very clear complexion. He had a pleasant voice, was a highly agreeable speaker, and more accomplished in that respect than any other member of the bar of this place since the organization of the county. Though distinguished as a speaker, he was not considered by the leading members of the bar here to be so as a lawyer. To attain eminence in knowledge of law requires close and attentive study, as well as large practice, and he had not industry or resolution sufficient to effect that result. He was twice elected to Congress, but his business engagements at home interfered so much with his representative duties that he was not distinguished as a member of Congress. He was unusually successful in the acquisition of fortune, a portion of which he left to purposes of charity. He died in October, 1870.

"There was another member of the bar who died some years ago who was considerably distinguished for his knowledge of law and for industry in his profession. This was John A. Fisher. He came to the bar in December, 1820, when his father, Mr. George Fisher, heretofore spoken of, was still in considerable practice, and thus was enabled the more readily to get into business. He was the most laborious lawyer I have known in the course of my practice here. He was generally ready for the trial of his causes when by reasonable diligence it could be effected. His usage in the trial of a cause was to endeavor to write down nearly all of the oral testimony delivered, not trusting to his memory for it. This contributed to lengthen trials in which he was engaged, and was often complained of by the court and the adverse counsel, but he was pertinacious. When his turn came he gave the cause a thorough examination. In the preparation of his paper-books for the Supreme Court he was elaborate, and it was not his fault if his side of the case was not understood. He pursued the profession for about forty years, and had an extensive and lucrative practice in this and Lebanon County. He was generally concerned in the few ejection cases which depended on original title which were tried here after the older lawyers, who had large experience in that line, had died or had retired from the bar. These cases related to timber lands or mountain lands in the coal region, which had become an object of special attention. He also drafted the act of March, 1860, for the incorporation of the city of Harrisburg, which extensive act is evidence of his ability and is a specimen of his industry. He died in July, 1864, aged sixty-six. He was a large man, of remarkably vigorous constitution, and of great strength and power of endurance.

"Charles C. Bawn was a member of this bar for fifteen or twenty years. He was from one of the eastern counties of this State, perhaps from Chester. He was possessed of considerable ability, of great energy of character, and was indefatigable in attention to his professional business. He was fluent in speech, and in controversy was the last to yield. He was a relative of Governor Shunk, which connection most probably induced his settlement here. He had been of the Democratic school of politics, and was decidedly opposed to abolition, alleging a fear of a servile war of blacks against whites, but when the war began he was decided for the Union, and became a provost-marshal in the mustering in of troops. He was successful in his profession. He was a very industrious man, and I understand that for years he kept a journal which, if it covered the whole period of the late war, may contain some interesting reminiscences. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church in this place. He died in December, 1865, aged sixty-four. He was about six feet high and of good address.

"Another member of our bar was well known in his day, and is deserving of notice on account of the spirit he displayed in regard to enterprises of a public character without an absorbing interest in them as to personal advantage on his part. I mean William Ayres. His knowledge of law as well as his general reading was quite moderate, but his judgment on common matters of a practical character was excellent. He had great energy of character and a large degree of public spirit. He had also considerable ingenuity and management in originating and forwarding public enterprises. He arranged the construction of the Harrisburg water-works, forwarded that of the Broad Top Railroad, and had the survey made of a railroad from Harrisburg to Hamburg, which is now in process of construction. He was a member of the House of Representatives for two terms. He was a man of large size, rather fleshy, of genial temper, of excellent disposition, obliging, and social. His life was a useful one. He seemed to have enjoyed excellent health till near the period of his death. He died in May, 1856, aged sixty-four.

"In December, 1867, occurred the death of Judge McKinney, aged seventy-one. He studied law in Carlisle under the direction of Judge Duncan, and was exceedingly well grounded in its elementary principles. He had not the faculty of fluent expression, and did not succeed well in practice. He was at one time one of the associate judges in this county. He was the author of several legal works, one on the Constitution of the United States, a work on the office of justice of the peace, and a digest of the laws of Pennsylvania. He was an upright, conscientious man, was a decided abolitionist, being one of the vice-presidents of the Anti-Slavery Society as long ago as 1836, was long a member of the Presbyterian Church of this city, of which he was an elder, and was a zealous Christian. His death occurred through accident on the street railroad in this city.

"William H. Miller was a member of this bar for ten or more years. He was possessed of a fine physique, was nearly six feet high, and well formed. He was gentle and agreeable in manner, of a social turn, and of a kind disposition. But in politics he was inflexible. His father had been one of the Democratic leaders in Pennsylvania, and his son imbibed early the same political faith. He seemed to think that the interests of the country were bound up in the ascendancy of Democratic men and the principles and measures which they advocated, and that the course of the Republican party was the direct reverse. He seemed to have a strong predilection for politics, and was usually ready to support his party or encounter the political enemy. He represented this congressional district at the beginning of the late war. He was one of the counsel of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. I should think that he had not devoted much of his time to the study of his profession. His practice, perhaps, was chiefly in the criminal courts. He was a ready, forcible, and agreeable speaker. He died in September, 1870, aged forty-two.

"John H. Briggs was born in Cumberland County, but resided here for the last thirty years. He was a respectable lawyer, though he never had much practice in the trial of causes. He had considerable experience as an accountant and auditor, and was appointed by the court, or on nomination of parties, to adjust important interests in that matter. He was an upright, honorable man, and his death was much regretted in this community. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church in this place, and had long been connected with it. He was above the ordinary height, was well formed, and of very gentlemanly appearance. He died in March, 1872, aged fifty-seven.

"There was lately an ancient member of our bar lingering on the threshold of life. I mean John Roberts. Col. Roberts was connected with the bar for more than half a century. He never had an extensive practice. His tastes were of a mathematical and scientific character. As a civil engineer, surveyor, and draughtsman he was quite accomplished. He was fond of reading, and was possessed of a fund of information in science, history, and general literature. He was a botanist of respectable character, with some knowledge of mineralogy and geology. He had a fine musical taste, and was quite an excellent performer on the violin. He was possessed of more varied attainments than any other member of our bar. He was once a member of the House of Representtatives. He was also an exceedingly good penman, and was for years prothonotary of our county, and was a model officer.

"The colonel was not only proficient on the violin, but he was an excellent dancer; and dancing then was not, as at present, the simple walking through a figure, nor the vulgar waltzing of the present day, but a display of agility and grace in the contradance, reel, or cotillon. The colonel could cut pigeon-wing with the ease of a theatrical professor; and this was an accomplishment possessed by few of his young companions. He was the orderly sergeant of Capt. Walker's company, which marched to Baltimore in 1814. He was possessed of an amiable, inoffensive disposition, and his life has been highly useful to the community. This last is eulogy. As respects his memory, he might have said, in the words of Bishop Bonar,—

"I need not be missed if my life has been bearing,
As its summer and autumn moved silently on,
The bloom and the fruit and the seed of its season,
I shall be remembered by what I have done."

"He was of medium size, rather slight in body, of a dark complexion, bright dark eyes, and of intelligent countenance. In his youth he was probably very active. Although his bodily strength had failed in his latter years, his mind remained clear till near the closing scene of his life. He was the oldest member of this bar living at the time of his death. He was an honest man. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church. His faith was firm, and he was not unwilling to meet death when the summons should come. He died in February last, at the advanced age of eighty-five.

"Of such of the bar as are still in practice I forbear to speak; and besides, their respective qualifications and characters are as well, and, as to many of them, better known to those who are in practice with them. I end with the suggestion that if members of the bar in other cities or counties in the State would prepare and publish biographical notices of distinguished members of the bar in their respective cities or counties or judicial districts, with notice of matters of a public character with which they have been connected, information of public interest may be preserved which may otherwise be lost. Leading members of the bar are often more or less connected with events interesting to the public occurring in their own neighborhood."

PAXTANG TOWNSHIP.

AMONG the records of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster County are the following entries:

"Boundaries of the townships in Lancaster County, as they were settled and agreed upon by the magistrates and inhabitants of the said county the 9th day of June, and confirmed by the Court of Quarter Sessions the first Tuesday in August ensuing, Anno Domini, 1729."

Then follow the names and boundaries of a number of townships, covering the territory of the county from the Octorara to the Kittochtinny Mountain, among these being the names of Peshtank (Paxtang) and Derry, which comprised the whole of Dauphin County south of the first range of the Kittochtinny Mountains and a part of now Lebanon County, that of Paxtang being described as follows:

"The township of Peshtank, beginning at the mouth of Suataaro, thence up the river to Kehtoh-toning hill above Peter Allens, thence eastward by the south side of said hill to the meridian of Quetopohello mouth, thence on a south course to the mouth of the same at Suataaro, and down Suataaro to the beginning."

In 1736-37 the first division of the township occurred, the erection of Hanover township from the northeastern portion, and thus the division continued until only a small portion of the original township is thus designated, and that is the township of Lower Paxtang, Peshtank, or Paxtang, as we prefer to spell it, and which orthography we have uniformly adhered to, notwithstanding the errors of the past eighty years, which have given us the English Paxton for the Indian word Paxtang. It was so named for the inconsiderable stream which was then within its borders.

The warrantees given in the chapter on the early settlements give us the names of the pioneers of this section, and much of the history of the township proper is interwoven with that of the county. We shall, therefore, content ourselves with merely giving a few facts not previously recorded, and which come in in our narrative more appropriately here.

The tax-lists of this section prior to 1750 are not in existence, unless it is that for the "North End of Paxtang," which is herewith given:

As the assessment-lists for the entire county of Lancaster are the fullest for 1780, we give that return for Paxtang. As yet Harrisburg is not distinct or separate as that of Middletown. It was not then as important a place. By it we find the following items of general information :

Mills were owned by George Deirbach, John Fritz, John Garber, Philip Griner, John Gilchrist, John Jamison (2), Jacob G. Miller, Widow Nobb.

Sills were in the possession of Andrew Berryhill, Henry Boal, Joseph Flora, Joseph Flora, Jr., John Garber (2), Matthias Hoover (3), John Jamison, James Mahan, Robert Neal, John Noop (2), Jeremiah Sturgeon, John Wonderly (2).

Ferries were owned by Maxwell, Robert, and Rowland Chambers, and by William Gibbons. John Harris, it would seem, was not taxed for his; having purchased outright the privilege, was not subject to taxation. It was called a "Public Ferry."

A Tan-yard was owned by David Patton, the only one taxed in the township, while at Middletown Daniel Dowdle, Frederick Hubley, John Snider, and Abram Tarr carried on these establishments.

Richman, Robert.

As previously stated, the first division of Paxtang was when Hanover township was erected; then, in 1791, when the borough of Harrisburg was incorporated; followed by Swatara in 1799; and Susquehanna in 1815, leaving only that portion of the township now known as Lower Paxtang, although never erected as such. To distinguish it from the northern portion of the county, which was set off as Upper Paxtang in 1767, it was thus termed by general usage merely.

CITY OF HARRISBURG.

CHAPTER I.

The Proprietary Grants—Manor of Paxtang—The Ferry Grant—The Harris Manalon—Proposals to lay out a Town—Conveyances to the Public by John Harris—Early Reminiscences of the Town—Louisburgh—"Pumpkin Flood"—Taxables for 1787.

OF Harris' Ferry, the site of the flourishing and prosperous city of Harrisburg, and of the individual who gave it name, we have alluded in the general history of the county.

On the 17th of December, 1733, the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania granted to John Harris, by patent, three hundred acres and allowance of land, extending from what is now Herr Street, formerly the upper boundary of the old borough of Harrisburg, down the river to a black-oak somewhere near the termination of Walnut Street with Front Street, and thence back by a line continuous with Mulberry and Tenth Street east of the canal to the rear line, now the line of Sixteenth. On the same day, Dec. 19, 1733, a patent was granted to Joseph Turner for five hundred acres and allowance, adjoining the above and extending down the river from the aforesaid black-oak to what is now the division line between the lands of the late John Mahan and Mrs. Hanna, deceased, extending back from the river, and embracing the James Harris tract, now the property of A. B. Hamilton. This was taken up by John Harris in the name of Joseph Turner, no doubt, to comply with certain usages of the land-office, for on the next day (December 18th) Joseph Turner conveyed to Edward Shippen, who on the next day (December 19th) conveyed to John Harris.

North of now Herr Street was the manor of Paxtang. It was one of the Proprietary reservations of land, and one of the smallest manors in the Province, but its soil was unequalled. It is described as bounded on the northwest corner by land of John Harris, the elder; that in 1732 was at a beech-tree, on the top of the bank of the Susquehanna River, near where the present Front and Herr Streets intersect. It included about twelve hundred acres; the river line six hundred eighty-nine perches and three hundred yards, being over two miles. The land is thus described in a survey made by Isaac Taylor, June 4, 1733, "for Thomas Penn, Esquire;" "Commencing at a water-beech; thence east-northeast two hundred and fifty-two perches to Paxtang Creek; thence north one hundred and twenty perches; thence north by east two hundred and eighty perches to a black-oak; thence northwest one hundred perches; thence west by north three hundred and eighty perches to a black-oak on the bank of the Susquehanna River; thence down said river six hundred and eighty perches."

Taylor notes that when he passed the Harris line (east of the canal), west of Paxtang Creek was all vacant land on the remaining sides of the manor. These bounds would seem to include from the river to the present "Miller's school-house," on the high ridge above the hospital, the grounds of which are within the survey. Its north line was the south one of the "John Reel farm." This comprises some of the most fertile land of the river valley. The Penns, however, were too poor to preserve it intact, and began to sell portions of it about the time of Braddock's defeat, disposing of the last of it about ten years before the Revolutionary war. In conveying this land we find no mention of quit-rent, the instrument being for the fee; an important distinction between this and the manors of Conestoga, Springett, Maske, and Lother.

Taylor's survey was sent to the land-office at Philadelphia, and very carefully criticised there, being deemed of such importance as to induce Thomas Penn to visit Harris' Ferry in 1736. While here he obtained personal knowledge of its value. We hear of it next in an application of James Galbraith, of Lancaster County, for two hundred acres, including a piece of this manor. The warrant was granted Jan. 9, 1749. When the survey was returned the following was indorsed upon it—Mr. Scull being surveyor-general:

"MR. SCULL.—One James Mitcheltree improved this land before the prop'r, Thomas Penn, came into the country, by express permission of Mr. Logan, and a part of his improvement was run into the manor of Paxtang, but with no intent to deprive him of a grant of land on the common terms, &c., &c., whenever a patent is applied for; the purchase money is to be at £15.10 per 100, and $\frac{1}{4}$ d quit rent per acre, ent. & award from 1st March, 1732.

"R. PENN."

This shows that the next tract above Harris, on the Susquehanna, was "improved" before 1732. The family of Mitcheltree had land in what is now Susquehanna township. Galbraith's tract proved to contain two hundred and forty-five acres with allowance, and was that part of the manor east of "Paxting Creek," "the south line commencing just south of Dead Horse Brook; thence northeast one hundred perches to lands of James Alcorn; thence north and west by sundry corners to lands of Thomas Armstrong; thence west and northwest one hundred and fifty-eight perches along lands of Arthur Forster; thence west one hundred perches to the creek; thence down Paxting Creek two hundred and sixty-six perches." The date of the survey Sept. 5, 1750. The part owned by Galbraith within the manor was found by subsequent survey to be one hundred and twenty-five acres.

The next survey was that of Bertram Galbraith, May 12, 1759, when "Mister Penn's eleven hundred and forty acres without allowance" is thus described. It excludes James Galbraith's one hundred and twenty-five acres: Commencing on the north line of "John Harris' land, at a birch-tree on the bank of the Susquehanna;" thence north sixty-five east two hundred and fifty-two perches to Paxtang Creek at an "elm;" thence north and north by east two hundred and twenty perches; ninety-four perches northwest; thence north eighty west three hundred and thirty-eight perches to a Spanish-oak on the bank of the Susquehanna; "thence down said river six hundred and eighty-nine perches," making the western front nine perches in excess of the survey of 1733. The adjoining lands are James Alcorn, northeast of Harris; James Galbraith, Archibald Forster, James Potts, Widow (Thomas) Armstrong; on the river, James Chambers.

In 1760, Thomas Simpson was owner of four hundred acres of the south part of this manor. His will is dated Dec. 24, 1760, and devises to his two sons, Thomas and Michael, three hundred and eighty-six acres, share and share alike. In 1778, Adam Eckart, who at one time was owner of a large body of land in and about Harrisburg, purchased two hundred and two acres of the Simpsons, and subsequently nearly all of that land.

The next above Simpson was Thomas Forster, "Esquire," who held four hundred acres. North of him was Thomas McKee, who held "about four hundred acres." The transactions in this land took place after the survey of 1759.

In 1786, Adam Eckart, joiner, and Catharine his wife, conveyed to Joshua Cooper, tanner, and they to Abraham Huy, six lots of ground comprising the town of "New Philadelphia." This town-plot was three acres; a narrow strip along the river from Herr Street to south side of Reily. It was known for many years as Pottstown, "Hard Scrabble," and other fancy names—now that row of buildings on the west side of Front Street which so much disfigures the locality of that fine thoroughfare.

The adjoining owners on the survey of 1759 appear in the boundaries of this portion of the manor, with the additional names of "Reverend John Hersha, Thomas and William Gaullagher," whose lands were along Paxtang.

1789, Capt. John Hamilton purchased all of the Galbraith tract within the manor,—one hundred and twenty-five acres,—together with one hundred and fifty-five acres of the manor running out to the river. About the same time other parties made purchases, the whole amounting to nearly eight hundred acres; so that it had all passed out of the ownership of Penn before Harrisburg was five years old.

The next considerable transaction was in 1810, when Abraham Huy (corrupted into Huey, always, however, written by its owner Huy) conveyed one hundred and fifty acres to Christian Kunkel. This was sold by George Kunkel and David Hummel to Luther Reily, John Whitehill, and Adam Henry Orth. Then a number of owners of parts of the manor began to appear, and as we write more than five hundred persons own parts of "Mister Penn's manor of Paxtang."

The conveyance of any part of this land to "the low-water mark of the Susquehanna" is without right. Penn claimed only to the bank of the Susquehanna. The low-water mark bound of modern deeds is an assertion of a right which did not originally pertain to the land within this manor.

The land in the lower portion of the city, including the First and Second Wards, and portions of the Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Wards, were of different surveys and not in John Harris' warrants.

John Harris' first habitation was on the lower bank of the river, about one hundred and fifty or two hundred feet below the spot where now repose his remains. The foundation walls of this house have been seen by some of our oldest citizens. A well, dug by Mr. Harris, still exists about one hundred feet east of his grave. It was covered over about thirty years ago, but its site is easily distinguished by a small circular mound of earth. In connection with his mansion-house he erected a large range of sheds, which were sometimes literally filled with skins and furs, obtained by him in traffic with the Indians, or stored there by Indian traders, who brought them from the western country. These skins were carried, at an early day, on pack-horses to Philadelphia for sale. A representation of this log house, the original of which is in possession of Gen. Simon Cameron, is herewith given.

The second John Harris inherited that portion of his father's estate upon which the borough of Harrisburg was subsequently laid out. For three-fourths of a century the site was known as Harris' Ferry. The ferry right was not granted until the year 1753, as by the following copy of the original document:

"Thomas Penn and Richard Penn, Esqrs., true and absolute proprietaries and Governors-in-chief of the Province of Pennsylvania and counties of New Castle, Kent, and Sussex, upon Delaware. To all unto whom these presents shall come, greeting: WHEREAS, It hath been represented to us that the frequent passing and repassing of people over our river Susquehanna hath made it necessary that ferries should be erected and established at proper places for the ready carrying over our said river all travelers and other persons whose business and affairs may call them into these parts of our said province. And it being made known to us that the plantation and tract of land belonging to John Harris, of the county of Lancaster, yeoman, lying on the east side of the said river Susquehanna, in the township of Paxtang and county aforesaid, by means of the convenient situation thereof, is a proper place for erecting and keeping a ferry for that part of our said prov-and cattle, all such reasonable toll-fee or reward as hath heretofore been accustomed, or shall be hereafter settled for the same (us, our heirs and successors, and our Lieutenant-Governor, attendants, and servants only excepted), to have and hold the said ferry privileges and profits hereby granted unto the said John Harris, his executors, administrators, and assigns, from the 1st day of March next unto the full end and term of seven years from thence next ensuing, and fully to be complete and ended, yielding and paying for the same yearly unto us, our heirs and successors, at the town of Lancaster, in the said county, at or upon the 1st day of March, in every year during the said term, ten English silver shillings, or the value thereof in coin current, according as the exchange shall then be between our said province and the city of London, to such person or persons as shall from time to time be appointed to receive the same. Provided always, and these presents are upon this condition and limitation, that the said John Harris, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall from time to time, and at all times hereafter, during the said term, continue to keep, or cause to be kept, a boat or boats, scow or scows, in good sufficient repair, with good and sufficient persons or hands to give ince; and the said John Harris having requested our license for erecting and maintaining a ferry over the said river at the place aforesaid, and that we would be pleased to grant him the same for a certain term of years therein expressed. Now Know Ye, that in consideration of the charge and expense that must arise on providing of necessary flats and boats, and constant attendance requisite thereunto, we have given, granted, and confirmed, and by these presents, for us and our heirs, do give, grant, and confirm unto the said John Harris, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the sole privilege of keeping and occupying the said ferry over the said river at the place aforesaid, where a ferry has always been kept for the carrying over of all persons, wagons, carts, horses, and cattle traveling or passing that way, hereby strictly forbidding and prohibiting all other persons, on either side of the river, from carrying over the same, within the distance of one mile and a quarter above and below the ferry hereby settled and established, for hire, pay, or reward, in any flat, boat, or canoe, any persons or travelers, wagons, carts, horses, or cattle as aforesaid. And we do further give and grant unto the said John Harris, his executors, administrators, and assigns, during the term of this grant, to take and receive from all persons passing over the said river, for themselves, wagons, carts, horses, attendance for the transporting, ferrying, or carrying over of all passengers, wagons, carts, horses, and cattle aforesaid, according to the true intent and meaning hereof, otherwise this present grant, and every other matter and thing contained therein, shall cease, determine, and be void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

"Witness James Hamilton, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor of the said province, who by virtue of certain powers and authorities to him for this purpose inter alia granted by the said proprietaries, hath hereunto set his hand and caused the great seal of the said province to be hereunto affixed at Philadelphia, this fifth day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and fifty-three, the twenty-sixth year of the reign of King George ye second over Great Britain &c., and ye thirty-fifth year of ye sd. Proprietaries government.

In 1766, John Harris erected the large stone house on Front Street below Mulberry. Three years were consumed in its construction, and, as may be supposed, it was a remarkable house at that time. The following representation is as it appeared in 1850. The building remained in the possession of one or another of the Harris family until about 1838, when it was purchased by Col. Thomas Elder, and at his death by the Rev. Beverly R. Waugh, in 1855, for the use of the Pennsylvania Female College, of which he was principal. The executors of Rev. Waugh's estate sold it to Gen. Simon Cameron, who remodeled it in many particulars, although the building presents almost the same appearance it did originally.

In the General History many facts have been given relating to occurrences during the French and Indian and the Revolutionary wars which form a portion of the history of Harrisburg proper, to which our readers are referred. It is not easily surmised how many persons resided at Harris' Ferry, but there can be no doubt that as early as 1755 there was a cluster of houses in the neighborhood, and when the founder, John Harris, Jr., was induced to lay out a town at Harris' Ferry there was quite a thriving settlement. In the Philadelphia newspapers of 1784, however, we find the following advertisement:

"HARRISBURG.

"A NEW TOWN.

"The subscriber having laid out a Town on the banks of the Susquehanna, adjoining the Ferry (commonly called Harris' Ferry), he now offers for sale or on ground rent, for such term of years as may be agreed upon, a number of LOTS in said town. This spot of ground seems designed by nature for the seat of a town; its healthy, pleasant, high situation; its easy communication by water with a great part of the country; its lying on the main road through the Continent, and from Philadelphia to Fort Pitt, and all the back country, points it out as one of the most convenient and best spots for a town in the interior parts of the State of Pennsylvania. The town may be accommodated with a very fine dock at a small expense, there being a natural canal, defended on both sides by limestone banks at its entrance into the Susquehanna, where boats and crafts will lay safe at all times. There being a great deal of fine clay for making bricks and earthen ware, also a great plenty of wood, which will be furnished on very low terms, encouragement will be given to brick-makers, potters, and other tradesmen. For terms apply to

"JOHN HARRIS."

The same year John Harris made the following proposals to the General Assembly, which was quite opportune, for the question of the formation of a new county from the upper part of Lancaster County was agitating that body, and these proposals no doubt tended greatly to influence the Assembly in selecting Harris' Ferry as the seat of justice:

"PHILADELPHIA, March 3, 1784.

"Proposals of John Harris for the laying out of a Town on his Land, on the River Susquehanna.

"That the said John Harris will immediately (if encouraged by Government) lay out a Town of Two hundred lots, on the high grounds above his present dwelling house, the lots of about the Quantity of a Quarter of an acre each, in such form, with respect to streets, lanes and alleys, as the Commissioners may approve, a large street to be left for Publick landings along the River side. That the said John Harris agrees that the Honorable Assembly of this Commonwealth shall appoint Commissioners to value his said lots, after reserving Twenty Lots for his own use: That the s'd John Harris will convey all the s'd lots, lanes and alleys to the inhabitants of s'd Town, and will convey to proper Commissioners a lot for a Court House & Jail, and a square of Four Acres to the State of Pennsylvania, for such purposes as the Government may apply the same: the applyers to have it at their choice to take the lots on a reasonable Groundrent, or to purchase the fee simple of the same: The Commissioners in both cases to be Judges: That as soon as the s'd Two Hundred lots are built on or disposed of, should there be a further demand for lots, the s'd John Harris engages, that the Publick shall be accommodated at a reasonable rate.

"JOHN HARRIS."

During that month (March, 1784) occurred the great ice-flood, and which came very near operating seriously as to the distinction which awaited it the following year. This terrible inundation was caused by the ice moving early in the winter, when, by a sudden change of weather, the river fell rapidly, and left the ice in large masses on Cox's and other islands above the present city, and in shoal water. The weather became intensely cold, so cold that the water did not drop off the houses for six weeks. The masses of ice froze to the bottom of the river. In March the river rose suddenly. At first the ice was immovable, and before it gave way the water reached the height of four feet in the first story of the brick house occupied at present by L. N. Ott, five miles above Harrisburg, and at the stone house (then Foulk's) near Dr. Heck's saw-mill the water was about two feet deep in the parlor. A log mill on the McAllister farm was carried off and landed behind Rockville. Two houses in Cox-stown were taken off. Large quantities of water and ice passed down Paxtang Creek, and immense deposits of ice were made between Harris' Ferry (now Paxtang Street) and Pifer's Hill, on the east side of the creek, which (the late Thomas Elder said) laid until the month of May. This flood deterred John Harris from laying out the town on the low grounds below his stone house.

In 1785 the new county of Dauphin was formed. In fulfillment of his proposition to the General Assembly the following conveyance from John Harris to the commissioners was drawn up by William Maclay, his son-in-law. This conveyance, of the date of the 6th of July, 1785, recites :

... "By virtue of which said several grants, devises; and conveyances the title to the land on which the town of Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin, is situated is legally vested in the said John Harris, his heirs, and assigns; And whereas in and by a certain bond or obligation duly executed by the said John Harris to the State of Pennsylvania for the sum of five thousand pounds lawful monies of the same State bearing date the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, conditioned for the faithful performance of all and singular the agreements, promises, engagements, articles, matters, and things which he had therein undertaken to do and perform, among other things did covenant to, and with Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, as follows: Whereas the Representatives of the freemen of the said Commonwealth in General Assembly met, in and by a certain bill before them now depending, have resolved to erect part of the county of Lancaster into a separate county to be known and called by the name of the county of Dauphin, and that the seat of Justice in the said county of Dauphin shall be fixed at or near the place of the said John Harris' residence, and that Joshua Elder, Jacob Awi, Andrew Stewart, William Brown, and James Cowden, or any three of them shall be commissioners for certain purposes, in the said bill mentioned; And Whereas the said John Harris in order to promote the good intentions of the said General Assembly in fixing the seat of Justice at the said place, to enable the said commissioners to regulate the laying out a county town there to public advantage, and to promote the more speedy settlement thereof by a liberal encouragement to purchasers hath promised, covenanted, and agreed to, and with the said commissioners, that as soon as the said bill shall be passed into a law he, the said John Harris, will without delay lay out two hundred lots containing about one-quarter acre each on the high grounds near his present dwelling-house on the bank of the river Susquehanna as a site for the said county town, and that with the same lots shall be laid out such streets, lanes, and alleys as the said commissioners or a majority of them shall direct, which streets shall be confirmed for public use forever; and that he will also lay out a large street along the river for public landing places; And Whereas the said John Harris in consideration of the promises and other good causes hath also promised, covenanted, and agreed to and with the said intended commissioners that in case the said bill shall be passed into a law he will upon request convey to the said commissioners, or any three of them and their heirs a good and sufficient lot of ground for erecting a Court-House and goal thereon in trust for the use of the inhabitants of the said county of Dauphin." [Here follows a quotation from the act erecting the new county.] "Now this indenture witnesseth that in consideration of the promises and for and in consideration of the sum of five shillings lawful money of Pennsylvania to them the said John Harris and Mary his wife in hand paid by the said Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown at and before the sealing and delivery of these presents the receipt of which sum of five shillings they the said John Harris and Mary his wife do hereby acknowledge, and thereof, and every thereof do acquit release the said Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown their and each of their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them have granted, bargained, sold, released, enfeoffed, and confirmed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, alien, release, enfeoff, and confirm unto the said Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, their heirs and assigns, all the streets, lanes, alleys, or highways as laid out by the commissioners of, in, and for the town of Harrisburg aforesaid, in the county of Dauphin, the butts, boundaries, courses, distances, length, and breadth thereof are as follows: " [Front, Paxtang, Second, Market, Third, Pine, Locust, Walnut, Chestnut, and Mulberry Streets, River, Raspberry, Barbara, Cranberry, Strawberry, Blackberry, and Cherry Alleys are here described] " And in consideration of the further sum of five shillings lawful money aforesaid to them the said John Harris and Mary his wife in hand well and truly paid by the said Jacob Awi, Andrew Stewart, Joshua Elder, James Cowden, and William Brown, the receipt thereof is hereby acknowledged and thereof and every part thereof the said Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, their and each of their heirs are fully so-quitted and forever discharged, have granted, bargained, sold, released, aliened, enfeoffed, and confirmed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, alien, release, enfeoff, and confirm unto them the said Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, their heirs and assigns four certain lots of ground in the aforesaid town of Harrisburg, marked on the general plan of said town Nos. 120, 121, 142, 143, situated and bounded as follows: Beginning at a corner where Raspberry Alley intersects Market Street, thence along the line of Market Street to the line that divides lots Nos. 141 and 142; thence on the same division line crossing Strawberry Alley to Walnut Street; thence on the line of Walnut Street to Raspberry Alley; thence down the line of said alley to the place of beginning."

Other conveyances were made at the same date, one of which refers to the "Ferry Lot," that "in consideration of the sum of five shillings," John and Mary Harris also conveyed to Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, in trust for the use of the public, "a certain lot of ground in the town of Harrisburg called and known as the 'Ferry Lot,' beginning at a post marked for a corner on the line of Front Street, thence north 37 degrees east 10 perches to a corner; thence 53 degrees west 4 perches to a corner; thence south 37 degrees west 10 perches to the place of beginning, containing one quarter of an acre, together with all and singular the rights, liberties, privileges, hereditaments, and appurtenances whatsoever thereunto belonging."

With these conveyances was a map or draft of the town, a copy of which, made a few years subsequent, is reproduced for this volume. The original plan included all the ground inclosed within the following lines: From the Susquehanna River out Mulberry Street to Dewberry Alley, up to Cherry Alley, out to Fourth Street, up to Walnut Street, into High Street (which was laid out back of the old arsenal), up to the Maclay line on the lower side of South Street, then in to the river, and down to the beginning, and is certified to in the following words :

"We, the subscribed commissioners appointed to carry into effect the proposals of John Harris respecting the laying out of the county town for the county of Dauphin, do hereby make known that the said town, with respect to the size of the lots, disposition of the streets, lanes and alleys, and the choice of the public grounds, was laid out under our direction and inspection agreeably to the adjoining plan of the said town, the said lots in general containing about one quarter of an acre each, and extending in front 52½ feet with a depth of 210 feet, with some unavoidable variations in particular courses, as may easily be seen by inspection, the whole being laid down from a scale of 300 feet to an inch. Witness our hands the 14th day of April, 1785.

"JACOB AWI, "JOSHUA ELDER,
"ANDREW STEWART, "JAMES COWDEN,
"WILLIAM BROWN."

Another conveyance was made at the same time (July 6, 1785) by Harris to the commissioners, in trust for the use of the commonwealth in case the seat of government should be fixed at Harrisburg, four acres and twenty-one perches of land, being that portion of the Capitol Park south of the South Street line. The deed conveying this trust recites :

"In consideration of the sum of five shillings, grant, bargain, sell, release, and enfeoff, and confirm unto Jacob Awi, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, their heirs and assigns, in trust for public use, and such purposes as the Legislature shall hereafter direct, a certain lot or piece of ground, situated in the said town of Har-rriaburg, in the said county of Dauphin, marked on the general plan of the said town 'Public Ground,' situated and bounded as follows: Beginning at a post marked for a corner on the lines of Third and Walnut Streets; thence along the said Walnut Street north thirty-seven degrees east seventeen perches and a quarter to a post marked for a corner; thence north thirty-five degrees west thirty-one perches to a black oak; thence south fifty-seven degrees west twenty-three perches to a post marked for a corner on the line of Third Street; thence down the said street south forty-five degrees east thirty-seven perches to the place of beginning."

Deed Book A contains many conveyances of John Harris, and we must give him credit for his care and watchfulness over the interests of the future people of the goodly town which would bear his name. The first John Harris died in December, 1743, and was buried in the inclosure on the bank of the Susquehanna. The deed of conveyance of this burial-lot by the commissioners is as follows:

"This indenture, made the twenty-eighth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, between Jacob Awl, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, all of the county of Dauphin and Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, gentlemen, of the one part, and John Harris, of Harrisburg, county and State aforesaid, of the other part, witnesseth: That the said Jacob Awl, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, in consideration of the sum of five shillings, lawful money of Pennsylvania, to them in hand well and truly paid by the said John Harris, at and before the execution of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and from the payment thereof the said John Harris, his heirs, executors, administrators, assigns are fully acquitted and forever discharged, have granted, bargained, sold, released, enfeoffed, and confirmed, and by these presents do grant, bargain, sell, and release, enfeoff, and confirm unto him, the said John Harris, his heirs and assigns, a certain lot of ground, situate on the common or front street of the town of Harrisburg, where John Harris was buried, beginning at a mulberry-tree on the southwest side of the stone dwelling-house of the said John Harris, thence from the said mulberry-tree on the north side so as to contain fifteen feet square, together with all and singular the rights, liberties, privileges, hereditaments, and appurtenances whatsoever to the same belonging or in anywise appertaining, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, and all the estate, right, title, interest, use, possession, claim, and demand whatsoever, of them, the said Jacob Awl, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, of, in, and to the same, to have and to hold the said lot and premises hereby granted or mentioned, or intended so to be, with the appurtenances unto him, the said John Harris, his heirs and assigns, to the only proper use, benefit, and behoof of him, the said John Harris, his heirs and assigns, forever; and the said Jacob Awl, Joshua Elder, Andrew Stewart, James Cowden, and William Brown, for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, do covenant, grant, and agree, to and with the said John Harris, his heirs and assigns, the said described lot of ground, hereditaments, and appurtenances against them, the said grantors, their heirs and assigns, and against all and every other person and persons lawfully claiming, or to claim by, from, or under them, or either of them, jointly and severally warrant and forever defend by these presents. In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have interchangeably set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

In more recent years the descendants of John Harris secured from the borough authorities an additional five feet of ground, thus making the graveyard twenty feet square, which they surrounded by a handsome iron railing. With all these conveyances by the proprietor for the benefit of the present city, the county, and the State, it would be only a mark of gratitude to place some befitting memorial of the good founder of the town where the ashes of the old pioneer, whom the former so highly revered, repose.

The late George Washington Harris, in one of the early directories (Napey's) of the town, gave the following data concerning the town when first laid out:

"When the town was first laid out the old orchard belonging to the mansion house extended up to about the line of Mulberry Street. About the intersection of Mulberry Street with Second Street was a ridge, from which the ground descended from six to ten feet to the present Market Square, and the water ran from the square upwards and into the river along the channel which is under the bridge now erected across Front Street above Walnut. At this time the ground above Market Street was chiefly in woods.

"Mr. Robert Harris, who died in the year 1851, frequently saw several bears killed in the river in one day. In the fall of the year they would come down from the mountains to the cornfields, and were quite abundant in the neighborhood. It was quite common to see them while riding along the roads. The farmers when going out to plow would frequently take their guns to guard against their depredations. On one occasion Mr. Robert Harris with his sister, Mrs. Hanna, were playing at the river near the mouth of the run at the end of Walnut Street. A thicket of bushes extended up along the run. Some boys came running from a barn on the bank and told them that two bears were coming down the run. They scampered up the bank, when presently the bears came along and took into the river.

"On another occasion a man named Bennick, with some others, went in pursuit of a bear. When the cause approached near to it, Bennick made a stroke at the bear with his socket-pole, but missed it. He either lost his balance or was drawn overboard by the weight of the pole, and the bear struck him with his paw and tore his cheek open.

"Wild turkeys were also abundant here at this period. John Harris shot wild turkeys from the door of his store-house. Beaver and otter were then and afterwards killed along Paxton Creek and on the islands in the neighborhood.

"The town as laid out by John Harris extended as far down the bank as Mulberry Street, and the lot on the corner of Front and Mulberry Streets, owned by the heirs of Valentine Egle, was No. 1 on the plan of the town. In the course of a few years afterwards extended the plan down to Mary's Alley, which bounds the store-house lot on the upper side. His executors, in 1792, extended the plan of lots farther down.

"There is no house, except the Harris mansion on Front Street, yet standing within the limits of Harrisburg which is certainly known to have been erected before the town was laid out.

"John Hamilton erected the first permanent embellishment to the town, after Harris' stone house, by building a brick house at the upper corner of Front Street and Blackberry Alley and the large establishment for his store on the corner of Market Square and Market Street, which was known a few years ago as the 'Washington House,' but since replaced by a new structure, termed the 'Jones House.' Mr. Hamilton carried on an extensive trade with the Western settlers. In place of the present rapid mode of conveying merchandise and passengers to Pittsburgh, he kept large numbers of horses and mules, and every few weeks his caravans set out 'for the West,' laden with salt, powder, lead, etc.

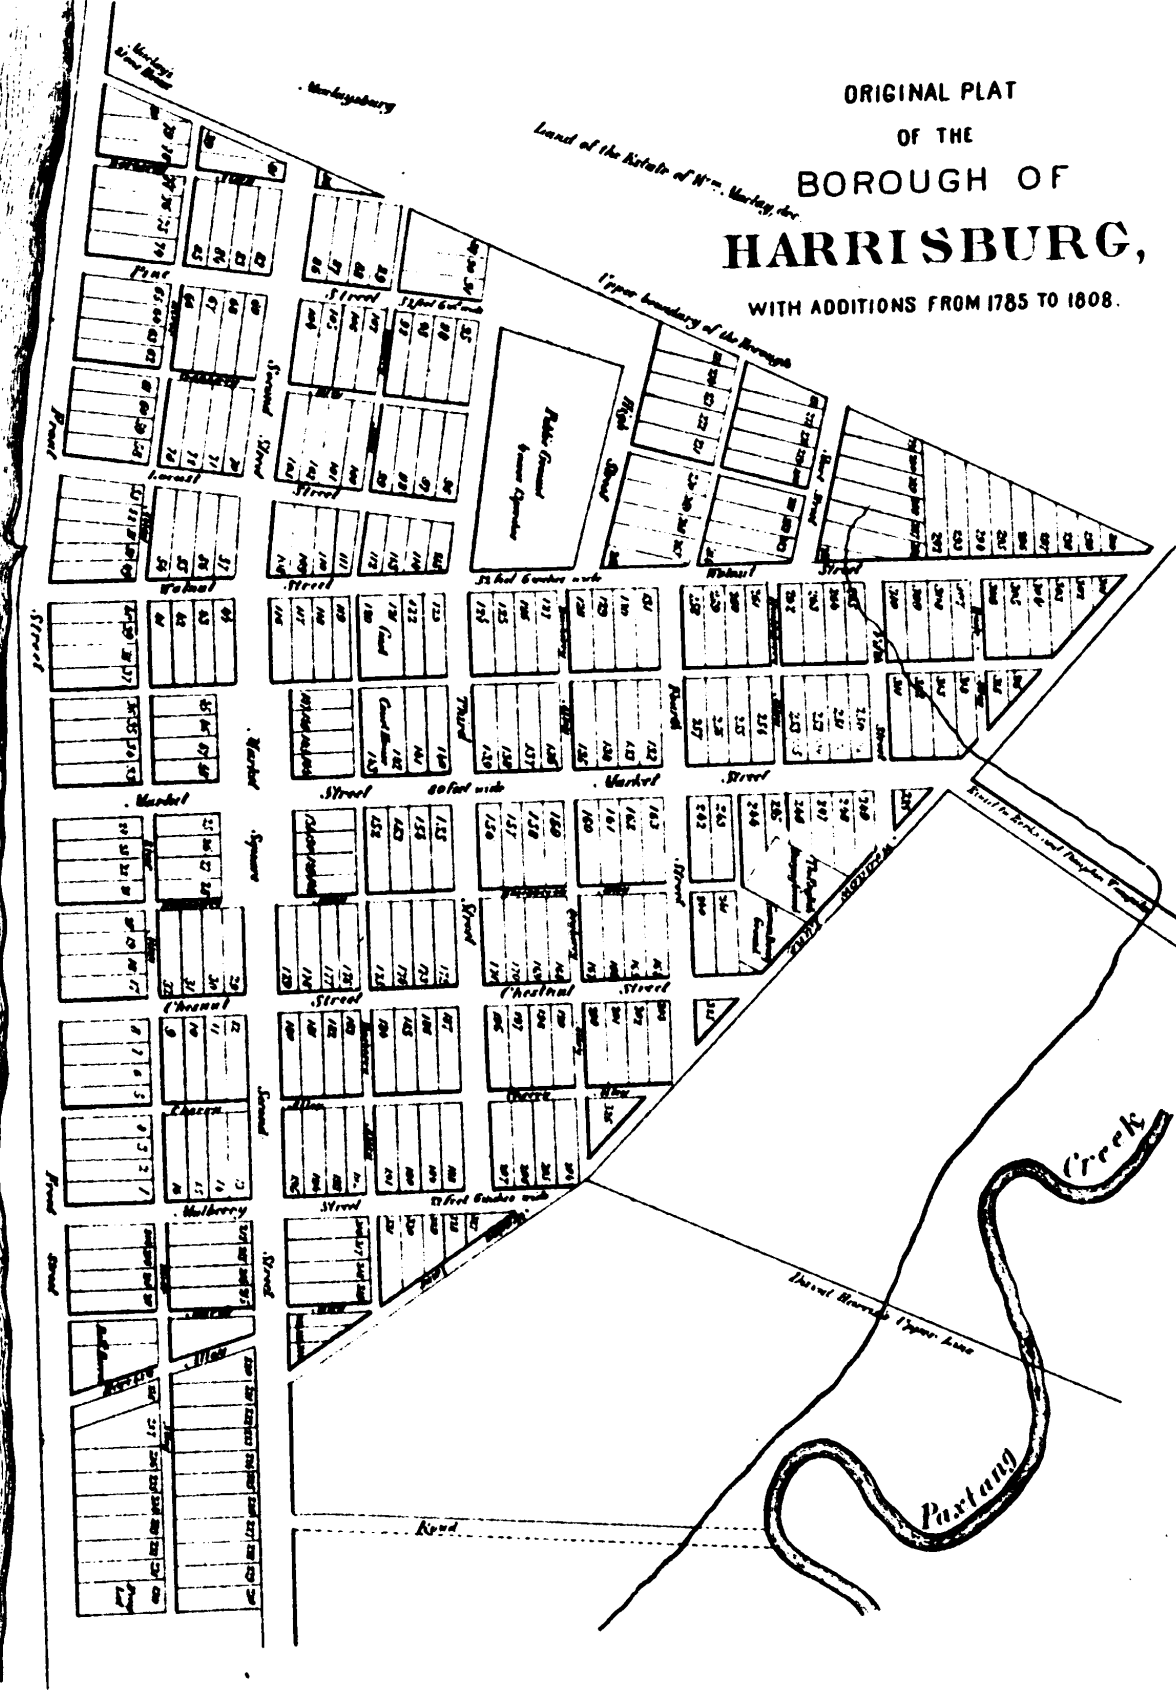

"The first clergyman established in the town was Rev. Joseph Montgomery, a Presbyterian. His first discourse, it is said, was delivered in the lot where recently stood the ruins of the Presbyterian Church on a pleasant afternoon in the month of June. The congregation—the entire village—were sheltered by two or three large apple-trees and some noble oaks, the primitive growth of the forest.

"Chief Justice McKean resided here for some time, at least when Congress sat at York. He lived in a substantial one-story log house, a short distance above what is now Locust Street. He wore an immense cocked hat, and had great deference shown him by the country people and the straggling Indians, who had their village a short distance from the town. When he and the other judges of the Supreme Court came to the town to hold court numbers of the citizens would go out on horseback to meet them and escort them to town. Sometimes one or two hundred people would attend on this occasion. And each morning while the chief justice was in town holding court the sheriff and constables escorted him from his lodgings to the court-room. When on the bench he sat with his cocked hat on, and was dressed in a scarlet gown."

The town was called by the founder HARRISBURG, and the minutes of the second court held in the town are dated Harrisburg. On the 3d of August, 1786, the following appears: "The name of the County Town or Seat of the Courts is altered from Harrisburg to Louisburgh in consequence of the Supreme Executive Council of the Commonwealth so styling it in the commissions of the Justices of the said Town." This was surely a piece of impertinence. When the act of Assembly was passed in 1785 establishing Dauphin County, it fixed the seat of government near Harris' Ferry. As John Harris had laid out the town, and offered lots therein for county purposes, the privilege was accorded him of naming the town. But Chief Justice Thomas McKean and some other of the judges of the Supreme Court conceived the notion that as the county was called after the Dauphin of France, the town should be called Louisburgh, after Louis XVI. At this time the prejudices of the people ran high in favor of France for the aid that kingdom had given America during the Revolution. Besides, Judge McKean and John Harris had had a personal difficulty, which occurred about the time the former was leaving Harrisburg, after his residence here; and, perhaps, being influenced by motives of hostility towards Mr. Harris, Mr. McKean strongly urged that the town should be called Louisburgh. Accordingly, in the first precept for holding the courts here the court was directed to be held at Louisburgh. John Harris, however, told the judges that they might "Louisburgh" as much as they pleased, but that he would never execute a title for any lot in any other name than that of Harrisburg, and his determination prevailed.

In September, 1786, occurred the "Pumpkin flood." The bottom lands on the head-waters of the river, and especially of the North Branch and in New York State, had been planted principally with pumpkins. These came down in enormous quantities. Esquire Montgomery, who was a clerk in the recorder's office as early as 1790, frequently stated that "for two whole days the river looked as if a person could walk over it on pumpkins." Small houses, hay-stacks, grain-stacks, with chickens on them, etc., came down in great numbers.

There is a question in regard to the height of the water at that flood compared with the flood of 1865. It is supposed the water attained about the same level in each. In the Pumpkin flood flats passed from Harris' Ferry across Second Street to the hills. At that time there was a brick-yard north of Paxtang Street east of the canal above the old creek bridge.

The sheds were probably on the highest spot. In that flood the only part of the sheds visible was the comb. At the bank of the river in front of Chestnut Street, before the filling up done of late years, there was a first and second bank; the first bank has been almost obliterated. The "Pumpkin flood" was about half-way between the first and second bank. In 1826, when the engineers were locating the Pennsylvania Canal on the ground between Paxtang Street and the mouth of the creek, Abraham Bombaugh, who had seen both the floods of 1784 and 1786, told them they were locating the canal too low; they seemed surprised, but he told them that he had seen the water over the whole of that ground deep enough to drown them where they stood.

The population of the town must have increased wonderfully. In the assessment for 1785 the return for Lower Paxtang included Harrisburg, and it is only in 1787 that the assessments of Louisburgh and Middletown appear distinctively from the rural portion of that township. One hundred and forty-three names are recorded in Louisburgh, showing a population of about six hundred persons. The words in brackets are necessary additions to the original for a proper understanding of the list.

CHAPTER II.

Harrisburg in 1787—In 1788—The Federal Seat of Government—Harrisburg erected into a Borough—First Assessment of the Borough—Whiskey Insurrection—Address of the Burgesses to President Washington, and his Reply.

In July, 1787, the Rev. Manasseh Cutler, on his way to the Ohio, passed through Harrisburg, and left this description of the place in his journal: "This is a beautiful town. It contains about one hundred houses, all built in less than three years, many of them brick, some of them three story, built in the Philadelphia style; all appear very neat. A great number of taverns, with handsome signs; houses all two-story; large windows. About one-half of the people are English. People were going to meeting; they meet in private houses; have no churches yet. People appear very well dressed, some gay." This was the second year from the founding of the town, and is a pretty good description of the place at that time. Middletown and Lebanon were larger towns, but the location of the county-seat at Harrisburg gave an impetus to its growth and prosperity, and it was in a few years ahead of its rivals, and has rapidly maintained its supremacy.

The next account of Harrisburg is in April, 1788, when John Penn, son of Thomas Penn, and grandson of William Penn, made a journey from Philadelphia to Carlisle to look after some of the Proprietary estates there. He set out from Philadelphia on the 6th of April, 1788, on horseback, reached Reading the next day, where he tarried until the 9th, when he pursued his way towards the Susquehanna. We now quote from his journal:

"April 10. Rose by six o'clock, and after breakfast set out in order to sleep at Harrisburg, the chief town of Dauphin County, and which was proposed to be the seat of government. Passed some mills a few miles from thence, at Tulpehocken Creek, which afterwards meets the road somewhat farther in a very picturesque spot. On the eastern side of this is a most elegant new Lutheran Church. On the western is a Calvinist's, called here, by way of distinction, a Presbyterian, Church. After riding through a village I came to Lebanon, a handsome town, containing some hundred inhabitants. This place is decorated by a spire, and the houses are well built, many of them stone or brick. It not being distant enough, the horses were laded at Millerstown, a small village half-way, and twenty miles from Harrisburg, or Harris's Ferry. About sunset I had a fine view of this town from an high part of the road, the river Susquehanna flowing between its woody and cultivated banks close to the town. Mr. Harris, the owner and founder of this town, informed me that three years ago there was but one house built, and seemed to possess that pride and pleasure in his success which Æneas envied.

"Folices illi, quorum jam mensa surgunt!"

"Though the courts are held here generally, Lebanon is infinitely larger. The situation of this place is one of the finest I ever saw. One good point of view is the tavern, almost close to the river. This was the house which stood alone so many years. It is called the Compass, and is one of the first public-houses in Pennsylvania. The room I had is twenty-two feet square, and high in proportion.

"April 11. After breakfasting, about eight, with Mr. Harris, we walked together to the ferry, when he gave me two pieces of information, one of an island he purchased of us, which the war prevented us from confirming to him, and the other of the delinquency of one Lites, who wishes to detain the money due in part for a farm over the Susquehanna, though there is an incumbrance in our favor on it to the amount of six or seven hundred pounds, going on upon interest. The waters being high, we ferried across with difficulty, and almost dropped down to a very rapid part below the landing place, but at length escaped a disagreeable situation. About two miles from the river passed the house of Whitehill, the Assemblyman, and arrived about three at Carlisle, seventeen miles off."

Mr. Penn remained at Carlisle until the 13th, when he commenced his return to Philadelphia. He thus proceeds:

"April 13. Rose early in order to see a cave near Conodogunet Creek, in which water petrifies as it drops from the roof. Returned and pursued my route to a place called Lisburn, tho' it proved somewhat out of my way. Just at this spot the country is romantic. The name of the creek running thro' it, Yellow-brackets Creek, may, indeed, be unworthy of it. From hence the road lay thro' woods till the Susquehanna, and Harrisburg at a distance, denoted that the ferry was at hand. I crossed the river about three and a half o'clock, surrounded by enchanting prospects. The ride to Middletown is along the eastern bank, and exhibits a striking example of the great, in the opposite one, rising to a vast height, and wooded close to the water's edge for many miles. From this vast forest, and the expansive bed of the river navigable to its source for craft carrying two tons burden, the ideas of grandeur and immensity rush forcibly upon the mind, mixed with the desert-wilderness of an uninhabited scene. The first particular object on this road is Simpson's house, the owner of the ferry where I crossed. It is on a rock across the river. At Middletown I put up at one More's, who was a teacher formerly at Philadelphia of Latin and Greek. He talked very sensibly, chiefly on subjects which discovered him to be a warm Tory, and friend of passive obedience. Unlike many Tories, he is an enemy of the new Constitution. Here the Great Swatara joins the Susquehanna, and a very fine mill is kept at their confluence by Mr. Frey, a Dutchman, to whom I carried a letter from Mr. D. Clymer.

"Several trees, before I arrived at the Susquehanna ferry, had been girdled, as it is termed, that is, cut all around thro' the bark, so as to prevent their continuing alive. This operation in a country so abounding in timber, saves the too great trouble of cutting down every tree whose leaves might obstruct the men's operation upon the corn.

"April 14. Before my departure Mr. Frey showed me his excellent mill and still more extraordinary mill-stream, running from one part of the Swatara for above a mile till it rejoins it at the mouth. It was cut by himself, with great expense and trouble, and is the only work of the kind in Pennsylvania. Middletown is in a situation as beautiful as it is adapted to trade, and already of a respectable size. I left it threatened by rain, which came on rather violently soon after, and the roads proved the worst of the whole journey, till that time. I passed thro' Elizabethtown, eight miles off, and over the creeks (or small rivers) of Conewago and Chickasawunga. As you leave Dauphin for Lancaster County, the lands improve, and at a place half-way from Middletown, where I stopped for my horses, and to avoid the rain, it was said to be worth £15 per acre. There are some handsome farm-houses nearer Lancaster. The town itself has a far superior appearance to any I had passed thro'. The streets are regular, and the sides are paved with brick, like Philadelphia, or else stone; and separated by posts from the street."

The question of fixing, permanently, the seat of the Federal government, began to occupy public attention shortly after the close of the Revolutionary war; and was strongly agitated in the Congress of 1789, then in session at New York. The question was first submitted to the House of Representatives of that body in the shape of the following resolution, which, with the subsequent information, the author gleans from the Pennsylvania Packet, published at Philadelphia, in the year above stated:

"Resolved, That a permanent seat for the government of the United States ought to be fixed as near the centre of wealth, population and extent of territory as shall be consistent with the convenience of the Atlantic navigation, having also a due regard to the circumstances of the western country." Adopted.

Mr. Goodhue observed that the members from the Eastern and Northern States had contemplated the subject of a permanent seat of the Federal Government with deliberation. They had turned their eyes to different parts of the country, and had at last, after a mutual and full consultation, come to an agreement that the banks of the Susquehanna was as far south and as near the centre of the population and extent of territory as was consistent with other circumstances important to the country. They felt disposed to be governed by principles of accommodation, and were of opinion that the banks of the Susquehanna ought to be chosen for the permanent residence of Congress. He concluded by reading a resolution to this effect.

Mr. Hartley supported the resolution, and pointed out Wright's Ferry as an eligible place.

Mr. Lee moved to amend, by fixing the seat of government on the Potomac instead of the Susquehanna. Not agreed to,—yeas 20, nays 31.

Mr. Maillon proposed to amend, by leaving "discretionary to be either on the Potomac or the Susquehanna. Not agreed to,—yeas 20, nays 31.

On a subsequent day the House of Representatives, in committee of the whole, proceeded to consider the resolution of Mr. Goodhue, which read as follows:

"Resolved, In the opinion of this committee, that the permanent seat of government of the United States ought to be at some convenient place on the east bank of the Susquehanna River, in the State of Pennsylvania, etc."

Mr. Illister moved to insert after the words "Susquehanna River" the words "between Harrisburg and Middletown, inclusive."

A lengthy and spirited debate occurred, participated in by nearly all the principal members of the House, those from the Northern and Eastern States generally favoring the amendment, and those from the South opposing it. The amendment was finally lost.

Several other amendments were proposed and lost, and the original resolution was carried.

In committee of the whole House next day it was resolved that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to borrow the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, to be repaid in twenty years, with five per cent. interest, for the purpose of erecting the necessary buildings on the bank of the Susquehanna.

Mr. Fitzsimmons moved for the "appointment of commissioners to examine and report upon the most eligible situation for the public buildings on the Susquehanna, and that they be authorized, by and with the advice of the President, to purchase such quantity of lands as may be thought necessary," etc.

Mr. Hartley said the State of Pennsylvania, both by its convention and Legislature, had made the cession of the jurisdiction by Congress over any district of ten miles square in the State that might be selected for the seat of government.

The resolution of Mr. Fitzsimmons, after being so amended as to make the acts of the commissioners subject to the approval or rejection by the President, was adopted,—yeas 28, nays 21

The resolution went to the Senate, which body struck out all relating to the Susquehanna, and inserted a clause fixing the permanent seat of government at Germantown, Pa.

The House at first agreed to the clause, but refused to concur with some subsequent action of the Senate thereon, and pending the further consideration of the subject, Congress adjourned sine die for that year.

At the session of 1790 the question was again brought before Congress, and created an intense excitement throughout the country. The Northern and Eastern members were strenuous in their efforts to prevent the seat of government being located south of the Susquehanna River, while, on the other hand, the Southern and Western members were just as active in their labors to prevent it being located on the Susquehanna, or at any point north or east of that river. The vote on the question was divided equally. Finally this sectional feeling became so strong as to endanger the safety of the Union itself, and Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, and other patriots earnestly sought to effect a compromise, but were unsuccessful. At last, by changing the votes of one or two of the Northern members, brought about through the instrumentality of Mr. Jefferson, a bill, pretty much in the shape of that proposed at the previous session, passed Congress fixing the site of the seat of government on the banks of the Potomac, at such place as should be selected by commissioners under the direction of the President.

The act to erect the town of Harrisburg into a borough was passed on the 13th day of April, 1791, and an act to alter the same without interfering with the boundaries originally laid down was approved Feb. 1, 1808, on the ground "that experience has fully proved that, owing to a difference in the local situation of the places, and various other causes, the act of Assembly for erecting the town of Reading into a borough, however applicable to the purposes for which it was originally intended by the Legislature, is not well calculated for the good government of the borough of Harrisburg; therefore be it enacted that the said town of Harrisburg shall continue and forever remain a borough, under the name and title of the 'Borough of Harrisburg;' the extent and limits of which shall be the same as in the original law, to wit: Beginning at low water mark on the eastern shore of the Susquehanna River; thence by the pine-apple-tree north sixty degrees and one quarter east seventy-nine perches to an ash-tree on the west bank of Paxtang Creek; thence by the several corners thereof three hundred and twenty-three perches to a white hickory on William Maclay's line; thence by the same south sixty-seven and three-quarter degrees west two hundred and twelve perches to a marked chestnut-oak on the eastern bank of the Susquehanna; thence by the same course to low water mark to the place of beginning."

On the 16th day of May, 1791, the court records contain the following: "The name of the county town is altered to Harrisburg in pursuance to an act of Assembly creating it into a borough under that name, passed 13th of April, 1791." Thus at last justice was done the founder of the town. To George Hoyer belongs the credit of being the first burgesse of the borough of Harrisburg. The minutes, however, of the early borough councils are not to be found, and, save in the files of early newspapers yet preserved, little is known of the workings of that legislative body.

John Harris, the founder of Harrisburg, died July 29, 1791, and is buried in the graveyard of Paxtang Church. He was sixty-five years of age.

On the 4th of February, 1792, the following preamble and resolution "was made and seconded by Mr. Potts and Mr. Hanna" in the General Assembly, looking towards the incorporation of a company for the establishing a manufactory in Harrisburg. More properly it was for affording facilities therefor by the construction of a canal from Hunter's Falls. The bed of this canal was to be Paxtang Creek. The resolution passed, a bill was matured and presented, but the fear of impeding the navigation of the Susquehanna by a shot-wing dam, which was deemed necessary by the projectors of this scheme, occasioned its defeat. This plan was, nevertheless, considered for a long time a feasible one. Harrisburg was undoubtedly then, as it is now, a desirable point for the establishment of manufactories, and had any one of the numerous plans for supplying water-power to the town been carried out, there can be no doubt that it would have added greatly to its wealth and prosperity:

"As the attention of the Citizens of the United States are now very properly engaged in promoting many useful improvements for increasing the wealth and happiness of the people of each particular State; and the recent report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and others who have lately published their Sentiments on the subject have clearly demonstrated the great advantages which must result from establishing Manufactories in this Country; to engross the time of this House with Arguments in their favour, would be entirely superfluous. It is only necessary to suggest some of the many concurring circumstances which point out the Borough of Harrisburg, as a very eligible place for that purpose, not only, as being on the waters of an extensive inland navigation, where the raw materials for different kinds of Manufactories may be obtained with great ease and plenty, and the reduced price of provisions, occasioned by the distance from foreign navigation, will always contribute to an equal reduction in the price of labor; but also, the great ease with which the waters of Susquehanna may be brought out of that River at or near Hunter's falls, along Paxtang Creek, for the Accommodation of the Borough, and to provide a sufficient force in aid of manual Labour, in every branch of Manufactory which will admit of machinery assistance, in the most extensive manner.

"Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to enquire into the propriety, to bring in a Bill to be passed into a Law, to authorize the Governor to incorporate a Company for establishing a manufactory in the Borough of Harrisburg, and for opening a Canal between the River Susquehanna, at or near Hunter's falls, and Paxtang Creek; and for extending the said Manufactory, to Linen, Cotton, and such other branches, as they may hereafter find useful and advantageous."

In 1791, when the town was incorporated, the names had grown to two hundred and twenty, and the words "Ferry" and "Louisburgh" disappear from the record.

In 1792 we have the first borough assessment (taken in 1791):

In the general history reference is made to the participation of the county in the Whiskey Insurrection of 1794. Harrisburg at this time was an important point. From the Oracle of Dauphin we learn that on Friday, the 19th of September, three companies of horse, containing in all one hundred and thirty, arrived from Philadelphia, the whole under the command of Capt. John Dunlap. The company of light dragoons, commanded by Capt. John Irwin, of Harrisburg, the corps of light infantry, commanded by Capt. George Fisher, with the most distinguished officers of the county, were paraded, all in complete uniform, in order to receive them. After the usual ceremonies, the dragoons dismounted to refresh themselves, and on Monday morning they proceeded to Carlisle.

On Tuesday following, the 23d, some eighty regular troops, recruited in Massachusetts, commanded by Capt. Lyman, passed through Harrisburg to join Gen. Wayne's army in the Ohio country.

On Thursday, the 25th, a battalion of New Jersey volunteer dragoons, under the command of Gen. Richard Howell, Governor of that State, reached Harrisburg. They were well equipped and completely mounted. "It raining very rapidly on their arrival," says the Oracle, "the citizens of the town, with their usual degree of affection to the sons of liberty and patriotism, voluntarily opened their doors for their reception." The next morning they crossed the Susquehanna, on their way to Carlisle, after expressing their satisfaction in the following manner:

"The commander of the Jersey militia detachment feels himself bound to acknowledge the politeness of the citizens of Harrisburg to his company, and requests that their gratitude and his own, joined with the highest respect, may be signified in a proper manner.

"RICHARD HOWELL,
 "Commandant Jersey detachment.

"HARRISBURG, Sept. 25, 1794."

Alexander Graydon, in his "Memoirs," then a resident of Harrisburg, and an officer of the county, gives the following mention of occurrences at this time:

"The Western Expedition, as it was called, gave me an opportunity of seeing a number of my old friends from Philadelphia; and it afforded also a momentary triumph to the poor handful of Harrisburg Federalists, who were stated by their opponents to amount to only five.

"A French flag which had been flying at the court-house, then building, had been the cause of some squabbling in the newspaper; and this flag was peremptorily ordered to be taken down by the troops from the city. Had I been disposed for revenge, I might upon this occasion have been fully gratified, as I was repeatedly asked who had caused it to be put up, and impliedly censured for giving evasive answers to the questions, which, from their manner, evinced a disposition to treat the authors of it much more roughly than would have been agreeable to me.

"Conspicuous among the crowd that rolled on to the eastward was Governor Mifflin. On the day of his arrival he convened the people at the market-house and gave them an animated harangue, in which there was nothing exceptional save a monstrous suggestion that the British had stirred up the discontents to the westward and been the cause of the present opposition to the government."

On Friday, October 3d, the President of the United States, Gen. George Washington, arrived at Harrisburg. Apprised of his arrival, all the troops then in the town, on their way westward, marched some distance to meet him and escort him to his quarters in the borough. The joy of the citizens was unbounded, and the burgesses presented the following address:

"To His Excellency, George Washington, President of the United States of America:

"Sir,—We, the Burgesses and citizens of Harrisburg, while we rejoice in the opportunity of presenting our respects to a character so justly revered and dear to Americans, cannot but lament that we should owe it to an interruption of the peace and prosperity of our country, those constant objects of our public care. We trust, however, that the just indignation which fires the breasts of all virtuous citizens at the unprovoked outrages committed by these lawless men, who are in opposition to one of the mildest and most equal of governments of which the condition of man is susceptible, will excite such exertions as to crush the spirit of disaffection wherever it has appeared, and that our political horizon will shine brighter than ever on a dispersion of the clouds which now menace and obscure it.

"Though our sphere of action is too limited to produce any important effects, yet we beg leave to assure your Excellency that, so far as it extends, our best endeavors shall not be wanting to support the happy constitution and wise administration of our government.

"Signed, in behalf of the borough,

"CONRAD BOMBAUGH,
 "ALEX. BERRYHILL,

"HARRISBURG, Oct. 3, 1794.

"Burgesses."

The President, through Gen. Hamilton, returned the following reply:

"To the Burgesses and other citizens of Harrisburg :

"GENTLEMEN,—In declaring to you the genuine satisfaction I derive from your very cordial support, I will not mingle any expression of the painful sensations which I experience from the occasion which has drawn me hither. You will be at no loss to do justice to my feelings. But relying on that kindness of Providence towards our country which every adverse appearance hitherto has served to manifest, and counting upon the tried good sense and patriotism of the great body of our fellow-citizens, I do not hesitate to indulge with you the expectation of such an issue as will serve to confirm the blessings we enjoy under a constitution that well deserves the confidence and support of virtuous and enlightened men. To class the inhabitants of Harrisburg among this number is only to bear testimony to the zealous and efficient exertions which they have made towards the defence of the laws.

"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

Among the soldiers who accompanied the troops to the westward was Maj. William Gould, of the New Jersey infantry. He kept a journal of the expedition, from which we quote what is of especial local value. It contains several important items of information,—the abounding of the Susquehanna with rock-fish, salmon, shad, and fowl,—that previous to the founding of the town in 1785 there were quite a number of houses and people here, and the existence of a public ferry distinct from either the lower or upper ferries, taking in the island in the transit :

"Thursday, October 2d.—Marched to Hummelstown, a handsome village with kind inhabitants; we were invited into their houses, and had good entertainment in taverns. Sixteen miles

"Friday, October 3d.—Marched one mile to a river called Sweet Arry; crossed on boats and marched to Harrisburg, and encamped on the banks of the Susquehanna River, a beautiful stream, abounding with rock-fish, salmon, and other small fish and fowl in abundance, also shad of the best kind in the season. The founder of this town, named Harris, buried in a stockade fort by reason that the Indians prevented burying in the graveyard. Twenty-five years ago there were but three or four houses, and now it contains more than three hundred, beautifully situated on the banks of the river, some elegant houses, good market and full stores, a county town in Dauphin County.

"At 8 o'clock P.M. paraded and marched to town, from where we encamped; saluted the President of the United States who passed by, after which returned to camp. Col. Forman, Maj. Kipp, and myself accepted an invitation from the President to take a glass of wine with him, after which dined very agreeably, and returned to camp; the inhabitants received us with every mark of friendship; the artillery discharged fifteen guns at his entrance into town. Nine miles.

"Saturday, Oct. 4, 1794.—Marched to the Susquehanna ferry at reveille in the morning with the First Battalion; crossed in boats to an island in the river, and from thence in other boats to the other side. Suffered much with cold in crossing, it being a very cold morning. The President, Gen. Washington, forded the river in a coach, drove it himself, etc."

CHAPTER III.

Sickness at Harrisburg—Landis' Mill-Dam the Source of Trouble—Meeting of the Citizens—Efforts to Purchase—Removal of the Nuisance—Mill-Dam Taxes.

IN the autumn of 1792 there was considerable sickness at Harrisburg. In the succeeding year this was much greater and of a violent character. At this period the yellow fever was prevailing to an alarming extent at Philadelphia. Graydon, in his "Memoirs," thus alludes to the pestilence: "Measures were taken, says he, in almost every town and village to prohibit the entry of persons suspected of infection, and even fugitives from the seat of it, though in health, were regarded with a jealous eye. Some of the people of Harrisburg were for following the example of their neighbors, though a malady not less fatal than that in Philadelphia was raging among themselves. But the difference was that one was called a plague, the other but a simple fever. It is somewhat remarkable that if the yellow fever is of foreign origin, as insisted upon by many, that a disease of a similar type should make its appearance at the same time on the banks of the Susquehanna at the distance of an hundred miles. Shall we say that the state of the atmosphere which generated the one was favorable to the diffusion of the other? This, I believe, is the doctrine of those who contend that the yellow fever is of exotic growth, and always imparted when it appears among us. I would venture, however, no opinion on the subject. With respect to the mortality produced by the two diseases, that at Harrisburg was, I believe, in proportion to the population of the place as great as that at Philadelphia. I cannot take upon me minutely to describe the symptoms of the Harrisburg disease, nor were they the same in all that were sick, but a general one was an affection of the stomach, or nausea with violent reachings, and a yellowness of the skin. Some were ill a week, some longer, some died in two or three days from the time of their being seized, and others who were walking about with symptoms only of the ague suddenly took ill and expired. The black vomit, which has sometimes been supposed peculiar to the yellow fever, appeared in some cases. I was attacked with a quartan ague about the middle of September, but had none of the grievous symptoms of the malignant fever which prevailed.

"The matter which produces ague,—i.e., miasmata, caused by vapors from low and marshy situations and waters, rendered baneful from certain adventitious circumstances, may be pronounced to be the support or aliment of all diseases, more particularly of the latter perhaps, when the exhalations are rendered more than commonly noxious from the general state of the atmosphere;—this cause existed at Harrisburg. A mill-dam had been erected the season before on the Paxtang, rather a turbid and sluggish stream, within five or six hundred yards of the middle of the town on its eastern side. The obstruction must have spread the water over a surface of from eight to ten acres, and this co-operating with a state of the atmosphere unusually morbid this season in such situations may fully account for the fear which prevailed.

"In the fall of the year 1793 there were some cases of it, and still more in that of 1794, equally malignant, after which the mill-dam was removed. I have been the more particular on this subject, though without being able to offer anything satisfactory, from knowing it to have been a matter of some interest with the physicians of Philadelphia to ascertain the nature of the Harrisburg disease, thence to deduce data towards the solution of the question, whether the yellow fever, as appearing in our cities, be, or not, a malady of exclusively foreign origin?"

It appears that on the 16th of April, 1790, John Harris sold to Peter, John, and Abraham Landis a mill-seat, with the privileges of a dam and mill-race, containing three acres of land, situated in what is now the First Ward of the city, on Paxtang Creek. Subsequently the Messrs. Landis purchased an additional tract of land from Gen. John A. Hanna, and erected upon it a mill, etc. The citizens having decided that the fever was caused by the Landis mill-dam, took immediate and decisive measures to abate the nuisance. After some preliminary proceedings, a meeting of the citizens was held May 5, 1794, at the house of George Reitzel, and a committee appointed to wait on the Messrs. Landis to treat with them for the purchase of their mill, land, and appurtenances. On the following day the committee met and agreed to pay for the property two thousand five hundred pounds, as follows: fifteen hundred pounds in thirty days, and five hundred pounds on the 1st of May, 1795 and 1796, with interest. This proposition was immediately submitted to the Messrs. Landis, with the request that they inform the committee of their acceptance or rejection of the offer within a few days. To enable the committee to comply with the proposition for the purchase of the mill property, the following agreement was signed on the 7th of May, 1794:

"It is proposed by the Borough of Harrisburg to purchase the mill or mills now in the occupation of Abraham Landis on the waters of Paxtang Creek, together with the appurtenances thereto belonging, and to have the same conveyed to the said Borough as a fund to defray the taxes of the inhabitants forever.

"We, the subscribers, to enable the Burgesses to complete the said purchase and for the said considerations, do severally but not jointly bind ourselves, our heirs, executors, and administrators unto the said Burgesses for the time being and their successors in such sum or sums of money as may be annexed by us to our names, to be paid to the said Burgesses and their successors in the manner and at the time hereinafter specified, to wit: one moiety or half part on the first day of June next ensuing the date hereof, and the remaining moiety or half part in two equal annual payments from the said first day of June with lawful interest for the same. Provided, nevertheless, that if the said purchase should not be completed by or on behalf of the said Borough within one month from the date of these presents, that then the above obligation to be void and of no effect, otherwise to be and remain in full force and effect. In witness whereof we have severally hereunto set our hands and affixed our seals this seventh day of May in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-four:

In addition to the amount of money so raised, the heirs of John Harris, Messrs. David Harris, Robert Harris, William Maclay, and John A. Hanna paid sixteen hundred dollars, the purchase money, or perhaps something more than the amount which the Landises had paid for the property.

These proceedings did not, however, accomplish anything, as the Messrs. Landis refused to sell their property for the sum proposed by the citizens' committee. At a meeting of the inhabitants of the borough of Harrisburg on the 16th day of January, 1795, it was unanimously agreed "that two thousand and six hundred pounds be immediately assessed on the property of the citizens of the said borough; that one thousand and six hundred pounds of the said sum be collected on or before the 6th day of March next; that the remaining one thousand pounds be secured to be paid, with interest, in two equal annual installments, and that the whole (to wit, the sixteen hundred pounds in cash and the residue in bonds) be tendered to Peter and Abraham Landis, or either of them, proprietors of the mill and other water-works, with the appurtenances thereto belonging, near the borough aforesaid, as a full compensation for their property in the same; and that in case they refused to accept the said sum as a full compensation for the said mill, with the appurtenances, that then we unanimously agree to prostrate the dam erected on the waters of Paxtang Creek, for the purpose of conveying water to said mill, and pay our proportionable parts of all legal expenses and damages that may accrue on any suit or suits, indictment or indictments that may be brought or prosecuted in consequence of such act or acts."

A committee, consisting of Stacy Potts, Moses Gillmor, Wm. Graydon, Jacob Bucher, John Kean, John Dentzell, and Alexander Berryhill was appointed to wait upon Peter, John, and Abraham Landis and negotiate for the purchase of the mill property.

The following subscriptions were made by the citizens named to the mill-dam fund, independent of the amount assessed upon their respective properties at the town meeting:

"We, the subscribers, do promise to pay the sums annexed to our names, to Conrad Bombaugh, Esq., as a gratuity towards paying the expense of the purchase or the reduction of the mill-dam on Paxtang Creek, next the borough of Harrisburg, and that when called upon. Witness our hands, Jan. 21, 1795:

The committee called upon the Messrs. Landis and tendered them for their property the price demanded the previous year, which they indignantly refused. The owners now asked two thousand dollars for their water-right alone, and a much greater sum for their entire property than the committee felt inclined to give. Apprehending that the owners of the mill property intended to take advantage of the situation to extort an unreasonable price (£4112 10s.) from the people, Galbraith Patterson, a noted lawyer of his day, in the Oracle of Dauphin of March 23d, gives the following as his views of the situation :

"The bad effects that have flowed from the mill-dam, near Harrisburgh, have been manifestly evident; but the melancholy consequences of a continuation of this evil are enormous in proportion to the former growing prosperity of the place. It is well known that few places in the United States were built so rapidly, or became more flourishing in so short a time, nor could any inland situation boast of more advantages. A county-town, in the heart of a good country, beautifully situated on the Susquehanna, and deriving many extraordinary benefits from that circumstance. That the increase of Harrisburgh was not upon false premises, we may say with propriety; for every industrious man had materially bettered his situation during the health of the place, which continued for six years after the town was laid out. In this situation the mill-dam found us, when its bad effects began to be felt. Paxtang Creek, of itself, and the low ground on each side of it, was to be dreaded, when exposed to the sun, by the loss of the timber near the town; but cultivation would again restore health. Now the mill-dam cuts up every expectation—it is a bed of stagnant water and putrid vegetables, and prevents the possibility of any improvement. It is impossible to drain the swamps upon the creek, there is no fall to carry off the water, nay, occasionally covered with this mill-dam; and when the waters ebb away they retain to the extent of their surface until exhaled by the sun; for the land is lower a distance from the creek than immediately at the banks.

"Here our prosperity seems to be arrested—we have not even hope left, because the mill-dam, in truth, does away the possibility of improvement, which, if not immediately, would in time, and according to the extent of it, give this place health. Another truth is, that Mr. Landis dams the water not only upon Mr. Harris's land, of whom he bought, but upon that which was Mr. Maclay's, before the bargain, which is an unjustifiable extension of the mischief. Conscious of the destructive influence of this mill-dam, the inhabitants of Harrisburgh entered into a negotiation with Mr. Landis, last year, for the purpose of buying his property, that they might prostrate the dam. At which time, the extent of his demand was twenty six hundred pounds, £1800 in hand, and the residue in two annual payments; which price, although it was thought too high, there was some efforts made to raise; however, before it could be accomplished, the season became too far advanced to take down the dam, which, together with the greatness of the sum, relaxed our endeavors upon the subject. Another season was experienced, which brought with it its calamities, and the people more unanimously took up the matter again, about the 7th of January '95; when they agreed to give Mr. Landis the £2600 according to his demand. A committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Landis, to accede to his offer, and he gave them for answer, that £4112 10s. was the lowest price he would take at that time. I ask Mr. Landis, if he did not offer the mill, &c., to the inhabitants of the borough for £2600, as I have mentioned, last March, in a paper subscribed with his own hand? I ask him, if he would not have taken that money for it in May last? I ask him, if he did not take his work from tradesmen in the borough because they would not subscribe to pay a proportionable part of it? We complied with his terms in January, and I ask him, if his mill rose in value £1512 in seven months? It is very well known that Messrs. Elder and Ober's mills take the country custom, and a great share of the town, so that Mr. Landis's mill depends greatly upon the town (to which idea Mr. Landis accedes). It is as well known that the population of Harrisburgh has not increased, and that property has depreciated for some time past—and how his mill, in this situation, could have appreciated £1512 in seven months is beyond all conception. To be sure, lands have increased in price somewhat in 7 months, but not in this proportion. But how a mill, and 3 acres of land, depending, in a great degree, upon its enemies for support, could have thus raised in value, appears truly astonishing: that Mr. Landis would have taken £2600 in May, 1794, for his mill, and won't take less than £4112 10s. in Jan. following, might indeed appear a riddle. However, a thing is always worth as much as it will fetch, and who would stand to make terms with a surgeon, when he has his forceps fixed to extract the stone from the bladder? Who would not readily say, give me relief, and take all I have?

"Upon the present occasion, Mr. Landis sees the people pressed by their calamities, exceedingly anxious and unanimous, and although he took his work from a man last year, for not subscribing his proportionable part of £2600 he may see his way clear this season, in levying a contribution of £4112 10s. upon the inhabitants of the borough.

"Fellow-citizens, you have acted justly, and you have acted with patience, in offering to pay the man's price, before you came to the resolution of destroying this reservoir of contagion. You have done more than the inhabitants of Carlisle, and other places, who have removed nuisances of this kind without asking who owned them, and without dreaming of compensation. Go on, gentlemen, in an undertaking which is founded in such justice—make up the £2600 and tender it according to the man's terms; and if he does not receive it, have respect for yourselves, for your families, and for your solemn resolution—TEAR DOWN THE MILL-DAM!!—Will you be played upon this way? Will men, who have vested their all here, and are in business, live in a continual state of anxiety about their families, after making up their minds to sacrifice to the amount of this man's demands will they let him assess their happiness, by caprice and sordid principles, at £1512 for seven months?

"Some might say, I'll go and leave the place. I say no—it is not an easy matter for a householder to rise up and leave a place in which he is settled in business, and a place which once offered the fairest prospects. If this idea prevailed, property would sell for little, and little would make us turn our backs upon a place, which, from its situation, promises as much as any inland place in Pennsylvania. No, gentlemen, we can't desert our property and interest. Let us remove the mill-dam, in the honorable way we devised—clear out the creek, and put the lands under cultivation; and be the means, under God's blessing, to give health to the place, which I have no doubt, will be followed with prosperity to the rich and poor, who are industrious."

The following proceedings of the "Committee of Seven" are of interest in this connection:

"At a meeting of the Committee of Seven, appointed to superintend and direct the appropriation of the moneys raised for the demolition of the mill-dam and for the further removing the nuisance in Paxtang Creek, April 8, 1795:

"At Brindle's: present, Potts, Gillmor, Berryhill, W. Graydon, Dentzell, Bucher, Kean.

"John Kean was appointed secretary and treasurer.

"Ordered, that the treasurer take up the bonds due to Adam Boyd and to George Allen.

"Adjourned to Saturday evening next, at six o'clock, at Mr. Berryhill's.

"Saturday, 11th.—The committee met and viewed the dam, and adjourned till Monday evening, at six o'clock, at Berryhill's.

"Monday, 13th.—Met, and the members mentioned the names of persons wishing to borrow money. Agreed, that the money be retained in the treasury a few days longer.

"Agreed, that on Saturday next at one o'clock the bell be rung, and the inhabitants assemble and demolish the remainder of the dam.

"Saturday, 18th.—The committee met and proceeded with a number of the inhabitants to the dam. Committee hired four persons to open the bed of the creek twelve feet wide, which was done, and the persons employed were paid six dollars, which was raised by voluntary contribution on the spot."

The Oracle of Monday following gives this account of the affair :

"On Thursday last a committee appointed by the citizens of Harrisburg waited on Abraham Landis and Peter Landis, and tendered the whole demand they made last year for the mill, with its appurtenances, agreeable to the terms they had proposed ; but they now thought proper to require a much greater sum ; wherefore, apprehending that the owners of the said mill intended, through the distressing calamities thought to be occasioned by the mill-dam, to extort an enormous price from the people for the enjoyment of health, by the unreasonable sum now demanded for the mill, they did almost unanimously proceed, on Saturday afternoon last, to take down and destroy that intolerable nuisance which has for three years past rendered this borough a mere hospital and graveyard ; and therefore it is now hoped that, under the blessing of Divine Providence, this once flourishing place may be restored to its former state of healthiness and prosperity."

The Messrs. Landis subsequently met the "committee of seven," and again demanded two thousand pounds for the water-right, and threatened to bring suit, which was refused. However, the former at last agreed to the citizens' proposition, and on the 25th of April, 1795, Peter, John, and Abraham Landis sold to Stacy Potts, Moses Gillmor, William Graydon, Jacob Bucher, John Kean, John Dentzel, and Alexander Berryhill, of the borough of Harrisburg, and conveyed to them their mill, etc., for £2633 4s. 6d., "to hold and to have the said two pieces of lands, houses, mills, mill machinery, etc." This sum, as before stated, was raised by taxing the citizens. The payments were made in three annual installments; one-half of the amount assessed was paid in 1794, one-half the balance in 1795, and the balance in 1796. For example, a citizen taxed four pounds had to pay two pounds in 1794, one pound in 1795, and one pound in 1796. It may be remarked that some citizens who refused to contribute to the subscription were obliged to leave the town. No violence was offered to them, but no one would employ them in their several pursuits, and they at length went elsewhere. The following list for the years 1795 and 1796 shows the amount assessed :

This offer induced the government of Pennsylvania to make this the chief town of the country, though it has neither an anchoring-place for the ships that sail up and down the river, nor can afford them the smallest shelter.

"The new county obtained the name of Dauphin. The first houses were built here in 1783, and their number at present amounts to three hundred.

"The formation of this town being of a more recent date than any other, the buildings were from the very first of a better construction than anywhere else; and such as were not originally good houses have since been rebuilt. Very few log houses are therefore to be found in Harrisburg, but, on the contrary, many substantial and handsome edifices; and though this town is smaller and of later establishment than Reading and many other places, yet it is more compact and has a much better appearance. A malignant epidemic fever has made the same havoc in Harrisburg as the yellow fever did in Philadelphia, and for a whole twelvemonth checked the progress of building. As the fever did not return last year, however, building is still going on; but the prejudice of the town being insalubrious still remains, whether it be really so or, as the inhabitants affirm, merely a scandalous report propagated by the jealousy of the neighboring towns. The unhealthiness of the place being imputed to the stagnation of some water which was made to turn a mill, it was proposed to the miller to throw down the dam, and an indemnification was offered him. He demanded last year four thousand dollars, but this sum not having been raised soon enough in his opinion, he this year raised his demand in proportion to the increased desire of destroying his dam, and insisted on the payment of eleven thousand dollars. The inhabitants, enraged at this exorbitant demand, and at the same time earnestly wishing for the demolition of the dam, unanimously resolved to destroy it, and appointed a commission to award a just indemnification to the miller, which has been determined at the sum he first demanded. All the inhabitants seem to have concurred in this proceeding, which, though not to be applauded, is less censurable on account of the miller's enormous rapacity. The unanimity with which this transaction was accomplished insures its impunity, and the miller will be cautious of entering upon a prosecution, as the grand jury would certainly throw out his bill. He has no one to blame but himself for the destruction of his dam, and the public opinion which by a more prudent conduct he might last year have engaged in his favor, is now decidedly against him; yet with many of the demolishers themselves it remains a matter of doubt whether the demolition of the dam have any way increased the salubrity of the place.

"A prison and a sessions-house have been built at Harrisburg, and a plan is in agitation to form an anchorage for ships. The inhabitants exert their utmost efforts to procure to this place all the advantages of which it is susceptible, and even indulge a hope that the seat of the government of the State will be removed to their town. They form a central point, at least for the population of Pennsylvania, and are less distant from the remote western parts than any other county on this side of the Susquehanna, and on these local advantages they ground their hopes. It is, however, to be wished that their notion of determining the seat of the Legislature by a pair of compasses may be confined to men who cannot influence the decision, and that it may be rightly understood how much better it is for the deputies to travel one hundred miles farther than remove the seat of government from Philadelphia, which is the most populous city, and the only trading town in Pennsylvania, and which consequently forms that point where the best information is in unison with the most important interests. The public expenditure necessary in this newly-formed county causes the taxes to be somewhat higher than in the counties of Lancaster and Berks; the difference may be a shilling in the pound. Unless you chance to meet with a commissioner of taxes, the exact proportion is not to be ascertained, as a general ignorance on the subject every where prevails. The taxes, however, are generally deemed very light, even by those who pay them, which is undoubtedly the strongest proof that they are so. The majority of the inhabitants of Harrisburg consists of Germans and Irishmen, firmly attached to government, sensible and industrious. The number of inns in America is out of all proportion to that in Europe. This place contains no less than thirty-eight. It has twenty-five or thirty shops, where may be found all sorts of merchandises, procured from Philadelphia on twelve and eighteen months' credit, and of which the shopkeepers rapidly dispose at double or treble their prime cost. The price of ground shares in the town of Harrisburg is from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars. The land in the surrounding country is good; its price is from thirty-two to forty-eight dollars an acre. Day laborers are paid here three shillings and sixpence a day, with their board, or five shillings without it.

"The Susquehanna near Harrisburg is about three-quarters of a mile in breadth; in summer it is frequently fordable. The navigation is extremely dangerous for several months in consequence of some rapid currents, and never safe except in spring and autumn, when the water is sufficiently high to cover the rocks, which become more numerous at the point where the Juniata falls into the Susquehanna, nine miles above Harrisburg, and greatly increases the dangers of the navigation. The government of Pennsylvania has offered eight hundred thousand dollars for clearing the river of these rocks from the above point down to Middletown, but hitherto no one has ventured upon this enterprise. I entertain no doubt, however, but that this vast undertaking will shortly be accomplished, though the sum hitherto offered may not be sufficient, but must probably be increased. The industry and prosperity of Pennsylvania will in time overcome this, as well as many other disadvantages which have heretofore been deemed insupportable. A Frenchman resides at present at Harrisburg who was born in France, but came hither from Martinico. He is a physician, and though he speaks but little English, and has resided here only a few months, enjoys already considerable practice.

"We had a letter to Gen. Hanna, and as we intended to stop here but a few hours, we delivered it as soon as we alighted from our horses. Gen. Hanna is a man of about thirty-six or thirty-eight years of age, and brigadier-general of militia. He was a member of the Senate for Pennsylvania, but went out by rotation last autumn. Before he was engaged in the service of the State he was a lawyer, but he has since relinquished that profession, and has commenced farming. He married a daughter of old Mr. Harris, the founder of the town, and appears to be an upright, worthy character. Not being prepared to give us a dinner, as we came unexpectedly, he offered to attend us to our evening quarters, seven miles from this town, as some token of respect for the letter of introduction which we brought him. As our horses wanted shoeing, we were obliged to make him wait some time, which we passed in the true American style, quaffing a bottle of Madeira and smoking segars. The general is not fond of them, but prefers chewing tobacco; yet from motives of politeness he smoked with us. Being at our lodgings we proposed as a toast 'The President,' upon which he immediately gave 'Lafayette.' I noticed this trifling circumstance to introduce once more the remark that Lafayette is constantly toasted next to the President, which in my judgment reflects honor on America."

The aggression upon American commerce, commenced by the French Directory in 1797, and subsequent insults offered our ambassadors, aroused such great indignation in our country that Congress, on the 28th of May, 1798, passed an act authorizing the President to raise a provisional army. Gen. William Irvine was appointed by Governor Mifflin as commander-in-chief of the quota of eighty thousand militia requested from Pennsylvania, and took active measures to organize his troops. When the Directory became aware that their conduct would not be tamely submitted to, they began suddenly to retract their measures, and there was no necessity for bringing the provisional army into the field. At this period the people in all sections became aroused. A meeting of the citizens of Harrisburg was held at Andrew Berryhill's on the evening of May 1st, and an address was unanimously agreed upon and signed by all present, to which the signatures of others of the inhabitants as were not present were secured, and the whole transmitted to President Adams. This address is as follows:

"HARRISBURG, May 2.

"At a respectable meeting of the inhabitants of this Borough, last evening, at Mr. Andrew Berryhill's; the following address was unanimously agreed upon, and signed by all present to the number of 61. Six gentlemen were appointed to procure as early as possible the signatures of such of the inhabitants as did not attend, and to transmit the address when completed to the President.

"To the President of the United States:

"Sir,—AT a time, when the minds of men are so intoxicated with ideas of reform, and visionary schemes for meliorating the condition of humanity, as to be fatally inattentive to their own security, and regardless of considerations which have hitherto been deemed the most sacred and obligatory—there may be a propriety in the declaration of sentiments, which in more settled times, might at least be thought superfluous: From the generality also, of the practice of expressing approbation of the measures of government at the present crisis, motives might be attached to the omission of it, less honorable than a disinclination, to intrude upon the managers of the public concerns, or a reluctance to suppose that in the resistance of outrage and maintenance of national independence, they would not receive the support of the virtuous and unprejudiced part of the community. Under these impressions, we the subscribers, inhabitants of the Borough of Harrisburg, beg leave to declare, that we are too highly sensible of the prosperity we enjoy, to be willing to relinquish it without an effort for its preservation; and that in our wishes for the happiness of others, we have not lost sight of our country & ourselves. That in our opinion, the conduct and designs of the French Republic (scarcely aggravated or made more apparent by the profligacy of their avowal) are such as to produce alarm and indignation in every breast which feels for the honor and happiness of America, and to excite the apprehensions of every man, of whatever nation or country, who may place a sense of justice, of morality, and piety among the ornaments of his nature and the blessings of society. That under this persuasion, we hold it wise to be prepared for every event, and shall therefore most cheerfully acquiesce in such measures of defence, as may be adopted by you, Sir, and the other branches of the administration, at the present momentous period. And that as your past conduct has invariably commanded the respect and approbation of every ingenious mind, so we have the most perfect reliance, that in future it will continue to be influenced by the purest motives and clearest perceptions of the public good.

"We beg you to accept our cordial wishes for your personal welfare and happiness."

To this address President Adams sent the following characteristic reply:

"To the inhabitants of the Borough of Harrisburg, in the State of Pennsylvania:

"GENTLEMEN,—Your address has been presented to me by Mr. Hartley, Mr. Sitgreaves, and Mr. Hanna, three of your Representatives in Congress.

"I know not which to admire most, the conscientiousness, the energy, the elegance, or profound wisdom of this excellent address.

"Ideas of reformation, and schemes for ameliorating the condition of humanity, should not be discouraged when proposed with reason and pursued with moderation; but the rage for innovation, which destroys everything because it is established, and introduces absurdities the most monstrous merely because they are new, was never carried to such a pitch of madness in any age of the world, as in the latter end of the boasted eighteenth century, and never produced effects so horrible upon suffering humanity.

"Among all the appearances, portentous of evil, there is none more incomprehensible than the professions of Republicanism among those who place not a sense of justice, morality, or piety, among the ornaments of their nature, and the blessings of society. As nothing is more certain or demonstrable than that free Republicanism cannot exist without these ornaments and blessings, the tendency of the times is rapid towards a restoration of the petty military despotisms of the feudal anarchy, and by their means a return to the savage state of barbarous life.

"How can the press prevent this, when all the presses of a nation, and, indeed, of many nations at once, are subject to an imprimatur by a veto upon pain of confiscation, banishment, or confiscation?

"That America may have the glory of arresting this torrent of error, vice, and imposture, is my fervent wish; and if sentiments as great as those from Harrisburg should be found universally to prevail, as I doubt not they will, my hopes will be as sanguine as my wishes.

"PHILADELPHIA, 12th May, 1798."

"JOHN ADAMS.

Until the year 1804 the business of the town and county was conducted in "pounds, shillings, and pence." On the 4th of February that year, on settling the accounts of the county treasurer, Adam Boyd, the statement made by the county auditors was as follows:

Cash on hand.....	1133	8	5
Outstanding debt.....	682	14	5½
	1766	2	10½
Equal to.....	$4700.71.

From that time onward the accounts were rendered in dollars and cents. The change to American currency was at the same time made in the financial accounts of the borough.

In 1807, Francis Cuming made a tour to the West. In his journey he passed through this section, and gives in his interesting narrative his impressions of the places and people.

Mr. Cuming forwarded his baggage by a Conestoga wagon for Carlisle. The wagon made fifteen miles a day. He traveled about twenty-five, and on the 13th of January, 1807, he arrived at Lancaster. Remaining at Lancaster several days, he continues his account:

"On Thursday, 29th January, I left Lancaster on foot, proceeding along the Harrisburg road at a steady pace of about three miles and a half an hour. The weather was remarkably fine, and the road in excellent order, and, what was remarkable for the season, a little dusty. About a mile and a half from Lancaster I passed a turnpike toll-gate, from a little beyond which I got the last view of the steeples of that town, and soon after I crossed a stone bridge over a branch of Conestoga Creek. The road continued fine and the country rich, laid out in large farms, with good dwelling-houses of brick and stone and immense barns. Though hill and dale, woods and cultivated farms presented themselves alternately, yet there was nothing very striking in the scenery.

"The road continued fine nine miles, to a rivulet called Big Chickey, which I crossed over on an Indian bridge, which is a high tree cut down so as to fall across the stream from bank to bank, and then its branches lopped off. The banks being high, and the bridge long and narrow, my nerves were so discomposed when I reached the middle that I had like to have fallen off, but balancing and tottering, I at length reached the end. Two miles farther I had to cross another Indian bridge over Little Chickey Creek, which I did boldly, without any difficulty, which is one proof of the use of practice and experience.

"The road now became very bad, the turnpike intended from Lancaster to Harrisburg not being as yet finished farther. The country also is not so highly improved as in the neighborhood of Lancaster, the inhabitants still residing in their original small log houses, though they have generally good and spacious stone barns.

"After four hours' walking I arrived at Elizabethtown, eighteen miles from Lancaster, and stopped at the sign of Gen. Wayne, where for a five-penny bit (six cents and a quarter) I got a bowl of excellent egg punch and a crust of bread.

"It is surprising that at so short a distance from Lancaster the necessaries of life should be at least a third cheaper, which on inquiry I found them here. This village contains about thirty tolerable houses, has a meeting-house and a school, when the master can be got, which is not always the case, the place having now been some months vacant, to whom the trustees insure twenty-five scholars, at two dollars each per quarter, which, being only two hundred dollars per annum, I would have supposed insufficient for his support, if at the same time I had not been informed that his board and lodging in the most respectable manner will not cost him above eighty dollars a year in this cheap and plentiful county.

"After resting about an hour, and not feeling at all fatigued, at half-past four I proceeded for Middletown, eight miles farther, first loading one of the barrels of my gun with a running ball, as I had to pass near where one Eshelman was robbed and murdered last fall.

"The road over Conewago Hills was bad, and by the time I arrived at the bridge over Conewago Creek, three miles from Elizabethtown, my left foot began to pain me, so that I was forced to slacken my pace, which made it dark before I arrived at Swatara Creek, when the pain had much increased, which was occasioned by my stepping through the ice up to my knees in a run which crossed the road, which the darkness prevented my seeing.

"The boat was at the other side of the creek, and the German family at the ferry-house let me kick my heels at the door until I was quite chilled before they invited me in, which old Mrs. Smith did at last with very bad grace, and she almost scolded me for risking the droppings on her very dirty floor the spirits of turpentine with which I was wetting the feet of my stockings to prevent my catching cold, a phial of which I carried in my pocket for that purpose.

"In about half an hour, which appeared to me an age, the boat returned, and I gladly left the dirty, boorish, inhospitable mansion, crossed the creek in a canoe hauled over by a rope extended from bank to bank, seventy yards, and in a few minutes after I found myself in Mrs. Wentz's excellent inn, the sign of Gen. Washington, in Middletown. My foot being much blistered I bathed it in cold water, and then injudiciously opened the blisters with a lancet and sponged them with spirits of turpentine. I then got a good supper and an excellent bed, but my foot pained me so much as to prevent my sleeping, so I rose early, unrefreshed, and breakfasted with my landlady, an agreeable, well-bred woman.

"The view down the Susquehanna from Mrs. Wentz's back piazza is very fine. The town contains about a hundred houses, and is well and handsomely situated about half a mile above the conflux of Swatara Creek with Susquehanna River, the former of which forms a good harbor for boats, which it is in contemplation to join to the Schuylkill by a canal, in order to give Philadelphia the benefit of the navigation of the Susquehanna through its long course above Middletown. If this is carried into effect, it will draw to Philadelphia a vast quantity of produce which now goes to Baltimore.

"The Susquehanna is a noble river, here about a mile wide, with fine sloping wooded banks, and abounds with rock-fish, perch, mullet, eels, suckers, catfish, and white salmon, which last is described as a fine fish from seven to fifteen pounds weight, but a distinct species from the real salmon of Northern rivers. Notwithstanding their plenty, Mrs. Wentz assured me that she was seldom gratified with a dish of fish; for though there are many poor people in the town and neighborhood who might make a good living by fishing, she says they are too lazy to do anything more than will procure them some whiskey, in addition to a miserable subsistence, which a very little labor will suffice for in a country where work is so well paid for, and where the necessaries of life are so abundant and cheap.

"Was it not that the Susquehanna abounds with falls, shallows, and rapids, which impede the navigation, it would be one of the most useful rivers in the world, as its different branches from its different sources embrace a wonderful extent of country, settled or rapidly settling, and abounding in wheat and maize (Indian corn), which most probably will always be staples of the large and flourishing State of Pennsylvania.

"The road to Harrisburg leads parallel to the Susquehanna, in some places close to the river, and never more distant from it than a quarter of a mile, along a very pleasant level, bounded on the right by a ridge of low but steep wooded hills, approaching and receding at intervals, and affording a fine shelter from the northerly winds, to the farms between them and the river, which perhaps is one reason that the orchards are so numerous and so fine in this tract.

"I have rarely seen in any country a road more pleasant than this, either from its own goodness or the richness and variety of the prospect. The Susquehanna on the left, about three-quarters of a mile wide, sometimes appearing and sometimes concealed by orchards, groves, or clumps of wood; the fine wooded islands in the river; the mountains which terminate the ridge called the South Mountain (which crosses part of Virginia and the southern part of this State) rising abruptly from the margin of the river, in which they are charmingly reflected, altogether form scenery truly delightful.

"About three miles below Harrisburg the mountains terminate, and the south bank of the river becomes more varied, though still hilly, and here on an elevated promontory, with a commanding view of the river from above Harrisburg to below Middletown, is a large and apparently fine stone house, owned by Gen. Simpson, who resides in it on his farm, and is proprietor of a ferry much frequented by the western Waggoners, as the road that way is shorter by two miles than that by Harrisburg. He farms out the ferry on his side for about three hundred dollars per annum, while on this side the proprietor rents it at four hundred and seventy. The value of this ferry, called Chambers', may serve to convey some idea of the state of travelling in this country, particularly if one reflects that there are many other well-frequented ferries where public roads cross the river within thirty miles both above and below this one, and which are all great avenues to the Western country.

"When two miles from the ferry I observed a long line of sleds, horses, men, etc., crossing on the ice, which scene, at that distance, had a curious and picturesque appearance, as the ice was glassy, and in consequence they appeared to be moving on the surface of the water, on which their shadows, inverted and reflected as in a mirror, struck the eye with very grotesque imagery.

"Some laborers who were at work in a barn at the ferry-house, and of whom I was asking some questions relative to the country, were much astonished at my double-barreled gun, admiring its work and lightness, and calling it a curious creature.

"When within a mile and a half of Harrisburg the white cupola of its court-house and the tops of the houses of the town are seen peeping over the trees, and have a good effect.

"At one o'clock I entered that town, turning to the left over Paxtang Creek bridge. I stopped at the ferry-house, which is also a tavern, but appearance of accommodation not being very promising, I continued my walk along the bank of the river, and stopped at another tavern, where I asked if I could have a bed that night. A dirty-looking girl at the stove drawled out that she believed I might. I then asked for some mulled wine. She said eggs were scarce, and she could not get any. From these symptoms of carelessness I thought it best to try my fortune a little farther, so putting on my shot-belt and taking my gun I quietly walked out in search of a place of more civil reception, and fortunately I entered Bennett's, the sign of the white horse, fronting the river, at the corner of the principal cross street, which leads to the market-place. I say fortunately, for I found it an excellent, plentiful, and well-frequented house, and Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, two fine girls, his daughters by a former wife, and a Mrs. Fisher, an assistant, and apparently some relation, all attentive and studious to please.

"After getting some refreshment, I wrote some letters and carried them to the post-office. The office being shut, the postmaster very civilly invited me into his parlor to settle for the postage, where, seeing a large map of Pennsylvania, I took the opportunity of tracing my journey, which the postmaster observing, he very politely assisted me in it, pointing out the most proper route. There were some ladies in the room, apparently on a visit, and there was an air of sociality and refinement throughout which was very pleasing.

"Leaving the post-office, I walked through the town. It contains about two hundred and fifty houses, most of them very good, some of brick, some of stone, and some of wood. The principal street was nearly east and west, and has two small market-houses in the centre, where the street is widened purposely into a small square.

"Parallel to this main street is a street charmingly situated on the bank of the Susquehanna, open to the river on the side next it and tolerably well built on the other, having a wide footway, in some parts paved, and marked in its whole length by a row of Lombardy poplars regularly planted, which serves also to shade the houses from the scorching rays of the summer's sun. This street, though at present wide enough, has not been laid out sufficiently so to provide against the gradual encroachment of the river on its steep gravelly bank of about twenty feet high above the common level of the water. The view from every part of this street is very beautiful, both up and down the river,—about five miles each way,—terminated upwards by the long ridge of the Blue Mountains, through a gap in which of about three miles long, which is also open to the view, the river rolls its rapid current, contracted there to less than half a mile wide, while downwards the eye rests on the South Mountain, impending over Gen. Simpson's house, which in its turn seems to overhang the river from the high promontory on which it is situated. Several islands add to the beauty of the view, particularly one on which is a fine farm of nearly one hundred acres, just opposite the town.

"The court-house is near the market-square on the principal cross street, and is a handsome, plain brick building of two lofty stories, with a cupola rising from the centre of the roof, remarkable for its vane of copper gilt, representing an Indian chief as large as the life, with a bow in his left hand and a tomahawk, in the act of cutting, in the right. The house is about seventy feet by fifty, with two small receding wings. The hall for the court is very neat, spacious, and convenient, doors opening from it into the record and prothonotary's offices in the wings. A fine, easy, double staircase leads to the great room over the hall for the courts. This room is now used as a temporary place of worship by the English Presbyterians until their own meeting-house is finished, which is of brick, and in great forwardness. From each corner of this room a door opens into the register office, the library, and two jury-rooms.

"There is as yet no other place of public worship in Harrisburg, except an old wooden house used as such by a congregation of German Lutherans.

"This town, which is now the capital of Dauphin County, was laid out twenty-three years ago by the late proprietor, Mr. Harris, whose father is buried near the bank of the river, opposite the stone house he lived in, under a large old tree, which once during his life concealed and saved him from some Indians by whom he was pursued.

"I observed in the office of a Mr. Downey, a magistrate, a newly-invented patent stove made of sheet-iron, consisting of two horizontal parallel cylinders about a foot apart, one over the other and communicating by a pipe; the upper one is heated by the smoke from the lower, which contains the fuel. Mr. Downey informed me that it saved much fuel. The patentee lives here.

"On returning to my inn I found there a Mr. W. Porter, of Pittsburgh, just arrived. In the course of the evening he gave me much good information of the Western country, accompanied by a friendly invitation to call on him at Pittsburgh should I be detained there until his return from Philadelphia, where he was now going. He had formerly lived in Harrisburg for some years after his arrival from Ireland, his native country. The joyful eagerness with which numbers of his old acquaintances flocked to Bennett's to visit him evinced his having been much esteemed and respected.

"On Saturday, 24th, I arose early, but the ferry-boat not being ready, I partook of an excellent breakfast with my friendly host and his family, and at ten o'clock I embarked in a large flat with the Western mail and several passengers and horses. The flat was worked by nine stout men with short setting-poles shod and pointed with iron, to break the ice and stick in the bottom. Only one set or pushed on the upper side, while eight set on the lower side to keep the boat from being forced by the current against the ice, while a tenth steered with a large oar behind. A channel for this purpose had been cut through the ice, and was kept open, as loaded wagons could cross the river in a flat with more safety than on the ice.

"In twenty-two minutes we were landed on the western shore of the Susquehanna, in Cumberland County, and I trudged on, my foot pain- ing me very much, until half-past twelve o'clock, when I stopped at a tavern seven miles from the ferry and got some refreshments. Here I found a tall, active old man of the name of Jameson, seventy-six years of age, who had crossed the ferry with me, and had afterwards passed me on the road on horseback. He had accompanied his parents from the county Antrim, in Ireland, when only six years old, had resided thirty-six years at Paxtang, near where Harrisburg has since been built (where he had been on business), and had afterwards removed to a part of Virginia about two hundred miles distant, where he has a large farm and distillery. He insisted on treating me, as he said he liked to encourage the consumption of whiskey, of which and the telling of old stories he was so fond that he appeared to forget he had so long a journey before him until reminded by seeing some travelers pass on horseback, whom he hastened to overtake for the sake of their company.

"He did not, however, neglect finishing his whiskey, which he swallowed with great gout, and on mounting his horse cracked jokes about a buxom widow at whose tavern beyond Carlisle he proposed sleeping that night. Among other stories with which he had entertained me, he told me the particulars of the massacre of the Indians at Lancaster, and he took a good deal of pride to himself for having been one of the heroes who had assisted on that memorably disgraceful expedition. In justice, however, to the old man, I must observe that he related with pleasure that the party he accompanied arrived too late in Lancaster to assist in the carnage."

In 1809, April 3d, the Legislature passed the act authorizing the erection of the Harrisburg bridge; the capital authorized was four hundred thousand dollars, in twenty thousand shares at twenty dollars per share. Section 1 of the act recites, "The commissioners shall reserve three thousand shares, which shall be appropriated by the president and directors, and used if the same be found requisite for the purpose hereinafter mentioned of vesting therein the moneys to be applied for a sinking fund to free the bridge." The originators were looking far into the future and providing in their day and generation for the present. Section 2 says "the subscribers shall have perpetual succession, etc.," under the names, etc., of "the president, directors, and company for erecting a permanent bridge over the river Susquehanna at or near the borough of Harrisburg." Section 7 says the bridge must be erected in fifteen years, and be begun within five years. Section 10 says the property shall be vested in a bond for thirty years after the bridge is completed. The rates of toll allowed were: Two-wheeled vehicle with one horse, thirty-two cents; a single horse and rider, eighteen and three-fourths cents; horse or mule without rider, twelve and one-half cents; foot passengers, six and one-fourth cents. The section then says, "When the tolls shall exceed fifteen per cent. net annual profit, the excess shall compose a fund for the redemption of the said bridge, so as to render it free, save that there shall always be a small toll or other revenue for the keeping of it in repair; this excess shall be laid out in bridge stock, or some other productive funds, and the dividends or annual product shall also be added to this fund; and all private donations for freeing said bridge shall likewise be received and invested in like manner." Section 13 relates entirely to dividends.

The company to construct the bridge was chartered July 6, 1812, and organized on the 8th of August following. The first foundation stone was laid Dec. 2, 1812. In a report of John Downey, the then treasurer, made up to July 30, 1813, it is stated that Theodore Burr was the contractor for the sum of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, and of that he was to take thirty-five thousand dollars in stock, "the residue to be paid him in proportion as the work progresses; he is to find all the materials and to have the bridge completed on the first day of December, 1815." The report further says, "It is with no small degree of satisfaction that the board have it in their power to inform the company that the displeasure expressed by some of the stockholders on account of the site of the bridge being fixed where it is now erecting has nearly subsided." The directors were Thomas Elder, Jacob M. Haldeman, John Ritscher, George Brenizer, Samuel C. Wiestling, John Howard, William Bryson, George Hoyer, Jacob Boas, Henry Bader, Michael Krehl, John Mytinger. The first toll received by the company was on Oct. 16, 1816. The bridge and the toll-houses were completed in 1817, at a total cost of one hundred and ninety-two thousand one hundred and thirty-eight dollars. The total length was two-thirds of a mile; width, forty feet; and elevation, fifty feet. The bridge running from the island to the Cumberland shore is the original Burr plan, and the only one of the kind in existence. That part between the island and the city was carried away by the great freshet of March 15, 1846, and for about eighteen months after, the passage was made by means of a "ferry rope." The rope used was about three inches in diameter, and suspended between the two abutments, supported in the centre by masts on the piers. The flats were connected to this rope by two small guy-ropes, and by an ingenious contrivance were propelled across the stream by the action of the currents. The rope, especially during high water, frequently obstructed the passage of the rafts and arks descending the river, and was finally cut by one of the incensed river men with an axe. The bridge was rebuilt in 1847, and burned in the summer of 1866, the present structure taking its place in 1867.

By the act of April 2, 1811, the Governor is authorized to subscribe for ninety thousand dollars of stock of the company. By the act of Jan. 17, 1812, the Governor is authorized to issue letters patent where thirty (in place of one hundred in original act) shall have subscribed two thousand shares, etc. The act of Jan. 31, 1814, provides for the payment of installments on stock subscribed for by the Governor, and the issuing of certificates, — eleven hundred and twenty-five when each fourth part is paid, — four thousand five hundred shares. The act of Feb. 10, 1817, provides for the payment of the last installment of twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars, and for raising the rates of toll from thirty-two cents to thirty-seven and one-half cents; for every single horse and rider, from eighteen and three-quarter cents to twenty-five cents. The act of April 14, 1828, repealing so much of the act of April 10, 1826, relative to roads, bridges, etc., in which the State owns stock, be repealed. By the act of Feb. 28, 1832, the bridge company is authorized to subscribe thirty-five thousand dollars to the stock of the New Haven and Harrisburg Bridge Turnpike Company, and have the name changed to "The Harrisburg Bridge Company." In the act of April 7, 1846, section 1 authorizes the company to borrow fifty thousand dollars, and to sell seven thousand shares for the purpose of rebuilding the bridge. Section 2 says no share shall be sold for less than one-half of the par value. Section 4 says voting by proxy shall not be allowed. One vote is allowed for every share of stock, "provided no stockholder shall be entitled to more than one-eighth of the whole number of votes." Section 5 authorizes the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company to sell, the one to the other, the exclusive right to accommodate common travel, "so far as said exclusive right may be vested in either of the said companies." The act of Feb. 20, 1867, authorizes the company to conform to modern methods in collecting tolls. The act of April 4, 1867, is in relation to the establishment of a free bridge, and provides for the holding of an election twenty days after the passage of the act. The act of March 2, 1873, provides a penalty for the carrying of fires and lights over the bridge. When the State decided to dispose of its turnpike, canal, and railroad property, its stock in the bridge was put up at sale and purchased by James McCormick and Jacob M. Haldeman. They paid nine thousand dollars for the ninety thousand dollars' worth of shares.

CHAPTER V.

Removal of the Seat of Government to Harrisburg—Act establishing the same—Laying of the Corner-stone of the Capitol—Occupation of the Capitol—Cost of Construction.

THE removal of the seat of State government from Philadelphia began to be agitated at the close of the Revolution. In March, 1787, the Assembly, then a single branch, in obedience to this sentiment, resolved that Philadelphia was "an unfortunate location," expressing by votes its determination to build a State house "at Harrisburg, on a plot of ground, the property of the Commonwealth," etc., being four and a half acres, conveyed by John Harris in 1785. Harrisburg was then a town of nearly six hundred inhabitants.

In subsequent sessions, as in 1795, the House voted thirty-six to thirty-four in favor of removing to Carlisle, Cumberland Co. The Senate did not concur. In 1798 the House again agreed to remove to Wrightstown, York Co., "without delay." The Senate refused to concur. In 1799 the effort in favor of removal was crowned with success. Both branches voted to remove to Lancaster, then a town of great importance, much the most considerable in the interior. Accordingly, in December, 1799, the Legislature met in Lancaster, continuing to do so until the spring of 1812, when (in December) the seat of government was removed to Harrisburg, at which point it was voted it should be as early as 1785. The provisions of the Constitution now require that no removal can hereafter be made without the consent of the people at a general election. Very many attempts have been made to relocate at Philadelphia since 1812, but it is not probable that that location would be acceptable to any considerable section of the State.

The choice of Lancaster did not appear to have been entirely satisfactory. Agitation for another removal was almost immediately commenced, taking form as early as 1801, or within two years after the removal from Philadelphia. As an abstract proposition a majority was in favor of removal in 1790, but a location was not easily decided upon. The agitation was thus kept alive until the importance of the Susquehanna Valley overshadowed all other considerations. On the 9th of December, 1801, a few days after the meeting of the Legislature, the subject was introduced. There is no abstract of the debates of that day preserved that we are aware of; none at least in printed form. Extracts from the journal of the House will inform us what occurred.

"LANCASTER, Wednesday, Dec. 9, 1801.

"A motion was made by Stacy Potts, of Dauphin County, seconded by Mr. Lord Butler, of Luzerne, and read as follows, viz.:

"As the happiness and convenience of the citizens of this Commonwealth, and the preservation and security of their property, are the primary and important objects of legislative deliberations, it becomes our duty to consider the propriety of placing the officers attached to the government thereof in such a situation as will permit their procuring for themselves residences with convenient accommodations during the time they may continue in office, without subjecting them to the caprice of others; and the immense property held under the records of the State, at least in as secure a situation as the less important records of the different counties; therefore

"Resolved, That a grand committee be appointed to take these important objects into consideration, and report the most eligible place to fix the permanent seat of government of this State, with such other further observations as the case may require.

"Ordered to lie on the table.

"On motion, Ordered, That Tuesday next be assigned for the second reading of the said resolution, and that it be the order for that day.

"TUESDAY, Dec. 22, 1801.

"The motion of Mr. Potts, seconded by Mr. Butler, and read the 9th inst., relative to fixing the permanent seat of Government was read the second time.

"And the same being under consideration,

"Ordered, That Thursday, January 7, next be assigned for the further consideration thereof, and that it be the order for that day.

"THURSDAY, Jan. 7, 1802.

"Agreeably to the order of the day the House resumed the consideration of the resolution relative to the permanent seat of government, and

"On motion, Ordered, That Wednesday, the 13th inst., be assigned for the further consideration thereof, and that it be the order for that day.

"WEDNESDAY, Jan. 13, 1802.

"Agreeably to the order of the day, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole, Mr. Isaac Wayne, of Chester, in the chair, with resolution relative to the permanent seat of government before it.

"And after some time

"The Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman reported that the committee of the whole had negatived the resolution; and "On the question, 'Will the House agree to the report?'

"The yeas and nays were called for by Mr. (afterwards Governor) Snyder and Mr. Painter, of Philadelphia, and are as follows, viz:

"Yeas—Messrs. W. Anderson, J. Anderson, Barnett, Bollean, Brodhead, Bull, Butler, Cooke, Conrad, Davis, Elchelberger, Engle, Folwell, Goodman, Gordon, Hiester, Holgate, Ingels, Kauffman, Kimmel, McDowell (Chester), McElroy, J. Miller, A. Miller, Mohler, Neuhardt Odenheimer, Penrose, Preston, Pugh, Rea, Roberts, Slagle, J. Smith, B. H. Smith, Statler, Steele, Thornburg, Trevor, Wayne, Wetherill, Wilson (Northampton and Wayne),—42.

"Nays—Messrs. Alexander, Alter, Beale, Blair, Brady, Bratton, Buchanan, Cunningham, Dale, Ewalt, Ferguson, Follmer, Franklin, Gibbons, Hall, Helman, Kerr (Washington), Kerr (Huntingdon), Laycock, Lyle, McDowell (Washington), Mitchel, McMaisters, John Moore, Jesse Moore, Montgomery, Painter, R. Porter, C. Porter, Potts, Rose, Simpson, F. Smith, Snyder, Udree, Urie Wilson (Dauphin), W. Wilson, Witman, Weaver Speaker—41.

"So it was determined in the affirmative."

This disposed only of the question of "consideration," leaving the main subject open for future efforts. The opponents of removal, however, were powerful enough to prevent any further revival of the question during this session.

Mr. Potts writes of this defeat the letter of 1802, now quoted exactly as he penned it. The letter has no postmark except "8" cents, then the rate of postage between Lancaster and Harrisburg, addressed "Adam Boyd, Harrisburg."

"LANCASTER, JAN'y 19th, 1802.

"FRIEND BOYD: At thy request of the 2d Instant I presented thy Vouchers." [Some business in relation to a settlement of the State Treasury with that of Dauphin county, of which Capt. B. was treasurer.]

"You will undoubtedly feel with me, the mortification of finding the turn our expected removal of the Seat of Government has taken. However, altho' very sensibly chagrined by that measure, yet shall not despair, altho' it may be some time before so great an object can be accomplished. I hope the work is yet upon the wheel, and all things will yet work together for good; and if the fixing our permanent Seat of the Government seems at present out of sight, there is a preliminary motion on the way, which, if carried, I shall think a good point gained toward forwarding the grand object. For yesterday a motion was made, to appoint a committee to enquire and report the propriety of converting all the property of this State, consisting of houses and lots in the city of Philadelphia, into an Active Capital in aid of the present deranged finances of the Commonwealth, on which a committee has been appointed and from their completion I have great hopes of a favorable report.

"If that measure can be successfully accomplished the greatest obstacle in our way will be removed. However, it has already raised the hornet's nest, and there is as great a buzzing alarm as my resolution occasioned on the 9th of last month. Our Philadelphia gentlemen would insinuate that it would be as great sacrilege to sell the old State-House and its appurtenances in Philadelphia as the aristocrats would persuade us at the city of Washington, it will be to repeal the judiciary system created by the last Congress in the last night of their existence.

"But however terrible the iniquitous act may be estimated by those scrupulous gentlemen at both places, I hope and firmly believe both will be accomplished. And while this is maturing in our House, I hope they will not continue quite indolent in the Senate, and perhaps by the time they are ready to produce anything to our House we may not have so many of our members looking back towards the old State-House in Philadelphia. Then we may hope for two votes at least for every one of those which we had counted on that deserted us in the late discussion.

"However, as I have written last evening to William Maclay and Thomas Elder a pretty circumstantial account of the manner we were out-generated by the finess of the sophistical gentlemen of our eastern counties, the subject seems to be so much exhausted that without going again over the same ground I must wait for further occurrences, when I may be able to give you some further account which may be interesting enough to be worth communicating. From thy friend,

"STACY POTTS.

"TO ADAM BOYD."

That year the measure was brought forward in a fresh dress, that of erecting a structure for the "safe preservation" of the State papers. Under this thin disguise the subject of a removal of the seat of government was the real point. It was very skillfully avoided by the managers opposed to removal in a debate extending through December, 1802, and not ending until late in January, 1803. Then the subject was again postponed without determining the real question at issue.

This year closed the legislative career of Stacy Potts. The next year the subject had assumed so much importance that Harrisburg was honored with two of the three representatives, to wit: Messrs. Maclay and Bucher. It was not, however, until the session of 1808-9 that we have the first indications of the realization of the prophecy of the founder, John Harris, that the town he had laid out on the banks of the Susquehanna would become the future seat of government of Pennsylvania. In the State Senate on the 4th of January, 1809, Mr. Laird presented the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Northumberland, in Northumberland County, stating the central situation of that place, and showing the advantages of fixing the State government there, offering accommodations for the officers of the State and members of the Legislature, and praying a removal of the seat of government thither. The petition was referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Laird, Heston, Doty, Hiester, and Laycock. On the same day the following preamble and resolution was presented to the Senate, and also referred to the same committee:

"Whereas, The books, records, and documents belonging to the different departments of the government of this Commonwealth, particularly those of the land-office, are in want of suitable buildings for their safe keeping, greatly exposed to dangerous accidents by fire and otherwise, for a remedy whereof,—

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill to fix the permanent seat of government at ———, in the county of ———, and provide for erecting thereat suitable buildings for the accommodation of the Legislature, and the several offices attached thereto, before the first Tuesday in December, 18—."

The committee to whom the subject was referred shortly after submitted a report recommending the removal of the seat of government to the town of Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland. The Senate, however, when considering the report struck out the words "Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland." From that period onward the subject was constantly agitated, and we give such notes as may be valuable for reference:

"Feb. 17, 1809.—In Committee of the Whole, in the Senate, Mr. Sommer moved to fill the blank with the words 'City of Philadelphia.'

"Mr. Sommer said he was as far removed from being influenced by any local interest as any member of the Senate. He wished to fix the seat of government permanently where it would most conduce to the interest of the people, and he believed Philadelphia to be that place. Wherever the seat of government is, to that place trade will in some measure be directed; and it is the interest of the State to secure the trade to her metropolis.

"Mr. Dorsey said there were already buildings in Philadelphia sufficient for all the officers of government and for the Legislature. This was not the case elsewhere. If they removed to any other place, much expense would be incurred in the erection of these buildings. He had many other reasons for voting for Philadelphia; but, under a belief that the seat of government would not be fixed there, he would not take up the time of the Senate in mentioning them. Any other place than Lancaster, however, would be cordially voted for by him. He would vote even for Pittsburgh.

"The motion to fill the blank with the word 'Philadelphia,' was lost, only eight yeas voting in favor of the same.

"Mr. Laird moved to fill the blank with the words 'town of Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland.'

"Mr. Burrows said this question was of the first importance to Pennsylvania; it was important to the State to concentrate her whole interest in fixing the permanent seat of government. And how is this to be done but by fixing upon as central a place as can be found. He confessed that, for this purpose, Harrisburg was next to Northumberland, but then Harrisburg was but twenty miles from the southern boundary of the State, and Northumberland was eighty. And (said Mr. B.) are we to fix it at Harrisburg, and make the people come over the mountains with knapsacks on their backs, only that the rich at this end of the State may have an opportunity of riding to the seat of government in their coaches.

"Mr. Irish observed that he had lately examined all the situations from the mountains above Harrisburg down to Columbia, and he thought the most suitable situation was near to Middletown. That place, he said, was best to divert the trade to Philadelphia; a canal was contemplated which would afford water carriage for produce to the city of Philadelphia from Middletown. The situation at Harrisburg was very pleasant and handsome, but it was not so eligible for the purpose of intercepting the trade and preventing its going to Baltimore. He thought a committee should be appointed to examine the situations on the Susquehanna, and make report to the next Legislature.

"The question was then taken on filling the blank with the words 'the town of Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland,' and lost, seven only rising in favor of it.

"Mr. Lane then moved to fill the blank with the words 'borough of Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin,' which was agreed to,—14 to 10.

"The resolution attached to the report was adopted, when the committee rose and the Speaker took the chair.

"The Senate proceeded to consider the report.

"Mr. Weaver moved to postpone the report for the purpose of introducing a substitute, which contemplated a purchase by the State of one hundred and fifty acres of land, the property of Abraham Huey, a short distance above Harrisburg.

"This (with the motion to postpone) was opposed by Burrows and Dorsey, on the ground that this land was to be purchased for the purpose of speculation, and that it was disgraceful for the Legislature to enter into it. Neither, they said, did this tract of land adjoin Harrisburg.

"The report was postponed and the substitute introduced.

"Mr. Sommer moved to strike out that part of the substitute which authorized the purchase by the State of one hundred and fifty acres of land from Abraham Huey. Carried. Yeas, 13; nays, 9.

"The part appropriating money for the erection of public buildings, etc., was also stricken out.

"Mr. Roberts moved that the blank in the resolution attached to the substituted report be filled up with the words 'first of November,' which was agreed to; and the substitute as amended was carried."

Subsequent to this action a bill for the removal of the seat of government to Harrisburg was prepared and considered in the Senate, and postponed until the next session. The House of Representatives refused to take up the bill during that session. No further action on the subject appears to have been had in the Legislature until February, 1810, when a bill, of which the following is a synopsis, passed both branches of the Legislature, and became a law:

"An act establishing the seat of government of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania at Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted, etc., That within the month of October, 1812, all the offices attached to the seat of government of this State shall be removed to the borough of Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin, by their respective holders, and shall after that period cease to be exercised elsewhere, at which said borough of Harrisburg the session of the Legislature thereafter, as well as all future sessions, shall be held; and the said borough of Harrisburg is hereby fixed and declared to be the seat of government of the said Commonwealth.

"SEC. 2. [Directs the Secretary of the Commonwealth, State Treasurer, Auditor-General, Secretary of the Land-Office, and Surveyor-General, the clerks of both Houses of the Legislature, and all officers whose official duties are attached to the seat of government, to remove, or cause to be removed, all books, records, papers, etc., to the said offices respectively, or to the State generally, to the borough of Harrisburg, in the manner provided for in this act.]

"SEC. 3. That Robert Harris, George Hoyer, and George Zeigler shall be, and they are hereby appointed commissioners, who, together with the respective officers aforesaid, shall superintend and direct the removal of the books, records, papers, and other documents aforesaid, and shall provide at the borough of Harrisburg good and suitable rooms and apartments for the convenient accommodation of the Legislature, and also for the receiving, opening, and depositing the said books, records, papers, and other documents, and for conducting and transacting the business of the offices aforesaid respectively; and in case of the resignation of any of the aforesaid officers, or of their or any of their neglect and refusal or incapacity to attend to the business of the removal aforesaid, then it shall be and may be lawful for the said commissioners, or a majority of them, to proceed therein as if the said officers were attending.

"SEC. 4. That the Governor be, and he is hereby authorized and required, on behalf and in the name of this Commonwealth, to accept of the offer of ten acres of land in or adjoining the said borough of Harrisburg, at one hundred dollars per acre, made by William Maclay, adjoining to the four-acre lot formerly appropriated by John Harris for the use of the State, and to pay for the same and receive sufficient conveyances and assurances in fee-simple therefor, to be recorded in the office for recording of deeds in the county of Dauphin aforesaid.

"SEC. 5. [Appropriates three thousand dollars for the purpose of making the aforesaid purchase and discharging the expense of removal, to be paid in advance,—two thousand dollars to the said commissioners, and one thousand dollars for the said purchase.]

"SEC. 6. [Appropriates the further sum of thirty thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting the offices at the seat of government, to wit: one for the Secretary of the Commonwealth, one for the Secretary of the Land-Office, one for the Surveyor-General, one for the Auditor-General, one for the Treasurer, and one for any purpose to which it may hereafter be applied, each of which shall be fire-proof, for the safe-keeping of all the records and papers belonging to said offices.]

"Sec. 7. That the Governor is hereby authorized and required immediately after the passage of this act to appoint, and by supplying vacancies happening from refusal to act or other causes to keep in appointment as long as may be necessary, three commissioners, whose duty it shall be, immediately after their appointment, to fix upon a site in or on the four-acre lot described in the fourth section of this act, or on the ten-acre lot purchased from William Maclay, and procure one or more plan or plans on which the said offices are to be built; and after a place shall be agreed on, according to the provisions which hereafter follow, it shall be their duty to contract for, direct, and superintend the building and completing of the said offices. And it shall also be the duty of the said commissioners, as soon as they shall have ascertained the site for the said offices and procured one or more plans, to lay the said plan or plans before the Governor, Secretary of the Land-Office, Surveyor-General, Auditor-General, and the Treasurer of the Commonwealth, who, together with the three commissioners aforesaid, shall each have one vote in order to decide on a plan for the offices aforesaid; and such plan as shall have a majority of the votes aforesaid shall, by the commissioners aforesaid, be carried into execution.

"Sec. 8. [Directs that as soon as the plan shall be decided on, the commissioners shall give notice in two newspapers of Philadelphia, Lancaster, York, Carlisle, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, and Reading, for four weeks successively, that proposals will be received by them until a certain day, by them to be fixed, from any person or persons who shall be willing to undertake the building of the offices aforesaid: Provided, that every contract shall be made in writing, and that the parties contracting with the said commissioners give bonds with sufficient surety for the performance of their contracts.]

"Sec. 9. [Provides that the money appropriated for this purpose shall be paid by the treasurer of the commonwealth, on the order of any two of the said commissioners, who are required to keep strict accounts of their transactions, and to transmit an abstract thereof to the Governor once in every three months after their appointment.]

"Sec. 10. [Provides that the aforesaid commissioners, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall subscribe to an oath or affirmation that they will faithfully perform the duties enjoined upon them by this act; and that each of the said commissioners shall receive for every day's attendance upon the duties herein enjoined upon them the sum of two dollars and fifty cents, and that any two of them may do and perform any act or duty herein enjoined on the said commissioners.]"

The commissioners on the part of the State, named in the third section of the above act, in their negotiations with William Maclay for the purchase of the ten acres upon which the capitol now stands, wished to have it adjoin the four acres and thirteen perches granted by John Harris; but as the grant of Harris was separated from the Maclay property by a range of five lots, extending from High Street to Third Street, originally the property of the heirs of Harris, viz.: of David Harris, Mrs. Maclay, Mrs. Hanna, James Harris, and Robert Harris, Mr. Maclay could not convey the title without first purchasing these lots from the then owners, which he did, and then conveyed the ten acres, as described in the deed from him to the commonwealth. This deed, however, did not convey all the ground now inclosed as the public ground. In order to obtain it the State, by virtue of an act of the Legislature, purchased lots Nos. 271, 272, 273, 274, and 275 in the plan of the borough from the individual owners, and after inclosing what was necessary to complete or square the grounds and open High Street as it is, sold the residue of said lots, lying between High Street and Tanner's Alley, and from Cranberry Alley to the Maclay line, to the present owners or their vendors.

The commissioners appointed by the Governor, by authority of the seventh section of the above act, were William Findlay, Richard M. Crain, George Bryan, John B. Gibson, and William Graydon, who immediately invited architects to exhibit to them plans and elevations for the contemplated buildings. A premium of four hundred dollars was to be given for the plan adopted by the board, and two hundred dollars for that which they should adjudge the next best. Stephen Hills, Esq., was declared the successful competitor, his plan contemplating the connection of the main building with the offices by corridors.

A supplement to the foregoing act was passed Feb. 7, 1812, which provided in the first section for the removal of all the offices, within the month of April, to the borough of Harrisburg, the change of all papers, records, books, and documents placed with the clerks of the two Houses, and expenses to be paid, under the authority of the second section, out of the money already appropriated for that purpose.

The second supplement to the original act was passed the 10th of March, 1812, which appropriated, in the first section, thirteen thousand dollars to complete the fire-proof offices at Harrisburg contemplated in the sixth section of the original act.

In the second section it directed the clerks of the two Houses, on or before the 1st of June next (1812), to remove, or cause to be removed, "all the papers, records, books, and documents belonging to each House, as aforesaid, together with whatever furniture may be thought fit for removal."

From the above record it is ascertained that the government of the State was removed, in all its departments, in the year 1812, from Lancaster to Harrisburg, and that the first organization at the latter place was in December of that year.

The first sessions of the Legislature in Harrisburg were held in the old court-house building, the courts, as stated in the chapter devoted thereto, having vacated all the rooms therein excepting those occupied by the prothonotary and register for that purpose. The large room on the second story was occupied by the Senate, and the court-room proper by the House of Representatives. The State Library was in a room on the second floor. The remaining rooms were used by the transcribing clerks and the committees of the Legislature.

On Monday, the 31st of May, 1819, the cornerstone of the capitol was laid by Governor William Findlay; Stephen Hills, architect and contractor for the execution of the work; William Smith, stone-cutter; and Valentine Kergan and Samuel White, masons; in presence of the commissioners and a large concourse of citizens of Harrisburg, and was followed by three discharges from one of the public cannon. The Harrisburg band of music attended, and added much to the interest and satisfaction which all seemed to feel and enjoy, and, after the ceremonies of the occasion had been concluded, the commissioners, architect, stonecutters, masons, carpenters, and workmen, with a number of citizens, partook of a cold collation provided on the public ground by Mr. Rahm. The commissioners deposited in the stone copies of the following-mentioned documents:

- Charter of Charles II. to William Penn.
- Declaration of Independence.
- Constitution of Pennsylvania, 1776.
- Articles of Confederation and perpetual union between the several States.
- Copy of so much of an act of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, by which indemnity was made to the heirs of William Penn for their interest in Pennsylvania.
- Treaty of peace, and acknowledgment by Great Britain of the independence of the United States.
- Constitution of the United States, 1787.
- Constitution of Pennsylvania, 1790.
- Acts of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, by which the seat of government was removed from Philadelphia to Lancaster and Harrisburg, and the building of a State capitol at the latter place authorized.
- A list of the names of the commissioners, architects, stonecutter, and chief masons; likewise a list of the then officers of the government of Pennsylvania, embracing the Speakers of the two Houses of the Legislature, the Governor, the heads of departments, the judges of the Supreme Court, and attorney-general, with the names of the President and Vice-President of the United States.

The capitol was rapidly pushed forward to completion, and in December, 1821, was ready for occupancy. On Wednesday, the 2d of January, 1822, the Assembly took possession of the building.¹ The members of both branches of the Legislature met in the morning at ten o'clock at the old State-House (court-house), from whence they proceeded in procession to the capitol in the following order:

- The Architect and his Workmen, two and two.
- Clergy.
- Governor and Heads of Departments.
- Officers of the Senate.
- Speaker of the Senate.

¹ It may be interesting to know the expense of the State capitol and other buildings at that period erected:

By "an act to erect the State capitol, passed the 18th of March, 1816," there was appropriated.....	$50,000
By "a supplement to an act providing for the erection of a State capitol, approved the 27th of January, 1819," there was appropriated.....	70,000
With the provision that said capitol building should not cost more than.....	$120,000
By a further supplement, passed the 28th of March, 1820, for the purpose of constructing the columns and capitals thereof of hewn stone, and to cover the roof of the dome, etc., there was appropriated.....	16,000
Whole cost of capitol.....	$136,000

By the fourth section of a supplement to the act, approved the 27th January, 1819, the sums appropriated were directed to be paid to the builder and architect, as follows:

First payment.....	$50,000
Second payment.....	30,000
Third payment.....	30,000
Fourth payment.....	10,000
Making.....	$120,000

The fourth payment of $10,000, by Act of Assembly hereafter recited, was divided into two parts, for what reason is not stated; the first of $3000, and the last of $7000.

The entire cost of the public buildings and grounds up to January, 1819, was as follows:

Cost of executive offices northwest and southeast of capitol building.....	$93,000
Cost of capitol.....	136,000
Cost of arsenal.....	12,000
Public grounds, its inclosure and embellishment.....	38,000
Total.....	$279,000

- Members of the Senate, two and two.
- Officers of the House of Representatives.
- Speaker of the House of Representatives.
- Members, two and two.
- Judges.
- Civil Authorities of Harrisburg.
- Citizens.

In front of the capitol the architect and his workmen opened into two lines, and admitted the procession to pass between them and the capitol. The service was opened by an impressive prayer by Rev. Dr. Lochman, of Harrisburg, quite lengthy, and a brief discourse by Rev. D. Mason, of Dickinson College, who, after alluding to the aborigines who inhabited this locality, concluded his remarks by this reference to Harrisburg: "In the room of all these there has started up, in the course of a few years, a town respectable for the number of its inhabitants, for its progressive industry, for the seat of legislation in this powerful State. What remains to be accomplished of all our temporal wishes? What more have we to say? What more can be said, but go on and prosper, carry the spirit of your improvements through till the sound of the hammer, the whip of the wagoner, the busy hum of mau, the voices of innumerable children issuing from the places of instruction, the lofty spires of worship, till richly-endowed colleges of education, till all those arts which embellish man shall gladden the banks of the Susquehanna and the Delaware, and exact from admiring strangers that cheerful and grateful tribute, 'This is the work of a Pennsylvania Legislature.'"

CHAPTER VI.

Harrisburg in 1818—Visit of Gen. Lafayette—Reception at the Capitol—Extension of Borough Limits in 1838—The Harrison Nominating Convention—"American Notes."

In 1818, James Flint, of Edinburgh, Scotland, passed through Harrisburg. In his "Letters from America," published in 1822, we have the following notes:

"Sept. 21, 1818. The coach stopped at Elizabethtown last night for three hours, and started again before three o'clock. We were near Middletown (eight miles on our way) before the light disclosed to our eyes a pleasant and fertile country.

"It was near Middletown that we got the first peep of the river Susquehanna, which is here about a mile in breadth. The trees on the east bank confining the view to the right and left, produced an illusory effect almost impressing on the mind a lake instead of the river. The highly transparent state of the air, and the placid surface of the water united in producing a most distinct reflection of the bold banks on the opposite side, cliffs partially concealed by a luxuriant growth of trees sprung from the detritus below, and by smaller ones rooted in rifted rocks. Over these a rising background is laid out in cultivated fields. The eye is not soon tired of looking on a scene so richly furnished and so gay.

"Harrisburg, the seat of legislation of Pennsylvania, is a small town which stands on a low bottom by the river; a pleasant situation. Opposite to the town is a small island in the river connected with the eastern and western shores by very long wooden bridges. The waters of the Susquehanna are limpid but shallow at this place, and ill adapted to navigation, except in times of flood."

The years 1824 and 1825 are made memorable in the history of America by the visit of Gen. Lafayette, who had so greatly assisted in securing the independence of the United States. Everywhere he was received with great ovation and hailed with delight. Most of the general officers of the Revolution had passed away, but there were in every section of the country representatives of that gallant band of heroes who had achieved our liberty. Upon his arrival at Philadelphia, Governor Shulze, with the Dauphin Cavalry as an escort, went there to receive him and welcome him to Pennsylvania. While there the general promised to visit Harrisburg before his return to France.

On Sunday, the 30th of January, 1825, notice was received that Gen. Lafayette and suite were on their way to Harrisburg; whereupon Messrs. Hawkins and Baker, of the joint committee of the Legislature, and M. C. Rogers, Esq., Secretary of the Commonwealth, proceeded from town in carriages towards York, by the way of Middletown, for the purpose of meeting the general's party. Dinner was prepared for them at Middletown, and an outrider sent forward to ascertain if the general was upon that road. At about half-past ten, the general, accompanied by his son, George Washington Lafayette, and secretary, Gen. Spangler, Col. Spangler, and Dr. King, a committee deputed to escort him from York, were received at Middletown, and took dinner. At about five o'clock they arrived in Harrisburg, and were hailed by the expecting crowd with great enthusiasm. The general and suite were then escorted to the Governor's residence, in consequence of an invitation which had been forwarded to him for that purpose.

A committee from the Dauphin Cavalry waited on the general at the Governor's, and tendered a renewal of their respects paid to him in Philadelphia as the Governor's late escort to that city. He recognized them, and informed them it would give him great pleasure to see them all at his lodgings that evening. After which the members of the troop, who resided in town generally, with many other citizens, paid their respects to him, and were highly delighted.

He remained at the Governor's that night, and on the next morning he was waited upon by the legislative committee of arrangements, on behalf of whom Mr. Hawkins welcomed the general to the seat of government in a neat and feeling address, to which the general made a happy response.

The following reminiscence of that eventful day may be interesting to our readers: An open carriage was wanted to convey the illustrious visitor. To constitute a barouche an old carriage belonging to William Calder, Sr., was cut down, making it as open as desirable; and to get mettled horses a bay of Gabriel Hicster's, with one eye, and one of Mr. Calder's, without any eye, made the team,—just one eye to the pair. They were right good-looking, however, as they stood pawing the earth in front of Governor Shulze's residence on the river-bank, awaiting the distinguished guests for the parade. "It was a remarkable livery," says an eye-witness.

About eleven o'clock the general and his party were conducted to the Executive Chamber in the capitol, where the greater part of the members of the Legislature and many others were introduced to him. A little after ten o'clock the members of the Harrisburg bar waited upon him in a body, when George Fisher, Esq., on their behalf, made an appropriate address, to which the general replied. At two o'clock he returned to the Governor's residence, and at eight o'clock in the evening he visited Perseverance Lodge of Masons, and remained there about an hour.

On Tuesday, at twelve o'clock, he was conducted again to the capitol, escorted by a corps of dragoons, under the command of Maj. I. M. Forster, and companies of volunteers from the counties of Cumberland, Lebanon, and Dauphin, and the firemen of the borough. His arrival at the capitol was announced by a salute of thirteen guns, under the direction of Lieut. Weise, of Carlisle.

He was introduced to the Senate by Mr. Hawkins, and the Speaker, Mr. Marks, welcomed him by an eloquent address, to which the general made an appropriate reply. He was then invited to a seat at the Speaker's right hand, and presently afterwards the Senate adjourned. A number of gentlemen and ladies were then introduced to him.

At one o'clock he was introduced to the House of Representatives by Mr. Baker, when the Speaker, Gen. Sutherland, welcomed him by an eloquent address, commencing as follows:

"Dear General,—About half a century ago, one of the purest of the patriots of the Revolution, the venerable John Hancock, occupied the chair from which you have just risen."

To which the general returned an appropriate reply, commencing as follows:

"Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives,—Amidst the patriotic recollections which the sight of the Presidential chair of my venerable friend, John Hancock, could not fail to excite, and which have been described by you, Mr. Speaker, in a manner adequate to the sublime theme, it is hardly permitted to indulge private remembrances; yet, encouraged as I am by the kindness of this House in my behalf, I beg leave to acknowledge before you the emotions connected with the thought that from this chair also he signed my early admission as a soldier in the American army."

He was then invited to a seat at the Speaker's right hand, and presently afterwards the House adjourned. At two o'clock he was waited upon by the students of Dickinson College with an address, to which he replied. About three o'clock he returned, escorted as before, to the Governor's.

At four o'clock a subscription dinner was given to the general at Matthew Wilson's hotel at Third and Walnut, by a number of the members of the Legislature, at which his Excellency the Governor, the heads of department, Judge Gibson, George W. Lafayette, the committee from York, a few veterans of the Revolution, and a number of the residents of the borough were present. Mr. Speaker Marks presided. The most cordial hilarity prevailed on the occasion. At the particular request of the general, "Hail Columbia" was sung by himself and the whole company standing. After the cloth was removed, a number of patriotic toasts were given, among which were the following:

"Gen. Lafayette: Our fathers hailed him as a defender; we rejoice to welcome him as a guest."

The general rose, and after having expressed to the members of the Legislature the grateful sense he had of their kind welcome, gave the following toast:

"The State of Pennsylvania: First founded upon the basis of justice and philanthropy, now governed by universal suffrage on the unalloyed principle of equal rights; may it long preserve these dignified and fruitful blessings."

The Governor and Gen. Lafayette retired about eight o'clock, and the company presently afterwards broke up.

The students of the school at Shoop's Church, about three miles from the borough, sent a written patriotic address to the general, which was handed to him at his lodgings, to which the general replied a few days after by letter from Washington.

On Wednesday morning the volunteers were paraded in Market Square and reviewed by the general, supported by the Governor, after which they saluted him at his quarters. At eleven o'clock he took his departure for York, accompanied by his suite, two of the committee of arrangements of the Legislature, and the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

On the 16th of April, 1838, the General Assembly passed an act extending the borough limits. The seventeenth section of that act recites, "The north-western boundary line of the borough of Harrisburg shall be, and the same is hereby extended and enlarged as follows: Extending along the river line to the upper line of the land of the late William Mac-lay on said river; thence to Paxtang Creek; and thence along said creek to the northwestern corner of the present boundary," thus annexing that district north of South Street which went by the name of Maclaysburg (extending to now Herr Street), from the river to Paxtang Creek. The eighteenth section of the same act gave its inhabitants the privileges and subjected them to the same liabilities as if they had been originally included within the corporate limits of the old borough.

Harrisburg had the honor of having been selected for the holding of many State Conventions of the different political parties, but the number of national political conventions which met here is confined to one, that which resulted in the nomination for President and Vice-President of William Henry Harrison and John Tyler. In 1839 the body met in the then unconsecrated Lutheran Church on Fourth Street, and was composed of many of the prominent Whigs in the country. At that time Harrisburg was a borough of about four thousand inhabitants, and presented a very dull and ancient aspect as compared with its business and buildings now. Of the candidates nominated for President and Vice-President in this city, William Henry Harrison died within a month after assuming the duties of the chief magistracy of the nation.

In 1843, Charles Dickens, the English novelist, was at Harrisburg. He came thither by stage from Baltimore. From his "American Notes," which were published upon his return to England, we have the following relating to our city of Harrisburg, then a plain country town:

"We crossed this river [the Susquehanna] by a wooden bridge roofed and covered in on all sides, and nearly a mile in length. It was profoundly dark, perplexed with great beams crossing and recrossing it at every possible angle, and through the broad chinks and crevices in the floor the rapid river gleamed far down below, like a legion of eyes. We had no lamps, and as the horses stumbled and floundered through this place towards the distant speck of dying light it seemed interminable. I really could not at first persuade myself as we rumbled heavily on, filling the bridge with hollow noises, and I held down my head to save it from the rafters above, but that I was in a painful dream; for I have often dreamed of toiling through such places, and as often argued, even at the time, 'this cannot be reality.'

"At length, however, we emerged upon the streets of Harrisburg, whose feeble lights, reflected dimly from the wet ground, did not shine out upon a very cheerful city. We were soon established in a snug hotel, which, though smaller and far less splendid than many we put up at, is raised above them all in my remembrance by having for its landlord the most obliging, considerate, and gentlemanly person I ever had to deal with.

"As we were not to proceed upon our journey until the afternoon, I walked out after breakfast the next morning to look about me, and was duly shown a model prison on the solitary system, just erected, and as yet without an inmate; the trunk of an old tree, to which Harris, the first settler here (afterwards buried under it), was tied by hostile Indians, with his funeral pile about him, when he was saved by the timely appearance of a friendly party on the opposite shore of the river; the local Legislature (for there was another of those bodies here again, in full debate), and the other curiosities of the town.

"I was very much interested in looking over a number of treaties made from time to time with the poor Indians, signed by the different chiefs at the period of their ratification, and preserved in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. These signatures, traced, of course, by their own hands, are rough drawings of the creatures or weapons they were called after. Thus the Great Turtle makes a crooked pen-and-ink outline of a great turtle; the Buffalo sketches a buffalo; War Hatchet sets a rough image of that weapon for his mark; so with the Arrow, the Fish, the Scalp, the Big Canoe, and all of them.

"I could not but think, as I looked at the feeble and tremulous production of hands which could draw the longest arrow to the head in a stout elk-horn bow or split a bead or feather with a rifle-ball, of Crabbe's musings over the parish register, and the irregular scratches made with a pen by men who would plow a lengthy furrow straight from end to end. Nor could I help bestowing many sorrowful thoughts upon the simple warriors whose hands and hearts were set there in all truth and honesty, and who only learned in course of time from white men how to break their faith and quibble out of forms and bonds. I wondered, too, how many times the credulous Big Turtle or trusting Little Hatchet had put his mark to treaties which were falsely read to him, and had signed away he knew not what until it went, and cast him loose upon the new possessors of the land a savage indeed.

"Our host announced before our early dinner that some members of the legislative body proposed to do us the honor of calling. He had kindly yielded up to us his wife's own little parlor, and when I begged that he would show them in I saw him look with painful apprehension at its pretty carpet. Through being otherwise occupied at the time, the cause of his uneasiness did not occur to me. It certainly would have been more pleasant to all parties concerned, and would not, I think, have compromised their independence in any material degree, if some of these gentlemen had not only yielded to the prejudice in favor of spittoons, but had abandoned themselves for the moment even to the conventional absurdity of pocket-handkerchiefs."

That afternoon Dickens left in a canal-boat for Pittsburgh. His remarks about the Indian treaties is very funny reading, and only go to show how somebody must either have deceived him or his sentimentalism ran away with his better judgment.

CHAPTER VII.

Improving the Navigation of the Susquehanna—Steamboats thereon—Internal Improvement—Pack-Horse Teams and Conestoga Wagons—The Pennsylvania Canal—Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad—The Cumberland Valley—The Pennsylvania Railroad.

THE subject of internal improvements was one which early commanded the attention of the citizens of Pennsylvania, and one hundred years ago, as now, communication with the Western country was the great aim of the business men of Philadelphia. The first effort was the removal of obstructions in the various streams, and especially that of the Susquehanna River; and although a considerable amount of money was eventually spent in improving the navigation thereof, the result was far from satisfactory. Previous to the Revolution (1774), the attention of the Provincial Assembly was called to this matter, and as a preliminary it was proposed to lay out a town or city on that stream. John Harris, the founder of our city, immediately gave notice of his intention of laying out a town, which seemed to quiet the movement of undoubted land speculators. The Revolution coming on, such enterprises, if ever seriously considered, were abandoned.

As the settlements increased in the interior of the colony the Susquehanna River became an important avenue of transportation, at first by means of canoes, then by keel-bottom boats or "broad horns," as they were often called. Grains and other produce were the chief articles carried in those conveyances. Harris' Ferry and Middletown were noted marts for the storage and sale of grain at this period. In 1790 there were over one hundred and fifty thousand bushels of wheat brought down the Susquehanna and passed through Middletown for the Philadelphia market.

About the year 1794 or 1795 the first vessel in the shape of an ark, but of small dimensions, arrived at Harrisburg from Huntingdon on the Juniata. It passed the Conewago Falls in safety. About the same time that arks were introduced, the Conewago Canal, at York Haven, was commenced, and on its completion, in 1797 or 1798, keel-bottom boats were passed through, which caused a great portion of the trade in grain to be diverted from Harrisburg and Middletown to Columbia. But in a few years afterwards boats ventured beyond the Conewago Falls, and thus reached tide-water, when the grain trade was measurably diverted from both Middletown and Columbia, concentrating at Port Deposit.

Public attention was again directed to the navigation of the Susquehanna about 1795. The Legislature, however, appears to have taken no definite action in relation to the matter until March, 1823, at which time an act was passed for the improvement of the river from Northumberland to tide-water, and appointing Jabez Hyde, Jr., John McMeans, and Samuel L. Wilson, commissioners to superintend the work. These commissioners, in a report made to the Legislature, Jan. 14, 1828, state,—

"That the contracts entered into for the improvement of the navigation of the Susquehanna River, between the town of Columbia and tide, is nearly completed, and when the residue is finished, they believe all will be done that is necessary to perfect the descending navigation between said points. Crafts will then be able to descend from Columbia to the head of the Maryland Canal carrying from fifty to sixty tons, at a stage of water at which, previous to the improvements, they could not arrive at the latter place with more than one-half that quantity.

"The commissioners further report on the improvement of the river between the towns of Columbia and Northumberland that the unfinished contracts of the years 1825 and 1826 are completed, but will not be of that infinite advantage until further improvements are made to correspond with those already finished, the Legislature having suspended the appropriation for the past year."

The total amount of expenditures made by the commissioners for the improvement of the river from the town of Columbia to the town of Northumberland, up to Jan. 14, 1828, as stated in the report, was $1201.50, and that for improving the river between the town of Columbia and tide-water to the same period, $14,323.37, making the sum total of $15,524.87.

This action of the Legislature, together with the favorable report of the commissioners, induced a number of enterprising citizens of Baltimore to form a company for the purpose of testing the practicability of running steamboats on the Susquehanna between the towns of York Haven and Northumberland. The project was favorably received, and the stock of the company immediately subscribed. Three light-draught steamboats, named respectively the "Codorus," "Susquehanna," and "Pioneer," were constructed, all of which arrived for the first time at Harrisburg in the fall of 1825. The following extracts have reference to these boats:

"The sheet-iron steamboat 'Codorus' paid another visit to Harrisburg on Sunday last, with the members from York County as passengers. The members of the Legislature in general are much pleased with the performance of this boat, and express great satisfaction with the success of the experiment. From what we have heard we infer that there will be a Legislative enactment in favor of the enterprising proprietors."—Chronicle, Dec. 5, 1825.

"STEAMBOATS.—The steamboat 'Susquehanna' left this place on Monday last for York Haven.

"The 'Pioneer' returned to Harrisburg on Wednesday last. The machinery of the vessel is not of sufficient power to stem the current of Hunter's Falls.

"The 'Codorus' is lying at Montgomery's Ferry, about twenty miles above Harrisburg."—Ibid., April 3, 1825.

In a letter dated July 14, 1834, addressed to the Secretary of War, Lewis Cass, by Henry K. Strong, of Harrisburg, on behalf of the citizens of Harrisburg, relative to opening a steamboat communication between the Chesapeake Bay by way of the Susquehanna and the lakes, allusion is made to one of the above-named steamboats, perhaps the "Codorus," as follows:

"Eight years ago a sheet-iron steamboat, built at York, in this State, was put upon the river, about twelve miles below Harrisburg, and forty from tide-water, and was propelled by steam to the line separating the States of Pennsylvania and New York, nearly two-thirds of the whole distance from the Chesapeake Bay to the lakes. If this was not the first iron-clad steamboat ever constructed, it was the first that ever sailed upon American waters."

The editor of the Harrisburg Chronicle, Hugh Hamilton, appears to have been somewhat skeptical as to the practical use of these boats, as will be seen by the following extract from that paper:

"The people of Baltimore are in high spirits in consequence of the successful trip of the 'Susquehanna' up the North and West Branches to Danville and Milton. While we think great credit is due to the enterprise of the Baltimore Steamboat Company and congratulate them upon the result of the experiment, which has demonstrated that a steamboat can move against the rapids of the River Susquehanna, we remain skeptical as to the practical use of the boats which have visited us. The weight of an engine of sufficient power to propel the boats up the rapids produces such a draught as must prevent their running unless the water should be at a high stage, and such a stage we have not more than three months of the year,—March, April, and May."

The steamboats continued to visit the borough at short intervals during the continuance of a medium stage of water in the river, until after April, 1826, when one of them, the "Susquehanna," exploded its boiler while making its way through a narrow passage of shoal water in the river at or near Berwick, Columbia Co., which almost totally destroyed it, beside killing two and severely injuring several of its passengers, among whom was Christian Brobst, member of the Legislature from Columbia County. This accident appears to have dampened the ardor of the proprietors, and shortly afterwards the boats were removed from the river to a more favorable latitude.

The steamboat enterprise was not again renewed on the Susquehanna in this vicinity until the spring of 1857, when a company of citizens purchased and brought here a small side-wheel steamboat that had formerly been used as a pleasure-boat on the river Delaware at Philadelphia. The boat made frequent excursions on the river during the summer following, but the speculation proving a failure, the stockholders resold it to its original owners, and in the fall of the year it was returned to Philadelphia.

In this connection we cannot omit the following reference to a correspondence between the citizens of Harrisburg and the War Department on the subject of sloop and steamboat navigation:

On the 20th of September, 1833, a large and respectable meeting of the citizens of Harrisburg was held at the court-house in Harrisburg, to take into consideration the propriety of opening a steamboat and sloop communication between the Chesapeake Bay and the lakes, by way of the Susquehanna River.

The following were the officers of the meeting: Valentine Hummel, Sr., president; Joel Bailey and Henry Buehler, vice-presidents; Charles C. Hawn and Mordecai McKinney, secretaries.

At this meeting resolutions were passed declaring the project national in its character and advantages, and necessary for national defense. A general committee was appointed, from which select committees were chosen to draft an address to the people of the United States; to draft a memorial to Congress, and to address the Secretary of War.

On the 17th of October following, Henry Buehler, Esq., from the select committee, published an address to the people of the United States.

At the same time, G. W. Harris, Esq., from the select committee, reported a memorial to Congress, which was published, circulated, and signed by a large number of citizens in various parts of the country, and sent to that body at its next session. A bill favorable to the project, and making a specific appropriation for a survey, was reported by the Internal Improvement Committee in the House of Representatives, but at so late a period in the session that it was not acted upon.

On the 25th of July, 1834, Henry K. Strong, Esq., from the select committee, transmitted an able and convincing address to Hon. Lewis Cass, then Secretary of War, in which, after showing the advantages of a sloop and steamboat communication between the Chesapeake Bay and the Lakes, by way of the Susquehanna, he inquired, "whether a survey of the route could not be made by an engineer in the service of the government during the present summer?"

In reply, John J. Abert, Lieut.-Col. Topographical Engineers, stated that "the department was fully impressed with the importance of the route described, but the condition and engagements of the office were such that it was not in its power to attend to the project during the present season."

A few days after the receipt of this intelligence, Mr. Strong again addressed the Secretary of War, repeating a request for the services of an engineer to survey the river; to which Col. Abert, on behalf of the Secretary of War, again replied, stating that "Dr. William Howard, with two assistants, are the engineers whose services would be placed at the disposal of the parties interested in the matter."

At a meeting of the general committee of the citizens of Harrisburg, held Aug. 16, 1834, the following officers were chosen: Valentine Hummel, president; Mordecai McKinney, secretary; Henry Walters, treasurer. A communication was received from Dr. William Howard, United States engineer, estimating the expense, and making several suggestions relative to the proposed improvement, and stating that "by his orders he was entirely under the direction of the committee, and ready to execute any plan of operations which they might determine."

The following gentlemen were then chosen an executive committee: Henry K. Strong, George Mish, Valentine Hummel, Sr., Jacob M. Haldeman, John C. Bucher.

The report of Dr. Howard was referred to the executive committee, with instructions to devise a plan of operation for the survey. The project was ultimately abandoned in consequence, we believe, of the death of Dr. Howard, and the refusal of Congress to extend pecuniary co-operation.

There are many facts connected with the history of internal improvements in this locality which it will be impossible within our prescribed limits to do little more than briefly refer to, and we shall present them as they occur to us in this connection. Very few persons have any idea of the difficulties of transportation prior to the era of canals and railroads. Eighty-five or ninety years ago it was not an uncommon sight to see as many as five hundred pack-horses passing the ferry here westward, loaded with merchandise, salt, iron, etc. The iron was carried on horseback, being crooked over and around their bodies; barrels or kegs were hung on each side of these. The pack-horses were generally led in divisions of twelve or fifteen horses, carrying about two hundred weight each, going single file, and managed by two men, one going before as the leader, and the other in the rear, to see after the safety of the packs. Where the bridle road passed along declivities or over hills, the path was in some places washed out so deep that the packs or burdens came in contact with the ground or other impeding obstacles, and were frequently displaced. However, as the carriers usually traveled in companies, the packs were soon adjusted, and no great delay occasioned. The pack-horses were generally furnished with bells, which were kept from ringing during the day drive, but were loose at night, when the horses were set free, and permitted to feed and browse. The bells were intended as guides to direct to their whereabouts in the morning. When the wagons were first introduced, the carriers considered that mode of transportation an invasion of their rights. Their indignation was more excited, and they manifested greater rancor than did the regular teamsters when the line of packets or railroad cars came into use about forty years afterwards.

Fifty years ago the currency was eleven-penny-bits, fippenny-bits, and shillings,—eight shillings one dollar. Eight yards of calico at a shilling a yard was one dollar. Goods were marked in this way and groceries sold in the same way. As a general thing families bought articles at the store just as they wanted to use them,—one-quarter of a pound of tea, two or three pounds of coffee, or five of sugar, and when more was wanted some youngster of the family was off to the store. Some accounts ran six months, and the merchant made all his purchases twice a year on six months' credit. The goods were purchased at Philadelphia or Baltimore, and were brought from thence in large covered wagons, called Conestoga teams, drawn by six horses, sometimes one horse before the other, and all wearing bells upon the collar. These large wagons held from four to five tons of goods. They were built for regular transportation wagons on the great turnpikes of the day. In those early years turnpikes were not the miserable apologies for roads which grand jury after grand jury report as nuisances, and all in vain, but they were well graded, rounded from the centre to gutters on each side, with all the necessary crossings for water, and most thoroughly macadamized. On these roads no wagon regularly engaged in carrying goods was allowed with tire on the wheels less than four inches in width. All along the great highways, at distances of ten and twelve miles, were public-houses,—large two-story frame buildings,—and here the teamsters would stop to feed and water their horses. They carried a long feed-box with them. This was placed lengthwise of the tongue and the horses placed on either side. These were the kind of wagons in which goods were hauled from the cities alluded to,—westward, to Harrisburg and farther on. What is now Harris Park was constantly filled with these teams, awaiting their turn to ford or to be ferried over the river.

The business activity of the people sought out new channels; roads were made, attempts at slack-water navigation ventured on, until finally the Pennsylvania Canal, from Columbia to Pittsburgh, opened up an avenue to trade, and brought prosperity to all the towns on its route. On none had it better effect than Middletown and Harrisburg, and the former place at one period was destined to retain a supremacy in population, enterprise, wealth, and influence. It was a great lumber mart; the Union Canal and its admirable location always made it a rival to the capital city.

Pennsylvania, as heretofore observed, embarked in the work of constructing her public improvements in the year 1822, when an act was passed authorizing the construction of the Pennsylvania Canal at the expense of the State. In 1827 the canal commissioners were authorized to make examination for a railroad to connect sections of the canal already partially connected. In 1828 they were directed to locate and put under contract a railroad from Philadelphia through Lancaster to Columbia. Millions of dollars were spent on the canal and railroad improvements, the expenditure being made necessary by the completion of the Erie Canal, which was taking the commerce of Philadelphia to New York. In 1832 portions of the Columbia Railroad were completed and cars were run upon it. In 1834 the entire line, partly canal and partly railroad, between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh was opened to trade and travel. It consisted of the railroad from Philadelphia to Columbia, eighty-two miles; the eastern division of the canal, from Columbia to Hollidaysburg, one hundred and seventy-two miles; the Portage Railroad, from Hollidaysburg to Johnstown, thirty-six miles, and the western division of the canal, from the latter place to Pittsburgh, a distance of one hundred and four miles, making an aggregate length of three hundred and ninety-four miles. Horse-cars were for several years run over the Columbia road, occupying nine hours in traveling eighty-two miles. About 1836 locomotives were regularly put at work on the road to the exclusion of horse-power. The cost of the line to the State was nearly fourteen and a half million dollars.

When the Harrisburg and Lancaster road was being located in 1835, much opposition was manifested by the farmers on surveying the road at having their farms "cut up" or divided. The road, however, was partially completed at different points during the following year. In August, 1836, it was finished as far as Middletown, terminating here at Paxtang Street. As cars were soon needed, Messrs. William Calder, Sr., & Co. had a car built by Eben Miltimore at his coach-shop, then located on the corner of Chestnut Street and River Alley. The car was a plain, open, four-wheel car, similar, though smaller, to the present excursion cars of the street railroad now used. When finished it was taken down to the railroad, and a trial trip was made two or three miles down the road with two horses attached to it by a short tow-line, as the track between the rails could not be used for horses. In September, 1836, a locomotive engine was brought from the State road (which had been previously constructed) from Columbia on a flat in the canal and landed at Middletown, from whence it was run to Harrisburg; and during the time, Saturday and Sunday, excursions were had to Middletown and back about every two hours with the car built by Mr. Miltimore. The small car was always crowded. Governor Ritner, the heads of the State department, and prominent citizens were first treated to a ride. This locomotive was made in England, and was one of the first placed on the State road. It was called the "John Bull," and would be a diminutive novelty now. It was a small, black affair with two driving-wheels, the piston connected inside of the wheel. The first locomotives put on the Harrisburg and Lancaster road were built by Matthew Baldwin, of Philadelphia, and were named after the three or four principal towns along the road. They had but two driving-wheels, with the crank and piston inside; and were used for both freight and passengers.

The next engines purchased were two built by Messrs. Norris & Sons, of Philadelphia, and were used for hauling freight trains. They were named Henry Clay and David R. Porter, were heavier and lower than the first ones, having but two driving-wheels, with the piston connected to the driving-wheels on the outside, as they are now constructed.

The road was not fully completed until some time in 1838, owing to the slow work on the tunnel near Elizabethtown. During its construction the passengers were conveyed around in stage-coaches. The Cumberland Valley Railroad was completed about the year 1837, except the erection of the bridge over the river. The first locomotives for that road were brought from Columbia on the canal, and landed on the wharf at Second and Vine Streets, from thence hauled over the Market Street bridge by six farm-horses. Bells were first used on the locomotives; the first brought here for the Cumberland Valley Railroad had whistles.

Several abortive attempts were made towards the construction of a through railroad from the Ohio to the Delaware, but it was not until 1846 that the project assumed tangible shape by the incorporation of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The charter was granted on Feb. 25, 1847, and the law granting to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the right of way to Pittsburgh was abrogated in August following. Mr. J. Edgar Thomson prosecuted the work of building the road from Harrisburg to Pittsburgh with energy.

On Sept. 1, 1849, the first division, from Harrisburg to Lewistown, a distance of sixty-one miles, was opened to travel. A year later the line was opened to the Mountain House, one mile east of Hollidaysburg, and on the 10th of December, 1852, cars were run through from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, connections between the eastern and western divisions being formed by the use of the Portage (State) road over the mountains. The Pennsylvania Company's road over the mountains was opened early in 1854. In 1857, after a long discussion, a law for the sale of the State works was passed, and the Pennsylvania Railroad became the purchaser of the main line, and was thereby released from the payment of tonnage, freight, and certain other specified taxes. The section of the law releasing the company from the payment of taxes was decided by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, and in 1861 an act was passed "for the commutation of the tonnage tax."

During the years immediately following the completion of the road it was greatly improved, the tracks doubled, other lines leased or bought, depots and extensions built, and more recently almost the entire line has been relaid with steel rails, the line straightened and regraded. During the war the Pennsylvania Railroad was largely used for the transportation of troops and supplies, and its president, Col. Scott, was charged by the government with the special duty of furnishing transportation for large bodies of troops and immense quantities of army supplies.

Twenty-five years ago the Pennsylvania Railroad was but a link between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, extending from Harrisburg to the latter city; now it has its eastern termini at New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, and unites them by its own direct lines with Pittsburgh, Erie, Cleveland, Toledo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville, and St. Louis.

The railroads which centre at Harrisburg or pass through are as follows:

Cumberland Valley, connecting southward with the Valley of Virginia.

Pennsylvania, connecting the mighty West with the Atlantic seaboard.

Northern Central, to Washington City southward, Sunbury and Erie north and west.

Lebanon Valley, connecting with the numerous ramifications of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad.

Dauphin and Susquehanna, to Dauphin, through Stony Creek Valley to the anthracite coal regions.

Steeleton Branch of the Philadelphia and Reading.

Several railroads are projected, two great trunk lines, which will largely add to the growth and prosperity of Harrisburg. The great southern line from Boston and Poughkeepsie through Harrisburg to the South and the Vanderbilt road promise advantages and facilities unsurpassed by any city in the Union.

CHAPTER VIII.

Prosperity of Harrisburg—Additions—Incorporated as a City—Visit of the Prince of Wales—The War for the Union—The Railroad Riots of 1877.

THE completion of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the absolute necessity for erecting a round-house and repair buildings at the then end of the road added a new impetus to the growth of the borough. The enterprise of one individual alone is so deserving of honorable mention in this record that historic accuracy demands it.

In 1857, William K. Verbeke purchased in the borough of Harrisburg the block of ground fronting on Short and South Streets, and extending from Young's Alley to Curtis' Alley (now Angle Avenue), upon which were erected some twenty or thirty huts, principally occupied by colored people. This ground Mr. Verbeke wished to lay out in building lots, and in order not to distress those persons who had their homes upon the leased ground, he bought of Messrs. Miller and Fernley ten acres of land in Susquehanna township, situated some distance above the borough line, on the west side of the "State-House Lane," adjoining property of Dr. Reily on the north, Mrs. William Reily on the west, and of Robert Gillmor on the south, and offered to sell them lots and remove their buildings thereto upon the payment of a dollar a week, as many were laborers or at service, which sum they could conveniently pay out of their wages, and thus become owners of the property. To this proposition they all gladly consented, and when the frail buildings were being pulled down, and being asked what they were doing, would reply, "We are going to put up our houses in Verbeketown." This was the way Verbeketown first obtained a "local habitation and a name." Independently of this Mr. Verbeke saw there was great need in Harrisburg of cheap lots for the moderately circumstanced, the laborer and mechanic, and he therefore laid out the lots small, and put the price very low, as an inducement to buy and locate. He also set to work to improve the locality, as the land was wet and boggy, a water-course passing through the centre of it, and at times when a heavy rain set in the whole place was entirely covered with water. In old times this was the usual condition of things, and it received the name of "Lake Harry," where some of our oldest inhabitants were accustomed to go to shoot ducks. It became necessary therefore to have the ditch newly dug, which was done, extending the sewer at North Street.

The streets laid out were filled up with gravel and cinders nicely graded to afford facilities for ingress and egress. A cinder walk was laid from North Street to the ground. While this was being done many persons were buying lots and paying their dollar installment, and in less than a month one hundred and twenty were disposed of. To induce people to locate Mr. Verbeke had two good houses erected, one on William Street and the other on Fulton Street, which he sold to persons without any means, never expecting they would ever be able to pay for them, so as to get them inhabited, and upon the same terms of one dollar a week. Two wells were dug, one on William Street and one on Susquehanna Street, the water of the former running over the top and forming a moderately-sized rivulet, which continued running for several years in consequence of the swampy condition of the ground in that neighborhood. To facilitate building up the place Mr. Verbeke bought a number of rafts at the river, and commenced the erection of rough houses for those who desired it. In this way, perhaps, a hundred small houses sprung up as if by magic. But as the frogs piped by night, an abundance of water-privileges had, and it was the poor who took up their abode there, the people of the borough derisively spoke of it as "Warbecktown," though through the great improvements which have taken place since that locality is looked upon as a marvel of prosperity and energy. This land cost two hundred and sixty dollars per acre, and in consequence of these rapid improvements ten acres of land in the immediate vicinity, owned by Nicholas Reamshart, in the month of July sold for one thousand dollars per acre. About the same time Mr. Verbeke bought three acres of Jacob Shaffner for three hundred and thirty-three dollars per acre, which was laid out to conform to the other, making the same improvements upon it, and selling upon the same terms.

The plan of Mr. Verbeke being so successful, in April, 1858, he purchased the adjoining farm of twenty acres of Robert Gillmor, at six hundred dollars per acre. This land was very unfavorable for building purposes. The eastern portion was low and wet, and the western part was full of hills and depressions. Mr. Verbeke considered that if the streets and alleys were graded the lots would sell at once, and if laid out larger interest could be charged, which would be a full return for the expenditure of grading. The sum expended in grading the land bought of Mr. Gillmor, which extended from Fulton to Front Streets, and from Sayford Alley to the lower line of Charles and Hay Alleys, was four thousand dollars. Verbeke Street, or, as it is erroneously called, Broad Street, runs through the middle of this piece of land. The proprietor, in order to favor the people buying of him, erected a two-story frame school-house at the corner of William and Verbeke Streets, thirty feet square, which was supplied with teachers by the township school directors; reserved a large plot of ground, fifty by eight hundred feet, in the centre of Verbeke Street, from Third to Fulton, for a market-house, and donated lots to the Methodist and Church of God congregations for churches and parsonage. This piece of land was also being rapidly disposed of, and purchasers selling again obtained large profits. As an instance of this, three lots at the corner of Third and Verbeke Streets were sold originally for six hundred and seventy-five dollars, resold for two thousand five hundred dollars, afterwards divided into smaller pieces, and brought ten thousand dollars. A few years later Mr. Verbeke added several acres, from Susquehanna to Front and adjoining the Gillmor tract, which he purchased of John Shannon at fifteen hundred dollars per acre. All the land was divided into five hundred lots, and the total expenditure of grading the streets was seven thousand dollars.

In the beginning of the year of 1857 there was not a house in what was called "Verbeketown," and hardly half a dozen in what is now the Sixth Ward, while at the present time Verbeketown is compactly and in most parts well built up, while the ward has nearly, if not quite, seven thousand inhabitants, with two election precincts, and a voting population of fifteen hundred. Thus it will be seen what enterprise, and the small inducements held out to the people for a given purpose, will produce.

In the year 1860 Harrisburg received its highest corporate honors,—that of a city. The boundaries were extended in all directions, commissioners were appointed from the most reputable and staid citizens of the borough to lay out streets and avenues and set the municipal machinery in motion. Although at the time arousing much opposition, yet its subsequent growth and prosperity have fully realized the fondest expectations of its earnest advocates. In population it ranks the sixth in the State, and in manufacturing interests it is the third, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia alone exceeding it, while in the Union it ranks high among the inland cities. The chief municipal officers from the period of its incorporation until the present year are as follows:

MAYORS.

William H. Kepner, April 20, 1860-March 27, 1863.
A. L. Roumfort, March 27, 1863-March 23, 1866.
Oliver Edwards, March 23, 1866-Jan. 11, 1869.
W. W. Hays, Jan. 11, 1869-March, 1870 (died in office).
George B. Cole, April 4, 1870-Jan. 9, 1871.
William K. Verbeke, Jan. 9, 1871-Jan. 13, 1873.
J. D. Boss, Jan. 13, 1873-Jan. 11, 1875.
John D. Patterson, Jan. 11, 1875-Jan. 8, 1881 (resigned).
John C. Herman, Jan. 8, 1881-April 2, 1883.
Simon Cameron Wilson, April 2, 1883, to serve two years.

CITY TREASURERS.

Alexander W. Watson, April 20, 1860-March 28, 1862.
John T. Wilson, March 28, 1862-March 27, 1868.
George F. Weaver, Sr., March 27, 1868-Jan. 13, 1873.
Grafton Fox, Jan. 13, 1873-Jan. 11, 1875.
David S. Herr, Jan. 11, 1875-April 2, 1877.
William Sheesley, April 2, 1877-April 4, 1881.
Leonard H. Kinnard, April 4, 1881-April 2, 1883 (re-elected to serve for two years from April 2, 1883).

PRESIDENTS OF COMMON COUNCIL.

Daniel W. Gross, April 20, 1860-March 28, 1862.
William O. Hickok, March 28, 1862-March 27, 1868.

The year 1860 is especially noted for the visit of the Prince of Wales to America and to the new city of Harrisburg. He was formally received by his honor, Mayor Kepner, and at the capitol was invited to a seat in the Hancock chair, introduced to the citizens by Gen. Cameron, and welcomed to the State by Governor Packer. Among the distinguished visitors to the city, he was the first scion of royalty since the days of Teedyuscung, king of the Delawares, who had honored this locality with his presence.

In the general history of the county we have dwelt only fully upon the great civil war, and in this place can only casually allude to it. The location of the first and greatest military camp in the Northern States was adjoining the limits of Harrisburg, named, by Gens. Knipe and Williams, in honor of the chief magistrate of Pennsylvania, Camp Curtin, which with being the central point of communication, especially with the oft-beleaguered Federal capital, made it a prominent rendezvous. The citizens of the city were equal to any emergency, and the community fed gratuitously twenty thousand returned three months' soldiers for several days, the proper authorities failing in their duty. Hospitals were established, and, although in charge of the government, the ladies of the State capital never wearied in well-doing, caring kindly for the sick and wounded.

From the commencement of the war the charity of the citizens was unbounded and without stint, the doors of hospitality freely opened, and to our honor be it said two citizens, Messrs. John B. Simon and Eby Byers, established the Soldiers' Rest, where the sick and wounded patriot on his way homeward found rest and refreshment and gentle care. Thousands were kindly ministered to, and until the "boys came marching home" the good work went on unabated. In every cemetery and graveyard within the borders of Dauphin County lie the remains of her brave and true sons, while in the cemetery at Harrisburg the grass grows green over the graves of Union and Confederate soldiers from far-off States. In all the struggles for life, for liberty, for right, and for the Union Harrisburg was never behind. But these dark days of our country have passed like "a dream that has been told." May the lesson taught be heeded by those who come after us,—that the Union of States is not a rope of sand which may be broken at the will of any section.

On the 19th of July, 1877, while the Governor and commander-in-chief of the forces of Pennsylvania was on his way to visit the Pacific coast, a general strike was inaugurated by the employés of nearly all the railroads in the United States. In many portions of the commonwealth the municipal and county authorities failed to restore traffic, and for several days the rioters, for such many proved to be, had control of affairs. The burning of the round-house, depot, and cars at Pittsburgh, with the attack of a reckless and infuriated mob upon the soldiery at that exhausted, at once took measures to preserve peace and restore order. A proclamation was issued calling upon the law-abiding citizens to aid him in the faithful discharge of his duty. The city was placed under military rule, and the sheriff summoned all reputable citizens for the support of "law and order."

In the afternoon quite a number of Philadelphia soldiers, who had reached Fairview on the west side of the Susquehanna, surrendered their arms to a handful of the rioters, who, with increasing numbers, brought the former to the city, marching them through Market Street to the depot. It was a pitiable sight, and only proved what was in store, had not the prompt measures of Col. Jennings checked this ebullition of outlawry.

On Monday night the rioters, several hundred in place, gave cause for great uneasiness and alarm. Travel was suspended on all the railroads centering at Harrisburg.

Sunday, the 22d, was one of great suspense. The authorities, however, were quietly preparing for the emergency. That evening, one by one, the City Grays found their way to the arsenal, which had been defenseless. On Monday the Mexican trophy cannon were duly spiked, but the mob increased by tramps showed signs of disquiet, and affairs were assuming such a situation that became suddenly alarming. The sheriff, Col. Jennings, returned to Harrisburg on Monday afternoon and found the city in the power of the mob, the proclamation of the mayor of the day previous availing little. The sheriff met the committee of citizens, and when Mayor Patterson informed him that his power to quiet affairs had been number, began breaking into the stores, ostensibly for guns, but in reality for pillage. At this juncture the sheriff gathered the citizens, and placing himself at their head came upon the mob, who soon dispersed, while upwards of thirty were arrested and placed in prison. On Tuesday evening twelve hundred of the citizens organized into "law and order" companies, paraded through the city, and from that time, during the emergency, the citizens patrolled the city, preserving order without calling to their assistance the military. Governor Hartranft, in the subsequent message to the Assembly, highly complimented the example of the officers and citizens of the capital city.

In the mean time the military gathered for the defense of the different railroads so as to insure peace and restore traffic, and when this was accomplished the citizen-soldiery returned to their homes.

CHAPTER IX.

WATER SUPPLY.

Early Efforts to Supply the Town with Water—The Water-Works of 1840—Shinplasters—The New Water-Works.

EFFORTS to supply the town of Harrisburg with water were made at a very early period in its history. Reference has been made to the proposition for converting Paxtang Creek into a canal by diverting it from its course, and augmenting its supply of water from the Susquehanna by means of a wing-dam north of the present residence of Judge Hiester. This was for manufacturing purposes primarily. Legislative aid and approval failed, and the project was abandoned.

About the year 1800 several trial surveys were made of the supply of water obtainable from some of the springs on the high ground east of Paxtang Creek, and below South Street. Nothing came of it, except that Pott's tannery obtained, by a wooden service pipe and very primitive basin, a supply for its uses. That was on the line of the present Philadelphia and Reading Railroad on Paxtang Street. It is impossible to state at whose expense these surveys were made, but we have always understood that John A. Hanna, Stacy Potts, Adam Boyd, Joshua Elder, Robert Harris, and Moses Gillmor had much to do with this examination.

In 1818, '19, '20, Thomas Elder, Hugh Hamilton, Joseph Wallace, John Forster, Robert Harris, James R. Boyd, Jackson Watson, Abraham Bombaugh, George Beatty, Samuel Holman, John Fager, and John Roberts, determined upon and made survey for a water-supply for the town of Harrisburg, having then a population of three thousand, a highly cultivated community, "very poor in purse so soon after the war."

The design was to confine the springs on the lands of Dr. Wiestling and Mr. Bombaugh, near the present new basin and on the line of Market Street, in a dam at the junction of Market and Thirteenth Streets. Also to utilize the springs on Messrs. Hielman's and Berryhill's lands, west and south, in a dam on Mr. Hamilton's land, east of the present Paxtang tannery, both points quite one hundred feet above the low water of the Susquehanna River. The water thus gathered was to be conducted in wooden pipes to the town and supplied by gravitation. It was expected that this project would cost thirty-three thousand dollars, and afford two hundred thousand gallons a day. The municipality had no authority to aid the enterprise, the community was too poor to carry it out, so the whole came to be abandoned.

About this time the borough had incurred a debt of nearly two thousand dollars. Some of the members of the Council—four of nine—proposed and urged a sale of the reservation on the west side of Front Street. Capt. Alexander Graydon had showed the burgesses, Stacy Potts and Andrew Mitchel, as well as the public, in a newspaper discussion twenty years before, that this land could not be used for any purpose, except as a pleasure-ground, if any regard was had to the bequest of John Harris, the founder. Most of the lawyers of that day agreed with Graydon. In its necessity the Councils after 1809 rented "the bank" for lumber-yards, in defiance of all contrary opinions. In a few years this violation of the grant of Harris produced a second,—the proposition to dispose of the whole of it from Paxtang to South Streets in town lots. Fortunately, the intelligence and sense of right in the community was aroused. It made its influence felt, and, after a brief struggle, effectually defeated this scheme to aid an empty treasury. The present generation enjoy in this particular the foresight of the founder and the good taste of our early citizens in the preservation of this delightful reservation.

The subject of water-supply was, however, kept alive by its friends, and that seems to have been the whole community. The newspapers occasionally alluded to it, notably the Chronicle. That paper of the 5th of August, 1822, gave its support vigorously to any plan of supply, stating that "the introduction of a constant, a plentiful supply of fresh water into the town from the Susquehanna, or from the springs in the neighborhood, if such there are, of sufficient volume and elevation, is a subject that has been agitated for several years past. All admit the necessity for and are convinced of the utility of this thing."

The article further sets forth the great convenience arising from the then recent introduction of water into Philadelphia, and urged the formation of a Harrisburg company with power to introduce water. This was a year previous to the passage of the first act of Assembly on the subject. That embraced a plan both brilliant and practical, nothing less than a canal sixty feet wide, six feet in depth, and nine miles long.

In March, 1823, an act of the Legislature was passed incorporating a company "to supply the borough of Harrisburg with water, and to insure against fire." The incorporators were John Zinn, John Forster, Jacob M. Haldeman, Obed Fahnestock, John Capp, Samuel Pool, Peter Keller, Robert Harris, John B. Cox, Abraham Oves, Christian Gleim, John S. Wiestling, William LeBarron, Jacob Bucher, John Gingerich; shares twenty dollars, two dollars to be paid at subscription. It was not until December, 1825, that the necessary amount of money was subscribed to set the company going. An election was then held by the subscribers. John Forster, cashier of the Harrisburg Bank, was chosen president, Dr. Thomas Whiteside treasurer, John Roberts secretary. Directors, John Zinn, tanner; John S. Wiestling, printer; Christian Gleim, printer and sheriff of the county; Samuel Pool, carpenter; John Ritchey, farmer, of Lower Paxtang; Benjamin Kugler, M.D., of Philadelphia; Abraham Bombaugh, farmer; Valentine Hummel, saddler. Laomi Baldwin, C.E., of Boston, was chosen engineer. John Davis, Esq., made the preliminary survey. The fall from the mouth of Stony Creek at Green's mill (Dauphin) to the Market Street bridge across Paxtang was found to be twelve feet fifty-nine one-hundredths, which it was decided would afford the requisite supply.

The company was engaged in preparations to carry out its project, when the then canal commissioners determined to locate the proposed eastern division of the Pennsylvania Canal over exactly the same ground chosen by Mr. Baldwin for the water line of the Harrisburg Company. The State had the right and used it, thus dismissing the company without damages for the considerable expense its corporators had incurred in surveying its line. It was a most indefensible exercise of power on the part of the commonwealth. The company took the case to the courts. Whilst the question was pending, discussions were lively and heated, both at stormy town-meetings and places of public resort. At last in May, 1827, the Supreme Court decided against the company, and the State proceeded to construct the canal as it is seen to-day. The company dissolved, and the corporators lost most of their two dollars a share.

In February, 1833, a new act was passed having as corporators John Forster, Jacob M. Haldeman, Robert Harris, William Graydon, Hugh Hamilton, George Geiger, Frederick Kelker, John M. Forster, Abraham Bombaugh, Francis R. Shunk, Henry Buehler, James Lesley, Luther Reily, Joseph B. Henzey, and Isaac Updegraff. The charter allowed the company to take water from the river, "without a dam, at Brushy Rock," thence "to Pine Street," where works were to be constructed to force the accumulated fluid to "a point on the uninclosed public ground, having careful regard to the safety of the arsenal." The basin was to have been where the present Mexican monument now stands. The cost was estimated at one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. This project was never very popular, and after much controversy the company dissolved.

The project, however, which resulted in the successful introduction of Susquehanna water into the borough of Harrisburg originated with Wm. Ayres, a distinguished member of the Harrisburg bar. Having been elected a member of the Borough Council in January, 1839, he applied himself to the work forthwith, and on March 28th following he secured from the Legislature the passage of an act to supply the borough of Harrisburg with water. In compliance with this act, the Town Council on the 20th of April appointed the following members a committee to carry out the provisions thereof, viz.: William Ayres (chairman), Samuel Pool, Jacob Seiler, John Knepley, Michael Burke, George Beatty, and Christian F. Haehnen.

But the names of the two latter gentlemen do not appear in subsequent proceedings, and George S. Kemble and Henry Beader were added to this water-works committee.

The scheme as first proposed did not include any special plan or defined ideas. Everybody could see that there was plenty of water in the river and plenty of land for a "basin," but the manner in which to accomplish the work was yet to be reduced to a practicable conclusion.

The committee was, however, empowered to employ a competent engineer, and with his assistance "ascertain what head and fall can be had in the Susquehanna River from the head of 'Miller's Ripples' to the foot of the borough, specifying the same at the several points along the contemplated line, both with and without a dam." They were also to inquire into the expediency of using water-power or steam, the construction of the necessary "basin" (reservoir), the cost of water-pipes and laying them in the streets, together with all other information necessary to complete the works, special reference being had to "expense, utility, and practicability, and their probable revenue."

The twin conflagrations of the previous year, which had destroyed two blocks of valuable property, including the Lutheran Church, on opposite corners at Fourth and Market Streets, were still fresh in memory, and the water-works committee, imbued with the faith and indomitable energy of its chairman, proceeded during the summer of 1839 to examine the ground and draw such conclusions as made the result practicable and only a matter of time. In this they were assisted by the engineering talent of the town, chiefly by Col. John Roberts, who made the survey and plot of the reservoir grounds, and by the spring of 1840 their plans were quite definite and awaited confirmation and acceptance by the Council.

Edward F. Gay, of Philadelphia, an engineer of considerable reputation at that time, was engaged to make a formal test of these preliminary measures, which he did by actual survey, and made a favorable report thereon.

The general plan was now matured, and Messrs. Ayres and Pool were delegated by Council to negotiate for the necessary land upon which to locate the reservoir. The site deemed most eligible was on the heights of the ridge between the river and canal, at the intersection of North and High (now Fourth) Streets, which was the most elevated spot practicable, the top of the proposed reservoir to be ninety-two feet above low-water mark at the (Market Street) bridge, and ninety-one feet above the noted low water of 1803, marked on Maclay's Rock. As it was also intended to bring the feeding main pipes up North Street from a water-house to be located at its intersection with the river, the locality aforesaid was clearly the proper one. After many interviews, disputes, arbitrations, and suits the required amount of land was ultimately secured for the reservoir, with its adjoining streets, eight acres and ten perches, at a total cost of four thousand four hundred and thirty-seven dollars and thirty-four cents.

It was solely through the instrumentality of William Ayres that the money was secured to construct the Harrisburg water-works. On Dec. 26, 1839, Gen. Ayres personally addressed the directors of the Bank of the United States, asking for the loan of twenty-five thousand dollars at six per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, the principal to be paid any time after 1850. The faith, credit, and responsibility of the borough was pledged as security under the act of March 26, 1839, already mentioned. The money was not to be furnished until April next ensuing. Certificates of loan were to be prepared and then issued.

The confidence in the integrity of the borough, shown by the liberal subscriptions of the bank referred to, although far short of the sum required to complete the works, encouraged the Council to issue (April, 1841) in its own behalf certificates of indebtedness ("borough notes," as they were called) in payment for labor, and received for taxes and all municipal dues. These notes were for twenty-five and fifty cents, termed "shinplasters," and one, two, and three dollars. They were graciously accepted by the people, and constituted the currency of the town for nearly three years.

It may be here noted that they were gradually canceled, and by the autumn of 1843 the necessity of further issue ceased.

By September, 1841, the works were considered as finished, anything further being considered as simply extension, and required only the superintendence of the water committee. Mr. Erdman, whose engineering skill had been secured during their construction, consequently relinquished his engineership, and formally handed over the management to the Town Council on the 20th of that month.

In the year 1843 the capacity of the water-works was commensurate with the necessities of the town. Its income had so far increased that the deficiency to be made up by the borough issues was only about eleven thousand dollars. The labor done upon them was chiefly in finishing up and completing; the disputed land damages were settled finally; very little amount of pipe was laid; so that this year closed with the Harrisburg water-works an accomplished fact. It may be here stated that by the 1st of January, 1844, the pipe laid was equal in distance to eight miles; stop-cocks set, 107; fire-plugs erected, 99. The total cost of construction, for labor, materials, real estate, freight, and salaries, $120,459.12. The general expense of operating the entire works was reduced to $1482.50 per annum. The number of dwellings, manufactories, and other buildings supplied with water was 658. The total amount of borough debt, $170,783.37.

By the extension of the city limits, especially on the east side, the rapid increase of population, a demand was made for an improvement in the water supply of the city. The old reservoir it was found was too contracted, and its height insufficient even at the full level to supply the old part of the city, while beyond the rise of ground east of Paxtang Creek, where there was at least one thousand inhabitants, no improvements of the old reservoir could be made which would render aid to that locality. In 1868 active measures were inaugurated and proper legislation secured looking to an improved water supply for the city.

The water commissioners then appointed were Messrs. William Calder, A. Boyd Hamilton, Charles F. Muench, David S. Herr, and John J. Shoemaker. On the 16th of June, 1869, the commissioners elected H. P. M. Birkinbine engineer, who at once began an investigation of all the different sources of possible water supply. The following were examined and fully reported upon:

1. Locating the works on the western shore of the Susquehanna opposite the city, forcing the water from the river into a reservoir on Fort Washington Hill, and conveying it across the river by pipes.
2. Constructing a water-power in the Susquehanna in the neighborhood of Rockville, and forcing water from the river into a reservoir constructed by damming up Roberts' Valley, or else locating the reservoir on the southern slope of the First Mountain.
3. Constructing a water-power in the Susquehanna River at Brushy Rock, near McAllister's, and conveying it by a canal to a point at or near the present works, where it will be used by suitable water-motors, driving-pumps, for supplying the city.
4. Conveying the water of the Yellow Breeches Creek in Cumberland County by gravitation into a reservoir located on Fort Washington Hill, and carrying it in pipes across the river into the city.
5. Conveying the waters of Stony Creek by gravitation into a reservoir located upon the elevated ground east of the city known as Prospect Hill.
6. Conveying the waters of Manada Creek by gravitation into a reservoir located on Prospect Hill.
7. Pumping from the Susquehanna River at the site occupied by the present works (or at a better one if it can be found) by means of improved steam machinery, and forcing the water into a reservoir of sufficient altitude and capacity to meet the present and future wants of the city.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh sources were favorably regarded, the others decidedly objected to for various reasons. The commissioners, however, themselves thoroughly examined every source of water supply, and after careful consideration decided upon the seventh plan, with a reservoir on Prospect Hill, and pumping from the Susquehanna at the foot of North Street (or, as it should be gratefully named, Ayres Avenue). At once reports were made to the City Councils, and immediate measures taken to secure the ground, construct the reservoir, and erect such additional works at the river-front as was proper and necessary. The cost of all the improvements required to secure to the city of Harrisburg one of the most satisfactory systems of water supply in the Union has been less than three-quarters of a million of dollars, and the entire establishment is an honor to those who managed its construction, and a credit to the capital city of Pennsylvania.

CHAPTER X.

Churches—Reformed—Lutheran—Presbyterian—Methodist Episcopal—Protestant Episcopal—Roman Catholic—Baptist—Evangelical—Church of God—Wesley Union.

REFORMED CHURCHES.

FIRST REFORMED CHURCH.—Early in the eighteenth century a large number of the members of the Reformed Church emigrated from the Palatinate and settled, as we have before stated, in Pennsylvania. These early settlers brought their Bibles, catechisms, and hymn-books with them, and as their numbers increased organized congregations in various sections of the Province. They then invited ministers of their faith to visit their rude log cabins or churches, in order that they might preach to them, baptize their children, and administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. As the country became more thickly settled the want of a spiritual head was greatly felt by the members of the church in Pennsylvania to gather the scattered flock and organize churches. Accordingly, in 1747, application was made to the mother-church for a pastor, and Rev. Michael Schlatter, of St. Gall, Switzerland, was sent to the Province. He arrived at Philadelphia on Sept. 6, 1746, and immediately entered upon his labors. On the 23d of the same month we find him in Lancaster, and from that time he made frequent and often laborious journeys through this and the neighboring counties, extending his visits as far west and south as Frederick City, Md. Wherever he went he preached with great acceptance to the people, baptized their children, and administered communion. He formed neighboring congregations into pastoral charges, and united them more closely with one another and with the mother-church in the Fatherland, so that by mutual co-operation the infant church might be more firmly established, and more readily supplied with such aid as it needed in its weak, scattered, and destitute condition.

At this time there was no regular church building in Harrisburg. The inhabitants of all religious denominations, whenever a minister visited them, worshiped together in a one-story log school-house which then stood at the foot of Capitol Hill, on the north corner of Third and Walnut Streets. When the town was laid out the first settlers took measures for the erection of a church building, and John Harris granted lot No. 187 on the town plat, situated at the corner of Chestnut and Third Streets, for that purpose. The following is a copy of the English subscription-list for the erection of the "first church in Harrisburg":

We, the subscribers, do each of us promise to pay, or cause to be paid, unto John Norton, Christian Gunckel, George Redig, and Henry Brunner, or their order, on demand, the sums annexed to each of our names respectively, to be held and appropriated by the said John Norton, Christian Gunckel, George Redig, and Henry Brunner in purchasing materials for and in building a church and school-house in some convenient part of the town of Harrisburg for the use of the subscribers. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands, with the sums annexed, this 12th day of March, A.D. 1787.

A sufficient sum having been raised by subscription, a log church was erected with a front of thirty-five feet and five inches on Third Street, and a depth of thirty feet and five inches to Cherry Alley. The lot had a front of fifty-two feet and six inches on Chestnut Street, and a depth of two hundred and ten feet to Cherry Alley. The first church building being for the use of all denominations, the original subscription papers, as we have seen, very properly recited that the edifice was "for the use of the subscribers," and for many years clergymen of different denominations officiated in it. A majority of the subscribers, however, being those who professed the doctrines of Martin Luther and Ulric Zwingle, the church was owned and occupied stately only by the German Reformed and Evangelical Lutheran congregations. These two religious denominations worshiped together in this building until the Lutherans purchased a lot on Fourth Street, between Market and Chestnut, and erected a handsome church for themselves, the cornerstone of which was laid in 1814. They sold their interest in the old church and lot in 1816 for one thousand dollars. In 1791 the two denominations erected a school-house on the old property, as will be seen by the following subscription list:

Da zum Nutzen und gebrauch der heranwachsenden Deutsche Jugend ein Schulhaus neben die Kirche erbauet worden und in dasselbige, auch ein stuben ofen gesetzt worden, und nun mehr auch bequem ist Winters zeit Gottes dienst darin zuhalten und da es eines jeden Christen sein Pflicht ist, vor seine Kiuder zu sorgen damit sie in gutem unterweisen kommen werden, so werden alle diejenigen freundlichst ersucht einen gefaelligen Beytrag zu thun, damit die dadurch verursachte Unkosten des Baues bezahlt werden koennen. "Im Jahr 1795 wurden die zwei Gemeinden in Harrisburgh, naemlich die Reformirt und Lutherisch, von einander abberirt, und wahlten auf Reformirter Seite zum Kirchenrath:

Up to this time the two congregations had worshiped together, but in this year they separated, although they occupied the same building. In the same year the old church was wainscoted and put in thorough repair. In 1804 the vestries of the two denominations erected a pulpit and put up galleries on three sides. The walls were plastered and the exterior weatherboarded and painted white. On the 28th of March, 1812, Rev. Philip Gloninger, George Hoyer, Frederick Kelker, Nicholas Ott, and Frederick Bons purchased of Joseph Allen lot No. 186, adjoining the old church property, for fourteen hundred dollars, for the exclusive use of the German Reformed Church. On the 13th of July, 1813, the Lutherans formally proposed a division of the church property, which was declined by the Reformed brethren. On June 17, 1815, a second proposition was made by the Lutherans, that the German Reformed should purchase an undivided half of the new Lutheran Church which had been built on Fourth Street in 1814. This occasioned considerable discussion, but the majority of the Reformed Church opposed the proposition, and the result was that on the 1st of April, 1816, the German Reformed congregation purchased for one thousand dollars the interest of the Lutherans in the old church lot and buildings. On the 3d of July, 1818, "The German Reformed Salem Church of Harrisburg" was incorporated with the following incorporators:

Vestry: Trustees, Christian Shaeffer, John Zinn; Elders, George Wetherholt, John Kelker; Deacons, John Horter, John S. Wiestling, George Kunkel, Jacob Hise; Members, M. Rahm, A. Dorsheimer, George Hoyer, Henry George, Jacob Miesch, Jacob Cunkle, Jacob Hoyer, Jacob Bucher, George Snyder, Frederick Beissel, Joseph Doll, John Henning, Henry Frey, Henry Welthover, Jacob Balsley, Frederick Kelker, David S. Forney, Jacob Steinman, Jacob Greenawalt, Peter Bachman, Jacob Kunkel, Samuel C. Wiestling, Jr., Samuel Swartz, Conrad Knepley, Michael Derstein, Nicholas Ott, John Horn, David Beissel, Peter Snider, Daniel Snider, John A. Stehley.

On the 15th of January, 1821, a meeting of the members was held in the old church, at which Frederick Kelker presided and John S. Wiestling acted as secretary. At this meeting it was resolved to erect a new church of suitable dimensions, to front on Chestnut Street, and the following persons were appointed to collect subscriptions for the purpose: Jacob Bucher, John Kelker, John Zinn, John S. Wiestling, Rev. John Winobrenner, John Horter, Frederick Kelker, and Conrad Knepley. Three weeks afterwards (on Feb. 5, 1821) the committee reported six thousand and six dollars in cash and subscriptions, and the vestry were requested to contract for the erection of a new church.

On the 8th of March, 1821, the vestry contracted with Messrs. Samuel Pool and Henry V. Wilson for the erection of a brick church, sixty feet front and seventy-five feet deep, and with a tower one hundred and ten feet to the top of the wood-work, to be completed by July 1, 1822, for the sum of eight thousand dollars. To carry the plan into execution, the old log school-house and the brick house, both of which stood on the church lots, were taken down and removed. The church building was immediately commenced, and on the 11th of June, 1821, the cornerstone was laid with appropriate ceremonies. On the 21st of June, 1822, the bell, weighing six hundred and sixty-seven pounds, which had been procured in London at an expense of three hundred and forty-six dollars and fifty-six and one-half cents, was taken to the church and placed in the tower. The following inscriptions are upon it: "T. Mears, of London, Fecit 1822;" "May all whom I may summon to the grave the blessings of a well-spent life receive." The church was finished Aug. 1, 1822, and on the 4th of the same month dedicated to Jehovah. The total cost of the church up to Feb. 15, 1823, was eight thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and fifty-four cents, exclusive of bell.

In 1827 the old church was altered by extending an upper floor from the eastern to the western gallery, thus converting the interior into two large rooms. The upper one was used for some time by the Sunday-school, and the lower as a day-school. They were afterwards occupied by public schools. In the summer of 1841 the pulpit of the brick church was replaced by a new one, the walls painted, and many other improvements made. In the same year a spacious lecture-room one story high, twenty-eight by fifty-four feet, with thirteen-foot ceiling, was erected in the rear of the new church. It was subsequently extended to Cherry Alley, making a room twenty-eight by ninety-one feet. In 1855 its interior was handsomely frescoed by George Seiling, the noted fresco-painter of Reading, and in January, 1856, a splendid organ, purchased from Jardine & Son, of New York, and presented to the congregation by five members thereof, was put up. The "confirmation table," which stood before the pulpit in the first church since 1787, has been carefully preserved and is used as the speaker's desk in the new chapel, erected in 1880.

In 1854 the old log church, corner Third Street and Cherry Avenue, was taken down and four brick dwelling-houses erected on its site. The congregation also erected three additional brick dwellings on Cherry Avenue in 1881, after the completion of the chapel.

The church was remodeled in 1876, and Salem Chapel, an extensive and beautiful building for Sunday-school purposes, erected in 1880 and 1881, in the rear of and adjoining the main church building.

The following are the names of the stationed pastors of the Reformed Church from its foundation to the present time:

Rev. Anthony Hautz, from probably 1788 to 1797. In the tax duplicates of Dauphin County it seems that Mr. Hautz was first taxed in 1792, and the last year in which he is noted as a resident of Harrisburg is in 1797.

Rev. Jonathan Helfenstein, from Sept. 7, 1805, to 1808.

Rev. Philip Gloninger, from July 17, 1808, to June 26, 1814.

Rev. Frederick Ralauser, from April 5, 1816, to April 5, 1819.

Rev. John Winebrenner, from Oct. 22, 1820, to March 28, 1823.

Rev. Albert Helfenstein, from March 1, 1824, to Sept. 8, 1829.

Rev. Daniel Zacharias, from Feb. 21, 1830, to March 31, 1835.

Rev. Joseph F. Berg, from Nov. 1, 1835, to Nov. 6, 1836.

Rev. John H. Smaltz, from Nov. 1, 1838, to Nov. 1, 1840.

Rev. John F. Mesick, from Dec. 17, 1840, to February, 1855.

Rev. Daniel Gans, from 1855 to 1864.

Rev. W. H. H. Snyder, from Dec. 18, 1864, to the present time.

SECOND REFORMED CHURCH.—On the 20th of April, 1861, Miss Rebecca Elizabeth Reily and Rudolph F. Kelker donated to the trustees of the First Reformed Church of Harrisburg a certain lot of ground fronting on Reily Street one hundred and twelve feet, and on East Fifth and Sixth Streets one hundred feet, in trust for the use of any persons who might thereafter unite in forming a Second Reformed congregation, to be in connection with the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States; the said trustees to convey the said lot of ground, with all improvements that might be erected thereon, to the trustees of said Second congregation, whenever they should be incorporated, for the sum of one dollar free of all incumbrance. Nothing was, however, done by the officers of the First Church in the premises until in February, 1863. On the 8th of that month the superintendent and teachers of the Sunday-school resolved in meeting that they would raise two hundred dollars for a prospective Sunday-school and Second Reformed Church. On the 12th of the same month, on the petition of the same parties, the consistory of the church elected William H. Seibert, one of the teachers in the Sunday-school, as superintendent of the proposed new school. During the week a member of the First Church secured the second story of the Good Will engine house, on Ridge Road between Cumberland and Broad Streets, and furnished it at his own expense. On the Sunday of April 19, 1863, at 8.30 o'clock A.M., William H. Seibert, superintendent-elect, with Miss Sarah Jane Gutelius, Miss Margaret Ulrich (now Mrs. Benjamin Umberger), and Miss Jane W. Umberger (afterwards Mrs. John F. Traut, now deceased), all teachers in the First Reformed Sunday-school, opened the new school with nine scholars. On the following Sunday, April 26, 1863, Rev. George Kurzman, pastor of a Reformed Church at Middletown, but a resident of Harrisburg, preached the first sermon. On the 19th of November, 1863, Rev. Frederick Fox entered upon his duties as a missionary of the Board of Home Missions, preaching in both the English and German languages. On the 31st of January, 1864, a meeting of persons of the Reformed faith was held at the dwelling of William H. Seibert, then in South Street, between Second Street and Raspberry Avenue, and the following-named individuals agreed to organize as the Second Reformed Church of Harrisburg: William H. Seibert, Philip Hoke, Eli Hollinger, Henry Fuehrer, Isaac Moyer, Solomon Wirtz, Daniel Eckert, Jacob Derstein, and Christian Ehrman. On the 24th of April following twenty-seven others united with the congregation.

On the 3d of June, 1865, the trustees of the First Church conveyed the real estate above mentioned to the trustees of the Second Church, the latter having been duly incorporated. In this year funds were collected, and a chapel built and dedicated Oct. 8, 1865, free of all incumbrance. Rev. Fox preached his farewell sermon March 11, 1866, intending to visit the Pacific coast and labor in the cause of missions there. The Rev. William A. Gring succeeded him, beginning his pastorate on the third Sunday of August, 1866. His connection with the congregation continued until Aug. 2, 1868. Rev. Nathaniel E. Bressler was pastor from Nov. 8, 1868, until February, 1872. On the 26th of January, 1873, the congregation called the Rev. George W. Snyder, then laboring in Danville, Pa., who entered upon his pastorate April 16, 1873, and has since occupied the same as a faithful laborer in the Master's vineyard. During the summer of 1874 the chapel was enlarged by the erection of an additional Sunday-school-room, and also a room in the basement of the building so as to accommodate the infant and senior Sunday-schools separately. Dedicatory services were held in the chapel and new annex on Dec. 5 and 6, 1874.

In the spring of 1876 the large frame church building situated at the corner of Broad Street and Two-and-a-half Street, erected by the Second Advent congregation, was offered for sale. March 13, 1876, the congregation unanimously agreed to purchase it for six thousand dollars, for which sum they mortgaged their church property on Reily Street. On the 19th of March, 1876, the first service was held in the lecture-room of the building, and on the 23d of April, 1876, the newly-purchased building was formally reopened and rededicated to God with appropriate services. The Reily Street property was disposed of by the congregation to W. H. Seibert for six thousand nine hundred dollars in July, 1877.

ZWINGLE REFORMED CHURCH.—This congregation was organized in 1870 by a number of the members of the Second Reformed Church of Harrisburg, who desired German preaching exclusively. They purchased a property on the corner of North Street and Church Alley, and erected thereon a neat brick church. The pastors who have respectively served the congregation are as follows: Rev. Arnold Zullig, Rev. H. Bielfeld, Rev. Moritz Noll, Rev. Frederick Fox, and Rev. H. A. Friedell. At the present time, June, 1883, the congregation is without a pastor, Rev. Friedell having deceased in the early part of this year while pastor of the church. Rev. George W. Snyder, pastor of the Second Reformed Church, has been a lot on Fourth Street, between Market and Chestnut Streets, and erected thereon a handsome brick church. The building committee to which the erection of this edifice was intrusted was appointed Jan. 26, 1814, and consisted of Christian Kunkel, George Youse, George Ziegler, John Shoch, and Christian Stahl. Plans and specifications having been presented, this committee made a contract on Feb. 14, 1814, with Stephen Hills for the construction of the building. The corner-stone was laid on June 22, 1814, at which time the following ministers were present: Revs. George Schmucker, of Yorktown; George Lochman, of Lebanon; Heindrich Danhoff, of Jonestown; W. G. Ernst, of Marietta; and J. P. Hecht, of Carlisle. An immense con-

LUTHERAN CHURCHES.

FIRST OR ZION'S CHURCH.—Up to 1814 the Lutheran congregation in Harrisburg worshiped with their German Reformed brethren in the church which, as elsewhere stated, the two congregations had erected for their joint use. In 1814 the Lutherans purchased course of people was in attendance. After repeated and earnest appeals for assistance to sister congregations, the church was finally dedicated on Oct. 1, 1815. On the forenoon of that day Rev. G. Schmucker preached a German sermon. In the afternoon the Rev. Mr. Armstrong preached an English sermon, and in the evening Rev. Mr. Hendel, a German Reformed minister, preached in German. On Monday, in the forenoon, Rev. Mr. Vanhoff conducted services in German, and in the evening Rev. J. P. Hecht preached in English. The collections during these services amounted to six hundred dollars. The following week it was decided to rent the pews, and the afternoons of October 16th and 17th, between the hours of two and five o'clock, were set apart for that purpose. In the language of the original record, "to the complete surprise of everybody every pew was taken the first day." Rev. F. C. Schaeffer and Valentine Hummel, about a year before, had gone to Litiz and purchased an organ, built by Mr. Bachman, which was now placed in position in the new church.

In 1816 the congregation sold all their interest in the old church property on Third Street to the Reformed Church for one thousand dollars, and in 1822 erected a large two-story brick school-house adjoining their church.

Rev. F. D. Schaeffer, from near Carlisle, preached stately until 1795, when Rev. Henry Moeller be-

May, 1829. "Mr. Holman was requested to prepare a plan of a steeple and lay it before the next meeting."

June 22, 1829. "It was further also determined that Mr. Holman superintend the building of the steeple on the Lutheran Church. employ workmen, select the materials, for which he is to receive fifty dollars as a compensation for services."

The building thus remodeled was the place of worship of the congregation until Oct. 21, 1838, when the entire edifice and the adjoining school-house (erected in 1822) were entirely destroyed by fire. On the following day, in compliance with a request from the vestry and the pastor, Rev. Samuel Sprecher, the congregation assembled at the ruins and determined to rebuild the church. A committee consisting of Messrs. Dock, Hummel, and Pool was appointed to prosecute the work of rebuilding, with power to appoint collectors to solicit subscriptions. The following gentlemen were appointed: South Ward—Messrs. Valentine Hummel, Brown, and German. East Ward—Messrs. David Hummel, Dock, and Seiler. West Ward—Messrs. Pool, P. Keller, and Fager. North Ward—Messrs. M. Keller, Barnitz, and Buehler.

The following are the founders of this church, who in 1795 signed the articles of church government: Benjamin Kurtz, Henry Saylor, George Pfeiffer, Matthias Hutman, George Jauss, George Hartman, Frederick Youse, Johannes Ebert, John Shoch, George Ziegler, Martin Kriege, George Seidel, George Scheile, George Emerich, Peter Walter, Caspar Schmidt, Stephen Horning, George Buks, Balthazar Sees, John Fager, Peter Bricker, Christoff Sees, John Mytinger, Bernhard Geiger, Peter Brua.

The original building of 1814 continued in use unaltered until 1829, when the following record shows steps were taken to erect a steeple:

The work was vigorously prosecuted, and the completed church was dedicated on the 10th of November, 1839. It was sixty-four feet front by eighty-four deep, and had a large lecture-room and several Sabbath-school-rooms in the basement. It was built of brick, covered with composition, painted white, and the cupola had two bells. The edifice was remodeled and enlarged in 1866-67, and is now one hundred and four feet deep and sixty-four feet front. In the tower, which is one hundred and seventy-five feet high, is a chime of eleven bells. The pastors have been:

1795-1803, Henry Moeller; 1803-12, J. D. Peterson; 1812-15, F. C. Schaeffer; 1815-26, John George Lochman, D.D.; 1827-36, Augustus H. Lochman; 1836-40, Samuel Sprecher, D.D.; 1840-49, E. W. Schaeffer; 1849-65, Charles A. Hay, D.D.; 1865-75, and German members. The German portion, after several preliminary meetings, organized and founded on Jan. 8, 1843, the present German Lutheran St. Michael's Church. At this meeting Rev. G. J. Martz was chosen pastor, and on February 22d a committee was appointed to draft rules for the government of the congregation, which were adopted on the 6th of July following. Services were held at first in the court-house, in the old Methodist Church, and in the Reformed Church and lecture-room. The congregation then purchased of Thomas Elder a lot on Second Street, below Meadow Lane, and appointed a building committee, consisting of John G. Jaus, Christian

THIRD CHURCH.

G. F. Stelling, D.D.; 1875-81, Joel Swartz, D.D.; 1881, A. H. Studebaker.

Up to 1843 the pastors preached in both German and English, with the exception of the first two, who officiated in the German language alone. In consequence of the increase of both the German and English branches of the church, an amicable separation was effected in 1843, when the German portion organized the German Lutheran St. Michael's Church.

GERMAN LUTHERAN ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH.—In the fall of 1842 difficulties in relation to services in the English and German languages existing in the Evangelical Lutheran Zion's (First) Church led, as heretofore stated, to a separation between its English

Maeyer, Jacob Boger, Jacob Reeve, and John Gastrock, with authority also to collect funds. Rev. Mr. Martz's term having expired, Rev. J. Vogelbach, of Philadelphia, was installed pastor, July 21, 1844. Soon after this the building committee contracted with Jones & Zimmerman for the erection of the church. The corner-stone was laid May 4, 1844, and on September 15th following the church was dedicated. Owing to some difficulties the edifice would not have been completed but for the liberality of four of its members, John G. Jaus, Christian Maeyer, Jacob Boger, and Frederick Rauch, who advanced each one hundred and fifty dollars to carry on the work. The edifice is a handsome brick building thirty-eight by sixty feet with basement, and has a front gallery, organ, and Gothic windows. The cost, with the lot, was about four thousand dollars. In 1844 the congregation was incorporated, the articles providing that services should be in the German language only.

The pastors have been: 1843-44, G. J. Martz; Jan. 1, 1844, to Sept. 22, 1847, J. Vogelbach; Oct. 1, 1847, to Oct. 1, 1850, L. Gerhardt; Oct. 13, 1850, to April 11, 1852, J. Vogelbach; April 12, 1852, to March 26, 1855, D. Maier; 1855 (few months), H. Vossler; Oct. 25, 1855, to Oct. 11, 1857, C. M. Jaeger; 1857-58, W. S. Porr; Dec. 1, 1858, to Jan. 12, 1860, J. J. Kucher; 1860-71, H. Liesmann; 1871-74, C. Schwankousky; June 10, 1876, George Pfuhl, the present pastor.

THE SECOND LUTHERAN CHURCH originated in the mission Sabbath-school founded Jan. 11, 1858, by the Sunday-school Association of Zion's Lutheran Church at the suggestion of William Parkhill. A house on East State Street was rented, in which the first Sabbath-school meeting was held in a front room below, and on the fourth Sunday two floors of the house were filled. In March following a lot was leased on the northwest corner of State and Fourth Streets, on which a chapel was built. It had a small tower and bell. Rev. C. A. Hay, of the Zion's Church, preached every alternate Sunday afternoon during the following winter. On Sept. 13, 1860, the congregation was regularly organized. The first pastor, Rev. E. S. Johnston, began his labors June 24, 1860. The first church officials were: Elders, Jacob Reel, D. A. S. Eyster; Deacons, Charles Osman, E. S. German, George Krichbaum, G. T. Murray. The chapel, erected on leased ground, was removed to Williams Street, and on its site the Free Baptist congregation erected its church. A lot was then purchased on the corner of Forster and Elder Streets for fifteen hundred dollars, on which the corner-stone of the present edifice was laid May 29, 1863, Rev. F. W. Conrad, D.D., delivering the discourse. The building was dedicated July 14, 1867, having cost eighteen thousand dollars.

The pastors have been: June 24, 1860, to Nov. 4, 1866, E. S. Johnston; Jan. 13, 1867, to 1870, G. W. Halderman; September, 1870, to 1873, F. P. Thompson; Nov. 2, 1873, to 1882, L. M. Heilman; 1883, H. S. Cook.

ZION'S GERMAN LUTHERAN CHURCH is a one-story frame, located on Elder Street. The congregation was organized and the edifice erected in 1863, and in 1865 its constitution was adopted.

Its pastors have been: 1863-68, E. M. Yeager; 1868-73, Rev. Mr. Badensfeld; 1873-78, D. Spangenberg; 1878-80, William Strobel; 1881, J. G. Abele.

LUTHERAN JUBILEE CHAPEL is located on Fourteen-and-a-half Street, corner of Shoop. The congregation grew out of a mission Sunday-school organized by the Sunday-school Association of the First Lutheran Church, which built the frame chapel in 1871. The congregation was formally organized in February, 1872, by Rev. S. Dasher, with thirty-five members. Mr. Dasher also preaches at Shoop's Church, four miles east, on the Jonestown road, and at Churchville, near Steelton.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

MARKET SQUARE CHURCH.—Prior to 1790 the Presbyterians of Harrisburg worshiped at, but were united with, the Paxtang Church, a short distance from the town. After the laying out of Harrisburg, in 1785, the population increased, and the residents invited traveling preachers to officiate for them on several occasions.

In October, 1786, a petition was presented to the Presbytery of Carlisle from residents in Harrisburg and the parts adjacent, requesting that they be erected into a congregation, and be allowed to have a place of worship in the town, and to have supplies appointed them for the pulpit services. No action was taken upon these requests at that time, but in April, 1787, the Presbytery met at Carlisle, and the following account is taken from the records of the meeting:

"A representation and a petition of a number of the inhabitants of Harrisburg and others in the township of Paxtang was laid before the Presbytery and read. The said representation sets forth that these people desire to be considered as a Presbyterian congregation, and to have supplies appointed to them by the Presbytery, and that in order to promote peace and harmony between them and the Paxtang congregation some proposals had been made and considered, though not accepted by that congregation, a copy of which also was laid before Presbytery. Mr. Elder also gave a representation of the case as concerning these people and the Paxtang congregation. The Presbytery, upon consideration of the case, agreed to propose the following articles to the consideration and acceptance of these people, which may have a tendency to preserve peace and unity in that part of the church:

"I. That Harrisburg shall be considered as the seat of a Presbyterian Church, and part of the charge of Rev. John Elder, and in which he is to preach one-third of his time.

"II. That Mr. Elder's salary, promised by the congregation of Paxtang, shall be continued and paid by the congregation in common who adhere to these two places of worship, viz., Paxtang and Harrisburg.

"III. That the congregation thus united may apply for and obtain supplies as assistant to the labors of Mr. Elder, to be paid by the congregation in common.

"IV. That when the congregation may judge it proper, they shall have a right to choose and call a minister as a colleague with Mr. Elder, to officiate in relation with him."

Rev. Dr. Davidson, of Carlisle, president of Dickinson College, and Rev. John Waugh, pastor of Silver's Spring Church, were appointed to attend at the church in Lower Paxtang, on the last Tuesday of May, 1787, to moderate and assist in the matter.

At a subsequent meeting of the Presbytery, held in June, 1787, Rev. Dr. Davidson and Mr. Waugh reported that they had fulfilled their appointment at Paxtang, and that the following had been agreed to by Mr. Elder, his congregation and Harrisburg:

I. That the congregation shall have two stated places of public worship,—the one where Rev. Mr. Elder now officiates, the other in Harrisburg.

II. That the Rev. John Elder shall continue to have and receive during his life or incumbency all the salary or stipends that he now enjoys, to be paid by his present subscribers, as he and they may agree, and continue his labors in Derry as usual.

III. That the congregation may, for the present, apply to the Presbytery for supplies, which when obtained, the expenses shall be defrayed by those who do not now belong to Mr. Elder's congregation and such as may think proper to join them; and should such supplies be applied for when Mr. Elder is to be in Paxtang, then he and the person to supply shall preach in rotation, the one in the country and the other in town; but should Mr. Elder be in Derry, then the supplies shall officiate in town.

IV. That the congregation when able, or when they think proper, may invite and settle any regular Presbyterian minister they or a majority of them may choose, and can obtain, as co-pastor with Mr. Elder, who shall officiate as to preaching in the manner specified in the third proposal.

Notwithstanding the permission granted by these articles, Mr. Elder continued to be sole pastor of the two congregations of Derry and Paxtang, the latter including Harrisburg, until his death, in July, 1792.

In 1793, Rev. Nathaniel R. Snowden, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, was ordained and installed as pastor over the congregations of Derry, Paxtang, and Harrisburg. In 1794 the latter church was regularly organized, with Moses Gillmor, Adam Boyd, and Samuel Weir as ruling elders. In April, 1796, Mr. Snowden's pastoral relations had ceased with Derry and Paxtang, and he officiated at Harrisburg alone, but he was afterwards permitted to preach at Middletown. Worship was held in the loft of the old jail until the erection, in 1799, of the court-house, when it was used. As it was the custom in those days to raise money for benevolent purposes by lotteries, application was made to the Legislature for permission to raise by lottery a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars to buy a lot and erect a church.

On March 16, 1798, a law was passed appointing Robert Harris, George Whitehill, Christian Kunkel, William Graydon, George Brenizer, Adam Boyd, Jacob Bucher, Archibald McAllister, and Samuel Elder commissioners for that purpose. The Governor approved the scheme, which was completed, and the drawing took place from June 1 to 7, 1803. On June 7, 1804, these commissioners purchased a lot on the corner of Second Street and Cherry Alley for four hundred pounds, on which the edifice was erected by William Glass, builder. It was opened for worship Feb. 12 and 13, 1808, when Rev. James Buchanan was installed as pastor, Rev. Mr. Snowden having retired June 25, 1805. This house was built of brick, and was forty-five by sixty feet. In 1816 an addition to the front was built, which was occupied by the Sabbath-school and used as a lecture-room. Mr. Buchanan, who was a licentiate of New Castle Presbytery, served the congregation two-thirds of his time, and the Middle Paxtang congregation the remainder. He continued as pastor until Sept. 10, 1815, when on his application his connection was dissolved. In the language of the Rev. Dr. Dewitt, "Mr. Buchanan was much esteemed by his congregation as a man of intelligence, piety, and an excellent preacher: he wrote his sermons with great care, and committed them accurately to memory; his style was remarkably sententious, and his sermons short. "Under his ministry the church was enlarged; it became established in the doctrines of the gospel. After Mr. Buchanan closed his ministry in Harrisburg he remained for some years without a charge in consequence of ill health; when sufficiently restored he took charge of a congregation in Greencastle, Franklin Co., Pa.; afterwards he removed to Logansport, Ind., where he ceased from his earthly labors, greatly beloved and respected."

After Mr. Buchanan's resignation, the Harrisburg congregation remained vacant for three years. On the 5th of October, 1818, the Rev. William R. Dewitt, a licentiate of the Presbytery of New York, received a unanimous call to become their pastor; he shortly after signified his intention to accept their call, and removed to Harrisburg in December, 1818, and commenced to preach stately to the congregation. On the 26th October, 1819, he was ordained to the gospel ministry, and on the 12th of November, 1819, installed as pastor of the congregation.

The congregation received its legal charter in 1818. In 1838 the division occurred in the general church. The Presbytery of Harrisburg was formed in connection with the New School General Assembly, and this church became a part of that Presbytery. In the winter of 1840-41 the trustees repurchased of the heirs of Robert Sloan a part of the original church lot, which had been sold to him, and on which he had erected a three-story brick house. In the spring of 1841 the old church was torn down, and a new edifice built and dedicated Feb. 13, 1842. It was constructed of brick, and covered with white cement, and its dimensions were sixty-three by eighty-four feet. It was adorned in front with a portico, supported by pillars of the Corinthian order, an exact copy of the front of the celebrated Choragic monument of Lysicrates at Athens. The basement story was above ground, and contained a lecture-room, a Sabbath-school-room, and a studio for the pastor. The pulpit was of fine polished Italian marble. In July, 1854, Rev. Thomas H. Robinson was called to act as a colleague of Rev. Dr. Dewitt, and commenced his labors on the 1st of October following. On the 21st of January, 1875, he was installed as pastor, in which relation he still continues.

On March 31, 1858, the church edifice was entirely destroyed by fire, which was the work of an incendiary. It broke out in a small stable in the rear of the church, and spread with great rapidity to several adjoining frame buildings, from which it was quickly communicated to the church. After its destruction a part of the congregation withdrew and formed the present Pine Street Presbyterian Church.

The original congregation worshiped in Brant's City Hall, Market Street, until its new edifice was completed. The cornerstone of the latter was laid Oct. 26, 1858, and the edifice was dedicated March 18, 1860.

It was built on the corner of Second Street and Market Square, under the direction of J. C. Hoxie, architect, of Philadelphia. Its style is a rich Romanesque, and its size is one hundred and thirty-three feet by sixty-six, exclusive of projections. Its front is on Second Street, from which it has three entrances, with one at the side, leading to the lecture- and Sabbath-school-rooms, which occupy a distinct part of the building in the rear. There are two turrets on the front part of the building, besides the steeple, which is located on the upper corner of the edifice, and is one hundred and ninety-three feet in height. A number of minarets adorn the sides. The audience-room is seventy-six by fifty-eight feet, and contains one hundred and forty pews a good distance apart. There is no gallery, except a small one for the choir, and the ceiling is ornamented with paneling and stucco-work. The height of the walls at the lower corners of the roof is thirty-two feet, and to the cone of the roof in front fifty-six feet.

The ruling elders of Market Square Presbyterian

Church¹ since its organization have been: Adam Boyd, Moses Gillmor, Samuel Weir, John Stoner, William Graydon, Robert Sloan, Joseph A. McJimsey, Samuel Agnew, M.D., John Nielson, Richard T. Leech, John C. Capp, James W. Weir, Alexander Graydon, Alexander Sloan,* Alfred Armstrong, Samuel W. Hays, William McClean, William Root, John A. Weir, Mordecai McKinney, Robert J. Fleming, James Fleming, William S. Shaffer,* Walter F. Fahnestock, James F. Purvis, Samuel J. M. McCarrell,* Gilbert M. McCaulay,* Jacob A. Miller,* M.D.

The pastors were: 1793 to June 25, 1805, Nathaniel R. Snowden; Feb. 12, 1809, to Sept. 10, 1815, James Buchanan; Nov. 12, 1819, to Jan. 21, 1875, William R. Dewitt; July, 1854, when called as colleague of Rev. Dr. Dewitt, Thos. H. Robinson, present pastor.

James W. Weir was superintendent of the Sunday-school for nearly fifty years.

THE PINE STREET PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, or "The Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg," its legal designation, was founded on the 22d of May, 1858, and on that day a committee of the Presbytery of Carlisle consisting of Revs. Messrs. Thomas Creigh, of Mercersburg, Isaac N. Hayes, of Shippensburg, and W. W. Eels, of Carlisle, organized a congregation of fifty church members. The congregation then proceeded to elect ruling elders, and Messrs. Francis Wyeth, H. Murray Graydon, and James McCormick, Jr., were chosen unanimously. On the 23d of May divine service was held in the German Reformed Church. After the sermon, which was preached by Rev. I. N. Hayes from Exodus xiv. 15, the Rev. Thomas Creigh conducted the service for ordination of elders. The constitutional questions were proposed to the elders-elect and the members of the church, after which the former were set apart to the office of ruling elder by prayer and the imposition of hands. An address was then made by Mr. Creigh to the elders and to the church. Two weeks after the organization of the church the Sabbath-school was formed, on June 6, 1858. It began with eleven teachers and forty scholars.

On Feb. 1, 1859, the church was incorporated by act of the Legislature under the name of "The Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg." The charter then granted provides for the election of seven trustees. The original trustees, named in the charter, were Messrs. James McCormick, A. B. Warford, Charles C. Rawn, E. M. Pollock, A. Boyd Hamilton, Joseph Casey, and J. Donald Cameron.

The congregation had occupied for its various meetings four different places,—the lecture-room of the German Reformed Church, the lecture-room of the Baptist Church, the hall of the Senate, and the hall of the House of Representatives. The erection of a church for their own use was of the first importance, and within a year after the organization this work was auspiciously begun. The corner-stone of the church edifice was laid with appropriate ceremonies May 12, 1859. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. R. Watts, of Philadelphia (now of Belfast, Ireland), and Rev. S. T. Lowrie, of Alexandria. Mr. H. M. Graydon read an interesting statement of the steps which led to the formation of the church. Rev. A. D. Mitchell, of Paxtang, and Rev. George Morris, of Silver Spring, conducted the devotional exercises. The stone was adjusted in its place by the Rev. A. Green Simonton. The building committee consisted of Messrs. A. B. Warford, E. M. Pollock, Henry McCormick, John Haldeman, and C. C. Rawn. The architect was Mr. Luther M. Simon.

The lecture-room adjoining the church was finished on the 30th of January previous, and on the occasion of its first occupancy addresses were delivered by Dr. Davidson, of Philadelphia, and the Revs. Messrs. Simonton and Rawlson. The Sunday-school-room was not completed until Jan. 5, 1860. At the time the Sabbath-school took possession of their new abode addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Philadelphia, and the Hon. Mr. Francis, Speaker of the Senate.

In September, 1859, a call was presented to Rev. Dr. Joseph T. Smith, of Baltimore, which, to the disappointment of the congregation, was declined. The church again assembled in the lecture-room March 8, 1860, when Rev. William C. Cattell, D.D., was unanimously elected pastor of the church. His first sermon after accepting the call was preached March 31, 1860. On the 22d of July, 1860, just two years and two months after the organization, the congregation had the great joy of dedicating their church edifice to the worship of the living God. It was an occasion of public interest. Several of the other churches in the city closed their houses of worship so that their members could participate in the services. The Rev. P. D. Gurley, D.D., of Washington City, preached in the morning and afternoon, and Rev. N. C. Burt, D.D., of Baltimore, in the evening. On Aug. 14, 1860, the call to Dr. Cattell was presented to him by the Presbytery of Carlisle, and by him accepted. On the 2d of September of this year he was installed as pastor, the installation services being held in the new church. The Rev. A. D. Mitchell, of Paxtang, presided and gave the charge to the people; Rev. Dr. McPhail, president of Lafayette College, preached the sermon, and the Rev. Henry Reves, of Chambersburg, gave the charge to the pastor.

On July 19, 1863, Mr. Jacob F. Seiler was ordained to the eldership, and on November 12th the pastoral relation with Dr. Cattell was dissolved by the Presbytery, to the great regret of the entire church. He had accepted the presidency of Lafayette College, but has never abated his deep interest in this his first and only pastoral charge. He preached his farewell sermon Nov. 29, 1863, after a pastorate of three years and two months. The congregation was without a minister for about a year.

The Rev. Samuel S. Mitchell was received under the care of Presbytery as a licentiate from the Presbytery of New Brunswick on Oct. 4, 1864, and accepted a call from the church, which had been made at a congregational meeting held on the 3d of the preceding May. He was ordained and installed on Nov. 15, 1864. He remained pastor of the church four years and three months, when he accepted a call to the New York Avenue Church of Washington City. The pastoral relation with this church was dissolved Feb. 23, 1869.

PINE STREET PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The third pastor of the church was the Rev. Addison K. Strong, D.D., who was called at a meeting held Feb. 3, 1870. The call was presented at a meeting of Presbytery held April 13, 1870. He was installed on the 14th of June. His pastorate continued three years and eight months, when he accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church in Kalamazoo, Mich., and on Feb. 12, 1874, the pastoral relation to this church was dissolved by Presbytery.

The Sunday-school celebrated its fifteenth anniversary on the evening of Feb. 1, 1874. This celebration was of more than a passing interest. The crowded rooms that night gave occasion for thankfulness and regret,—thankfulness at the remarkable growth of the school, which then numbered over eight hundred members, and regret that its accommodations were not more ample. The superintendent made an announcement which intensified the one feeling and dispelled the other when he stated that Messrs. J. Donald Cameron, James McCormick, and Henry McCormick would purchase ground adjoining the church, and that Mrs. Eliza McCormick and Mrs. Mary Cameron would erect a building thereupon, not to cost more than thirty thousand dollars. Ground was broken for the erection of the new Sunday-school building April 15, 1874.

On Dec. 3, 1874, Rev. John R. Paxton, of Churchville, Md., was called to the pastorate. The call was accepted by him at a meeting of Presbytery held Feb. 2, 1875. He was installed as pastor Sabbath evening, Feb. 28, 1875, the Rev. Dr. D. C. Marquis, of Baltimore, preaching the sermon; Dr. Robinson, of this city, giving the charge to the pastor, and Dr. Cattell the charge to the people.

On the 7th of April, 1875 (Wednesday evening), the new Sunday-school building was dedicated. Addresses were made by Rev. S. A. Mutchmore, D.D., of Philadelphia, and Dr. Cattell. The school occupied it on the following Sabbath, when addresses were made by Dr. Cattell and the pastor, Mr. Paxton.

The church edifice was remodeled this year, and alterations made which largely added to the comfort of the congregation. These improvements were made under the supervision of a committee consisting of Messrs. A. Boyd Hamilton, Henry McCormick, J. Donald Cameron, J. J. Dull, T. T. Weirman, Thomas L. Wallace, and G. W. Buehler. The church worshiped in the building as it now stands for the first time June 11, 1876.

On the 18th of June the congregation with great reluctance acquiesced in the request of the pastor that the pastoral relation be dissolved. He had received and accepted a call from the New York Avenue Church of Washington, and frankly stated his reasons for going to that new field. The request was acted upon by the Presbytery of Carlisle on the 20th of June, 1878, and the congregation was once more without a minister. The present pastor, Rev. Mr. George Stuart Chambers, was called in September, 1879, accepted the call at a meeting of the Presbytery held October, and installed Tuesday evening, Nov. 11, 1879.

In a sermon preached on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the gathering of the congregation Rev. Mr. Chambers said, "The review of the past would be very incomplete without summing up the work of the church during the quarter of a century, and contrasting the beginnings of our history with the condition of things to-day. This summary and contrast is very suggestive of our duty both to God and to the world about us. It stimulates the inquiry whether all has been done that it was possible to do, and whether in view of what God has made us and given us we are doing for His kingdom all that we might do. The first statistical report and our last statistical report furnish us the following contrasts:

"In April, 1859, total number of communicants was 83; in April, 1883, 507; increase, 424. In April, 1859, contributions to home missions, $99.93; in April, 1883, $2102.00. In April, 1859, total Sunday-school members, 140; in April, 1883, 1602; increase, 1462. In April, 1859, contributions for home missions, $21.98; in April, 1883, $1627. In April, 1859, the total benevolent contributions of the church, $267.31; in April, 1888, $5727.

"During the twenty-five years of our history the money contributed for all purposes by the church is as follows: Home missions, $29,070; foreign missions, $24,880; education, $6408; publication, $2483; church erection, $7833; relief fund, $3775; freedmen, $2510; sustentation, $2364; General Assembly's fund, $428; congregational purposes, $142,173; memorial fund in 1871, $12,380; miscellaneous charities, $91,495; total for twenty-five years, $325,799. During this period baptisms, 119 adults, 289 infants. The first child baptized was Naudain, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Boyd Hamilton.

"The accessions to the church during these twenty-five years have been on certificate 494, and by examination 514, a total of 1008. The present membership is 507. It thus appears that 501 persons have severed their connection with the church. Of these we find that 105 have died, 380 have been dismissed to other churches, and there are 16 who have left the church in regard to whom there is no knowledge. It is a striking fact that an entire congregation about equal in size to that we have at present has passed away from us, the most of them to other parts of God's kingdom on earth, many of them to the kingdom of glory."

This congregation is now numerically the strongest on the roll of Carlisle Presbytery.

SEVENTH STREET CHURCH was organized Sept. 6, 1868. It is located on Seventh Street, near Maclay Street. The first pastor installed was Rev. S. W. Pomeroy; the second, Rev. W. A. McAleer; the third and present, Rev. Charles A. Wyeth, who was stated supply from 1868 to 1870, when he was installed as regular pastor. The congregation numbers nearly a hundred, and the Sunday-school has one hundred and seventy-five scholars.

WESTMINSTER CHURCH was established June 19, 1873, with Rev. William A. West as the first pastor, who has continued to the present time. The chapel is situated on the corner of Reily and Two-and-a-half Streets, is eighty by one hundred and forty feet in size, and cost over twelve thousand dollars. It has a Sabbath-school of over three hundred scholars.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

GRACE CHURCH.—Harrisburg was visited in circuit statedly as early as 1802 by the Rev. Jacob Gruber, but the first Methodist society in this vicinity was not organized until 1810. The first effort of the Methodist society to own a church building was on the 19th of January, 1816, when Richard McAllister (who afterwards was appointed as circuit preacher), William Burton, Alexander Glasgow, Ludwig Kelly, Jacob Allen, and William Musgrave, as trustees of the Methodist society of Harrisburg, entered into articles of agreement with Joseph Mitchell for the purchase of a lot on Pine Street marked 90 and 91 in the borough plan, thirty-eight feet front on Pine Street, and running back a depth of one hundred and five feet, for the sum of two thousand dollars. This lot is part of that now occupied by the Pine Street Presbyterian Church building. These trustees paid in cash the sum of $450.75, and agreed to convey to Mitchell lot No. 207, bounded by Third Street, Mulberry and Cherry Alleys, which they had, prior to that time, bought for the use of the Methodist society, as part of the consideration for the Pine Street lot. The Methodist society entered upon this lot under their article of agreement, and altered and arranged a two-story brick house erected thereon for use as a meeting-house, and there held their stated and devotional services for several years. This lot after various proceedings in the law was finally sold by the sheriff to satisfy a claim of Frederick Kelker, assignee of Samuel Gehrman, vs. Joseph Finley, who had owned the ground, and encumbered it before it was sold to Joseph Mitchell. It was sold in December term, 1818, for the sum of seven hundred and two dollars, to George Pearson and Jacob M. Halde-man, and the deed made to them Feb. 3, 1819.

After vacating this building the congregation worshipped in a small one-story log house, on the south-east side of Locust Street, between Second Street and River Alley, and afterwards in the school-house of Mr. Maginnis, a one-story frame building which formerly stood in Raspberry Alley, east of Chestnut Street, on the lot subsequently owned by Jacob Miley. In October, 1818, the following persons composed the church: John Funk, Joseph Mitchell, Jane Mitchell, John Bond, Rebecca Bond, Harriet Henry, Amelia Henry, William Musgrave, B. Barret, John Hosler, Alexander Buffington, John Rigg, Jane Wood, E. Wood, Louisa Power, Jacob M. Awl, Aurora Callender, Mary McMichael, George Linketter, John Bur-kett.

In 1820 the society erected the brick building on the eastern corner of South and Second Streets, at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars. The trustees were then John Funk, John Bond, and James Gallagher. It was dedicated in December, 1820; the preachers on the circuit being Rev. J. Gruber and Rev. H. G. King. It continued to be a circuit church until 1834, when it became a station, with Rev. Francis Hodgson as pastor. The congregation then numbered one hundred and seventy-five. A few years subsequent to the erection of this building some unknown person or persons entered it at night and, with an auger, bored holes in the sills of the church. These they filled with powder, which they ignited by slow matches, and the explosion that resulted shattered the pulpit. The Governor of the State and the town Council each offered a reward of one hundred dollars, but the perpetrators of the deed were never discovered. The outrage excited such sympathy that by means of the liberal donations of money which flowed in the congregation was not only enabled to construct a new pulpit, but also to pay an onerous debt on the church edifice itself.

On the 16th of June, 1836, the society was incorporated by the Supreme Court, under the corporate name of the "Methodist Episcopal Church of Harrisburg, Maclaysburg, and vicinity." The property owned and built by the Unitarians. The trustees at this time were Jacob M. Awl, John Davies, John A. Bigler, Joseph Black, Henry Antes, James Canning, Alexander Buffington, and Jacob Ettl. On this lot a church building was erected at a cost of eight thousand five hundred and twelve dollars and sixteen cents. It was dedicated in August, 1839. The society numbered two hundred and nine members. The old consisted of the church building and the burying-ground on North Street, which was afterwards taken by the borough authorities, and now forms part of the site of the old reservoir grounds.

In 1837 they purchased a lot on Locust Street from Dr. Luther Reilly, seventy-five by seventy-eight feet nine inches, for the sum of sixteen hundred dollars. It had erected thereon a church building, originally church on Second Street was sold to the United Brethren, who, after occupying it for several years, conveyed it to the "Sons of Temperance," who greatly enlarged and improved it, subsequently passing into the possession of the Jewish congregation, who now occupy it.

Locust Street Church was remodeled in 1852. The edifice becoming too small, it was decided to erect a more commodious one. Ground was secured on West State Street, corner of Myrtle Avenue, and the present Grace Church building commenced, and the corner-stone laid in 1871. On the 23th of December, 1873, the chapel was dedicated by Bishop Simpson, while the main building was consecrated on the 10th of March, 1878. The lot on which the church was erected cost nineteen thousand six hundred dollars, and the structure one hundred and five thousand dollars.

When the present edifice was commenced the trustees were John J. Clyde, Augustus Sayford, Daniel T. Wilson, J. Wesley Aul, John W. Glover, R. R. Chrisman, Col. George F. McFarland, and William Calder. The building committee were John J. Clyde, Augustus Sayford, William Calder, and John W. Glover. The church membership is six hundred.

Since it was made a station, in 1834, its pastors have been: 1834, Francis Hodgson; 1835-37, R. Geary; 1837-39, Thomas J. Thompson; 1839-41, William Barnes; 1841-43, Joseph Lybrand; 1843-45, Anthony Atwood; 1845-47, Joseph Castle; 1847-49, William Cooper; 1849-51, Francis Hodgson (second term); 1851-53, William Urie; 1853-55, Alfred Cookman; 1855-57, John D. Curtis; 1857-59, David W. Bartine; 1859-60, William Bishop, T. W. Martin; 1860-61, William Bishop; 1861-63, Franklin Moore; 1863-66, John Walker Jackson; 1866-68, J. F. Chaplin; 1868-71, C. J. Thompson; 1871-74, W. J. Stevenson; 1874-77, C. A. Holmes; 1877-79, Richard Hinkle; 1879-82, Charles W. Buoy; 1882, W. J. Stevenson, present pastor.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, Vine Street near Paxton, was organized in 1860, and was under the pastoral charge of Rev. Robert J. Carson for the first two years of its existence. Its first place of worship was on Second Street (James property). Its pastors have been: 1860-62, Robert J. Carson; 1863-64, J. E. Kessler; 1864-66, J. Owen Sypherd; 1866-68, C. W. Bickley; 1868-71, G. G. Rakestraw; 1871-72, Reuben Owen; 1872-74, John O'Neil; 1874-77, J. A. Melick; 1877-80, M. L. Ganoe; 1880-81, Thomas M. Reese; 1881-82, N. S. Buckingham; 1882, J. B. Mann, the present pastor. The church building is a neat frame structure.

RIDGE AVENUE CHURCH, on Sixth Street, corner of Herr, was erected in 1863. The congregation was organized in 1861, and its first pastor was Rev. Joseph Gregg, who officiated for two years. The church was at first known as the Front Street charge.

Its pastors have been: 1861-63, Joseph Gregg; 1863-65, George G. Rakestraw; 1865-68, William M. Ridgway; 1868-71, Thomas M. Griffith; 1871-72, J. Lindemuth; 1872-75, William Rink; 1875-78, James B. Clarke; 1878-81, G. D. Pennypacker; 1881, B. B. Hamlin, the present pastor.

The church edifice is a beautiful building located on a commanding position.

MOUNT PLEASANT CHURCH is located on Thirteenth Street, corner of Vernon. The congregation was organized in 1869, under Rev. John Stringer, and worshiped in the school-house until the erection of its frame edifice, in 1873.

Its pastors have been: 1869-71, John Stringer; 1871-72, W. C. Johnson; 1872-73, Francis E. Church; 1873-75, T. S. Wilcox; 1875-77, H. N. Minnigh; 1877-78, John Stine; 1879-81, Daniel Hartman; 1881, George M. Hoke, the present incumbent.

The church membership numbers ninety persons, and that of the Sunday-school one hundred and sixty.

FIFTH STREET CHURCH is located on Fifth Street, corner of Granite Avenue. The congregation was organized in 1871, under Revs. Thomas M. Griffith and F. A. Riggen, the former pastor of Ridge Avenue Church.

Its pastors have been: 1871-72, Thomas M. Griffith; 1872-73, S. H. Hoover; 1873-75, W. H. Keith; 1875-76, G. T. Gray; 1876-78, P. F. Eyer; 1878-80, W. V. Ganoe; 1880-83, J. H. Black; 1883, John A. De Moyer, the present pastor.

The church building was erected in 1870-71. The congregation belonged to the Philadelphia Conference until 1873, since which time it has been connected with the Central Pennsylvania Conference.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

ST. STEPHEN'S.—The earliest reference to the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Dauphin County is made in the report of the church missionary at Lancaster, Rev. Thomas Barton, who was sent to this portion of the country by the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts." The headquarters of the society were at London, England, and the date of Mr. Barton's report is Nov. 10, 1766. In this report Mr. Barton says, "Mr. John Cox, a merchant of Philadelphia, by a deed granted to the society, gave a lot for church purposes in Estherton, lying northwest of Lancaster about forty miles, on the river Susquehanna, where there are several families belonging to the church, who are at too great a distance from any stated mission to attend divine service. This gentleman has also promised to give twenty pounds himself, and to collect one hundred pounds more among his friends in Philadelphia, towards building a church upon said lot, and his lady engages to furnish it with a bell. . . ." There is no record that this church was ever built, but the society above referred to appointed an itinerant missionary, to travel about from one vacant church to another, and Estherton was included in this charge. Although Estherton was older than Harris' Ferry, the latter place took the lead; but there must have been at one time established services there, as it is stated that Bishop White preached there on several occasions.

The first Episcopal services enjoyed by the people of Harrisburg were rendered by the Rev. William A. Muhlenberg, D.D., then rector of St. James', Lancaster, who, from December, 1823, to June, 1824, officiated here once each month in the old log church, situated on the corner of Third Street and Cherry Alley, which was given by the Reformed Church. At that time Dr. Muhlenberg's efforts to form a congregation and organize a parish failed. The next services in Harrisburg were rendered by the Rev. Charles S. Williams, then rector of St. John's, York. He officiated once in each three weeks, from October, 1824, to March, 1825, a period of six months. The third clergyman who performed services here was Rev. James Depui, then in deacon's orders. He labored from September, 1825, to January, 1826, a period of six months.

The vestry seems to have been organized in 1825, as the parish was admitted to the Convention at Reading in 1826, but the first record bears the date of March 25, 1826, on which day a meeting of the vestry was held. This vestry was composed of John B. Cox, William Mileham, John Depui, James Peacock, George Fisher, William Putnam, James Buchanan, Alexander C. Wilson, James Woodman, Samuel Bryan, John E. Forster, and Joseph Curzen. At this meeting the Rev. John B. Clemson was elected rector of the parish. The organization of the parish was largely due to his zeal and energy. At that time but six families could be found avowing themselves Episcopalians.

Plans were agreed upon, 20th April, 1826, for a neat brick building sixty-five feet front by sixty feet deep, and a contract entered into with Messrs. Bryan and Dowding, the cost being limited to four thousand dollars. The corner-stone was laid with Masonic ceremonies on St. John's day, 24th June, 1826. On the 9th of May, 1827, the church, which is situated on Front Street, a short distance below Pine, was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. William White, D.D., bishop of the then diocese of Pennsylvania. Fifty pews were rented at that time, and twenty-five persons were confirmed. A lofty, square, brick tower surmounts the front of the edifice, in which is a fluted bell. The edifice has been enlarged and remodeled internally, yet presents the same front. The rectory is situated on Front Street above Pine.

The consecration of St. Stephen's was attended with the additional interest of the presence of the Diocesan Convention, which met here at that time; and the further interest attaches in the fact that there and within those walls the election of the Rev. Henry Ustick Onderdonk took place as assistant bishop of Pennsylvania. Bishop Onderdonk was consecrated in Christ Church, Philadelphia, Oct. 25, 1827, and made his first visitation to Harrisburg on the 27th of December, 1827.

Under date of Nov. 17, 1835, the following entry appears on the records:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the vestry and congregation be tendered to Mrs. Whiston for her kindness in presenting St. Stephen's Church with a set of communion plates, and that the secretary transmit her a copy of this resolution."

It is fair to presume that this gift embraced the whole communion set, but this is not stated.

The Diocesan Convention of Pennsylvania met in St. Stephen's in May, 1841, and on the 9th of November, 1871, the primary Convention of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania assembled in that edifice, at which the Rt. Rev. M. A. DeWolf Howe was chosen bishop, making the second bishop elected within its walls.

The rectors of St. Stephen's have been: 1823-28, Rev. John B. Clemson; 1828-29, Rev. John W. Curtis; 1829-31, Rev. John Reynolds; 1832-38, Rev. Nathan Stern; 1838-42, Rev. Charles V. Kelly; 1842-44, Rev. Henry Major; 1844-52, Rev. Joseph H. Coit, D.D.; 1852-56, Rev. Henry H. Bean; 1857-60, Rev. Robert Allen Castleman; 1860-67, Rev. B. B. Leacock, D.D.; 1867, Rev. Robert J. Keeling, D.D.

ST. PAUL'S, located at the corner of Sixth and Forster Streets, is the outgrowth of a mission Sunday-school, established under the auspices of St. Stephen's Church, in November, 1857. In the summer of 1858 a frame building was erected at a cost of one thousand dollars, at the north side of the reservoir, on ground donated for the purpose by several of the members of St. Stephen's, and was consecrated by Rt. Rev. Dr. Bowman, assistant bishop of the State, Jan. 13, 1859. St. Paul's congregation was organized Jan. 5, 1859, with the following vestrymen: William P. Beatty, William Buehler, Daniel D. Boas, Benjamin Park, Robert A. Lamberton, Thomas L. Wilson, William T. Hildrup, William Garret, J. R. Jones, John Cruikshank, Charles H. Coates, and Charles Conner. Delegates were elected May 5, 1859, to the Episcopal Convention, which received the congregation into full union. The new church edifice, due chiefly to the legacy of Mr. Charles Conner, was opened June 30, 1878, and consecrated Feb. 23, 1879. The pastors have been: May 13, 1860, to October, 1861, William V. Feltwell; July 1, 1864, to Nov. 18, 1865, Alfred J. Barrow; Dec. 10, 1865, to Dec. 7, 1867, J. H. Hobart Millett; Sept. 18, 1868, to Sept. 13, 1869, Joseph S. Colton; Nov. 18, 1871, to Nov. 30, 1875, W. T. Bowen; Oct. 1, 1876, to 1879, B. F. Brown; July, 1879, Leroy F. Baker, present pastor. During the interregnum, between 1861 and 1864, Rev. B. B. Leacock, of St. Stephen's, frequently officiated, and between 1869 and 1871, occasional services were had by Revs. R. J. Keeling, D.D., and V. H. Berg-haus, and by H. C. Pastorius; then a lay reader.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL.—The first Catholic congregation organized in Dauphin County was located within the present limits of Harrisburg. As early, however, as 1810, the grounds now owned by them on Allison's Hill were in their possession, and the Jesuit Fathers from Conewago visited the place at stated intervals and held services. There also was their first graveyard. At a later date the property came into the possession of William Allison, but in subsequent years was reacquired by the church, and is now held by it. The construction of St. Patrick's was commenced in 1826, by Rev. Michael Curran, the first regular pastor, and consecrated Oct. 2, 1827, by Rt. Rev. Henry Conwell, then bishop of the diocese of Philadelphia. It was a neat building, with a tower and large bell, situated on the north side of State Street, between Second and Third. Its original size was about fifty by seventy-five feet, and its cost from six thousand to seven thousand dollars. The bell belonging to the church was presented by the king of France in acknowledgment of the compliment paid his family in the naming of the county Dauphin. In the course of time, as the congregation increased, the edifice was enlarged some twenty-five feet and otherwise improved. On Father Curran's death, which happened in Astoria, L. I., the Rev. John Foley was appointed to minister. After a few months he was succeeded by Rev. Pierce Maher in 1835. This Father officiated as pastor for many years, endearing himself to his flock by his kind and charitable disposition. Upon the erection of the diocese of Harrisburg, in 1868, he was transferred to Norristown, where he died in December, 1873. St. Patrick's Church became the pro-cathedral of the new diocese. July 12, 1868, the Rt. Rev. J. F. Shanahan was installed the first bishop of Harrisburg in presence of a large concourse of bishops, priests, and laity of this and neighboring dioceses. For some years the Right Reverend Bishop was assisted at the new cathedral by the well-known and much-respected Fathers Barry and Bastible, who, unfortunately for the diocese, died young in their zealous labors. The present pastor is the Rev. Michael J. McBride, a gentleman of learning and well qualified for the priestly office. In December, 1873, the church was enlarged again and remodeled, and its exterior and interior modernized, so that now it is one of the finest churches in the city. It was reopened and consecrated in 1874, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Lynch, of Charleston, S. C.

ST. LAURENCE'S (GERMAN) CHURCH is located on Walnut Street, near Fifth. Its congregation was organized by Father Dryer, of York, in April, 1859, after whose death Rev. M. J. Meurer took charge. From Jan. 1, 1860, it was attended regularly twice a month by Rev. J. Vollmeyer and Rev. M. J. Meurer. Up to this time the congregation had worshiped in a hall, but in November, 1860, it purchased an old church on Front Street, between Walnut and Locust. From Jan. 26, 1862, the church was attended by Rev. C. Schafroth, from the Columbia Church. His successor, Rev. William Pieper, attended twice a month from Dec. 6, 1863, to April, 1868, and was succeeded by Rev. J. B. Frisch, the first resident priest of the congregation. In January, 1869, it was placed in charge of the present pastor, Rev. Clemens A. Koppnagel. The old church edifice was found inadequate for the growing congregation, and in the spring of 1874 the site on which the present large and beautiful church stands, on Walnut near Fifth Street, was secured, and the work of construction immediately commenced. In September, 1878, the building was dedicated. It is a brick structure, and its erection is largely due to the untiring labors of the zealous pastor, Father Koppnagel. Its interior finish is mainly the work of its pastor, who executed all the elaborate carving, decorations, window staining, making of the pulpits, altars, etc. The interior, which will not be finished for several years, is pure Gothic in style. Under the ministrations of the present pastor the congregation has largely increased, and now aggregates over five hundred souls. Adjoining the church, on Short Street, is the parish residence, a fine brick structure, connected with which is the building for the parochial school. Immediately in the rear of the latter is the work-shop, in which the pastor has labored with his own hands in preparing the decorations for the interior of the church.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.

FIRST CHURCH.—On the 10th of February, 1830, Rev. Dyer A. Nichols came to Harrisburg under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Baptist Board of Missions, and proceeded to establish regular services. Sunday meetings were held at private houses, and on the 22d of March, 1830, it was agreed in Council to hold a meeting in the Unitarian Church, then on Locust Street, to organize a church. On April 2, 1830, the meeting was held, with the following persons present, viz.: Rev. Dyer A. Nichols, Griffith E. Roberts, Mary Berry, Abigail Rittenhouse, Ann Wilkinson, Thomas Corbitt, Julia Thompson, and Fanny Phillips, who then constituted themselves the "First Baptist Mission Church of Harrisburg." The first baptism took place July 4, 1830, when Levi L. Tate and Linn Banks were baptized. By September 19th following their number had increased to twenty-one. In the fall the congregation began the erection of a church on Front Street, between Walnut and Locust Streets, which was finished in August, 1831. It was a brick structure, forty by fifty feet, with a school-room in the basement. The original founders were William Griffith, Rev. Dyer A. Nichols, Griffith E. Roberts, and Jeremiah Reese, and the cost of the lot and erection of building was six thousand seven hundred dollars, a large portion of which was contributed by a member of the church. The new edifice was dedicated Aug. 18, 1831, and on September 30th following, Rev. George J. Miles, of Centre County, became pastor, and remained until Feb. 24, 1833. About 1854 the congregation vacated the church building on Front Street, and commenced the erection of a large brick edifice at the east corner of Second and Pine Streets. This was put under roof in 1858, but not completed until 1865. The pastors have been: April 2 to Sept. 30, 1831, Dyer A. Nichols; Sept. 30, 1831, to Feb. 24, 1835, George J. Miles; May 21, 1835, to Nov. 22, 1835, Samuel Wilson; 1836, Thomas G. Keene; Nov. 27, 1837, to Dec. 31, 1839, Edward Kingsford; Sept. 7, 1841, to April, 1846, Matthew T. Semple; July 11, 1844, to March 19, 1845, Edward Conover; Dec. 7, 1845, to June 24, 1846, W. A. Roy; March 3, 1847, to Jan. 1, 1849, Jonas A. Davis; Oct. 11, 1852, to July 15, 1857, David Williams; Aug. 1, 1858, to Aug. 1, 1860, J. Green Miles; April 18, 1861, to May 1, 1863, W. S. Wood; Feb. 1, 1866, to Oct. 1, 1868, E. L. Bailey; April 1, 1869, to April 1, 1873, George Pierce; Oct. 1, 1873, to March 1, 1875, J. A. Kirkpatrick; Sept. 2, 1875, J. T. Judd, present pastor.

BETH EDEN REGULAR BAPTIST CHAPEL is situated on Fourth Street below Hamilton. It is a frame structure, erected in 1871 for mission and Sunday-school purposes, and is under the control of the First Baptist Church.

FIRST FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—The origin of this church was a division in the congregation of the "Church of God" worshiping on Fourth Street. The organization of the seceding members was effected July 10, 1862. In a few months thereafter the organization secured a lot of ground on the corner of Fourth and East State Streets, on which they subsequently erected a church building at a cost of about fifteen thousand dollars, and the edifice was dedicated Feb. 5, 1865, the Rev. G. T. Day, D.D., of Providence, R. I., preaching the sermon. The pastors of the First Free Baptist Church have been: 1862-69, Rev. James Calder, D.D. (during the years 1865 to 1868, Rev. J. S. Burgess was assistant to Rev. Dr. Calder); 1869-71, A. H. Chase; 1872-77, A. F. Bryant; 1877-78, Thomas Burkholder; 1879-81, Thomas H. Drake; 1882, William Fuller.

SECOND FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—The origin of this church was in a committee appointed by the "First Free Baptist Church of Harrisburg, Pa.," in the spring of 1866, to start a missionary Sunday-school on Allison's Hill. The organization of the Second Church took place on Jan. 11, 1873. The pastors in charge of the work from the commencement of the Sunday-school mission, in 1866, up to Jan. 11, 1873, when the workers in the mission enterprise organized themselves into an independent body, were those of the First Free Baptist Church at that time, with the Revs. Silas M. Clark, S. M. Mathews, and others as assistant preachers in charge. In January, 1873, after the church was organized and incorporated as an independent body, the Rev. A. C. Hills was elected pastor, and held the office for one year. In April, 1874, the Rev. John Swank was called to the office, and was the last pastor of the church. The first place of worship was a government army building purchased and re-erected on east side of Hummel Street, and was dedicated Aug. 5, 1866. After worshiping some four years on Hummel Street the congregation repaired to their frame structure, known as "Calder Chapel," on the south side of Derry Street, costing, with the ground on which it stands, three thousand seven hundred dollars. On April 17, 1880, the church was disbanded.

THIRD FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—This church was organized on July 10, 1864, the Rev. Dr. James Calder and Mr. J. T. Bender constituting the council. The first pastor, Rev. C. J. Carter, was elected a few days after its organization, on July 27, 1864. A Rev. Mr. Cooper followed Mr. Carter as pastor, but how long these gentlemen respectively had charge of the church the records do not state. On July 15, 1874, the Rev. Edward Bennett, a member of the church, was elected pastor, and continued in office one year till July, 1875. On July 15, 1875, the Rev. B. F. Fox, a graduate of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., accepted the pastorate, which he retained for two years till Oct. 30, 1877. Then the Rev. William Lewis became pastor, though his term of office is not stated. On June 6, 1880, the Rev. J. W. Dungee, another graduate of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., was ordained pastor of this church. The present incumbent, Rev. E. J. Burrell, another graduate of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., accepted the pastorate June 20, 1881. The house of worship, on corner of William and Calder Streets, is the old Lutheran mission building purchased by the First Free Baptist Church of this city, and in which they used to worship while their present house was building.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

MEMORIAL (U. B.) CHURCH.—Several efforts were made by the denomination to plant the society in Harrisburg, and the records show that as far back as 1850 the United Brethren occupied a small church on Front Street, which was regularly supplied by ministers from the Conference within whose bounds it was situated. From 1850 to 1853, Rev. D. O. Farrell was pastor; from 1853 to 1854, Rev. J. S. Kessler; from 1854 to 1856, Rev. J. L. Holmes; from 1856 to 1857, Rev. D. Strickler; from 1857 to 1858, Rev. J. P. Bishop; and from 1858 to 1859, Rev. I. Carpenter.

The church property was finally sold, and the organization ceased to exist. In 1864 another effort was made to establish a church, but it was soon relinquished. Three years later, at a session of the East Pennsylvania Conference, held in Columbia, it was resolved to renew the effort. A mission was formed, called the Harrisburg Mission Station, and Rev. W. S. H. Keys appointed pastor. Little was done during the first year, but at the next session of Conference Rev. J. Erb was appointed to the work, and the organization of the present society was effected. It proceeded at once to devise ways and means to build a house of worship, and through the persistent efforts of the pastor and board of trustees the lot on which Memorial Church now stands, at the corner of Boas Street and Myrtle Avenue, was purchased, and a neat frame building erected and dedicated.

The pastors of the church have been: 1868-69, Rev. J. Erb; 1870-71, Rev. G. W. M. Rigor; 1872-74, Rev. W. B. Evers; 1875, Rev. G. W. M. Rigor; 1876-77, Rev. J. W. Geiger; 1878-79, Rev. L. Peters; 1880-83, Rev. I. Baltzell; 1883, Rev. David W. Proffitt.

Early in 1879 a number of the members, having become dissatisfied with the advance movements of the church, withdrew and were organized by the East German Conference of the United Brethren in Christ. In 1880 the congregation of Memorial Church determined to build a more commodious house of worship for the accommodation of the rapidly-increasing congregation. By their united and untiring efforts they have completed a large two-story brick church, complete in all its departments, at a cost of about thirteen thousand dollars. The membership numbers two hundred and seventy-five.

PLYMOUTH CHAPEL, corner of Eleventh and Herr Streets, is owned and controlled by the First United Brethren Church, and is used for mission and Sunday-school purposes.

OTTERBEIN CHURCH is a neat edifice, located on Reilly Street, corner of Margaret. It was built in 1880 by former members of Memorial Church. The pastors have been: A. H. Graul, from 1880-82, and A. H. Rice, who came in the latter year.

CALVARY CHURCH was situated on Regina Street near Fifteenth, but is no longer in existence. Its last pastor was Rev. Thomas Garland, in 1880-81.

HEBREW.

OHAF SHALEM (HEBREW) CONGREGATION.—The Ohaf Shalem (Never-ending Peace) congregation was organized prior to 1858, when L. Bernhard was rabbi; A. Rapp, president; and Joseph Newman, treasurer. Its synagogue was then in the second story of the building on Third Street near Walnut Street. Its present synagogue, a substantial two-story structure, built as the first Methodist Church, is situated on Second Street, between South Street and Barbara Avenue. The last rabbi was Rev. L. Loewenberg.

EVANGELICAL CHURCHES.

SALEM CHURCH, located on North Street near Elder, in a one-story brick structure, erected in 1862. Before its construction the Evangelical Association had services by various preachers, among whom were Rev. Mr. Guhl and Rev. G. Marquart. The congregation was organized about 1853, and for some years worshiped in the lower story of the Sons of Temperance Hall, corner of Second and South Streets. The church edifice was built under the auspices of Rev. Mr. Stetzell, whose successors were Revs. Deisher, Gingerich, B. F. Bohner, and Wieant. Since 1871 the pastors have been: 1871-73, Rev. Mr. Fehr; 1873-75, Rev. Mr. Lehr; 1875-76, Rev. Mr. Leibold; 1876-77, Rev. C. A. Miller; 1877-79, Rev. T. A. Blattenberger; 1879, Rev. Jacob Keller.

TRINITY CHURCH was organized March 14, 1874, with fifty-six members, and grew out of Salem Church, whose services were conducted in the German language, whereas the services at Trinity are held in English.

Its pastors have been: 1874-77, J. C. Hornberger; 1877-80, J. A. Fegar; 1880-81, A. W. Warfel; 1881, William H. Rinek, the present incumbent.

The church belongs to the East Pennsylvania Conference. The presiding elder in 1882 was J. K. Fehr. The church building, a frame structure, is located on Broad Street, corner of Fulton.

UNION UNITED CHURCH (WELSH), located on Race Street, near the Lochiel Iron-Works, was erected in 1865. Its congregation is large and steadily increasing.

CHURCH OF GOD.

UNION BETHEL.—The religious organization known as the Church of God was established in 1826-27, by Rev. John Winebrenner, formerly pastor of the First Reformed Church. In 1827 his followers in Harrisburg, having formed a congregation, erected a neat brick edifice on Mulberry Street, between Front and Second Streets. The building was forty by fifty-five feet with a basement story, and remained standing until the summer of 1858. In 1854 the congregation erected a church edifice of brick at the corner of Fourth Street and Strawberry Alley, which it at present occupies. The lot on which the first edifice stood was afterwards occupied by the South Ward public school. The pastors of this church have been :

FIRST BETHEL CHURCH ERECTED AT HARRISBURG.

1827-33, John Winebrenner; 1833-34, Daniel Winters; 1834-35, David Crall; 1836-38, Edward West; 1838-39, David Kyle, J. Dobson; 1839, William Miller; 1840-41, John Winebrenner; 1841-43, E. H. Thomas; 1843-45, George McCartney; 1845-46, Joseph H. Bamberger; 1846-48, William McFadden; 1848-49, Jacob Flake; 1849-50, George U. Harn; 1850-51, William Mooney; 1851-52, J. H. Hurley; 1852-54, William McFadden; 1854-55, James Mackey; 1855-58, James Calder; 1858-59, William Mooney; 1859-64, A. X. Shoemaker; 1864-66, D. A. L. Laverty; 1866-68, C. H. Forney, J. C. Owens; 1867-67, C. H. Forney; 1868-70, J. C. Owens; 1870-71, W. O. Owen; 1871-74, D. A. L. Laverty, A. H. Long; 1874-76, C. Price; 1876-78, B. F. Beck; 1878-81, George Sigler; 1881, C. Price.

ALL WORKERS' BETHEL.—In 1869 a mission and Sunday-school were established by the Union Bethel at the corner of Broad and Second Streets. Henry C. Demming was superintendent of the school. In the spring of 1861, George Yousling secured ground and erected the church edifice on the Two-and-a-half Street corner of Calder.

The three principal founders of this church were George Yousling, Henry C. Demming, and Michael Forney, who each gave seven hundred dollars or more to erect the church building. Mrs. Barbara McFadden was the principal lady engaged in the mission-work which led to the organization of the congregation on March 16, 1874, with twelve persons, increased in a week to twenty-six. The church, for three years called a chapel, was dedicated May 21, 1871. It was erected under the auspices of Rev. D. A. L. Laverty, then pastor of Union Bethel, who preached in it in 1871 and 1872, and in connection with Rev. A. H. Long in 1873.

Its pastors since the formal organization in 1874 have been: 1874-77, Jeremiah Cooper; 1877-78, J. Haiffleigh; 1878-81, G. W. Seilhamer; 1881-83, D. A. L. Laverty; 1883, Thomas Neal, Jr.

NAGLE STREET BETHEL is located on Hanna, near Race Street. The congregation is an outgrowth of Union Bethel and All Workers' Church. It had its origin in the Sunday-school held by Henry C. Demming, as superintendent, in the house of B. F. Bear, No. 231 Paxtang Street, which was opened Aug. 20, 1871. A lot forty by sixty feet was secured by Isaac Frazer and Henry C. Demming, on which the church building, thirty-four by fifty-seven feet, was erected. The church was dedicated Feb. 7, 1875. The congregation was organized by Rev. D. A. L. Laverty in March, 1875.

Its pastors have been: 1875-77, J. C. Seabrooks; 1877-79, J. Esterline; 1879-81, J. M. Speese; 1881-83, J. T. Fliegel; 1883, William Sanborn. Both this and All Workers' Church were organized mainly through the zealous labors of Rev. D. A. L. Laverty and Henry C. Demming.

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH.

The title was chosen in 1816 by Rev. Richard Allen and his associates in Philadelphia, when what is known as the "Bethel" connection was first formed, and in order to make the proper distinction and to avoid controversy the word "Zion" (from the first church established) was subsequently made a part of the title of the first-named connection. From this time every year the African Methodist Episcopal Zion held its two Annual Conferences in New York and Philadelphia. In the mean time, Rev. Christopher Rush, born in North Carolina, but a resident of New York City from 1798, had been elected a superintendent, and the connection in Pennsylvania had grown to extensive proportions, so that in 1830, when the Philadelphia Conference met in Philadelphia, the churches represented were Philadelphia, membership, 882; Attleborough, 27; New Market, 15; Shippensburg, 17; Chambersburg, 72; York, 40; Swatara or Middletown, 40; Reed's Gap, 9; Lewistown, 85;

Bellefonte, 27; Jersey Shore, 17; Williamsport, 14; Huntingdon, 31; and (for the first time) Harrisburg, 115; making in Pennsylvania 841 members.

The Wesley Union Church, containing then one-seventh of the whole State membership, was organized on the 20th of August, 1829, by Elder Jacob D. Richardson, Deacon David Stevens, and a brother named Dorsey. Rev. Richardson's home was York, Pa., but he removed to Harrisburg. The organization took place in a log building at the corner of Third and Mulberry Streets.

At this Conference in 1830, Rev. David Stevens, of Harrisburg, who lately deceased, was ordained an elder and appointed to the charge of what was then styled the Harrisburg Circuit, composed of New Market, Chambersburg, Shippensburg, York, Swatara or Middletown, and Harrisburg. Under Elder Stevens were Deacon David H. Crosby, Deacon Samuel Johnson, and Preacher George Galbraith, who, though he afterwards became superintendent of the connection, was that year admitted only as a preacher on trial. His widow is still living in Harrisburg, an honored representative of the good man who so long and so faithfully served the church.

The ministers in charge of Wesley Union Church, following Rev. David Stevens in the log building, were Jacob D. Richardson, George Galbraith, Thomas Jones, and others whose names we have not been able to secure. In the mean time the old log church was enlarged, being lengthened sixteen feet, under the immediate direction of Rev. Jacob D. Richardson and Rev. David Stevens. In order to eke out his salary and at the same time afford opportunity to the colored children to secure the blessings of education, Rev. Jacob D. Richardson opened in the old log church (Third Street) a day-school, the compensation for which was paid by the commissioners of Dauphin County, Messrs. Archibald Orme, John Imshoffstall, and Abraham Bombaugh; but in November, 1832, they informed the teacher that "in future the colored children under his tuition shall be taught in the Lancasterian school [Walnut opposite Short Street], as the law directs, and that the commissioners will hereafter allow him no compensation for teaching said children." It is an interesting fact that the colored children were removed to the Lancasterian school. One of "the boys," Joseph B. Popel, one of the sanitary officers of the city, is yet living. This was evidently subsequent to the time when the Wesley Union Church had been made a "station" or entitled to the services of a resident pastor. This congregation increased in members, and realized that they must remove their church property farther up in the city, more readily to meet the convenience of the membership. After considerable delay a lot was purchased from the Forster estate at the corner of Short and South Streets, and including Tanner's Alley, and a small, plain brick edifice was erected at the junction of Tanner's Alley and South Street, facing on Tanner's Alley. This building was a great improvement upon the old log church, which had outlived its day. Into the new building the congregation removed on Sunday, Nov. 24, 1839. The pastor in charge at this time was Rev. David Stevens, the first and last in the old church and the first in the new, and there were present to take part in the interesting dedicatory services the first elder set apart in Pennsylvania and one of the founders of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion connection in this State, Rev. Edward Johnson, of Philadelphia, Rev. Jacob D. Richardson, and others. Here, with varying success, this congregation worshiped until 1860. The needs of the increasing population and their better circumstances forced upon them at this time the propriety of enlarging the house of worship or of entirely rebuilding. This latter was determined upon in view of the fact that the church lot was capacious enough for any needed church improvement. The war of the Rebellion breaking out in 1861, it was impossible then to carry out the idea; but in 1862 the present brick edifice was completed, facing, not as formerly, on the alley, but on South Street. In the interval of building, the congregation worshiped in the hall, Tanner's Alley. The first pastor in "the little church around the corner" was Rev. David Stevens; the first in the new edifice, Rev. Abram Cole.

CHAPTER XI.

The Newspaper Press of Harrisburg, and of the County.

FOR the greater portion of the following we are indebted to our friend, A. Boyd Hamilton, Esq. The story of the newspaper press of this locality is very interesting. There are no files of the first newspaper, and our entire knowledge consists in the fact that it is stated in the Oracle of Dauphin in 1807, when noting the death of Maj. Lewis, and in the Chronicle, in 1827, when referring to the authorship of the ballad on "St. Clair's Defeat," that the first newspaper venture at Harrisburg was by Eli Lewis. This was probably named The Harrisburg Advertiser, as that seems to have been the second title of the paper which succeeded it, which was The Oracle of Dauphin and Harrisburg Advertiser, the first number being issued Oct. 20, 1792, by John W. Allen and John Wyeth, continued by Wyeth and by John, Jr., then by Francis Wyeth for about forty years, up to the days of anti-Masonry. It is a valuable reference for most local events, but in many of its earliest years its notices of current or rather domestic news are far between. Partial files of it exist in bound form in the family of Mr. Wyeth; some have been destroyed in a fire which consumed the father's house and store at the corner of Market Square and Street many years ago. Early volumes are in the State Library collection.

The first issue of the paper was made from a house "adjoining the register's office, Harrisburg." That office was then at the northwest corner of Second and Walnut Streets, "near Bombach's tavern." The printers soon removed to "Mulberry Steet, opposite the residence of Adam Boyd, Esq., near the bank," where the post-office was also kept; then to the northeast corner of the Market Square and Market Street, where it was published as long as it survived. When this paper was commenced the territory of Dauphin County included all of the present Lebanon, up to the year 1813. It was edited with great prudence, and without any attempt at brilliancy.

Messrs. Allen & Wyeth had a well-furnished printing-office of English and German type, and printed and published before 1803, neatly bound, price three shillings, "Reflections on Courtship and Marriage, in Two Letters to a Friend." This work is in clean print, on dark paper, from excellent type, with the additional recommendation to a biblioplist of careful proof-reading and ink of a character far superior to that of the present day. Binney & Ronaldson cast the type.

Die Unparteiische Harrisburgh (Morgenrothe) Zeitung was the imposing title of the first German newspaper published in Dauphin County. Its initial issue was March 1, 1794, its printers Benjamin Mayer and Conrad Fahnestock, its politics Democratic, and for a number of years its proprietors were the leading politicians of the county; the subscription price one dollar a year, single copies "ein cent," perhaps the very first penny paper in the United States. It was continued by Benjamin Mayer as Die Morgenrothe until 1811. Mr. Mayer resided in a house on the southeast corner of Chestnut Street and Dewberry Alley, where the paper was printed. It afforded a handsome living to its owners for several years, but, as tradition has it, they, like all politicians of that day, expended the income a shade more rapidly than they made it, and so came to grief in a pecuniary way. The senior partner died a poor man. Mr. Fahnestock removed from Harrisburg to Middletown, where he engaged in merchandising and there died. In 1811, John S. Wiestling, who had been taught his trade in the office, purchased the establishment. Soon after he had associated with him Christian Gleim, "a young man from Lebanontown." They carried on the business several years. Mr. Gleim was afterwards sheriff of this county, while Mr. Wiestling ended his career as an iron manufacturer. Files of the earlier years of this paper are in the possession of the State Library and Dr. Egle, subsequent years John L. Lingle and Gen. Cameron: It is probable the later volumes are in the possession of some of the descendants of the various editors. The regular publication ended about 1838, making its age quite forty years.

The Farmers' Instructor and Harrisburg Courant, published by Benjamin Mayer, was issued Jan. 2, 1800, first a folio, then in quarto, and, so far as we have been able to discover, copies of it treated every other subject at large except agriculture. Its original effusions were very brief and do not exhibit shining ability. Mr. John L. Lingle has a complete file of this paper in excellent preservation. There are a few numbers of it in the collection of the Dauphin County Historical Society.

The Dauphin Guardian, "from the press of Jacob Elder, in Second Street, next door to the sign of the Seven Stars," commenced in June, 1805, and continued for five or six years. Mr. Elder was one of the numerous grandsons of the Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang. The files, so far as preserved, give greater attention to local occurrences than its cotemporaries, at present a most important and interesting department of editorial labor. Several volumes of the Guardian are in the State Library, and also in the possession of Dr. Egle. Mr. Elder died at a comparatively early age about 1816. His paper was merged in the Republican in 1811.

The Times, "printed by David Wright," issued Sept. 21, 1807. Perfect copies of it to the time of its discontinuance, in 1810, are in the State Library. It was soon after removed to and issued at Lancaster, the then seat of government. Its editor was Hugh Hamilton, then a young lawyer just admitted to the bar of Dauphin County, and he continued his editorial labors for nearly thirty years after this time.

The Harrisburg Republican was issued by James Peacock in 1811, and published by him for ten or twelve years, when Mr. Peacock was appointed postmaster. The paper then passed into other hands, subsequently merged into the Intelligencer. If a complete file of it exists, it is in the collection of Gibson Peacock, of Philadelphia. The senior Peacock published his paper when the politics of Pennsylvania partook of whatever element of savageness was necessary to make it exciting and an editor's life uncomfortable. He survived it all, and to a good old age, departing this life in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, regretted by the very large circle who had partaken of his liberal hospitality and enjoyed the pleasure of his conversation. The Republican was a continuance of the Guardian, Mr. Peacock having purchased that paper and its good will, by the aid of John Downey and Jacob Boas, both men of importance in the then village. As it came out in subsequent political squabbles, Downey and Boas became irreconcilable enemies on account of a personal quarrel of the latter with Gloninger, of Lebanon, a standard friend of Downey. Governor Snyder having married the sister of Mr. Peacock's wife, was always ready to sustain his friend and relative, and the Republican was soon looked upon as the organ of Snyder and his cabinet. Yet the editor, practical printer as he was, at last became quite as important a factor in the political and social life of Pennsylvania as those who "patronized" him in his early years. He deserved to be, for he was a courteous and upright gentleman.

The Chronicle or Harrisburg Visitor, first issued May 8, 1818, "by William Gillmor, next door to Dr. Agnew's, and one door from the post-office, on Walnut Street." In 1815, Hugh Hamilton came in as partner and its editor. In 1820, Mr. Gillmor retired, and Hugh McIlwaine took his place. Soon the whole establishment came into the hands of Mr. Hamilton, and it was continued under his control and that of his son, A. Boyd Hamilton, until 1836, when it passed by purchase to Jesse R. Burden, Charles B. Penrose, and Nicholas Biddle, and Mr. Guyer became the editor. It was continued with varying success until 1842, when its publication ceased. Capt. McIlwaine was a pupil of William Duane, a carefully-trained workman and rigid instructor, as the late Chief Justice James Thompson would testify if he were alive. The technical lessons he received under McIlwaine on the Chronicle, after his imperfect training in a Western printing-office, he always said, "were the making of him," greatly assisting him in that system of detail which made him a "figure in the State." McIlwaine was a sergeant in Walker's company in its march to Baltimore, and was noted for the manner and care with which he performed his duties. It was the first paper to report "legislative proceedings" with fullness at the seat of government, and to give to its readers semi-weekly editions during the sessions of the General Assembly. A complete file of it is in the State Library. It was the organ of Governor Hiester and his cabinet as much as the Republican had been that of Snyder and his friends. Much of the correspondence respecting the course proper to be pursued by Governor Hiester is preserved. It shows how much anxiety was felt about it, and also that the political history of 1819-20 resembles that of to-day, reticence being the distinguishing feature. Decisions were not announced then before they were published.

The Commonwealth, by John McFarland and William Greer, commenced in 1818, printed at Third and State Streets, and continued without success for four or five years. No file of it is known to be in existence.

The Pennsylvania Intelligencer, Dec. 5, 1820, by Charles Mowry. In 1822, Simon Cameron came in as partner; in a few years Cameron and David Krause, then John S. Wiestling, then McCurdy, Elliott, and many others until about 1838. The family of Mr. Mowry should have a set of the paper, Mr. Cameron also up to the time he ceased to be connected with it. There are several volumes in the State Library. This newspaper had its existence in a lively political season. Its original editor and some of his successors were masters of trenchant pens, of which they made warlike use, and many a man about Harrisburg will detail the lively expectation with which the weekly issues of this and its antagonist, the Chronicle, were looked for by their subscribers. When the political complications arose respecting a successor to Mr. Monroe, that portion of political opinion which had been led by the Intelligencer refused to follow. Then Gen. Cameron with happy fortune sold to Judge Krause, who carried on a stout contest with the Jacksonians until 1828. Samuel C. Stambaugh, printing the Free Press at Lancaster, which he had commenced in 1818, then came upon the exciting scene. The Press had shown his ability, notwithstanding its careless make-up, and soon took rank as one of the brightest, most reckless and successful of newspapers. Stambaugh was an energetic, hard-headed, positive sort of man. He issued proposals for a new paper, to be called The Pennsylvania Reporter, at the same time offering to buy out the Intelligencer. It was accepted, and its career ceased, but only for a short time, for as soon as Governor Shulze and the men about him could prepare it was reissued by John S. Wiestling. He thus became the owner of the two leading newspapers, English and German. He had a "gay and festive" following, a liberal support, was on the road to fortune, when he was tempted to "sell out to David Krause and George P. Wiestling." Mr. Wiestling was an enterprising gentleman and respected citizen. For a long while he had his office in Second Street above Locust, now Dr. DeWitt's; then in Market Street, north side, near River Alley; then opposite the courthouse, now Mr. Gilbert's. The career of the Intelligencer finished under the management of Mr. Colin McCurdy.

Der Unabhaengige Beobachter, a German weekly, commenced by William White & Co., May 22, 1822. It was continued for eight or ten years with varying success, under several able editors, among others the Rev. Dr. E. W. Hutter. Of all its numerous editors Capt. Jacob Babb alone survives. It was commenced as the German organ of Governor Hiester's friends, and was a trusted organ in Jacksonian days.

The American Patriot was issued in 1812 and 1813, with Alexander Hamilton as editor. We have never met with but one copy of this venture. Its life was nearly two years.

The Ladies' Souvenir, by George E. Ludwig, issued July 21, 1827. It was published for about six months, a pleasant and cheerful quarto, but politics was then the absorbing theme, and its proprietor was wise enough to retire in time. A complete file of this paper is in the collection of A. Boyd Hamilton.

The Farmers' and Mechanics' Journal, by John S. Wiestling, issued Aug. 12, 1827, and continued to Dec. 15, 1827, when it merged in the Intelligencer, with the title Pennsylvania Intelligencer and Farmers' and Mechanics' Journal.

The Pennsylvanian, by Christian Gleim, in 1824. This paper had a short life. No file of it is known to exist.

The Christian Monitor, a weekly religious paper, by John M. Keagy, M.D., in January, 1826. Only one or two numbers were issued, so far as can be ascertained.

The Harrisburg Argus, of 1827, was published by Francis Wyeth. Some fifteen years after this another Argus was published by Valentine Best, senator from Columbia County in the State Legislature. A file of this paper nearly perfect is known. Its career was brief.

Pennsylvania Statesman, by John McCord, in May, 1828. This paper had entered upon its fourth year when, as narrated subsequently, it was merged into the Telegraph. A file is in the possession of Dr. Egle. Mr. McCord had formerly edited the Elkton, Md., Press.

The Pennsylvania Telegraph was started by Theophilus Fenn in September, 1831. The following extracts from a letter of the founder will be of interest, and inform the curious how the paper came to be issued by Mr. Fenn fifty years ago:

"In the winter of 1831, when I was living at Lancaster and publishing the Herald, which I had established in 1828, I received numerous letters from gentlemen of influence in many parts of the State urging me to establish a paper at Harrisburg, saying that without an organ at the seat of government, to advocate the principles that I supported, the party could not become organized over the State. I was opposed to the undertaking, as I had succeeded in securing a large circulation for my paper and a large jobbing patronage, with my party also largely in the majority. My business being prosperous and promising, I peremptorily declined and urged that some one else be selected. . . . I sold my establishment in April, 1831. I soon after issued my prospectus for the Pennsylvania Telegraph, which I purposed to commence in the following fall, before the meeting of the Legislature in December. I also visited Harrisburg about the close of the session of the Legislature, and while there was called upon by John McCord, who proposed to sell me the Statesman, a newspaper which he had started there a year or two before; but I declined to purchase. . . . I closed with Mr. McCord by paying him three thousand dollars down for the Statesman and seven hundred dollars to continue its publication under his own name and editorship until I should take possession of the office in September following, thus giving me time to settle up my business at Lancaster. As arranged, I came to Harrisburg in September and took possession of the office of the Statesman. . . . I issued the first number of the Telegraph in September, 1831. Neither Mr. McCord nor any other person but myself wrote one line of that number, nor did he ever write a line for the paper while I conducted it, which was until November, 1853, when it was sold to John J. Patterson. . . . I found less than three hundred regular subscribers to the Statesman. But being encouraged by the large receipt of subscribers over the State and the letters from political friends, I pocketed the disappointment and tossed the loss behind me and went ahead, well knowing the unrelenting hostility and desperate encounter that was before me. I spent twenty-two years of unpaid toil, the prime of my life, in conducting the Telegraph, and made every sacrifice in my power to build up the party, without receiving the benefit of office or even the acknowledgment of those who obtained the 'loaves and fishes' that were due for my services."

As stated, Mr. Fenn sold to John J. Patterson, who had a short time previous purchased the Whig State Journal of John J. Clyde, the Telegraph of course absorbing the latter newspaper. A few months after Mr. Patterson sold one-third of the establishment to Stephen Miller and another one-third to John J. Clyde. The year following Patterson sold the remaining interest to Mr. Miller and retired from the editorial arena. In 1856, prior to the opening of the Presidential campaign, Messrs. Miller and Clyde sold the establishment to Alexander K. McClure and James M. Sellers. The former had just retired from the Juniata Sentinel, the Telegraph affording a wider political field for his trenchant pen. In 1857 the paper passed into the hands of the late George Bergner, and became a financial success. From the death of Mr. Bergner until the present year his son, Charles H. Bergner, has had complete control of the establishment. It is now owned and managed by the Harrisburg Telegraph Company. Many of the sets of its files were destroyed in a fire some years ago. The State Library has as nearly a perfect file as can be found; indeed, it is very nearly complete.

Vaterlands Waechter, commenced in 1829 by Joseph Miller, was purchased by Samuel Kling in 1832, and at his death, June 5, 1836, passed into the hands of Joseph Ehrenfried, of Lancaster, with whom Mr. Kling had learned the art of printing, and subsequently to the control of the late George Bergner, who continued its publication until his death. Under the same name it was continued by Frederick C. A. Scheffer, who in 1876 changed it to the Dauphin County Journal. Since Mr. Scheffer's death the newspaper has been published by Dr. J. R. Hayes.

The Gospel Publisher, the organ of the "Church of God," was issued under the auspices of this religious body June 5, 1835, edited by the Rev. John Winebrenner. Afterwards it had many editors,—Messrs. Weishampe, McCartney, Mackey, etc. According to the history of this paper, by the late Dr. George Ross, of Lebanon, the money loss to the church in the first decade of its existence was nearly five thousand dollars. It was discontinued for some years, but subsequently revived, and under its change of name, The Church Advocate, has been a financial success. We believe a complete file is in possession of the family of Dr. Ross, in Lebanon.

The Republican and Anti-Masonic Inquirer was commenced in 1833 by Francis Wyeth, former editor of the Oracle. It was continued to a fourth volume, when its publication ceased. It had a considerable circulation in Dauphin, Lebanon, and Cumberland Counties. I do not know of any complete set of its issues. Its editors, private and public, were Samuel Shoch, George W. Harris, and Francis Wyeth, assisted by a knot of young lawyers with more brains than business. They made a bright paper of it; but no amount of capacity could render permanent a publication founded upon so narrow a plank as opposition to secret societies; in particular that of Masonry, embracing as it did then and now nearly the whole body of public men and professional politicians.

Iron Grey, by John H. Cox, in 1838. A file exists.

The Plough Boy, by — Rutter, in 1838. No file known.

Pennsylvania Bulletin, in 1839, by Shunk & Weidler. This was a short-lived publication, a partial file of which is known.

Der Stats Bothe, by Edwin W. Hutter and Samuel S. Bigler, in 1839. It is presumed that full files of this paper exist.

The Magician, by E. W. Hutter and J. J. Cantine, in 1839, a file of which has probably not been preserved.

Log Cabin Rifle, by Henry Montgomery, a campaign paper, 1840, in favor of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too."

The Yeoman, by E. W. Hutter and S. S. Bigler, in 1841. A file of this paper is known.

The Watchman, by James S. Wallace, in 1841. No file known.

The Signal, John S. Steck, in 1841. No file known.

The Commonwealth, by William Lewis, in 1843. No file.

The Penny Advocate, by Cherrick Westbrook, in 1843. The first number was issued July 15, 1843, from "No. 68 Market Street, basement story." It was a small quarto and published every Wednesday and Saturday evening, at one dollar and fifty cents a year. The terms of advertising was "a penny a line for each insertion." The Advertiser reached twenty-two numbers, a file of which is in the possession of Mr. Westbrook.

The year 1843 was prolific of new enterprises, as the Oracle and all its successors, save one or two, had ceased to be published.

The Champion, a campaign paper of 1844, published by Augustus Sprigman. It was conducted with remarkable vigor in favor of Shunk as against Muhlenberg.

Whig Bugle, by Colin McCurdy, a campaign paper in favor of Gen. Taylor for President, 1848.

Crystal Fountain, in 1856, by John J. Clyde. The organ of the then great temperance movement in the State. It was continued for several years.

The American was established by John J. Clyde in 1856 in connection with his daily newspaper,—The Herald.

The rise and progress, the generation and succession of the Pennsylvania Reporter embraces so much that an endeavor to combine its history from 1827 to the present has been made. It was issued in a time of great political excitement, November, 1827, by Samuel C. Stambaugh, and in its history is the story of many other ventures. It has been continued by a crowd of able editors. The whole is now merged in the Patriot, published by a company, and of necessity without a "fighting editor," as was always the case before 1856. About that period editors began to be impersonal. In the good old times courageous personality, not ability, often made a popular newspaper editor.

Mr. William D. Boas gives us the following memoranda:

"November, 1827. The Pennsylvania Intelligencer was purchased and suspended. Samuel C. Stambaugh then established the Pennsylvania Reporter and Democratic Herald.

"March, 1829. Mr. Simon Cameron, who was a silent partner of Mr. Stambaugh up to that time, withdrew from the paper, and Stambaugh formed a connection with Mr. Henry Welsh, at that time one of the editors of the York Gazette, and Hon. Jesse Miller, of the State Senate. The paper was afterwards published under the firm of Stambaugh, Welsh & Co.

"In 1829, Mr. Stambaugh withdrew from the paper, which was afterwards published by Henry Welsh and Jesse Miller, under the firm of Welsh & Miller.

"December, 1830. Jesse Miller withdrew from the paper, leaving Mr. Welsh sole proprietor and editor.

"May, 1834. Henry Welsh formed a partnership with Samuel D. Patterson, who afterwards published the paper under the firm of Welsh & Patterson, and added to the title Democratic Herald."

The Reporter was greatly enlarged and improved in December of this year, and continued to be edited with vigor and success. In the following spring Mr. Welsh disposed of his interest to his brother-in-law, Mr. David Small. It is unnecessary to write that both retired in comfortable circumstances.

The Democratic State Journal was started March 28, 1832, by Geo. W. Crabb & O. Barrett,—"office near the south end of the court-house." It had a brief but stormy existence, and in the number for Jan. 12, 1836, Crabb bows himself out, and the paper was consolidated with the Pennsylvania Reporter, David Small of the latter also retiring. As The Reporter and State Journal it was published by Patterson & Barrett. On the 1st of June following, in a three-line paragraph, Mr. Barrett informs the patrons of his paper that his connection with it terminated. Mr. Patterson remained sole publisher until Sept. 1, 1837, when William D. Boas purchased an interest in the establishment, and a month later the whole concern passed into his hands. Thomas L. Wilson, of Philadelphia, was editor. In April, 1838, William F. Coplin, senator from Fayette County, entered into partnership with Boas, the firm retaining the editorial services of Wilson. March 6, 1840, Coplin retired. For over a year Boas battled alone; but, as the editorial of May 4, 1841, expresses it, "Samuel D. Patterson has returned to the arduous task of helping to conduct it as an independent, faithful, and zealous exponent of Democracy." April 29, 1842, Mr. Boas takes his leave of the Reporter and retires from the editorial field, Patterson remaining until October following, when John H. Dimock, of Susquehanna County, now of Chicago, purchased the establishment, who, in a whole column leader, takes occasion to advocate the claims of Mr. Buchanan for the Presidency. The last number issued was June 2, 1843. It was merged in the new arrangement. Two years after the name was assumed by Isaac R. Diller, to which we shall again refer. Almost a complete file is possessed by the State Library.

The Keystone, started in August, 1836, by William F. Packer, afterwards Governor of the State, O. Barrett, and Benjamin Parke. The senior member remained until February, 1840, when he disposed of his interest to Barrett & Parke, "the arduous duties appertaining to the office of canal commissioner" compelling him to relinquish it. Ovid F. Johnson edited this paper with great vigor. In April, 1841, James Peacock and Isaac G. McKinley purchased the establishment. Mr. Peacock, in October following, sold his interest to Joseph M. G. Lescure, of Philadelphia. Messrs. McKinley and Lescure continued its publication until the union of the three Democratic papers on June 7, 1843.

In 1848, Mr. Barrett commenced a newspaper with the old title of Keystone, which continued for several years. The complete files of this, with other of Mr. Barrett's newspaper ventures, were destroyed in the burning of a frame building corner of Fourth Street and Cherry Alley, where they had been stored, with the exception of some volumes which are in the possession of the State Library.

The Home Journal and Citizen Soldier is the title of the paper printed by Isaac R. Diller in 1843. In August, 1845, the name was changed to The Pennsylvania Reporter and Home Journal: It was published a short time. It caused quite a sensation by printing in its columns a local story founded on the Parthenmore murder, by that strange erratic genius George Lippard. It was entitled, "Posy, or the Pilgrimage of St. George."

State Capital Gazette, by William Henlock and John B. Bratton, now of Carlisle, commenced July, 1839, and continued until June, 1843, when it ceased for the purpose of uniting with the Pennsylvania Reporter and Keystone, under the title of the Democratic Union. A file is in the State Library. It was undoubtedly in the front ranks of the so-called country newspapers. It was ably edited, neat in typographical appearance and make-up. This was succeeded by the Union and Patriot, in the hands of George M. Lauman, then came Richard J. Haldeman, Christopher L. Ward, William H. Miller, John W. Brown, Thomas C. Macdowell, O. Barrett, Benjamin F. Meyers, and other prominent editors, politicians or men of fortune.

That the present Patriot might "shed its beams upon a darkened world," it was necessary to swallow some fifteen ventures, a manifest proof of the enterprise of the printers and young lawyers of Pennsylvania, who supposed the newspaper route was the exact and rapid way to fame and station.

Harrisburg Star, by William J. Sloan, about 1830. It was not a very creditable sheet in its typography, as the editor was a mere lad, not much of a printer, but with so much ability in another direction that came to be an able departmental surgeon in the United States army. One or two of its issues have been preserved, but no complete file, except perhaps among the effects of its "responsible editor."

Whig State Journal, issued in 1850 by John J. Clyde. Sold to John J. Patterson, who subsequently purchased the Telegraph, into which this paper was merged.

For many years one or two of the weekly papers issued semi-weekly, and one, a daily, during the sessions of the Legislature; but no venture was made for the permanent establishment thereof until late in 1850.

The Harrisburg Daily American was commenced Dec. 26, 1850, by George Bergner & Co. Subsequently it became a part of the Harrisburg Telegraph. It was established as a Whig organ. In the course of time its opposition to the Know-Nothing organization was very decided. A file for several years is in the collection of the State Library.

The Daily Times, 1853, was a venture of William H. Egle and Theodore F. Scheffer, at the suggestion of a number of prominent citizens. The Morning Herald, by John J. Clyde & Co., was issued the same year. The borough not being able to support three daily papers, the Times was merged into the Herald. The latter paper was shortly after absorbed, or rather continued by the Daily Telegraph. It may be remarked that the Telegraph has absorbed almost as many newspaper ventures as its contemporary, the Patriot, and its editors were of the picked men of their political party.

The Daily Borough Item, by George P. Crap & Louis Blanche. It commenced in 1852, a small penny paper, not very prepossessing in appearance, but gave a good résumé of local events, and a file of it would be useful for reference. We do not think there is one in existence. On account of its frequent personalities, it failed to receive the general support of the community.

Daily Herald, by Stephen Miller & Co., commenced Dec. 23, 1853, and after and up to 1858 in the hands of Royal, McReynolds & Whitman, was at last merged in the Harrisburg Telegraph. Mr. Miller was at the time the paper commenced prothonotary of Dauphin County, afterwards Governor of Minnesota. A file of this paper is in the State Library.

The Platform, in 1854, a campaign paper of large circulation, by A. Boyd Hamilton, edited by a full dozen of the friends of Governor Bigler. We do not know where a copy of this publication is to be found. It was the first newspaper that thoroughly carried out the plan of payment in advance. Very many thousands of copies were ordered, but as the cash did not cover the order, the paper was not forwarded, and its circulation was limited to those who did pay, about fifteen thousand.

The Harrisburg Daily Record was issued by Henry Omit & Co., Jan. 3, 1854, edited by George F. Emerson. We have not been able to learn whether any file of this paper exists, although some of the company who established it are yet alive.

The Pennsylvania Statesman, established as a campaign paper in 1860, by J. M. Cooper. It advocated the election of John C. Breckinridge for President. It was a lively sheet.

The State Guard, a daily, published by Forney & Kauffman, commenced about 1866, and continued for several years. Some of its issues contain facts of permanent value, and it is to be hoped a full set of this paper has been preserved.

The State Journal, a daily, published by the State Journal Company, was begun in October, 1870, and continued until November, 1873, when the office was destroyed. Its chief editor was Wein Forney, and was just being established on a paying basis when it met its fate by the burning of Mr. Singerly's printing-office.

The Visitor, a religious paper, in 1824, by Michael W. McKinley. One or two numbers of its issue satisfied its editor and publisher.

The Mercury was a daily paper of 1875, by the Mercury Company.

The Dawn, a weekly of the same year, by J. Trainor King.

The Temperance Vindicator, by Geo. F. McFarland.

The Scroll-Keeper.

The National Progress.

The Harrisburg Chronicle, by Thomas C. MacDowell. These three newspapers were unsuccessful ventures, and had a very brief existence.

The Stars and Stripes, Buchanan and Breckinridge campaign paper, 1866, by George F. Weaver, Sr.

The newspapers published in Dauphin County at present (1883) are:

DAILY.—Harrisburg Telegraph, by the Harrisburg Publishing Company. Twenty-sixth year.

The Harrisburg Patriot, by Patriot Publishing Company. Twenty-fourth year.

The Daily Independent, by E. Z. Wallower. Sixth year.

WEEKLY.—The Rem, Steelton, by J. A. Work. Eighth year.

The Middletown Journal, by J. W. Stofer. Twenty-eighth year.

The Middletown Press, by I. O. Nissley. Second year.

The Hummelstown Sun, by W. R. Hendricks. Ninth year.

The Millersburg Herald, by J. B. Seal. Eighth year.

Lykens Register, by Samuel M. Fenn. Seventeenth year.

Dauphin County Journal (German), Harrisburg, by Dr. J. R. Hayes. Sixth year.

Harrisburg Saturday Night, by Dr. J. R. Hayes. Fourth year.

Pennsylvania Staats Zeitung, Harrisburg, by the executrix of John G. Ripper, deceased, W. Strobel, editor: Sixteenth year.

Church Advocate, Harrisburg, edited by Rev. C. H. Forney, D.D.

Steelton Reporter, by W. H. H. Sieg. First year.

The Sunday Morning Telegram, published every Sunday morning by the Telegram Company, Harrisburg, in its first year, thus far has been a successful enterprise. John Moore, editor.

In addition to the foregoing are the following periodicals, issued monthly or semi-monthly:

The Conference News, organ of the Central Pennsylvania Methodist Conference, by Rev. W. M. Fry-singer.

The Lutheran Chimes, published by Zion Lutheran (Fourth Street) Church.

Church and Home, published by Market Square Presbyterian Church.

Odd-Fellows' Gazette, by T. Morris Chester.

People's Friend, organ of the local temperance movement.

Bulletin, organ of the Y. M. C. Association.

The Itinerant, by A. L. Groff, organ of the U. B. Church. Seventh year.

CHAPTER XII.

The Industries of Harrisburg—The Location of the City and its Great Natural and Acquired Advantages.

WITH its many advantages, its close proximity to the iron and coal fields, its water supply, its transportation facilities, its markets unexcelled in the variety and abundance of fruit, vegetables, meats, fowl, fish, and butter and eggs, Harrisburg should be a notable manufacturing centre. At present it lies across the pathway of one of the great transportation lines which binds the East to the West, while the future promises to give it another great trunk line, binding the North, South, East and West. This is no idle prophecy, for as we look at this country and its capabilities we see that latitudinally there is a sameness of products, differing only in degree, whilst longitudinally the difference is in kind. This being a fact it naturally follows that as the country fills up with population the interchange of commodities will increase in like proportion. The North will always need the products of the South, while the South, under the operation of climatic influences, cannot advance in manufacturing, and will always need the manufactures of the North. The day is not far distant when the great trunk lines of transportation will traverse the land in all directions, and when it arrives Harrisburg, lying right across the pathway of the national route from Boston and New York in the North to New Orleans and the Gulf in the South, will be as important a centre in that direction as it is now with the inter-commerce of the country traversing the land from east to west.

This locality is well off for furnace sites, and as the demand increases they will fill up. Coke is gradually supplanting coal in the manufacture of iron, as coal has supplanted charcoal, and the probabilities are that the furnaces of the future will all be built to accommodate them to the use of coke. Our furnace sites are on the direct line of the coke's transit from the ovens to the seaboard.

No city in the United States is better supplied with water, and that water of the purest. The very nature of the Susquehanna preserves this to us. No stream in the land is freer from impurities. The health, too, of the city, notwithstanding the bad name it received at the hands of its neighbor Lancaster during the "removal of the seat of government question" on account of the "mill-dam" troubles, and which it retains owing to the keeping up of the same issue, is as good if not better than any river town in the State or Union. Statistics go to prove that the annual death-rate is far less than any city in the United States. With all these advantages it is not surprising that it has been so greatly prosperous. There is no location equal to it in all the essentials for the establishment of manufacturing industries.

THE HARRISBURG CAR MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—Among the numerous extensive industrial establishments whose works have assumed such vast proportions as to exert a powerful interest upon the prosperity of the city, the Harrisburg Car Manufacturing Company's works occupy the leading position. The plant of this company, consisting of two departments, car-works and foundry and machine-works, occupying separate locations, aside from its prominence as the leading industrial establishment of the city, ranks as the equal of any similar industry in the United States in point of capacity and annual output of product, and is one of the largest and most important industries in our State. The car-works was put in operation in 1853, with a paid-up capital of two thousand five hundred dollars and a productive capacity of nine eight-wheeled cars a week. The original stockholders were Messrs. William Calder, David Fleming, Jacob Haldeman, Sr., Elias E. Kinzer, Thomas H. Wilson, A. O. Heister, W. F. Murray, Isaac G. McKinley, all of this city, and William T. Hildrup, a practical car-builder from Worcester, Mass. The company then owned two and one-half acres of ground west of Herr Street, where its present extensive works are located, which had formerly been used as a truck-garden, and the surroundings gave very little promise of the busy population now inhabiting that portion of our city. In 1863, after being in operation ten years, the capital stock of the company was increased to $300,000, which has since been still further increased to $500,000. As early as 1871 the manufacturing capacity of the plant was greater in daily product than the weekly output named at the beginning; the annual product that year amounted to $1,250,000. April 25, 1872, the works were entirely consumed by fire, entailing a loss of several hundred thousand dollars, yet such was the energy of the parties that in the short space of ninety days the works were rebuilt with increased size and capacity. The following August another fire broke out, entirely destroying the machine-shops, which department was rebuilt and put in operation in the almost incredible short space of thirteen and one-half working days; and notwithstanding the loss of means and time by fire, the production for the year was carried to the enormous sum of two million dollars. The panic of 1873 affected the car-building business probably more than any other branch of business in the country, yet such was the demand for the products of this company that the business for the year amounted to over two million dollars. This in brief is the early history of the car-works department, and before attempting to review the present extensive works now owned and operated by the company it is necessary to briefly sketch the origin and history of the foundry and machine-works, located on Allison's Hill and operated by the company, inasmuch as from this point to the end of our sketch the two industries will be incorporated in summing up the aggregate total of output, number of employes, and wages paid.

The Harrisburg Foundry and Machine-Works owes its existence to Mr. Hildrup's mechanical attainments and executive ability. This gentleman, who has been the general superintendent and business manager of the car-works industry since its foundation, in order to keep their vast number of men employed during a season of depression in the car-building business which occurred about 1865, began the manufacture of agricultural implements and machinists' tools. This industry was carried on for a few years in the car-works plant, but it was not long until a boom in the car-building business required all the space in the works for that purpose. Consequently the company were obliged to either give up the manufacture of the articles mentioned above or erect suitable buildings to carry on the industry. They decided to continue the industry, and about 1867 erected the large works now in operation on Allison's Hill. The buildings comprising this plant were used for car-building during the time required to build the car-works destroyed by fire. In place of the original two and a half acres of ground, the company now own fifty-eight acres of valuable city land, located as follows: Thirty-three acres north of the Pennsylvania Railroad, from Broad to State Streets, upon which the car-works are erected; twenty-two acres on Allison's Hill, where the foundry and machine-works are located; and three acres opposite the Wister Furnace, where the company's large saw-mill is located. The principal buildings comprising the car-works plant are imposing in their dimensions and architectural appearance, consisting of three construction-shops,—one sixty by two hundred and eighty-two feet, one sixty by two hundred feet, and one forty by two hundred and eleven feet in dimensions; foundry, sixty-two by two hundred and twenty feet; machine-shop, sixty-one by one hundred and twenty feet, two stories; blacksmith-shop, forty-five by two hundred and sixty-one feet, containing forty-six forges, five steam-hammers, and an immense drop-hammer of two thousand five hundred pounds power; repair-shop, thirty-eight by one hundred feet; frame-shop, sixty by two hundred feet, two stories; planing-mill, eighty by one hundred and ten feet; engine- and boiler-house, forty by eighty feet; office, forty by forty-one feet, two stories; warehouse, twenty-six by forty feet, two stories, used for storing car-springs and fine brass castings; together with a host of other buildings, which, with a few exceptions, are brick structures, and are all roofed either with slate or tin. The foundry and machine-works on Allison's Hill are comprised in a series of buildings, five of which are sixty by two hundred feet, and one fifty by two hundred, all two stories. These contain foundry, machine-, boiler-, tank-, and finishing- or setting-up-shops, and the warehouse and counting-rooms of the concern. The remaining buildings are one-story structures, adapted to forging, storage of raw material, and other departments. All the buildings are connected with each other by railways which form a junction with the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. As might be expected, the works are thoroughly equipped with all the latest improved mechanical devices and appliances that will tend to facilitate speed and perfection of product. The machinery is of the most powerful and accurate character, embracing every improvement that ingenuity and skill has been able to devise, the larger portion of which was manufactured in the machine-shop of the company, both from private and standard patterns and specifications. Twelve stationary engines are necessary to propel the acres of machinery throughout the works, ranging in power from small fifteen-horse to monster one hundred and twenty horse-power affairs.

Sixteen thirty-four-feet eight-wheeled box-cars is the present daily productive capacity of the car-works plant, two of which are known as refrigerator cars, Wickes' patent, for the Merchants' Dispatch Transportation Company, elaborate affairs, that require as much time to construct as six ordinary box-cars. To produce the enormous daily output requires the labor of six hundred and fifty men and boys. The daily consumption of material foots up fifty-five thousand feet of lumber, most of which is Southern pine, thirty tons of wheel-, twenty-three tons of bar-, eleven tons of axle-, and seventeen tons of pig-iron. The company do not forge their own axles, but make all their own wheels, casting one hundred and twenty a day from the best charcoal chilling iron. From year to year improvements have been made in the material used in manufacturing cars and the machinery necessary to its preparation, so that the work now produced by the company is so near perfection that it seems almost impossible that a further improvement can be effected in car manufacture. The products of the machine and foundry department on Allison's Hill consists of a line of heavy castings and machines for rolling-mills and blast-furnaces, compound pumping-engines of any capacity for supplying towns and cities with water, steam-engines and steam-boilers, blast-pipes, gas-flues, air-pipes, oil-tanks, tank-cars, wrought-iron draft-stacks, and stand-pipes. A specialty of this industry is a line of agricultural machinery, the chief production being the well-known Paxton portable steam-engine for farm use, furnishing the propelling power for threshers, shellers, etc., in a shape that has long been the aim of inventors to consummate. The company manufacture these engines at the rate of one hundred and fifty a year. Another specialty is the Paxton grain and fertilizing drill, one of the finest achievements of American ingenuity as an instrument for the cheapening and greater production of land crops. This plant furnishes employment to one hundred men and boys, swelling the total number of employées of the company to eight hundred, whose combined wages aggregate eight thousand dollars a week, and who produce by their labor a class of work that represents in round numbers nearly three million dollars annually. The company have gone to great expense to improve their property, and they have left nothing undone to protect themselves from loss by fire, for besides providing their own hose-carriages and fire apparatus, they have at their own expense put down through their lumber-yard seventeen hundred feet of water-pipe, connecting with the city's water-main at State Street. Seven fire-plugs are distributed throughout the lumber-yard, and alongside of each plug is arranged a hose-box containing a supply of fire-hose. Numerous other interesting features might be mentioned in this connection, but want of space will not permit.

In conclusion, personal mention must be made of some of the more prominent parties who have been instrumental in making this the most prominent industrial establishment in the city, and which conduces in a large degree to the general welfare of the community. The almost unprecedented success of this vast enterprise is largely due to Mr. William T. Hildrup, the general superintendent and business manager. The president of the company is Mr. David Fleming, one of the original stockholders, who succeeded the late William Calder. Mr. John Murphy, the general agent of the company, with headquarters at New York, is well and favorably known in railroad circles. The principal office assistants are Messrs. George G. Boyer, chief clerk, and J. Hervey Patton, assistant, with Mr. M. S. Shotwell, inventor of a valuable car-replacer bearing his name, as inspector and draughtsman.

THE CHESAPEAKE NAIL-WORKS.—These extensive works, located near the canal, along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in the First Ward of the city, were built in 1866 by Charles L. Bailey & Brother. Of the twelve acres of land owned by the company, seven are covered by tenement-houses and the nail-works. The shops comprise a puddle-mill, nail-plate mill and nail-factory, and a variety of other buildings necessary in connection with works of this kind. The puddle-mill has fourteen puddling-furnaces, squeezer, and one train of rolls. The nail-plate mill has three heating-furnaces, one train of rolls, and shears for cutting nail-plate. In the nail-factory are sixty-six nail-machines, and the machinery throughout is of the latest and most approved pattern, and has a producing capacity of two hundred and sixty thousand kegs of nails per year, and employs about three hundred men. The present officers are Charles L. Bailey, president; A. S. Patterson, secretary; G. M. McCauley, treasurer.

CENTRAL IRON-WORKS.—The old mill was built in 1853 by Charles L. Bailey & Brother, and changed and enlarged in 1879. The new mill was built in 1877-78 and enlarged in 1881, and contains one single and six double puddle-furnaces, one squeezer, five heating-furnaces, and five train-rolls (one muck, one thirty-one-inch and one twenty-five-inch roughing, one Lauth 3-high thirty-one-inch and one Lauth 3-high twenty-five-inch chilled finishing), with shears, cranes, etc. The product of the works are boiler-plate and tank-iron. The annual capacity of the works is about thirteen thousand net tons, and employ one hundred and fifty men. The officers are: President, Charles L. Bailey; Secretary, Abraham S. Patterson; Treasurer, G. M. McCauley.

THE PAXTON FURNACES.—Paxton Furnace, No. 1, was built in 1853 by Messrs. Bryan and Longenecker, of Lancaster, and located in the southern suburb of what was then the borough of Harrisburg. This firm conducted the business for a few years, when they sold their interest to the late James McCormick and Robert J. Ross, who placed the business in charge of Henry McCormick, and proceeded at once to a vigorous prosecution of the manufacture of pig metal. Mr. Ross subsequently died, when the entire property was purchased by Mr. McCormick, and after a few years the McCormicks added another furnace to their fast-increasing business, located near the site of the old one, put it in blast in 1872, and named it Paxton Furnace No. 2.

Paxton Furnace, No. 1, has a forty-three-foot stack, a fourteen-foot bosh, and a capacity of six hundred tons pig-iron per month, while No. 2 has a sixty-foot stack, a fourteen-foot bosh, and capacity the same as No. 1.

EAGLE WORKS.—This establishment was built in 1854, by W. O. Hickok, present owner and operator, on the corner of Canal and North Streets, and in 1869 was enlarged to its present dimensions, and is operated by steam power. A specialty is made in machine castings, cider-mills, mechanics' tools, ruling machinery, etc. Ninety men are given constant employment, while the products of the works find sale in most every country on the globe.

JACKSON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—This company was organized in August, 1881, with a cash capital of fifty thousand dollars, and chartered September 19th of the same year. The incorporators were John T. Chambers, James Jenkins, Henry C. Jenkins, James I. Chamberlain, Sarah H. Jackson, and Charles H. Jackson. The works of the company are located on the corner of new Fourth Street and Boyd Alley, and were purchased and enlarged in 1881, and provided with machinery for the manufacture of steel wheelbarrows, pressed with patent dies, for which the present capacity is sixty steel barrows per day. They also manufacture coke wagons, mining wagons, mine cars, pig-metal barrows, charging barrows for furnaces and foundries, also farm wheel-barrows, all of which are pressed from sheet steel. Twenty-five men are employed. The following are the present directors and officers of the company: James I. Chamberlain, president; James Jenkins, secretary and treasurer; Col. W. W. Jennings, Charles H. Jackson, John T. Chambers.

THE HARRISBURG COTTON-MILL was erected about 1852 by a stock company. Like similar enterprises, it has had its periods of prosperity and adversity. It is located on North Street, between Front and Second, is built of brick, four stories high, two hundred feet long and sixty feet wide, with end wings of one story, sixty-four feet long and twenty-four feet wide. It has eight thousand spindles and two hundred and eighty looms, with a capacity of two thousand seven hundred bales cotton, producing chevots, drilling, four-shafts twills, duck, warps, yarns, etc. The number of hands employed is two hundred and sixty, and the monthly pay-roll amounts to forty-five hundred dollars. The mill produces four million yards of heavy sheeting annually. The present proprietors of the mill are George Calder, Jr., & Co., of Lancaster.

THE FOUNDRY AND MACHINE-WORKS of Willson Brothers & Co. are located on the corner of State and Filbert Streets. They are largely engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements, of some which inventions they are the proprietors. These works are among the most successful industries of the city.

HARRISBURG CHAIN-WORKS.—Joshua W. Jones, of Harrisburg, the inventor of the new process for removing indentation made on paper after being printed thereon, and hydraulic dry-pressing machines, and patent releasable clip-chain bale-tires, finding great difficulty in procuring the proper chains for his machines, established this business for his own benefit. It has grown to an extensive establishment, and the demand for the manufacture, apart from his own, has been greater than the supply. At present only four furnaces are in operation, but eight others will soon be erected. The principal product will be chain bale-tires, and the capacity of the works is estimated at three thousand per month. A small Baxter engine is employed to drive a fan for fires, and an oven (eight feet by two feet by six feet) is used for jappanning the chains. Twelve men are employed.

THE STEAM-FITTING WORKS AND FOUNDRY of J. D. Marshbank & Son are located on corner of Short and South Streets, occupying the Jennings Franklin Foundry and Machine-shops. These works manufacture steam and hot-water fittings; also various descriptions of heavy and light castings. The annual value of their product is thirty thousand dollars, and they give employment to thirty-five hands.

THE HARRISBURG FOUNDRY, so long under the management of the Bay Brothers, is now operated by Messrs. John W. Brown and Augustus Reul, who carry on a general foundry business, with a probable annual capacity of one thousand tons. The works are located on State Street and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

THE HARRISBURG FIRE-BRICK WORKS, located on Second Street near Paxtang, were established in 1869, and have been in continuous operation since that date. They manufacture fire-brick for blast-furnaces, steel-works, and rolling-mill use, and have a capacity of two million bricks per annum, which amount could be readily increased. The clays used are from the several well-known deposits in New Jersey, and from Clearfield, Clinton, Dauphin, and Lebanon Counties, in Pennsylvania. All the fire-bricks are made of these several clays combined in various proportions as best suits the intended use. A forty horse-power engine is employed in grinding and mixing the clays. The works give employment to ninety hands.

WISTAR FURNACE.—This furnace was built in 1867, originally fourteen by forty-five feet, but recently altered to fourteen by sixty feet. It is blown by a thirty by forty-eight-inch horizontal engine, geared to drive two blowing cylinders seventy-two by seventy-two inches. This engine blows two hundred and sixty cubic feet of air per stroke, and is capable of running thirty to thirty-five revolutions per minute, at a pressure of six to seven pounds of blast. There are three batteries of boilers, two of which give ample steam-power. Two Kent eight-inch pipe ovens heat the blast to 1000° or 1100° F. Only one oven is blown through, leaving one in reserve. Fuel, three-fourths anthracite, one-fourth coke; ores, Dillsburg, Seizholtzville, Cornwall, and for two years past about one-third from Spain and other foreign countries. Capacity, forty-five tons per day. This is a very complete furnace, and one of the most successful in the Susquehanna region.

HYDRAULIC CEMENT PIPE WORKS.—These works, located on Herr Street and the Pennsylvania Canal, have been in successful operation during the past three years, manufacturing cement drain-pipes and cement ware or artificial stone. The product is sold throughout the whole of Central Pennsylvania. The capacity of the works is twenty-five thousand feet of drain-pipe per annum. The capital invested is fifteen thousand dollars, and the works give employment to twelve men. Henry J. Beatty, proprietor.

HARRISBURG STEEL- AND IRON-WORKS.—Messrs. Hummel, Fendrick & Co., since 1881, have occupied the old "Novelty Works," on the Pennsylvania Railroad foot of Third Street, where they are engaged in the manufacture of bar-iron and tires, and promises to be one of the most successful industries of the capital.

THE HARRISBURG STEAM-BOILER AND TANK-WORKS were erected in 1863 by Robert Tippett, who successfully carried on the business until his decease. They are now owned and operated by his sons, Charles E., David, and William P., under the firm-name of Robert Tippett's Sons. Their principal business is the manufacture of steam-boilers, furnace work, stacks, etc. They ship punched and shaped iron to Ohio, Alabama, and Tennessee. The works employ sixty hands, and have a capacity of thirty tons per week. They are located at the foot of Race Street, on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Fire Department—How they formerly extinguished fires in Harrisburg—The First Fire Company—Friendship—Hope—Citizen—Washington—Mount Vernon—Paxton—Good Will—Mount Pleasant.

ONE of the early ordinances of the borough required every householder to have one fire-bucket for each story of the house. These buckets were made of heavy leather, long and narrow in size, and were painted different colors as the owner chose, with his or her name on them, and were kept hanging in some convenient place, frequently in the hall or entry, and it was the occupant's duty, in case of an alarm, to carry or send them to the fire. Double lines were formed to the nearest pumps, and sometimes to the river; men, women, and children joined in these lines, the latter being in the empty-bucket line. The buckets were passed from one to another filled with water and emptied into the side of the engines, which were worked by hand; the empty buckets then passed back by those on the opposite line. Often the buckets were not more than half full when reaching the engines, the water being spilled by passing them along the line. There were separate lines for each engine. Balthaser Sees, who built the old "Union," the first fire-engine in the town, also made about fifty feet of leather-sewed hose, which was intended to have water conveyed from the pumps through them. As sewed hose was not water-tight, they never could be used. It was a difficult matter to maintain the lines at a distance from and out of sight of the fire, as every one wished to see it. It was hard, laborious work to pump water for the buckets and to work the engines. When the pumps failed, as they often did, lines were then formed to the river.

This primitive means of putting out fires was continued until 1836, when, to the great relief and joy of the people, the "Citizen" suction-engine was purchased. Hose enough was bought to reach from either the river or canal to the centre of the town, and by that means the engines at the fires were supplied, but not in sufficient quantity without the bucket-lines. This continued until the water-works were completed, in 1840.

The hard work of the firemen at a conflagration at the engine-brakes continued until the present steam-engines were adopted, the "Friendship" being the first. All the hand-engines were gradually replaced by steam until the whole five companies were supplied. The first mode of giving the alarm of fire was by the ringing of the old court-house bell, followed by the different church bells, as the engine-houses then were small frame buildings without bells. Subsequently the direction was struck by the bells on the different engine-houses. The old Philadelphia system was then adopted, viz.: one stroke for north, two for south, three for east, and four for west; the other divisions of the compass were also struck. This alarm continued until the fire-alarm was erected in 1874.

The first fire company was organized June 17, 1791, and John Kean was the first president thereof. The following is a copy of the original subscription paper:

"We, the subscribers, considering the necessity of having an engine for extinguishing fires, do agree to pay to Adam Boyd the sums to our names affixed on demand, for the purpose of purchasing an engine for the use of the Borough of Harrisburg.
" June 17, 1791."

On Friday, Nov. 25, 1791, the residence of Mr. James Sawyer, on Locust Street, was destroyed by fire. After the fire was over Mr. Sawyer returned his thanks to the men and women of the borough for the aid they had rendered him. As late as March 8, 1797, there was no apparatus in the city designed for putting out fires. This is shown by an extract from the minutes of the Harrisburg Free Debating Society. Among other questions discussed (March 8, 1797) was one for procuring a fire-engine. At the fire in the building used by William Porter as a cold-nail factory, on the 19th of February, 1798, no reference is made to any service by an engine, but Mr. Porter did thank the ladies for what they had done, and declared his willingness to contribute to a fund towards procuring another engine. The inference from this is that an engine was then owned by the borough. Tradition names the "Union" as being the first engine in use, which is the one remotely referred to by Mr. Porter. The Union Company was dissolved some time between 1830 and 1838. Robert Sloan and Frederick Heisely were directors of the company, and George Capp secretary in 1824. An ordinance was passed by the Town Council, July 13, 1813, impressing on all property-owners and tenants, whether male or female, to have within convenient reach on their premises at least one leather bucket for use at fires. By the terms of the same ordinance the borough was divided into two fire districts, called respectively northern and southern, with Market Street as the dividing line, each district containing a company. These companies were the "Union" and the "Friendship."

FRIENDSHIP COMPANY, No. 1.—This company may be termed the patriarch of the present fire department of Harrisburg, having been instituted prior to 1803, although its oldest constitution only dates as far back as Aug. 11, 1812. The oldest official document among the records of the company is what purports to be a list of "sundry members of the Friendship Fire Company who are indebted to the sums annexed to their names respectively, the account being down to the yearly meeting, Nov. 7, 1809, including said meeting." This list is attested by James Maginnis, secretary. The first debtor on the list is Thomas Ridge, and the amount of his indebtedness was as follows:

1803, August 1st,	to sundry fines.....	10 shillings
1804, August 7th,	" " ".....	11 "
1808, February 2d,	" " ".....	3 "

Messrs. Samuel Pool, Michael Krehl, Albright Weaver, John Kapp, Isaiah McFarland, and Patrick Burk were also debtors to the company at this period. The indebtedness arose from tax and fines. "Messrs. Sawyer, Glass, Brua, Norton, Dorsheimer, managers of the company, and the secretary met at the house of John Norton, Feb. 9, 1808, for the purpose of holding an appeal, whereat B. Kurtz appealed ten shillings, Mr. George five shillings, Mr. Laverty five shillings, Mr. Glass five shillings, Mr. Dorsheimer one shilling, whereupon it was agreed that Mr. Goodman should give every one that is indebted to the company a call for the pay, and them that don't pay shall be sued."
—Manuscript Minutes of Managers, Feb. 9, 1808.

Among the names of the members of the company in 1808 are recognized many whose descendants still reside in Harrisburg. These are Messrs. John Zinn, Samuel Pool, Abraham Rupley, Andrew Berryhill, Moses Gillmor, John Mytinger, Joseph Young, Samuel Bryan, Christian Stahl, John Forster, James Brown, Samuel Black, Dr. Hall, Dr. Cleaveland, Peter Keller, Joseph Doll, James Sawyer, Frederick Felty, George Boyer, Jacob Boas, John Wyeth, John Wingert, Jacob Ziegler, George Roberts, and Benjamin Bowman, secretary.

Obed Fahnestock was president of the company in 1812, and Christian Gleim secretary and treasurer in 1813. In 1818, Abraham Bombaugh was the treasurer, who was succeeded in 1819 by Obed Fahnestock. Jacob Seiler was secretary of the company in 1827. From this period we can find no records of the company until 1843, when it adopted a new constitution, and in many respects increased its efficiency. The first hose-carriage of the company was purchased a short time after the introduction of water into Harrisburg. The old engine being too limited in its capacity, and its wood-work partially rotted, the company applied for and obtained the old "Harrisburg" engine, which belonged to a company of that name formerly existing in Harrisburg. This was used by the company for several years, when it was found defective, and then abandoned. The company was then granted the use of the "United States," a powerful second-class engine, formerly used by a company of that name in Middletown, but owned by Judge W. F. Murray, who had it brought here for sale. The Town Council, however, refused to buy it, and in lieu thereof purchased in Philadelphia an efficient second-hand engine, which the company continued to use until 1860, when they purchased their present steamer, a second-class Amoskeag make.

The fine building of the company on Third Street below Chestnut Street was erected in 1850, the company having previously occupied a two-story frame structure on the river-bank, a short distance north of the toll-house of the Harrisburg bridge.

THE HOPE FIRE COMPANY, No. 2.—This association was instituted on the 6th day of January, 1814, and was the third of its kind organized after Harrisburg was laid out. Its cotemporaries were the "Union" and "Friendship." The following "list of members of the Hope Fire Company who have been furnished with badges" is from an old memorandum-book. Those marked with a (*) were members in 1814, the others in 1816. Only one on the roll survives, the genial and scholarly gentleman that he is, Col. Samuel Shoch, of Columbia:

Capt. Thomas Walker was the first vice-president of the company, and Hon. John C. Bucher held that office in 1819. In 1823, Mr. Bucher was president, and in the year following Henry Buehler was secretary of the company. Mr. Bucher was succeeded by Charles F. Muench, Dr. Luther Reily, Hamilton Alricks, A. Boyd Hamilton, etc. Joseph Wallace, Henry Antes, Dr. Heisely, Dr. Orth, and other prominent citizens were at one time members of the company. The long time which has elapsed since its first organization, and the number of changes in the affairs of the company, render it extremely difficult to obtain any considerable knowledge of its early history. We know, however, that the first engine of the company was manufactured in Philadelphia by the celebrated Pat Lyon—him of bank prosecution memory—at a cost of twelve hundred dollars, and that it was capable of throwing two hogheads of water per minute!

After the erection of the water-works the company added to their apparatus a beautiful hose-carriage. Shortly after this period the affairs of the company seem to have been in a depressed condition until January, 1853, when a number of public-spirited citizens residing in the upper part of the borough joined together and effected its complete reorganization under the auspices of the Town Council. A beautiful second-class engine, capable of throwing two side and a gallery stream, manufactured by J. Agnew, of Philadelphia, was purchased at a cost of thirteen hundred and fifty dollars. In March, 1858, the company also replaced their hose-carriage by a neat "spider" or "crab," at a cost of one hundred dollars, and in September, 1858, further increased its efficiency by obtaining a hook-and-ladder apparatus.

The house of the company up to 1855 was a small frame structure which stood on the site of the present building. In that year the municipal authorities removed the structure, and erected in its place a two-story brick building thirty-four by twenty-four feet. The company subsequently extended this building forty feet in length and added another story, and as a highly creditable fact we might add that the bricklayers, carpenters, plasterers, and painters belonging to the company performed the work gratis by the light of their fire-lanterns. The hand-engine was finally sold to a Lewistown fire company, and its place supplied by the company's present steam-engine, which arrived here Feb. 28, 1865. It was manufactured by L. Button, Waterford, N. Y., and at the first test in this city threw a stream from a one and three-eighth inch nozzle on a level two hundred and twenty-five feet, and through a one and one-eighth inch nozzle a vertical stream of two hundred and seven feet. The building of the company having become unsafe, it was torn down in the spring of 1870, and the present structure erected in its place.

THE CITIZEN FIRE COMPANY, No. 3.—This efficient fire company was organized in the year 1836. Its first officers were William Bostick, Sr., president; Henry Lyne, vice-president; George S. Kemble, treasurer; and William Parkhill, secretary. The company, shortly after its organization, purchased a beautiful and powerful engine at a cost of nine hundred and fifty dollars. It was of second-class capacity, throwing a gallery and two side streams, and was manufactured at the celebrated establishment of Joel Bates, in Philadelphia. The power and effectiveness of this engine was fully tested at the disastrous fires which occurred in the summer and fall of 1838 at the opposite corners of Fourth and Market Streets. At these fires it rendered the most important services in consequence of being provided with a suction apparatus, which forced water from the canal, thus in a great measure dispensing with the then prevailing system of "bucket-lines."

The introduction of water and hydrants into the borough created a material change in the operations of the fire department. The "bucket-lines" already referred to gave way to hose, and it was necessary that the several fire companies should be provided with this article. The Citizen Company was the first to respond to this necessity, and accordingly purchased in Philadelphia a beautiful hose-carriage and sixteen hundred feet of hose, the former at a cost of two hundred and eighty-five dollars.

With this useful addition the company required the privileges and powers of an incorporation, and accordingly an application for a charter was made and granted by the Court of Common Pleas in 1841. It was discovered, however, by time and experience, that this charter was defective; accordingly, at a meeting of the company held May 12, 1858, a new constitution and by-laws were proposed and a committee appointed to petition the court for their approval. This committee petitioned the court on the 13th of May, 1858, and on the 23d of August following the court granted the prayer of the petitioners by directing that the said constitution and by-laws shall "thereafter be deemed and taken to be the instrument on which said association shall be governed as firemen."

The first hose-carriage having become dilapidated by time and service, the company, in the fall of 1856, purchased in Philadelphia a new one, handsomely mounted with silver and other embellishments, at a cost of about one thousand dollars. In addition to this, they shortly afterwards procured a handsome "spider," manufactured to order by R. J. Fleming, of Harrisburg, and costing about two hundred dollars.

The company, in October, 1858, increased its efficiency by procuring a "Button engine," a lately patented fire apparatus, manufactured at Waterford, N. Y., a trial of which, in front of Brant's Hall, was thus noticed in the Daily Telegraph: "She did nobly, and more than realized the expectations of the most sanguine members of the Citizen Company. In our opinion the engine is fully equal to three ordinary machines of the old style, and ranks next to the steam fire-engines lately adopted in the various cities. On the first trial she threw a stream of water through a 1½-inch nozzle a distance of two hundred and one feet. On the second trial she threw two streams at once through 1½-inch nozzles a distance of one hundred and sixty-five feet each. On the third trial she threw five streams at once through ¾-inch nozzles from one hundred and five to one hundred and twenty-one feet. When this feat was accomplished the members of the Citizen Company, pleased with the success of their new machine, made the welkin ring with repeated and enthusiastic cheers for the engine and its manufacturer. On the fourth trial the largest nozzle—1½-inch—was used, and this powerful volume of water was thrown a distance of one hundred and sixty-seven feet. The machine gave entire satisfaction in every respect." This at the time was the largest engine of the kind in the State. It weighed three thousand five hundred pounds, required fifty men to work it, and cost two thousand and fifty dollars delivered in Harrisburg.

THE WASHINGTON HOSE COMPANY, No. 4.—The example of the Citizen Fire Company in procuring hose to meet the requirements of the change in the fire department caused by the introduction of water into the borough was followed by the organization of a company whose apparatus consists exclusively of hose and its carriage.

Being convinced of the utility of such an organization, a number of young men met in the dining-room of the United States Hotel, on the corner of Second and Mulberry Streets, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 27, 1841, for the purpose of organization and to raise funds to purchase a hose-carriage. A committee was appointed to solicit money by subscription to purchase a carriage, and on the 5th of February, 1841, that committee reported that sufficient amount had been subscribed by the citizens, when John L. Martin was deputed to purchase the carriage of the Washington Hose Company, of Philadelphia, at a cost of one hundred and eighty dollars. The carriage was received on the 20th of March, 1841, and at the same time the Town Council furnished the company with six hundred feet of hose. On Friday evening, April 2, 1841, the company was regularly organized, and denominated the Washington Hose Company, of Harrisburg, Pa., a constitution and by-laws adopted, and the following officers were elected: President, Levi Wolfinger; Vice-President, John L. Martin; Secretary, E. S. German; Treasurer, David Lingle. From this period the company has been one of the most active and efficient in the borough.

On the 3d day of May, 1843, application was made to the court of Dauphin County for an act of incorporation, which was granted on the 2d of September, 1843, and recorded on the 8th day of September, 1843, in Deed-Book P, vol ii. page 432.

The want of a suitable building for the carriage and a room for the meetings of the company was a great inconvenience, and prompted by the generosity previously manifested by the citizens, it was proposed and a committee appointed on the 5th of January, 1844, to devise ways and means to raise funds to erect a suitable house. On the 2d of February, 1844, a lot of ground was purchased, on the corner of Second Street and Meadow Lane, from C. L. Berghaus, Esq., for the sum of ninety dollars.

The building was commenced on the 4th of March, 1844, and on the 23d of March, 1844, the corner stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The building was completed on the 3d of August, 1844. It was one of the most perfect of the kind in the State, being provided with all the most approved accommodations suitable to the character of the uses to which it was applied. The structure cost eight hundred dollars.

The carriage of the company being old and ill suited, another was proposed and urged of more modern construction, for which object members were chosen to raise money by subscription, and on the 22d day of May, 1850, a contract was made with George Ruhl, of Philadelphia, to build a "crab" or hose-carriage for the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars, which was completed and given into the charge of the company on the 5th of October, 1850. The first occasion that called the company into service was the burning of a stable and bark-house at Mr. Greenawalt's tannery, in River Alley above Locust, on the 28th of April, 1841. The company were in possession of the fire-plug at the corner of Front and Walnut Streets.

On April 29, 1858, the company desiring a more eligible location, purchased from C. O. Zimmerman for the sum of one thousand dollars the lot on Chestnut Street at present occupied by the company. The old hose-house and lot was sold to a Mr. Erb for six hundred and fifty dollars. The company at once proceeded to erect their present building from plans furnished by L. M. Simon. The entire cost of the structure was three thousand one hundred and twenty dollars and one cent. The company has been keenly alive to the importance of increasing the efficiency of the fire department of Harrisburg, and on Nov. 26, 1867, cheerfully responded to the call for the election of delegates to meet in convention for the purpose of forming a fire insurance association, the creation of which led on Oct. 6, 1868, to the passage of an ordinance by the Common Council for the election of a chief and two assistant engineers.

The introduction of steam fire-engines into the city created a new era in the fire department of Harrisburg, and although the Washington Company still maintained their distinctive character as a hose company, they determined, nevertheless, to keep abreast with the step of progress. Accordingly, on March 7, 1876, the trustees were instructed to inquire into the cost of a modernly-constructed hose-cart to be drawn by horses, and subsequently secured the one now used by the company. It cost six hundred dollars, and first went into service on the 27th of June, 1876, while the old carriage was taken apart and placed in the hall as a relic of the past.

MOUNT VERNON HOOK-AND-LADDER COMPANY, No. 5.—This company was first organized on the 5th of April, 1858, under the name of the "Independent Hook-and-Ladder Company," which was changed in August or September following to the "Mount Vernon Hook-and-Ladder Company." The following is a list of the first officers of the company: President, William C. A. Lawrence; Vice-President, Richard M. Birkman; Secretary, William B. Wilson; Treasurer, J. A. Carman; Board of Directors, David G. May, Thomas W. Anderson, Frank A. Murray, and Robert G. Denning; Elective Board, David G. May, T. Rockhill Smith, and Thomas W. Anderson. The apparatus of the company was manufactured by Mr. R. J. Fleming, of Harrisburg, and cost eight hundred dollars. It consists of a carriage, hooks and ladders, etc., and has been thus described:

"The total length of the apparatus is forty-eight feet, the length of coupling twenty-seven feet, and the length of the largest ladder forty feet. The iron-work is polished, the springs of steel, and the axles of turned iron. The wheels and body are elegantly varnished and decorated with gilt and carved work, the knobs being tipped with brass. The wood-work is painted of a dark claret color and durably constructed. Axes, picks, and lanterns are provided and secured in proper positions about the carriage, and a beautiful signal-lamp surmounts the whole."

The company, in 1858, occupied the two-story frame building on the east corner of Locust Street and Raspberry Alley, which was altered and arranged for its accommodation, where it remained until the spring of 1866, when it took possession of their present structure on Fourth Street near North. In the fall of 1875 the company secured a patent tiller to their truck and began the use of horses to draw their apparatus. The first service of the company was at the fire which destroyed Mr. German's brewery on Chestnut Street.

PAXTON (PAXTANG) FIRE COMPANY, No. 6.—The removal of the Washington Hose Company from the corner of Second Street and Mcadow Lane left that portion of Harrisburg in a comparatively unprotected condition to meet the contingency of fire. Fully appreciating this situation of affairs, a number of public-spirited citizens held a meeting on Nov. 22, 1859, and the result was the organization of the Paxton Fire Company. The company at once went into service, having secured the powerful hand-engine with side brakes formerly owned by the Friendship Fire Company. This they stored in a small frame building that formerly stood on Second Street, north of the company's present building. This was used very effectively by the company until Feb. 1, 1867, when they purchased their present steam-engine, which was christened the "John Harris." The apparatus is one of the largest in the city, having first-class pumps, but ranking only as a second-class engine. The company subsequently bought a lot from Lewis Metzgar on Second Street, a short distance south of their original location, upon which they erected, at a cost of three thousand six hundred dollars, their present fine building. Like the other steam fire companies, the Paxton is provided with hose-carts and an ample supply of hose to meet almost any emergency.

GOOD WILL FIRE COMPANY, No. 7.—This company was organized in 1860, and first used a hand-engine with side brakes. The first house of the company stood on Ridge Road a short distance above Cumberland. It was a frame building, and erected by the day-labor of the individual members of the company themselves. The hand-engine was used until July, 1869, when the company purchased their present steam-engine, named "Marion Verbeke," in honor of the wife of William K. Verbeke, Esq., both of whom were large contributors and took much interest in promoting the interests of the organization. The company vacated their original premises and moved into their present elegant building in 1873.

MOUNT PLEASANT HOSE COMPANY, No. 8.—That portion of the city lying on the ridge east of Paxtang Creek is locally known as East Harrisburg, which now forms one of the most important and thriving sections of the city. Its long distance from the heart of the city and its otherwise somewhat isolated condition gave it little or no protection in case of fire. Appreciating this situation of affairs, a number of the property-holders met together in February, 1877, and the result was the organization of the Mount Pleasant Hose Company, with the following officers: President, William C. Kibby; Vice-President, H. M. Kelley; Secretary, A. C. McKee; Financial Secretary, S. H. Kautz; Treasurer, Jacob Zarker, Sr. The company in 1879 purchased a hose-carriage with the necessary quantity of hose, and at once went into active service. During September or October next the company expect to move into the fine and capacious brick building which the city is erecting for them at the corner of Thirteenth and Howard Streets.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.—The creation of a chief and two assistant engineers of the Harrisburg fire department grew out of the organization of a fire insurance company formed by the several fire companies of the city, and subsequently known as the Harrisburg Fire Association. In September, 1868, the Fire Association transmitted a circular letter to each of the fire companies, requesting them to elect delegates to meet in convention to elect a chief and two assistant engineers for the fire department of the city. The convention was held Sept. 4, 1868, and resulted in the election of Henry C. Schaffer as chief engineer, Joseph Montgomery as first assistant, and Samuel Ebersole as second assistant engineer. We append a list of the chief and assistant engineers of the fire department of the city since the passage of the ordinance in 1868 down to date:

CHAPTER XIV.

Early Educational Efforts—The Harrisburg Academy—The Lancasterian System—The Public Schools.

As early as 1786, just one year after the erection of the county, the inhabitants of Harrisburg in order to assist in bringing into effect the intentions of John Harris, who had granted the rents, issues, and profits of his ferry across the river for the endowment of an English and German academy in that town, entered the following agreement:

We, the subscribers, do each of us for ourselves promise to pay, or cause to be paid, to John Hoge, Moses Gilmor, Conrad Bombaugh, and John Brooks, or their order upon demand, the sums annexed to each of our names respectively, to be applied by them in purchasing materials for and in building a school-house in one corner of the public ground in the town of Harrisburg.

In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands, with the sums annexed, this 20th day of April, 1786:

The first trustees of the academy were John A. Hanna, John Hamilton, and John Kean. The trustees for 1791 were John A. Hanna, John Kean, John Dentzel, Stacy Potts, and Adam Boyd. The following is the preamble of the constitution adopted by the subscribers to the academy fund:

"WHEREAS, The prosperity and happiness of the free and independent citizens of the United States in a great measure depends on the proper cultivation and improvement of the minds of the young and rising generations, whereby they may be qualified to perform their respective duties in civil society as well as the more important obligations of religion; wherefore, we, the citizens of Harrisburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, in order to establish a seminary of useful learning, have by voluntary contributions built a school-house, hoping through the favor of Divine Providence, with the benevolent aid of the honorable Legislature of this Commonwealth, and the charitable donations of the well disposed, together with the diligent care and attention of the governors and teachers, it may become a respectable institution, renowned for the pious education of future generations; for which purpose we do ordain and establish the following rules for the constitution and government thereof."

Section 8 of the rules directed that the teachers shall from time to time be obliged to teach such number of charity scholars as shall be recommended by the trustees (not exceeding four) gratis, which the trustees and teachers shall keep secret.

Oct. 4, 1791. Samuel Barnes Davis was appointed teacher of the academy for three months; and at a meeting of the trustees on Jan. 3, 1792, it was resolved "that Mr. Davis, the teacher, shall submit for the approbation of the trustees copies of all such extracts or speeches as he intends the children under his care shall speak or deliver at public exhibition."

Oct. 22, 1795. Mr. William Moderwell was appointed teacher of the Latin and Greek department of the academy, to commence this day.

Nov. 21, 1795. The trustees determined that the following books should be taught in the Latin and Greek department in the order in which they succeed each other:

Latin—Grammar, Vocabulary, Corderii, etc., Fables, Erasmus Delectæ, e Veteri, Selectæ e Profanis. Greek—Greek Grammar, Testament, Lucian, Xenophon, Homer, Cæsar's Commentaries, Ovid, Virgil, Sallust, Horace, Cicero.

The early minutes of the academy, the original of which are in the possession of A. Boyd Hamilton, Esq., show that, like all new and deserving enterprises, the institution had its trials and difficulties, but by persevering energy these were finally overcome, and the academy to-day ranks as one of the best select educational establishments in the State.

On the 4th of April, 1809, Governor Snyder approved of the act incorporating the Harrisburg Academy. By the act of incorporation there was included a grant from the State of one thousand dollars to purchase a lot of ground whereon "to erect a suitable building, and to procure a pair of globes and such other astronomical and mathematical apparatus as may be necessary." The Incorporators and original members of the board of trustees were William Graydon, Christian Kunkel, George Hoyer, Robert Harris, Samuel Laird, Henry Belder, John Wyeth, Joshua Elder, and Dr. John Luther. In November following a lot of ground was secured on Market Street, now Nos. 314, 316, 318. In 1814, by permission of the State, a building was erected on the public ground on the corner of Fifth and Walnut Streets. This, however, was found to be in direct violation of the trust by the State as expressed in the original deed of conveyance by John Harris to the commonwealth. For many years annual appropriations were received from the State, but financial embarrassments seem to have been its lot for many years. Notwithstanding these struggles and discouragements, by disposing of its Market Street property, by subscriptions, etc., the trustees finally secured the Maclay mansion, on the corner of Front and South Streets. This fine old stone building was erected by Senator William Maclay about the year 1791. Here, at last, the old academy found a resting-place, and prosperity has dawned upon it. Many of our best citizens have been educated in the Harrisburg Academy, and many of those who were pupils "have won honor and been greatly esteemed both in public and private life." The principals of the school, as far as we have been able to glean, were: 1810, Joseph Findley; 1813-14, Samuel Guernsey; 1815-16, Joshua Holt; 1816, S. G. Strong; 1817, —; 1818, Nicholas B. Wood; 1819-21, Rev. William T. Hamilton; 1822, Samuel Davies; 1823, Rev. Nathaniel Todd; 1825-28, Dr. John Keagy; 1828-29, —; Porter; 1829-30, Rev. John MacBeth; 1830-31, Rev. A. O. Hubbard; 1831-46, Alfred Armstrong. Assistants—Benjamin Creaver (1838), John McKinney, Augustus Wyeth, Thomas J. Bigham; 1846, Rev. William S. Graham; 1847-50, Rev. Mahlon Long; 1850-52, Rev. — Chapman; 1852-54, Rev. John T. Demarest, D.D.; 1854-60, A. A. Kemble; 1860, Professor Jacob F. Seiler, A.M.

Other educational institutions flourished during all these years, but of them the Harrisburg Academy is the only survivor.

From the adoption of the State Constitution of 1790 until 1809 no legislative provision of a general nature was made in reference to public schools. An act was then passed "for the gratuitous education of the poor." It required a report to be made by the assessors of the townships, wards, and boroughs to the commissioners of the respective counties of all children between the age of five and twelve years whose parents were unable to provide for their education; and that when the lists had been approved by the commissioners, that such parents should be notified thereof, and be permitted to send their children to the most convenient schools at the expense of the county. Notwithstanding the many defects of this law, it continued in force until it was repealed by that of 29th of March, 1824, which provided that every township should elect three "schoolmen," who should superintend the education of poor children within their respective townships, and "cause them to be instructed as other children are treated, the expense of tuition to be paid by the county." But each county might authorize the "schoolmen" to divide the township into school districts, and to establish schools at the expense of the township, to which all children belonging to the districts might be sent for three years, at any time between the ages of six and fourteen years. This law was applicable to the whole State, with the exception of certain school districts in the city and county of Philadelphia and city of Lancaster. It was repealed in 1826 and the act of 1809 revived.

Besides the general provisions of the early acts relating to education throughout the State there were special ones enacted for certain localities. Thus in 1818 the city and county of Philadelphia were erected into a district called the "First School District of Pennsylvania." By the act of April 1, 1822, the city and county of Lancaster were erected into the "Second School District," with privileges and duties similar to the first. By the act of 11th April, 1827, the same system was established at Harrisburg, and by act of 19th February, 1828, at Pittsburgh.

The act establishing a public school in Harrisburg authorized the commissioners of Dauphin County to make use of any part of the court-house of said county which may be unoccupied, build or procure a suitable building for the purpose of educating the children directed to be taught at the public expense, to engage a suitable teacher or teachers, and they were required to direct that all children educated at the public expense, who shall reside in the borough of Harrisburg, or within one mile thereof, should attend the school, which was to be taught and conducted on the principle of Lancaster's system of education in its most approved state. The commissioners were further empowered to admit children whose parents or guardians were in circumstances to pay for their tuition, and were at liberty to charge in each individual case any sum which may be agreed upon between the parties, which should be applied in all cases to the support of the school.

Under the provisions of the act of April 11, 1827, the commissioners of the county established a school on Lancaster's plan in Harrisburg in the latter part of that year, and erected the capacious building now owned by the school board, on Walnut Street, opposite Short, in the city of Harrisburg, for its accommodation. The Lancasterian system was based upon monitorial or mutual instruction. Thus, a school would be divided into several sections, according to the acquirements of the scholars, over each one of which was appointed by the master a "monitor,"—generally the most intelligent and advanced scholar, whose duty it was to superintend the instruction of his companions in the section to which he belonged. (Of course, all the sections were under the general superintendence of the master.

According to the report of the county commissioners in April, 1828, we learn that the whole number of children taught in the school was three hundred and fifty. The number of children taught in the school whose parents, guardians, or friends defrayed, or agreed to defray, any part of the whole of the expense of their tuition, was one hundred and fifty-four. The amount received for the tuition of children whose parents, guardians, or friends defrayed the whole or any part of their education, was fifty-five dollars and eight cents. The amount due for the tuition of children whose parents, guardians, or friends agreed to pay the whole or any part of their education, was two hundred and fifty-one dollars and twenty cents.

Prior to 1832 aid was given to the minister of the colored church, who had established a school for that race in the old log church corner of Third and Mulberry Streets. On the 7th of November, that year, the commissioners direct "the clerk to inform Jacob Richardson, teacher of colored children in Harrisburg, that in future the colored children under his tuition shall be taught in the Lancasterian school, as the law directs; and that the commissioners will hereafter allow him no compensation for teaching said children."

By the act of the General Assembly of 9th of April, 1833, this school was discontinued on the 20th of May, 1834. It was not a financial success to the county, and the influence of the rural districts was such as to secure its abolishment, although educationally it accomplished much good. The present common school system was established Dec. 5, 1835, and from the report of the State school superintendent for the year ending Dec. 31, 1837, the following statistics show the progress of the system in the county of Dauphin in two years' time:

Number of schools, 48; number of teachers,—males, 45, females, 18; number of scholars,—males, 1541, females, 1820; number of months kept open, four months and twenty days; moneys received,—State appropriation, $2087.34; from the county, $1430.17; from the districts, $4731.89; average salary of teachers,—males, $20.80½, females, $19.16; cost of school-house repairs, $1575.29; other expenses, $530.53.

Small as are these figures, the result at the time was considered very favorable, and exceeded many counties with a much larger population than Dauphin. Through Superintendent Foose we are furnished the following educational statistics of the city of Harrisburg, which will convey at a glance the rapid growth which that magnificent system has made:

YEARS.	Number of Schools.	Number of Teachers.	Number of Pupils.	Salaries of Male Teachers.	Salaries of Female Teachers.
1836.....	11	21	957	$22	$19
1841.....	19	19	986	28	19
1857.....	24	24	976	40	25
1867.....	47	47	3421	57	35
1877.....	78	96	5053	67	45
1880.....	90	107	5259	59	41
1883.....	97	113	6124	59.65	43.17

There are eighteen buildings owned by the board of control used for school purposes, valued at $307,250. Three rented rooms are used for school purposes. Seating capacity of all buildings is 5900, and value of furniture $21073.30.

HIGH SCHOOLS.—The city was originally divided into two school districts, each with its own board, and each board sustained two high schools, one for each sex, from the establishment of the system until 1869, when the two districts were consolidated into one, and the original four high schools into two schools, one for each sex, substantially as they are at the present time, so far as their organization is concerned. The boys' high school, of which J. Howard Wert, A. M., is principal, enrolled seventy-six pupils during the past year. Two assistant teachers were employed to carry on the work of this school. The girls' high school, of which Miss Jennie F. Givler is principal, assisted by six additional teachers, enrolled one hundred and sixty pupils during the year.

Course of Studies.—First year,—Arithmetic reviewed, Algebra, English Grammar and Composition, English History, Physiology, Physical Geography or Latin, Etymology. Second year,—English History completed, Algebra completed, Latin or Natural History, Natural Philosophy, Elementary Geometry (girls), Double Entry Book-keeping (boys). Third or junior year,—Rhetoric and Composition, Geometry, Latin, or Special History, Natural Philosophy, Arithmetic and Algebra reviewed with application of principles. Senior or fourth year,—Latin or English Literature, or General History, Rhetoric and Composition, Civil Government, Surveying and Navigation (boys), Trigonometry and theory of teaching (girls), Greek (optional with advanced classes); Drawing,—boys, Mechanical; girls, Industrial and Perspective. General attention to Reading, Elocution, Writing, Spelling, Declamation, Composition, Manners and Morals throughout the course. There is a teachers' library owned and controlled by the City Teachers' Institute, consisting of about five hundred volumes. This institute meets the first and third Saturdays of each calendar month, while schools are in session.

CITY SUPERINTENDENTS.—Daniel S. Burns, A.M., was elected first city superintendent in 1869; was re-elected in 1872, 1875, 1878, and resigned 1879. L. O. Foose, A.M., was elected to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Burns, 1879, re-elected in 1881, and still holds the office.

CHAPTER XV.

Banks and Banking Institutions—Public Buildings of the State—Charitable Institutions—Post-Offices and Postmasters—Census Returns, etc.

BANKS AND BANKING INSTITUTIONS.

HARRISBURG NATIONAL BANK.—This institution was chartered by the Legislature on the 9th of May, 1814, with a capital of $300,000, and was regularly organized in the month of June of the same year by the election of the following board of directors:

John McCleery, Isaac Hershey, Henry Beader, Robert Harris, Christian Kunkel, John Howard, David Ferguson, William Wallace, Jacob M. Haldeman, Thomas Brown, John Shoch, Abraham Oves, and Peter Keller. William Wallace, Esq., was elected president, and John Downey cashier. The bank first went into operation at the then residence of its cashier, John Downey, in the building No. 118 South Second Street, a few doors northwest of Cherry Alley. The banking-room was in the front part of the building, and the board of directors usually met in the front room on the second story. The bank remained there, however, only a few months, when it was removed into the brick building at present No. 21 South Second Street, where it remained until 1817, when it purchased from the Philadelphia Bank the brick building which that company had used as a branch, situated at the southwest corner of Market Square and Blackberry Alley, in which it continued until the summer of 1854, when the building was torn down to give place to the present elegant structure, the bank in the mean time carrying on its business in the house adjoining, No. 14 South Market Square. One of the earliest notes of this institution is a "shinplaster" of 1816, a fac-simile of which is given below.

We append a list of the presidents and cashiers of the bank from its first organization to the present day: Presidents, William Wallace, elected June, 1814; Thomas Elder, elected June 19, 1816; Jacob M. Haldeman, elected May 3, 1853; William M. Kerr, elected Dec. 31, 1856 (died Dec. 17, 1864); Jacob S. Haldeman, elected Dec. 28, 1864; Valentine Hummel, elected Jan. 20, 1869 (died Sept. 4, 1870); Dr. George W. Reilly, elected Sept. 28, 1870; Cashiers, John Downey, elected June, 1814; John Forster, elected April 19, 1815; Henry Walters, elected Nov. 25, 1833; James W. Weir, elected Oct. 30, 1844, serving until his death in April, 1878; Jeremiah Uhler, elected April 17, 1878. The institution has a national bank charter of the date of November, 1864, numbered 580, and the name Harrisburg Bank changed to Harrisburg National Bank.

THE MECHANICS' BANK was chartered by the State Feb. 8, 1853, with a capital of $50,000. At its organization Philip Dougherty was chosen president, and J. C. Bomberger cashier. Mr. Dougherty died in 1865, when the institution passed into the possession of Mr. Bomberger as sole owner, by whom it has ever since been conducted as an individual bank. The Mechanics' Bank has always sustained the best of credit, and during the financial panic of ten years ago it passed safely through the crisis unimpaired, and has enjoyed a reputation not excelled by any banking-house in the State. It is located on the southeast corner of Market and Third Streets.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF HARRISBURG.—Prior to the war the banking-house of Cameron, Calder, Eby & Co. had been established at the corner of Second and Walnut Streets. In July, 1863, the institution received a national bank charter numbered 201; capital stock $100,000. On the 12th of December, 1863, the stockholders organized, and on the 1st of January, 1864, commenced business. The bank charter was extended twenty years from the 24th of February, 1883. Dec. 12, 1863, John H. Briggs was elected president; Jan. 14, 1871, Jacob R. Eby, and on Jan. 17, 1874, William Calder. Mr. Calder died July 19, 1880, and on the 26th of the same month William W. Jennings was elected president. George H. Small is and has been cashier of the bank from the date of organization.

THE FARMERS' BANK OF HARRISBURG was organized May 6, 1872, as an individual bank, with Daniel Eppley as president, and Frederick C. Fink as cashier. It was chartered under the State laws on the 3d of May, 1873, with a paid-up capital of $100,000, the same officers continuing. The banking-house is located on the northeast corner of Market and Third Streets. It has been a successful institution, and maintained the credit of a substantial bank.

THE COMMONWEALTH GUARANTEE TRUST AND SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY.—This institution was organized on the 16th of August, 1881, with a capital of $250,000. The same year the company secured the building formerly known as Brant's Hall, adjoining the court-house. The main portion of this structure was remodeled from ground-floor to roof. One-half of the first floor is to be occupied by the institution. The room is twenty-eight feet by one hundred and twenty feet. There are two large vaults capable of containing about two thousand two hundred safe-boxes for renters. The vaults are equal to any in the United States in construction for security against burglary or fire. The company have the power and will act as trustee for any purpose whatever, as receiver, assignee, guardian, administrator, and receive money on deposit and loan money. The safe-box system has been a want long felt in this community for the deposit of valuables, many in adjoining counties having been compelled to go to Philadelphia for similar purposes. The officers are: President, William W. Jennings; Vice-President, William T. Hildrup; Secretary and Treasurer, William B. Hart; Directors, Simon Cameron, Charles L. Bailey, David Fleming, James Boyd, Lane S. Hart, D. L. Jauss, Charles H. Mullin, David Mayer, Theodore D. Greenawalt, James Young, A. S. Patterson, Isaac Frazer, Spencer C. Gilbert.

THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS OF THE STATE.—In the centre of the city, and in the centre of a beautiful park of ten acres, stands prominently the capitol of the Keystone State. It is a plain, substantial brick edifice, erected sixty years ago, at a cost of two hundred thousand dollars,—an unexpensive building, it is true, but just as comfortable and just as commodious as if it was built of marble at a cost of three or four million dollars. The site is a commanding one, and the park surrounding one of the prettiest in the country. The library of the State is located in the west wing of the capitol building. It contains a law library unsurpassed in the Union. Considering the immense advantages and facilities of the State, the miscellaneous portion of the library is not as great as it ought to be, but through the strenuous efforts of several of the librarians, who have been gentlemen of culture, it contains many books of great value. There being no public library in the city, that of the State is much resorted to by the citizens. Adjoining the legislative halls are the buildings for the different departments of the State, plain, substantial brick structures.

The Executive mansion is on Front Street, north of Pine Street. It is a plain, three-story brick dwelling-house. The interior is handsomely furnished. The building was the gift of the city of Harrisburg.

In the northeastern part of the city is located the Pennsylvania Lunatic Hospital, the first institution erected by the State. The commonwealth has reason to be proud of its many charitable institutions for the care of the insane poor, and that at Harrisburg still retains its status for efficient and skillful management under Dr. J. Z. Gerhardt, who has been connected with the hospital for several years.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

HARRISBURG HOSPITAL.—On the evening of Dec. 3, 1872, the following gentlemen met in the parlor of the Harrisburg Bank: William Calder, Rudolph F. Kelker, James McCormick, Jr., A. Boyd Hamilton, J. Donald Cameron, James Fleming, William O. Hickok, Herman Alricks, Henry McCormick, Wayne MacVeagh, David Fleming, James W. Weir, and Henry Gilbert, who passed the following resolution: That "William Calder, Rudolph F. Kelker, James McCormick, A. Boyd Hamilton, and J. Donald Cameron take into consideration the subject of a dispensary and hospital, and report to a future meeting." From this action, much subsequent conference, great industry, with the cheerful aid of the benevolent citizens of Harrisburg, came this hospital.

In March, 1873, thirty-nine persons were reported to have contributed $4335. It was determined to apply for a charter, which was granted in May, a part of the present property purchased, and immediate measures taken to prepare it for hospital purposes. It was opened Aug. 4, 1873. The first managers were James McCormick, president; A. Boyd Hamilton, secretary; J. Donald Cameron, David C. Kolp, William Calder, Henry McCormick, Jones Wistar, Rudolph F. Kelker, Robert A. Lamberton, John Curwen, Daniel W. Gross, George W. Reily, with James W. Weir, treasurer. The first patients were received on August 7th; since to April 1, 1883, there has been treated in the wards 1788; in the dispensary 26,455; and prescriptions filled from 1879, when that service commenced, 89,919. The total cost of maintenance has been upwards of $60,000, and of real estate, alterations and new buildings, nearly $65,000, or $125,000 as the actual money cost in ten years. No salaries are paid except to those who are in charge of the hospital, its property and housekeeping. It is able to accommodate comfortably from 50 to 75 patients, for whom every comfort has been provided. Its staff consists of eight physicians, surgeons, and an apothecary, a steward, matron, and nurses as required. Its buildings are on Front and Mulberry Streets, in the Third Ward, and are an ornament to the city.

POST-OFFICE AND POSTMASTERS.

From 1789 to 1791 the mails for Harrisburg were served from Lancaster, and possibly those from the West at Carlisle. During the latter year an office was established at Harrisburg, and John Montgomery, son of the Rev. Joseph Montgomery, of Paxtang, appointed postmaster. Mr. Montgomery continued in office until the spring of 1793, when he resigned, and John W. Allen, one of the proprietors of the Oracle of Dauphin, was either appointed or held the office ad interim until superseded by John Wyeth. Originally, says Mr. Hamilton, the post-office was "next opposite" the register's office, which then was in Mulberry Street. When Mr. Wyeth was appointed the office was in the building now owned by Frederick Gohl, No. 219 South Second Street. In 1799 the Oracle notices the removal of the office to the residence of Mr. Wyeth, "adjoining the Rev. Mr. Snowden, being nearly opposite to where it has been kept for several years." As the Rev. Mr. Snowden then occupied the brick house southwest corner of Mulberry and Second Streets, the "building adjoining" is easily recognized.

Mr. Wyeth's successor was John Wright, who was appointed by President John Adams about the year 1798, and resided and kept the office in a two-story frame house located on South Second Street below Chestnut Street, now No. 112, owned by Jacob F. Haehnlen. The salary of the postmaster then was only fifty dollars per annum. Mr. Wright taught a school in connection with the office. He only resided there one year, and then removed to South Front Street below Chestnut, in the house now J. Brisben Boyd's, and is No. 111. For some reason he changed his residence the next year to Mulberry Street near Second, upper side, where he resided eleven years, continuing his school, and where some of our older citizens now living received their preliminary education. This property was purchased by William Root about the year 1840, who removed the original house, and erected a three-story brick building on the street and a large tinware and stove manufactory on the rear of the lot.

At this time the stage stables were located on the corner of River and Cherry Alleys, the site being occupied by the bakery and spice-mill of Mr. Haehnlen at the present time. These stables were subsequently removed, probably to the east corner of Fifth and Walnut Streets, as they were there many years, and the river was mainly crossed by them at the Upper or Maclay's ferry. These changes may have induced Mr. Wright again to move, for in 1812 his residence and office were at the corner of Front and Walnut Streets, where he resided but one year. James McCormick's residence occupies the ground at present. The next location was on Walnut Street near Raspberry Alley, in the house now occupied by Robert Bryson, No. 215. The post-office was kept here eleven years, and it was probably here that Mr. Wright died.

As the State Legislature and the public offices were now located here, the business of the office greatly increased, and of course more laborious, the salary was made five hundred dollars per annum. During the year 1822, or in 1823, Mrs. Wright, who was continued in office, removed from Walnut Street to the southeast corner of Market Square, next door above George Ziegler's tavern. The salary was then raised to nine hundred dollars. Mrs. Wright died here during the year.

Mrs. Wright was succeeded by James Peacock, who printed a newspaper called the Pennsylvania Republican. He was appointed by President Monroe, about 1823. The Zollinger Brothers now own and occupy the place. Mr. Peacock did not remain in that location long, but removed the office to the house of Mr. Stine, north corner of Locust and Third Streets, and the year following his office and residence to Front Street above Market, now Mrs. John Haldeman's. It was here that the late James W. Weir served as Mr. Peacock's clerk. Subsequently the office was transferred to the two-story brick house next to Mrs. Mary Hanna's, where Mr. Peacock lived many years.

The first time the post-office was separated from the residence of the postmaster was in 1832 or 1833, when Mr. Peacock removed the office from his residence to a room in Mr. Keller's house on Second Street, near Walnut, where it remained several years, when he purchased from the heirs of Henry Miller the three-story brick house now No. 7 North Market Square.

Mr. Peacock was superseded by Isaac G. McKinley, who was appointed by President Polk in 1845. The office remained there until the appointment of Andrew J. Jones by President Taylor, in 1849, who changed it to the old Pennsylvania Bank, on the south corner of Market Square, now the site of the First Presbyterian Church. Here the office remained during Mr. Jones' term, and also during the four years John H. Brant was postmaster. The latter was appointed in 1852 by President Pierce. In 1856, Dr. George W. Porter was appointed Mr. Brant's successor by President Buchanan. He removed the office to his residence, on Market Street near Fourth Street, now No. 336, where it was continued until the appointment of George Bergner by President Lincoln in 1860, who removed the office to his residence, on Market Street near Third, and next door to the Lochiel Hotel, now 225, where it remained several years, when it was taken to No. 314 Market Street.

During the incumbency of President Johnson, Gen. Joseph F. Knipe was honored with the appointment. On the accession, however, of Gen. Grant to the Presidency, Mr. Bergner was reinstated in his old position, which he filled until his death, which occurred on the 5th of August, 1874, having held the office about eleven years. M. W. McAlarney was shortly after appointed his successor by President Grant, and retains the place at this date.

To repeat, the following have been the postmasters at Harrisburg from the establishment of the post-office there:

1. John Montgomery, appointed in 1792.
2. John W. Allen, appointed August, 1793.
3. John Wyeth, appointed October, 1793.
4. John Wright, appointed 1802.
5. Mrs. Wright took the office at his death, in 1814, who held it until 1822, when James Peacock was appointed.
6. James Peacock, who was succeeded in office by the following gentlemen:
7. Isaac G. McKinley.
8. Andrew J. Jones.
9. John H. Brant.
10. Dr. George W. Porter.
11. George Bergner.
12. Gen. Joseph F. Knipe.
13. George Bergner, died in office.
14. Henry Gilbert, ad interim.
15. M. W. McAlarney, the present incumbent.

The New Post-Office Building.—On the 9th of February, 1875, a bill was introduced in the United States Senate appropriating "one hundred and sixty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary," for the purchase of a suitable tract of ground for the erection thereon of a post-office and other government offices, which passed Congress and was approved by the President March 4th in the same year, and at subsequent sessions other appropriations were made to complete the work as money was needed. A commission to select a site was appointed, consisting of George Bergner, John J. Pearson, Daniel Eppley, A. Boyd Hamilton, and Henry Gilbert, but their recommendation of a site was not accepted. On the 14th of June, 1875, the Secretary of the Treasury appointed M. W. McAlarney, postmaster, Charles J.

Bruner, collector, and additional law judge Hon. Robert M. Henderson a second commission to receive proposals for a site and make recommendations. The commission failed to receive any proposal which came within their instructions, but reported that a great many pieces of ground were offered. Upon the receipt of their report Supervising Architect Potter came to Harrisburg and selected the site at Third and Walnut, after which negotiations with the several owners were continued for eighteen months before the title was secured, and in two cases proceedings in condemnation were had. On the 10th of March, 1873, an act was passed by the Pennsylvania Legislature ceding jurisdiction, etc., of land in Harrisburg for a post-office. Jehu DeHaven, of Harrisburg, was appointed superintendent, James G. Hill, of Washington, architect, and Postmaster McAlarney disbursing agent. The superintendent began work in December, 1877, and completed it in December, 1882. On the 10th of May, 1882, the post-office was removed into it from No. 314 Market Street. The building is sixty by one hundred and twenty feet, of three stories with a basement. The foundation of Conewago granite is laid in concrete; from the foundation to the water-table the stone is of Richmond granite, and the superstructure is of Maine granite. The first story is occupied by the post-office, the second by collector's offices and offices of the railway mail service, and the third story contains a court-room and rooms for the officers of the court. The wood-work is of oak, the court-room is wainscoted eight feet high with Tennessee marble, and all the offices and rooms contain mantles of marble or wood of elegant design. It is heated with hot water. The cost of the site for the post-office was one hundred and ten thousand seven hundred dollars, that of construction two hundred and ninety thousand dollars, making a total of a little over four hundred thousand dollars. The edifice, plain in its massiveness, is one of the most substantial structures in the country, and a credit to all concerned in its erection.

DAUPHIN COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—A preliminary meeting to take measures to organize a historical society was held on the evening of May 10, 1869. At a subsequent meeting, held in the lecture-room of the Market Square Presbyterian Church, a constitution and by-laws were adopted and signed, and an election for officers held. Upon application to the commissioners of the county a room in the court-house was secured for their use, subsequently fitted up, and where the society has ever since held its meetings and preserved its already valuable library. Files of all the newspapers of the county are kept and properly bound, and its collection of newspapers is a special feature. The society was incorporated in January, 1870, and measures have been adopted to the end that whatever may be donated to the society will be permanently preserved. What is needed is a fire-proof building for its valuable collection of manuscripts, books, and papers. Its officers are A. Boyd Hamilton, president; Hamilton Alricks and Daniel Eppley, vice-presidents; Rev. Thomas H. Robinson, D.D., corresponding secretary; George Wolf Buehler, recording secretary; John B. Cox, treasurer, and William H. Egle, M.D., librarian.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

—On the 21st of January, 1851, there were called together delegates to the number of over three hundred, representing nearly every county in the State, by an address signed by James Gowen, A. L. Elwyn, Samuel G. Ford, Algernon S. Roberts, and John Price Wetherill, all leading agriculturists. This convention of farmers met in the court-house, Gen. James Irwin, of Centre County, being temporary chairman, and Hon. George W. Woodward permanent president. A constitution was adopted, which has not been substantially amended or changed since its original adoption, and the society was incorporated by an act of the Legislature approved 29th of March, 1851. The following gentlemen have filled the office of president: 1851–54, Frederick Watts; 1855–56, James Gowen; 1857–59, David Taggart; 1860–61, Jacob S. Haldeman; 1862–64, Thomas P. Knox; 1865–68, A. Boyd Hamilton; 1869, Amos E. Kapp; 1870–71, John C. Morris; 1872–74, Jacob R. Eby; 1875, George Scott; 1877, John W. Hammond; 1879–80, William S. Bissell; 1881, John C. Morris; 1882–83, James Miles.

The other officers of the society, who have filled the positions for a long period, have been: Corresponding Secretary, Elbridge McConkey; Recording Secretary, D. W. Seiler; Treasurer, John B. Rutherford; Chemist and Geologist, Professor A. L. Kennedy; Librarian, William H. Egle, M.D.

Exhibitions have been held by the society at Harrisburg, 1851, 1855, 1868, 1869; Lancaster, 1852, 1875; Pittsburg, 1853, 1856, 1858, 1867, 1881, 1882; Philadelphia, 1854, 1857, 1859, 1879, 1880; Wyoming, 1860; Norristown, 1863; Easton, 1864, 1866, 1874; Williamsport, 1875; Scranton, 1870, 1871; Erie, 1872, 1873, 1877, 1878.

This society is second to none other in the United States, offering premiums during the past four years averaging over $50,000.

ADDENDA.

THE DAUPHIN DEPOSIT BANK was chartered in 1838, and for many years was successfully managed by James McCormick as president and Robert J. Ross as cashier. Upon Mr. Ross' death, J. Monroe Kreiter was elected cashier, and in 1869, James McCormick, Jr. Henry McCormick succeeded his father as president in 1870. Upon the expiration of the charter, in 1874, it was continued by the McCormick estate as a private bank. It is one of the most reliable institutions in the State.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION was organized Dec. 12, 1854. The first rooms of the association were on the second story of then Kelker's building, northeast corner of Market Street and River Alley; from thence they removed to Fleming's building (College Block), and finally into their own building, purchased from the McCormick estate, on the corner of Second and Locust Streets. The building contains a large public hall, a gymnasium, library-room, rooms for committees, etc. The presidents of the association have been: John W. Simon-ton, 1855-56; R. F. Kelker, 1856-57; Charles A. Hay, D.D., 1857-58; H. Mundy Graydon, 1858-59; Robert A. Lamberton, LL.D., 1859-60; George Cunkle, 1860-61; James Calder, D.D., 1861-62; W. C. Cattell, D.D., 1862-64; R. A. Martin, M.D., 1864-65; T. H. Robinson, D.D., 1865-66; James McCormick, 1866-67; Rev. Martin Stutzman, 1867; S. S. Shultz, M.D., 1867-68; Jacob F. Seiler, 1868-71; S. K. Dietrich, 1871-72; John E. Patterson, 1872-74; David C. Kolp, 1874-76; S. J. M. McCarrell, 1876-78; G. M. McCauley, 1878-81; H. Pitcairn, M.D., 1881-82; John C. Harvey, 1882-84.

THE HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS is one of the city's noble charities. The building, an extensive one, is situate on the corner of Fifth and Muench Streets. Old and young are alike cared for, the latter properly educated. The institution is dependent upon the charity especially of the different evangelical denominations of Christians, although all creeds are alike admitted. It is deserving of the hearty and earnest support of the community. Mrs. Ellen R. Rutherford is president, and Mrs. David Fleming secretary.

MIDDLETOWN BOROUGH.

MIDDLETOWN, so called from its being located midway between Lancaster and Carlisle, is a post-town and borough. It is the oldest town in the county, having been laid out thirty years before Harrisburg, and seven years before Hummelstown. It is located nine miles by the turnpike southeast of Harrisburg, near the confluence of the Susquehanna and Swatara, at which point the Pennsylvania and Union Canals unite. Its site was that of an ancient Indian village founded by the Susquehanna nation. There must have been settlements of importance in this locality earlier than 1720, as preparations had been made by the Presbyterians to erect places of worship about that period. The population was so numerous that a demand for a provincial road was made in 1731. One was finally located in 1736 from Lancaster to Shippenburg, connecting with the one between Philadelphia and Lancaster. That portion of it from the Swatara to Harris' Ferry is still in use, clear of modern improvements,—of turnpike, canal, or railway.

In 1723 the family of Conrad Weiser, with about twenty other families, from the Province of New York, leaving Schoharie wended their way in a southwestern direction, traveling through the forest, till they reached the Susquehanna River, where they made canoes, freighted them with their families, and floated down the river to the mouth of Swatara Creek, and thence worked their way up till they reached a fertile spot on Tulpehocken Creek, in Berks County, where they settled.

In 1732 the provincial land-office was opened for the sale of patents. Previously, several pioneers, the ancestors of a cultivated and patriotic race, "rough Irish," as Logan, Penn's man of all work, wrote of them, made "claim of settlement," at or near the mouth of the Swatara; principally along the southern part of its valley. When the land-office was prepared for business, four hundred and twenty-three acres, at the mouth of the Swatara, was in the possession of Jacob Job, acquired from a previous owner, "one Anderson." Job was a merchant of Philadelphia, who had acquired his right in adjusting a mercantile venture with a trader of the border.

On the 14th day of May, 1743, Edward Smout, deputy surveyor under Blunston, surveyor for Lancaster County, surveyed for John Fisher, of Philadelphia, "in right of Jacob Job, a tract of land situate in the township of Paxtang, in the county of Lancaster, beginning at a W. O. a corner of Sa Kearkpatrick; thence S. 21 degrees W. 270 pchs. to a W. O. standing on the side of Swatara creek; thence by the courses of ye said creek 169 pchs. to Susquehanna; thence up Susquehanna river by the courses of ye s'd river 184 ps. to W. H. a corner of Sa Means land; thence N. 20 degrees E. 349 pchs. to a B. O.; thence E. 96 ph. to a H. in Will. Kearkpatrick's line; thence S. 20 deg. E. 50 pchs. to a B. O. s'd Will. Kearkpatrick's corner; thence along s'd Kearkpatrick's line N. 70 deg. E. 122 pchs. to a W. O. the place of beginning, containing 423 A. 50 pchs., and the allowance of 6 p. c. for roads and highways."

On the draft by Smout, it is noted that this tract was "claimed by what I can find settled about fourteen years ago by one Anderson (who before I know not), from whence this wright proceeds." Now, fourteen years before 1742 would show "claim" as early as 1728. As has been stated, the locality began to assume importance as a frontier settlement before that.

Smout's survey states that Samuel Means was a landowner on the west line and up the river; that Samuel and William Kirkpatrick owned on the north; east was "Cooper's land by wright of Stewart." These names are found on the assessments of 1750, by which time the Coopers had established themselves on the east bank of the Swatara. The Cooper tract comprised 268 acres.

The south line of the survey is carried four thousand five hundred and five feet, or nearly a mile, when it intersects the Swatara; following its west or right bank, two thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine feet, to its confluence with the Susquehanna River; thence up the Susquehanna three thousand and thirty-six feet, to nearly the north point of the present South Ward of the borough of Middletown. This survey is a copy of the original, indorsed "Lancaster, No. 98, May 22, 1782, Jno. Lukens, Sy. G."

The claim of Job came into possession of John Fisher in 1742. Its history has been preserved by no less an individual than Dr. Benjamin Franklin. Some years after Fisher became possessed of his "right," a dispute arose between the Proprietary land-office and the settlers on the Susquehanna and Swatara, mostly Scotch-Irish, respecting the charges for fees and interest in that important department. It brought the present site of Middletown into the controversy of 1756. It was used as an illustration of the grasping and despotic tendency of the heirs of Penn, who then claimed to own the fee of all the land in Pennsylvania.

In the appendix to his "Historical Review," Franklin states "that John Fisher in right of Jacob Job purchased 423 acres and 53 perches of land in Paxtang township, Lancaster County," under a warrant dated March 19, 1742, issued to said Job. Fisher was called upon to pay at the land-office "for the land, with ten years' interest, and other charges to Feb. 20, 1747," £141 4s. 6d. Fisher having also "purchased of Thomas Cooper 268 acres, adjoining on the east," was also called upon to pay for that £78 18s. 11d., a gross sum of £212 13s. 7d., about $593.

Franklin then says, "The purchaser not being skill'd in Accounts, but amazed at the Sum, apply'd to a Friend to examine this account."

The friend thus "rendering willing aid," showed by his computation that the Proprietaries, through the land department, had overcharged Fisher on Job's tract £67 8s. 11d.; on Cooper's £24 3s. 3½d., in all above the rates fixed by the rule of the office, £91 11s. 4½d. Dr. Franklin proceeds to argue, that "the fortunes of the heirs of William Penn will in a few years be beyond computation." His estimate of value in 1756 was nearly £2,000,000 sterling (10,000,000 dollars), and increasing at the rate of 15 per cent. a year. This astonishing assertion made a great sensation, but it seems to have been entirely correct.

The "Anderson Job tract" is the one upon which Middletown stands. The "Cooper tract," or part of it, is in the borough also. John Fisher, a Philadelphia Quaker, appears to have given it to his son, George Fisher, about 1754. Samuel Means and William Kirkpatrick, adjoining owners, are on the tax-list for 1749-50. Fisher is not, until 1755-56. The land was heavily timbered, as was the whole Swatara region, with "fine oak, hickory, walnut, chestnut, locust, poplar, and laurel trees." It continued to be so until about the beginning of the present century, when George Frey had "clearing done on the McClenaghan farm," formerly Kirkpatrick's, the tract north of Middletown.

As early as 1750, certainly, and for some years previously, population grew apace in the immediate vicinity of the mouth of the Swatara Creek. The locality was known to the provincial rulers as the "South End of Paxtang township, Lancaster County."

On Feb. 24, 1747, John, Thomas, and Richard Penn, Proprietaries of the Province, by patent granted to John Fisher, merchant of Philadelphia, six hundred and ninety-one acres and fifty-three perches of land and the usual allowance. The said John Fisher and Grace, his wife, on Jan. 27, 1759, granted unto George Fisher, their youngest son, the above land. Upon this tract the said George Fisher laid out the town of Middletown. The date of its laying out is in doubt. Some fix the time at 1755, others, 1756, and Hon. R. J. Fisher, of York, a descendant of the original proprietor, puts it in 1766. If George Fisher laid it out in 1755 or 1756, he must have entered upon the lands of his father for that purpose, as the title did not vest in him till 1759. On the other hand, there is evidence that the town was in existence before 1766, for the first deed on record for property in its limits was given by Fisher and his wife to Peter Spangler, March 1, 1761, for lot No. 18. The consideration was "seven shillings and sixpence and one English copper farthing, to be paid annually on the first day of May. The grantee was to build on the lot a good "substantial dwelling-house of the breadth of twenty feet, and of the depth of twenty feet, with a good substantial chimney, within the space of twelve months." No deeds refer to any point indicating its laying out prior to 1760, and that, no doubt, was the year in which the land was divided into lots, for George Fisher, as we have seen, did not come into possession of the land before 1759, and it probably required some time to perfect his plans for the town and place the lots in the market. The parties engaged in laying it out did not use a surveyor's chain, but a marked rope, which in dragging over the wet grass and then drying made a variation as it alternately stretched or contracted, thus causing a difference in the size of the lots. The location of the town—all the territory lying near the mouth of the Swatara being known as Middletown—held out so many advantages to the pioneers that the place grew rapidly. From the head of the river to this point navigation was comparatively safe, but in consequence of the numerous and dangerous falls, it was supposed the Susquehanna could not be navigated below the Swatara. This being the southern limit of navigation, all the marketable produce of the Susquehanna and its tributaries was brought here for sale and distributed, and a brisk trade sprang up, which extended not only to the surrounding country but even to Maryland and Virginia. The Germans, who succeeded the Scotch-Irish settlers, lacked the spirit and enterprise of their predecessors, and Harrisburg, though some years the junior of Middletown, and with fewer natural advantages, outstripped it in growth and population. The trade of Middletown, however, exceeded that of any other point on the river. This town was a depot for Hessian prisoners during the Revolution, and a commissary department was established here.

After the Revolution trade greatly revived, and flourished extensively until 1796, when it gradually declined. Until then the mouth of the Swatara was considered the termination of the Susquehanna and its tributary streams. So far down it was considered safe, below this it was believed to be impracticable, on account of the numerous and dangerous cataracts impeding its bed. In 1796 an enterprising German miller named Kreider, from the neighborhood of Huntingdon, on the Juniata, arrived in the Swatara in an ark, fully freighted with flour, with which he safely descended to Baltimore, where he was amply compensated for his adventure. His success becoming known throughout the interior, many arks were built, and the next year this mode of transportation became established. This trade increasing, a number of enterprising young men were induced to examine critically the river from the Swatara to tide-water, by which they became excellent pilots. The enterprise of John Kreider thus diverted the trade of this place to Baltimore, where it principally centred until the Union Canal was completed in 1827, when it was again generally arrested at its old post. It would probably have so continued if the Pennsylvania Canal had not been continued to Columbia, by which the principal obstruction in the river, the Conewago Falls, was completely obviated. A large trade, however, in lumber and other articles of produce is still intercepted here, supplying the valleys of the Swatara, Quitapahilla, Tulpehocken, and the Schuylkill.

For a long period it was the great timber and lumber mart of the Susquehanna River. Every spring and fall the mouth of the Swatara was crowded with rafts and arks loaded with boards, shingles, grain, whiskey, plaster, and other marketable products of the up-river country, and not only was the mouth filled, but the shores of the river some distance below and for two miles above the "point," were lined with every kind of river craft. During the rafting season all was bustle and activity, and the handling, counting, and measuring of the lumber, grain, etc., gave employment to large numbers of men, some of whom came from great distances to work, returning to their homes when the busy season was over. The spring and fall freshets were harvest times for the merchants and tavern-keepers. Laborers were in demand and received good wages, and most of them were liberal patrons of the stores and inns. The "Yankees," as all the up-river men were styled, were generally a boisterous class, and when released from the restraint of their homes usually took a spree, spending their hard earnings freely, but before returning to their families laid in a supply of the necessaries for home consumption sufficient to last until they could make another trip. A row of store-houses lined the road facing the Swatara (some of which have been converted into dwelling-houses and are still standing, but so changed in appearance as not to be recognized), and these were frequently filled from cellar to garret with grain, whiskey, etc. These articles, with lumber of all kinds, were transported in wagons from this point in every direction, teams coming from Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. After Kreider had succeeded in running the falls with boats, Thomas Burbridge, a merchant of Wyoming, in the following year (1797) freighted and ran in one season ninety-nine arks loaded with coal, a few of which failed to reach their destination for want of skillful pilots. Much of the trade with this place was carried on in keel-boats (or Durham boats, as they were sometimes called after their first projector), and they were the only ones that ascended and descended the Susquehanna. These boats were fifty or sixty feet in length and about nine in width, and required a crew of eight expert polemen and a steersman to each boat. Considerable trading was done by these boats during their trips. Their approach to the villages along their route was signaled by the blowing of a horn, and those who were desirous of making purchases or of disposing of any surplus products were offered an opportunity. In order to avoid the rapids known as the "Conewago Falls," a short canal was made, reaching from the head of the falls to York Haven, on the York County side of the river. This enabled these small boats to pass up and down in safety, but on the completion of the Pennsylvania Canal that channel was abandoned, and York Haven, which at one time promised to be a place of note, was "finished." The Scotch-Irish settled here first, but they were unable to succeed in farming as against the German immigrants, who soon got "forehanded" where the former could not make a living. Then again, there began to be intermarrying between the young people of the two nationalities, which displeased the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, who gradually sold out their possessions and moved away.

The first tax-list of the town is that of the Revolutionary period, probably 1778:

The highest valuation is that of George Frey, eight hundred dollars. He returned five horses and nine cows.

George Fisher lived until his death near the town, on a well-cultivated farm which has been in the family since 1750, in the centre of a large tract of land bounded by the Susquehanna and Swatara, conveyed to him by his father, John Fisher, a noted merchant of Philadelphia. The proprietor being a Friend, several Quakers from Philadelphia and the lower counties followed him, and these, with several Scotch-Irish merchants, formed the first inhabitants of the village, who enjoyed up to the period of the Revolution a very extensive and lucrative trade with the Indians and others settled on the upper Susquehanna and Juniata, and also with the Western traders. The Scotch-Irish merchants mostly followed the emigration southward.

Jeremiah Job was the first actual settler on the lands composing what is now the town. In 1805 and 1806 two of his daughters, aged maiden ladies, Polly and Sally, taught school here. John Benner is the oldest male person living here born in the town, and Mrs. Critson and the mother of Dr. John Ringland the oldest female residents born here. John Benner was born Oct. 1, 1797, in a house on the Lancaster turnpike, near the bridge, where the widow of Edward Fisher lives. He is the son of John and Mary (Seabauch) Benner, and the former was born at Warwick Furnace, in Chester County, and was the son of an emigrant who came from Germany about 1751. John Benner, Sr., used to keep the Chambers ferry between Middletown and Harrisburg, and afterwards the ferry on Swatara Creek. He died in 1802. John Benner, the venerable octogenarian of eighty-five years, learned the cooper's trade with Conrad Seabauch, his uncle. The first cooper here was William Wandlass, a Scotchman, who opened a shop in 1769, and with whom Conrad Seabauch learned his trade. Wandlass was succeeded in his shop by Elisha Green. When Emanuel Bollinger, a Revolutionary soldier, came here there were but four persons buried in the old (first) Lutheran graveyard. Christian Seabauch, the maternal grandfather of John Benner, was the first hatter in town, and Jacob Shertz the first blacksmith. Prior to the Misses Job, Jacob Peeler, a nail-maker, taught school in 1808 and 1809. The first tavern was kept where Rife's Corner is, and long after it was built a Mr. Crabb was its landlord. About 1800, Charles Wade kept an inn at the east end of town, and about the same time George Shuler kept one. The Washington House was built before 1836, when Peter Young, who had previously kept a tavern on Swatara Hill, became its landlord. In 1807 the only store was kept by John Landis, on Main Street, where Eminger's grocery is, and to show the amount of his business, it is related that Conrad Seabauch, the cooper, made for Mr. Landis in one year nine hundred (fifty pound) firkins in which to pack the butter taken in at the store. The first store kept in town was that of George Frey, whose clerk, Christoph Frederick Oberlander, afterwards became his partner. Oberlander was born Jan. 15, 1748, and died Oct. 21, 1795. The first regular lumber-yard was kept by Enoph Skeer, whose lumber was piled under and around a tree to keep the high waters from carrying it off. The next to embark in this trade was John Snyder. John Smith about 1809 dealt largely in plaster, and also kept a hotel. Sometimes as high as forty teams were here at one time to get plaster, then the sine qua non for enriching lands. Jacob Rife, Sr., purchased what is known as the Keystone Tannery in 1830, and it has been carried on by him or his sons for nearly fifty years. Between 1810 and 1825, John Snyder had a pottery on the corner of the square where Ringland's drug-store was.

Among the earliest physicians here were Dr. Romer, who located before 1770, and Dr. Charles Fisher, who was born Sept. 8, 1766, and died May 8, 1808. Dr. James McCammon began practicing at the beginning of the century, having been born in 1778, and died Nov. 7, 1813. Contemporaneous with him was Dr. Abraham Price. He was born April 27, 1787, and died April 8, 1821. A little later was Dr. Abraham McClelland, who died Oct. 20, 1828, aged thirty-seven years. Dr. Mercer Brown, long in practice, was born Feb. 22, 1795, and died Feb. 9, 1871. Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling is the oldest living practitioner here now, having been over forty years in continuous practice. Dr. Meyrick practiced from about 1795 to 1815, and Dr. Simonton read medicine with him.

On May 25, 1811, the yearly market at Middletown was first advertised to commence June 11th following, at which time and place a great number of valuable horses, cows, sheep, lambs, calves, and hogs, with many other articles, such as pickled oysters, roast beef, punch, and wine, were to be offered for sale. These "old-time fairs" were noted days in the town and vicinity. The whole place would ring with drums, banjos, bagpipes, trumpets, fiddlers, and fifes, besides many other noises. The "Square" was the grand centre of attraction for the multitude of strangers and citizens. In one place might be seen the juggler performing all manner of tricks; in another rope-dancers were pirouetting; in still another anacondas, tame elephants, learned dogs, and a host of other rare and curious animals were exhibited. These, however, were only accessories and adjuncts to the fair, which, in truth, was a great commercial mart, where goods and chattels of almost every kind were sold, from a hawk of yarn to a mammoth bull. In several parts of the Square booths of entertainment were erected, where revelry, mirth, and feasting were indulged in with a degree of license unknown at other times and seasons. In other booths again the more staid farmers and the large households that they brought with them could provide themselves with food at a reasonable price and in a decent manner. Through the streets and alleys in the neighborhood of the Square would float a mixed multitude of all sorts,—buyers, sellers, minstrels, musicians, old women, beautiful girls, young children, "Yankees," wagoners, all jostling, bustling, talking, laughing, singing, and joking in the utmost good humor. So demoralizing, however, did these fairs become that they were expressly forbidden by law.

The following persons "took out licenses to keep houses of public entertainment" in Middletown from 1793 to 1808, and some of them continued to do so many years after: Henry Moore, Ludwick Wolfley, Peter Kipe, John McCann, George McCormick, Frederick Rothfong, John Blattenberger, Christian Rodfong, Michael Hemperly, John McCammon, William Crabb, Benjamin McKinley, John Benner, John Smith, George Toot.

PORT ROYAL.—On the 29th of January, 1774, a patent was issued to William Breden for eighty-seven acres and one-half of an acre, which he located at the mouth of the Swatara. On the 10th of May, 1774, Breden sold this land to Henry Wearer, "miller," of Caernarvon township, Lancaster Co., Elijah Wickersham, merchant, and Joseph Leacock, of Philadelphia, as tenants in common. They laid out a town, naming it Port Royal, into four hundred and sixteen lots. On June 15, 1774, Leacock sold his interest to Wearer and Wickersham, and upon the same day Wearer and Wickersham made an equitable division of the lots between them. Each took alternate lots. Wearer got two hundred and eleven lots and Wickersham two hundred and five, with a large lot on Salmon Street.

There is no record as to when the property passed out of the hands of Wearer and Wickersham, but it is presumed that they did not sell fast enough to reimburse them for their outlay, and that they were sold out by the sheriff. After the river became a highway for the transportation of merchandise in keels and keel-boats to the mouth of the Swatara, thence overland to Philadelphia and Baltimore, Port Royal was an important point, and was likely to grow very rapidly. The construction of a canal around Conewago Falls, through which keel-boats passed down the river, destroyed its business prospects. Middletown, being a short distance up the Swatara, and much more free from the bad effects of miasma, held its own, and kept Port Royal in the background. A large portion of the lots in Port Royal came into the possession of a Miss Loraine, of Clearfield County, who held them until a few years ago. The records of title will probably show how she became possessed of them, and trace back to Wearer and Wickersham.

HARBORTON.—In 1809, George Fisher, son of the founder of Middletown, laid out a town at the mouth of the Swatara, naming it Harborton. It embraced only a narrow strip of land along the creek. His advertisement reads,—

"HARBORTON.

"The subscriber having laid out a new town at the confluence of the Swatara with the Susquehanna, in the county of Dauphin, proposes to dispose of the lots at sixty dollars each, when deeds in fee-simple are delivered for them. As the object of the proprietor is to promote immediate improvement and not present emolument, and as many of the lots will now sell for from one hundred to three hundred dollars, and none of less value than forty dollars, the preference will be determined by drawing the several numbers from a wheel.

"The navigation of the Susquehanna thus far down is perfectly safe; but from this to Columbia, a distance of twenty-one miles, it is obstructed by the Swatara and Conewago Falls and many other rapids, so as to render it precarious and hazardous, and sometimes impracticable.

"The well-known harbor formed by the mouth of Swatara is not only the most capacious, but the only safe one on the river, and as produce to more than a million of dollars annually floats down the Susquehanna, a great proportion of which, it is presumed, will be transported from here to the Philadelphia market on the turnpike road now making and nearly completed to Lancaster, a distance of twenty-four miles, and the contemplated canal from the Susquehanna to the Schuylkill, which will enter the harbor through this town. The extensive command of water here for the turning of mill machinery and other water-works, and its vicinity to the great iron-works owned by Messrs. Coleman & Grubb, added to the facility with which an abundant supply of coal of the Susquehanna and Juniata may be had, when all combined, will fully justify the assertion that no town on the Susquehanna offers more advantages, nor none more certain prospects of gain to the enterprising merchant and mechanic than this.

"The site is an inclined plain, gradually rising from the margin of a bank from ten to fifteen feet above low water to a summit of fifty feet, commanding many beautiful prospects, as well land as water, and is as healthy as any on the river.

"Tickets may be had of the subscriber, and at other places, where plans of the town may be seen.

"GEORGE FISHER.

"Feb. 16, 1809."

On the 17th of March, 1814, George Fisher and wife conveyed to John Swar, of Lancaster County, that portion of "a certain tract of two hundred and twenty-five acres on which the town of Portsmouth is laid off." John Swar and Anna, his wife, conveyed the lots to different parties at different times. Portsmouth lay between Middletown and the Susquehanna, and in it the Union Canal, the Pennsylvania, the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroads all intersected. On March 9, 1857, Portsmouth, then having a population of seven hundred and fifty, was consolidated with Middletown.

"FREY'S MILL."—This mill was begun and partially constructed by John Hollingsworth and John Fisher. On Dec. 21, 1784, Hollingsworth and Frey entered into articles of agreement to build a mill (probably the one partially begun by Fisher), and to carry on a general milling business in manufacturing "flour, middlins, shorts, stuffs, etc." They had bought of John Fisher four acres and twenty-five perches, including some improvements, for five hundred pounds. Hollingsworth agreed to furnish all the casks, do all the buying of grain, and perform certain other stipulations, while Frey contracted not to retail any flour, shorts, etc., from his store, so the mill could have all such purchasers. Matters progressed awhile favorably, but in 1787 there was some difficulty between the partners, and Hollingsworth, by his attorney, Thomas Hartley, brought suit for a partition of the premises in the Dauphin Common Pleas Court. The latter referred the case to the Supreme Court without deciding it, the judges being Timothy Green, John Gloninger, and Jonathan McClure. The suit was docketed in the Supreme Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania at the September term, 1787, wherein "Hon. Thomas McKean, Esq., Doctor of Laws, chief justice, and his associate justices of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania" were the court. The case was not finally decided until the Nisi Prius term held at Louisburgh in 1790, when Frey gained the case, and a partition was refused. Hollingsworth had many creditors clamorous for pay, and not having probably complied with all the stipulations of his contract with Frey, the latter had counter-claims, and assigned claims of Hollingsworth's creditors to eat up his (Hollingsworth's) part. Thus Frey became the sole owner. He had great trouble in building the race, a mile and a half in length. The mill was built first. When the race and dam were completed the race was found not to be deep enough to carry the water, so Frey had again to go to the Legislature for another permit to make it larger. This was given on the condition that he secured the assent in writing (as in the first instance) of all the owners of lands or lots through which it passed. This he did, and at last success crowned his efforts.

THE KING'S HIGHWAY.—This old road from Philadelphia to the Ohio River passed through Middletown and formed what is now Main Street. The line is now occupied by the Lancaster and Middletown Turnpike Company, which has its western terminus about the "run" at the west end of the town, where it connects with the Middletown and Harrisburg Turnpike. "The King's Highway" was laid out about 1730. Over this thoroughfare nearly all the travel between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh passed. After the above-named turnpike companies were incorporated they adopted a large portion of the old road as their line. The macadamizing of the road enabled much greater loads to be taken than before. Dry-goods, groceries, etc., were loaded at Philadelphia in large wagons, called "Pitt" or "Conestoga" wagons, hauled by teams of six horses, and delivered at Pittsburgh or intermediate points, and returned laden with Western produce, such as flour, bacon, feathers, and whiskey. The time occupied by the wagons for the round trip between these two cities was usually from six to eight weeks, according to the condition of the roads. Passengers and mails were drawn in stages by four horses, relays of which were provided at regular stations some miles apart. They were generally driven at a rapid rate, and the distance between here and Philadelphia was made in two days. The coaches held nine passengers inside, with room for one on the outside with the driver. The mailbags occupied a recess beneath the driver's seat, and the baggage was stored in the "boot" at the back of the stage.

MIDDLETOWN IN 1807.—Cuming, in his "Sketches of a Tour to the Western Country," in 1807, made on foot from Philadelphia to the Mississippi frontier, printed at Pittsburgh, 1810, has something to say of Middletown and the King's Highway:

"Jan. 30, 1807, I proceeded for Middletown, eight miles farther (from Elizabethtown), first loading one barrel of my gun with a running ball, as I had to pass near where one Eschelman was robbed and murdered last fall (1806). The road over the Conewago Hills was bad. It was dark before I arrived at Swatara Creek. The boat was on the other side of the creek, and the German family at the ferry-house let me kick my heels at the door until I was quite chilled before they invited me in, which old Mrs. Smith did at last with a very bad grace, and she almost scolded me for risking the dropping on her very dirty floor the spirits of turpentine, with which I was wetting the feet of my stockings to prevent my catching cold, a phial of which I carried in my pocket for that purpose.

"In about half an hour, which to me appeared an age, the boat returned, and I left the dirty, boorish, inhospitable mansion, crossed the creek in a canoe, hauled over by a rope, extended from bank to bank, about seventy yards, and in a few minutes after I found myself in Mrs. Wentz's excellent inn, the sign of Gen. Washington, in Middletown." (Mrs. Wentz kept tavern on the southeast corner of the square. Cuming had a sore foot, but had a "good supper and an excellent bed," and notwithstanding his loss of rest enjoyed his breakfast with Mrs. Wentz, "an agreeable and well-bred woman.")

"The view down the Susquehanna from Mrs. Wentz's back piazza is very fine. The town contains about one hundred houses, and is well and handsomely situated about half a mile above the confluence of Swatara Creek with the Susquehanna River, the former of which forms a good harbor for boats, which it is in contemplation to join to the Schuylkill by a canal, in order to give Philadelphia the benefit of the navigation of the Susquehanna through its long course above Middletown."

He remarks that the river is a "noble stream, with fine wooded banks and abounds with fish," among which he names the "white salmon from seven to fifteen pounds weight," and proceeds to say that for all the abundance of fish "Mrs. Wentz assured me that she was seldom gratified with a dish of fish." The lady told him that the fishermen "were a lazy set and will not do anything more than will procure them some whiskey. The road to Harrisburg leads parallel with the Susquehanna, in some places close to the river, along a very pleasant level," and so located as to protect the orchards "which are so numerous and so fine in this tract. I have rarely seen in any country a road more pleasant than this, either from its own goodness or the richness and variety of prospect. The mountains rising abruptly from the margin of the river, in which they are charmingly reflected, altogether form a scenery truly delightful," and this brings the tourist to Harrisburg. It is almost unnecessary to say that the route of the traveler was over the "King's Highway."

THE MUD PIKE commenced a short distance west of the town, where the Harrisburg Turnpike crosses the canal, and followed the bank of the canal to Columbia. It was kept in good condition until the branch road of the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad was made, when, as the latter occupied much of the line of the pike, it was abandoned, and what was left of it was placed in charge of the supervisors of the townships through which it passed.

THE UNION CANAL, completed in 1827, connects the Susquehanna River at Middletown with the Schuylkill at Reading, and affords water communication thence to Philadelphia by the Schuylkill Navigation Company's improvement. An outlet from the basin of the canal to the Swatara was made to allow the boats, rafts, and arks access to and from the river. This lock was situated between the railroad, near where it crosses the Swatara Creek, and the old collector's office. A vast amount of lumber and other articles were carried by the canal-boats. In 1850 and 1851 the canal was enlarged by widening and deepening, and new locks were built so as to allow boats of larger carrying capacity to be used.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CANAL extends from Columbia, in Lancaster County, to Hollidaysburg, in Blair County. It was an important link in the chain of public improvements inaugurated by the State, connecting, by means of the Philadelphia and Columbia Railroad on the east and the Portage Railroad on the west, Philadelphia with Pittsburgh. Goods could be shipped in Philadelphia in sections of boats, which were transported to Columbia on railroad trucks prepared for the purpose; at Columbia they were placed in the canal, and connected together, forming a complete boat, and towed to Hollidaysburg, where they were again placed upon railroad trucks, and thence to Pittsburgh. The Allegheny Mountains were crossed by means of inclined planes, of which there were several. A large basin for the reception of boats, arks, and other water craft, was made here, and an outlet lock of great capacity constructed to the Swatara. Upon the completion of this lock that of the Union Canal was abandoned and suffered to go to decay, and there is now little left to show that there was ever one there. The ground was broken for this canal at Harrisburg July 4, 1826, with great ceremony, and the water was let into this division in 1828.

When the main line of the Pennsylvania Public Works was sold to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, this canal was included in the purchase, and it has since passed into the hands of the Pennsylvania Canal Company, who have greatly improved it, and still operate it.

THE BREAKWATER.—Several attempts have been made to construct a dam or breakwater across the Susquehanna a short distance below the Swatara, as a harbor for lumber and timber, where it would be safe at all seasons. The project, however, never succeeded.

THE HARRISBURG, PORTSMOUTH, MOUNT JOY AND LANCASTER RAILROAD was laid out about 1832, and was completed and in use from Harrisburg to Elizabethtown long before the tunnel was finished. The first locomotive used on this part of the road was the "John Bull." It was brought to Middletown from Columbia on a flat-boat, and landed at the wharf where Mr. Rambler's large building now stands on the canal basin. It was drawn thence to the railroad by the employes and citizens, who had been attracted there by curiosity. It was a serviceable but small engine, scarcely more than a toy when compared with the powerful "MODOCS" of the present day. Instead of the heavy T-rail now used, the rails were simply flat bars of iron, about two and one-half inches in width and three-quarters of an inch in thickness, and were spiked to timbers running lengthwise with the line of the railroad. The first cars were about the size of an ordinary omnibus, with the entrance at the side, and would accommodate from twelve to eighteen passengers. Three or four cars constituted a train. A high seat on the outside of the car was provided for the conductor or brakeman.

On the completion of this part of the road there was great rejoicing. On Sept. 16, 1836, the track was opened for travel. A locomotive with a train of cars brought to Middletown from Harrisburg a large company, principally invited guests, who were handsomely entertained at Peter Young's hotel. The distance, ten miles, was run in twenty minutes. The tunnel was not completed until Aug. 18, 1838, when the trip between Harrisburg and Philadelphia could be made in seven hours. Gen. Simon Cameron, Dr. Mercer Brown, Henry Smith, Martin Kendig, and many other citizens of Middletown took great interest in the enterprise.

THE STUBBS' FURNACES.—In 1796, two brothers, Daniel and Thomas Stubbs, from England, erected a furnace near the mouth of Swatara Creek, on what is still known as the "Steel Furnace Lot," for the purpose of manufacturing "blister" steel. The making of steel was continued by them several years, and a ready sale was found at remunerative prices.

This is said to have been the first steel manufactured in America. Several years after the Stubbs brothers had built their furnace, a second one was erected by one of their sons and John Elder, and was for a time carried on successfully. This was located about a fourth of a mile above the other furnace and near "Frey's mill." Its retorts or chambers were standing there a year or two ago. They far more resembled an overgrown bake-oven than the furnaces of the present day.

DEATH OF GEN. WASHINGTON.—On Jan. 9, 1800, the citizens of Middletown and surrounding country testified their sorrow at the death of Washington by meeting at the farm-house of George Fisher, and moving therefrom in the following order to the Lutheran meeting-house:

Trumpeter.
Cavalry on foot, swords drawn.
Infantry, arms reversed, by platoons inverted.
Rifle company, arms reversed.
Militia officers in uniform.
Music.
Standard.
Surgeons.
Clergy.
Pall-bearers.
Young ladies in white.
Ancient citizens first.
Citizens in general by twos.
Boys by pairs.

Having arrived at the meeting-house, the troops formed lines right and left, when the clergy, pall-bearers, and citizens entered, followed by the troops, while the Dead March from Saul was performed by the organist. The exercises were opened by a short prayer and singing part of the Ninetieth Psalm. Rev. Mr. Snowden and Rev. Mr. Moeller then delivered addresses. Most of the military who joined in the procession were from Harrisburg.

INCORPORATION OF THE BOROUGH—BOUNDARIES, OFFICERS, ETC.

The borough was incorporated Feb. 19, 1828, with the following boundaries: "Beginning at a stone at the east end of the town on the south side of Main Street, thence south six degrees east forty-one perches to a stone; thence south eighty-six degrees west sixty perches to an apple-tree; thence south sixty-six degrees west eighty-two perches to a stone; thence south twenty-two degrees east two perches and five-tenths to a stone; thence south sixty-seven and a half degrees west thirty-two perches to a stone; thence north twenty-four degrees west across Main Street sixty-one perches to a stone; thence north thirty-four degrees east six perches to a stone; thence north thirty-two degrees west twenty-one perches to a stone; thence north seventy degrees east thirty-two perches to a stone; thence north thirty-two degrees west two perches to a stone; thence north sixty-five degrees east one hundred and eight perches and five-tenths to a stone; thence north eighty-six degrees east sixty-one perches and five-tenths to a stone; thence south eight degrees west forty-six perches to a stone; and thence along the south side of the said Main Street south eighty-nine degrees east seven perches and five-tenths to the place of beginning."

The first election was held on the second Tuesday of April following, at the tavern of David Kissecker. By legislative act of March 9, 1857, the limits and boundaries were so extended as to include the town of Portsmouth and lands contiguous and adjacent to the said borough and town. Thus the borough boundaries were then made to comprise the following limits: "Beginning at a point on the river Susquehanna, and at low-water mark thereof, opposite to the termination of a certain lane between the lands of George Crist and company, and land now or lately the property of A. Welch; thence by lands of same and J. Rife, John J. Walborn, and Stephen Wilson, north eighteen and one-quarter degrees east two hundred and seven perches to the centre of the Middletown and Harrisburg Turnpike road; thence by said turnpike road south seventy-eight degrees east forty-six perches to a stone; thence north sixty-four degrees east twelve perches; thence north sixty-one and one-quarter degrees east sixty perches to George Crist's lane; thence by lands of Crist, Brown, Croll, and others, north twenty-seven and one-quarter degrees west one hundred and seventy-two and one-half perches to lane at side of Red Hill; thence by said lane north sixty-nine degrees east one hundred and one perches to the Great road leading from Middletown to Hummelstown; thence south one-half degree east three hundred and twenty-one perches to centre of Swatara Creek; thence down the said creek or river, the several courses thereof, to the junction of the said creek and the Susquehanna River at the low-water mark thereof seven hundred and thirty-eight perches; thence up the said Susquehanna River the several courses thereof to the place of beginning." The same act divided the borough into three wards, viz., All that part of the said borough lying north of a line commencing at a point on the Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike, and running directly through Water Street to a point on the Swatara Creek, to be called the North Ward; and all that part lying south of said line and north of a line commencing in the lane forming the western boundary of the borough opposite the extension of Ann Street, directly through said extension and through Ann Street to a point on Swatara Creek, to be called the Middle Ward; and all that part lying south of the said Ann Street line to be called the South Ward. The first election under the extended new wards and borough occurred on the third Friday in March, 1857, when three councilmen were elected from each ward, and were by lot divided into three classes to serve one, two, and three years respectively. Thereafter one was annually elected from each ward for a term of three years. The first elections were held as follows: In North Ward, at the brick school-house on Pine Street; in the Middle Ward, at Union Hall on Elizabeth Street; and in the South Ward, at the town school-house, corner of Spring and Ann Streets. The fourteenth section of this act, extending the limits of the borough and giving Council power to survey, lay out, enact and ordain streets, roads, lanes, alleys, courts, and sewers, was specially exempted from applying to the tract of land included within the borough limits (as created by this act) late the estate of George Fisher, deceased, called and known by the name of "Pine Ford." A legislative act of April 13, 1858, empowered the Council to erect a lock-up. An ordinance of March 30, 1857, prohibited the running at large of dogs in the borough; and that of June 24th, changed the name of Spring Street, in the plan of Portsmouth, to Wood Street.

The first record-book of the borough and other papers were destroyed by fire in 1855, when the residence of Henry Stehman, who was then burgess, was burned. Since that period the records are somewhat imperfect, and we are unable to give a complete list of the burgesses.

CHURCHES.

ST. PETER'S LUTHERAN CHURCH is the oldest Lutheran Church in the county. The lot numbered 135 upon which the old (the first) church edifice stands, including the graveyard in the rear, was purchased from George Fisher, and Hannah, his wife, as appears from a deed bearing date Sept. 18, 1764, to Peter Woltz, George Frey, and Deterick Schob, all of Lower Paxtang (now Swatara) township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) County, Province of Pennsylvania. The purchase-money was seven shillings and sixpence, with the additional rent of one grain of wheat every year, to be delivered annually on the 1st day of May. The deed was acknowledged before Justice John Allison, and attested by Joseph Greenwood and Henry Renick. It is written on parchment, and is yet in a good state of preservation. It is recorded in Lancaster County, in Deed-Book M, page 395, by Edward Shippen, recorder. It bears the old Provincial seal of Lancaster County. In the same year a petition was sent to John Penn, then Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, praying for the privilege of erecting a church, and also for the privilege of collecting funds for the same purpose. Whereupon privilege was granted by license dated Sept. 28, 1764, to Christian Roth and David Ettley¹ to raise by subscription twelve hundred pounds in the space of three years. This document bears the autograph of John Penn, and is countersigned by Joseph Shippen, his secretary. There are no papers to show how much of this money was raised. It appears from the terms of the license, dated Sept. 28, 1764, granting the above privilege, that the members were then very poor, and that many were driven from their homes by the hostile Indians. Middletown then contained but a few houses, and a great part of Dauphin and Lancaster Counties was then a wilderness. The forests were peopled by Indians, and the settlers could not go outside their homes unarmed with any degree of safety. Whenever the people went to the store, mill, or even the church, they armed themselves. They would stack their arms inside the church, and station one person at the door as sentinel to warn the others of approaching danger.

The church edifice was built in 1767. The cornerstone was laid by Justice (Col.) James Burd, in presence of Revs. Theophilus Engeland, N. Harnell, Conrad Bucher, and the church wardens and elders, John Christ. Roth, John Metzgar, George Philip Shaage, Gottlieb David Ettley, and Jacob King, together with the building committee, which consisted of George Frey, Frederick Zeppernick, and Conrad Wolfley. There was placed in the corner-stone a German Bible, printed at Halle in 1763; the shorter Catechism of Martin Luther, printed in Philadelphia in 1764; three wafers; a half-pint bottle of wine; and some money in Pennsylvania currency. The lot upon which the lecture-room stood was transferred by the executors of George Frey and Jacob King, by a deed bearing date Oct. 7, 1807, to the trustees of the church, viz., John Metzgar, Philip Ettele, John Blattenberger, Jacob Wolfley, Christian Esenhauer, and Marks Snyder. On March 10, 1807, application was made by the congregation for a charter of incorporation. On the 21st of the same month, Governor Thomas McKean authorized Timothy Matlack, master of the rolls, to issue the charter prayed for by the petitioners, who were Ludwick Wolfley, Valentine Weyrick, Martin Hemperley, Nicholas Shuler, George Shalkey, Frederick —, George Schneegaus, Christian Spayd, George Lauman, James Metzgar, Jacob Snyder, John Smuller, John Croll, John Heppich, John Blattenberger, Jr., Christian Laurentz, David Ettele, George Schuler, Matthias Wolf. In 1813 the steeple was built. For this purpose twelve hundred and eleven dollars and thirty-five cents was subscribed by one hundred and ninety-three different persons, whose names are all on record, and among whom are the ancestors of many of the prominent families of the town. The first floor of the church was of brick, and in 1830 the present floor was laid. In 1835 the lecture-room was built, and in 1861 an addition was made to accommodate the increasing number of Sunday-school scholars. In 1844 the second roof was put on the church, and in 1850 its interior was remodeled. At this time the pulpit was erected on the north side, between the two large windows, and about midway between the floor and the ceiling, and was reached by a narrow flight of steps. There were two entrances, one on the south side, which on the remodeling of the edifice was closed. The building was remodeled while Rev. Dr. Baum had charge of the congregation, and the work was done by Maj. Rehrer. In 1855 and 1856 the parsonage was built. This old stone church is now used only at stated times, mostly at funerals of aged persons who wish the funeral services to be held in its sacred walls, an elegant new church edifice having been completed on another lot, and dedicated in 1879. Its pastors have been: 1767-73, Rev. Theophilus Engeland; 1773-88, Rev. T. F. Illing; 1788-93, Rev. J. Kurtz; 1793-95, Rev. P. Pentz; 1795-1803, Rev. H. Miller; 1803-12, Rev. F. C. Sheaff; 1812-15, Rev. George Lochman, D.D.; 1815- , Rev. A. H. Lochman, D.D.; 1830-34, Rev. J. Van Hoff; 1834-37, Rev. P. Saline; 1837-44, Rev. S. D. Finckel, D.D.; 1844-47, Rev. J. Voghbaugh; 1847-48, Rev. L. Gerhart; 1848-53, Rev. W. M. Baum, D.D.; 1853-56, Rev. Benjamin Sadtler; 1856-65, Rev. C. J. Ehhart; 1865-72, Rev. Peter Raby; 1873 (April 1), Rev. John W. Finkbiner, the present incumbent.

On Sept. 4, 1867, the church celebrated its centennial anniversary, at which were present many distinguished clergymen of the Lutheran and other denominations and persons prominent in the State. At this centennial anniversary, George Smuller sent one hundred grains of choice selected wheat to Hon. Robert J. Fisher, of York, the oldest of the legal heirs and representatives of George Fisher, who laid out the town, and of whom the church lot was purchased, as full satisfaction of one clause in the original deed requiring a rental of one grain of wheat to be paid annually. The wheat was contained in a silk bag worked by Miss Carrie Smuller.

The old church lot is two hundred by fifty feet. When "St. Peter's Kirche" (as it was denominated by a lettered stone still in its front over the door) was dedicated in 1767 the members consisted of sixty-six old and sixty-three young persons. It was built of red sandstone, was two stories in height, and had a gallery on the east, south, and west sides, the pulpit occupying the north side. There was a second entrance fronting on High Street, which was reached through the yard in front and staircase leading from each door to the gallery, meeting at the southeast corner. The windows were small, with quite small panes of glass. The bricks in the floor were nine inches square. The pews were narrow, with high, straight backs. When the house was finally warmed, it was done by two large stoves capable of taking in a vast amount of fuel, consisting of ordinary cord-wood four feet in length. The pulpit was small and supported by a post eight or ten feet high, and reached by a narrow stairway. Over it was a sounding-board. A pipe-organ at one time occupied a portion of one side of the gallery. In August, 1793, the congregation secured the adjoining lot, No. 134, of Jacob Gross and wife, who made a conveyance thereof to George Frey and Jacob King for the consideration of three pounds in hand and a yearly rent of one grain of wheat to be paid annually on May 1st. By mistake the deed was made to Frey and King individually, but when they died their trustees and executors—John Landis, Charles Fisher, William Crabb, and John Cassel for Frey's estate, and Jacob Snyder and Daniel Erisman for King's—conveyed it to the trustees of the church. In 1826, Jane Hannegan (Flannagan) sold lot No. 133 to the congregation, so that the old church and cemetery now comprises three lots,—Nos. 133, 134, and 135. When the brick floor was replaced by a wooden one, in 1830, the straight-back pews gave way to others of a more comfortable character, and a new pulpit was erected, beneath which was an alcove or recess, into which the pastor could retire and leave his wrappings before entering the sanctuary. It had steps at either side, and a semi-circular railing hung with velvet inclosed it. The reading-desk was also covered with velvet. The alterations were superintended by Jacob Hep-pich. In the remodeling of 1850 the whole inside wood-work—pews, gallery, and all—was removed. The windows, which were formerly in two tiers, were made into one, and the door-way facing High Street was converted into a window. The pulpit was erected at the west end, and the galleries extended around the other three sides. A vestibule was made, from which inclosed stairways led to the gallery and shut off the cold from the auditorium. A parsonage was erected on High Street, near the old church, in 1855. In 1872 the congregation purchased the lots on Union Street, on which its second and beautiful edifice was built, and dedicated in 1879.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Middletown Station was formed out of Dauphin Circuit in 1856. Since then the pastors have been: 1856-58, George G. Rakestraw; 1858-60, S. W. Kurtz; 1860, William B. Gregg; 1861-63, J. S. Lane; 1863-65, J. M. Wheeler; 1865-67, S. T. Kemble; 1867-69, Allen John; 1869, L. B. Hughes; 1870-72, J. Montgomery; 1872-74, T. B. Miller; 1874-77, S. G. Grove; 1877-79, J. T. Swindells; 1879-82, W. H. Fries; 1882-84, L. B. Brown, the present pastor. The Ebenezer Methodist Episcopal Church edifice, now a dwelling-house occupied by Mrs. Lauman, was a frame building, built about 1820 at the upper or north end of Main cross street. It was used by the Methodist preachers on the circuits, and at intervals missionaries of other denominations held services therein. In it was held the first Sunday-school in the town, opened about 1832. This building was erected and the congregation organized in 1830. The cornerstone of the present church was laid in 1851, and May 10, 1853, it was dedicated, Rev. Dr. Bartine officiating. It was built under the pastorship of Rev. Sanders. The parsonage, on the same street (Ann) as the church, was built in 1867. The valuation of the church property is over eight thousand dollars. The Methodists were second to the Lutherans in point of time in holding services in the town, and the first Methodist preaching in the county, antedating by twenty-one years that at Halifax, is said to have occurred here. As early as 1780 circuit-riders of "York Circuit," embracing a large area of country and parts now of several counties, came every four weeks to Middletown to meet their appointments. The place of holding the services was at the dwelling of Dr. Romer, on High above Duck Street, where Eli May lived. One of the original congregation and first Methodists here was Jacob Shertz, who carried on a blacksmith-shop. The place was for many years one of the large number of preaching-places of "York Circuit," but sometimes two and three months would elapse ere the itinerant made his appearance. In good weather, however, and with no sickness on the part of the circuit-riders, preaching was had every four weeks. From 1856, when made a station, its progress has been uninterrupted, and its growth has been largely due to such members as Seymour Raymond, who by his zeal, energy, and liberality succeeded in putting the church on a good financial basis and building up its prosperous Sunday-school.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—The Scotch-Irish were among the first settlers in this vicinity, and were generally Presbyterians. Lebanon Valley, however, was the principal point of attraction to these pioneers, who, bringing with them a large amount of energy and religious fervor, erected the very ancient church at Derry, and soon after the ones at Paxtang and Hanover. It does not appear that any attempt was made in early times to establish a church at Middletown, but a house was built near Gainsburg, four miles from Middletown, known as the "Conewago Presbyterian Church," long since fallen to decay. The builder was killed by falling from its roof, and was buried in 1745 in the graveyard attached. These churches, being within what was then considered reasonable distance for church attendance, were deemed sufficient for the wants of the members at Middletown. Services, however, were frequently held in the German Lutheran Church by Presbyterian preachers, among whom were Revs. N. R. Snowden and James R. Sharon. There must have been some organization among the members of the church, as the records show that on June 7, 1802, James Russell and wife conveyed lot No. 94, in Middletown, to William Crabb, John McCammon, and Edward Crouch, as "trustees of the English Presbyterian Congregation of Middletown," to be used as a burying-ground. The lot adjoining it on the east was used as a burial-ground by the Presbyterians before that period. Col. James Burd and his wife were buried there, the latter in 1784 and the former in 1793, but their remains were a few years ago removed to the Middletown cemetery. The Burds, McClures, Kirkpatrick, and McClanegans were among the first Presbyterian families who settled about here and held large tracts of land.

In the early part of the present century the Crabbs, McCammons, Crouches, Jordans, and Elders took their places, and later the McKibbens, McNairs, and Kendigs. There was no movement to reorganize the congregation until 1850. On April 10th of that year the Presbytery in session at Carlisle appointed a committee to visit Middletown and confer with the Presbyterians there as to the practicability of establishing a church. At a meeting in June following of the Presbytery at Gettysburg the committee reported favorably. On October 29th the Presbytery met here, when a petition signed by Daniel Kendig, Sarah Kendig, Robert F. Snoddy, Edward Burgett, Dr. B. J. Wiestling, Matilda E. Wiestling, Mary E. Witt, and Davis Thompson was presented, asking for the organization of a church here. The elders then elected were Dr. B. J. Wiestling, Daniel Kendig, and Edward Burgett. Thus was organized the first regular congregation since the original one had expired half a century before. Supply preaching was had in the brick church on Water Street.

April 8, 1851, Rev. John Cross was authorized to solicit funds for erecting a church edifice, on June 10th was called as pastor, and installed June 26th. Mr. Cross died suddenly Aug. 22, 1851, at Dickinson, Cumberland Co., while raising funds to build the church, and his remains were brought to Dr. B. J. Wiestling's house, from which the burial took place. The church building was erected on Union Street in 1852, in which year Rev. O. O. McClean became pastor, and continued to April, 1854. In October, 1855, Rev. John W. White was called and remained until the spring of 1858. His successor was Rev. T. K. Davis, from March, 1858, until May 4, 1863, when Rev. William C. Ferriday became pastor (during whose absence, from ill health, Rev. H. T. Lee, of Philadelphia, preached). Mr. Ferriday's continued sickness compelled him to resign, and Jan. 25, 1865, Rev. H. L. Rex was called, who was installed June 6, 1865, and remained until May, 1874. In January, 1865, Rev. Daniel Macfie became pastor, and resigned in January, 1876. For some time Rev. A. D. Mitchell supplied the pulpit, but being appointed post chaplain in the United States army, Rev. Robert P. Gibson supplied the pulpit until April 14, 1878, when Rev. D. C. Mecker was called as pastor, who declined the call, and on May 20th, Rev. Malachi C. Bailey became pastor. He resigned in 1880, and his successor was Rev. William G. McDannold, who took charge on Nov. 1, 1881, and is the present incumbent.

On March 31, 1852, C. W. King conveyed to Daniel Kendig lots 63 and 64, at the corner of Union and Water Streets, upon which to erect the church. On Aug. 24, 1854, Mr. Kendig conveyed the same to Dr. B. J. Wiestling, Davis Thompson, Dr. J. C. Whitehill, C. H. Roe, George Crist, Jeremiah Rehrer, and D. E. Martin, in trust for the church and congregation. The church is a neat brick edifice, with a basement for Sunday-school and lecture-room. Its builders were Messrs. Leedom and Fisher. In 1858 (August 28th) the congregation was incorporated. In March, 1864, the trustees purchased of Dr. Mercer Brown a piece of ground in Lower Swatara township, adjoining Middletown, of 77 $\frac{1}{2}$ perches, on which they erected a parsonage.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—About 1825, Rev. John Winebrenner, a minister of the German Reformed Church, but who had withdrawn therefrom, entertained and preached views on experimental religion which differed somewhat from those held by the church, resided at Harrisburg. At the request of the friends of a Mrs. Black, who had been at one time a member of his congregation, and who had died on the farm of the late George Fisher, Mr. Winebrenner came to Middletown to preach the funeral sermon. The feeling against him was so strong that some of the older citizens refused to have anything to do with him, on the ground that he was not a minister in good standing in any church. John McCammon, however, on being asked whether he would walk with Mr. Winebrenner on the occasion, cheerfully consented, and they were afterwards warm friends. The funeral services were held in the Lutheran Church, and some of the young men of the town were so favorably impressed with Mr. Winebrenner that they invited him to preach. The doors of the Lutheran Church were, however, closed against him, but Mrs. Flannagan, who had charge of the Ebenezer Methodist meeting-house, opened that building to him, and under his ministrations a great revival commenced. He continued preaching alternately with the Methodist circuit preachers for several years until about 1832, when his friends deemed it advisable to have an edifice of their own. In the mean time, however, some friends of Mr. Winebrenner residing in Harrisburg, Middletown, and vicinity met at Linglestown and organized a new church or sect, adopting the doctrines taught by Mr. Winebrenner, and styled themselves the "Church of God," but for many years they were generally known as "Winebrennarians." Mr. Winebrenner always disapproved of this term, and all his followers are now known as members of the "Church of God." The first members of this congregation, in 1827, were Susanna Smuller, — Bare, Elizabeth King, Jacob Rife, Joshua Heppich, Jacob Benner, John Benner (still living), Henry Siple, Joseph Ross, George Smuller, George Etter, Conrad Seabauch, George Baker, John McFarland, Eliza Longhead, and Eve Crist. The first elders (1827) were Joshua Heppich and John McFarland. The first church edifice of this new denomination ever built was erected in Middletown in 1832, on lot No. 23, on the east side of Main cross street (now Union), about midway between Water Street and Centre Square. It was a frame structure, lathed and plastered on the outside. There were two entrances at the front, reached by high stairs or steps. The pulpit was placed between the doors at the end of the building towards the street, and those entering faced the audience. The floor of the church from the first pew back was raised one step instead of being level, and many falls were received by persons going in and out who did not know of or failed to remember the step. The building had a basement in which the Sunday-school was held, and at one time a week-day school was taught therein by Samuel Dennis.

In 1843, by a change of grade in the street, so much filling was done in front of the church that the high steps were no longer necessary, and the entrance to the building was made much easier. At the time of the dedication an accident occurred that but for the presence of mind of Mr. Winebrenner, who was conducting the services, might have been fatal in its results. A large post had been put up in the basement to support the main girder. This girder rested upon a large stone. The great weight upon the post crushed the stone, and the effect was heard and felt by the audience, who became alarmed, fearing the building was about to fall, and rushed towards the doors, but were stopped by Mr. Winebrenner, who assured them there was less danger in remaining than in rushing out, as many might be injured in going down the steep steps on the outside. This quieted them, and one of the builders, making an examination, reported immediately that there was no danger, and the exercises were continued without further interruption.

In 1852 the building was enlarged by extending the front to the line of the street, casing the whole outside with brick and making a vestibule and gallery. The latter was constructed so as to be shut off entirely from the auditorium, if desired, and was of sufficient capacity for Sabbath-school and prayer-meetings. The internal arrangements were so changed that the pulpit was at the end opposite the entrance. On account of the gradual giving way of the walls the church council, in June, 1873, appointed a committee to ascertain the cost of repairing the building, and at the meeting of council, in July following, it reported that it was inexpedient to spend any money on repairs. Shortly afterwards it was decided to erect a new church edifice, at a cost not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and to begin its erection when eight thousand dollars was subscribed. The lot selected was on the northeast corner of Spring and Water Streets, which was purchased for twelve hundred dollars. In November, 1873, eight thousand and thirty-eight dollars had been subscribed. Ground was broken June 9, 1874, and the corner-stone laid July 8. During the following winter the regular services, prayer-meetings, and Sunday-schools were held in the basement, and in the winter of 1875 and 1876 the auditorium was thrown open for the use of the great concourse of people attending the Union meetings. It is a brick structure, and the steeple is one hundred and sixty feet high, surmounted by a ball and vane. The roof is of slate, both on main building and steeple. The walls are frescoed, and the windows of stained glass. The seats of the basement are of iron and walnut and chestnut-wood, with movable backs. Those of the audience-room are of the same material, but fixed. The pulpit and reading-desk are made of walnut and chestnut.

Among its pastors have been Elders John Winebrenner, Smitmer, Kyle, Edward West, McCartney, Croll, Mackey, William Miller, Joseph Adams, Jacob Flake, William Mooney, A. Swartz, Edward H. Thomas, William Mullineux, A. Snyder, D. A. L. Laverty, and B. F. Beck. Since 1867 the pastors have been: 1867, J. Stamm; 1867-70, J. Keller; 1870-72, J. Haifeigh; 1872-75, George Sigler; 1875-77, W. L. Jones; 1877-79, J. Miller; 1879-80, W. P. Winbigler; 1880-83, D. C. Shoop; 1883, W. L. Lockwood, the present pastor.

CHRIST CHURCH.—In 1835 a schism occurred in St. Peter's Lutheran Church, under its pastor, Rev. Peter Salm. A great religious revival was in progress in the town, and meetings were nightly held in the lecture-room, which was always well filled. Many members of the church made a profession of a change of heart. This was an innovation, and some of the more conservative members looked upon the movement as heretical. Finally the opposition to the meetings became so great that many of the members left the church and started a new congregation, called Christ Church. They erected their church edifice in 1838, at the corner of Duck and Water Streets, and continued to worship there for many years. The membership gradually declined owing to deaths and removals, until it was no longer able to support a pastor, and finally those remaining connected themselves with other churches. The church edifice was sold to the United Brethren denomination.

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL (ZION'S) CHURCH was erected many years ago, but exactly when there are no records to show.

ST. MARY'S CATHOLIC CHURCH.—There being no Catholic Church in Middletown, the members of this denomination here and in the vicinity were compelled to go to Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., to worship, that being in the parish in which they resided. But in 1857 a lot was secured on which to erect a mission church. Through the untiring efforts of Rev. John McCosker, who then had charge of the parish, and to whom, in great measure, the congregation is indebted for its beautiful house of worship, the project was successfully carried through. The church of "Saint Mary of the Seven Dolors" is beautifully located on high ground at the western end of Ann Street, above Lawrence, in what was known as West Portsmouth. The corner-stone was laid Sept. 20, 1857, by Rt. Rev. John Newman, bishop of the diocese of Philadelphia, assisted by Dr. O'Hara, Rev. John McCosker, and several other priests. Dr. O'Hara, now Bishop of Scranton, preached the sermon at the laying of the corner-stone, and also at the consecration of the church. Edwin Hodnett built the edifice for nine thousand dollars. It is a brick structure of Gothic style, with an organ gallery. It has a seating capacity on the first floor of over two hundred, and is the best-ventilated public building in town. The congregation in 1881 purchased grounds and laid out a cemetery. The first mission was held in the church Nov. 10, 1874, by Rev. Father Wendelin, a Benedictine monk, under the auspices of Bishop Shanahan, of Harrisburg, when a large number were confirmed. Rev. John McCosker, the first pastor, continued until he was appointed chaplain of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, which was assigned to duty in South Carolina, where he contracted disease from which he died. He was succeeded by Rev. Fathers McGarrin (who died at Elizabethtown), Walsh, J. J. Mellvain, Macmogle, Mellvain (second time), and F. C. Foni, the present incumbent. In commemoration of the first mission, held Nov. 10, 1874, a large cross has been erected in the wall of the church, bearing the date of the mission and the text, "Abide in my love" (John v. 10).

UNITED BRETHERN CHURCH.—This congregation in 1852 erected a frame church edifice on Duck below Water Street, on a lot belonging to John Shoop. It has been gradually increasing in membership, and a few years ago purchased "Christ Church," on Water Street. For many years only a circuit, it is now a prosperous station. The first stationed pastor was Rev. H. C. Phillips, who was succeeded by Revs. J. R. Reitzel, J. G. Fritz, and A. H. Kauffman, the present pastor, who also holds service at the United Brethren Chapel, Furnace Hill.

NEW MENNONITE CHURCH.—The congregation of New Mennonites purchased years ago the frame edifice on Duck below Water Street, belonging to the United Brethren. Its membership is small, and it has services once a month.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

BANK OF SWATARA.—The following is a contemporaneous account of the organization of the Bank of Swatara:

"At a large and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Middletown and the adjoining neighborhood, in the county of Dauphin, the 19th day of November, 1813, convened to take into consideration the propriety of establishing a bank in said town, James Hamilton was appointed chairman, and Elisha Green appointed secretary.

"The meeting, fully sensible of the result of a disposable capital, combined with the many advantages afforded by the excellent harbor formed by the junction of the Swatara with the Susquehanna, at the now contemplated town of Portsmouth, where a large proportion of the immense produce of the country up the Susquehanna is offered for sale, confidently believe that the establishment of a bank here will not only greatly promote the commercial prosperity of Pennsylvania, and industrious and enterprising farmers, mechanics, and manufacturers, but will contribute much to the improvement of the navigation of the river and to the advancement of the canal and lock navigation of the State.

"Therefore Resolved, That a bank be established at Middletown aforesaid, with a capital of $250,000, with permission at any time hereafter to increase the sum to $500,000, divided into shares of $50 each, to be conducted by the president and twelve directors, and to be styled the Bank of Swatara.

"Resolved, That the books be opened at Middletown on Tuesday, the 14th day of December next, by Jacob Snyder and Elisha Green, at the house of John McCammon, for the subscription of fifteen hundred shares; at Hummelstown, on the same day, by Christian Spayd and Thomas Fox, at John Fox's for five hundred shares; at Lebanon, in the county of Lebanon, on the same day, by William Allison and Abraham Debler, at the house of Abraham Debler, for five hundred shares; at Lancaster, the same day, by James Hamilton and James Humes, at the house of John Duchman, for one thousand shares; at Elizabethtown, the same day, by John McCammon and Jacob Gish, for five hundred shares; at Maubert, the same day, by Ephraim Heller and Wendle Shelley, at the house of _____, for five hundred shares; at Millerstown, in the county of Lebanon, the same day, by William Lowman and Joseph Wallace, at the house of Christian Cassel, for five hundred shares."

"Resolved, That five dollars be paid to the commissioners for each and every share of stock at the time of subscription."

"Resolved, That James Hamilton, William Allison, E. Heller, and E. Green be a committee to draft a constitution for the said bank, which shall be printed and submitted to the stockholders at the time of subscribing."

"Resolved, That these resolutions be signed by the chairman and secretary and be published in the English and German newspapers in the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Lancaster."

The mania for creating banks seized upon the Legislature in 1814, just when all the avenues of industry were deranged by war with Great Britain. The Governor protested against, and at last vetoed, an act dividing the State into banking districts; the Legislature, however, passed it by the constitutional two-thirds. Under its provisions Dauphin County got two banks,—the Harrisburg, with $600,000 capital, and the Swatara, at Middletown, with 8000 shares at $50 each, or $400,000 capital, $100,000 was paid up. The gentlemen appointed to receive subscriptions to prudence and a reasonable degree of success. As it had never declared large dividends, great was the astonishment among its stockholders when it closed its doors, as was the case in a few years. Its business was continued and wound up at Harrisburg by Mr. Neilson, who in the course of his residence here was made cashier of the State treasury.

The banking house of the Swatara Bank was the house opposite the National Bank of Middletown, now occupied by Robert T. Landis. The bank shortly after it commenced business was robbed of forty thousand dollars in unsigned notes. Entrance to the bank was effected by boring through the door and cutting out a panel. The robber was arrested in Myerstown, in Lebanon County, and the money recovered. He proved to be a man named Rennock, who had once been a merchant in Philadelphia, but who had failed. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of years.

NATIONAL BANK OF MIDDLETOWN.—This old financial institution was first organized May 12, 1832, as a bank under the banking laws of the State, and was called the "Bank of Middletown." In 1864 it was changed into a National Bank. Its first president was Benjamin Jordan, who continued from 1832 to 1841, and was succeeded by Dr. Mercer Brown, who in turn was succeeded in 1854 by George Smuller, who died in 1882, when J. Donald Cameron was chosen president, Seymour Raymond, vice-president, and D. W. Stehman, cashier. Gen. Simon Cameron the stock of the one at Middletown were Thomas R. Buchanan, George Bower, Isaac W. VanLeer, Henry Berry, George Fisher (Harrisburg), John Shelly (Londonderry), James Wilson (Derry), Jacob Hershey (Derry), James Hamilton, Christian Spayd, Elisha Green, Ephraim Heller, William Lauman. The necessary amount was subscribed and the bank set agoing, with John Neilson, a careful accountant, as its cashier. James Hamilton was president of the institution. For several years it was carried on with was cashier from 1832 to 1850, when his son, J. Donald Cameron (United States senator), succeeded him. The first teller of the bank was John Croll, whose successor was John Monaghan in 1856. He died in 1869, since which time the tellership had been filled by Daniel W. Stehman, who was recently elected cashier. Since its establishment, in 1832, the bank has been kept in the same building, and for half a century has been the best known financial institution of the county. J. C. Bomberger was several years ago assistant teller, succeeded by John Monohan, subsequently the teller. The present assistant teller is H. C. Stehman.

FARMERS' BANK OF MIDDLETOWN.—A new State Bank has been recently chartered by James Young and others, and opened in Mr. Young's building adjoining his residence, and is known as the "Farmers' Bank of Middletown." Benjamin S. Peters is president; V. C. Coolbaugh, vice-president; Lee H. Nissley, cashier; and A. H. Reider, teller.

EMAUS INSTITUTE, SCHOOLS, ETC.

At Middletown, in 1837, there was erected the Emaus Institute, founded by a bequest of George Frey, of Middletown, who died in 1806. In 1874 it was removed to its present site. The life of Mr. Frey (his real name was Everhart) was marked with romance. When Mr. Fisher, the founder of the town, first came to this place, he used to hire George Everhart, who was then a penniless German lad, to assist in plowing the fields and clearing up his new land. George lived with Mr. Fisher some years, until he had saved a little fund, but his ambition looked beyond the plow, and investing his money in a stock of trinkets, finery, and other articles for Indian traffic, he mounted his pack and started up the Susquehanna. Passing the mountains he encountered a party of soldiers from the garrison at Fort Hunter, who arrested him as a runaway redemptioner (a servant who had been sold for a time to pay his passage from Europe), a character common in those days, and far more consistent with George's appearance and language than that of a peddler; for what peddler, said they, would risk his life and property thus alone and on foot on this dangerous frontier? "Ich bin frei! ich bin frei!" (I am free), repeated George earnestly in German, in reply to their charge. He succeeded in convincing them of his independence, and went with them to the garrison, where he became quite a favorite, the soldiers knowing him by no other name than that of "Frey," which they had caught from his first reply to them. He sold out his stock and pack at a fine profit, and continued to repeat his adventures, still passing as George Frey, until he was able to start a store in Middletown, where he afterwards erected a mill.

Near the close of the Revolution, when the old Continental money was gradually depreciating, George, who always kept both eyes open, contrived to be on the right side of the account, so that instead of losing he gained immensely by the depreciation; and, in short, by dint of untiring industry, close economy, sharp bargains, and lucky financiering, he at length became the capitalist of the village, and owned much of the real estate in and around the town. Although married, he was never blessed with children; hence he made the bequest to found an institution to cheer and educate the fatherless children of a succeeding age, and Emaus Institute is a splendid monument to George Frey's benevolence. It was the first institution of the kind projected in this country. The bequest for its endowment was signed May 12, 1806.

A notice of the death of Frey, the most prominent individual of the locality, appears in the Morgenrothe, a German newspaper of Harrisburg, published by Benjamin Mayer, May 17, 1806. There is no obituary further than that he died "at Middletown, on Tuesday last, at a great age, and was a citizen of wealth and renown." At his demise he could not have been less than eighty years of age. We find him trading in 1762-64 at Forts Hunter and Augusta (Sunbury). In 1768 he kept tavern in Middletown; and it is stated that he was employed about Middletown years before, certainly as early as George Fisher. Frey appears as the owner of the mill and whatever rights then attached in 1766. He was a very successful man for forty years after. He was buried on the Middletown farm in 1806, removed in a few years to "the Emaus," and now rests at the new orphan house, covered by a proper and deserved monument.¹

In the chapter devoted to the "early courts," etc., a full account is given of the litigation which ensued upon Frey's death. Some years prior to 1806, Mr. Frey had determined to found the institution which was afterwards established, and commenced its erec-

¹ At the house of George Frey, in Middletown, on the 31 day of March, 1768, a tragical affair occurred. On the evening of that day, Henry Cowan, with five or six other men, were assembled in the store-room of Frey, when James Derry, a negro slave of Col. Burd, of Tinian, much intoxicated, entered the store-room, and, with a drawn knife in his hand cried out, "Strike me!" He was ordered out of the room, but refusing, was pushed out of the door by Cowan. The latter would have followed the negro had he not at the time been prevented by George Bombaugh and Jacob Rohrer. He subsequently went in search of Derry, but could not find him, and returned into the store-room. Soon after some one opened the door, crying, "The nigger's in the wood-pile!" whereupon Cowan re-entered the yard. Finding the negro, Cowan struck him with the butt end of a whip, when the former pursued him through the house, but Cowan slipped away and hid himself. The negro then ran up "the main street of the town," crying, "Where is he?" flourishing his knife, and cursing furiously Cowan and others. After which, it seems, he was pursued a couple of miles, until Col. Burd's garden was reached, when, while in the act of stooping down to pick up something to throw at his pursuers, Cowan, coming up, struck him, pushing him against the house. Presently Cowan cried out, "I am murdered!" and Col. Burd then coming out of the house, he said, "Oh, Col. Burd, he has murdered me!" holding his hands over his stomach and lying down on the cellar-door. Cowan was at once carried to Dr. Wooltz's. The wounds proved fatal, and he died on the second day after the 5th of March. The day following an inquest was held at the house of Frey by Matthias Slough, coroner of Lancaster County. The gentlemen comprising this jury were Richard McClure, Henry Renick, Thomas McCord, William Dicky, John Steel, John Bachenstose, Conrad Wolfley, John Steel, Sr., William Kerr, John Duncan, Thomas McArthur, Joseph Cook, John Myer, and John Laird. They found that the "said negro James Derry, the said Henry Cowan then and there feloniously did kill and murder, against the peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown, and Dignity." Derry was not hanged for the crime, but, after a term of imprisonment, was probably sold out of the Province. We narrate this affair more to put upon record the expression, "The nigger's in the wood-pile," which, in all probability, was the origin of that so frequently heard in these modern days.

Of the men composing the coroner's jury eleven were Scotch-Irish and three German. All wrote their names, Bachenstose only being German. They were prominent men in the Swatara region, three or four of them officers in the Pennsylvania Line of the Revolution.

tion prior to his death. The building, however, was never completed. It was built of logs, thirty by forty feet, two stories, and was roofed, but not inclosed. In this state it remained until decay worked its ruin.

The present school is managed by six persons, viz., four trustees, one principal, and one tutor. After many years of expensive litigation, the house was built between Middletown and Portsmouth in 1837, and moved to its present site in 1874. The institution is devoted to the education of poor orphan children, who are carefully trained in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church. Instruction is given in both English and German. The charter has been so altered by the Legislature as to permit the establishment of a literary and scientific department. Since its removal to the present site, it has been under the charge of William A. Croll, principal, and George A. Lauman, tutor.

The early elementary schools were all of a private character. The first English school was taught by Mrs. Ward. Jacob Peeler, the first male teacher, was a nail-maker, and taught school during the winter months. The teacher had the whole management of the school, teaching eight hours per day. Later, Rev. John F. Hay taught in an old log house, where the Pine Street school-house now stands. He was afterwards the founder of Cottage Hill Seminary, at York, Pa. When the school law of 1834 was passed, Middletown was among the first to adopt it. The first directors were Dr. Mercer Brown, president; John Croll, secretary; Christian Spayd, treasurer; John Bomberger, E. J. Ramsey, and Peter Kob. Joseph Ross was appointed a delegate to represent the district in the joint meeting of the commissioners at the court-house in Harrisburg, on the first Tuesday of November of that year. He was instructed to vote for the laying of a tax for the support of the common schools. There was very little opposition to this school law. Among the most active in its favor were Gen. Simon Cameron, Henry Smith, George Smuller, John Bomberger, and Martin Kendig, the latter representing the county in the Legislature during the "Buckshot War." In 1835, Michael Lazarus was elected to represent the district in convention at the county commissioners' office in Harrisburg, with instructions to vote for levying a tax and such other measures as might be necessary for carrying into effect a general system of education. Before this the schools were all independent. The teachers received from the parents and guardians a certain amount per quarter for each scholar, and for those who were too poor to pay for their education the county commissioners provided, and also supplied them with the necessary books.

POST-OFFICE AND POSTMASTERS.—The Middletown post-office was established in the fall of 1800, with William Crabb as postmaster, who made his first returns to the department Jan. 1, 1801. His successor was Peter Shuster, who made his first returns October 1st of the same year. John McCammon was appointed in 1803, and made his first returns April 1, 1803. He continued in office until Dec. 24, 1829, a period of nearly twenty-seven years, and was succeeded by William Lauman. After the latter's death, his widow, Elizabeth Lauman, was appointed, Dec. 29, 1832. She was succeeded, June 30, 1834, by Elizabeth Crabb. Her successor was Christian Spayd, appointed April 12, 1836. He was succeeded by Edward S. Kendig March 25, 1840. His successors were appointed as follows: John Hicks, June 21, 1841; Edward S. Kendig, Jan. 1845; Catharine A. Stouch, Feb. 17, 1849; Maria L. Lauman, May 15, 1857; W. H. Kendig, April 8, 1861; John J. Walborn, April 10, 1863; Mary A. E. Walborn, April 17, 1863; Jackson H. Kirlin, April 18, 1866; Clarence Monaghan, March 27, 1867 (did not qualify); Rachel McKibben, April 5, 1867. In April, 1883, Mrs. R. McKibben resigned as postmaster, and Miss Eveline R. Wiestling was appointed, and has entered upon the duties of the office. The office became a Presidential one March 27, 1867. In the summer of 1850 the citizens of Portsmouth petitioned the department for the establishment of a post-office at that place, setting forth that Middletown and Portsmouth were two distinct places; that the location of the Middletown office was inconvenient for them, it being then on Main Street, opposite the Middletown National Bank; that the largest portion of the mail matter not connected with the bank was for the lumber merchants, furnaces, etc., who would be more easily accommodated at Portsmouth than at Middletown, especially as the railroad station was in Portsmouth. The department granted the petition, and the Portsmouth post-office was established, with Dr. John Ringland as postmaster. He opened the post-office in August, 1850. In October, 1851, he resigned and S. H. Ninian was appointed, who was succeeded by his sister, S. E. Ninian, who held the office until April, 1857, when the extension of the borough limits having included Portsmouth the latter office was abolished.

NEWSPAPERS.

THE MIDDLETOWN ARGUS was the first newspaper printed in the town, and was established in 1834 by a Mr. Wilson. It was an independent and family journal. Mr. Wilson did the editorial work, and his wife helped to set the type. The office was located on Main Street, opposite S. L. Yetter's residence. It was discontinued in 1835.

THE MIDDLETOWN EMPORIUM was established in 1850, by William Henlock, formerly of Henlock & Bratton, State printers at Harrisburg. It was printed at the corner of Pine and Main Streets, and after being published for a year and a half was discontinued.

MIDDLETOWN JOURNAL.—The Central Engine was published in Middletown in 1851 and 1852 by H. S. Fisher, but the material was purchased, and the paper merged into the Svatara Gem in July, 1853, by J. W. Stofer. This was a neat sheet of four pages, and five columns to the page. In August, 1854, Mr. Stofer enlarged it to six columns, and printed it on a sheet twenty-two by thirty-three inches. In August, 1856, he sold the paper and office to Benjamin Whitman, who, retaining its size, changed its name to the Dauphin Journal. In September, 1856, a copartnership was formed between Messrs. Whitman and Stofer, and they continued to publish the Journal jointly, enlarging the paper and changing it to a quarto form. In January, 1857, Mr. Whitman retired, and J. W. Stofer became the sole proprietor again. He resumed the old size and style, retaining the name Dauphin Journal as before. In November, 1870, the paper was enlarged to a seven-column paper and printed on a sheet twenty-four by thirty-eight inches, the title being changed to the Middletown Journal, its present name. Since then it has been enlarged to eight columns. It has been published from the first as an independent family newspaper, giving large space and attention to local news, and published in the interest of home affairs. It is a good advertising medium, enjoying a healthy circulation, is well edited, and in every way is a first-class country newspaper.

The Middletown Press, an eight-column journal of four pages, was established July 16, 1881, by J. R. Hoffer as proprietor. Its editor is J. E. Hoffer, and its business manager A. E. Hoffer. It is published every Saturday, is an independent sheet, and as a local paper is hardly surpassed in the State. It has a well-equipped job office, which, together with the publication office, is located opposite the Washington House.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Soon after the incorporation of the borough, Feb. 19, 1828, an engine was procured, and a fire company organized under the name of the "Union." The engine was small but very effective for its class, and was built in Philadelphia in 1787 by Philip Mason. It remained in use until about 1868. The Borough Council, in order to make the engine available in case of fire, required the owner of each house to provide leather fire-buckets, one for each story of the house. These were kept at some point in the house where they could be readily obtained, and it was no uncommon thing to see a pair of fire-buckets suspended in the hall near the front door. Each bucket was marked with the owner's name and that of the "Union Fire Company." Some of these buckets are still in existence.

UNITED STATES ENGINE COMPANY.—In 1851 a meeting of citizens of Portsmouth was held, at which steps were taken to provide better facilities for extinguishing fires. Those present subscribed liberally, and a committee appointed to solicit subscriptions were so successful that in a short time a contract was made with Mr. Agnew, of Philadelphia, to build a suction-engine. The engine, built after the pattern of the "United States" of Philadelphia, was built and delivered, and then turned over to a company for service. The engine company purchased a quantity of hose and truck, and failing to pay for them the property was seized and sold by the sheriff, and the engine was purchased by the late Judge Murray, taken to Harrisburg, and was burned with the building in which it was stored.

On Nov. 16, 1866, on the petition of one hundred and eighty-three freeholders of the borough, an appropriation of two thousand dollars was made to purchase a fire-engine and erect an engine-house. For four hundred and fifty dollars an engine was purchased of George Smuller, with hose-carriage, etc. Christian Fisher for nine hundred and eighty dollars contracted for and erected the engine-house. It was operated a short time by the "Good Will" Company.

LIBERTY STEAM FIRE-ENGINE COMPANY, No. 1, was organized Nov. 7, 1874, and incorporated by a decree of the court in January, 1875. The presidents have been: 1874-75, D. R. Ettla; 1876, H. C. Raymond; 1877-78, W. G. Kennard; 1879, Rufus Frunks; 1880-81, W. G. Kinnard. The other officers for 1881 were: Vice-President, Stephen Curtis; Treasurer, D. H. Bucher; Secretary, Harry Rakestraw; Trustees, David A. Detwiler, J. Porter Campbell, Robert Martin, John Stipe; Foreman, Henry Hipple, Jr.; First Assistant, William Davis; Second Assistant, David Brant. The company has eighty equipped men. The engine-house is located on Catherine Street, above Emaus, in the Middle Ward.

INDUSTRIES.

THE SUSQUEHANNA IRON-WORKS.—About the year 1848 Samuel Jenkins (and afterwards Dr. Andrew Patterson) established a foundry here, at which stoves and other castings were made, and was the nucleus of the Susquehanna Iron-Works. In 1856, Nisley, Bro. & Co. (the latter being Seymour Raymond) opened their foundry here with ten hands on the same site where the above iron-works are now located. In the same year James Campbell & Son (Joseph Campbell) established their machine-works. In 1864 these two establishments were united under the firm of Raymond (Seymour) & Campbell (James), and have been in successful operation ever since. The firm transacts a general foundry and machine business, the latter being the most extensive branch up to the panic of 1873, since which time the former has taken the lead. This is the pioneer establishment of the town, and the first manufacturing house organized here outside of the lumber business save the furnaces. It has been the nucleus around which other large establishments have since been built up. In its first year it employed but few hands, and its business did not exceed ten thousand dollars, but it now employs one hundred and twenty-five men, and its sales aggregate two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It weathered the great financial storms of 1857 and 1873, and did not suspend operations or succumb to the pressure. Its warehouse is sixty-six by ninety feet, and has five floors besides the cellar. The foundry is one hundred and forty-four by seventy feet, with a wing eighty-five by forty feet, in which there is room for forty-five moulders. Its brick pattern-shop is eighty by thirty feet, and is fire-proof. There are two frame buildings, one hundred by thirty feet and eighty-five by thirty, for storing castings, patterns, etc. The machine-shop is three stories high and ninety-five by forty-two feet. The blacksmith-shop is eighty by fifty feet. The building for storing plates is ninety by forty-five feet, and two stories high. Railroad tracks connect all the buildings, making shipping most convenient.

THE CAMERON FURNACES, at first called the Christiann Furnace, were established prior to 1840 by John Gamber, who named them for his daughter. It was originally a charcoal furnace; the Round Top and much other woodland was cleared to furnish the charcoal. It was afterwards converted into an anthracite furnace. These furnaces have largely contributed to the growth and prosperity of the town. The proprietors are J. Donald Cameron, Joseph H. Landis, and James Young.

THE AMERICAN TUBE- AND IRON-WORKS was originally the Middletown Pipe-Mill, and was operated by a company, the largest stockholders being Philadelphians, and manufactured pipe of two inch and less. The operations were suspended during the panic of 1873, and remained idle until 1879, when George Matheson, James Young, and others took hold of them and have extended them, so that the works are now among the largest in the country. They are now manufacturing pipe of eight-inch diameter down to half-inch, and are constantly increasing their facilities for manufacturing. It is now owned by a company, of which James Young is president, George Matheson treasury, and Adam Matheson superintendent, and are compelled to run day and night to keep up with orders.

THE MIDDLETOWN CAR-WORKS were started by an incorporated company in 1869, and in 1881 were purchased by the present proprietors, Michael Shad and Arthur King, the latter being the superintendent. It is now one of the prosperous industries of that thriving town.

THE MIDDLETOWN FURNITURE COMPANY'S FACTORY is one of the leading establishments of the borough. Its work is becoming well known, and its success has been steady and assured.

There are a number of planing-mills, which have been established for years. The lumber trade, as previously stated, has for over a century been the great business of the town. The paint manufactory of Cobough Brothers is located on Railroad Street.

LOWER SWATARA TOWNSHIP.

LOWER SWATARA TOWNSHIP was erected by an act of Assembly passed March 18, 1840, which directed,—

"That part of Swatara township, in the county of Dauphin, south of straight lines forthwith to be run by the supervisor of said township, commencing at the west end of the bridge over Swatara Creek at Nissley's mill; thence to the residence of Daniel Smith; thence to Christian Roop's; thence to Samuel Neidig's; thence to the River Susquehanna at the line dividing the farms of Christian Mumma and John Heagy; and thence immediately by the lower end of Shreiner's Island to the York County line, shall hereafter form a separate election district and township to be called Lower Swatara."

And by the twenty-seventh section of an act of Assembly passed on the 13th of June, 1840, it is further provided that,—

"That part of Lower Swatara township, in the county of Dauphin, north of straight lines to be run by the supervisors of the townships of Swatara and Lower Swatara, commencing at the residence of Daniel Smith; thence to Peter Roop's; thence to Christian Good's fulling-mill; and thence to the residence of Samuel Neidig, shall hereafter form part of Swatara township, etc., and that so much of the resolution passed 18th of March, 1840, as is hereby altered is repealed."

As thus constituted the township of Lower Swatara is bounded on the east by Derry and Londonderry townships, from which it is separated by the Swatara, on the south by the Susquehanna River to the York County line, and on the west and north by the township of Swatara.

HIGHSPIRE is a post-town, situated between the Susquehanna River and the Pennsylvania Canal, on the turnpike from Harrisburg to Middletown, six miles from the former and three from the latter. It is on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The town was laid out prior to the war of 1812-14, but how and why designated Highspire we have yet to learn, the statement that it was named for Spires in Germany not being correct. By an act of the Assembly passed Feb. 7, 1867, it was incorporated into a borough, but the act was annulled on April 8, 1868. The village did not begin to grow much until 1842, when the following were the freeholders in its limits:

Conrad Alleman.	Michael Raymond.
George Boyer.	David Mumma.
Jacob Baker.	Christian Mumma.
John Carr.	Jacob Nisley.
Henry Cook (colored).	John O'Brien.
Widow Carr.	John Parthamore.
Jacob Erisman.	Jacob Roop, Jr.
Henry Fleisher.	John Roop.
John A. Fisher.	Mary Sener (widow).
Henry Fogle.	Henry Stoner.
Michael Frantz.	Michael Stentz.
Abraham Funk.	Swartz and P. Garman.
Andrew Gayman.	Elizabeth Stoner (widow).
John Geistweite.	Michael Strayer's estate.
Peter Goul's estate.	Michael Ulrich, Jr.
Christian Hoover's estate.	Henry Wolf.
John Hocker.	Jacob Waggoner.
Lehman & Stoner.	Matthias Winagle.
Widow Long.	Robert Wilson.

Two additions have been made to the town, the first by Maj. David Mumma, of Harrisburg, and the second by Judge Isaac Mumma. The oldest houses in the place are those of Jacob Bender, Michael Stoner, Samuel Mumma, Alfred Cannon (the old "Cross-Keys" tavern), and Jacob Roop. These were all built before the laying out of the town in 1814. The first store was kept by a Mr. Liverick, who was succeeded by Conrad Alleman, who kept for thirty-five years, and the store building of the latter is still owned by his estate. John Sener came from Lancaster and kept the first tavern. The next inn was that of Mrs. Early, the "Cross-Keys." Afterwards Conrad Alleman kept a tavern in connection with Matthias Winagle.

John Sener, about 1800 and later, made edge-tools for this whole region. The first blacksmith was Benjamin Ebersole, whose successor was Jacob Roop, who carried on the shop for forty years. During part of this time Jacob Wolf also had a shop at the other end of town. John Roop succeeded Wolf, and Daniel Long followed Jacob Roop. The first cooper was Benjamin Roop, whose successor was the late Abraham Funk.

In 1775, John Hollingsworth erected a large stone grist-mill, which stood in constant operation until destroyed by fire, March 3, 1860, when owned by the Demmys. In 1868 it was rebuilt of wood by John and Elizabeth Buser, who have since operated it. It is one of the oldest mills in this part of the county, being ten years older than Frey's mill at Middletown.

SCHOOLS.—Lower Swatara being connected with Swatara township until 1840, was by a majority opposed to the establishment of free schools, and year after year voted against it. But the town of Portsmouth, having a population of seven hundred and fifty, was nearly unanimous in favor of the common-school system. It was not until 1843 that the township accepted the law, and then only through the efforts of Martin Kendig, William F. Murray, and others, who took advantage of the almost impassable roads, gathered up every voter in Portsmouth and vicinity that could be got out, and carried them to the place of holding the election, rightly supposing that the farmers, who were generally opposed to the law, would not make their appearance. Enough votes were obtained, not only to accept the provisions of the law, but to elect directors who were in favor of carrying out its provisions. The adoption of the law was mainly owing to Martin Kendig, Robert Wilson, John Balsbaugh, and Michael Alleman. At this time the township has eight good schools, with good and new houses well arranged for the scholars.

In 1875 the present commodious two-story brick school building was erected by the Board of Education, consisting of George W. Parthamore, A. Ebersole, J. Bingaman, J. Yingst, Isaac Mumma, J. J. Lehman. The architect was G. Fisher.

UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.—The United Brethren denomination had preaching by local preachers as early as 1830 in the old school-house, but the congregation was not organized until 1843. On January 6th of this year the first subscription paper was started to erect a church, which was headed by Jacob Roop with one hundred dollars, followed by Conrad Alleman with fifty dollars, and Samuel Neidig with fifty dollars. The second subscription paper, dated January 17th, was started with Michael Frantz's name for seventy-five dollars, John Balsbaugh's for eighteen dollars, and Christian Good's for ten dollars. Several other subscription papers were circulated, the money raised, and the church edifice completed the same year. The following have been its regular pastors: 1846, Simon Dreisbach; 1847-49, Daniel Funkhouser; 1849, Samuel Siders; 1850, George Miller; 1851, Samuel Siders, Jacob Roop, Simon Dreisbach; 1852, Abraham Noll; 1853-55, Joseph Young; 1855-57, Samuel Zimmerman; 1857, Samuel Roop; 1858, Jacob Kessler, L. W. Cromer; 1860, J. B. Daugherty, I. Fleisher; 1861, J. B. Daugherty; 1862-65, J. P. Smith; 1865, John G. Clair, G. W. Hoffman; 1866, G. W. Hoffman; 1867, J. O. Brewer; 1868, J. P. Smith, H. Hackman, A. Miller; 1869-71, Israel Carpenter; 1870-72, W. B. Evers; 1872, David O. Farrell, P. Bowman; 1873, W. D. Mower, P. Bowman, Isaiah Baltzell, H. C. Phillips; 1874, Isaiah Baltzell, H. C. Phillips, Hiram Neaffer; 1875, Hiram Neaffer; 1876-79, Thomas Garland; 1879, G. W. M. Rigor; 1880-82, Abraham H. Kaufman.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—This denomination have had for years prior to 1843 preaching by missionary ministers in the old school-house, and in that year its church edifice was built. Among the earliest pastors were Revs. Thomas Strohlm, Abraham Snyder, Simon Fleisher, Israel Brady, Stern, and Deshong. Since 1867 they have been: 1867-69, J. W. Miller; 1869-72, Rev. Carvell; 1872-75, Rev. Arnold; 1875-

77, D. S. Shock; 1877-79, James Speese; 1879-81, J. B. Lockwood; 1881-82, S. B. Howard.

TINIAN.—Just back of the village of Highspire, on the bluff overlooking the broad expanse of the Susquehanna, is "Tinian," the residence of Col. James Burd. At present it possibly presents the same appearance as when Col. Burd passed from off this stage of life. It is a stone structure, thirty by forty feet, two and a half stories high. It was erected by Col. Burd prior to the Bouquet expedition of 1763, and, unless the residence of Peter Allen, at the foot of Peter's Mountain, is in existence, is probably the most ancient edifice within the limits of the county of Dauphin. The place was named "Tinian" by Col. Burd, and is certainly one of the historic mansions of our State. The most notable men of the French and Indian and Revolutionary wars were entertained at "Tinian" right hospitably, and the associations which cluster around that famous building, whose owner was a man of mark in Provincial days, claim its preservation in this volume. The old iron knocker of Col. Burd remains on the front door, while the interior presents little change. It has never been remodeled.

One-half a mile to the east of "Tinian" is "Walnut Hill," the home of the Crouchs and Jordans. In some particulars the progressive spirit of the age has changed it. It, too, was erected a century ago, and, as the residence of Capt. James Crouch, of the Revolution, Edward Crouch, a representative in Congress, and Benjamin Jordan, a State senator, all representative men, has an historic interest.

"TINIAN," RESIDENCE OF COL. JAMES BURD, 1764.

SWATARA TOWNSHIP.

THE court at their September sessions in the year 1799 issued an order to commissioners to view Lower Paxtang township and report to the next sessions a line dividing said township as nearly as might be for the convenience of the people into two equal parts; to which the commissioners made return that they had made a division of the said township by a line.

"Beginning at the Paxtang Creek, where the breast of Landis' mill-dam formerly stood; thence south 85 degrees east 192 perches to a hickory in the land of John Neisley; thence south 76 degrees east 375 perches to a black-oak in the land of Joshua Elder, Esq.; thence south 80 degrees east 135½ perches to the fence of the globe land belonging to the Paxtang meeting-house; thence south 85 degrees east 667 perches to a chestnut-tree in Christian Page's field; thence 340 perches to Michael Cassel's bake-oven; thence 200 perches to the house of George Reese; thence 262 perches to a marked hickory on the bank of Beaver Creek, on land of Jacob Siders."

This report was confirmed by the court, and it was ordered that it be entered of record, and that the southern division be designated upon the records of the court by the name of Swatara township. The foregoing shows the division line between Lower Paxtang and Swatara townships in the year 1799; subsequently Lower Paxtang township was again divided and Susquehanna township taken from it by a line from the mountain to somewhere near the centre of the line of Swatara, giving the southern section of the division to Susquehanna, thus making the before-described Swatara line in part the dividing line between Susquehanna and Swatara townships. In the year 1842 the court issued an order to commissioners to view, ascertain, and establish and lay out a line of division between Susquehanna and Swatara townships, from the bridge over Paxtang Creek at the junction of Market and Chestnut Streets, in the line of the then borough of Harrisburg, to the corner between the townships of Swatara, Susquehanna, and Lower Paxtang. The commissioners reported the following line, to wit:

"Beginning at the corner between the said townships of Swatara, Susquehanna, and Lower Paxtang, where the eastern branch of Kimbortz's mill-dam crosses the same, and where a public road from said mill crosses said branch; thence down said branch and mill-dam, along the west side thereof by the several courses, $39\frac{1}{4}$ perches to the forks of said dam; thence by the western fork of said dam and branch, and along the north side thereof by their several courses, 68 perches to a point where said branch is crossed by a road leading to Kimbortz's mill, and opposite the mouth of a run entering said branch from the south-west; thence crossing said branch and up said run and ravine, along which it flows by their several courses, $94\frac{1}{2}$ perches to a hickory in or near the line of lands of F. Rudy; thence by said line north $88\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 93 perches to the forks of a stream rising near a stone corner between lands of the heirs of Joshua Elder and Jacob Pancake, deceased, in said Rudy's line; thence down said stream, by the several courses thereof, 88 perches to its junction with Rutherford's Run; thence down Rutherford's Run two perches to the mouth of Hileman's Run; thence up Hileman's Run, by the several courses page 272, the second in Road Doc. A, page 273, and by reference to what follows it may be seen how Lower Swatara was separated. As now organized the township of Swatara is bounded on the north by the townships of Susquehanna and Lower Paxtang, on the east by Derry and Lower Swatara, on the south by Lower Swatara, and on the west by the Susquehanna River and the limits of the city of Harrisburg.

Many of the incidents narrated in the general history as occurring in Paxtang township proper transpired within the limits of the township of Swatara. The township is located in one of the finest valleys in Pennsylvania, and most of the land is highly cultivated. There is little or no poor land within its limits.

thereof, 119 perches to the line of James Herrington, where a road crosses said run; thence by the line of Herrington's land, south $67\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 109 perches, to where said line strikes the head-waters of a run which leads across the Downingtown and Ephrata turnpike road; thence down said run, by the several courses thereof, 153 perches to the middle of said turnpike and a bridge across said run; thence along the middle of said turnpike road to the middle of the bridge over Paxtang Creek aforesaid, by the following courses and distances: north 74 degrees west 68 perches to an angle; north $74\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 218 perches to an angle on Allison's Hill; north 66 degrees west $51\frac{1}{2}$ perches to the junction of said turnpike with the Jonestown road, and south $78\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 8 perches to the middle of said bridge."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 18th of January, 1848. The line thus run, so far as it goes, varies materially from the line of 1799, before mentioned. The first division line of Swatara township may be found recorded in Ses. Doc., 1795-1801, nothing in the New World can be called old, it is also true that the origin of this place as a place of worship is lost in antiquity. In 1732, when the Presbytery of Donegal was organized, there was standing on the spot a log house of worship with some of the marks of age upon it, and near by were the green graves of the pioneers, most of which were never marked, and their existence to-day is only discovered by the gravedigger when he strikes his spade into the soil to add one more to the already populous city of the dead. Sixty years ago there was at the head of one of these graves a rough limestone, upon which was chiseled in rude letters an inscription which stated that the inhabitant below had departed this life in 1716. This establishes the fact of the existence of the burying-ground at that date, and we are naturally led to the conclusion that the log church was also then in existence. Rev. James Anderson and others preached here as supplies, under the care of the Presbytery of New Castle, prior to 1732. On the 11th of October of that year the Presbytery of Donegal was constituted out of a portion of the Presbytery of New Castle. The meeting was held at the Donegal Church; ministers present, Messrs. Anderson, Thomson, Boyd, Orr, and Bertram. Mr. Thomson was elected moderator, and Mr. Bertram clerk. The first item of business brought before the new Presbytery of Donegal was in relation to Paxtang and Derry. These churches having united in a call to the Rev. William Bertram, which had been placed in his hands at the last meeting of the old New Castle Presbytery, George Renick and others of Paxtang and Derry appeared and required an answer thereto. Mr. Bertram accepted, and was installed Nov. 15, 1732, at Swatara, which Webster says was the original name of Derry Church. Thomas Forster, George Renick, William Cunningham, and Thomas Mayes were appointed for the Paxtang side, and Rowland Chambers, Hugh Black, Robert Campbell, John Wilson, William Wilson, James Quigley, William McCord, and John Sloan for the Derry side of the creek, to assist Mr. Bertram in congregational affairs until the erection of a formal session.

At the meeting of Presbytery at Upper Octorara, Sept. 6, 1733, "Mr. Bertram presented a list of men nominated by the congregations of Paxtang and Derry to be set apart for ruling elders. Presbytery ordered that they be again published, and intimation given that if any objection be made against any of them, said objection be given in due time."

The amount of the subscriptions to Mr. Bertram's salary does not appear, but the congregation, in addition thereto, made over to him and his heirs their "right and title to the plantation commonly called 'The Indian Town,' purchased from the Indians." Hitherto, and until 1736, Paxtang and Derry were considered simply as two branches of the same congregation; this arrangement was unwieldy, and gave rise to various disputes and misunderstandings about financial matters. They had fallen into arrears with Mr. Anderson, and were ordered no less than five times at as many different meetings of Presbytery to pay up; difficulty was experienced in getting all parts of the congregation to contribute their just dues towards the repairs of Mr. Bertram's house, and to defray the expenses of a lawsuit about certain boards. These and other troubles of a like nature were a source of annoyance to both societies as well as to Mr. Bertram, so much so that at Nottingham, Oct. 9, 1735, Mr. Bertram and his elder united in asking Presbytery to appoint a committee "to go into and reason with the people of said congregation and inquire into their circumstances, as to their ability to be separated into two distinct congregations and support themselves, in order that Mr. Bertram, being eased of part of his burden, may be able to go on with more comfort in the discharge of his duty to whichever part of said people he shall be determined to continue with."

A committee was appointed and reported to Presbytery Nov. 20, 1735. Accompanying their report they presented a supplication from the session asking for a separation, and that their bounds might be fixed. At the same time Lazarus Stewart prosecuted a supplication from Manada Creek (Hanover) for a new erection. The subject of the separation between Paxtang and Derry was postponed from one Presbytery to another, until finally on the 2d of September, 1736, it was agreed to. So popular was Mr. Bertram with his people that both parties were anxious to secure his services,—Paxtang engaging to pay for his yearly support sixty pounds, "one-half in money, the other half in hay, flax, linen, yarn, or linen cloth at market price." Derry promised fifty-five pounds, to be paid in like manner. Mr. Bertram was perplexed, and asked for time to consider; Presbytery gave him until the next meeting of Synod, which took place on the 16th of September. He chose Derry, and Paxtang was declared vacant. From this date until Dec. 22, 1738, the congregation was supplied by Messrs. Sankey, Alexander, Craven, and Elder.

On Dec. 22, 1738, John Elder, a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, was ordained and installed pastor of Paxtang, at a salary of sixty pounds in money. Mr. Elder was a strong man, and filled a large space not only in the church but in the State. In addition to the sacred office he held a commission as civil magistrate, was captain of the celebrated body of men known as the "Paxtang Rangers," and held a colonel's commission under the Proprietary government. It is unnecessary to give more of his personal history in this connection, as a full biographical sketch of him will be found in another part of this volume. Soon after Mr. Elder began his labors in Paxtang it was found that the old log church was insufficient, and steps were taken towards the erection of the present building. It stands about twenty feet back from the site of the old house, and was begun about the year 1740, but owing to the poverty of the congregation and their aversion to going into debt (a characteristic which they still retain) it seems to have been some years in course of erection, and according to a tradition which is doubtless correct, was used for a long time as a house of worship with neither floor nor pews; seats made of logs hewn on one side were used by all the people excepting the family of the pastor, who occupied a settee. In the division of Mr. Elder's effects after his death, the old settee fell to his son Thomas.

The building is an unpretending stone structure, thirty-six by sixty-six feet, without ornament of any kind, and has stood without change in its outward appearance for more than one hundred and forty years. The stones used in the construction of the walls are rough limestone, and so irregular in size and shape that a modern mason would pronounce them utterly unfit for building purposes, and yet no firmer or better walls can be found anywhere. Their strength seems to lie in the mortar used, which is now as hard as the stone itself, and the storms of almost a century and a half have had so little effect upon it that the marks of the mason's trowel are as distinct to-day as when he finished the work.

Ground had scarcely been broken for the new house when the dissensions between Old and New Sideism arose in the church, which resulted in the division of the congregation. Mr. Elder and a portion of the people adopting Old Side views, remained in possession of the property. The New Side people secured two acres of land about two miles farther east, and immediately erected thereon a rival church, and in 1745, Rev. John Roan became their pastor, and continued his labors among them until his death in 1775. Mr. Roan was at the same time pastor of the New Side Churches of Derry and Mount Joy.

This movement seriously crippled the congregation, and was the main cause for the delay in finishing and furnishing the building. Mr. Elder's salary was also greatly reduced, but was supplemented by the Old Side people of Derry, who at this time united with Paxtang under his ministrations. The minutes of Donegal Presbytery from Sept. 28, 1745, to June, 1747, and from Oct. 9, 1750, to June 5, 1759, having been lost, Mr. Elder's private papers, many of them, being also lost or inaccessible, it is somewhat difficult to trace the history of Paxtang during this period, probably the most trying one in its existence. The French war was in progress and the Indians very troublesome. "Many a family mourned for some of their number shot by the secret foe or carried away captive. Their rifles were carried with them to their work in the field and to the sanctuary. Elder placed his trusty piece beside him in the pulpit. Death often overtook his flock as they returned to their scattered plantations. In 1756 the meeting-house was surrounded while he was preaching, but their spies having counted the rifles, the Indians retired from their ambuscade without making an attack." On another occasion, in the same year, they came for the purpose of attacking the worshipers in church, but by mistake they arrived on Monday instead of Sunday, and after waiting several days, finding they were discovered, left the settlement by way of Indian-town Gap, murdering a number of persons on the Swatara and carrying off several prisoners.

Notwithstanding all these difficulties, Mr. Elder and his congregation prospered. They finished their church and furnished it, not very neatly, but very substantially. The building had three doors of entrance, and the pulpit was built against the north wall, high above the heads of the congregation and directly opposite the southern entrance. An aisle ran through from east to west, and another north and south from the southern door to the pulpit.

The congregation seems to have acquired no legal title to their property until 1754, as we find that on the 8th of June, 1754, Henry Forster and Ann, his wife, gave their deed for twenty acres strict measure, consideration ten pounds.

The following curious document also bears the date 1754. When the disorganization and separation caused by Old and New Sideism took place in Paxtang and Derry, some ten or twelve years before this, no regular call seems to have been made out to Mr. Elder, he just took charge of the Old Side people of both congregations, and this paper may have been drawn up simply to place matters in proper shape. There is no tradition of any misunderstanding occurring at this time between Mr. Elder and his people:

"To the Reverend Mr. Jno. Elder.

"Sirs,—We, the Inhabitants in the Township & Congregation of Paxtang & Derry, Being now Destitute of a settled Gospel minister amongst us; Being also Deeply Sensible of the great loss & Disadvantage we & ours may sustain, In regard of our souls & spiritual Concerns by our living in such a Condition in this Wilderness; & having had Sufficient Proof of, & being well pleased & satisfied with the ministerial abilities & qualifications of y'u, the Revd. Jno. Elder, Do unanimously Invite & Call y'u to take the Pastoral Care & oversight of us, Promising all due subjection, submission & obedience to the Doctrine, Discipline & Government & Ordinances Exercised & administered By y'u as our Pastor in the Lord. And that y'u may be the Better Enabled to attend upon y'r Pastoral & ministerial work amongst us, without Anxious & Distracting Cares about y'r worldly Concerns, WE Do hereby Cheerfully Promise & Engage to take Care of y'r Support and maintenance for an Honourable & Creditable manner Suitable to & befitting y'r Honourable Function & office as a Minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ amongst us; Knowing that the Lord hath ordained that they who Preach the Gospel should live by the Gospel. In testimony of all w'h we have hereunto Subscribed our Names This 26th of September, 1754."

On June 22, 1764, at a meeting of Presbytery held at Derry, Mr. Elder and four other ministers declared their intention to cease from active membership in the judicatory. This decision was not acted upon by Synod until May 19, 1768, when they were joined to the Second Presbytery of Philadelphia, so that for a period of about four years Paxtang was not represented in any of the church courts. The trouble arose out of the old party feeling of the Old and New Sides, which, notwithstanding the union, was still rampant in the Presbyteries. Upon the formation of Carlisle Presbytery, 1786, Paxtang was joined thereto, and has remained in that connection ever since. After the death of Mr. Roan, Oct. 2, 1775, Paxtang and Derry were again united solely under the charge of Mr. Elder. The congregation at Harrisburg was formed April 12, 1787, and added to Mr. Elder's charge, as was also the New Side branch of Paxtang.

In 1789 some repairing was done at Paxtang, as the following papers will show :

We, whose names are underwritten, do promise to pay to James Johnston & William Smith the several sums annexed to our names, on demand, for Laying the Allies in Paxtang Meeting House. Witness our hands at Paxtang, the 10th Day of August, 1789.

The pastorate of Rev. John Elder, after a duration of more than half a century, closed on the 13th of April, 1791. The congregation, after hearing various candidates, finally united with Derry and Harrisburg in a call to Rev. Nathaniel R. Snowden, of Philadelphia, each congregation agreeing to pay him fifty pounds per annum. The following subscription is probably not a full list of the Paxtang people who contributed to the support of Mr. Snowden, but simply those who were present at the congregational meeting held on the 7th of March, 1793. The paper itself is in the handwriting of James Caldwell, but the names and figures were written by the subscribers, each one for him or herself, and all in the same ink :

We the under subscribers do each of us promise to pay annually the sums annexed to our names, to the trustees of Paxtang congregation, or the collectors appointed by them, as a salary due to the Rev. Mr. Snowden for the one-third part of his labors amongst us, and while he continues a regular preaching pastor in said congregation and we members of it. Given under our hands this seventh day of March, A.D. 1793.

Mr. Snowden was installed Oct. 2, 1793, but soon found the labor of attending to three congregations too great for his bodily strength. His efforts to curtail his labors called forth the following papers, the result being that he was relieved of both Paxtang and Derry and retained only by Harrisburg :

LETTER SENT TO PRESBYTERY IN 1795.

" PAXTANG, Oct. 5, 1795.

" To the Revd. Presbytery of Carlisle about to convene at Marsh Creek in the County of York :

" WHEREAS, Mr. Snowden has signified to his congregation in Derry Township that he is no longer able to officiate in his Ministerial capacity to them on acct. of Inability of body, & that he purposes to apply to Presbytery for a Discharge from said congregation which we conceive, if he might be indulged in his Request, wou'd leave the congregation of Paxtang in a very distressing & Perilous Situation; that the two congregations have lived for many years past in perfect peace, friendship and unanimity, and that we do not wish for a schism between us now; that if the union is once broke there will be no probability of us being united again; that if Mr. Snowden is rendered incapable of undergoing the fatigue of the three congregations in less than three years in the prime of life, by all probability he will not be able in a short time to attend to two congregations, and of consequence we shall be left without a pastor and the means of giving a call to another. We, therefore, pray to be considered as united with Derry, and that if Mr. Snowden should insist on being disunited from them, that Presbytery will appoint a committee of their body to enquire into the matter before anything decisive may take place; and that the majority of this congregation, how much soever they may be attached to Mr. Snowden, wou'd rather he should leave us as he found us, than submit to a dissolution of the union subsisting between us.

" By order of a meeting of PAXTANG congregation.
 " JOHN RUTHERFORD,
 " JOSHUA ELDER."

SUPPLICATION SENT TO PRESBYTERY, 1796.

" PAXTANG, Jan'y, 1796.

" To the Moderator of Carlisle Presbytery about to meet at Big Spring :
 " By order of the Committee of Presbytery which sat at Paxtang the 3d of Nov'r last, the Congregation of Paxtang was notified the last Sunday but one which we had meeting that the sense of the Congregation wou'd be taken on the next Sabbath whether we wou'd adhere to Harrisburg & break the Union with Derry, or whether we wou'd continue the Union with Derry & break off with Harrisburg. Accordingly after sermon last Sunday the heads of families were desired to attend, and after the business was explained to them, we proceeded to take the votes of the People, & it appeared that a Majority of the Congregation was for continuing the Union with Derry and relinquishing Harrisburg; they likewise chose the bearer Capt'n John Rutherford as their Commissioner to wait on Presbytery with this Remonstrance, praying that Presbytery would grant us Supplies & dissolve the Congregation of Paxtang from their Obligations to Mr. Snowden & that he might discontinue his labors to them unless ordered to supply them as any other Gentleman.

SUPPLICATION SENT TO THE PRESBYTERY OF CARLISLE, 1796.
 "PAXTANG, Sept. 3, 1796.

The Reverend Presbytery of Carlisle:
 "GENTLEMEN,—Whereas we are now destitute of the Gospel Ordinances being regularly administered to us, and what few supplies were allotted for us at the last Presbytery we fell short even of these on account of the age and inability of one of the members appointed to supply us; We, the subscribers, in behalf of this Congregation who met for that purpose do most earnestly beg and entreat that Presbytery would be pleased to grant us many Supplies as they can with convenience; we likewise wish that if there be any young or unsettled members belonging to Presbytery these might be sent to us that we might have an opportunity of the Gospel once more regularly established and administered in all the forms thereto belonging; and your Supplicants as in duty bound shall ever pray."

APPEAL OF THE PAXTANG CONGREGATION TO THE MODERATOR.
 "PAXTANG, Oct. 1, 1797.

To the Moderator of the Reverend Presbytery of Carlisle:
 "Sir,—We again acknowledge our dependence and renew our request in praying Presbytery to give us such and as many supplies during the winter season as they can with convenience. The bearer, Mr. James Rutherford, is appointed our Commissioner to present this remonstrance to Presbytery and to answer such interrogatories as may be required of him.
 "Signed in behalf of Paxtang congregation by
 "JOSHUA ELDER."

LETTER TO THE MODERATOR OF CARLISLE PRESBYTERY, 1798.
 "PAXTANG, Sept. 25, 1798.

To the Moderator of Carlisle Presbytery:
 "Sir,—The bearer, Edward Crouch, is our commissioner, appointed by the congregation of Paxtang to wait on the Reverend Presbytery of Carlisle with a call for the Reverend Joshua Williams for the one-third of his labors in union with Derry, whom we expect will apply for the remaining two-thirds; likewise to solicit the Presbytery to grant us Supplies in the meantime. Signed in behalf and with the approbation of the congregation by JOSHUA ELDER."

Mr. Williams accepted the call, and was ordained and installed Oct. 2, 1799, Derry to receive two-thirds of his time and pay one hundred and twenty pounds, and Paxtang one-third and pay sixty pounds. This pastorate only lasted one year and eight months, ending on the 30th of June, 1801. Mr. Williams seems to have had trouble collecting his salary, for we find him complaining to Presbytery in 1803 about his salary arrears. The moderator was directed to write to these churches and say "that if these arrears are not discharged before the next meeting of Presbytery, that body would be under the disagreeable necessity of withholding from them that attention and regard which they pay to churches under their care." This did not have much effect, for we find them still unpaid in September, 1805.

May 29, 1807, Mr. James R. Sharon was installed, both congregations agreeing to pay the same salary as that promised to Mr. Williams.

In 1808 the "meeting-house" and "retiring-house" were put in thorough repair. As a matter of interest to their descendants, now widely scattered, we give the names of those contributing thereto:

The "retiring-house" was a small log building near the church, used for meetings of session, and as a study by the pastor during the interval between the morning and afternoon service, and on week-days as a school-house.

The "repairs" at this time consisted partly in the running up of two board partitions, thereby creating a vestibule at each end, with the audience-room in the centre. The partitions were of yellow pine, as was also the ceiling, which was placed in position at this time. The pews were left standing in the western vestibule, and were still in position within the memory of many of the present congregation. There was little uniformity in the Paxtang pews of that day, as each had been built by the family occupying it, and by their own architect. Two huge ten-plate stoves were placed in the long aisle, the smoke from which ascended through pipes to the loft, and made its escape as best it could through a small hole in the comb of the roof.

Mr. Sharon was a man of eminent piety, and was greatly beloved by his people. His pastorate covered a period of almost thirty-six years, and ended only with his life, April 18, 1843. During these years the gospel of peace reigned, and little is left for the historian but to record the fact.

Oct. 1, 1844, the Presbytery of Carlisle met at Paxtang. A call was placed in the hands of Rev. John M. Boggs, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Donegal. Mr. Boggs accepted, but asked that his ordination be postponed until the spring meeting, in order that he might attend the Theological Seminary at Princeton during the winter. His request was granted, and he was ordained April 9, 1845, and installed soon after as pastor of Paxtang and Derry.

His pastorate was uneventful, and was dissolved Oct. 6, 1847. The field was now vacant for a period of more than two years, during which time extensive alterations and repairs were made. The whole inside of the building was removed, the western door and the small window back of the pulpit walled up, new shingles placed upon the roof, and a floor laid throughout the entire building, the halls and ceiling plastered, the pulpit taken down from its perch on the north wall, and a new one placed at a much lower elevation against the western wall. New pews of modern style and uniform character were built, and the old pulpit, pews, and furniture, which had been in use since Mr. Elder's time, sold at public auction.

Sept. 28, 1849, a call from Paxtang and Derry was placed in the hands of Rev. Andrew D. Mitchell, Paxtang promising three hundred dollars and Derry two hundred per annum. Mr. Mitchell accepted, and was ordained and installed April 10, 1850. Mr. Mitchell was a single man when he accepted these charges, but married a few years afterwards.

Hitherto Paxtang had never needed a parsonage. Bertram lived at Derry; Elder and Sharon, who had occupied the field for a century, were both practical farmers and lived on their farms; Boggs was unmarried. It now, however, became necessary to provide a house for Mr. Mitchell, and the present parsonage was erected, and was occupied by him during the remainder of his pastorate, which ended Feb. 12, 1874. Near the close of Mr. Mitchell's pastorate the inside was again remodeled and arranged as it now stands.

In November of the same year a call was made out for Rev. William W. Downey by Paxtang, Derry having died out. Mr. Downey accepted, and was installed April 29, 1875. In 1878 this pastorate was dissolved, and the congregation has ever since been supplied by Rev. W. A. West, of Harrisburg.

Intimately connected with Paxtang Church was a school which flourished from the earliest times down to the establishment of free schools in Dauphin County. The school was never under the control of the church as an ecclesiastical body, but the same men who composed the congregation were the patrons of the school, and the building itself was the property of the congregation. It may therefore fairly be considered as an appendage of the church, and the old masters stood next in rank and dignity to the clergyman. Here flourished such men as Francis Kerr, Joseph Allen, Benjamin White, James Couples, Francis D. Cummings, and others celebrated in their day and generation as educators, and from whose instructions went forth many young men afterwards distinguished in every walk of life.

Originally the congregation owned a tract of twenty acres in the shape of a parallelogram, whose length was about three times its width. Nearly forty years ago a portion of this tract was sold, leaving a square of six or eight acres, covered largely with forest-trees, among which are several giant oaks that were doubtless trees when Columbus landed on the shores of America. Near the centre of the tract stands the church, the parsonage occupies the southeast corner, and between the two lies the graveyard. In early times no distinct limits were set to the burying-ground, and the people buried their dead anywhere, according to their fancy, in the clearing to the south and southeast of the church. Graves were seldom marked, and a few years obliterated all trace of them. As families became permanent and the number of these graves increased more care was taken, tombstones began to be erected and lots fenced in. The want of uniformity, however, in these fences and of regularity in the selection of lots rendered the grounds very unsightly, as well as very difficult to keep clear of weeds and briars. This state of affairs existed until 1791-92, when the ground was inclosed by a stone wall, the greater portion of which is still standing. This wall does not by any means include all the graves of Paxtang. It did, however, surround all that were marked by tombstones or protected by fences. The only one of these fences still standing is that around the graves of the Simpsons; it is built of iron, and is in as good condition to-day as when first erected. In 1819 a new roof was placed upon the wall; the contractor was Matthew Humes. The ground inclosed had very nearly all been buried over once, and some of it twice before the wall was erected. In course of time, therefore, it became impossible to dig a grave without disturbing the remains of several of the unknown and forgotten dead. In November, 1851, the following paper was drawn up and signed. It is in the handwriting of Joseph Gray:

"At a meeting of the congregation of Paxtang Church, on the 27th of November, 1851, it was decided by a majority of the meeting, that the graveyard ought to be enlarged about ninety feet, on the south side, and that the yard wall requires a new cover, either of wood, iron, or stone. We, the subscribers, whose names are hereto annexed, do promise to pay for said purpose the sums by us subscribed according to the materials which may be used for covering, the contract to be given by public letting to the lowest bidder or bidders."

		For wood.	Iron or stone.

The old south wall was taken down, and during the summer of 1852 the grounds were extended ninety feet, and the whole covered with wood, and so it stood until the summer of 1882, when the wall was again repaired, and a new roof of wood placed thereon.

S T E E L T O N B O R O U G H.

IN 1866, within the territory now comprising the boundaries of the flourishing town of Steelton there were only six families residing. The Pennsylvania Steel Company were organizing and prospecting for a site for their contemplated works. The board of directors came by a special train and quietly examined the land now occupied by them. The object of their visit was not surmised. A few weeks afterwards Rudolph F. Kelker and Henry A. Kelker were approached and solicited to make sale of the land. This, at first, they hesitated to do. It was a heritage from their father, Frederick Kelker, and they desired to transmit it to their children, for which reason, and the associations connected with it, they had always refused offers to purchase it. The land was covered by a warrant to Thomas Renick, bearing date of March 27, 1738, and by a patent to Richard Peters, bearing date of March 19, 1747, "a tract of land in Paxtang township, Lancaster County." Frederick Kelker purchased the first tract of land of the heirs of John Snavelly, April 1, 1830, at thirty-seven dollars per acre, and another tract of the heirs of Felix Landis in 1848. When Dr. Lamborn, for the Pennsylvania Steel Company, observed what was to be the character of the works they intended to construct, Mr. Kelker consented to transfer the land to them. The matter was noised abroad, public interest was awakened, and different places desired the works to be located near them. There were gratuitous offers of land, and competition was strong. At Harrisburg subscriptions were invited, and a mass-meeting of its citizens held in the court-house, where impromptu speeches were made. The majority were in favor of locating the works below Harrisburg. The amount of land purchased by these contributions was as follows: From Rudolph F. Kelker thirty-eight acres and one hundred and thirty-four perches at three hundred dollars per acre, and from Henry A. Kelker forty-three acres and one hundred and fourteen perches at three hundred dollars per acre. The line extends from the centre of the canal to the river at low-water mark. The deed was given Jan. 8, 1866. The entire amount was estimated at $24,577.50. Subsequently the company bought with their own means fifteen acres and fifty-two perches from Rudolph F. Kelker at $300 per acre, equal to $4597.50. So the total cost of the land was $29,175. This does not include the recent purchase of land from Henry Gilbert and others. The subscribers to purchase the land of the Messrs. Kelker, and which was presented to the Pennsylvania Steel Company, were J. D. Cameron, $4000; Henry A. Kelker, $3778.75; Rudolph F. Kelker, $2358.25; William Calder, $1000; Simon Cameron, $1000; First National Bank, $1000; Harrisburg National Bank, $1000; David Mumma, $1000; Alexander Koser, $1000; Walter L. Shrenk, $5; H. Huntsberger, $5; Dickel & Treida, $5; C. Forney, $5. Total $24,577.50.

Having disposed of this quantity of their land for the Pennsylvania Steel-Works, R. F. Kelker bought forty-five acres from Abraham Wolf, and twenty-two acres from Jacob Bender, and also fifty acres for Henry A. Kelker. Completing their purchases, Mr. Kelker commenced to lay out building lots, and offering them for sale. They were only sold to purchasers intending to build, and not with a purpose to advance the plans of land speculators. This land was the first laid out, and was done by R. F. Kelker in person. The lots were in what was formerly known as Lower Baldwin. The surveying was done in April, 1866, by John W. Cowden. Arrangements were made to have streets fifty feet in width, and alleys twenty feet, and each lot to front on a street, and also on an alley. The prices received for the lots varied from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars each, according to location. Henry A. Kelker immediately afterwards began to lay out his lots in what was afterwards called Central Baldwin. Adjoining the latter was the farm of Walter L. Trewick. A part of this was sold to the Steel Company, the remainder to Charles L. Bailey, of Harrisburg, who subsequently sold to Josiah Dunkle.

After the location of the steel-works, the officers of the company conferred with Rudolph F. Kelker as to the name of the prospective town. They suggested the name of Matthew Baldwin, a distinguished philanthropist, and the founder of the Baldwin Locomotive-Works at Philadelphia. The name, however, presented difficulties which perhaps were unforeseen. There was a town in Allegheny County called Baldwin, and also a post-office in Butler County of the same name. When the need of a post-office arose, the name chosen was "Steel-works." The post-office was established in 1871, and Joseph B. Meredith appointed postmaster. In October, 1880, the post-office name was changed from Steel-works to Steelton, and the town, including the surrounding villages, subsequently incorporated as Steelton.

The steel-works are situated between the river and the canal, on a level tract of bottom land. Steelton until its absorption of Ewington was located mainly on the turnpike running from Middletown to Harrisburg, and extends nearly a mile. The old turnpike runs parallel with the canal. There are streets which are laid out running back upon the adjoining lands.

In 1876, Messrs. Purdy and Ewing laid out a town on the river directly above the steel-works, which was called Ewington. After the incorporation of the borough of Steelton application was made to the court to include within its limits the town of Ewington, which was directed. The latter had as remarkable a growth and prosperity as the old town of Baldwin. Comprised in one municipality, Steelton is the second town in population in the county, containing possibly five thousand inhabitants.

PENNSYLVANIA STEEL-WORKS.

The Pennsylvania Steel-Works are the most prominent establishment of the kind in the United States. The importance of the improvements in the manufacture of steel as developed by Bessemer, Kelly, and others, and the bearing of those improvements on the interests of railways, was early recognized by prominent men in Pennsylvania, and, after due investigation of the subject, at a meeting held June 26, 1865, they became associated, and organized the company known as the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and finally secured a charter with liberal provisions. The capital stock first subscribed was two hundred thousand dollars, which was subsequently increased as the progress of the undertaking required, and the business expanded, until two million dollars have been invested. When the company first organized Mr. Samuel M. Felton was chosen president, and he has ever since continued to preside over the affairs of the company.

The Susquehanna Valley having been early selected as the district in which the works should be located, an eligible site was secured about three miles from the city of Harrisburg, and, after the grounds had been surveyed and graded, the excavations were made and the masonry commenced on the 12th day of May, 1866.

The Bessemer or pneumatic process was adopted, and the construction and arrangement of the steel plant, with two converters of the nominal capacity of five tons each, was according to plans prepared principally under the direction of Mr. Alexander L. Holley, who became the company's superintendent January, 1867. The work of erection was pushed as rapidly as possible, and in May, 1867, was sufficiently advanced to commence the manufacture of steel ingots, the first blow being made May 25, 1867. The ingots were forwarded to Johnstown, Pa., to be rolled in the iron rail-mills of Cambria Iron Company (as the rail-mill of this company was not completed), and the rails were then delivered to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and put into service, being the first steel rails ever produced in this country on an order in regular course of business.

At that date the great superiority of steel rails over iron rails for railway purposes had already been demonstrated on several of our most important railways, and railway managers were generally beginning to have some conception of the decrease in cost of maintaining their tracks, which could be effected by the use of steel rails, but as they had been previous to that time supplied only by foreign manufacturers, the cost was heavy, and precluded the idea of their adoption, except for places where traffic was very great, with trains so frequent that repairs to track were difficult to make. The importance, therefore, to the railway interest, of the successful commencement at these works of the manufacture of steel, and the demonstration that in due time the railways of this country would be no longer dependent on foreign manufacturers for a supply of this most important auxiliary to their progress, can scarcely be over-estimated.

In May, 1868, the rail-mill was completed and went into operation, making rails directly from small ingots. The improvement of the quality secured by making large ingots, and hammering the steel before rolling into rails, had already been discovered, and in 1869 the company completed a forge department, where the largest steam hammer then in the country was employed in preparing the steel blooms for the rail-mill. The practice of hammering was continued without interruption until December, 1876, when a blooming-mill, with a powerful train of blooming- or cogging-rolls, was completed, by which the capacity of the works was greatly increased; and since then, except when rail orders have specially required hammered blooms, the forge department has been devoted to the production of billets and forgings.

This company increased its capacity for the production of steel by erecting, in 1876, an open-hearth plant, with two five-ton Siemens' melting furnaces, for producing steel on the open hearth. This plant was operated with success for several years, and, although the product was principally required for rails, a high reputation was secured for the special qualities of "S. M. Steel," of which quantities were made from time to time. To provide room for extending the blooming-mill, the first plant was removed, and has been replaced by a new and improved plant, with two twenty-ton furnaces, on original plans, embodying many important improvements affecting the convenience of operating and repairing, and the cost of manufacture. The building is brick, with iron roof, and is constructed in the most substantial manner, provided with abundant tracks, elevators, cranes, etc., for the handling of materials and products.

The capacity of the original Bessemer plant having proved insufficient to meet the demand for the company's products, although the output had been many times greater than was contemplated when it was erected, the company decided upon the erection of an additional Bessemer plant, which was completed and commenced operations in 1881.

The new plant has three eight-ton converters, with two pits, and has been arranged and constructed on original plans, which secure great facility for the handling of the materials and products, with a capacity which has already reached an output of over eight hundred tons of steel in one day of twenty-four hours. All the engines, boilers, and machinery of the new plant were constructed in the shops of the company, and are all of the most substantial construction. The buildings are of stone, with iron roofs, and are reached from all sides by tracks conveniently arranged.

The No. 1 Bessemer plant has recently been adapted to the "Thomas Gilchrist" or "basic" process of converting and dephosphorizing, by which material formerly not available for steel purposes may be used. The first charge was converted May 7, 1883, being the first produced in this country by the "basic" process. The company commenced the erection of blast-furnaces in 1872 to produce pig-iron for their own purposes, and completed No. 1 furnace in 1878, and No. 2 furnace in 1875. These furnaces were of highly-approved designs and large capacity, since increased very much by the use of the Whitwell patent hot-blast stoves, and have produced outputs of iron comparing favorably with any blast-furnaces in the country. Two additional furnaces, No. 8 and No. 4, of the largest class are in progress, nearly completed, and will soon enable the company to produce most of the iron they require. A very large rolling-mill has been erected, and is now being equipped with the latest improved machinery for rolling steel billets and all shapes of merchant bars. This mill is expected to require for its supply of steel a large portion of the steel from the open-hearth furnaces and from the "basic" converters of the No. 1 Bessemer plant.

The company commenced the manufacture of railroad switches, frogs, etc., in 1872, and have enjoyed the patronage of railroads in every part of the country to an extent that has frequently required enlargement of their facilities. For this department a substantial brick building nearly five hundred feet long has lately been erected, and is still receiving additional machinery. The company have also commenced the manufacture of interlocking switches and signals, and have acquired valuable patents covering important improvements in this branch of railway safety appliances.

The repair departments, consisting of pattern-shop and foundry, machine- and smith-shops, and boiler-shop, are all of large capacity, with substantial brick buildings, and thoroughly equipped for the reproduction of any portion of the machinery and appliances used in the works, also to produce the heavy steam-engines and other machinery that the new plants, mills, and furnaces may require.

No labor strike has ever occurred at the works, and in view of the liberality of the company toward its labor, and the intelligence of the thrifty and industrious employes, it is hoped that none may ever occur.

The company has steadily preferred to make quality of product the great object. At the same time the production has increased with a healthy growth, as may be noted in the following memoranda :

Bessemer steel is produced from pig-iron, which must be of a particular quality, made from the purest ores, although its appearance is the same as the iron commonly used in foundries for making castings. It is the common practice to melt the iron in the converting department, as in this way a better commingling of the various qualities is obtained, but the iron is sometimes brought in the melted state directly from the blast-furnaces in which it has been made in large ladles, mounted on trucks running on elevated tracks, into the converting department. The ladle must in either case stand at a considerable height from the general level that the melted metal may flow through suitable troughs into the "converting vessels," and the cupolas are placed still higher, so that the iron may run from the cupolas into the large ladle.

The "converters" or "vessels" are large egg-shaped affairs, made principally of heavy plate iron, with trunnions, on which they turn up or down, and they are connected with powerful hydraulic machinery, by which they may be made to turn as desired. The converters are lined very thickly with fire-bricks and other refractory materials adapted to resist the intense heat. The bottom or lower part of the lining is made of perforated fire-bricks (called tuyeres), through which the air is blown into the converter, and this part is made to be readily removed and replaced when necessary. The air is conveyed by passages extending through the trunnions of the converter, connecting with pipes leading from the engine.

To receive a charge the converter is turned down, so that the mouth is opposite the end of the troughs or "runners," through which the iron flows down and pours into the converter, the iron giving off quantities of sparks and making a brilliant spectacle, which is, however, surpassed by that presented when the air is let on and the converter turned back to the upright position, as the powerful blast of air (twenty to twenty-five pounds pressure per square inch) when it first bursts through the metal forces out showers of bright sparks, which for a moment appear to fill the air.

As pig-iron contains about two per cent. of silicon and four per cent. of carbon, and as the steel must be practically free from silicon, and have only about four-tenths of one per cent. of carbon, to convert the iron into steel the silicon and carbon must be entirely removed. By forcing through the molten pig-iron such immense quantities of atmospheric air the carbon in the iron combines with the oxygen of the air, and, being consumed, passes off in the form of gas; the silicon being also oxidized is removed from the iron; and when all of these elements are thus expelled the material arrives at the condition (chemically) of pure iron, and is then ready for the addition of the recarbonizing material, which returns to the charge enough carbon to give the steel the required carbonization.

To convert a charge requires from fifteen to twenty minutes. At first there is comparatively little flame passing out of the converter, but it rapidly increases, passing with a dull roar into chimney-stacks above the mouth of the converter. As the blast continues, the flame increases more and more, and grows in brilliancy until it rivals the light of the sun and becomes too bright for unaccustomed eyes, passing out of the stacks high into the air, lighting up at night the vicinity, the noise having also increased to a roar, which may be heard at considerable distance. After the carbon has been expelled the flame loses brilliancy and drops very noticeably, the blast is shut off, and the converter is turned down. As the converter is turned down the blast again sends out a splendid shower of sparks. At this point the recarbonizing material is introduced. This is Spiegeleisen, a metallic combination of iron and manganese with carbon. It is melted same as the pig-iron, and a quantity proportionate to the weight of the charge is run into the converter. It instantly pervades the metal in the converter, throwing off flames of a very peculiar hue as the manganese and carbon combine with the metal, and the charge at once becomes steel and is discharged into the steel ladle.

In front of the converters are two semicircular pits several feet deep, and in the centre of each pit the powerful hydraulic crane which supports the steel ladle is placed. The steel ladle is swung around under the mouth of the converter and the steel is poured into the ladle, after which it is swung back over the cast-iron moulds that are ranged along the side of the pit, and the steel is discharged through the bottom of the ladle into the moulds, where it soon congeals and takes the form of "ingots," containing enough steel for several rails. After the steel is poured out of the converter another charge of iron is run into the same or another converter, and the above repeated. As there are three converters in the converting department of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, one is always ready to use, and the process goes on day and night. As soon as the ingot loosens itself from the mould by contraction the mould is stripped off, and the ingots are loaded soon as possible, while red-hot, on trucks for removal.

The ingots, ladles, moulds, and all heavy articles are handled by the aid of hydraulic cranes, whose power is derived from powerful pumps that furnish a pressure of two hundred and eighty pounds to the square inch, the pressure being applied by persons stationed where they can observe every operation and apply the pressure as it is needed.

When a charge of ingots has been loaded on the trucks, a small locomotive speedily moves it to the blooming-mill, where the ingots are reheated in furnaces, and are then passed through the blooming-rolls, which reduce the size to seven inches square. The ingot is then cut into pieces of length required to make a rail, which under the name of blooms are conveyed to the rail-mill, where the blooms are reheated and rolled into rails. After the rails have cooled they are inspected to find any defects, made straight and true, and drilled at the ends for the splices.

STELTON SCHOOL BUILDING.

When the borough of Steelton was incorporated, one of the most perplexing questions was how to provide school facilities for the rapidly-increasing population that would be in keeping with the enterprising character of its citizens and the affairs committed to their charge. It became evident the provisions of the statute laws regulating common schools would be entirely inadequate, and that for a number of years large sums would have to be expended for school sites and the erection of school buildings. By the usual experience the prospect was that upon undesirable locations ill-adapted and indifferent buildings would be erected for schools as necessity compelled, own expense of a first-class modern school building, to be incorporated into the common-school system of the borough. In doing this they would relieve the borough of an oppressive tax for school buildings for a term of years, and thus enable the school revenue to be devoted to the direct tuition of the children, making it practicable to secure high standards from the commencement.

Although the expenditure of a large sum of money for such a purpose may appear to some as unwarranted, and to be classed as extravagant on the part of the company, the management of the Pennsylvania Steel Company have abiding confidence that only a few years will be required to demonstrate the wisdom and that at the end of say ten years there would have been expended a large sum of money, resulting in a collection of buildings, that although meeting immediate needs at the period of erection, would be by that time entirely unsuitable for the requirements of the schools, many of them hemmed in on all sides by business-places or other association equally unsuitable; that sooner or later the whole matter would require revision, and with much expense abandon the makeshift policy and meet the necessity of providing proper accommodations. Holding such views of the future, the management of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, feeling they would be held largely responsible for such a condition of affairs, decided to provide for the needs in advance by the erection at its

of anticipating the share of expenses they would have to bear, and at the outset making it practicable for the children of their employes to enjoy school privileges of the highest type, both as regards buildings and tuition.

The site upon which this building stands is a prominent one, and embraces all of the actual requisites for a school building, especially in regard to sanitary conditions. It is high, therefore is surrounded with abundance of light and air, and affords perfect drainage. It is located sufficiently back from the main thoroughfares of the town to insure perfect quiet, and easily approached from a winding roadway which follows up a ravine. This ravine extends each side of the hill upon which the building stands, and is sufficiently steep to form a barrier against any encroachments or obstructions in the future which would interfere with its present excellence. Although this is an elevated site, it is yet protected from bleakness by higher lands back of it. From its elevated and commanding position a beautiful view is obtained of the surrounding country for miles away, the town forming the foreground, while the city of Harrisburg and the quiet Susquehanna mingle in the background. The building has an extreme length of one hundred and forty-eight feet four inches and width of seventy-nine feet eight inches, and in outline is a parallelogram. It is built of brick, trimmed with brownstone, in the modern Renaissance style, the chief characteristics of which are three distinct features, i. e., a central and two end pavilions. The central pavilion, being the highest, is a little more decided in character, one of the features being a graceful stone balcony projecting from the exhibition hall windows at the level of the second floor. The character of the end pavilions consists mainly in the treatment of the entrance-ways, with large double and circular-headed windows opening upon the staircase landings above them. The roofs are quite steep, and are slated, and each pavilion is surmounted with a liberal-sized ventilating tower; the hips and ridges are capped with copper mouldings, and at all the principal points rise ornamental finials.

The accommodations of the interior are arranged on two floors, consisting of ten school-rooms, an exhibition hall, and a principal's room. The school-rooms are of uniform size, thirty-three feet by twenty-six feet (intended for fifty-six single desks); six of them, with the master's room, are situated on the first floor, while four with the exhibition hall are on the second floor. Each school-room has its separate wardrobe for the pupils' clothing and teacher's closet. The rooms are abundantly lighted, the windows being arranged in all cases so that the greater portion of the light is received at the left of the pupils. Each window has its head near the ceiling, and is provided with a double run of sash. This system of sashes is made a means of ventilation without creating draughts by a simple appliance of dropping the inner upper half, at the same time raising the outer lower half, thus directing the volume of air between the two sashes towards the ceiling. To further assist in controlling the air as well as the light of the school-room, each window is fitted with inside folding-blinds with rolling slats.

The grouping of these school-rooms, which constitutes the general plan of the building, is upon the German principle, which consists in confining the width of the building as near as possible to the width of one room and corridor, thus gaining a better system of lighting and a freer circulation of air.

The basement is well elevated above the lot, and is devoted principally to play-rooms for the children, being thoroughly lighted and ventilated. Sufficient space is reserved for the boiler- and fuel-rooms. The mode of construction of this school-house differs from any known in this country. It is thoroughly fire-proof, the floor-beams being of iron with brick arches between, and the staircase also of iron. The interior finish is of pine, the walls are wainscoted throughout with narrow strips to the height of three and a half feet, the workmanship and all being of the most substantial character. The heating and ventilation is on the system of indirect steam, the fresh air being conducted from a reservoir through underground ducts, and admitted to the steam coils at the ceiling of the basement, or about five feet above the level of the lot, and from the coils conducted by tin pipes, two to each room, the size of each pipe being graduated to provide eight cubic feet to each occupant of the room. The fresh-heated air in each case is admitted against the window surface or cold side of the room, and on the opposite side two ventilating-pipes of equal capacity to exhaust the vitiated air. These pipes are conducted to the three ventilating-turrets at the highest points of the roof.

CHURCHES.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, Steelton, was organized about 1868, and its first church edifice erected in 1869 on the grounds of the Steel Company, opposite the blast-furnace, on the road leading from Steelton to the depot. While the building was in course of construction there was preaching in the dining-room of the boarding-house,—the building afterwards occupied by the company's offices. This church was subsequently removed and rebuilt on its present site in 1877. It was originally a mission of Grace Church, Harrisburg, in connection with Lochiel. The pastors have been: 1869, John Stringer; 1870, Wesley C. Johnson; 1871-74, John W. Sayer; 1874, John A. Cooper; 1875-78, Thomas M. Jackson; 1878-80, John H. Wood; 1880-83, A. L. Urban; 1883, G. A. Wolfe. The parsonage is on Lincoln Street.

A UNITED BRETHREN (CENTENARY) Congregation was organized in 1867 by Rev. Jeremiah C. Smith, and religious worship held in the old school-house (also used by the Methodists and Episcopalians). The congregation afterwards purchased the old school-house for two hundred dollars and remodeled it. In 1868 it was made an appointment with Highspire, in 1873 made an appointment with Churchville, and in 1874 made a station. The pastors have been: 1868, Rev. J. C. Smith; 1869, J. L. Smith, J. Mumma; 1870, W. B. Evers; 1871, D. O. Farrell, G. A. Mack; 1872, D. O. Farrell; 1873, A. V. H. Gosweiler; 1874, E. F. Light, L. Peters; 1875, S. Peters; 1876-80, H. C. Phillips; 1880-82, J. Mumma; 1883, J. R. Hutchison. The present church edifice, a two-story frame building, was erected in 1874 on Secoud Street.

TRINITY PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL MISSION, with the Rev. Jacob Miller as rector, was established in Steelton in 1882.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CONGREGATION was organized in 1875, and its church edifice in Steelton erected in same year. Its pastors have been Revs. Edward Daron, Samuel Yingling, and W. S. Parr. The present pastor is Rev. M. J. Hocker. The Sunday-school was established in 1874.

ST. JAMES' ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH building was erected in 1878, on land purchased of Hon. J. D. Cameron. Its pastor is Rev. M. J. McBride, who has officiated from the outset. It has a prosperous Sunday-school.

THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was built in 1874 in "Cooney Hollow," where most of the colored population resided. The Sunday-school was organized in 1873. Rev. John C. Brock was pastor in 1879, and largely built up the congregation in numbers and material strength. The minister at present in charge is Rev. G. R. Miller.

A PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION was organized in 1881, and hold their services in Reehling's Hall, Rev. William G. McDannold pastor.

The Token of Progress, a weekly newspaper, was established in April, 1875, by Frank McClure. It was at first a four-page sheet of four columns each, and thus continued until October, 1876, when Joseph A. Work became part proprietor. In May, 1877, the latter purchased the interests of the former publishers, subsequently associating with him his brother, James W. Work. The name of the paper was changed in May, 1878, to The Weekly Item, and enlarged it to a twenty-column journal. Upon the incorporation of the borough of Steelton the title of the newspaper was changed to The Steelton Item, and the publication continued under its former management.

In the spring of 1882, William H. H. Seig, of Harrisburg, an experienced printer and journalist, was induced to start a daily newspaper at Steelton, The Steelton Daily Reporter, which he continued to publish about six months, when it was discontinued for want of proper support. The publication of the weekly Steelton Reporter, however, has in some measure taken the place of the former enterprise.

CHURCHVILLE is a flourishing village about one mile and a fourth northeast of Steelton. It is a town of recent origin, and takes its name from the place having two large and well-supported churches, the Lutheran and United Brethren.

"CHAMBERS' FERRY."—This old landmark of Provincial days is located a short distance below Steelton. It was on the main route to Carlisle, as teams going west crossed here, saving several miles from that going by Harris' Ferry. In later years it went by the name of "Half-way House." Through many generations the ferry privileges were preserved, and in all subsequent transfers of property these have been specially noted and reserved. The Chambers' Ferry right is now vested in Rudolph F. Kelker, of Harrisburg.

LOWER PAXTANG TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was never actually authorized, but was what remained of the original township of Paxtang, from which had been carved towns and townships until the northeast section, now comprising Lower Paxtang, was left. It was never officially so named, but to distinguish it from that of Upper Paxtang was thus designated. As we find the township on the county maps, it is bounded on the north by Middle Paxtang township, the ridge of the First Mountain being the line, on the east by West Hanover township, on the south by Swatara township, and on the west by Susquehanna township. It contains many fine, fertile farms, and is well watered.

The township was first settled by the Scotch-Irish, all of whom have gone out from this section, and the descendants of the Pennsylvania Germans occupy the magnificent fields and farms.

The early schools of what now includes Lower Paxtang township were connected with Wenrich's and Shoop's Churches, and one in Linglestown. They were supported by the citizens and managed by the teachers, and date back as early as 1765.

LINGLESTOWN.

LINGLESTOWN is situated nine miles from Harrisburg, not far from the base of the First Mountain, and six miles from the Susquehanna River. It was laid out by Thomas Lingle in 1765, and called St. Thomas, but afterwards changed to Linglestown. In 1860, Dr. W. C. Smith laid out an addition south of the town, which is gradually becoming improved. The proposed Boston and South Mountain Railroad runs through the village. John Hoofnagle, born in 1800, is the oldest person living in the town. The oldest house is a log structure, built about 1771, and now owned by George Walmer, but has not been occupied for some years. There are no immediate descendants of Thomas Lingle, the founder of the town, living now in the place or its immediate vicinity. The old tannery of Samuel McIlhenny was built at the beginning of the century.

The schools of Linglestown date from the laying out of the town in 1765. They compared favorably with those already described, and continued until about the close of the last century, when another log house was built and maintained by subscriptions. Among the most prominent teachers was Amos Wickersham, a Quaker, who resided at Middletown, who was a master mathematician and grammarian, possessing all the characteristics of a perfect gentleman, as well as a scholar. John Focht, who taught seventeen years before the free schools were introduced and twelve years after, was also the founder of the Linglestown Institute. The results of his labors are seen and felt to this day in the community. He was succeeded in the same institution by John Strook. To the foregoing Lower Paxtang township owes its present educational enthusiasm. There is no town in the county that has produced more or better teachers and is better represented in the normal schools and colleges than Linglestown. The most active men in favor of adopting free schools, etc., were Dr. Houtz, Judge Cowden, Dr. David Umberger, and Andrew Miller, all men of influence and education: The present two-story brick school building was erected in 1876.

THE UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH is a neat one-story frame building, which was remodeled in 1881. Its pastor is Rev. Joseph F. Meredith, of Grantville.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—This congregation was organized in 1826-27 by Rev. John Winebrenner, and was among the first churches of this denomination in the county. Since 1866 the pastors have been: 1866, W. L. Jones; 1867, J. W. Deshong; 1868-70, Thomas Still; 1870-72, Simon Fleigle; 1872-76, Abraham Snyder; 1876-78, S. S. Richmond; 1878-80, S. C. Stonesifer; 1880-82, J. C. Seabrook.

THE LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CHURCH edifice was built and is occupied by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations jointly. It is an elegant two-story brick structure. The original meeting-house was a log building built about the year 1766. At this writing neither denomination has a resident pastor, and its old records are therefore inaccessible.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH have an organization here, of which the Rev. E. Potts was the first pastor, in 1873, but further facts we have not been able to secure.

THE LINGLESTOWN CEMETERY, tastefully laid out and beautifully ornamented, located south of the town, in which is erected a monument twenty-five feet high to the memory of the heroic dead who died during the late civil war of 1861-65. The base is granite from the Gettysburg battle-field, the other parts marble. Its design is artistic and the execution faultless. It was erected in 1863 by the loyal citizens, through the energy of Dr. W. C. Smith.

SHOOP'S CHURCH (LUTHERAN AND REFORMED).—As early as 1771 there was a sufficient settlement of Germans in what is now Lower Paxtang township to invite the attention of traveling missionaries of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches. Among the early baptisms performed by the Lutheran missionary preachers we find that the first was that of Johannes Schupp (Shoop), son of Christopher and Rosina Shoop, born May 5, 1771, and baptized June 5, 1771, following which occur baptisms in the same family for several successive years. In 1783 the Lutheran members of the Reformed Church organized two separate congregations and built a log meeting-house to be jointly used by them for worship. This house was at first called "Beckstein," but shortly afterwards changed to "Schupp's Kirche," in honor of Johannes Schupp (now called Shoop), one of the earliest and most prominent settlers in this section. The first four baptisms after the organization of this church were:

1. Jonas, son of Johannes Heinrich Seiler and his wife Veronica; born May 10, 1780; baptized June 14, 1783.
2. Jacob, son of John Adam and Mary Level; born May 1, 1783; baptized June 18, 1783.
3. Christopher, son of Philip and Anna Barbara Partheimer; born June, 1783; baptized June 29, 1783.
4. Johan Adam, son of Frederick and Catharina Schweitzer; baptized June 29, 1783.

Among the earliest marriages were those of Philip Frederick Shoop to Elizabeth Nass, and Carl Welker to Catharina Nass, both on May 4, 1784.

We find that Rev. Philip Gloninger, pastor of the Reformed Church in Harrisburg, preached at Shoop's Church during his pastorate, July 17, 1808, to June 26, 1814. His successors, Rev. Frederick Rahauer, Rev. John Winebrenner, Rev. Alfred Helfenstein, Jr., and Rev. Daniel Zacharias, also ministered stately there. The congregation was a part of the Harrisburg charge during the pastorates of these ministers, and most likely for years previous.

For more than twenty years after the pastorate of Rev. Zacharias the Rev. David Bossler served the Reformed congregation at Shoop's Church, during which time he resided in Harrisburg.

For a number of years subsequently the Reformed congregations at Hummelstown, Shoop's, Wenrich's, and Union Deposit were served by one pastor, who resided at Hummelstown.

At present (1883) Hummelstown, Wenrich's, and Union Deposit Reformed Churches constitute the Hummelstown charge, and Shoop's Church and Shell's Church constitute the Hanover charge, supplied at present by Rev. A. S. Stauffer, pastor of the Hummelstown charge.

SUSQUEHANNA TOWNSHIP.

AN order was issued by the Court of Quarter Sessions on the 30th of January, 1815, returnable on the 1st of April succeeding, to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of inhabitants of Lower Paxtang township asking for a division of said township. The commissioners reported in favor of a division, and that they had run the dividing line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at the top of the first bench of the mountain, north of the plantation of Andrew Stephens, at a hickory-tree; thence south seventeen degrees east eighteen hundred and fifty-six perches to the intersection of the northern line of Swatara township near the head of Joshua Elder's mill-dam; in the course of which division line we passed about fifty perches west of John Beck's, about twenty perches east of Andrew Stephens's, close to the west end of Miller's mill on Paxtang Creek, about fifty yards west of George Hain's, about half-way between Shupp's and Parthemer's; thence about fifty yards east of Daniel Ferree's; thence about fifty perches west of Martin Mayer's; thence west of Christian Eby's about forty yards; thence east of John Carson's about twenty perches to the intersection of Swatara line about sixty perches farther on."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 1st of May, 1815, and it was ordered that the western division be called Susquehanna township. For a subsequent alteration of the south lines of this township, see Swatara township,—the mill-dam there called Kimbortz is the same which is called Elder's above. (See Road Docket, 1809-15, page 431.) The township of Susquehanna was and yet is bounded in part by the city of Harrisburg, the limits of which were extended to the northwest by the act of 16th April, 1838. In August, 1847, the court appointed commissioners to ascertain the new line of this township, dividing it from the then borough of Harrisburg, who reported the following, to wit:

"Beginning at a point at the river Susquehanna near the house of George Hammond; thence a straight line north sixty-four degrees east to a post at the Paxtang Creek near a willow-tree two hundred and fifty-nine perches."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 24th January, 1848. By the act of 1860, incorporating the city of Harrisburg, the boundaries of Susquehanna were further trenched upon. The township as now constituted is bounded on the north by Middle Paxtang township, east by Lower Paxtang township, south by Swatara township and the line of the city of Harrisburg, and on the west by the Susquehanna River to the western line of the county. It is named for the river. The lower portion of the township was included in the manor of Paxtang, to which reference has been made in the history of Harrisburg. The township comprises some of the richest farming lands in the county, especially that portion fronting the river.

ESTHERTON.—This place, known to the present generation as Coxestown, was laid out during the French and Indian war by Dr. John Cox, Jr., of Philadelphia, and named by him for his wife Esther. In point of time it was probably the second town laid out within the limits of the county of Dauphin, Middletown preceding it one or two years. The first notice we have of Estherton is on the 2d of October, 1767, when Dr. John Cox, Jr., and his wife Esther, of Philadelphia, by deed did grant and confirm to "The Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts" a lot of ground situate in the "New Town" on the east side of the Susquehanna, lately laid out by the said John Cox, and called Estherton, bounded by Third Street to the westward, by lot No. 65 to the northward, by a sixteen and one-half feet wide alley to the eastward, by lot No. 79 to the southward, in breadth north and south sixty-six feet and two hundred feet long, "for a site for a church and burial-ground for a religious society in communion with the Established Church of England for ever." During the Sullivan campaign of 1779 Estherton was an important point, being the depot of supplies for that army, from whence they were conveyed in bateaux built at Middletown up the Susquehanna. Maj. Cornelius Cox, deputy commissary of purchases during the Revolution, who resided at Estherton, was a son of the original proprietor, and it was under his management that the supplies were furnished to Sullivan's army, aiding in a great measure the successful accomplishment of that expedition. The village probably contained more houses fifty or a hundred years ago than it does to-day. There is nothing at present to aid its growth or prosperity. It contains a Methodist Episcopal Church connected with the Dauphin Circuit.

RESIDENCE OF W. T. MILDRED, SUSQUEHANNA TOWNSHIP, DAUPHIN CO., PA.

ROCKVILLE is situated five miles from Harrisburg, on the Susquehanna River. It was first settled by a Mr. Roberts in 1774. The town was laid out by Mrs. Matilda Cox in 1834, to which additions were made by Miss McAllister in 1838. It was first called Brushy Rock, afterwards changed to Rockville. The post-office is called Susquehanna. The Pennsylvania Railroad bridge at this point is one of the finest structures in the State. It has eighteen piers and is one mile long. The locality is a beautiful one for a summer resort. It has two churches, the Methodist Episcopal, connected with the Dauphin Circuit, and a United Brethren. The village lies at the foot of the First Mountain between the canal and the Susquehanna River. In the days of river lumbering it was an important point, the landing being better here than at any other point on the lower Susquehanna.

PROGRESS is a growing rural village, situated in the southeast part of the township, and two miles east of Harrisburg. It is a post-town on the Harrisburg and Jonestown road. There is one church, belonging to the Church of God (Bethel).

DERRY TOWNSHIP.

In the record of the Court of Quarter Sessions of the County of Lancaster, the 1st of August, A.D. 1729, we find the following boundary of the township of Derry, "as settled and agreed upon by the magistrates and inhabitants of the said county, on the 9th day of June, 1729, and confirmed by the court.

"The township of Derry, beginning at the mouth of Conewago, thence up Susquehanna to the mouth of the Suataaro, thence up Suataaro to the mouth of Quetopohello, thence south on a direct line to Conewago, and down the same to the place of beginning."

The eastern boundary of this township as originally adopted, seems to be involved in some uncertainty. To pursue the letter of the foregoing order, to run south on a direct line from the mouth of the Quitopahilla Creek to Conewago Creek, would strike the latter something like seven miles lower down than the point which, from everything which can now be discovered, seems to have been originally adopted as the southeast corner of Derry township,—that, instead of running the eastern line of the township south on a direct line, as the record calls for, the Quitopahilla Creek, Killinger's Run, and a line southeast from the head of that run to strike the Conewago Creek, seems most probable, if not entirely certain. This is inferred from the following facts: First, All the territory which lay between the Susquehanna River and eastern boundary of Lebanon township, and between the Conewago Creek and the mountain, was at the same time divided into three townships, viz., Peshtank, Derry, and Lebanon. To adhere to a line directly south from the mouth of the Quitopahilla would have left the territory of Derry township very limited as compared with that of the other two townships. By adopting the Quitopahilla, etc., as the eastern boundary of Derry, that township was still less than either of the other two, but of course bore a better proportion to them. Second, In the year 1768 the inhabitants of Derry township applied to the court for a division of the township, whereupon, at the February sessions that year, "the court, taking into consideration a petition preferred to them by the inhabitants of Derry township, setting forth that the bounds of the said township were very extensive and large, and the inhabitants thereof labored under several inconveniences by reason thereof, and praying the said court to divide the said township into two parts, according to a boundary line agreed upon by the said inhabitants, to wit:

"Along a certain road leading from Conewago Creek, by the Widow Hall's, thence to Felix Landis, Sr., at Swatara Creek, which said road is to fall into the east part of the said township, and that the said part be known by the name of Londonderry, and that the west part of said township retain the name of Derry. It is considered and ordered by the court that the said township be divided agreeable to the prayer of said petition, and that the said part to the east be known by the name of Londonderry, and the west end be known by the name of Derry, which said division line is hereby confirmed to be and remain firm and stable forever, and as such to be entered of record."

Now, if in the year 1768 a line directly south from the mouth of the Quitopahilla to the Conewago Creek was considered as the eastern boundary of Derry township, a division of it by the road before mentioned would have been most objectionable, as it would have left Londonderry township but a mere slip of territory, for some distance not a mile wide. And lastly, if the Quitopahilla Creek, etc., was not considered in 1768 as the originally-adopted eastern boundary of Derry township, how or when was the township of Londonderry brought up to that line? There is no record or authority found, creating the township of Londonderry other than by the division of Derry in 1768, before mentioned, nor any afterwards extending the limits of the former eastward, and yet it is certain that Londonderry extended eastward to the Quitopahilla and Killinger's Run line in 1799, when on the occasion of a division of Lebanon township, Londonderry was called for on that line, as may be seen on reference to Annville township. Upon these grounds the conclusion that the Quitopahilla Creek, Killinger's Run, and a line southeast from the head of that run to the Conewago Creek, was the originally-adopted eastern boundary of Derry township, seems to be warranted; notwithstanding it must be admitted that that line does not appear to be in strict accordance with the foregoing record.

While upon this subject, and to give our readers a better understanding of the subsequent division of Derry township, we give the explanation of the late Herman Alricks, who was, in his day, the best-informed lawyer on land titles at the Dauphin County bar: In the year 1815, when Thomas Smith projected his map of Dauphin and Lebanon Counties, which we have had reproduced from the original for this work, "what is now familiarly known as Derry Church was in Londonderry township. The grant of the lands was made by the Penns 'to the congregation of Derry,' but on the 28th March, 1787, an act of the Legislature was passed 'to incorporate the Presbyterian Church in the Township of Londonderry,' as the land, at that time, was in Londonderry (Bioren's Laws, iii. p. 201), and yet is now and was originally in Derry township.

"By an act of the General Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, the county of Lancaster was erected on the 10th of May, A.D. 1729, and contained all the territory now included in Lancaster, Dauphin, Lebanon, and a part of Berks County, etc. (Smith's Laws, i. p. 176).

"The Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster, at August term, 1729, confirmed the report of the magistrates and inhabitants of said county fixing the boundaries of the several townships in said county, and we find that Derry township was bounded by Conewago Creek, the Susquehanna River, the Swatara Creek, and 'thence up to the mouth of the Quitopahilla, and thence south in a direct line to Conewago' Creek, embracing within its limits all the territory south and east of the Swatara Creek in Dauphin County, and a part of Lebanon County.

"The Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster County at their February session, 1768, confirmed a report of viewers dividing the township of Derry 'by a line running directly south from the mouth of Quitopahilla to the Conewago Creek, along a certain road' leading from the Conewago Creek to the Swatara Creek, after which proceeding all the territory east of what is known as the old road to Elizabethtown was called Londonderry township, and all south and west of that road retained the name of Derry.

"The Legislature afterwards, by an act of the 4th of March, 1785, erected a part of Lancaster County into a separate county, called Dauphin (Smith, ii. p. 285), and on the 16th of February, 1813, the Legislature constructed Lebanon County out of the counties of Dauphin, Lancaster, and Berks. A considerable portion of the township of Londonderry, as it then existed, was within the bounds of Lebanon County.

"As the country became more densely settled, the inhabitants of Derry and Londonderry townships complained that those townships made inconvenient election districts, and, on the petition of a number of citizens, the Court of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County, at December term, 1816, appointed Thomas Smith and two other persons as viewers, to make a survey and plot of the townships of Derry and Londonderry, and report the most proper place for a division line between said townships. (Sessions Docket, p. 81.)

"The viewers agreed in their report, that what is now known as the division line between said townships was the most convenient and proper place for the said line (Sessions Docket, p. 99); but on the 8th of May, 1817, the report was set aside, and no further action had on the premises until the 15th of April, 1825, when, on the petition of a number of the inhabitants of said townships, the court appointed John Roberts, Esq., of Harrisburg, and two other persons, as viewers, to resurvey and mark a division line between the said townships. (Sessions Docket, p. 10.) The reviewers made their report to November Sessions, 1825, and the report was, 21st January, 1826, confirmed absolutely, and the court denominated the northern section Derry and the southern section Londonderry. (Sessions Docket, p. 13.) The line thus adopted and marked by Col. John Roberts has ever since remained the division line between the townships of Derry and Londonderry, except as since modified by the erection of the township of Conewago; therefore Derry Church, as it is called, has ever since the year 1825 been in Derry township."

The following were the township officers from the year 1759 to 1785, when the county of Dauphin was erected. It will be seen that after the separation of Londonderry, in 1769, the officers were from what is now Londonderry, while the officers of the latter township, which are given under the head of Londonderry, were from now Derry township. The reference to the reformation of the townships explains this matter:

DERRY TOWNSHIP, 1826.

Derry township as now constituted is bounded on the north and west by the Swatara Creek, which separates it from the townships of Lower Swatara, Swatara, South Hanover, and East Hanover, on the east by the Lebanon County line, and on the south by the townships of Conewago and Londonderry. It is one of the richest townships in the county. The following is the only complete list of supervisors we have been able to obtain of any of the townships :

The fords of the Swatara were more or less noted in the history of this section.

Dixon's Ford was in the bend of the Swatara, not far from the Lebanon County line. It is now Lau-dermilch's Ford.

Hamilton's, or Derry Church, is between Manadaville and Union Deposit.

Logan's is farther down the Swatara than the foregoing.

Col. Rogers', now McElhenny's, is at Manadaville. Earnest's and Sherer's Ford or Ferry was located for many years at the Swatara, one mile due west of Hummelstown, on the Reading pike. Before the year 1816 the Swatara could be forded easily at the point designated during the summer months, but ferry flats were used in stages of high water. When the fourteen-foot dam was erected across the Swatara, about a mile farther down the stream (at Nissley's and Brehm's mill), the back-water necessitated the building of a bridge at Sherer's and Earnest's Ferry. John Earnest, Sr., who lived on the east bank of the river, and Samuel Sherer, who resided on the west bank, built the first bridge, of two spans, across this ferry, owning it and collecting tolls jointly. Mr. Sherer died in 1821, and the interest in the bridge fell to his son, Joseph Sherer. By the breaking away of the big dam above the Union Water-works, located five miles north of Lebanon, in 1851, the bridges were swept from their piers from that point all along the Swatara (save the one at Laudermilch's Ferry) to its mouth at Middletown. The bridge at Hummelstown was rebuilt in less than a year after its destruction by the original owners. Joseph Sherer died March, 1824, and his interest fell to his wife, who disposed of it to Mr. Heflefinger prior to her removal to the West in 1838. John Earnest, Sr., also dead, his widow held the half-interest until the homestead was sold to Samuel Klopp. Mr. Klopp afterwards purchased Mr. Heflefinger's interest, and held the entire control of the bridge until he disposed of it to the commissioners of Dauphin County in 1855, since which time it has been known as a "free bridge." The Swatara River at this point is from twelve to fourteen feet in depth the best portion of the year. The first bridge was built about the year 1818. The bridge built twenty-five or thirty years later at Hammaker's Mill Ferry by the county was always a free bridge. The old Red Bridge, leading from Centre Square through Water Street, Hummelstown, to the Hanover townships, was built by a stock company, but was also purchased by the county twenty-five years or more ago, and is free for travelers. Below Landis' Dam, one-eighth of a mile north of Hummelstown, and visible from the railroad depot, is another ferry or fording-place, which is still used by the farmers of Lower Paxtang and West Hanover, between their homes, the mill, and the railroad depot.

DERRY VILLAGE is situated thirteen and a half miles east of Harrisburg, and is named for Old Derry Church. It is a post-town, located in the midst of a beautiful and productive farming region. The United Brethren have a church here, a brick structure, rebuilt in 1881, of which Rev. David Longnecker is the pastor. One mile west of Derry is SWATARA STATION, and, like the former, situated on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. Mechanicsburg lies east of Derry, and is really an extension of Palmyra, Lebanon Co. Spring Creek was the name formerly given to the western part of the village of Derry, but it is now generally known by the latter name.

A Dunkard Meeting-house is located about half a mile south of Derry Station. It is a neat brick building, erected nearly half a century ago.

South of Hummelstown about two miles is the Hill Church of the Evangelical Lutheran congregation. It was the oldest German church in the township, the old log church having been built in the year 1756. It was rebuilt in 1875. The ministers are supplied by the Hummelstown charge. There are several other churches in the township, concerning which we endeavored to secure information, but failed to receive it.

MEMORIAL UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.—This beautiful church, one and a half miles south of Hummelstown, was erected by Edward Stover as a memorial to his only son and child, and was dedicated on Aug. 4,

1872. The dedicatory services were conducted by Ex-Bishop Erb, Revs. J. F. Smith, Lewis Peters, Ezekiel Light, and G. W. Miles Rigor (presiding elder). The building is thirty by forty feet, and is neatly furnished. A cemetery adjoins the church, in which a monument twenty-two feet in height bears the following inscription in raised letters: "At Rest, Edward Stover, died July 31, 1870, aged 21 years, 10 months, and 3 days."

OLD DERRY CHURCH.

It is almost certainly established that what is known as Derry Presbyterian Church, in Dauphin County, held its first services near the head of a confluent of Spring Creek, in that portion of Chester County from which Lancaster was taken, and subsequently Dauphin, about one and a half miles from the site upon which its first church building (that of 1729) was erected. This building was nearly square, twenty-three by twenty-five feet, of logs and clapboards. The first services we have account of were held at the close of the month of April, in 1724. The small congregation must have been gathered from all the frontier within a radius of ten miles, and without exception was of the Scotch-Irish immigration. Its canopy was the primeval forest. It was addressed by the Revs. George Gillespie, David Evans, and Robert

Cross. Some names of those present have been preserved: Rowland Chambers, Thomas and William Clark, James Galbraith, Patrick and Robert Campbell, John Mitchell, William McBey, James Quigley, William Hay, Robert Moody, Malcolm Kar (Kerr), Thomas and Hugh Black, James Harris, William McCord, Morgan Jones, David McClure, James MacFarlane, Alexander Hutchinson, John and Benjamin Boyd, James Hamilton, John McCosh and sister. These men were all engaged making themselves homes of the frontier, "over Conoy" and along the Susquehanna, much to the distraction of mind of those who managed land affairs for the Penn family. Every obstruction was thrown in their way to prevent permanent location. However, they were not to be deterred by the frowns of the governing powers at Philadelphia, but took what land they needed; as they felt settled, sought religious consolation from ministers of the Presbyterian faith, erected a church, and complied with the Provincial laws, in an uneasy, antagonistic fashion, "on the barrens of Derry." No one can speak with entire certainty of its exact location. A public road now occupies a part of the first graveyard used by the early settlers, on a farm owned by Mr. Samuel Wingert, on a commanding elevation, and by tradition, it is the place where the first service was held and the original church built. The confused relics of a building supposed to have when it was thoroughly repaired at a cost of five hundred dollars. It stood without further repair until May, 1883, when it came to be so much decayed that it was thought dangerous. It was taken down and a new one of stone is at present in course of construction of nearly the same dimensions. The early records of the congregation seem to be lost; most likely have been carried "West" in the luggage of the very great migrations that have so frequently almost depopulated this early settlement. We know, however, the following interesting particulars: The Rev. Adam Boyd "preached to the westward of Octorara and Donegal, over Conoy," in 1723. The Rev. James Anderson preached in Donegal in 1724, and became pastor there in 1726, giving one-fifth of his time "over Conewago," the present Derry. The Rev. William Bertram was called in 1732 "to Derry," upon the so-been the church were there sixty years ago. Therefore it is just possible that a small church was there, until one was erected on the present site, in 1732, the year the land-office was opened. One thing is known, that the remains of Patrick Campbell, who died in 1735, were removed from the abandoned burial-place at Wingert's to the present cemetery, and is the oldest date found there. Be all this as it may, it is certain that a congregation was formally gathered in 1730, and soon afterwards worshiped at the present Derry, now an historically prominent feature in early frontier occupation, and their descendants have held divine service there ever since.

So rapidly did the settlement increase that the first house was in a few years found to be too small. It underwent some enlargement, when in 1769 a new church of logs, thirty-eight by thirty-nine feet, was erected. It was used by the congregation up to 1821, licitation of Rowland Chambers, William Wilson, John Sloan, John Wilson, Hugh Black, Robert Campbell, James Quigley, William McCord. The congregation paid him sixty pounds a year in hemp, linen, corn, yarn, and cloth, and gave him the use of a farm. Mr. Bertram served Derry until his death, which occurred on the 2d of May, 1746.

In 1742 the exact record is missing; Rev. John Elder, then in charge of the Paxtang congregation, after some debate about salary and "the time" to be given to Derry, was installed pastor. The congregation was then a large one, perhaps the largest in the Presbytery, but was not increasing. Soon after the peace of 1763 it began to diminish; the tendency to go West was not to be resisted among these sons of the frontier, and its effect upon the church was especially disastrous. Mr. Elder was a most efficient shepherd of his extensive charges, and held this pastorate with the presidency of the board of trustees from 1742 to April, 1791, when he was succeeded in the latter by Col. Robert Clark. Mr. Elder died July, 1792.

Rev. Nathaniel R. Snowden was called March, 1793. He was pastor of Derry, Paxtang, and Harrisburg. In 1795 he resigned. Mr. Snowden died in 1850.

Rev. Joshua Williams was called August, 1798, with a salary of one hundred and eighty pounds in cash. In June, 1802, Mr. Williams resigned.

Up to this time it was the custom to elect the pastor president of the corporation consisting of thirteen trustees. After Mr. Williams' pastorate this ceased and laymen were chosen.

An inscription in the graveyard has the following: "In memory of James Adair, preacher of the Gospel, who departed this life September 20, 1803, aged 32 years." Mr. Adair came to Derry as a "supply" during the vacancy in the pastorate, preaching occasionally from Sept. 20, 1802, until April 7, 1803, when this appears on the books of the congregation: "Paid Reverend James Snodgrass for moderating a call for Mr. Adair, £1.10." He does not appear to have accepted this call. He, however, preached seven Sundays as a supply, when this appears: "By cash paid to Mr. Snodgrass for a funeral sermon at Mr. James Adair's Burial, £1.10.0."

June, 1805, the congregation came together to call a pastor; fifteen voted for Rev. James Snodgrass, and twenty-six for others. No choice was made. In September another meeting was held. Rev. John Hutchinson was called,—twenty-one for, nineteen against. Mr. Hutchinson declined the call. September, 1806, all the members of the congregation united in a call to Rev. James R. Sharon, who had previously been settled at Paxtang. He continued pastor of both congregations to the time of his death, in 1843. May 31, 1843, the following is recorded: "By cash paid Mrs. Sharon, a donation from Derry congregation for the purpose of erecting a tombstone over the remains of the Rev. J. R. Sharon, our late pastor, $100." Then, April 2, 1844, this entry: "By cash paid Mrs. Sharon, being a donation granted by the congregation to Mrs. Sharon, which will appear by reference to the minutes as entered April 24, 1843, $100."

Rev. J. M. Boggs was called March 9, 1844, until April 1, 1847, when a church dispute between Derry and her daughter "over Swatara, on lands of Dr. William Simonton," caused so much feeling that Mr. Boggs was refused compensation, and Presbytery dissolved his relation to Derry June 12, 1849.

Rev. Andrew D. Mitchell was chosen pastor by a unanimous vote Aug. 11, 1849, the congregation agreeing to pay him two hundred dollars a year for one-fourth of his time. He served as pastor until Aug. 19, 1874, the date of his last receipt for salary. The minutes are missing from 1857 to 1883. Mr. Mitchell died in 1882, at Middletown, Dauphin Co.

Thus this congregation has had in one hundred and fifty-four years the following pastors: Mr. Bertram, four years; Mr. Elder, fifty years; Mr. Snowden, two years; Mr. Williams, four years; Mr. Sharon, thirty-seven years; Mr. Boggs, five years; Mr. Mitchell, twenty-five years; vacancies, seventeen years.

Under the charter of March 28, 1787, an organization took place, with Rev. John Elder as president; Robert McCallen, treasurer; Thomas Laird, Jr., secretary; John Rodgers, William Laird, and Robert Clark, trustees. There is no earlier record than this, except a note "that William Laird, James Wilson, Jr., and Thomas McCallen were appointed to settle accounts with former trustees, John Rodgers, Robert Clark, and James Wilson, Sr.," who appears to have been the security for the treasurer of the previous organization.

In 1842 the graveyard was carefully and substantially inclosed, memorials of sorrow or affection to departed friends "set up and cleaned," iron gates provided, and every mark of respect paid to the remains of the fathers and mothers of a noed race. The wall and yard are to-day in excellent order. The cost to the congregation was six hundred and seventy-eight dollars, a very liberal expenditure for a congregation whose income was not five hundred dollars a year.

Aug. 1, 1845, it was agreed that a chapel "for the members beyond the Swatara Creek" should be erected on "land of Dr. William Simonton, on the line of Dr. Simonton and John Berst, facing the road from Swatara to Corbett's Mill," to be weatherboarded and plastered. "Capt. John B. Moorhead and Dr. William Simonton are to superintend, and Mr. Boggs is to give one-sixth of his time" after the building is ready. The chapel was soon finished, and cost four hundred and twenty-five dollars and twenty-nine cents. It was sold about 1860 for three hundred and ten dollars. As has been stated, this "daughter of Derry" was the cause of many disputes before the necessity of the mother church required it to be disposed of. It was not until about 1800 that the exact dimensions of the Penn gift of 1741 were determined. Since that time the glebe has dwindled to less than a dozen of acres.

HUMMELSTOWN BOROUGH.

In the year 1738 there was warranted to Valentine Gloninger one hundred and fifty acres of land on the Swatara. In 1761 this right was purchased by John Campbell, one of the earliest settlers in that region, who the year following sold to Frederick Hummel. The same year the latter laid out the tract into town lots, naming the place Fredericktown. The lots sold freely, and one of the earliest purchasers was Anthony Doebler, of Lebanon, who bought a lot on Market Street in January, 1763, within a month after the lots were for sale. That lot is described as being along "another lot taken up by Adam Hurshey." Doebler agreed to pay a yearly rent for the fee of ten shillings sterling (about two dollars and a half of our present money), "one shilling sterling of which sum was to be paid yearly forever for the use of a German Lutheran Church intended to be erected," the purchaser further binding himself to erect a substantial house eighteen by twenty feet "at least" on the premises. No time for the fulfillment of this condition is fixed. It may be here stated that it was not until after the founder's death that the name of the town was changed from Fredericktown to that which it now bears. From the assessment-list of Fredericktown, in 1771, and that of Hummelstown, in 1779, it will be seen that in the eight years supervening there was no increase in the number of inhabitants. Whether this was due to the war which was then going on, and which will account for the absence of either "freemen" or "single men," we cannot say. The absence of the name Hummel in the last list is in striking contrast with recent returns. The Hummels then resided on the adjoining farm to the town, and are included in the other portions of Derry tax-lists. In 1779 it is well known that there were a large number of gunsmiths at Hummelstown making arms for the Continental army. They perchance are also included in the Derry assessment proper.

The oldest house in town is that owned by Christian Garver, on Swatara Creek. It is a log structure, weatherboarded, and originally stood on the square, and in it lived Frederick Hummel, son of the founder of the town. Before the latter's death he built another house on the same site. The white stone house on the square (partly of logs) was erected before Harrisburg was laid out. James Clunie lived in it and kept store, the first in the place. Mr. Clunie sold the building to John Barnard, he to Abraham Landis, and he to Frederick Hummel. Rahm & Baum kept store, in 1790, on Main Street in the house now owned by James Hays. Among the early physicians was Dr. Duncan King, who died in 1826. Frederick Hummel kept hotel on the northwest corner of the square, and Michael Rahm kept another at same time where Richard Hummel now lives, both about 1792. Afterwards John Fox had an inn (within the town limits) on the Harrisburg, Ephrata, and Downingtown road. The first schoolmaster of whom any recollection is preserved was David Eckstein, who was teaching here as early as 1792 in the Lutheran Church. He had served in the Revolutionary war as one of Washington's life-guards. Peter Fishburn was the first cooper in the village. In 1814, Philip Leebrick, Jacob Earnest, George Gish, and Thomas Fox kept stores here. Drs. William Henderson and Nice were physicians. Michael Spade, George Fox, Jacob Greenawalt, and Mr. Hill had taverns. Allison Piney taught school, his successors being John Phillips and David Eckstein (the latter having taught more or less since 1790). Thomas Ramsey and Daniel Seiler were blacksmiths, and Samuel Spidle and John Shadel had cabinet-shops. For a long time the town was a favorite militia training point for the old-time battalions.

On Thursday morning, Nov. 20, 1800, two shocks of earthquake were sensibly felt by the inhabitants of Hummelstown and vicinity. The first took place about fifteen minutes before five o'clock, and lasted about forty seconds. In some houses the effects were more visible than in others. The knockers on some of the doors rapped as though they were moved by hands, and in the dwelling of Philip Leebrick a set of china was shaken from a table and broken to pieces. The fright caused many of the people to rise from their beds. The second shock took place five minutes after five o'clock, and lasted about half a minute. It was not as severe as the former, but was sensibly felt in every house. In both instances a rumbling noise accompanied the trembling of the earth. Such was the fear of the people that a large number of them immediately repaired to the meeting-house, where prayers were offered for the preservation of the inhabitants.

The history, growth, and prosperity of the town is so intimately connected not only with that of the county but with its local institutions that reference to them will be found of value and interest. Hummelstown was incorporated as a borough Aug. 26, 1874, since which period the following have been the chief municipal officers:

BURGESSES.

1874-76. John Z. Grove.	1879-80. George F. Greenawalt.
1876-78. C. A. Nisley.	1880-81. Dr. J. B. Crist.
1878-79. W. R. Hendricks.	1881. Dr. H. B. Rupp.

TOWN CLERKS.

1874-81. Franklin Smith.	1881. John J. Bolton.
--------------------------	-----------------------

ZION'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This congregation was organized in 1765, and the first church edifice, a log structure, was completed May 16, 1766. The church receipts for building the meeting-house and all other purposes from 1765 to 1768 were £140 18s. 6d., and the expenditures £127 2s. 4d. The original building stood some twenty or thirty feet from the present edifice, and was destroyed by fire in December, 1817. David Eckstein was the parochial schoolmaster from 1792 to 1805, and kept school in the old log church. The present stone church was erected in 1815 and 1816 and remodeled in 1855, making it now one of the most attractive church edifices in the county. All that can be learned from the few fragments left of its early history is that Maj. Frederick Hummel was the chief member of the building committee, and that Rev. Michael Enterline served the church as pastor until 1780, and during his administration baptized seventy-one children, confirmed eighteen catechumens, and administered the communion to one hundred and forty-eight persons. The pastors have been: 1771-81, Michael Enterline; 1781-95, William Kurtz; April 15, 1804, to April 5, 1807, John Frederick Ernst; April 5, 1807, to June 23, 1811, John Paul Ferdinand Kramer; June 23, 1811, to June, 1819, John Henry Vanhof; June, 1819, to Oct. 6, 1822, Charles Rudolph Denime; Oct. 6, 1822, to Dec. 5, 1830, Peter Scheurer; Dec. 5, 1830, to Oct. 27, 1854, Henry G. Stecher; Oct. 27, 1854, to Nov. 1, 1856, George Haines; Nov. 1, 1856, to Feb. 1, 1857, John F. Probst; 1857-61, A. S. Link; 1861-67, Eli Huber; 1867-73, P. Rizer; July 1, 1873, to 1877, P. S. Mack; July 1, 1877, J. H. Leeser, the present incumbent.

From 1795 to 1804 the congregation had no minister.

REFORMED CHURCH.—As heretofore stated, when the town was laid out in 1762 by Frederick Hummel, he set apart a lot to the Reformed congregation, on which its church is now erected. The first church edifice was a log structure, built by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations jointly, and which was burned in December, 1817. Before 1808 there are no records to show who the pastors or church officials were. Rev. Philip Gloninger, of Harrisburg, served the congregation from 1808 to 1824. Under his pastoral care the elders were Peter Heffelfinger, Sr., and Henry Seig; Deacons, Jacob Duey, Sr., and Samuel Brightbill. His successor was Rev. Joseph La Ross, who married here Miss Elizabeth Earnest, and after several years' faithful ministry removed to Bloomsburg, Columbia Co. He was followed by Rev. Samuel Seibert, who continued some years, and resigned in favor of Rev. Daniel Bossler, who preached for some seventeen years every four weeks in German. He was succeeded in 1853 by Rev. D. G. Heisler, who continued until 1856. The religious services up to 1853 were conducted in the German language only, but after that, under Rev. Mr. Heisler, were alternately in English and German. Up to 1855 the congregation worshiped in the Lutheran Church, first in the log edifice burned in 1817, and afterwards in the stone building erected in 1815-16. In 1855, the Lutherans having decided to remodel their church edifice, the Reformed congregation was compelled to vacate, and removed temporarily to what was then known as the Middle school-house. On the 8th of January, 1855, it resolved to erect a church edifice, the corner-stone of which was laid in the following May by Rev. Mr. Leinbach, Rev. Messrs. Gans, Kremer, and Huster participating in the ceremonies. The dedication occurred Dec. 23, 24, 25, 1855, the officiating ministers being Revs. H. Harbaugh, J. W. Nevin, Daniel Bossler, and others. The original cost of the church was five thousand two hundred and twenty-one dollars. Rev. D. G. Heisler continued until 1857. The next pastor, Rev. M. A. Smith, came in December, 1857, and continued until 1866. At this time the charge consisted of congregations known as Shoop's, Wenrich's, Union Deposit, and Hummelstown, with preaching here every two weeks.

The next pastor, Rev. Samuel Kuhn, came in the spring of 1847, and continued until 1877, when he resigned. No pastor for some time, preaching being supplied by the students of Franklin College. During this year the church was made a separate charge, and in May, 1877, Rev. A. R. Bartholomew was installed pastor, who remained until the fall of 1878, when he accepted a call to the Jonestown Church, in Lebanon County. The congregation was then supplied with preaching every two weeks by Rev. J. H. Pennypacker, of Elizabethtown charge, until Aug. 1, 1879. In 1882, Rev. A. S. Stauffer took charge.

UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.—This denomination began to have preaching at Hummelstown as early as 1840, the services being held at the residences of different members. In 1842 a congregation was formed, Conrad Smith (now deceased) being one of the first and leading members. In 1843 a stone church edifice was erected on the site of the present one, which was built in 1857, the first not being large enough to accommodate the increased membership. Since 1865 the pastors have been: 1865, Rev. Miller (who died); 1865-67, J. M. Kephart; 1867-69, D. O. Farrell; 1869, Israel Carpenter; 1869-71, Rev. Stehrwalt; 1871-73, John F. Smith; 1873-74, Jacob F. Smith; 1874-77, C. C. Meily; 1877-79, G. A. Loose; 1879-81, E. Light; 1881-82, Thomas Garland.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Hummelstown Station was formed out of Dauphin Circuit in 1857. Since then the pastors have been: 1857, William B. Gregg; 1858, C. L. Stineman; 1859, Gideon J. Barr; 1860, John C. Gregg; 1861-63, Jacob Slichter; 1863, J. O. Sypherd; 1864-66, M. Barnhill; 1866-69, F. M. Brady; 1869-72, L. Hubbs; 1872, E. Potts; 1873-76, J. M. Gable; 1876-79, Richard Kaines; 1879, J. T. Gray; 1880-82, Jonathan Dungan.

In 1852 the congregation was organized as the Dauphin and Hummelstown Mission. The church edifice was built in 1852 and 1853, and is a neat one-story frame structure.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—This congregation was organized in 1874, and for nearly two years services were held at the Engine Hall. The church edifice, a brick structure, was erected in 1876 on South Railroad Street. The pastors have been: 1875-77, S. P. Stonecipher; 1877-79, James McDonald; 1879-81, A. Snyder; 1881-82, F. L. Nicodemus. Mr. Nicodemus lives at Palmyra, and preaches there and at Hummelstown.

The first school-house of the town and vicinity was built on Hanover Street about 1764. The ground was donated by Frederick Hummel, the founder of the town, for school purposes. A one-story house was erected, and a school supported voluntarily by the citizens. The district composed an area of fifty square miles. The furniture consisted of desks, constructed of rough oak or pine boards, fastened to the walls around the room. Benches were made of rough logs hewn on the one side, and supported by blocks. The building was in use until 1790. It was then sold and converted into a dwelling-house. In the same year the Lutheran Church was selected for school purposes (the school being then taught by Allison Piney), and was occupied as such until it was destroyed by fire in 1819. A small house in which articles belonging to the church were kept was then used, and subsequently the school was moved from one private house to another until 1820, when a brick house on Front Street was built in a more modern style. At this period the schools were managed by a board of trustees appointed by the commissioners, and this plan was continued until the free schools were established in 1837.

The Hummelstown Weekly Press was the first newspaper established in the town, and its first number was issued July 14, 1870. It was a four-page sheet of twenty-four columns, and was published at one dollar per year. Its publisher, Mr. Kersey, was also a surveyor and engineer. Its publication was continued until March 30, 1871, when it was discontinued for want of support.

The Hummelstown Sun, a weekly paper, was established and its first number issued Dec. 1, 1871, by W. R. Hendricks and J. W. Stofer, the latter of the Middletown Journal. Mr. Stofer having the Journal to edit and publish, retired from the Sun, and Mr. Hendricks became its editor and publisher until April 1, 1875, when he purchased Mr. Stofer's interest, and has continued from that to the present time its sole editor, publisher, and proprietor. Its size was originally four pages and twenty-four columns, changed during the past year to twenty-eight columns.

THE HUMMELSTOWN BANK, a private institution, owned by individuals, was organized in 1868. George T. Hummel was president until 1875, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Abner Rutherford. John J. Nissley has been the cashier from its formation. The first board of directors was composed of George T. Hummel, Jacob Eberly, John M. Shenk, Abner Rutherford, John H. Balsbaugh, Joseph Farnsler, Dr. Jacob Shope, Christian Landis, Martin Early. The directors in 1882 were Abner Rutherford, Dr. Jacob Shope, John M. Shenk, John Balsbaugh, Joseph Hershey, Judge Isaac Mumma, John H. Balsbaugh, Joseph Louch. The teller was Levi H. Nissley.

CITIZENS' FIRE COMPANY, No. 1.—The Hummelstown Fire Company was organized Jan. 12, 1819, and remained as such until 1882, when the name was changed to Citizens' Fire Company, No. 1. In January, 1819, the company bought an old engine built in Philadelphia about forty years prior, and which it uses to this date.

NIobe FIRE COMPANY, No. 2, was organized as early as 1837, but there are no records, save a bill found showing it to have been in existence that year. Its second engine was brought here in 1850. It was reorganized first in 1865 and again in 1872, when John M. Hummel was elected president. It was incorporated July 19, 1879.

VIGILANT FIRE COMPANY, No. 3, was organized as a stock company in the fall of 1881. It bought an engine of Rumsey & Co., of Seneca Falls, N. Y.

LONDONDERRY TOWNSHIP.

At the February sessions, 1768, the court taking into consideration a petition preferred to them by the inhabitants of Derry township setting forth that the bounds of the said township were very extensive and large, and the inhabitants thereof labored under several inconveniences by reason thereof, and praying the said court to divide the said township into two parts, according to a boundary line agreed upon by the said inhabitants, to wit:

"Along a certain road leading from Conewago creek, by the widow Hall's; thence to Felix Landis, senior, at Swatara creek, which said road is to fall into the east part of the said township, and that the said part be known by the name of Londonderry, and that the west part of said township retain the name of Derry. It is considered and ordered by the court that the said township be divided agreeable to the prayer of said petition; and that the said part to the east be known by the name of Londonderry, and the west end be known by the name of Derry, which said division line is hereby confirmed to be and remain firm and stable forever, and as such to be entered of record."

The reasons for adopting the Quitpahilla Creek, etc., as the eastern boundary are stated under the head of Derry township, and need not be repeated here.

As previously stated, between the year 1813, when the erection of Lebanon County cut off a large portion of Londonderry township, and the year 1825, some proceedings were had in the Quarter Sessions to remodel the townships of Derry and Londonderry, none of which, however, seemed to have received the final sanction of the court. At November term, 1825, the court appointed three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of a division, who made report in favor of a division by a line "Beginning at a black-oak-tree on the eastern bank of the Swatara Creek, at the mouth of Strickler's Run; thence a due east course seven miles and one hundred and twenty perches to the Lebanon County line, at the farm of Jacob Longnecker." The court confirmed this report on the 21st of January, 1826, and gave to the northern section the name of Derry, and to the southern division the name of Londonderry. (See Road Docket A, page 13.) Since that period the township has been limited in its dimensions by the erection of the township of Conewago. The township is bounded on the east by Conewago township; on the south by Conewago Creek, which separates it from Lancaster County; on the west by the Susquehanna River and the Swatara Creek, which separates it from Lower Swatara township; and on the north by Derry township. It covers an extensive area, but there are few villages of any importance,—Port Royal, noticed in the history of Middletown, being the most prominent.

About 1811 or 1812, Gainsburg, and also called Franklin, was laid out by Conrad Grim, John Fulweiler, and John C. Kramer. It was a venture of the speculative era in our State history, when there was a mania for building turnpikes and erecting towns every four or five miles along their route, the farmers selling their broad acres and investing their hard cash in town lots. This was well calculated to overdo the town business and hurry on a financial crash. Gainsburg did not survive its fledgeling, the only houses now in the locality having been erected by the present generation.

THE CONEWAGO PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH was located a little east of Gainsburg. It was one of the earliest churches of this Scotch-Irish neighborhood. A log building was erected prior to 1741, for in that year the Rev. Samuel Black was their regular minister. The land is contiguous or rather inclosed by a tract of two hundred and two and five-eighths acres, which James Clark held by a warrant from the land-office dated Aug. 1, 1743. Samuel Clark conveyed it by an indenture Feb. 23, 1775, to William Braden, of Derry township. The land was afterwards patented to Robert Spear by patent deed Nov. 8, 1785, and was called "Spear's Choice," and called for 202½ acres and the usual allowance. The patent was enrolled in rolls-office, in Patent Book No. 4, page 99, etc. The following memorandum, accompanying a draft, will explain itself;

"Resurveyed for Robert Spear, August 18, 1785, the above tract of land, containing two hundred and two acres and five-eighths and allowances, situate in Derry township, Dauphin County, late Lancaster, by warrant granted to James Clark 28th of July, 1743.

"Signed BERTHAM GALBRAITH.

"N.B. The above square piece of nineteen by twenty perches is a Presbyterian meeting-house and burying-grounds.

"To JOHN LUKENS, S. G.

"Returned into the Land-Office the third November, 1785, for John Lukens, Esq., S. G.
EDWARD LYNCH."

Robert Spear assigned his patent to Robert Coleman; Sept. 21, 1784, William Braden conveyed it to Robert Spear; and John Spear, Nov. 5, 1804, transferred it to Robert Coleman, the assignee of Robert Spear of the patent. Robert Coleman sold it, June 15, 1818, to Robert Dempsey, whose administrator, Jacob Redsecker, on April 13, 1831, conveyed it to John Conrad. The latter's administrator, Henry Fisher, sold it, June 16, 1841, to John Fisher, who, March 11, 1842, conveyed it to George Hess. John B. Coleman, Feb. 24, 1836, conveyed his interest in it to Samuel Hoffer, who in turn transferred to George Hess April 8, 1842, making the latter the owner in fee. George Hess conveyed it, April 4, 1868, to Abraham Rutt, who in April, 1875, sold to John Olwine, the present owner. So, this old church lot is in the midst of a farm, repeatedly sold and transferred as land. The title, however, to the old graveyard is by law vested in the Presbytery of Carlisle, who should take charge of it and have it properly inclosed. What has been supposed to have been a church foundation is a dilapidated wall, inclosing the burial-place of some important families. There is no inscriptive stone to tell what it really was. It is about ten by twelve feet. Clearly there is no mark of a church at this spot. What is very remarkable, there is not a tombstone, or part of one, with any inscription in the mass of fragments of such memorials which surround the family inclosure spoken of. The stones are of the red sandstone of the neighboring hills,—many of them free from all evidence of manual adornment,—weatherbeaten as well as rough.

ISLANDS IN THE SUSQUEHANNA.—Several very important islands in the Susquehanna are included in Londonderry township. In the days when the shad fisheries of the Susquehanna were productive and valuable, these islands were considered the choicest fishing-rights on the river. The principal ones are Shelly's, nearest the York County shore; Elliott's, east of it; and Hill Island north, nearly opposite the mouth of the Swatara Creek. Hill Island is noted for being the place whence, during the Millerite excitement of 1844, a score of firm believers assembled, expecting from thence to be translated heavenward. After enduring the severe weather of that lonely night on Hill Island, the morning dawn not bringing the expected millennium, the converts wended their way home, wiser than before.

Shelly's and the adjoining island have recently become favorite tobacco ground, the richness and peculiarity of the soil admirably adapting them for tobacco culture.

CONEWAGO TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was organized by an act of Assembly approved April 2, 1850, which enacted "that from and after the passage of this act all that part of the townships of Derry and Londonderry lying within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at the Conewago Creek, the line of the counties of Dauphin and Lancaster, at the place where Brill's Run empties into said creek; and from thence by a straight line running parallel with the line dividing the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon to a point that by running a straight line from said point at a right angle with the aforesaid parallel said straight line will intersect the said line of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon at a point not more than one-half of a mile north of the Mennonite meeting-house at or near said county line; and from thence along the line of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon to the line of the county of Lancaster; and from thence down said line to place of beginning, shall hereafter form a separate election district and township, and shall be called Conewago," etc.

The township was so named for the creek which forms its entire southern boundary. It is four and one-fourth miles in length by three and one-half miles in width, and in population one of the smallest in the county. The southern portion along the Conewago Creek is a beautiful plain, which gradually slopes from its northern margin, the granite ridge, towards the creek. It has good pasture meadows and fine farms. There are sections of the township, however, much broken by rocky elevations, but even here and there between these are often rich fields and farms. In the northwestern part are the sand-hills, which culminate in a few prominent spurs belonging to that system of which the Round Top in Londonderry is the most striking. Beautiful springs gush out of these hillsides, and as the early settlers built near running water, some of the oldest farms are in this locality.

Indian implements are frequently found,—tomahawks, axes, and arrow-heads. Two hominy-stones, capable of holding a peck, are in existence, having been preserved,—one in the possession of Cyrus G. Shenk, who has it in use at his barn; another on the adjoining farm. A curious stone of this C shape has been found. In this locality traces are to be seen of a high fence surrounding a plot of ground, erected by the Indians for entrapping deer.

Among the early settlers in the neighborhood were Christopher Shoop, John Buchs, Leonard Wallers, Rev. John Roan, Robert Carothers, and David Johnson. The tract of land which Moses Potts had surveyed to him March 29, 1755, he sold to Michael Shenk in 1770. The Hoffers came about 1800. Other families about the same period, if not earlier, were in the locality,—the Longeneckers, Risser, Grubbs, Lehman, etc. In 1799, Goss' mill, which has also connected with it a saw-mill, was erected. On the farms of John Risser and Benjamin Longenecker were distilleries about the year 1780. Risser's mill was built in 1770, and Redsecker's in 1776.

There are three churches within the township limits. The Mennonite meeting-house, near the Derry line, on the northeast, was built about 1780; the Brethren's Church in 1854, and the Union meeting-house in 1869.

The first schools were taught by the church minister under large trees during favorable weather and at such other places as opportunity afforded. In 1790 there were only five schools in that section, principally German. About 1795 an English school was organized where Henry Shenk now resides. It was taught by Stephen Templeton. The one-story log school-house, twelve by sixteen feet, in which Templeton taught comprised three rooms,—a bed-room, kitchen, and a school-room. On each side a portion of a log was left out for a row of window-panes, and it is presumed vagrants did not push up the sash for ingress to lodge, nor was the teacher troubled to close and open the shutters. Some sixty pupils were crowded in this small room. Shortly after Templeton came another school established by a Mr. McMullen. These things existed until about the year 1800, when the schools were generally kept at private houses. The names of Abraham Snyder and others of the earlier days, and those of Rev. Speck, Samuel Hoffer, Joseph Clark, and the Techtmyers of later times are intimately connected with the schools of the neighborhood. For many years school was taught in the old Mennonite meeting-house, down to the adoption of the present system of education.

The township has two villages. BACHMANSVILLE, a post-town, is situated in the northeastern part, and was named for the Bachmans, who erected the first buildings of any importance. Its population is less than a hundred. MOUNT HARRISON, or FOLTZ'S STORE, near the centre of the township, is a hamlet of some six or eight houses. It was named Mount Harrison by the Kreiters, who kept store there during the Harrison campaign of 1840. It is beautifully situated on an eminence between Middletown and Colebrook.

There are three grist-mills in the township,—Redsecker's, in the southwestern part, built in 1776; Goss', near the centre, in 1799; and Risser's, in the southeastern corner, erected in 1769. In early times they hauled all their grain to Philadelphia over poor roads, and little or no accommodation "for man or beast" by the way. The teams at night halted by some stream of water, the feeding-trough was fixed upon the wagon-tongue, and there the horses ate and slept, no matter how inclement the weather, the drivers stowing themselves snugly under the wagon-cover in the "fuhrmons bea." Four, five, and frequently six horses constituted the team.

HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

AT February sessions, 1736-37, a petition was presented to the court of Lancaster County stating that many of the inhabitants of Derry township, living on the northwest side of the Swatara Creek, labored under inconveniences by reason of the largeness of the township, and asking to be divided from the other part thereof, and that their bounds might be as follows: "To be divided on the west from Peshtank by Beaver Creek, from its mouth to the mountain; from Lebanon on the east and Derry on the south, by Swatara Creek from Beaver Creek mouth to the forks, and thence by the north branch thereof to the mountain; which was allowed by the court and ordered to be recorded, and that the said township be called Hanover." The boundaries of this township (so named for the House of Hanover) as originally laid out are all natural, and therefore cannot easily be mistaken, but there is an evident mistake in stating the petitioners to be inhabitants of Derry township, residing northwest of the Swatara Creek, and that their prayer was for a division of Derry township. A glance at the boundaries of Derry will show that there was no part of that township on the northwest side of Swatara Creek, and the division lines asked for and granted did not touch upon the territory at all. The mistake is not of any practical importance, but seems evident that the petition was from inhabitants of Peshtank, and for a division of that township. Hanover, as thus laid off, embraced parts of what was before Peshtank and Lebanon townships.

During the years 1768 to 1775 frequent efforts were made for a division of the township of Hanover, those in the east end favoring a division, those in the west end in opposition. The war of the Revolution opening, the question was not mooted until the efforts were being made for the erection of the new county of Dauphin. The matter was brought to the attention of the court at Lancaster at the February sessions, 1785, from which we take the following record:

"The court, taking into consideration the limits of the township of Hanover and great difficulties of the several officers therein in discharging their respective duties, on due consideration and advisement, do direct a division thereof by a small stream of water running through the same, which is called the West Branch of Priest's Run, and rises on the lands of Philip Rank, and from thence by the said stream or run of water until it empties itself into Swatara Creek at Michael Brown's mill; and do further denominate that division which is next to Jonestown by the name of East Hanover, and the other division thereof by the name of West Hanover."

The stream of water called Priest's Run in the foregoing record is not found by that name on Thomas Smith's map, nor is any one now living in that section of the county who knows of a stream by that name; but from the best information which has been obtained, that marked on Smith's map, and now generally known as Raccoon Creek, was the dividing line between East and West Hanover townships down to the year 1813, when Lebanon County was taken from Dauphin, the northwest line of which runs in the neighborhood of Raccoon Creek, and, indeed, the head of that creek is made one of the points of that line, and the running of that line so near the dividing line of East and West Hanover townships made it of but little practical importance where the separating line of the two townships was; it may, however, be assumed with reasonable certainty that Raccoon Creek was the line.

There is another question which it seems proper and in place here to refer to, it is as to the true boundary on the north of East and West Hanover townships. In point of what may be called practice, it seems those townships were held to extend to the Second Mountain at least from an early day. If the records are consulted it by no means is certain that the practice was in accordance with them, or that there was any authority, until a later day, for supposing those townships extended beyond the First Mountain, other than long usage. When the township of Paxtang was erected, in 1729, it extended from Swatara Creek to Kohtohtoning Hill, above Peter Allen's; where Peter Allen's was, or whether the First Mountain of the range was the only one known by the name of Kohtohtoning, it is now impossible to know. The probability is that start from below and running up the river, if it had been intended to pass the First Mountain and adopt the Second, it would have been so stated; this, however, is but conjecture. The next matter of record bearing on the question occurs when Hanover township was erected in 1737. Beaver Creek, from its mouth to the mountain, was made the dividing line between Hanover and Peshtank. Beaver Creek had its source at the southern base of the First Mountain, and the division line was extended no farther. It should have been stated before, when referring to the boundaries of Peshtank, that when the Kohtohtoning Hill was reached, the line ran eastward by the south side of said hill to the meridian of the mouth of Quitapahilla Creek. Again, in the year 1767, the court ordered the division line between Upper and Lower Paxtang townships to be made from "the mouth of Fishing Creek; thence along the top of Kittatinia Mountain, next to Lower Paxtang, to Beaver Creek." Hanover township was divided into east and west in the year 1785; the dividing line was a run, having its source on the south side of the First Mountain. In this case, like that of the division of Peshtank and Hanover, the record provides no line extending beyond the First Mountain. The practice of treating the territory between the First and Second Mountains as within the Hanovers probably originated soon after the organization of Dauphin County, in the year 1785. The question whether East Hanover township extended beyond the First Mountain in the year 1796 occurred in the trial of the case of Gloninger vs. Goddard, in the Common Pleas of Lebanon County, and which is reported in 5th Watts, 221. The understanding and practice before mentioned was fully proved on that trial; in the Supreme Court, however, although it was not thought necessary to the question, the judge who delivered the opinion of the court clearly intimated that the records showed the First Mountain to be the true boundary. This question and these matters relating to it are here merely referred to as a part of the history of township boundaries, and not to be understood as suggesting any existing difficulty; incidentally the Second Mountain has become the record line of West Hanover, as may be seen on reference to the records establishing the township of Rush in 1820, and the division of West Hanover township in 1842, both in Dauphin County.

The assessment lists up to the formation of the county of Dauphin were designated as East and West End of Hanover. Those for the East End we have given with the history of Lebanon County, the whole of which probably fell into that county upon its erection in 1813.

Hanover township suffered severely in the French and Indian war, and many are the incidents of pioneer life which have come down to us. In the "Barnetts of Hanover" reference is made to Joseph Barnett and his son, William, giving the statement as it came to us from the late Samuel Barnett, of Springfield, Ohio. The following detail, however, differs somewhat from that there given.

The Barnetts and their immediate neighbors erected a block-house in proximity to Col. Green's mill, on the Manada, for the better safety of their wives and children, while they cultivated their farms in groups, one or two standing as sentinels. In the year 1757 there was at work on the farm of Mr. Barnett a small group, one of which was an estimable man named Mackey. News came with flying speed that their wives and children were all murdered at the block-house by the Indians. Preparation was made immediately to repair to the scene of horror. While Mr. Barnett with all possible haste was getting ready his horse, he requested Mackey to examine his rifle to see that it was in order. Everything right they all mounted their horses, the rifle in hand, and galloped off, taking a near way to the block-house. A party of Indians lying in ambush rose and fired at Mr. Barnett, who was foremost, and broke his right arm. His rifle dropped; an Indian snatched it up and shot Mr. Mackey through the heart. He fell dead at their feet, and one secured his scalp. Mr. Barnett's father, who was in the rear of his company, turned back, but was pursued by the Indians, and narrowly escaped with his life. In the mean time Mr. Barnett's noble and high-spirited horse, which the Indians greatly wished to possess, carried him swiftly out of the enemy's reach, but becoming weak and faint from the loss of blood, he fell to the ground and lay for a considerable time unable to rise. At length by a great effort he crept to a buckwheat-field, where he concealed himself until the Indians had retired from the immediate vicinity, and then raising a signal he was soon perceived by a neighbor, who, after hesitating for some time for fear of the Indians, came to his relief. Surgical aid was procured, and his broken arm was bound up, but the anxiety of his mind respecting his family was a heavy burden which agonized his soul, and not until the next day did he hear that they were safe, with the exception of his eldest son, then eight or nine years of age, whom the Indians had taken prisoner, together with a son of Mackey's about the same age. The savages on learning that one of their captives was a son of Mackey whom they had just killed, compelled him to stretch his father's scalp, and this heartrending, soul-sickening office he was obliged to perform in sight of the mangled body of his father.

The Indians escaped with the two boys westward, and for a time Mackey's son carried his father's scalp, which he would often stroke with his little hand and say, "My father's pretty hair."

Mr. Barnett lay languishing on a sick-bed, his case doubtful for a length of time, but having a strong constitution he at last, through the blessing of God, revived, losing about four inches of a bone near the elbow of his right arm.

But who can tell the intense feeling of bitterness which filled the mind and absorbed the thoughts of him and his tender, sensitive companion, their beloved child traversing the wilderness, a prisoner with a savage people, exposed to cold and hunger, and subject to their wanton cruelty? who can tell of their sleepless nights, the anxious days, prolonged through long, weary months and years? their fervent prayers, their bitter tears, and enfeebled health?

The prospect of a treaty with the Indians, with the return of prisoners, at length brought a gleam of joy to the stricken hearts of these parents. Accordingly, Mr. Barnett left his family behind and set off with Col. Croghan and a body of five hundred "regulars" who were destined to Fort Pitt for that purpose. Their baggage and provisions conveyed on pack-horses, they made their way over the mountains with the greatest difficulty. When they arrived at their place of destination, Col. Croghan made strict inquiry concerning the fate of the little captives. After much fruitless search, he was informed that a squaw who had lost a son had adopted the son of Mr. Barnett and was very unwilling to part with him, and he, believing his father had been killed by the Indians, had become reconciled to his fate, and was much attached to his Indian mother.

Mr. Barnett remained with the troops for some time without obtaining or even seeing his son. Fears began to be entertained at Fort Pitt of starvation. Surrounded by multitudes of savages, there seemed little prospect of relief, and to add to their despondency a scouting party returned with the distressing news that the expected provisions which were on the way to their relief was taken by the Indians. They almost despaired,—five hundred men in a picket fort on the wild banks of the Allegheny River without provisions! The thought was dreadful. They became reduced to one milch cow each day for five days killed and divided among the five hundred. The three following days they had nothing! To their great joy, on the evening of the third, provisions arrived; every sunken, pale, despairing countenance gathered brightness, but owing to its imprudent use, which the officers could not prevent, many died.

While the treaty was pending many were killed by the Indians, who were continually prowling around the fort. One day Mr. Barnett wished a drink of water from Grant's Spring (this spring is near Grant Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, known to most of the older inhabitants); he took his "camp-kettle" and proceeded a few steps, when he suddenly thought the adventure might cost him his life and turned back; immediately he heard the report of a rifle, and looking towards the spring he saw the smoke of the same,—the unerring aim of an Indian had deprived a soldier of life. They bore away his scalp, and his body was deposited on the bank of the Allegheny.

The treaty was concluded and ratified by the parties; nevertheless great caution was necessary on the part of the whites, knowing the treachery of many of their foes.

Mr. Barnett was most unhappy. His hopes concerning his child had not been realized, and he had been absent from his family already too long. Soon after the conclusion of the treaty a guard with the pack-horses started to cross the mountains, and he gladly embraced the opportunity of a safe return. After injunctions laid upon Col. Croghan to purchase, if possible, his son, he bade him and his associates in hardships farewell, and after a toilsome journey reached home and embraced once more his family, who were joyful at his return. But the vacancy occasioned by the absence of one of its members still remained. He told them that William was alive, soothed their grief, wiped away the tears from the cheeks of his wife, and expressed a prayerful hope that through the interposition of a kind Providence he would eventually be restored to them.

Faithful to his promise, Col. Croghan used every endeavor to obtain him. At length, through the instrumentality of traders, he was successful. He was brought to Fort Pitt, and for want of an opportunity to send him to his father was retained under strict guard, so great was his inclination to return to savage life. On one occasion he sprang down the bank of the Allegheny River, jumped into a canoe, and was midway in the stream before he was observed. He was quickly pursued, but reached the opposite shore, raised the Indian whoop, and hid himself among the bushes. After several hours' pursuit he was retaken and brought back to the fort. Soon after, an opportunity offering, he was sent to Carlisle. His father, having business at that place, arrived after dark on the same day, and without knowing took lodgings at the same public-house where his son was, and who had been some time in bed. As soon as he was aware of the fact he asked eagerly to see him. The landlord entreated him to let the boy rest until morning, as he was much wearied by traveling. To this the father could not assent, replying, "If a son of yours had been absent for three years could you rest under the same roof without seeing him?" The hardy host felt the appeal and led the way to the chamber. The sleeping boy was awakened and told that his father stood by his bed. He replied in broken English, "No my father." At this moment his father spoke, saying, "William, my son, look at me: I am your father." On hearing his voice and seeing his face he sprang from the bed, clasped him in his arms, and shouted, "My father! My father is still alive!" All the spectators shed tears, the father wept like a child, while from his lips flowed thankful expressions of gratitude to the Almighty disposer of all events that his long-lost child was again restored.

On the next day the father and son were on the road homewards, where they arrived on the second day in the dusk of the evening. The rattling of the wheels announced their approach; the mother and all the children came forth. She, whose frequent prayers had heretofore been addressed to the Throne of Divine Grace for the safety and return of her son, now trembled and was almost overcome as she beheld him led by his father and presented to her, the partner of her sorrows. She caught him to her bosom and held him long in her embrace, while tears of joy flowed. His brothers and sisters clustered eagerly around and welcomed him with a kiss of affection. It was a scene of deep feeling not to be described, and known only to those who have been in similar circumstances. The happy family, all once more beneath the parental roof, knelt down and united in thanksgiving to Almighty God for all His mercies to them in protecting and restoring to their arms a beloved and long-absent child.

The children scrutinized him with curiosity and amazement. Dressed in Indian costume, composed of a breech-cloth around the waist, with moccasins and leggins, his hair about three inches long and standing erect, he presented a strange appearance. By degrees he laid aside the dress of the wilderness, which he greatly preferred, forgot the Indian language, and became reconciled to his native home. But the rude treatment which he received from the Indians impaired his constitution. They frequently broke holes in the ice on rivers and creeks and dipped him in order to make him hardy, which his feeble system could not endure without injury.

Respecting the son of Mackey, he was given by the Indians to the French, and passed into the hands of the English, and was taken to England, came as a soldier in the British army to America at the time of the Revolutionary war. He procured a furlough from his officers and sought out his widowed mother, who was still living, and who had long mourned him as dead. She could not recognize him after the lapse of so many years. He stood before her, a robust, fine-looking man, in whom she could see no familiar traces of her lost boy. He called her "mother," and told her he was her son, which she did not believe. "If you are my son," said she, "you have a mark upon your knee that I will know." His knee was exposed to her view, and she instantly exclaimed, "My son indeed!" Half frantic with joy, she threw her arms around his neck, and was clasped in those of her son. "Oh, my son," said she, "I thought you were dead, but God has preserved you and given me this happiness. Thanks, thanks to his name! Through long years I have mourned that sorrowful day which bereft me of my husband and child. I have wept in secret till grief has nearly consumed me, till my heart grew sick and my poor brain almost crazed by the remembrance. I have become old more through sorrow than years, but I have endeavored to 'kiss the rod' which chastised me. My afflictions have not been sent in vain, they have had their subduing and purifying effect; heaven became more attractive as earth became dark and desolate. But I now feel that I shall yet see earthly happiness. Nothing in this world, my son, shall separate us but death." He never returned to the British army, but remained with his mother and contributed to her support in her declining years.

There was another interesting meeting, that of Mackey with the son of Mr. Barnett. They recapitulated the scenes of hardship through which they passed while together with the Indians, which were indelibly impressed upon the memory of both. They presented a great contrast in appearance.—Barnett a pale, delicate man, and Mackey the reverse. The former sank into an early grave, leaving a wife and daughter. The daughter married a Mr. Franks, who subsequently removed to the city of New York.

Mr. Barnett, the elder, after experiencing a great sorrow in the loss of his wife, removed to Allegheny County, spending his remaining days with a widowed daughter. He died in November, 1808, aged eighty-two years, trusting in the merits of a Divine Providence. His eventful and checkered life was a life of faith, always praying for the sanctified use of his trials, which were many. His dust reposes in the little churchyard of Lebanon, Mifflin township, Allegheny Co.

In 1768 a movement was put on foot to divide the township, and again the year following. Prior to 1759 no records have been found giving the township officers. From that period until the erection of the county in 1785 we have gathered the following:

- 1759. Constable.—Samuel Sterret.
Overseers of Roads.—Robert Snodgrass, William Thompson.
- 1760. Constable.—John Brown.
Overseers of Poor.—Walter McFarling, Hugh Rippy.
- 1761. Constable.—Robert Snodgrass.
Overseers of Poor.—Anthony McCrelight, James Willson.
Overseers of Roads.—William Allen, Jacob Toops.
- 1762. Constable.—Peter Walman.
Overseers of Poor.—John Andrew, William Allen.
Overseers of Roads.—Lazarus Steward, David Ferguson.
- 1763. Constable.—James Stewart.

- 1777. Constable.—Edward Tate.
- 1778. Constable.—James McMillan.
Overseers of Poor.—Josiah Epy, James Willson.
Overseers of Roads.—Joseph Crane, Francis Alberdele.
- 1779. Constable.—James Stewart.
Overseers of Poor.—Richard Dearmond, Abraham Latcha.
Overseers of Roads.—James Porter, James Young.
- 1780. Constable.—James Porter.
Overseers of Poor.—James Robertson, Killian Long.
Overseers of Roads.—John Hooper, Henry Shuey.
- 1781. Constable.—Robert Caldwell.
Overseers of Poor.—Josiah Parks, William Robinson.
Overseers of Roads.—John French, Josiah Epy.
- 1782. Constable.—John Thompson.
Overseers of Poor.—John Rodgers, Daniel Bradley.
Overseers of Roads.—Richard Dearmond, Abraham Latcha.
- 1783. Constable.—James Wilson.
Overseers of Poor.—Robert Hill, James Young.
Overseers of Roads.—William Young, John Cooper.
- 1784. Constable.—John Winter, Sr.
Overseers of Poor.—Robert Sturgeon, Thomas Hunn.
Overseers of Roads.—Thomas McCord, William Stewart.
- 1785. Constable.—John Winter, Jr.
Overseer of Poor.—James Young.
Overseer of Roads.—George Tittle.

The only complete assessment-list of Hanover is that for 1781. It includes, however, the entire township of East and West End, and much of it is therefore referable to Lebanon County.

Upon the formation of the county, Hanover was divided into East and West Hanover, and thus continued until 1813, when Lebanon was formed, when the entire East Hanover, with a portion of West Hanover, were included in the new county. West Hanover in Dauphin continued as such until the year 1842, when by the sixty-fourth section of an act of Assembly, passed on the 4th of March that year, it provided "that the township of West Hanover, in the county of Dauphin, shall, as then divided into three separate election districts, thereafter form three separate townships, the south district to be called South Hanover, the east district to be called East Hanover, and the west district West Hanover, and that the then supervisors should file in the office of the clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County, as the dividing lines of said townships, the survey and draft thereto annexed of the election lines run of said West Hanover township, pursuant to law, by M. Robeson, on the 17th day of September, 1838."

On the 14th of March, 1842, the survey and draft of M. Robeson was filed as above directed, and was recorded in Road Docket A, page 253, as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at the Swatara Creek, half a mile south of the intersection of Bow Run with said creek, at a chestnut oak on the land of John Fox; thence through land of Conrad Waggoner, Philip Stine, Abraham Hoover, Jacob Leasure, and John B. Morehead, to the present residence of J. B. Morehead, leaving the houses on all said farms north, except Conrad Waggoner—whole distance, 2 miles and 20 perches—course bearing south 82 degrees west; thence from J. B. Morehead's through other land of said Morehead, Doc. William Simonton, Samuel McCord, William McCord, Jacob Keiffer, Samuel Shellenberger, George Bashore, William Bomgardner, and Christian Walters, to Beaver Creek to a hickory, leaving all the houses on said farms north, except J. B. Morehead's present residence, one of Doc. William Simonton's tenant-houses, now occupied by John Farling, Samuel McCord's and William McCord's—these five are south—course bearing the same, viz., south 82 degrees west, distance 2½ miles. Then beginning at the house of J. B. Morehead (present residence); thence through land of said Morehead, and near land of Daniel Keim, through land of Doc. William Simonton, Alexander McFadden, Daniel Keiffer, Samuel Zimmerman, John Snodgrass, Simon Stout, Samuel Fleming, Mary McCreight, Joseph Shoop, Benjamin Snodgrass, Emanuel Cassel, junior (near Daniel and William Gross), Joseph Allen, William Crum (near Daniel Aungst), E. and C. B. Grubb, George Rhoads, John Rhoads, and E. and C. B. Grubb, to the top of the second mountain—the present boundary of West Hanover township—leaving all the houses on said farms west, except Daniel Keim, Simon Stout, Benjamin Snodgrass, Daniel and William Gross, Emanuel Cassel, junior, Daniel Aungst, E. and C. B. Grubb, George Rhoads, and John Rhoads; course bearing north 14½ degrees west, distance 8 miles."

SOUTH HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

THIS township lies south of the other Hanovers, with the Swatara and Beaver Creeks on its entire eastern, southern, and western border. It is well watered, and there is little poor or untillable land in the township.

UNION DEPOSIT was laid out by Philip Wolfersberger, July 30, 1845, and called Unionville. The survey was made by Samuel Hoffer, and the platting done by Jacob R. Hoffer. It comprised twenty-three lots. In the same year Isaac Hershey laid out some lots adjoining. The place, however, always went by the name of Union Deposit, from the fact of its being a deposit of all the grain produce, etc., of this region, preparatory to its shipment on the canal by Mr. Wolfersberger, who owned several boats. He also kept the first store. Dr. D. C. Keller came in 1848, and was the first resident physician. The first house built on the hill was the one in which he resides. The post-office was established in 1857, and David Wolfersberger appointed postmaster. McCormick's Furnace was erected about 1857, and a few years ago a railroad built from it to Swatara Station, on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, a distance of a mile. It manufactures pig metal, and employs in the furnace and quarries some forty hands. Most of the ore is obtained from Sand Hill, three and a half miles distant, the rest from Cornwall and other banks.

The churches are the Lutheran and Reformed, a one-story brick edifice, erected in 1847, and the United Brethren, a similar structure, built in 1848. The former is supplied by the Hummelstown pastors. Its trustees are George Hocker, Sr., Lutheran, and Jacob Walmer, Reformed. Rev. David S. Longnecker, of Derry, is the United Brethren pastor. The village is on Swatara Creek and the Union Canal, one mile from Swatara Railroad Station.

HOERNERTOWN is situated in the southwestern part of the township, one and a half miles north of Hum-melstown. It takes its name from John Hoerner, born in 1782, of one of the earliest families that settled in this region, and whose descendants are very numerous in this vicinity. The place has a store, post-office, and the usual number of small shops. The United Brethren Church is at the east end of the village, and the German Baptist at the west.

MANADAVILLE lies in the extreme eastern part of the township, at the junction of the Manada with Swatara Creek. It contains a saw- and grist-mill, school-house, cabinet-shop, store, and several other shops. The first settlers in the place were J. Ream, G. F. Yengst, D. Houck, John Gordon, Dr. Samuel Eby, H. Styles, J. Dougherty, D. Ritter, and S. Rose.

WEST HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

ADJOINING East Hanover township on the west is the extreme portion of the Hanover of 1737. To the north and west is Middle Paxtang township, while on the south lies South Hanover township, and southwest Lower Paxtang township. In the northern part of the township are the First and Second Mountains of the Kittochtinny range, between which lies Fishing Creek Valley, entered through a gap in the First or South Mountain, long known as Heckert's Gap. The township contains many fine, well-watered, and productive farms. The history of this locality is so intimately connected with not only the history of the township proper and the county, especially during the most interesting epochs, that what might otherwise be of interest here will be found elsewhere. The Barnett place, one of the earliest farms cleared within the township, is located one mile and a half east of Linglestown, recently owned by George Runyen. Another landmark of the early settlement is the late Robert Stewart homestead on Beaver Creek.

MANADA HILL is the only village in the township, and lies in the southwest of the township near East Hanover line. It has a post-office, store, and several shops. A mile and a half southwest is the Lutheran Church, a one-story frame structure. Two and a half miles southeast is the German Baptist Church, and a little northeast is the Zion Lutheran Church, a one-story brick structure.

EAST HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

EAST HANOVER TOWNSHIP, as defined by the record, is bounded on the north by Rush township, on the east by Lebanon County, on the south by South Hanover and Derry townships, and on the west by Middle Paxtang and West Hanover townships. In the northern part of the township are the three ranges of the Kittochtinny Mountains, the First, Second, and Third, and as a consequence the land is much broken and the greater portion sterile. The central and southern part of the township is well watered, highly cultivated, and productive. On the southern border, separating the township from Derry, is Swatara Creek. Bow Creek is in the eastern part of the township, while the Manada, another branch of the Swatara, courses through the entire western side, rising in Lebanon County between the First and Second Mountain, finding its way through the former by the Manada Gap. Between the Second and Third Mountain is Stony Creek, in the centre of Stony Creek Valley, appropriately named.

SHELLSVILLE, often called Earlysville from the large number of Earlys living in and near the village, and whose post-office is called "West Hanover," is situated a little south of the centre of the township. It takes its name from Maj. John Shell, who was born Dec. 20, 1790, and died March 27, 1875. He laid out the town, and in 1821 opened the first hotel, in which he was succeeded by Henry Dick, John Adam Albert, and William Snyder. This tavern is the oldest building in the village, being originally a log house built in 1764, but has been remodeled and additions put to it. The first store was opened by Maj. John Shell and Jacob Early, as partners, in 1822. It has two churches, the Evangelical Association, of which

Rev. C. S. Brown is pastor, and the joint Lutheran and Reformed Church. Rev. Mr. Gauker is pastor of the Lutheran congregation, while that of the Reformed is supplied by the minister of Hummelstown, Rev. A. S. Stauffer.

GRANTVILLE is a thriving village, located a mile and a half east of Shellsville, near the Lebanon County line. It is a new place which sprang up since the war. It is a growing town, and has a large trade with the surrounding country. The United Brethren have a neat church edifice and beautiful cemetery.

MANADA FURNACE is in the northwest of the township. It is owned by the Grubb heirs, and embraces some twenty-five hundred acres. It was built in 1836, but is not now in operation. Near it is the site of old "Fort Manada," erected about 1755 for protection against the Indians, and as a kind of block-house to which the early settlers fled on the advance of the red men.

The German Baptists have a meeting-house in the southeast end of the township, and the Methodist Episcopal congregation are near the centre, just about the proposed South Mountain Railroad.

HANOVER CHURCH.

Nearly eleven miles from Harrisburg, on Bow Creek, was located old Hanover Church, one of the landmarks in the history of the Scotch-Irish and of Presbyterianism in Pennsylvania.

HANOVER CHURCH.

In 1735 the Presbytery of Donegal, then the only Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church in America west of Philadelphia, was in session at Nottingham, Chester Co., Pa., in the month of September. This Presbytery had been created by order of the Synod of Philadelphia in September, 1732. The original members of it were Rev. Messrs. James Anderson, Adam Boyd, William Bertram, John Thomson, and Robert Orr. On the 3d of September, 1735, a supplication was presented from "A people on the borders of Suetara Congregation, desiring the countenance of Presbytery in building a new meeting-house in order to have supplies," which being read, the Rev. William Bertram, the pastor of the Swatara congregation, reported that his people desired him to signify to the Presbytery that they desire them to defer granting said supplication until they be heard. The matter was deferred until the next meeting of Presbytery.

At a session of Presbytery held at the same place Oct. 7, 1735, the affair of the people of Manada Creek was again deferred.

"Mr. Richard Sankey, a theological student from Ireland, having produced his certificate at last meeting before the members of Presbytery and been taken under its care, the Presbytery ordered that he endeavor to acquaint himself with the brethren before our next meeting, and also endeavor to prepare some preliminary extempore trials against our next meeting."

At a session of the Presbytery held at Middle Octorara, Lancaster Co., November 20th, Lazarus Stewart appeared to prosecute a supplication of Manada Creek for a new erection. The region along Manada Creek to the mountains was settled rapidly, and the people early began to feel the inconvenience of going so far as Derry to church, and moved for a new "erection or congregation." At that early day they were all Scotch-Irish, and were connected with the Presbyterian Church. The boundaries of congregations and the location of meeting-houses were determined by the Presbytery with considerable authority.

On the 10th November, 1736, Presbytery ordered James Gelston and Richard Sankey to supply Pequea and Manada by monthly turns alternately until the next meeting of Presbytery. On the 6th of April following, in pursuance of a supplication from the people of Manada, Mr. Bertram was ordered to supply that people on the last Sabbath of April, and to convene the people on some day of the following week in order to moderate a call to Mr. Sankey.

On the 22d June, 1737, a supplication and a call to Mr. Sankey was presented to Presbytery by John Cunningham and Robert Grier, commissioners from the congregation of Hanover (Manada), by which said commissioners are empowered to promise towards Mr. Sankey's support among the people of Hanover as their orderly pastor the annual payment of sixty pounds, i.e., one-half in cloth and the other in particular commodities, as flax, hemp, linen, yarn, and cloth, together with several gratuities mentioned in said supplication. Said call was recommended to Mr. Sankey's consideration till the next meeting of Presbytery. He was appointed to supply Paxtang and Hanover alternately, and to open the next meeting of Presbytery with a sermon from Rom. vi. 21.

On the 30th August, 1738, the Presbytery of Donegal met for the first time at Hanover. Richard Sankey was ordained and received as a member of the Presbytery of Donegal, and was installed as the first pastor of the Hanover Church.

On June 6, 1759, we learn that Mr. Sankey, having received a call to a congregation in Virginia, and designing to remove there, applied for and received credentials from the Presbytery. His relation to the Hanover Church as pastor seems to have been already dissolved. He removed to Virginia, accompanied by many of the Hanover congregation, about 1760. The main reason for going was to escape the incursions of the savages. He settled at Buffalo, joined the Hanover Presbytery of Virginia in 1760, and was appointed to preside at the opening of the Synod of Virginia in 1785. He lived to a good old age, respected by his people and his brethren in the ministry. Mr. Sankey served the Hanover Church for twenty-one years, and, though no further record is known of his ministry, it was evidently an acceptable one to the people, who kept him so long, and many of whom accompanied him when he left the place. After his dismissal, during the year 1759 the church was supplied occasionally by Rev. Messrs. John Steel and John Elder.

In November, 1762, a call was made for the Rev. Robert McMordie, which he accepted. During the year 1765 or 1766 the church of Hanover became vacant. No record of Mr. McMordie's resignation exists, but it was doubtless caused by the dissensions in his church. After his withdrawal the church continued in a distracted and enfeebled state. In April, 1772, Mr. William Thom was appointed one of the supplies at Hanover. On the 21st of May a call for Mr. Thom was presented in Presbytery, with a copy of a subscription paper of over one hundred pounds. The call was put into his hands. In the mean time Mr. Thom received other calls from Big Spring, Sherman's Valley, and Alexandria, Va., and on Oct. 15, 1772, accepted the latter. For the next seven years, covering part of the period of the Revolutionary war, the Hanover Church depended on occasional supplies. The times tried men's souls. Men were called away to war; the people were poor.

On the 20th of June, 1781, a call from Hanover to Rev. Matthew Woods was made out, in which they promise to pay him six hundred bushels of wheat, or a sum of hard money equivalent thereto, and also a gratuity of six hundred bushels. The cause of these peculiar calls in grain was the greatly depreciated value of the Continental currency. Mr. Woods accepted the call, and was ordained and installed over the Hanover congregation June 19, 1782. The pastorate of Mr. Woods was a brief one. On Sept. 13, 1784, the Rev. Matthew Woods died. His remains were buried in the Hanover graveyard adjoining the church, and a tombstone erected by subscription to his memory in 1789.

In 1787, Hanover was allowed to prosecute a call to a probationer for the ministry under the care of the Presbytery of Philadelphia. On the 16th of October, Mr. James Snodgrass was received under the care of the Presbytery from the Philadelphia Presbytery, and having accepted a call from the Hanover congregation he was appointed to prepare a lecture on Rom. viii. 1-7, and a Presbyterial exercise on 1 Cor. xv. 22, as parts of his trial for ordination.

On the 13th of May, 1788, the Presbytery of Carlisle met at Hanover,—John Craighead, Robert Cooper, and Samuel Waugh, with James Johnston, elder. Upon the next day, May 14th, James Snodgrass was ordained and installed as pastor of the Hanover congregation. Rev. John Craighead presided and gave the charge, and the Rev. John Linn preached the sermon.

During the first eight or ten years of his pastorate Mr. Snodgrass kept in a blank-book of the trustees of the church a record of the marriages, baptisms, and admissions to the church, but he seems to have become weary of it, and to have utterly abandoned it before the year 1800. There is no record of removals from the church by letter or by death. A list remains of the heads of families about the year 1788, and the lists of those who paid stipends are continued down to the date of his death. Mr. Snodgrass' receipts for his salary and the records of the board of trustees are also in existence.

The church was very weak at the time of his death, and never had another pastor. The building fell into decay, and was at length in 1875 or 1876 taken down. The care of the glebe funds and the cemetery grounds was placed in the hands of trustees.

HALIFAX TOWNSHIP.

AT December sessions, 1803, the court issued an order to certain commissioners to view and lay out a new township out of parts of Upper and Middle Paxtang townships, who reported the following boundaries of the new township, to wit:

"Beginning on the west side of the Susquehanna River, opposite the end of Peter's Mountain; thence along the top of Peter's Mountain to the Berks and Dauphin County line; thence along said line to Wiconisco Mountain; thence along the top of said mountain to the Susquehanna River, and across said river and thence to the place of beginning."

This report was confirmed by the court at their March sessions, A.D. 1804, and it was ordered that the new township be called Halifax. The mountain called "Wiconisco" in the above report is the same usually called Berry's Mountain.

The history of the township centres about Fort Halifax and the town of Halifax, and is referred to elsewhere. There are certain facts, however, of local importance which it is well to consider in this connection.

The township accepted the free school law in 1836, and the most active persons in urging the adoption of the system were Judge Landis and John Mutch.

Opposite the town of Halifax is Clemson's Island, once the site of a Shawanese Indian village as late as 1701. A large mound on the island partially examined shows it to be one of those burial-places of the aborigines which evidence some great sanguinary struggle or sudden calamity, where the large number of dead required their sepulture in one common grave. Various surmises and traditions have come down to us concerning this Indian mound, but whether the result of the famed "grasshopper war" of the Indians centuries ago we know not. Many implements of the Stone Age have been exhumed.

On one of the islands opposite the borough, prior to 1820, was a noted roosting-place of bald eagles.

A Lutheran and Reformed Church is located two miles northeast of Halifax. It is a substantial one-story brick structure. It is better known as Fetterhoff's Church.

The Mennonites have a church situated a few rods distant from the foregoing.

MATAMORAS is a village situated about two miles south of Halifax. It contains three churches, the Church of God, United Brethren, and Methodist Episcopal, the latter supplied by the Halifax pastor. It has several industrial establishments, a good school-house and stores. The post-office is called "Powell's Valley." Southwest of the village is another United Brethren Church with graveyard, and a little north of the village is the Union meeting-house and cemetery. There is a fourth United Brethren Church in the northwest part of the township, just back from the Susquehanna River.

LYTLE'S FERRY.—Joseph Lytle removed from Marietta to the spot which was afterwards known as "Lytle's Ferry" in the fall of 1773. The property was obtained by warrants issued severally to John Kroker, Samuel Hunter, and Joseph Lytle, and comprised about two hundred acres in all. Geographically, the location was about four miles north of Halifax, two miles south of Millersburg, and about a half-mile below Berry's Mountain, which was then a formidable barrier to journeying along the river. Here Joseph Lytle established a ferry, which became the most important crossing on the river between Harris' Ferry and Sunbury (Fort Augusta). The property was surveyed by Bartrem Galbraith and styled "Fairview," in December of 1773. Joseph Lytle continued in this occupation until his death, about 1790. The ferry property was then purchased by his only son, John Lytle, and Michael Bauer. At the end of about sixteen years they sold the ferry to William Moorhead, father of the Moorhead brothers (J. Kennedy, of Pittsburgh, J. Barlow, of Philadelphia, etc.), well known through Pennsylvania, in April, 1806. Mr. Moorhead came from Soudersburg, Lancaster Co., and after some time also tried to start a town. It was located on the old "Moorhead homestead," about two miles south of Millersburg, more recently known as the "Finney farm," and at present as the "Miller farm." The project never amounted to anything, and no buildings were ever erected on the lots.

With all its advertised attractions the project failed, and the contemplated town and future county-seat forever remained a farm, on whose fertile fields several generations have lived and labored.

HALIFAX BOROUGH.

THE town of Halifax, pleasantly located on the Susquehanna River seventeen miles above Harrisburg, was laid out July 18, 1784, by George Sheaffer and Peter Rise. The first deed given by white men in this vicinity was issued to Robert Armstrong by Thomas and John Penn, proprietaries. The warrant for the land was dated April 17, 1764, and the deed given Feb. 8, 1775. As the valley and creek still bear his name, Armstrong was no doubt the first white settler here. The price stipulated was £51 18s. and 7d.,—from sixty to seventy cents an acre. This, however, did not include the rental of one halfpenny per acre which had to be paid to the agent of the Penns at Lancaster City yearly in the month of May. The land included in this deed is now owned by the Boyers, Geiger, and Loomis families, beginning at the northern line of the borough and extending along the river to Armstrong's Creek. It is described as having been bounded on the east by a barren ledge of hills, on the west by the Susquehanna River, south by vacant lands, and north by settlements in the right of Simon Girty. The house of Robert Armstrong is still standing on the bank of the river, three-fourths of a mile above the town, and is the oldest house in the neighborhood. This is also the site of old Fort Halifax, from which the town derives its name, reference to which has been made in the general history. There is nothing now to mark the place except in a slight elevation of the ground and a well known to have belonged to the fort.

The land on which Halifax stands was deeded to James Aston, Sept. 29, 1773, and was called in popular parlance "Flat Bottom," and about the same time the tract adjoining—perhaps the one now owned by George Singer and others—was conveyed to Aston, and was known as "Scanderoon." From 1729 to 1785 Halifax was in Upper Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. From 1785 (at which time the county of Dauphin was formed) until 1803 it was in Upper Paxtang township, Dauphin Co.

As heretofore stated, the town of Halifax was laid out by George Sheaffer and Peter Rise in 1794, but we find that the deed was recorded by Philip Brindle and George Norton, attorneys for George Winters, on the 8th of May, 1794.

The plot of the town extended from the river to the alley adjoining the property of Henry Sha-mond, and from north to south as indicated by the present length of Front Street from Boyer's to Singer's land.

When the town was laid out the lots were sold for twenty dollars each by means of a lottery, then the customary way of designating the public preference for lots. John Downey made the survey for the original proprietors. In 1801 the houses were mostly on the river, and even in 1825 and 1826 all the old houses but five or six were along the Susquehanna. The original settlers were generally Scotch-Irish, who soon gave way to the German tide that fast set in in this region. James Ferguson in 1801 bought an old story and a half log house (stone basement) on his arrival and there lived. Three tanneries were early established, George Leebrick's, John Shammo's, and Hassinger's (first built and started by Abraham Landis). Three-quarters of a century ago four cooper-shops flourished and four distilleries in or adjoining the town, and at a somewhat later period Isaac Jones started the first hat manufactory.

At an early period the town was a flourishing point of trade, receiving its impetus from the "shad fisheries," which were the largest and best-paying along the Susquehanna River. During the fishing season large quantities were packed, and often fifty and sixty teams were here from a distance to haul away the fish. In olden times the place was noted for horse-racing, and two men, Brubaker and Bower, were killed when running horses, but at times twenty years apart. The old track was along the river bottoms.

Halifax was incorporated into a borough May 29, 1875, its first burgess being Dr. H. W. Bischoff. The first election was held on June 29th following, of which the judge was T. J. Sawyer, and the inspectors were William B. Gray and J. B. Markley. The corporation officers have been: Burgesses, 1875-79, H. W. Bischoff; 1879, Isaac Lyter; 1880-82, Albert S. Loomis. Clerks, 1875-77, G. T. Leebrick; 1877-80, C. D. Waldron; 1880-82, Isaac Lyter.

THE HALIFAX BANK was organized Aug. 1, 1871. Since its establishment the officers have been William Lodge, president; William Shammo, cashier, and J. E. Lighter, teller. The directors in 1881 were Andrew Bowerman, Joseph Fetterhoff, Leonard Clemson, William Taylor, J. B. Landis, James Hoffman, William Fitting, Charles W. Ryan, Conrad Bauer, Thomas J. Sawyer, Andrew Shepley. Its capital stock is one hundred thousand dollars. It has always occupied the same building.

THE "HALIFAX HERALD," the only newspaper ever published in the town, was established Feb. 22, 1844, by Anthony Wayne Loomis. It was originally a four-page sheet of four columns each, and its terms were one dollar a year if paid in advance, one dollar and twenty-five cents if paid during the year, and one dollar and fifty cents if paid at the close. Its motto was, "We aim to serve the people and to promote the greatest good of the greatest number." It was Democratic in politics, and warmly espoused in the campaign of 1844 the election of "Polk and Dallas."

HALIFAX METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—About 1799 and 1800 several Methodist families settled in and around the town. Three members of them, James Ferguson, Robert Bowes, and Thomas Burrell, who had emigrated from Ireland, located in the town. Soon after, Philip Shephard established himself three miles above town, and George Lemon four miles below town, both families coming from the lower end of the State. About the same time five or six more families of the Methodist Episcopal Church settled in Lykens Valley, and John and Daniel Miller settled near the mouth of Wiconisco Creek, where they laid out Millersburg. Two or three miles farther up the valley settled Daniel Stever, an old soldier of the Revolutionary war, and the first Methodist exhorter in the county. About this time John Motter, Philip Verner, John Deitrich, and Samuel Wells located ten miles farther up the valley. Just a few miles from the Dauphin County line, in Schuylkill County, lived Henry Kunzelman, who afterwards became an itinerant preacher of the Methodist faith, preaching in the German language. In the summer of 1801 the Philadelphia Conference sent out Rev. William Rose, an Irishman, as a missionary, who, after making several excursions through the upper end of Dauphin County with the view of establishing permanent appointments for preaching, organized several classes and preaching appointments, one in Halifax, one near where Millersburg is, and one near where Berrysburg is. Next year he was followed by the eccentric Rev. Jacob Gruber, who preached in both German and English. The Dauphin Circuit was then fully explored and organized, embracing Dauphin, Lebanon, and parts of Schuylkill County, making a six weeks' tour, day or night appointments, besides the Sunday labors. This territory now embraces twenty circuits and stations (or, as old Father Gruber called them, tobacco patches), supporting from one to two ministers each, with at least two preaching appointments each Sabbath. In 1834, Harrisburg was cut off as a station, and in 1837 the circuit was divided, making Peter's Mountain the line, the upper end forming Halifax Circuit. Afterwards Lykens and Wiconisco were made into a circuit, and Williamstown into a station, with other sub-divisions hereafter to be noted under the heads of the various towns.

The old log meeting-house in Halifax was probably the first Methodist edifice in the county, and was built in 1806. The following is a list of all the itinerant and station preachers that have preached or ministered at Halifax:

Dauphin Circuit from 1801 to 1837:

1801, William Ross, missionary; 1802-3, Jacob Gruber; 1803, Henry Boehm; 1804, Auning Owens, Henry Boehm; 1805, Joseph Osborne, Joseph Stephens; 1806, William Hunter, Daniel Ireland; 1807, Thomas Burch, William Hoyer, George Harmer; 1808, Thomas Burch, James Miller, J. Kitchell; 1809, Thomas Boring, John Betchell; 1810, Thomas Baring, John Farmon; 1811, William Fox, D. Brown, John Van Shock; 1812, William Fox, James Mitchell, William W. Foultz; 1813, James Mitchell, William W. Foultz; 1814, William W. Foultz, John Walker, Henry Kunzelman; 1815, Henry Kunzelman, Lawrence Lawrenson; 1816, John Goforth, Richard McCallister; 1817, John Price, Phineas Price; 1818, William Leonard, William Able, Samuel Grace; 1819, William Quinn, Henry G. King; 1820, Henry G. King, Jacob Gruber (2d time); 1821, Jacob Gruber, Joseph Cary; 1822, John Woolson, W. W. Wallace; 1823, John Woolson, Matthew Soren; 1824, John Goforth (2d time), William Allen; 1825, A. Ogden, Henry G. King (2d time); 1826, Henry G. King, Joseph McCool; 1827, Francis Hodgson, Thomas Neal; 1828, Thomas Neal, Francis Hodgson; 1829, Eliphalet Reed, Jefferson Lewis; 1830, Eliphalet Reed, J. B. Ayres, C. B. Ford; 1831, David Best, J. B. Ayres, A. Z. Baring; 1832, David Best, Allen John, Richard W. Thomas; 1833, Thomas Sovorn, Allen John, Francis Hodgson (2d time); 1834, John Edwards, Robert E. Kemp; 1835, Charles W. Jackson, Robert E. Kemp; 1836, Richard W. Thomas (2d time), Charles W. Jackson.

Halifax Circuit from 1837:

1837, Jonas Bissey, Charles Schock; 1838, Charles Schock; 1839, Jacob Davidson; 1840-43, Eliphalet Reed (2d time); 1843, John Edwards (2d time), William L. Gray; 1844, Edwards and Gray; 1845, Leeds K. Berridge, Thomas A. Fernley; 1846, John Watson, John Hough; 1847, Eliphalet Reed (3d time), S. R. Gillingham; 1848, Valentine Gray, C. L. Stine-man; 1849, Valentine Gray, George W. McLaughlin; 1850, James E. Meredith, Frederick Illman; 1851, John Cummins, C. R. Curry; 1852, Cummins J. Childs; 1853, H. H. Hickman, Joseph S. Cook; 1854, Joseph S. Cook, Robert L. Colier; 1855, Henry B. Mauger, J. Wheeler; 1856, H. B. Mauger, G. W. Barr; 1857, H. H. Hobbs, R. J. Carson; 1858, William B. Gregg, Joseph Cook; 1859, William B. Gregg, J. T. Crouch; 1860, S. W. Kurtz, George Sheaffer; 1861, Kurtz and Sheaffer; 1862, William H. Burrell, C. W. Ayres; 1863, W. H. Burrell, John Stumger; 1864, G. S. Conway, J. E. Kesler; 1865-66, J. E. Kesler, F. M. Brady; 1867, S. R. Gillingham (2d time); 1868, E. J. D. Pepper; 1869-71, Silas B. Best; 1872, M. Barnhill; 1873, Thomas Sumption; 1874-76, Joseph Aspril; 1876, Richard Morley; 1877-80, Jonathan Dugane; 1880, Henry White.

Some of the above was paid in work and labor, some in materials and hauling, and the remainder in cash. Some of the subscribers gave more than they originally promised, and only in two or three instances did the subscribers fail to make their subscriptions good. When the old church was taken down the shingles were found as good as when first put on.

The old log church was replaced in 1850 by the present substantial brick edifice, built in the centre of the town. The circuit now embraces Matamoras, Trinity Church in Powell's Valley, and preaching in United Brethren Church near the Parks neighborhood.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH, a one-story log structure, was built about 1814, but from 1826 to 1838 was used occasionally (nearly half of the time) by the village school. The Lutheran congregation gradually dwindled down so that by 1838 it had no members, or at least no officials to take charge of it. Then the citizens held a meeting and sold its material to Anthony W. Loomis, who removed it to the village. The proceeds from its sale were used to inclose the graveyard lot, upon which it stood, with a substantial fence. It stood on the hill.

UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH IN CHRIST.—This congregation was organized about 1840, but the present church edifice was not built until 1868. Since 1868 the pastors have been Revs. J. W. Hunkle, A. F. Yeager, Joseph Young, John W. Geiger, Mr. List, William D. Knower, A. V. H. Gosweiler, Ezekiel L. Hughes, V. S. Riddle, W. D. Mower, and S. P. Funk, the present incumbent, who came in 1881.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH was until recently part of the Millersburg Circuit, but preaching here has been abandoned.

RUSH TOWNSHIP.

ON the 23d of October, 1819, the Court of Quarter Sessions issued an order to commissioners to inquire into the propriety of dividing the township of Middle Paxtang. The commissioners reported in favor of a division, and that they had run a dividing line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning on a stone heap on the Second Mountain, the summit of which separates West Hanover from Middle Paxtang township, at the distance of three and one-half miles from the northwest corner of West Hanover township, thence north ten degrees west three miles one hundred and fifty perches to a chestnut-oak tree on the top of Peter's Mountain and line of Halifax township."

This report was confirmed by the court March 14, 1820, and it was ordered that the new township be called Rush township. (For record, see Seas. Doc. 1815-23, page 282.) The line above described continued to be the dividing line between Rush and Middle Paxtang townships from 1820 to 1832. Previous to the 22d of November, 1831, a petition had been presented to the court praying for an alteration of the dividing line between those two townships, and on that day the court issued an order to commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of said petition, who made report in favor of altering the line, and that they had run the line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a chestnut-oak on the top of Peter's Mountain, the northwest corner of Rush township; thence a southwesterly course along the summit of said mountain, which separates Jackson and Halifax townships from Middle Paxtang and Rush, seven miles twenty-five perches to a marked hickory; thence passing on the line between John Williams and the Widow Fortenbach south ten degrees east one mile and one hundred and eighty-five perches to a chestnut-oak on the summit of the Third Mountain; thence a northeasterly course along the top of the said mountain seven miles, intersecting the west line of Rush township."

This report was confirmed by the court Nov. 19, 1832. (See Road Doc. A, page 74.)

The township as thus organized, being exceedingly mountainous, contains fewer farms and the least number of inhabitants than any other in Dauphin County. Clark's Creek flows through the centre of the entire township westward. Third or Sharp Mountain forms its southern, while Peter's Mountain its northern boundary.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

ON the 23d of August, 1828, an order was issued by the Court of Quarter Sessions to three commissioners to view and report upon the propriety of dividing the township of Halifax according to the prayer of inhabitants of the east end of said township, asking for a division, and that the new township might be called Jackson, previously presented to said court. The commissioners reported that in their opinions a division of said township was necessary and proper, and that they had run and marked a division line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a chestnut-oak on the top of Peter's Mountain, in Winn's Gap, on the line dividing Halifax and Middle Paxtang townships; thence across Powell's and Armstrong's Valleys, north $3\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 6 miles and 280 perches to a hickory on the line between Upper Paxtang and Halifax townships, on Berry's Mountain, at a small curve in said mountain about three-quarters of a mile west of Woodside's Gap."

This report was confirmed by the court at November sessions, 1828. (See Road Docket A, page 37.) It was thus named for the then President of the United States, Gen. Andrew Jackson, and as thus established was diminished by the erection of Jefferson in 1842. The early settlers in the township were the Hoffmans, Enders, Fishers, Millers, Snyders, Fetterhoffs, Werts, Shotts, and others, many of whose descendants remain in the locality. Armstrong's Creek rises in this township, and flowing southwest, empties into the Susquehanna above Halifax.

FISHERVILLE was laid out in 1854 by Adam Fisher, now deceased, then an extensive landholder. It is now a flourishing little village, containing a neat frame school building, stores, etc. The Methodist Episcopal Church edifice was erected in 1859, and is supplied by the Halifax Circuit. Of the United Brethren congregation, Rev. Jacob Funk is pastor, those formerly being the same as at Jacob's Church in Wayne township, and St. John's in Mifflin township. The Evangelical Lutheran Church was erected many years ago. It is a one-story brick building.

JACKSONVILLE was laid out about 1825 by George Enders and Joseph P. Lyter, most of the houses being on the lots owned by the former. It was named in honor of Ex-President Jackson. Joseph Bowman built the first house. William Enders had the first store. The first blacksmith was Joseph P. Lyter; the first physician was Dr. McGuire. The post-office was established under President Pierce's administration in 1854. The present postmaster is J. F. Helt, and the first one was William Enders, after whom the office was called "Enders Post-Office." There are two churches, the Lutheran and Reformed (Star of Bethlehem), a neat frame edifice erected in 1875, and the United Brethren built in 1873. Rev. Isaac Erhart is pastor of the former, and Rev. Jacob Funk of the latter.

East and northeast of Jacksonville are the following churches: Stearn's, Miller's (Reformed, of which Rev. A. S. Stauffer is pastor), and the United Brethren, at Deitrich's.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

IN the year 1842 inhabitants of Jackson township petitioned the Court of Quarter Sessions, asking for a division of said township; whereupon the said court, on the 23d April, 1842, issued an order to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the said prayer, who made report that they considered a division of the said township necessary, and had run a dividing line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a white-oak on the summit of the dividing ridge, at the Halifax township line, and between the farms of Abraham Kinports and Lewis Culp; thence north 66 degrees east 250 perches to a post; thence north 42 degrees east 50 perches to a post; thence north 66 degrees east 340 perches to a post; thence north 71 degrees east 160 perches to a post; thence north 66 degrees east 80 perches to a post; thence north 69 degrees east 656 perches to a post; thence 18 degrees east 171 perches to a post; thence north 55 degrees east 28 perches to a post; thence north 39 degrees east 304 perches to a post; thence along Broad Mountain north 13 degrees east 140 perches to a post; thence north 7 degrees west 520 perches to a pine in Deitrich's Gap, on the summit of Berry's Mountain, being in length 8 miles and 140 perches."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 24th of November, 1842. In the year 1844 the inhabitants of Jackson petitioned the court, complaining of part of the division line as made in 1842, and praying for an alteration. Whereupon the court appointed other commissioners to view and report on the propriety of making such alteration. These commissioners reported in favor of alteration, and that they agreed upon and run the following line:

"Beginning at a pine on lands of John Shoop, Sr., corner of former partition line between said Jackson and Jefferson townships; thence north 68 degrees east 13½ miles to the Schuylkill County line."

This report was confirmed by the court Nov. 23, 1844. The township was named for President Jefferson, and as thus established continued until 1879, when the western portion was erected into a separate township and called Wayne. The early settlers in the township were the Buffingtons, Bordners, Etzweilers, Hoffmans, Shoops, Pauls, Millers, Werts, Runks, Wolfangs, Enders, Deitrichs, Trawitzs, Lehrs, Hawks, and others of German descent, nearly all of whom have representatives in the valley. The surface of the township is irregular and abrupt, but contains a number of fine productive farms. Powell's Creek rises in the township, flows westward, emptying into the Susquehanna above Clark's Station.

There are several old churches in the township. St. James' Reformed Church has a large congregation, of which the Rev. A. S. Stauffer is pastor. Of St. Jacob's Lutheran Church the present minister is the Rev. Joseph Hilpot, and for his predecessors see St. John's Church, Mifflin township, of which charge this church forms a part.

CARSONVILLE is the only village in the township, and contains a store, church, post-office, etc. Near the village are the remains of old Shawanese Indian camps and burying-grounds, the location being on one of the Shamokin trails, which passed through the limits of the county.

REED TOWNSHIP.

REED TOWNSHIP was erected by the act of Assembly of the 6th April, 1849, which directed "That portion of the qualified voters of Penn election district, Dauphin County, that reside in Middle Paxtang township, shall hereafter vote at the regular place of holding elections for said township, and the balance of the voters of said Penn election district shall hold their election at the new school-house on Duncan's Island, and shall be erected into a separate township and school district, to be called Reed township," etc.

The township is bounded on the north and north-east by Halifax township, on the west by Juniata and Susquehanna Rivers, and on the south and southeast by Middle Paxtang township. It includes the large islands on the western side of the river,—Duncan's and Haldeman's. It is named for William Reed, who resided about half-way between Clark's Ferry and Halifax. Previous to being set off as Reed township it was Penn election district, formed of portions of Middle Paxtang and Halifax. When the township was erected, the portion of Middle Paxtang reverted to the original township.

The history of this township centres chiefly around the islands at the mouth of the Juniata, well known by the general designation of Duncan's Island. The southern part of the township includes the Susquehanna portion of Peter's Mountain, and the land is much broken. There are several fine farms on Powell's Creek, while the lands on the large islands in the river are unsurpassed for cultivation. The Wiconisco Canal, connecting with the Pennsylvania Canal at Clark's Ferry, and the Northern Central Railroad edge the river the entire length of the township. Clark's Ferry, at the crossing to the islands and the Juniata (named by the Indians Queenashawakee), was for many years quite a noted place. Being hemmed in by the mountain and river, it has never increased beyond the usual country tavern.

DUNCAN'S ISLAND.

The first we hear of Duncan's Island was in 1733, when at a Provincial Council held at Philadelphia, on the 19th of June, Shikellamy, a chief of the Five Nation Indians, a man of much consequence among the savages, asked through Conrad Weiser, the interpreter,—

"Whether the Proprietor had heard of a letter which he and Sassoonan sent to John Harris, to desire him to desist from making a plantation at the mouth of the Choniata, where Harris has built a house and commenced clearing fields.

"They were told that Harris had only built that house for carrying on his trade; that his plantation, on which he has houses, barns, etc., at Peixtan, is his place of dwelling, and it is not to be supposed he will remove from thence; that he has no warrant or order for making a settlement on Choniata.

"Shekallamy said that though Harris may have built a house for the convenience of his trade, yet he ought not to clear fields. To this it was answered that Harris had only cleared as much land as would be sufficient to raise corn for his horses. Shekallamy said that he had no ill will to John Harris; it was not his custom to bear ill will; but he is afraid that the warriors of the Six Nations, when they pass that way, may take it ill to see a settlement made on lands which they had always desired to be kept free from any person settling upon. He was told in answer that care should be taken to give the necessary orders in it."

John Harris had settled upon the island; that is, established a trading-post, being a large Indian village there, but at the request of the authorities, who had granted him previous permission, i.e. removed therefrom. At this period the inhabitants were mostly Shawanese. By what tribe it had previously been inhabited, we know not. It is probable by a band of Susquehannas. Upon the advent of the whites there was a large mound on the island (Duncan's), upon which large trees had grown. During the construction of the Pennsylvania Canal this mound was dug into and found to contain the bones of hundreds of Indian warriors, who had no doubt fallen in battle. The archæologist of the future was not consulted, and these remains of the aboriginal inhabitants were used as filling-material for one of the shoulders or bastions of the dam. Indian relics have been found all over these islands, and we are of the opinion that the antiquary, to whom we have alluded, will no doubt be able by research in that locality to discover much relating to the primal inhabitants.

The first notice we have of the Shawanese on these islands is from the journal of the Rev. David Brainard in 1745, and which has been reprinted.

From a "rough draught" of the islands at the mouth of the Juniata, made by Marcus Hulings in 1762, three are noted. One, now known as Duncan's Island, is marked "Island," and house as "Widow Baskin's." The large island in the Susquehanna known as Haldeman's Island, containing three houses, the one to the southern point "Francis Baskin," one-third farther up, on the Susquehanna side, "George Clark," while about the centre that of "Francis Ellis." On the north point is the word "Island." Almost opposite, on the east bank of the Susquehanna, is "James Reed's" house, while between the centre of the island and the western shore is a small triangular "Island," so marked. On "the point" between the "Susquehanna River" and the "Juneadey River," near the bank of the latter stream, is "Hulings' house." Some distance from "the point" is a straight line running from river to river on which is written "this is the way I want my line," while beyond, on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, nearly opposite "James Reed's" house, is "Mr. Neave's" house. Farther up the river, opposite a small island, is "Francis Ellis's" house. A circuitous line, denominated "Mr. Neave's line," crosses the straight line referred to which included "Part of Hulings' Improvement." On the south of the Juniata, below the mouth thereof, is "William Kerl's" house, opposite the point of Duncan's Island "James Baskin's" house, while "Hulings' house" (another improvement) is farther up, in what is named the "Onion Bottom." Beyond this, on the same side of the Juniata, is a house marked "Cornelius Acheson, who had encroached upon Hulings' Improvement in the Onion Bottom, settled there last spring." Opposite the islands, on the east bank of the Susquehanna, are "Peter's Mountain" and "narrowghs."

Prior to this the French and Indian war had desolated the Juniata Valley, and the islands at the mouth felt the terrible blow. In the spring following Braddock's defeat (1756) the savages had reached the Susquehanna, but the few scattered frontiersmen were unequal for the conflict, and were obliged to flee. Some lingered too long, for the wily red man came down suddenly, and the tomahawk and scalping-knife were reeking with the life-blood of the hardy but unfortunate pioneers. Mr. Hulings on being apprised of the near approach of the savages, hurriedly packed up a few valuables, and placing his wife and youngest child upon a large black horse (the other children having previously been removed to a place of safety) fled to the point of the island, ready to cross over at the first alarm. Forgetting something in the haste, and thinking the Indians might not have arrived, Mr. Hulings ventured to return alone to the house. After carefully reconnoitering he entered, and found, to his surprise, an Indian up-stairs "coolly picking his flint." Stopping some time to parley with the savage, so that he might retreat without being shot at, the delay to his wife seemed unaccountable, and fearing he had been murdered, she whipped up her horse and swam the Susquehanna. The water was quite high, but nowise daunted, she succeeded in reaching the opposite shore in safety. Mr. Hulings soon appeared, and finding the animal with his wife and child had disappeared, in turn he became alarmed, but a signal from the eastern shore of the stream relieved his anxiety, and he himself, by means of a light canoe, was safe from pursuit. The fugitives succeeded in reaching Fort Hunter, where the Baskins and others of their neighbors had congregated, and the inhabitants of Paxtang had rallied for a defense.

In the summer following William Baskins, living on Duncan's Island proper, returned from Fort Hunter with a portion of his family to cut his grain, and while thus engaged they were suddenly startled by the yell of Indians who were hard by; however, discovering they were neighbors, their alarms were quieted, but, alas! they were deceived, for the barbarous savages, as soon as they were near enough, gave them distinctly to understand their object was their scalps. At this moment they all fled in consternation, hotly pursued, towards the house, and when there Mr. Baskins, in the act of getting his gun, was shot dead and scalped; his wife, a daughter of about seven, and a son three years old were abducted. Mr. McClean, who was also in the field, plunged into the river and swam the Juniata at what is called "Sheep Island," and concealed himself in a cleft of rocks on the opposite side, and thus eluded the pursuit of the savages and saved his life. Mrs. Baskins effected her escape from the Indians somewhere near Carlisle; the daughter was taken to the Miami country west of the Ohio, then an unbroken wilderness, where she was detained for more than six years, when, in conformity with Bouquet's treaty made with the Indians, she was delivered up and returned. She subsequently married John Smith, the father of James Smith, of Newport. The lad who was captured at the same time was taken to Canada, subsequently christened Timothy Murphy, and concerning whose history we have the following account:

The first we hear of Murphy was his being one of the chief riflemen of Morgan's celebrated sharpshooters. At the battle of Bemis' Heights, Morgan selected a few of his best marksmen and directed them to make the British general, Fraser, their especial mark. Several of them fired without effect, but when Murphy fired Fraser fell.

A short time after the battle of Monmouth, three companies of Morgan's corps were sent into Schoharie, N. Y. Among these was Murphy, and before long the Tories set an extra price on Murphy's scalp, a price that was never paid, although many Indians lost their hair in trying to win the reward. Murphy was a stout, well-made man, with rather a large body and small limbs, handsome in face, with jet-black hair and eyes.

Murphy's hairbreadth escapes were many in number. In the nick of time something was certain to turn up to help him out. He had at one time a double-barreled rifle, a weapon unknown to the Indians in those days. He was chased by a party, and although he could generally outrun them, on this occasion they gained upon him. So he turned and killed one. Then he ran on, and while sheltered from the view of his enemies by a clump of bushes managed to load the empty barrel. As they gained upon him still, he stopped and shot another. The party pursued him without firing, being particularly anxious to roast him before a slow fire or show him some such warm hospitality, which anxiety would not be satisfied if they shot him dead. They were sure of taking him, and he felt that his luck had deserted him at last. Utterly exhausted he treed, and as they advanced killed another redskin. To his astonishment the party immediately fled. Murphy afterwards ascertained that, seeing him fire three times without seeing him load once, they imagined he had a great medicine of a gun that would shoot forever.

At the war's end Murphy became a farmer. It was characteristic of this man to live for others, and he died from a disease contracted in saving the children of a neighbor from a winter's flood.

When peace was declared and our independence acknowledged, many of the Schoharie Indians had the assurance to return and settle again among a people whose houses and barns they had burned, and whose friends and relatives they had killed. There was one Indian named Seths Henry, who had killed more Schoharie people than any other man. He would sometimes leave a war club upon the dead body of a victim, with a horrid row of notches thereon, each notch indicating a scalp taken. An energetic savage, he once led a party from Fort Niagara in the winter to capture certain Schoharie patriots, and he succeeded, traveling six hundred miles through the snow to do so. He, too, had the audacity to come back, but he was much upon his guard. One day he started from one house to another. Timothy Murphy was observed to go in the same direction shortly afterwards, and it is a curious coincidence that, as far as can be ascertained, Seths Henry never reached any place in this world.

After this there began to be mysterious disappearances of Tories and Indians, and was to be noted that coincident with a disappearance would be a bush-heap fire in the vicinity in which the missing person was last seen. It is to be supposed that calcined human bones might have been found in the ashes of these bush-fires. The remaining renegades and savages took the hint and departed that land before they departed this life, so the country was cleared of the vermin.

Timothy Murphy was a capital stump-speaker, and was a political power in Schoharie County. He brought William C. Bouck into public life, which brought him into the gubernatorial chair of the Empire State. He died in 1818, at the age of seventy years.

As to the widow of William Baskins, the first settler on Duncan's Island, she married her neighbor, Francis Ellis. Ellis established a ferry across the Susquehanna during the Revolution, which he carried on many years.

As previously mentioned, Duncan's Island was noted in early times, and really until the construction of the great Pennsylvania Railroad, as an important point on the line of travel northward and up the Juniata.

In 1819 strenuous efforts were made by interested parties to annex Duncan's Island to Cumberland County. Upon the formation of Perry County in 1824, no doubt the opportunity would have been afforded the secessionists to be included in the new county, but that did not please them, and hence they remain loyal to the county of Dauphin, to which they are allied by many interests.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century, and until the march of internal improvements which has needlessly destroyed our fisheries, the islands at the mouth of the Juniata were noted for their catch of shad, and these rights were in themselves considered of great value there as elsewhere on the Susquehanna and its branches.

At the commencement of the present century Duncan's Island proper was named Isle Benvenue, but why so designated, instead of Juniata Island, we have not learned. Duncan's Island is about two miles in length, although quite narrow, at the eastern end of which is the village and post-office of Benvenue. Haldeman's Island (so named for the owner) lies to the north, and separated from the former by a narrow channel. Unlike Duncan's Island, it is not of alluvial origin, but is elevated far above the neighboring flat-lands. The farm-house on it commands a magnificent landscape, comprising many of the wonders both of nature and art. The river here is nearly a mile in width, and is crossed by a wooden bridge. A dam across the river, just below the bridge, creates a pool, upon which canal-boats cross by means of a double towing-path attached to the bridge. The canal continues up Duncan's Island, diverging at its upper end into the Juniata and Susquehanna divisions. The Juniata division then crosses the Juniata River on a splendid aqueduct with wooden superstructure, and continues up the right bank. There is also a fine bridge across the mouth of the Juniata.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

THIS was the last created township in the county, and the first erected under the Constitution of 1874, which directed that in case a division of a township is desired, the whole question must be submitted to the popular vote of legal voters within the township. There were in favor of a division of the township of Jackson one hundred and seventeen, and sixty-six against a division. At the court in May, 1878, his Honor Judge Pearson issued the following decree:

"It appearing to the court by the vote taken and the return of the election ordered and held for the purpose of determining the question of a division of Jefferson township, and the return of said election showing that a majority of the votes taken are in favor of the division of said Jefferson township as reported by the commissioners for that purpose, the court therefore order and decree that said township be, and the same is hereby divided according to the report of the commissioners and the lines marked out and returned by them, and the draft attached to and made a part of said report; and that the east end of said township division shall continue to be named Jefferson, and the west end of said division shall be a new township, to be named Wayne, and shall by that name be known for all corporate purposes; that the elections of said township of Wayne shall hereafter be held at the school-house, No. 2 (named Sawyer's), in said township; and the elections for the said township of Jefferson shall be held at the school-house in Caronville, in said township; and the courts appoint Simon Smith judge, and Henry Buffington and George W. Bowman inspectors for the said Jefferson until the next election for said officers; and the court appoint for the township of Wayne John P. Sweigert as judge, and George Becker and James Lebo inspectors until the next election for said officers.

"By the court.

"JOHN J. PEARSON, President Judge."

The commissioners appointed to divide Jefferson township reported as follows:

"Beginning at a pine-stump on land of Jacob Miller (formerly John Shoop), and on the line between Jackson and Jefferson townships; thence by land of said Jacob Miller south nine and a quarter degrees east forty-four perches to a pine-tree at forks of public roads; thence south thirty-eight degrees through woodland of Samuel Shoop and others east one hundred and twenty perches to a stone corner of lands of Christian Hoffman and John Werner; thence south twenty and a half degrees east through lands of Christian Hoffman fifty-four perches; thence by the same bearing on what is termed the Old Bull or Sawyer line six hundred and ninety-four perches to a chestnut-oak-tree on the summit of Peter's Mountain line between Ruab and Jefferson townships; and that they consider the division of said township necessary for the convenience of the inhabitants as regards assessments, roads, elections, schools, etc.

"JOHN K. MCGANN.

"GEORGE W. ENDERS.

"WILLIAM H. FITTING."

The early settlers were the Buffingtons, Hoffmans, Lebos, Gross, Swigards, Millers, Sheets, Sheesleys, Breslers, Enterlines, Lenkers, Bowermans, Lehrs, Enders, Etsweilers, Engles, Lautz, Shoops, Zimmermans, Wises, Sponslers, Hoovers, Pauls, and Pottigers.

ENTERLINE POST-OFFICE is in the centre of the township. In 1855, Jonathan Enterline opened a store here, and kept the same for fifteen years. He was the first postmaster, the office being named in his honor. The present store is kept by Abraham Fortenbaugh, and the postmaster is Amos Sponsler. The Reformed Church here was erected about 1830, of which the present pastor is Rev. A. S. Stauffer.

JACOBS' UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH is a one-story frame building located in the western part of the township, built in 1861. Its pastors have been Revs. George Hoffman, Amos Yeager, Israel Carpenter, Kunkle, Loose, Doner, and Jacob Funk, the present incumbent.

HOFFMAN CHURCH.—This church edifice, just east of Enterline post-office, is no longer used for worship. Attached to it is an old graveyard, but with few tombstones standing.

UPPER PAXTANG TOWNSHIP

A Court of Quarter Sessions held at Lancaster in August, 1767, a petition was presented from inhabitants of Lower Paxtang township, stating that "some time ago Upper Paxtang above the Narrows was a separate township from Lower Paxtang, and had their annual officers. James Murray and William Clark served as constables in said Paxtang above the Narrows, and they had their own inspectors, etc., and learning that the inhabitants of Upper Paxtang above the Narrows had petitioned the court for a road from the Narrows to James Reed's, and obtained an order for a view of the same as in Lower Paxtang, which alarmed the petitioners, and they therefore prayed the court to grant them relief by confirming a division line of said townships." Whereupon the court ordered that the partition line "between Upper and Lower Paxtang be made from the mouth of Fishing Creek, where it empties into Susquehanna, and from thence along the top of Kittatonia Mountain, next to Lower Paxtang, to Beaver Creek."

There does not appear to be any record of the court previous to the date of the above establishing or in any way recognizing the existence of Upper Paxtang township. The minutes of the Court of Quarter Sessions, which usually exhibit the townships and the names of the constables for each at the commencement of each session, does not notice either the name of Upper Paxtang township or any constable as from such township until after the date of the order of 1767; that order is the only record found creating this township at all, and as it has in that order no northern limit assigned, it may be taken that from August, 1767, Upper Paxtang embraced at least all the territory subsequently assigned to Dauphin County, from the lower mountain to the Mahantango Creek, subject, however, to a debatable question whether Hanover township extended northward by the second mountain, a question which is noticed more at large under the head "East and West Hanover."

The first assessment-list of Upper Paxtang is that for the Wiconisco District in 1778. It is the earliest record we have of the inhabitants of Lykens Valley, as separate from Upper Paxtang. The paper is indorsed "Appeal Dublicate, 1778, Peter Hoffman, Upper Paxtang, Wikiniski District," and the orthography of the surnames given as in the original. It will be seen by the large number of "Located Lands" that much of the valley had been taken up by outside parties for speculation or as investments. Aaron Levy, Michael Miller, John Cline, and Henry Wails, from the amount of taxes assessed, seem to have been very large landowners. The latter portion of the list refers to the age of persons who were not liable to military duty:

Upper Paxtang remained entire until after the formation of the county of Dauphin, when it was division following division, until all now left of the original township is what we find in the extreme northwest corner of the county. The full return for 1780 is herewith given, that comprising the "Upper District" included all that section north of Berry's Mountain, the "Lower District" that portion lying south of Berry's Mountain and north of the First Mountain. In the Upper District there is no return for a mill, and but one still, and that owned by Capt. Weaver. In the Lower District, Marcus Hulings and Joseph Lytle had each a ferry, while Christian Hettick is returned for a boat; David Ireland has one negro.

The township of Upper Paxtang, as now existing, is bounded on the north by the Northumberland County line, on the east by Mifflin and Washington townships, on the south by Halifax and Jackson townships, and on the west by the Susquehanna River.

KILLINGER'S POST-OFFICE.—This point is situated on the road from Millersburg to Berrysburg, three miles from the former place and seven from the latter. Near by is the Salem Evangelical Lutheran Church, an elegant two story-brick edifice erected in 1872. This church is supplied by the Millersburg pastors.

DAVID'S REFORMED CHURCH edifice, a two-story brick structure, was built in 1866, and is only a few yards from Salem Lutheran Church. The congregation of David's was formed prior to 1774, as baptisms are found recorded as early as June 8th of that year. Rev. Samuel Dubenborn was the pastor, and labored from 1779 to 1789. After 1795 he returned and remained a while. On March 7, 1775, these two congregations—Lutheran and Reformed—had one hundred and sixty-one acres of land surveyed for them jointly, called "Good Intent," and received a deed therefor Sept. 22, 1804. According to an agreement between them, dated March 30, 1792, they made a division in 1808. In 1794 the old log church was built, and on Feb. 27, 1797, a contract was made with some one to finish it for one hundred and eight pounds. The building committee on the part of the Reformed congregation were Abraham Nachbar [Neighbour], Jacob Meck, George Neagley, and Valentine Weker. It stood at the lower end of the cemetery, and was a two-story log house, weatherboarded, plastered, and with galleries on three sides. The pulpit was ascended by stairs and surmounted by a sounding-board. It is not known whether it had regular pastors or not, but occasional preaching was had by Revs. William Hendel, of Tulpehocken, Geistweit, Anthony Hantz, of Lebanon, and Philip Gloninger, of Harrisburg. During the Revolutionary war, when Rev. William Hendel came, he was escorted by members of the congregation with muskets to protect him and them from the prowling Indians, and during the services guards stood with guns in hand near the church to protect the worshipers from skulking savages. Rev. Hendel had a catechism class of eighty-five, many of whom came ten or fifteen miles to attend class or service.

Rev. James Reily was pastor from 1812 to 1819, and during his time the parsonage was built opposite the church (where the farm-house now is). Rev. Isaac Gerhart was pastor from 1819 to 1844. His successors have been: 1844-56, J. A. Ellis; 1856, Richard A. Fisher; 1857-65, Ephraim Kieffer; 1865-68, F. J. Moore; 1868-75, J. W. Leacher; 1875 to present time, J. B. Kerschner.

The old church edifice was torn down in 1865, and the corner-stone of the present structure laid Sept. 9, 1866. The basement was dedicated Dec. 8, 1868, and the main audience-room May 24, 1868.

HOOVER'S CHURCH.—This church edifice, lying in the southeast part of Upper Paxtang township, near the Mifflin township line, is a joint church of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches. The Evangelical Lutheran congregation (called "Zion's") is supplied by the pastors of St. John's Church, near Berrysburg, and the Reformed congregation ("Zion's") by the Millersburg pastors of that denomination. In 1842, Andrew Keefer, Sr., donated one-fourth acre of land upon which to build a church edifice. The corner-stone was laid in 1843, and a neat structure built thereon.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH, at Riegel's, a handsome frame edifice, is in the extreme eastern part of Upper Paxtang township, and only a few yards from the Mifflin township line. It is supplied with preaching by the pastor of the Berrysburg church.

PAXTON POST-OFFICE is the name of a village in the northwestern corner of the township, at the mouth of the Mahantango Creek. It contains a population less than one hundred.

MILLERSBURG BOROUGH.

MILLERSBURG BOROUGH is situated on the Susquehanna River, at the confluence of the Wiconisco Creek, twenty-three miles north of Harrisburg, on the Northern Central and Lykens Valley Railroads. The place was settled some years prior to the time it was laid out. It derived its name from Daniel Miller and John Miller, who emigrated from Lancaster County about 1790. They took up some four hundred acres of land and began a settlement. It was laid out by Daniel Miller into town lots in July, 1807, and incorporated into a borough April 8, 1850, from which time its progress has been rapid. Daniel Miller's first wife, Elizabeth, died in 1813, and he married for the second time Mary Wingert, July 8, 1817. They both died in October, 1828, leaving one child, Mary, who was born Nov. 25, 1820, married George W. Bowers, Feb. 11, 1838, and is still living in the town. Daniel Miller, who was born in 1750, had two children by his first wife, who removed at an early day to Ohio.

The first settlers in this region, known as "Lykens Valley," were French Huguenots and Germans. Francis Jacques or "Jacobs," commonly known as "French Jacob," Larue or La Roy, Shora, Sandoe, the Kleims, Werts, Steevers, Shutts, Ferrees, Millers, Andrew Lycan, and John Rewalt are found among the earliest names of white men who settled in this section. About the time John and Daniel Miller settled here "French Jacob" built his grist-mill on the north bank of the Wiconisco Creek, just above the foot of Race Street, and near to which, some time before, he had built his log cabin, then considered quite a pretentious structure, large and strongly put together, and well provided with loop-holes,—a kind of fort to which the settlers might fly for safety in cases of attack from the Indians. Here was taught the first school, kept by Daniel Miller, the proprietor of the town. Neither cabin or mill are longer to be seen. Domestic trouble had caused at an early date the owner (Jacobs) to remove forever from the spot. The property was at times unused and unoccupied. It fell under the ban of superstition, several of the settlers having seen about it divers strange and unearthly appearances, "shapes dire, dismal, and horrid." Time and the spoliation of man have done their work, and the almost obliterated channel of the old head-race alone is seen to mark the spot where once was the forest-home of the old French Huguenot. Upon a part of this land Daniel Miller, the then sole proprietor, through Peter Williamson, his surveyor, laid out the town-lots in July, 1807. These lots sold very readily, being selected by lottery, and soon the place assumed the importance of a rapidly-growing and prosperous town. The town is regularly laid out, with spacious streets crossing each other at right angles, and practical alleyways giving passage to the rear of every building. The Susquehanna River at this point is a mile in width, stretching away in lake-like form some three miles, from Berry's Mountain in the south to the Mahantango Mountain in the north, at which points, forcing its way through these mountains much diminished in its bed, it hurriedly tumbles over rocks and pebbles of the passage, winding quickly out of sight.

The first school was taught in a log cabin or fort by Daniel Miller, the founder of the town, and he was succeeded by a Mrs. Miller. This fort was built about 1794, on the banks of the Wiconisco Creek, as a place of safety from the surrounding Indians. The next house was built about 1812 or 1813, on Union Street, and was taught by an educated German. This house was superseded by a poorly-constructed brick building, and that by a frame structure on the site where now stands the large and substantial building on Middle Street, which continued in use until the citizens refused to send their children. In 1833 a select school was taught by Mrs. Susan Barringer, a lady of considerable culture, who established a good educational sentiment, and was succeeded by Samuel McGaw, a man of scholastic abilities. About 1844 or 1845 the free-school system was adopted, after being defeated twice, as the town and township were at that time one school district. The opposition from the township was very great, but persistent perseverance overcame all the opposing forces. The most active school men in the early history of the town were Jacob Seal, Dr. Robert Auchmuty, David Link, Simon Wert, Adam Light, John Ebery, Benjamin Musser, and Matthias Freck. The town has now two first-class school buildings and five graded schools. Its high school compares favorably with any in the county.

In 1846 there were in Millersburg about eighty dwellings, two stores, one mill, and three churches. In 1850 it had five hundred population, which it doubled in 1860 and trebled in 1880.

The officers of the borough since its incorporation in 1850 have been:

BURGESSES.

1850. Simon Wert.	1865. Simon Wert.
1852. J. J. Bowman.	1867. A. Douden.

THE MILLERSBURG LITERARY SOCIETY was organized in 1876, and is in successful operation, being patronized and actively participated in by many of the best and most prominent men of the town.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.—About the year 1833 several members of the Reformed faith purchased a frame building on Middle Street and fitted it up for church services. Here Rev. Isaac Gerhart preached occasionally. The building was never dedicated, and no regular pastors were called. In 1856 the Reformed and Lutheran congregations jointly erected the brick church on Middle Street. The corner-stone was laid in June, and the building dedicated on the 30th of November following. The first consistory was elected April 25, 1857. Rev. Ephraim Kieffer was the first pastor, and the present incumbent is Rev. J. B. Kerschner; for the others see David's Church, which with Zion's at Hoover's and this make one charge. In 1874 this congregation bought out the interest of the Lutherans.

ST. PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.—About the year 1830 the Rev. J. N. Hemping preached occasionally to the Lutherans here in the old school-house in the German language. In 1832, Rev. S. D. Finckels, of Middletown, came here every four weeks and preached in both English and German. In 1842, Rev. W. G. Laitzell, one of the seven founders of the East Pennsylvania Synod, who had been called to his first charge in Armstrong's Valley, crossed Berry's Mountain and preached here and at Salem (Killinger's). From 1846, Rev. C. F. Stower, of Berrysburg charge, preached here for four years as often as convenient, and in 1852, Rev. Jacob Martin, of same charge, came occasionally. In November, 1853, Rev. D. Sell, of same charge, began holding services, and after one year's labors organized a congregation, which united with the Reformed, and in 1856 built the church edifice on Middle Street. The pastors have been: 1856-61, D. Sell; 1861, P. P. Lane; 1862, George P. Weaver; 1863-66, C. A. Fetzer; 1866-78, M. Fernsler; July 27, 1879, George Conrad Henry. Under Rev. M. Fernsler the charge consisted of Berrysburg, Millersburg, Salem (Killinger's), and Lykens, but in 1871 the latter was withdrawn. In 1871 the project of withdrawing from the joint union building and erecting a new church was discussed. It sold its interest in the Union Church to the Reformed congregation for fourteen hundred dollars, broke ground for a new edifice in March, 1873, and laid the corner-stone in June, 1874. The basement was dedicated in 1878, and the audience-room Nov. 14, 1880.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH.—This congregation was organized about 1840. The first church edifice was built on the lot where the present parsonage stands, and was a log structure weatherboarded. The present church building, a commodious two-story brick structure, was built in 1860. Since 1862 (as early as any records are found) the pastors have been:

1862-64, William Hain; 1864, Joseph M. Sayler; 1865-67, F. P. Lehr; 1867-69, A. A. Overholt; 1869-71, L. Snyder; 1871-73, S. S. Chubb; 1873-76, H. A. Neitz; 1876-79, W. K. Wiand; 1879-81, S. S. Chubb; 1881, H. A. Neitz, present incumbent.

Berrysburg was the first seat of this denomination in this region, and two years after its organization into a church this one was organized. It owns valuable church property, and is clear of debt.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Millersburg and Berrysburg Circuit was cut off of Halifax in 1866. Since then the pastors have been: 1866-68, A. W. Wiggins; 1868-70, Able Howard; 1870, Thomas Kilpatrick; 1871-75, W. H. Fries; 1875-77, W. S. Pugh; 1877-79, J. M. Hinson; 1879, William M. Gilbert; 1880-82, N. D. McComas. It was made a station. The large brick edifice was erected in 1858. The church has one hundred and seventy-five members, and a parsonage adjoining the church edifice.

THE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES of the borough are the planing-, saw-, and lumber-mills of John Neagley, C. F. Freck, and Alfred Douden and the Standard Axle Manufacturing Company, the latter of which has proved a successful enterprise.

The Millersburg Herald was established by its present editor, proprietor, and publisher, J. B. Seal, on the first Friday in January, 1875. It is a weekly family journal, and specially devoted to local news. It is a four-page sheet of thirty-two columns, and enjoys a large circulation. With it is connected a well-equipped job-office. This paper is independent in politics, and occupies a position which gives it great strength in moulding opinion in the north of the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK was organized Feb. 12, 1867, as the Lykens Valley Bank, and began business March 6th following. It was a private company, composed of G. M. Brubaker, S. P. Auchmuty, Benjamin Reigel, Philip Moyer, Joseph F. Corbett, Henry Walborn, George Gleim, Aaron Mattis, Jonathan Reigel, and Daniel Good. Its capital was twenty-five thousand dollars, which was shortly after increased to forty thousand dollars by the addition of the following new partners: Tobias Bickel, A. Fortenbaugh, Jonathan Swab, Sept. 7, 1868, and Benjamin D. Reigel, George Deibler, and George Daniel in March, 1869. It was incorporated Feb. 29, 1872, and reorganized as a corporation. It was merged into a national bank April 13, 1875, with its charter numbered 2252, and began business as such May 1st the following. G. M. Brubaker was president to January, 1875, and was then succeeded by Alfred Douden, the present incumbent. George Gleim was cashier until April 14, 1873, when Ferdinand H. Voss succeeded him. It has a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars, with a surplus of twelve thousand dollars. Its first banking-house was on Market Street. In 1869 it erected its present building, and occupied it in the fall of that year.

THE MILLERSBURG BANK was organized in the fall of 1868. It is an individual banking institution, composed of eighty to one hundred stockholders, mostly of the wealthiest farmers, and all individually liable. Its capital stock is thirty thousand dollars, with a surplus of ten thousand dollars. Its first president was S. Buck, succeeded in 1875 by the present incumbent, F. Wenrich. J. S. Gilbert has been cashier from its organization, and Isaac Miller vice-president since the creation of that office. Since its establishment it has occupied its own building on Union Street.

MIDDLE PAXTANG TOWNSHIP.

AT a Court of Quarter Sessions, held in Dauphin County in the month of August, 1787, an order was issued to commissioners to take into consideration the necessity and propriety of dividing Upper Paxtang township, who reported a dividing line, "commencing at the river Susquehanna, at the mouth of a run emptying into the said river, and running from Jacob Strickler's spring, and thence along the different courses of the said run to the place where the said spring extracts out of the earth, and from thence by a direct line to the dividing ridge; thence along the said ridge to the extremity thereof, to the line of Berks County."

The court directed the township to be divided, agreeably to this report, from the said line to the upper boundary of Lower Paxtang, to be called Middle Paxtang. As thus constituted the township included the section of the county between the First and Peter's Mountains, embracing Fishing Creek, Stony Creek, and Clark's Valleys. As may be surmised, the face of the country is much broken, and save along the principal streams as they near the Susquehanna and the valleys expand, the land is poor and unproductive. Nevertheless, there are some fine farms on Clark's Creek and along the Susquehanna.

The history of the township is so intimately connected with that of the general record of the county, and to which reference is made for a history of Fort Hunter, at the mouth of Fishing Creek, and other details relating to the French and Indian war. The following incident, however, is of such a local character that we give place thereto.

Ludwig Minsker, an emigrant from the Palatinate, located in Clark's Valley in 1750. He built his cabin on a run near the place where the house of John Hocker, Jr., now stands. He was a man of great courage, and the Indians of the neighborhood fearing him, never molested him or his family.

It was subsequent to Braddock's defeat that hostile Indians crossed over the mountains and spread death and desolation on the frontiers. While out hunting during the spring of 1756, Ludwig observed the trail of the marauding savages. Knowing that if they discovered his cabin, his wife and child in his absence would be killed, he hastened home and quickly devised means for their protection. It was too late to go below the mountains, for he would be overtaken. Having in his house a chest six feet long, he bored a sufficient number of holes in it to admit air; then taking it upon his shoulder, waded up the run some distance, placing it in a sequestered nook. Returning to his cabin he took his wife and child (the latter but six months old) in the same way to the chest to conceal his trail, where the dense foliage covered their hiding-place. It was ten days before the hostiles had left the valley, and during all that time Mrs. Minsker and her child were safely secured in the huge chest, her husband in the mean time keeping guard in the neighborhood of their cabin, hunting and carrying provisions to the refugees.

One autumn, while Ludwig was carrying towards his cabin half of a good-sized hog he had butchered, an Indian stealthily came up behind him, quickly severed the lower part, exclaimed, "Hog meat very good meat, Indian like him," and scampered off to the woods.

The child who was concealed with his mother in the chest became Ludwig the second. He married a daughter of Thomas Cairn, and built his cabin at a spring on the Third Mountain, on property now belonging to Harry Zeiders, who is a descendant of the first Ludwig. It is only a few years since that the cabin was torn down.

Prior to the Revolution a friendly Indian had his cabin on the north side of Peter's Mountain, near the spring which supplies the water-trough on the pike. Here he lived for years unmolested. One evening in the fall of the year Mrs. Minsker, while standing in the door-way, heard a loud moan, resembling that of some one in extreme agony. She told her husband, who replied that it was the cry of a panther. Still listening, she found by direction of the sound that the person was going up the mountain, but Ludwig to quiet her said she must be mistaken, it was only the cry of the panther. The ensuing summer the cows remained out beyond the usual time, and the children were sent in search of them. Going up the mountain they came to what was then called and still known as the "King's Stool," when they found a skeleton lying under it. Informing their father of the fact, Ludwig examined the remains, and found by the hunting-shirt, which was intact, that it was the Indian referred to. It appeared that some ill-disposed whites had gone to the cabin of the Indian and wantonly shot him, but did not kill him. With his little strength remaining the poor Indian crawled up and then down the side of the Fourth Mountain, across Clark's Valley; thence up the Third Mountain to the "King's Stool," where he died from exhaustion. The rock alluded to is a huge boulder heaved on the top of another, and as high as the tallest trees.

DAUPHIN is a prosperous town located at the mouth of Stony Creek, nine miles north of Harrisburg. The first settlement made at that point was by Samuel Sturgeon, who removed thither shortly after the French and Indian war. A mill was built there in 1770, and the place went by the name of Green's mill. The town was laid out in 1826 by Innis Green for the Dauphin and Schuylkill Coal Company, and by him named Port Lyon. It was afterwards and for many years called Greensburg, until it was made a post-town, when the name was changed to Dauphin, for the county, and when the borough was incorporated, 31st of March, 1845, the post-office name was adopted.

CORPORATION OFFICERS.—The borough was incorporated March 31, 1845. Its officers since then have been:

BURGESSES.

1845. Joseph S. Dixon.	1857. Jacob Stevenson.
1846. H. B. Crouse.	1860. Dr. William Graydon.
1847. John Ehrman.	1861. J. W. Griffith.

HILL CHURCH.—About 1770 a log house was erected for a meeting-house on land owned by Robert McCord, half a mile north of the present town, and on the site of the "Hill Church Cemetery." On Oct. 11, 1796, an agreement was entered into whereby Mr. McCord stipulated to convey by deed said lot to the trustees of the Middle Paxtang Presbyterian congregation. This conveyance was made Nov. 6, 1813, to William Cochran, William Forster, and James Green as said trustees. The expenses of its erection were principally met by the Scotch-Irish settlers, who were then the main farmers of this region. The congregation at one time was very large, and this old log structure (weatherboarded) held two hundred persons. The increase of German settlers led to the Scotch-

Irish Presbyterians removing, and the church edifice passed into the hands of the Lutherans and German Reformed, or was jointly owned by them and the remaining Presbyterians. It burned down in 1855, but for some five or six years previous had not been used for religious services.

A PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION was organized April 6, 1850, when twenty-three members entered into solemn articles of covenant and faith. There is no record before that, although previous to that time Rev. Dr. DeWitt, of Harrisburg, preached occasionally in the school-house and at the old "Hill Church." Rev. George R. Moore came June 21, 1848, to officiate at the old "Hill Church," and was ordained Oct. 18, 1848. Under his auspices the congregation was formed as previously stated. He preached mainly in the school-house. The new church was dedicated May 12, 1850. The bell was a donation from John W. Patton, Esq., of Philadelphia. Miss Monroe and other ladies, of Wilmington, Del., donated the communion service. Rev. George R. Moore continued as pastor to June, 1856; Rev. John W. Davis, from March, 1857, to August, 1860; Rev. Alexander D. Moore, from Sept. 8, 1860, to Sept. 8, 1868; Rev. David C. Menker, from Dec. 1, 1868, to April 25, 1880; and the present incumbent, Rev. Robert F. McClean, from Sept. 1, 1880.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Dauphin Circuit was cut off of Halifax Circuit in 1838, since which time the pastors have been: 1838, D. Sheets; 1839, V. Gray, William McCombs; 1840, H. E. Gilroy, William McCombs; 1841-43, William Cooper, T. W. Arthur; 1843, R. M. Greenbank, J. M. Wyeth; 1844, R. M. Greenbank, T. A. Fernley; 1845, William L. Gray, George D. Brown; 1846, Eliphalet Reed; 1847, John C. Thomas; 1848-50, C. R. Brooks; 1850-52, Henry Sutton; 1852, H. Sanderson, C. R. Curry; 1853, H. Sanderson, J. J. Lane; 1854, S. R. Gillingham, H. H. Hickman; 1855-57, Valentine Gray, E. J. Pepper; 1857-59, William Dalrymple; 1859-61, George G. Rakestraw; 1861-63, Abel Howard; 1863-65, S. L. Kemble; 1865-67, G. T. Hurlock; 1867, Gideon Barr; 1868-70, T. Montgomery; 1870-72, John Stringer; 1872, J. Robison; 1874-76, Frederick Illman; 1876-79, Ephraim Potts; 1879 to the present time, R. C. Wood. The church edifice, a commodious frame structure, was erected in 1837. The circuit embraces Dauphin, Rockville, Coxestown, and Paxtang, a preaching appointment four miles from Harrisburg and near the residence of Judge Hiestter.

ZION'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This congregation before 1849 had worshiped in the old "Hill Church," but on September 5th of that year it resolved to erect a new church edifice in the town. The joint building committee then appointed were Daniel Poffenberger, Elias Fertig, H. C. Sponsler, George Kinter, George W. Urbin, Nelson C. Hyde. It was built on a lot of Mrs. Gross by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations jointly. The corner-stone was laid Aug. 10, 1850, and the building dedicated Feb. 2, 1851, with a dedicatory sermon by Rev. A. H. Lochman. The pastors have been: 1851, Rev. C. F. Stoever; 1852-56, Rev. C. Nittenhauer; 1856-68, Rev. George J. Martz; 1868-70, Rev. Kurtz; 1870-80, Rev. D. P. Rosenmiller, who died in 1880, and since then the congregation have had no regular pastor.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH.—This congregation was organized prior to 1872, when the church building was built. Before then services were occasionally held in the school-house. The pastors have been: 1872-75, Rev. J. A. Fager; 1875-77, Rev. Leslie; 1877-78, Rev. A. Markley; 1878-80, Rev. John Hoover; 1880, the present incumbent, Rev. H. M. Copp. This circuit embraces two other churches,—Zion's, some two miles from town, and which was organized in 1862, and the one at Fishing Creek, organized in 1831. The Halifax Church was an offshoot of Zion's, and was instituted to accommodate the town members.

BERRY'S MOUNTAIN MILLS, near Berry's Mountain, in Middle Paxtang township, were built in 1797, the large saw-mill by Mr. Barr. They were afterwards operated by Mr. Rutter, and later by Loomis & Kingsbury. In 1834 and 1835 they transacted a large business. Shurr's mill was a short distance above.

LYKENS VALLEY.

THE Wiconisco or Lykens Valley includes that section of the "Upper End" of the county of Dauphin that is watered by the Wiconisco Creek and its branches, save where local names have been given to certain portions, such as Williams Valley, etc. As much of the history of the townships is so closely allied, we purpose to give such facts relating thereto as do not specially belong to the townships proper. It may be here stated that locally Lykens Valley is but a small part of Wiconisco Valley, and yet we are compelled to designate the "Upper End" by that general title.

The early history of the Wiconisco Valley is one of interest, inasmuch as the individual for whom the entire valley now takes its name was among the first settlers. In 1782, Andrew Lycans (not Lycan) settled on the Swatara Creek, where he took up two hundred and fifty acres of land, adjoining lands of Robert Young and Lazarus Stewart, and which was surveyed to him on the 4th of April, 1787. About 1740 he seems to have sold out and removed, with a number of others, to the west side of the Susquehanna, where he settled and made some improvements on a tract of land between Sherman's Creek and the Juniata, in then Cumberland County. This not being included in the last Indian purchase, the Shawanese, who had a few scattered villages on the Juniata, complained of the encroachments of these settlers and demanded their removal. To pacify the Indians the Provincial authorities sent, in 1748, the sheriff of Lancaster County, with three magistrates, accompanied by Conrad Weiser, to warn the people to leave at once. But, notwithstanding all this, the settlers remained, determined not to be driven away, at least by threats.

On the 22d of May, 1750, after more decisive measures had been decided upon by the Provincial government, a number of high dignitaries who had been appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor held a conference at the house of George Croghan, in Pennborough township, Cumberland Co. Subsequently, accompanied by the under-sheriff of that county, they went to the place where Lycans and others lived, and after taking the settlers into custody burned their cabins to the number of five or six.¹

They were subsequently released by order of the Governor of the Province, when Andrew Lycans removed with his family to the east side of the Susquehanna beyond the Kittoctinny Mountains, and by permission of the authorities "settled on a tract of about two hundred acres, situated on the northerly side of Whiconescong Creek." Here he made "considerable improvements," which we learn from a document in our possession.

Until the spring of 1756 these pioneers on the Wiconisco were not disturbed in their homes, but following the defeat of Braddock, everywhere along the frontier the savages began their work of devastation and death. Their implacable cruelty was stimulated by the promise of reward for scalps on the part of the French, beside the further one of being put into possession of their lands. On the morning of the 7th of March, 1756, Andrew Lycans and John Rewalt went out early to fodder their cattle, when two guns were fired at them. Neither being harmed, they ran into the house and prepared themselves for defense in case of an attack. The Indians then got under cover of a hog-house near the dwelling-house, when John Lycans, a son of Andrew, John Rewalt, and Ludwig Shott, a neighbor, crept out of the house in order to get a shot at them, but were fired upon by the savages, and all wounded, the latter (Shott) in the abdomen. At this moment Andrew Lycans saw one of the Indians over the hog-house, and also two white men running out of the same and get a little distance therefrom. Upon this Lycans and his party attempted to escape, but were pursued by the Indians to the number of sixteen or upwards. John Lycans and Rewalt being badly wounded and not able to do anything, with a negro who was with them, made off, leaving Andrew Lycans, Shott, and a boy engaged with the Indians. The savages pursued them so closely that one of them, coming up to the boy, was going to strike his tomahawk into him, when Ludwig Shott turned and shot him dead, while Lycans killed two more and wounded several in addition. At last, being exhausted and wounded, they sat down on a log to rest themselves; but the Indians were somewhat cautious, and stood some distance from them, and consequently returned to look after their own wounded. Lycans and all his party managed to get over the mountains into Hanover township, where they were properly cared for. Here Andrew Lycans died, leaving a wife, Jane Lycans, and children,—John, Susanna, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Mary, and Margaret. It is not known when Lycans' family, with the other settlers, returned to their homes in the Wiconisco Valley, but not until all danger was over; and although on a number of occasions they were obliged to leave all and flee before the marauding savages, yet the one alluded to was the only occasion where they so narrowly escaped with their lives. Besides, the erection of the forts at Shamokin (Sunbury), and at Armstrong's (Halifax), and at McKee's, at the foot of Berry's Mountain, was perchance ample protection from the annual marauds of the Indians, which up to the year 1764 kept the frontier inhabitants in a terrible state of apprehension and fear.

¹ We have before us the "account of Andrew Work, sheriff of Lancaster, for removal of trespassers at Juniata," which is as follows:

"Dr. Province of Pennsylvania to Andrew Work, Sheriff of the County of Lancaster and Cumberland.

John Lycans, son of Andrew, became an officer of the Provincial service, commissioned July 12, 1762. In June, 1764, he was stationed at Manada Gap. It is probable he removed from the valley prior to the Revolution. His mother, Jane Lycans, in February, 1765, had a patent issued to her for the land on which her husband had located. The Lycans' cabin stood until about twenty years ago on McClure's farm, owned at present by H. L. Lark. Ludwig Shott died about 1790, and left a large family; some of his descendants remain in the valley. Rewalt subsequently removed to the now thickly-settled portion of the Province.

Andrew Lycans has given his name to the beautiful valley of the Wiconisco, owing perchance to the terrible encounter with the Indians as narrated. The orthography has been changed within the last fifty years, but we have not learned the reason therefor. Whether Lykens or Lycans, we trust that no attempt may ever be made to deprive the first pioneer of the name which has been appropriately given to it.

After Andrew Lycans' the first house built at Oak-Dale Forge was erected by Henry Shoffstall for Joel Ferree, of Lancaster County, then owner of the Lycans' tract, about the year 1771. Its location was about seventy-five yards northwest of where the present bridge crosses the Wiconisco Creek. The property was purchased by Mr. Ferree from Jane Lycans, the widow of the old pioneer. On the death of the former it became the property of Isaac Ferree, of Lancaster County, whose son, Isaac, Jr., moved into it in 1800. At the period when Andrew Lycans lived on the Forge property there was an Indian village on the land now owned by Henry Bohner, and the spring at his house is the head of the run which empties into the head of the Forge dam and called the "Indian Town Run." This Indian town property, when it was abandoned by the Indians, was taken up by Joel Ferree, first named.

When the house was built by Mr. Shoffstall, there were few settlers in the neighborhood. There were, however, Shott (now Kottka), George Buffington, near Buffington's Church, John Nicholas Hoffman, and Philip Umholtz, near Gratz. In Williams Valley the nearest person was Conrad Updegraff, at (now) Williamstown, and next Daniel Williams, who had a grist-mill there, at or on the property now owned by Martin Blum, east of Williamstown. Another person about this time, by the name of Daniel Hain, built a saw-mill where the Summit Branch Railroad crosses the creek at Lykens, taking the water from Rattling Creek by a race to Wiconisco Creek.

Oak-Dale Forge was built about the year 1828, by James Buchanan, who at the same time, or the year following, built six or seven houses for his workmen. The houses were located on the south side of the creek, and were occupied by John Ginter, Thomas Nutt, George Conner, Samuel Boon, Joseph Dunlap, and others. Mr. Buchanan came from Harrisburg. He subsequently removed to Baltimore, where he died. He kept a store at the Forge, and also the post-office, which latter was established about 1830, the mail being carried by pack-horse. Previous to that time the post-office was at Millersburg, each neighbor taking his turn to bring the mail from there weekly.

From 1795 to 1800 there were only three houses built between the Forge and Lykens. One was located on the property now of Henry Bohner, and then occupied by Joel Ferree, the younger, who died at Baltimore, in the War of 1812. The second house was built by George Setzler on the property now of Isaac Seebolt. The third on property now owned by John Wallace, erected by Peter Shoffstall and occuried by him for a time, subsequently by Peter Minnich. This cabin stood near the old house on Wallace's farm, and was in later years occupied by Solomon Shoffstall, who erected the present old log house on the premises.

The first election held in the valley, or in Lykens township, was probably in Gratz, about the year 1815. Hoffman's Church was the first place of religious worship.

The importance of Lykens Valley may be dated from the year 1825. In that year coal was discovered by Jacob Burd, Sr., and Peter Kimes, then living near the lower end of the Short Mountain, in what was then Lykens township. They had gone out one Sunday morning to take a walk, and reaching the top of the mountain they paused, one of them having a stick in his hand, carefully dug into the earth, when it revealed black dirt. This gave rise to the opinion that there must be coal in the mountain. A short time afterwards a wagon road was made, and men commenced to dig. This was the first beginning of the coal operations which gave rise to the Lykens Valley, Short Mountain, and Franklin Coal Companies. This was in the same year that anthracite coal was first burned successfully in Philadelphia, and its advocates, after having undergone the usual derision that men of new and progressive ideas have to contend with, began to reap their reward. No doubt this combination of circumstances determined the action of the shrewd Simon Gratz. He at once bought the land in and east of the Gap from one Frey, its owner up to that time.

Professor Sheaffer, of Pottsville, who was a native of the "Upper End," furnishes us the subsequent history of this enterprise. The Wiconisco Coal Company was organized in 1831, composed of six members,—Simon Gratz, Samuel Richards, George H. Thompson, Charles Rockland Thompson, all of Philadelphia, and Henry Schreiner and Henry Sheaffer, both of Dauphin County.

They began work at opening their mines by drifts in the gap at Bear Creek, a tributary of Wiconisco Creek, and sold coal in the vicinity in 1832. The first miners were three Englishmen, James Todoff, John Brown, and William Hall, who came in from Schuylkill County.

The Lykens Valley Railroad, the fourth railroad in the United States to carry anthracite coal, and the first in Dauphin County, was located by Mr. Ashwin, an English civil engineer, and extended from the mines in Bear Gap, sixteen miles, to the Susquehanna River, along the north foot of Berry's Mountain. This road was constructed under the direction of John Paul, civil engineer, Henry Sheaffer, superintendent, and Simon Sallade, director. The road was completed and began transporting coal in 1834, by horse-power, on a flat strap-rail. A number of ark-loads of coal were shipped from Millersburg in March and April, 1834. Then the coal-cars were boated across the Susquehanna from the terminus of the railroad at Millersburg to Mount Patrick, on the opposite side of the river, in Perry County. This site was formerly owned by Peter Ritner, brother of Governor Ritner. Here the Lykens Valley Company had a set of chutes on the Pennsylvania Canal, where they shipped their coal to market. The first boat-load of Lykens Valley coal was sent on Saturday, April 19, 1834, by boat "76," forty-three tons, Capt. C. Faunce, consigned to Thomas Borbridge, Columbia, Pa.

Shipments continued in this manner until 1845, when the railroad was worn out and abandoned until 1848. Then a portion of the railroad was regraded, and all laid with a new T-rail. The Wiconisco Canal, connecting the Pennsylvania Canal at Clark's Ferry with Millersburg, was built and shipments resumed in 1848, and have continued ever since. Up to and including 1858 the total shipment of coal from the Lykens Valley mines, from the beginning, amounted to eight hundred and forty-eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-one tons, and the grand total shipments on the Susquehanna were three millions two hundred and thirty-four thousand seven hundred and eighty-one tons, which included shipments of coal by the Union Canal and other avenues as follows: The Shamokin Railroad was opened in 1839, the Dauphin and Susquehanna in 1854, the Trevorton Railroad in 1855.

At that early day of the coal trade this portion of the country was wild and seemed far removed in the woods. Lykens Valley is the broad expanse, three to five miles in width, of fertile, red-shale soil between Mahantango Mountain on the north and Berry's Mountain on the south, with the Susquehanna River as its boundary on the west. Its eastern portion is a distance of twelve miles from the river, and is subdivided into two smaller valleys, the main or northern one extending some ten miles east to the valley of the Mahanoy Creek. The south portion is named after its early settler, Williams, who built a grist-mill near Williamstown, also named after him.

This valley, hardly a mile in width, extends east from its junction with Lykens Valley ten miles, with the Short Mountain on the north and Berry's Mountain on the south, to a point where it coalesces with Clark's Valley, the two headed off by Broad Mountain, beyond Tower City. This Short, or Coal Mountain, is a prong of the southern anthracite coal-field, forming a narrow basin, hardly more than a mile wide. The southern side of the basin, or north dip, is the only one worked. It is now pierced at Tower City, where it is extensively worked by the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, and again at Williamstown, by the Summit Branch Coal Company, the lands of which two companies adjoin at the county line between Schuylkill and Dauphin, where a willful wall of the Pennsylvania Company and the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company prevents a junction, much to the annoyance of the public, who want a rail connection between the two counties, joining the two rivers, the Schuylkill on the east and the Susquehanna on the west. This mountain is again tapped at Bear Gap, the original mines above referred to. The North Mountain was penetrated by a tunnel directly north of the gap, but thus far has not been very productive of coal. In fact, what seems singular in this connection is that only two beds, the very lowest in the series, are productive here, one being farther east, too small for working, while the great mammoth bed, the great productive bed of the eastern district, is hardly known here. These two lower inter-conglomerates, one eight and the other four feet thick, are dissimilar from other anthracite coals in their lustreless appearance, and their cubic fracture shows its western approach to the semi-bituminous coals farther west. It is a free-burning, red-ash coal, but free from impurities, ready of ignition, and the most popular coal (especially for domestic purposes) of all the anthracites. The lands in the vicinity of the old mines were controlled by the following ownership: The western portion, by Thomas P. Cope, a well-known merchant of Philadelphia; afterwards it became the lands of the Short Mountain Coal Company, controlled by Job R. Tyson, the son-in-law of Mr. Cope, a well-known attorney of Philadelphia. J. Edgar Thomson, the famous president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, took an interest in said company, and had their first breaker built under the direction of Professor Sheaffer, whose education in coal began at the old Lykens Valley mines. The lands covering Bear Gap and North Mountain were owned by the Wiconisco, afterwards the Lykens Valley, Coal Company, of which Simon Gratz, a prominent merchant of Philadelphia, was the president and principal owner.

Adjoining said lands on the east was the coal territory of Messrs. Elder & Haldeman, both prominent residents and landowners of Harrisburg. These three bodies of land are now in the ownership of the Summit Branch Coal Company, controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

The popularity of this coal, first opened by Henry Sheaffer, led to the opening of the Short Mountain Coal Company's mines in 1854, after the sale of the Elder & Haldeman lands to the Summit Branch company. They extended a branch road eastward from the town of Lykens, where they penetrated the south side of the mountain by a tunnel, cutting coal in great perfection, and where they have mined, prepared, and shipped one thousand tons of coal per diem for several years in succession. The same large shipments are now being made just east of the Summit Branch mines, at the Brookside colliery of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company. The same beds of Lykens Valley coal, and the same coal in all its peculiarities, is now mined in Stony Mountain, at the Kalmia colliery of Phillips &

Sheafer, south of Tower City. All the above collieries, except Kalmia, have sunk deep slopes under water-level. The future of the Lykens Valley district must, ere many years, be transferred to the south dip, on the north side of the mountain, where the same bed lies intact for twelve miles, more or less, mostly below water-level. Before another century begins, the active shipments of coal must come from that side, through the old works in the South Mountain, or from independent collieries along the north foot of the North Mountain, where railroads must be built, one leading west to the Susquehanna, and another east to the Schuylkill, through Klinger's Gap, where the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company have a large body of lands, and a site for a grand colliery above water-level.

There are four collieries open and in working condition in Upper Dauphin,—Big Run, by James Fencil (it is a land-sale colliery, shipping none by rail); the other collieries are known as Short Mountain, Lykens Valley, and Summit Branch or Williamstown. Big Lick colliery is not now in operation.

Dependent on these collieries are the towns of Williamstown, Wiconisco, Lykens Borough, and some two or three small villages, with a population numbering between eight and ten thousand persons. Eighty per cent. of the dwellings in this once prosperous valley are the property of working-men, the result of hard toil, self-denial, and privation.

One familiar with the picture of Bear Gap and its wild surroundings in 1832, all forest, its lofty mountains and rushing streams, no work of the hands of man apparent, no sound but the roaring of the creeks, the streets of the town of Wiconisco, as located by Henry Sheafer, and those of Lykens, by Isaac Ferree, Sr. (an intelligent emigrant from Lancaster County), can appreciate the great development. Fifty years of earnest labor has sent millions of tons of coal from its long-sealer's tomb to land and sea, building towns, railroads, canals, churches, and schools, and lighting and warming all the people with its cheerful glow. But few of the original parties who began this enterprise remain among us. It but remains for us to make this brief record of their work, that our citizens may know somewhat of the enterprise of the early pioneers.

LYKENS TOWNSHIP.

UPON the petition of inhabitants of Upper Paxtang township asking for a division of said township, the court issued an order at their January sessions, 1810, to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting said prayer, and to make a plot or draft of the township, etc. The commissioners reported in favor of a division of the township by the following line, to wit:

"Beginning at a pine-tree in the Halifax township line on the summit of Berry's Mountain at Peter Richert's Gap; thence north ten degrees east along and near a public road which leads from Halifax to Sunbury through Hains' Gap, four hundred and sixty perches to a post on the north side of Wiconisco Creek near the said road; thence north eighty perches to a pine; thence running along the public road aforesaid north five degrees west four hundred and seventy perches to Buffington's Church, leaving the said church on the westward; thence a course north ten degrees west, leaving the dwelling of John Hopple westward eleven hundred and fifty perches to Mahantango Creek," etc.

The report then follows the lines around the two divisions of Upper Paxtang as they were after taking off Halifax township (running the lines across the river). It is therefore unnecessary to follow them further here, as the line given above shows the division of what was then Upper Paxtang township. This report was confirmed by the court on the 3d of September, 1810, and it was ordered that the eastern division be called Lykens township. Lykens township was reduced in 1819 by the formation of Mifflin township from Upper Paxtang and Lykens, and further in 1840 when that portion south of the north side of Coal or Thick Mountain was erected into Wiconisco township.

This township and the valley is named for Andrew Lycans, one of the earliest pioneers of this section, and to whom full reference has been made in the sketch of Lykens Valley proper.

GRATZ BOROUGH.

Gratz was laid out in 1805 by Simon Gratz. It is situated on the road leading from Millersburg to Reading, thirty miles from Harrisburg. It was incorporated into a borough April 3, 1852. In 1838, Mrs. Frey kept the tavern and Solomon Shindle a store. The oldest resident of the place is Squire George Hoffman, who was born two miles east of the borough March 13, 1798. He was the son of John Nicholas and Margaret (Harman) Hoffman, one of the earliest settlers in the valley, and a prominent family. Squire Hoffman has been magistrate for the past thirty-five years. When he came to Gratz in 1819 there were only five houses in the place; one was the oldest house, built here by Ludwig Shoffstall, now owned by Edward L. Umholtz. The second was built by Lewis Faust, who sold it to Rev. William Hedel, now belonging to the estate of A. K. Kepler, deceased. The third was occupied by George Feagley, and the fourth by Adonijah Matthias, a Frenchman. The fifth was occupied by George Crapp, a tenant of Mr. Wise. The store was kept by Conrad Frey, then by his widow, and later by her son-in-law, Solomon Shindle.

The municipal officers of the borough since its incorporation have been :

BURGESSES.

1852. Theodore Gratz.	1860. Daniel Good.
1853. Daniel Good.	1861. Dr. I. S. Schminkey.
1855. Jonas Laudenslager.	1864-68. No record.
1856. Daniel K. Osaman.	1868. Daniel Good.
1857. Daniel Lehr.	1869-70. No record.
1859. George Hoffman.	1876. Frank Fidler.

TOWN CLERKS.

1852. James Kissinger.	1876. J. A. Willier.
1853. Abram Hess.	1878. H. W. Good.
1856-76. No record.

This town, located on the old Reading road, was the centre and field of the old-time militia musters, at which thousands used to assemble to witness the evolutions of the battalions. Jacob Hoover had a noted grist-mill two miles distant, on the Little Wisconsin. After the opening of the coal-mines a post-office was established. The present postmaster is J.

Arnholtz, and his predecessors (as far as ascertainable) were Jacob Buffington, Solomon Shindle, and C. T. Bowman. The ridge on which the borough stands was in old times called "Wild-Cat Ridge," from its being the abode in pioneer times of wild-cats.

ST. SIMEON'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CONGREGATIONS were organized in 1823, and until 1832 preaching was had in a house built by Mr. Gutz, where William Boyer now lives. A joint church edifice was built in 1832. Rev. Isaac Gerhart was the first Reformed and Rev. John Peter Shindel the first Lutheran pastor, and Rev. Joseph Hilpot the present Lutheran incumbent. The pastors of St. John's Lutheran and Hoffman Reformed Churches have generally preached here.

HOFFMAN REFORMED CHURCH.—This old church edifice, a two-story frame, built over half a century, is two and one-fourth miles from Berrysburg, three from Gratz, and is in Lykens township. The ground on which it was erected was donated by Squire John Hoffman, who was a magistrate from his twenty-fifth year until his death in 1877.

COLEMAN CHURCH.—This Union Church of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches is near the Schuylkill County line, in the extreme eastern part of Lykens township. St. Matthew's is the name of the Lutheran congregation, which is supplied with preaching by pastors of St. John's Church, Rev. Joseph Hilpot being the present incumbent.

MIFFLIN TOWNSHIP.

AT a Court of Quarter Sessions held the 22d day of October, 1818, an order was issued to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of dividing the townships of Upper Paxtang and Lykens, then embracing the whole of Lykens Valley, into three townships, as had been petitioned for by the inhabitants of said valley. The commissioners reported that they were of opinion that the two aforesaid townships ought to be divided into three, and that they had accordingly run and marked the lines of division as follows, to wit :

"The First township beginning at Mahantango Creek, a short distance below Miller's fording, on the old Sunbury road; thence down the same to the river, and across said river to the mouth of West Mahantango Creek; thence down the western shore of Susquehanna to a point opposite to Berry's Mountain; thence by Halifax township across said river and along the summit of said mountain 5 miles 200 perches to a chestnut-oak-tree; thence north 7½ west

6 miles 80 perches to the beginning, which we have called Upper Paxtang township. The Second we have called Berry township, beginning at the chestnut-oak aforesaid; thence by the summit of Berry's Mountain aforesaid 4 miles 260 perches to a small chestnut-oak; thence north 6 west 7 miles (through Hain's Gap) to Mahantango Creek aforesaid; thence down the same to the point aforesaid, near Miller's fording; thence by the line of Upper Paxtang aforesaid (reversed) south 7½ degrees east 6 miles 80 perches to the beginning. The Third beginning at the same chestnut-oak aforesaid; thence along the summit of Berry's Mountain aforesaid 10 miles to the line of Schuylkill County; thence by the same 8½ miles to Mahantango Creek aforesaid; thence down the same to Berry township aforesaid; thence by the same south 6 degrees east 7 miles to the beginning, and which we have called Lykens township."

This report was confirmed by the court March 12, 1819, except so far as the new or centre division, which the court ordered to be called Mifflin township instead of Berry, as suggested by the commissioners. It was named for General and Governor Thomas Mifflin. (See Sess. Doc. 1815-23, page 212.)

The township is bounded on the north by Northumberland County, east by Lykens township, south by Washington township, and on the west by Upper Paxtang township. The Mahantango Mountains run the entire length of the upper part of the township, the Mahantango Creek, the Northumberland County boundary, being at the foot on the north side. The township is well watered, and there are very many fine productive farms.

Much of the history of the township is identified with the history of the Lykens Valley proper; that which may have transpired during the eventful eras of the county's existence will be found in other portions of this work. It contains two important towns, Berrysburg and Uniontown.

BERRYSBURG is situated on the road leading from Millersburg through Lykens into Schuylkill County, thirty-five miles from Harrisburg. It was incorporated into a borough Dec. 14, 1869. The town was laid out by John Adam Heller in December, 1819, who owned a large tract of land, including the present town and a farm adjoining, now owned by Daniel Romberger. Heller was of a pioneer family in the valley, but removed in 1839 to Sugar Valley, and subsequently to Ohio. John Paul, Jr., surveyed the town for Heller, who called it Berrysburg, from the mountain named Berry's, lying in the vicinity, but for many years went by the name of the proprietor.

A school was organized in Berrysburg about 1826. The different organized churches owned small tracts of land, from ten to twenty acres, on which a school-house was erected, all one story with divisions, one part to be occupied by the teacher and his family and the other as a school-room. About this time the townships now called Mifflin, Washington, Lykens, Wiconisco, and Williams had nine schools,—a territory of one hundred and fifty square miles. All the schools were taught in private houses except three, which were built by the citizens. The land in some cases was purchased for a few dollars and some donated, but in either instance only sufficient to erect the building. On a fixed day the inhabitants assembled at the place where the house was to be built, and some went to felling trees, others to hauling the logs, and the rest erected the house. In two or three days the house was finished. The furniture was made of pine or oak boards nailed against the wall; the benches made of slabs.

The officers of Berrysburg borough have been :

1870. Jonathan Tobias.
1871. Valentine Lenker.
1872. John Singer.
1873. Jonathan Miller.
1874. John Rampell.
1875. Jonathan Book.

BERRYSBURG SEMINARY.—This institution was organized about thirty years ago, but in the lapse of time its building was sold to the town for public-school purposes. On the reorganization in 1879 the seminary secured the property known as the town hall for its rooms. Nearly one-half of the teachers in the upper end of the county have been connected with this seminary at one time or another. This seminary was built by Rev. H. S. Bosler, and its first teacher, in 1851, was Edward Witman.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This elegant brick church edifice is the pride of the Lutherans of Lykens Valley, and is one of the finest church buildings in the county outside of Harrisburg. The first settlers in Mifflin and Washington townships were Germans, who, on June 5, 1780, organized a church congregation called St. John's. The first baptism was Dec. 3, 1780, of Hannah, daughter of Nicholas Schnug; the second, May 8, 1781, of Catharine, daughter of Henry Umholtz; and the third, May 13, 1781, of Philepna, daughter of Christian Schnug. The first pastor was Rev. Michael Enterline. Services were held in the private dwellings of the members until 1791, when a school-house was erected, in which preaching was then had. In this year the deacons were Christian Schnug and John Matter. On Jan. 19, 1797, the following building committee were appointed to erect a new church edifice: John Matter, Sr., David Harman, Philip Bechtel, and Reuben Wise. It was built in 1798, but not being fully paid for, was not dedicated until Oct. 24, 1802. This old two-story frame edifice, with its antique but venerable steeple, stood until 1876, when the present building, a brick structure ninety by fifty-five feet, was erected. It stands on a high ridge one mile from Berrysburg and three from Elizabethtown, on land the congregation has owned since 1780. Directly opposite is the fine farm of the church, comprising sixty-five acres, with a substantial farm-house, occupied by the sexton of the church.

The pastors have been: 1780-1807, Michael Enterline; 1807-9, C. Walther; 1809-11, Daniel Ulrich; 1811-15, C. Walther; 1815-44, John Peter Shindel; 1844-50, J. Nicholas Hemping; 1850-52, C. F. Weldeu; 1852-53, Nathan Jaeger; 1853-64, F. Waltz; 1864-70, Jeremiah Shindel; 1870-75, Thomas T. Steck; 1875-81, R. S. Wagner; 1881, Joseph Hilpot.

UNION SALEM CHURCH of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations was built in 1844, and rebuilt in 1873. It is supplied with preaching by pastors from Elizabethtown and Millersburg. Rev. A. S. Stauffer is the present Reformed, and Rev. George Conrad Henry the present Lutheran pastor. Before 1846, John Peter Shindel preached as Lutheran pastor.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This congregation was organized in 1846, and the church edifice was erected the same year. The first six pastors were Revs. John Kramer, Abraham Bost, Michael Sindlinger, John Sentzell, William Hime, Mr. Sharfe. Among their successors were Revs. C. S. Haymon and Jacob Adams. Since 1870 the pastors have been: viz., 1870-72, J. K. Knerr; 1872-74, J. C. Hornberger; 1874-75, John Leib; 1875-78, J. S. Newhart; 1878-80, William Black; 1880-83 (present incumbent), A. Dilabar. The circuit embraces this congregation, one at Oakdale, Weaver's, and at Gratz.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This church in 1866 was made a part of Millersburg and Berrysburg Circuit, and in 1870 of the circuit composed of Berrysburg, Oakdale, and Cross-Roads. The latter was abandoned in 1877, but the church property at Oakdale is still owned. Since 1866 the pastors have been: 1866-67, A. W. Higgins; 1868-70, Abel Howard; 1870, George C. Young; 1871-74, H. White; 1874, F. M. Collins; 1875-77, F. M. Brady; 1877, John Bell; 1878-80, Joseph Gregg; 1880-82, John McQuoid.

THE UNITED BRETHERN have a large congregation and neat church in the western part of the township near the Upper Paxtang line.

UNIONTOWN.—This borough, whose post-office is Pillow, is situated in the northeast part of Mifflin township, between Deep Creek and Mahantango Creek. It was laid out in 1864, and has developed into a thriving town. It contains a Union Church (Lutheran and Reformed), Evangelical, and a United Brethren, several stores and shops, a foundry, and good school-house. Near by on Deep Creek is a large cotton-mill and saw-mill, and on Mahantango is an extensive flouring-mill. The early settlers of this region were the Deiblers, Bonawitzs, Millers, Jurys, Koppenheffers, Bohners, Weists, Boyers, Witmers, Weavers, Williards, Shepleys, and Hess'. The town is situated in a gap of the Mahantango Mountains, and is connected by stage with Elizabethville, running from the latter place to Georgetown. The first settlers were of German and Swiss-French extraction.

WICONISCO TOWNSHIP.

THE 90th section of an act of the General Assembly, passed July 2, 1839, Pam. Laws, page 602, provides:

That that part of Lykens township, in the county of Dauphin, north of lines to be run by the supervisors of said township, "commencing at a bridge crossing the head of the Widow Snyder's mill-dam at the Mifflin township line; thence east to the hand-board in the forks of road on the lands of Elder and Haldeman; thence a straight line to a house of Martin Rickert, now occupied by Peter Rickert, at the foot of the Short Mountain; thence east along the foot of the mountain (north side) to the Schuylkill County line, shall hereafter form a separate township to be called Wiconisco.

By the 54th section of an act, passed April 14, 1840, Pam. Laws, page 342, it is provided that "the name of Peter Rickert in the foregoing act shall be taken and construed to mean Henry Rickert, and that it shall be the duty of the supervisors to file the survey or plot of said lines run in the office of the Clerk of Quarter Sessions of the county of Dauphin."

On the 26th June, 1840, the plot or draft of the lines run was filed as above directed, and are as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a point on the Mifflin township line; thence north 63½ degrees east 296 perches to cross-roads; thence due east 464 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 83 degrees east 52 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 77 degrees east 30 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 53 degrees east 120 perches to a black-oak; thence north 60 degrees east 79 perches to a chestnut; thence north 65 degrees east 61 perches to a poplar; thence north 80 degrees east 450 perches to a white-pine; thence north 75 degrees east 82 perches to a white-pine; thence north 70 degrees east 280 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 67 degrees east 186 perches to a chestnut; thence north 64 degrees east 300 perches to a chestnut; thence north 67 degrees east 310 perches to a white-oak at the Schuylkill County line, making in all 8 miles, 150 perches."

The early history of Wiconisco is embraced in that of the valley proper. The erection of the township divested the old township of Lykens of its coal-mining operations; all the collieries and coal-beds now lying in the new township. The contiguity of the town of Lykens, however, to that of Wiconisco borough being less than half a mile distant, still gives the former borough the prestige of being the business centre of the Lykens Valley coal operations.

The land where Lykens and part of Wiconisco now stands was owned by James Way, of Chester County, who died in 1825, before receiving a patent therefor from the State. His executor, George Pearce, obtained a patent for the land Feb. 2, 1826, and had it with other contiguous tracts surveyed by Isaac Ferree and his son, Joel B. Ferree. After they were surveyed they were put up for sale at public outcry down at the brick mill and sold. The conditions were that any person purchasing any tract was to pay immediately after the sale twenty-five dollars in cash as hand money.

LYKENS BOROUGH.

The tract of sixty-seven acres on which the borough of Lykens stands was struck down to Jane and Rachel Ferree for nineteen dollars and ninety cents. The sale really was to their father, Isaac Ferree, but for prudential reasons he ordered the deed for this tract to be made in the names of his daughters, Jane and Rachel. Isaac Ferree formerly owned a considerable amount of land in this section, and operated a powder-mill, the products of which he sold all over the country, and frequently took long drives up the river to his customers. He brought the saltpetre from Philadelphia by teams. Joel B. Ferree and his sisters subsequently laid out a town on this tract, named it Lykenstown, and the two sisters sold the lots for eleven dollars each. They were all numbered and drawn by lottery, and some hundreds of lots were thus drawn and paid for. Upon these lots log houses were built by William Zerby, Isaac Ferree, Martin Blum, Jacob Staley, Kate Bordner, Benjamin Drum, John Shehan, and Patrick Martin, south of the railroad, some of which are yet standing. The first log house, however, was built by Joel B. Ferree, in the lower part of the borough, in April, 1832, the stonework of which was done by Richard Nolen. This was the extent of Lykens in 1832.

In 1803, Simon Gratz recovered a judgment for a small amount against Isaac Ferree, and kept it alive by successive writs of scire facias. In 1835 said judgment was issued upon, and the land sold as belonging to Isaac Ferree, the court holding, in the legal contest which followed, that his daughters only held the property in trust for him. Therefore the purchaser, Simon Gratz, purchasing at sheriff's sale the interest of Isaac Ferree, it is presumed, received a good title. After the death of Simon Gratz, the land was conveyed to William Hawkins, who the same day sold it to Edward Gratz. He bought up a tax title to the same, held by Jacob M. Haldeman and Thomas Elder, July 8, 1847, which gave him an undisputed title. He then caused it immediately to be laid in lots a second time, as they now are, by Daniel Hoffman, in 1848. The first purchasers, under the Ferree sisters, all lost their lots, with the exceptions of those whose deeds were recorded at a certain date.

Since its first settlement the town has rapidly increased in wealth, influence, and population. It is the centre of the coal trade of the Upper End, and much of the industrial development of that section is due to the energy displayed by its citizens.

Lykens borough received its charter of incorporation in 1871. The chief municipal officers since that year have been :

BURGESSES.

1872. Hon. M. B. Young.	1878. Charles Wolcott.
1874. L. Katzenburg.	1880. W. S. Young.
1875. Charles Wolcott.	1881. Riley Bressler.
1876. John E. Nace.	1883. Henry Feindt.

TOWN CLERKS.

1872. C. A. Harper.	1877. P. S. Bergstresser.
1873. E. H. Willson.	1879. Henry Helt.
1874. Harry W. Troy.	1881. John O'Neil.
1875. John E. Nace.	1883. Henry Helt.
1876. Benjamin F. Eby.

The borough has no debt.

GRACE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The first sermon ever preached in this place was by Rev. Thomas Sovern, of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Halifax, in 1833, it being the funeral sermon of a young Englishman killed in the mines. This sermon was preached on the porch in front of Michael Sheaffer's house. The next religious service was a prayer-meeting held in the stone school-house which stood near where the coal dirt has been burning for years. That meeting was opened by Richard Nolen, who had built the school-house. This meeting was there kept up for some time, and until another school-house was erected, and for a long time the preaching, prayer-meetings, and Sunday-schools were held in it until the building of the present churches. In 1848, Edward Gratz, Hon. A. O. Hiester, and Richard Nolen took the incipient steps for building a Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Gratz gave the lot and guaranteed the collection of two hundred dollars towards the building.

Mr. Nolen opened the subscription-list, and in 1850 a building committee was appointed. Mr. Nolen did the stone-work, and it was completed under the pastorate of Rev. John Cummins, and dedicated in January, 1852. This was the first church in Lykens, and this stone building is now owned by A. F. Englebert, who rented it for a dwelling, and subsequently was used for an armory. The present church edifice is the finest in the borough. Lykens and Wiconisco Circuit was formed in 1857 out of Halifax Circuit, whose pastors to that date had supplied it with preaching. Since then the pastors have been : 1857, Charles L. Stineman ; 1858, Able Howard ; 1859, John C. Gregg ; 1860, A. Fisher ; 1861, Oliver W. Landreth ; 1862, S. J. Kemble ; 1863-65, C. H. McDermit ; 1865-67, J. M. Wheeler ; 1867-68, J. J. Jones ; 1869-72, F. M. Brady ; 1872-74, J. A. Watson ; 1874-77, J. F. Meredith ; 1877, George G. Rakestraw ; 1878-80, H. R. Calloway ; 1881, Israel M. Gable, William Powick.

CHRIST PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Lykens parish was organized in 1861. The first preaching was by Rev. William V. Feltwell, in the school-house, who officiated as deacon. Mr. Feltwell's services ceased in May, 1863, from which time to 1870 no services were held, save lay readings by S. H. Barrett and George E. Hoffman. The parish was reorganized May 7, 1871, and Rev. Daniel Shaver temporarily officiated. Occasional services were held until Oct. 3, 1871, when Rev. V. Hummel Berghaus became rector. Under his rectorship the church was chartered in 1872, and the corner-stone laid for the present church edifice on May 26, 1874. He resigned Jan. 1, 1875, and for four years there was no rector. Rev. Jesse M. Williams was called in 1879, and remained two years, when he was succeeded by Rev. S. H. Boyer, who continued about a year and a half. His successor was the present rector, Rev. Henry C. Pastorius, who came June 12, 1881. The church edifice was consecrated Jan. 4, 1881, and before its erection the services were held in the brick school-house.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The first minister representing the Evangelical Lutheran Church in this vicinity was the Rev. C. F. Stoever, who preached occasionally in Lykens and Wiconisco. He was on the Berrysburg charge from 1845 to 1850. The next minister who effected a temporary organization of the congregation at Lykens and Wiconisco was Rev. N. Yeager, of the Berrysburg charge, who was here from 1850 to 1852. Rev. D. Sell, of same charge, came Nov. 2, 1853, and took up this vicinity and permanently organized the congregation, and built the present church edifice in 1859. He remained pastor until April 1, 1861, and was succeeded by Rev. P. P. Lane, who continued till April 1, 1862. Rev. G. P. Weizer took charge then until April 1, 1863, and his successor, Rev. C. A. Fetzer, remained until April 1, 1866. Rev. M. Fernsler came on the Berrysburg charge Dec. 2, 1866, to April 1, 1871, at which time Lykens and Williamstown were made a separate charge, and the Rev. D. Kloss took Lykens April 1, 1871, to April 1, 1877. Rev. J. A. Wirt, the present pastor, came in charge June 1, 1877.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—Before the erection in 1873 of this church edifice the association had had preaching occasionally some six or seven years in the school-house. Its pastors have been: 1872-73, W. A. Shumacker; 1874, J. H. Wulfurth; 1875-77, L. N. Warman; 1877, J. R. Hensel; 1878-80, J. S. Newhart; 1880-82, A. A. Delong. Up to 1880 this congregation was a part of Williamstown Circuit, but is now the Lykens Circuit, and embraces Wiconisco and Dayton's school-house, just this side of Williamstown.

ST. MARY'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.—Before 1852 services were occasionally held in the town by Father Maher, of Harrisburg. In 1852 the present church edifice was begun by Father Egle, the first regular pastor, on the formation of the congregation, and was completed in 1853. The next pastors were: in 1853, Father McLoughlin, who remained eleven years; in 1864, Father McElvain, succeeded by Father Lochland, then Father Noonan, then Father McElvain (second time), then Father Murray, then Father Mark

O'Neill, the present incumbent. The residence or parsonage was built in 1876. The building of the church edifice was largely due to the labors of J. M. Blum, the first merchant of the town.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The congregation was organized in 1873, and the first church edifice, a frame structure, erected in 1874. It burned down in February, 1876, and the present one was built in 1879. Its pastor has been since its organization Rev. M. B. Lenker, who has also a charge at Tower City and at Johnstown, Schuylkill Co., and a mission at Williamstown.

THE GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH was built in 1874, but is now the property of the Miners' Deposit Bank. Last pastor in 1880 was the Rev. A. S. Stauffer.

UNITED BROTHERS IN CHRIST.—This church edifice was remodeled in 1874 as a centenary. Rev. Mr. Lehman is the present pastor.

MINERS' DEPOSIT BANK.—The first banking business done in Lykens was by a branch of the Lykens Valley Bank. It was started in 1870, with C. J. Corbett sole officer. On May 6, 1872, the Miners' Deposit Bank was incorporated with an authorized capital of one hundred thousand dollars; sixty thousand dollars was paid up. The first president was J. M. Blum, whose successors have been E. G. Savage, J. Reigle, W. E. Ray, and the present incumbent, A. F. Englebert. C. J. Corbett was cashier up to July, 1879, when he was succeeded by E. W. Deible, who had been its teller from its first organization. Its present capital is fifty thousand dollars.

NEWSPAPERS.—In 1856 the first printing-press was brought to Lykens. It was a No. 2 Washington hand-press, and is still in the Register office. The first paper published was entitled The Farmers' and Miners' Journal, and the first issue appeared Aug. 16, 1856. The office was owned by an association, which employed Dr. J. B. Hower as editor, with S. B. Coles as publisher. The services of the doctor were dispensed with at the end of three months, and upon Mr. Coles then devolved the management of the paper for some two weeks, when E. J. Pinkerton, of Lancaster, took charge of the office, and remained nearly a year, when he left. Daniel Hoffman then took the paper as publisher and proprietor, with George Wolf Buehler as editor. This continued thirteen months, when Mr. Buehler became proprietor and publisher, and so continued until October, 1861, when the office turned all of its four employes into the army as its quota to aid in the suppression of the Rebellion, causing the suspension of the paper. These four printer volunteers were Henry Keiser, of Company G, Ninety-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who served four years; John C. Gratz, of same company, who died in service of typhoid fever; John E. Roberts, enlisted at age of fifteen years in Company D, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves, and after proving his bravery on three fields, fell at New Market Cross-Roads, June 26, 1862, and though supposed to be but wounded at the time, was never afterwards heard of; and Christopher C. Hynicka, of Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was captured by the Confederates, and after a confinement of over a year was unable to reach the boat to be transported home, and surrendered his life on the altar of his country. The office then passed into the hands of S. B. Coles, who published an advertising medium called The Business Man's Journal. This continued until Aug. 1, 1865, when Capt. George W. Fenn was induced to purchase one-half of the office and establishment. The 17th of August, 1865, he published the first number of The Upper Dauphin Register and Lykens Valley Miner as a Republican paper. This firm continued but a few months, when Mr. Coles again became owner of the concern, and published the paper until November, 1868, when the present owner, Samuel M. Fenn, came in possession. On Jan. 1, 1872, the paper was enlarged, the name changed to Lykens Register. A new power-press and new material were purchased, and the Register, now firmly established, takes rank as one of the live local papers of the State. It is a thirty-two-column weekly journal, and is published Fridays.

The first number of the Lykens Record was issued July 11, 1874, by Ettinger & Charles, who continued its publication until purchased by the Lykens Printing Association incorporated March 3, 1876. The stock of this corporation was held by forty-five citizens, principally business men of the Upper End. A board of directors, president, superintendent, treasurer, and editor were annually elected to conduct the business. This paper, a thirty-two-column sheet, containing original matter on both sides, and having at one time a circulation of over seven hundred, was published about three years and then abandoned.

WICONISCO.

This enterprising town lies on the historical stream and in the township of same name. It is located on a tract of forty-eight acres of land sold in 1826 by George Pearce as executor of James Way. The conditions of the public sale were that any person purchasing any tract (of the many then to be offered) should pay immediately after the sale twenty-five dollars as hand money. This forty-eight-acre tract was struck off to John Gilbert for twelve dollars. Mr. Pearce then demanded of Gilbert the twenty-five dollars, according to the conditions, which the latter would not pay and did not take the land. Then Daniel Hoffman agreed to take it, but according to the deed he only paid for it twelve dollars after all. After the latter's death his heirs sold it for something like fifty dollars per acre. Henry Sheaffer opened the first store in a small log house in 1832. Another early settler was his brother, Michael Sheaffer, who died in November, 1849. Benjamin Carman, who kept store several years prior to 1848, removed it that year to Lykens.

The town was laid out in 1848 by Thomas Couch and Peter W. Sheaffer. It is largely settled by miners, who with their families compose an industrious and thrifty class of people. It is separated from Lykens by the Wiconisco Creek.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH edifice is the oldest, having been erected in 1854, and remodeled and enlarged in 1878. It forms part of the Lykens Circuit, for which see pastors.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION is the oldest congregation, having been organized in 1831, and with Lykens and Dayton's school-house forms a circuit, Rev. A. A. DeLong, pastor.

THE WELSH BAPTIST CHURCH was erected in 1865, Rev. Jones as pastor.

THE WICONISCO TANNERY, owned by George D. Moyer & Son, is the principal industrial establishment in the town of Wiconisco. It is located near the line of the Summit Branch Railroad, and has lately been remodeled and the business facilities largely increased.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

UPON the petition of inhabitants of Mifflin township asking for a division of that township, the court, on the 3d of September, 1845, issued an order to three commissioners to view and report on the propriety of granting the prayer of said petition, who reported that in their opinion a division of said township was necessary, and that they had laid off the following portion of the same, to be called Washington, to wit:

"Beginning at a post on the line dividing said township of Mifflin from Upper Paxtang township, on the property belonging to Philip Lenker; thence a straight line bearing north seventy-five and a half degrees east fifteen hundred and six perches, or near four and three-quarter miles, to a post on the line dividing said township of Mifflin from Lykens township; thence by said line bearing south seven degrees east and about two and three-quarter miles to the top of Berry's Mountain; thence along the north side of said mountain westward four and three-quarter miles to a stone heap; thence along the Upper Paxtang township line north seven degrees west two and three-quarter miles to the place of beginning."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 23d day of January, 1846. As thus erected the township includes the fairest portion of the Lykens Valley. It is well watered by Wiconisco Creek, and is a highly-productive region. The early history of the township is comprised in that of the valley proper, for within the confines of the township Andrew Lycans, the pioneer, settled and lived.

ELIZABETHVILLE is a prosperous village, situated on the Summit Branch Railroad, nine miles from Millersburg. It was laid out about 1817 by John Bender, who owned a large tract of land upon which it is now located and in the immediate vicinity. It was for a long time called "Benderstoettle," but finally the name of Elizabethville was given it in honor of the founder's (John Bender) wife. Before it was laid out Richard Peter had built a house on the lot now the property of Widow Rickert. After the laying out of the place the first house built was put up by John Bender, and stood on the old road, but was subsequently removed to the new road, and is now owned by Adam Messersmith. It was a log structure, but has been weatherboarded and remodeled. The first blacksmith in the town was Martin Paul, although John Smith had a blacksmith-shop a short distance from the village, while his father, Adam Smith, at an earlier period had a shop farther from the place. The latter moved to town about 1819, and his son, Daniel Smith, who was born in 1809, is the oldest continuous resident there. The first store was opened by Benjamin Buffington in 1842, at which time there were not over a dozen houses in the village. John Bender, the founder of the town, kept the first hotel, which, being on the old Harrisburg road, was quite a resort for travelers and teamsters. The first wagon-maker was Benjamin R. Buffington. The first physician was Dr. John B. Stroup, who located in 1852, and who resides near the town.

WASHINGTON SQUARE is situated east of Elizabethville, and continuous therewith. It is the railroad station for the latter village, and properly is included in the same post-office. For a long time it was called Cross-Roads, and then Washington Square, by which latter title it is generally known. In 1832 there was only one house in the place. It is now a flourishing town with several stores, telegraph-office, and a number of small industries, the principal of which latter is the wagon establishment of Jonas Swab, which gives employment to a score of men.

THE LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CHURCH was erected in 1833 by the joint labors of the Salem Lutheran and Reformed congregations. It was built of stone by John Adam Heller, for three hundred dollars. The building committee on the part of the Lutheran congregation were Simon Sallada, Michael Runk, Ludwig-Lingert. Its Lutheran pastors have been: 1833-44, John Peter Shindel; 1844-50, J. N. Hemping; 1850-52, C. F. Walden; 1852-53, Nathan Jaeger; 1853-64, F. Waltz; 1864-70, Jeremiah Shindel; 1870-75, Thomas T. Steck; 1875-81, R. S. Wagner; 1881, Joseph Hilpot, who is the present incumbent.

The Reformed pastors have been Revs. Isaac Gerhart, N. E. Bresler, G. B. Leshner, Kratzing, and A. S. Stauffer, present incumbent, who was called in 1876. The Reformed Sunday-school superintendent is James Miller.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH was erected by the Methodists in 1871, who in 1877 conveyed it to the former denomination. About a mile east of the town is another church of the United Brethren, a neat frame building, erected a few years since, of which, as of the first named, the Rev. Mr. Light is pastor.

At OAKDALE, now Loyaltown Post-Office, is established a flourishing academy. Prior to 1870 the Methodist Episcopal Church was erected, but in that year the charge became a part of the Berrysburg, Cross-Roads, and Oakdale Circuit. Latterly regular preaching is no longer conducted in it.

WILLIAMS TOWNSHIP.

ON the 7th of February, 1869, the township of Williams was formed from the township of Wiconisco, the court directing the boundary lines as follows:

"Beginning at a black-oak on the Schuylkill County line east $46\frac{1}{2}$ degrees south 1380 perches; thence south 81 degrees west 1400 perches along the highlands of Berry's Mountain; thence due north 490 perches; thence north 60 degrees east 415 perches to the place of beginning."

As thus formed, the township is bounded on the north by Lykens township, on the east by the Schuylkill County line, on the south by Jackson township, and on the west by Wiconisco township, and includes most of what is commonly called Williams Valley. Although one of the smallest townships in the county, it is by no means the least important. It is the centre of the Lykens Valley coal basin, and the termination of the Summit Branch Railroad. Its early history and the development of its coal interests are part of the history of Lykens Valley. The business of the township centres in the mining operations.

WILLIAMSTOWN.—This great coal mart has come into existence as a town since the commencement of the coal trade. Near it is the Summit Branch Railroad and the famous Williamstown Colliery, the largest in America. In 1873 it shipped three hundred and one thousand three hundred and twenty-six tons of coal. The coal company began operations in the spring of 1866. The town was laid out by the coal company, by Martin Blum and Mr. Heilinder, and by Henry Workman, which three parties and company owned all the land upon which the town stands. What is the town proper was once offered in exchange for five thousand shingles, and subsequently sold for a span of horses, not worth over three hundred dollars, by a Mr. Updegrove. The first store in the place was kept by Jacob Hartman, and the next three were opened by George Hains, Daniel Batdorf, and Joseph W. Durbin. The oldest house in or near town is that of John Hartman, built before the coal trade opened. Jacob Hartman kept the first tavern and George Hains the second, both in connection with their little stores. Joseph W. Durbin was the first regular merchant on a large scale, and located here in May, 1866. The town was laid out in 1869, and is the largest mining town in the Upper End.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION erected the first church, which was built in 1869 and 1870, and on the 29th of December of the latter year the congregation was incorporated. It was first a part of the Berksburg Circuit, then made Williamstown Circuit, out of which Lykens has since been taken. The pastors have been: 1871, R. Dreiblebiss, A. A. Delong; 1872, R. Dreiblebiss; 1873, W. A. Shoemaker; 1874-76, J. S. Wulfurt; 1876-78, L. N. Worman; 1878-80, J. S. Newhart; 1880-82, H. J. Glick. Before the erection of the church edifice preaching was had in the school-house. The parsonage was purchased in 1880. In the rear of the church is a neat cemetery, owned by the church, but open to all denominations for burials.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was erected in 1871. The pastors have been: 1871, F. M. Brady, Ephraim Potts; 1872-75, S. G. Grove; 1874-77, Henry White (one year, with Mr. Grove); 1877-80, Richard Turner; 1880-82, E. L. Martin. The parsonage was bought in 1880, and refitted.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH was erected in 1875, under the auspices of Rev. Mark O'Neill, present pastor, whose residence is Lykens. Before the church was built services were first held in the school-house and in the Williamstown Hall.

THE EMANUEL EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH building was erected in 1874, under the pastorate of Rev. D. Kloss, who was succeeded in 1877 by the present incumbent, Rev. J. A. Wirt, who resides in Lykens.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH building was erected in 1875 and 1876, on Broad Street. Its pastor is Rev. Thomas Coburn.

UNITED BROTHERS IN CHRIST.—This denomination has a neat church edifice, a frame structure, erected a few years since. Its pastor is Rev. Lehman, of Lykens, who has congregations at that point, here, and at Tower City.

BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY.

I.

[ALL SKETCHES MARKED WITH AN ASTERISK (*) WERE CONTRIBUTED.]

JAMES ALRICKS.

James Alricks belongs to probably the oldest family in the State. Pieter Alricks came from Holland with dispatches for the Dutch government on the Delaware in 1660, as appears by Hazard's Annals of Pennsylvania. He was immediately put in command of the fort, and was soon after sent with D'Hinnoyossa "to negotiate peace" with the Governor of Maryland. In 1665, the English having conquered the Dutch, the estate of Pieter Alricks was confiscated. Some years afterward the Dutch again obtained possession not only of the banks of the Delaware, but also of Fort Amsterdam, now New York City, and held possession until the English Governor, Andross, arrived, and then the Annals inform us thus: "Nov. 10, 1674, Fort Amsterdam, New York, was this day surrendered to Governor Andross, and all the magistrates in office at the time of the Dutch coming here to be reinstated for Delaware River, except Pieter Alricks, he having profiered himself to the Dutch at their first coming, of his own motion, and acted very violently as their chief officer ever since."

William Penn arrived for the first time on the Delaware in October, 1682. He was a model of moderation, for the next day in appointing "a court of judicature," composed of six justices, the second person named is Pieter Alricks. The next year Penn laid out the city of Philadelphia, and in 1685 he bought out the title of the Indians in a large body of land lying between Philadelphia and Wilmington, extending back from the Delaware River as far as a man "can ride in two days with a horse." The first witness to this Indian deed is Pieter Alricks.

Wiessel Alricks, son of Pieter, was a native of Wilmington, Del., removed to Philadelphia, and was afterwards sheriff of Philadelphia County. Fifty years after the witnessing of this deed by Pieter Alricks, his grandson, son of Wiessel, Hermanus Alricks, of the city of Philadelphia, gentleman, was examined under oath, and his testimony taken. This deed and the affidavit, dated in 1735, are both in print in the Pennsylvania Archives. Hermanus Alricks, then a young man, went some years afterwards and settled in what became Cumberland County, and was the first member of the Legislature at the organization of the county, in 1750. There were then but six counties in the State. The Legislature sat but a few weeks, and when he returned home to "Letort Springs," now Carlisle, he brought with him a commission appointing him prothonotary, register, recorder, clerk of the courts, and justice of the peace. The justices at that day sat upon the bench. While there he married Ann West from the north of Ireland, who had landed shortly before at Philadelphia with her brother, Francis West, afterwards the grandfather of the late Chief Justice Gibson. The chief of those offices, Hermanus Alricks, held as long as he lived, a period of nearly twenty-five years. All his children were born in Carlisle, his youngest child, James, the subject of this sketch, being born in that town on Dec. 2, 1769, in a house long afterward owned and occupied by Dr. McCoskry.

In 1791-92, James Alricks was engaged in mercantile business in May Town, Lancaster Co., and in 1815 he removed with his family from Lost Creek Valley to Harrisburg. He was a man of extensive reading, passionately fond of books, and he regarded an honest man, of fine education and refined manners, as the most remarkable object on the face of the earth. After his father's death he was raised on a farm in Donegal, Lancaster Co., and used to say that at that period no one could get an education for want of teachers. While lamenting his own want of education, he was remarkably well acquainted with history, ancient and modern, and with geography. He was likewise quite familiar with the writings of Shakespeare, Goldsmith, Burns, Campbell, etc. While living in the prime of life on the Juniata, he was delighted to meet and converse with such men as the Rev. Matthew Brown, the first Dr. Watson, of Bedford, Judge Jonathan Walker (the father of Robert J. Walker), William R. Smith, etc. He married, in 1798, Martha, second daughter of John Hamilton and Margaret Alexander, of Harrisburg. Mr. Alricks then resided at Oakland Mills, on Lost Creek, now in Juniata County, engaged in farming, but about 1815 removed to Harrisburg, where he entered mercantile pursuits. On March 10, 1821, he was appointed clerk of the Orphans' Court and Quarter Sessions, serving until Jan. 17, 1824. He subsequently served as one of the magistrates of the borough. Mr. Alricks died at Harrisburg on the 28th of October, 1833, aged sixty-four years. His wife preceded him, dying on the 16th of March, 1830. He was highly esteemed as a citizen, honorable and upright in character. The children of James Alricks were Ann, wife of Samuel Thompson, who was a merchant and died at Pottsville; Margaret, died unmarried; Hermanus and Hamilton, both eminent lawyers; Frances Evans, died unmarried; and Jane, wife of Ovid F. Johnson, an attorney-general of Pennsylvania. *

HERMANUS ALRICKS.

Hermanus Alricks, son of James Alricks and Martha Hamilton, was born at Lost Creek Mill, in Juniata County, in 1804. His descent in the paternal line was from Jacob Alricks, of Amsterdam, who was director for the Dutch West India Company on the Delaware, in 1657, and in the maternal line granddaughter of John Hamilton and Jane Allen, who came to Pennsylvania in 1745. In 1814 the family of Mr. Alricks removed to Harrisburg, and there the son grew to man's estate, thereafter one of the most respected citizens, receiving his education in the Harrisburg Academy, reading law in the office of Thomas Elder, Esq., marrying a daughter of Rev. William Kerr, who was a great-granddaughter of Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang. He quickly obtained a lucrative business before the courts, became one of the prominent men at the bar, and at his death the senior practitioner in Dauphin County. He was averse to holding office. The only one of prominence held by him was that of deputy attorney-general in 1829, by appointment of Hon. Amos Ellmaker, an appointment which made a great political uproar at the moment, and it is said caused the resignation of Mr. Ellmaker and of his deputy. He frequently served his fellow-citizens in municipal office, was a popular man with them, and his counsel sought upon all questions of importance.

In addressing a jury his manner was quiet, his statement clearly presented, and argument logical. His rule was to undertake no cause unless his client was able to demonstrate the justness of his case. His early training in the practice of the Orphans' and Registers' Courts soon gave him a lucrative business in that branch of his profession, where clear, concise expositions are of far more weight than the stirring eloquence of the Quarter Sessions. He was an excellent, precise, real-estate lawyer.

No one was a better reference upon questions of town or county history. His personal acquaintance was extensive, and his taste ran in acquiring the family traditions of our earliest settlers. His fund of information was at the service of his friends, always pleasantly and accurately retold, with the authority for each fact or anecdote, and he abounded with many curious and fascinating ones. His presence was imposing, quite six feet in stature, large frame, erect, and neatly clad, quite "like a lawyer of the olden time." He died at Harrisburg, February, 1874. His surviving family are Mary Wilson, married to James McCormick, Esq., William Kerr, Hamilton, Clara B., and Martha O. Alricks.

WILLIAM AYRES.

William Ayres, son of John Ayres and Jane Lytle, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born Dec. 14, 1788, at the eastern base of Peter's Mountain, Dauphin County, where his grandfather (whose name he bore) had settled in October, 1773. The locality is noted as the commencement of the old road over the mountain. William was endowed with rare native energy and unflinching perseverance, but his opportunities for educational improvement were meagre indeed; he was indeed self-educated. His first venture, apart from the business of his father's farm, was an engagement with James S. Espy, merchant at Harrisburg, in 1816. During his two years' residence there he married Mary Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Hon. Jacob Bucher, May 6, 1817.

The next year he was induced to return to Peter's Mountain, where he kept the hotel at the crossing, assisted in conducting the farm, and became justice of the peace Dec. 13, 1819. He was elected major Second Battalion of the Sixteenth Regiment, and commissioned Feb. 22, 1822.

Looking forward, however, to making the law his profession, he removed to Harrisburg in 1824, and resided along the river, just above the town. Here he acted as a justice both for the borough of Harrisburg and for Lower Paxtang and Susquehanna townships; while at the same time he pursued his legal studies under Samuel Douglas, Esq., an eminent member of the Dauphin bar.

He was admitted to practice May 3, 1826, and his private docket shows him to have been successful from the start. He had a very large acquaintance in "the Upper End," was able to speak German, and otherwise possessed many qualifications then valued and essential to practice with profit. The celebrated McElhenny murder case, in which he saved his client from the gallows, gave him a marked prominence.

He was also attorney for various officers of the county, turnpike companies, etc.

He was elected to the Legislature in 1833-34, and again for the session of 1834-35. During this time he was the coadjutor of Thaddeus Stevens in his great conflict against the powers of darkness and ignorance for the establishment of the common-school system of 1834. The friendship of Ayres and Stevens here begun lasted through life.

In 1839, William Ayres was elected to the Town Council, and the circumstance proved a fortunate one for Harrisburg. He at once brought his great energies to bear on a project for the introduction of Susquehanna water into the borough. The idea seemed so premature that it was deemed fanciful and impracticable. Nevertheless, he alone was the means of its accomplishment, which he did by borrowing funds from the United States Bank, of which he was then a director. Harrisburg received water in seven months' time from breaking ground, and this despite of much opposition from the old fogies.

His directorship in the United States Bank (at Philadelphia) was at the invitation of the famous Nicholas Biddle, who presented him with stock and had him elected; having selected him as "a country gentleman to complete the board of directors."

Harrisburg, and having obtained an act of incorporation he went vigorously to work, as was always his way, and Harrisburg was lighted with gas.

The incorporation of the Pennsylvania Railroad, about 1846, was a project in which he was much interested, and he gave his time and services on the "Hill" gratuitously.

By this time there was not a man in Central Pennsylvania more widely known for his spirit, energy, and capacity in matters of public improvement. As a result, he was engaged by the citizens of Huntingdon to lead a project in their coal region,—the Huntingdon and Broad Top Railroad. After securing the necessary legislation, he was elected president Jan. 10, 1853. He was obliged to spend so much of his

WILLIAM AYRES.

Having thus embarked in public enterprise, even to the great sacrifice of his legal practice, he next sought to obtain a free bridge over the river, but he could not obtain sufficient aid in subscriptions to buy out the old company. He was mainly instrumental in getting up the then new prison to replace the old jail.

He was an active supporter of Gen. Harrison for President; and the Harrison letters, still preserved, show that William Ayres was his confidential friend at the capital of Pennsylvania. He had been also the advocate of Governor Ritner, whose confidential correspondence is also preserved.

The successful introduction of water encouraged him to attempt the formation of a gas company at time at Huntingdon that he could only give the road a good start; but he left its completion to others. He relinquished his position with honor, the company voluntarily presenting him two thousand dollars in cash and stock.

He immediately took up a more convenient enterprise, the Harrisburg and Hamburg Railroad, a rival line to the Lebanon Valley Railroad. He became president of the company, obtained subscriptions, and had the route surveyed, with the intention of beginning active operations in the spring of 1856. The winter of 1855-56 was devoted to office work by the engineers at Jonestown.

But William Ayres' iron constitution was crumbling by the insidious action of heart-disease. He was unable to give his own active duty or instill his own energy into others, and the railroad languished just when it should have progressed.

Mr. Ayres died, after some months' illness, May 26, 1856. His fellow-citizens united with his associates of the bar in attesting the loss of one in whom the capital of Pennsylvania found her most enterprising and energetic citizen, ever ready to labor and sacrifice for the public good, and one who, having many opportunities to have made himself rich, could never be tempted or bribed, proved unflinchingly honest, and died poor. *

MAJ. JOEL BAILEY.

Joel Bailey, son of Joseph and Lydia Bailey, was born Sept. 26, 1789, in Penn's Manor, Bucks Co., Pa. He learned the trade of a blacksmith, but late in life became a contractor on the public works. He came to Harrisburg shortly after his majority. He was first lieutenant of Capt. R. M. Crain's company in the war of 1812-14, and for many years subsequent was brigade inspector and a prominent military officer. In 1821 he was appointed one of the commissioners to fix the site of the seat of justice of Juniata County, and for a number of years was keeper of the State arsenal at Harrisburg. He was burgess of the borough in 1832, and served several terms as a member of Council. Maj. Bailey was a very active politician, an influential citizen, and a high-toned and upright gentleman, who had the respect and esteem of all who knew him. He died at Harrisburg on the 16th of October, 1845. He married, March 10, 1814, Elizabeth Seidle, of Berks County, who died Aug. 14, 1875, aged eighty-three years.

JOHN C. BARNITZ.

John Charles Barnitz, son of George Barnitz (1770-1844) and Maria Catharine Spangler (1769-1824), was born Feb. 26, 1795, at York, Pa. His ancestors were early settlers in York, and among the more prominent in the business and political affairs of that section. John C. was educated in the schools of York, and learned the occupation of a brewer. In 1831 he removed with his family to Harrisburg, purchased the lot on the corner of Third and Locust Streets, whereon he built a brewery the same year, and which he managed for a long period. He died Jan. 31, 1872, at Harrisburg. He was an active and energetic citizen, and in the First Lutheran Church, with which he was connected many years, filled responsible positions, and was organist until the burning of the First Church building, and also of the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Barnitz married, Oct. 17, 1820, Elizabeth Kunkel, born May 9, 1799, at Harrisburg, where she died Jan. 19, 1880, daughter of Christian Kunkel and Elizabeth Weltzhover.

HENRY BEADER, Sr.

Henry Beader, son of Peter and Susannah Beader, was born in 1763, in Paxtang township, Lancaster

(now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received an education such as the schools of the period afforded, and was brought up on his father's farm until his seventeenth year. In 1779 he was in Capt. Rutherford's company which marched to Bedford County to protect the settlers there from the Indians while gathering their crops. He learned the business of a brewer, in which he established himself at Harrisburg shortly after its founding. He became quite prominent in the affairs of the new town and county, and served as one of the commissioners of the county from 1792 to 1794, and from 1797 to 1799; was county treasurer from 1806 to 1809, and commissioned by Governor Snyder register and recorder of Dauphin County, an office he filled acceptably until his death, which occurred Aug. 13, 1816, at Harrisburg, aged fifty-three years. Mr. Beader married Margaretta Horter, daughter of Valentine Horter and Magdalena Reis (born 1768; died 1847), at Harrisburg, and with her husband there buried. Their children were Henry, died unmarried, a gentleman who always took a deep interest in the prosperity of his native town; was a member of the Borough Council many years, a justice of the peace, and at the time of his death an alderman of the city; Elizabeth, married John Jacob Miller; Catharine, married, first, Nicholas B. Wood, second, Montgomery Kirk; John Louis, d. s. p.; Mary Anna, married Thomas Cooch; Peter, died unmarried; and Susan, married, first, David Beisel, second, John Pricer.

CAPT. JAMES BEATTY.

Prior to the laying out of the town of Harrisburg came James Beatty and family, locating there. From the family record, in the possession of his descendants, we have this entry: "That my children may know the place of their nativity I, James Beatty, was born in the Kingdom of Ireland, and County of Down, Parish of Hillsborough and Townland of Ballykeel-Ednagonnel, in the year of our Lord 1746, and came to America in the year 1784. My wife, Ally Ann Irwin, was born in said kingdom, county and parish, and Townland of Tillynmore, within two miles of Hillsborough, three of Lisburn, three miles of Dromore, and six miles of Bally-nahinch,¹ and ten of Belfast, which last place we sailed from the 27th of June, 1784." In the fall of this year he was settled at Harrisburg, and thus became one of its first inhabitants.

It may not be out of place in this connection to refer to the ancestors of James Beatty. After the battle of the Boyne there was a large influx of Scotch families into the north of Ireland. Among them was that of James Beatty, who located in the county of Down. The building he erected, known as "Sycamore Lodge," is yet standing, and has never been out of the occupancy of a James Beatty. It was here that the subject of our sketch was born. The first James Beatty was at the head of a very large family, some of whose descendants remain in the land of their nativity, but the greater portion are scattered over many States of the Federal Union. He was a Covenanter of the old school, and a prominent member of the Anahilt congregation, near which church repose the remains of himself and a portion of five or six generations following.

His son, William Beatty, was the father of Capt. James Beatty. He died at Ballykeel-Ednagonnell in February, 1784, and was buried in Anahilt glebe. "The grave," writes one of his descendants, "is covered with a flat tombstone, and with the exception of the name nothing can be traced, owing to the wear and tear of the weather and the continual friction of passing feet. The central portion of the stone has been worn perfectly smooth." William Beatty married, in 1741, Mary McKee, and had issue.

A few months after the death of his father, James Beatty, his wife and children came to America. He became the purchaser of a number of lots in the town of Harrisburg, some of which remain in possession of his descendants. He became quite prominent in his adopted home, and held several official positions under the borough charter. He died on the 1st of December, 1794, at the age of forty-eight, comparatively a young man. He was buried in the Presbyterian graveyard, of which church he held membership.

Capt. Beatty married, in 1768, Alice Ann Irwin, daughter of Gawin Irwin and Mary Brereton, of Tullymore. She died in Harrisburg, June, 1805.

In personal appearance Capt. Beatty was about five feet eight inches, thick set, florid complexion, dark hair, and blue eyes. He was an active and energetic business man, and his death was a great loss to the young town.

GEORGE BEATTY.

George Beatty, youngest son of James Beatty and Alice Ann Irwin, was born in the Townland of Ballykeel-Ednagonnell, county Down, Ireland, Jan. 4, 1781. His father emigrated to America in the summer of 1784, locating at Harrisburg the same year. The elder Beatty dying in 1794, the son, after receiving a regular school education, learned the watch and clock-making with his brother-in-law, Samuel Hill, whose clocks are more or less celebrated to this day. In 1808, Mr. Beatty established himself in business, which he continued uninterruptedly for upwards of forty years. He was an ingenious mechanic, and constructed several clocks of peculiar and rare invention. In 1814 he was orderly sergeant of Capt. Thomas Walker's company, the Harrisburg Volunteers, which marched to the defense of the city of Baltimore. Mr. Beatty in early life took a prominent part in local affairs, and as a consequence was frequently solicited to become a candidate for office, but he almost invariably declined. He nevertheless served a term as director of the poor, and also as county auditor. He was elected a burgoess of the borough, and was a member of the Town Council several years, and while serving in the latter capacity, was one of the prime movers in the efforts to supply the borough with water. Had his suggestions, however, been carried out, the water-works and reservoir would have been located above the present city limits. Mr. Beatty retired from a successful business life about 1850. He died at Harrisburg on the 10th of March, 1862, aged eighty-one years, and is interred in the Harrisburg cemetery. He was an active, enterprising, and an upright Christian gentleman.

WILLIAM BELL.

William Bell was born at Jaysburg, Pa., in 1790. His education was limited, and was in early life, owing to the accidental death of his father by drowning, apprenticed to the trade of a carpenter. He came to Harrisburg during the erection of the capitol, and was employed by Mr. Hills until its completion. He carried on the business until 1829, when he established a grocery, which he conducted until his death. He served frequently as a member of the Borough Council, and took a deep interest in the prosperity of his adopted home. He died at Harrisburg, on the 20th of May, 1847, aged fifty-seven years. Mr. Bell married in 1819, Elizabeth Hutman, daughter of Matthias and Catharine Hutman, born in 1792; died Feb. 28, 1868, at Harrisburg. Their children were, Catharine, George, William, Maria (married Edward Curzon), Ann, and Elizabeth.

GEORGE BERGNER.

George Bergner was a native of the village of Neunkirchen, a few miles distant from the free city of Bremen, in the kingdom of Hanover, where he was born on the 6th of June, 1818. He came to America at the age of twelve years, and reaching Reading, Pa., he apprenticed himself to Engelman, a printer and a well-known almanac-maker, with whom he served his time. In 1834 he came to Harrisburg, and worked as a compositor on the different German newspapers and journals. In 1838 he was sent by the executive committee of the anti-Masonic party to Somerset, Pa., to publish a German campaign paper, and during the Harrison campaign was sent on a similar service to New Bloomfield, Perry Co. In 1841 he purchased the Vaterland Waechter of his former employer, Mr. Ehrenfried. During the Know-Nothing campaign of 1854 he published the American, in opposition to the tenets of that then dominant party. The following year he purchased the Telegraph, which he soon established on a successful and permanent basis. From 1857 to his death he was the publisher of the Legislative Record. In 1861, Mr. Bergner was appointed by President Lincoln postmaster at Harrisburg. He was removed by President Johnson in 1866, but upon the election of President Grant he was reappointed to the position, an office he held at the time of his death. During the Rebellion his pen and his purse were at the service of the Union, while he himself went out as a private soldier in the First Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, during the invasion of the State in 1862. Mr. Bergner's life was an active one, and yet, apart from his own business affairs and official position, much of his time was given to the public. For many years he was one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison, was a trustee of the State Lunatic Asylum, vice-president of the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society, bank director, etc. His business career was a very successful one. He died at Harrisburg, after a very brief illness, Aug. 5, 1874, aged fifty-six years.

REV. WILLIAM BERTRAM.

William Bertram, of respectable parentage, was born Feb. 2, 1674, in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland. He received his education in the university of his native place, studied for the ministry, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Bangor, Ireland, who gave him "ample testimonials of his ordination, ministerial qualifications, and regular Christian conversation." He married, about 1706, Elizabeth Gillespie, and their children were John and Elizabeth. During one of those periodical political excitements in the British Isles the son disappeared, and his parents, under the impression he had come to America, they determined, if possible, to ascertain his whereabouts, and came to Pennsylvania about the year 1730; but failing in their search they decided to remain in this country, and the following year we find him unanimously received by Donegal Presbytery, which he joined. At the same time George Renick presented him an invitation to settle at Paxtang and Derry, which he accepted. He was installed Nov. 17, 1732, at the meeting-house on Swatara. The congregation then appointed representatives. "On this side, Thomas Forster, George Renick, William Cunningham, and Thomas Mayes; on the other side, Rowland Chambers, Hugh Black, Robert Campbell, John Willson, William Willson, James Quigley, William McCord, and John Sloan." They executed to Bertram the right and title to the "Indian town tract," situated in Hanover township, on the north side of the Swatara, containing three hundred and fifty acres. On the settlement of Rev. Bertram the congregation in Swatara took the name of Derry, and the upper congregation, on Spring Creek, was styled Paxtang. In 1735, Mr. Bertram complained of the "intolerable burden" he was under with the two congregations, and Sept. 13, 1736, he was released from the care of Paxtang. The Rev. William Bertram died on the 2d of May, 1746, aged seventy-two, and his remains are interred in Derry Church graveyard, his wife dying prior thereto. He was a faithful minister of the gospel. It may be stated that through his marriage with Miss Gillespie his descendants became heirs to a handsome estate in Edinburgh. Efforts were made to secure this, but the difficulties inherent upon proving descent, we presume, have been the means of keeping the rightful parties from enjoying this patrimony.

SAMUEL S. BIGLER.

Samuel Smith Bigler, son of John Bigler, was born in 1815, in Harrisburg, Pa. His educational advantages were limited to the schools of the borough and the printing-office. He learned the art in the establishment of Jacob Babb, who then published the Morgenrothe, a newspaper with which he subsequently became identified as part proprietor and editor. Later in life he established himself in the lumber business, in which he was quite successful. He was a gentleman of energy and great force of character. In private life he was sociable, generous-hearted, and of agreeable manners. Well informed, he took a keen interest in public affairs, and withal conservative in his views of measures and men. He died at Harrisburg on the 16th of June, 1880, aged sixty-five years. Mr. Bigler married Sarah Ann Finley Laird, daughter of Andrew Finley Laird and Mary Shrom, who with five children survive.

FREDERICK BOAS.

Frederick Boas, son of Rev. William Boas, was born at Reading, Pa., July 3, 1785. His parents were emigrants from Germany and came over with the Muhlenbergs. Frederick learned the trade of a copersmith and tin-plate worker at Reading, but commenced business for himself at Kutztown. He came to Harrisburg in 1811, where he carried on his trade successfully. He was an enterprising citizen, and although quiet and unobtrusive, a representative man in the community. He died at Harrisburg June 13, 1817, aged thirty-one years. Mr. Boas married, May 17, 1811, Elizabeth, daughter of David Krause and Regina Orth, of Lebanon, who survived her husband many years, leaving two children, Frederick Krause and Elmina (Mrs. William Jennings).

JACOB BOAS.

Jacob Boas, brother of the preceding and son of the Rev. William Boas, was born at Reading, Pa., in 1786. He was brought up to mercantile pursuits and came to Harrisburg in 1805, where he established himself in business. He served as a member of the Borough Council, and was commissioned by Governor Snyder, Feb. 6, 1809, prothonotary and clerk of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, and died while in office, on the 8th of October, 1815. Mr. Boas married Sarah, daughter of Jacob Dick, of Reading. They had five sons, William D., Jacob D., John, Augustus F., and Daniel D.

AARON BOMBAUGH.

Aaron Bombaugh, son of Abraham Bombaugh and Catharine Reehm, was born Feb. 12, 1808, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated at the private schools of the town, and at the old Academy. He was placed early in youth to the trade of a hatter with Jacob Shoemaker, of Harrisburg, and at his majority went to Philadelphia for instructions as a finisher, and while there became a member of the "Association of Journeymen Hatters," being entered March 2, 1824. He returned to his native town and established himself in business, which he followed several years, until he was obliged to relinquish it, owing to impaired health, which had been affected by the dyes used in coloring the felt. He then assumed charge of his father's extensive limestone quarry, conducting that business with marked success. Like his father and grandfather before him, Mr. Bombaugh took a prominent part in municipal affairs, and frequently served in the Borough Council. From 1838 to 1844 he served as treasurer of the county of Dauphin, a position he filled efficiently and acceptably. He was one of the first advocates for the establishment of a lunatic hospital by the State for the insane poor of the commonwealth, and greatly aided Miss Dix in her efforts to secure State assistance for the inauguration of those noble charities which have so distinguished Pennsylvania. He was one of the first trustees of the institution located at Harrisburg. Having several farms near the city, the latter years of his life were passed in their management. He died at Harrisburg on the 13th of December, 1877, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He was an early Abolitionist, as the anti-slavery men were denominated, a decided anti-Mason in the days of that crusade, and with well-defined and positive convictions was ready to encounter any amount of obloquy in their defense. During the Rebellion he devoted his time and means to the care and comfort of the Pennsylvania soldiers in camp and hospital. He was the last survivor of the Unitarian Society established by the Rev. Mr. Kay, and which, from successive deaths and lack of fresh accessions, melted away many years since.

Mr. Bombaugh was twice married,—first, on May 3, 1827, to Mira Lloyd, daughter of Joseph Lloyd, an attorney-at-law, of Philadelphia, born there in 1809, and died Jan. 1, 1853, at Harrisburg, and their children were Dr. Charles Carroll, now of Baltimore, Md.; Lavinia, married Gilliard Dock, of Harrisburg; Alexander, d. s. p.; Catharine, married Junius B. Kaufman, a lawyer, of Lancaster, Pa.; and Julia, married Dr. Grafton, of Baltimore. Of these only Dr. C. C. Bombaugh and Mrs. Kaufman are living. Mr. Bombaugh married, secondly, Julia Duncan, of Duncan's Island, who survives.

ABRAHAM BOMBAUGH.

Abraham Bombaugh, son of Conrad Bombaugh and Esther Zell, was born in 1770 in Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received a fair German education, and entered mercantile life, subsequently, however, turning his attention to farming. His father, being a man of considerable influence in the young town, gave Abraham prominence, and being a gentleman of energy and activity, apart from his business tact, he was not long in winning his way to popular favor. As early as 1808 he was a member of the Town Council, and for a period of twenty-five years thereafter held a position therein. In 1809 he was chief burgess of the borough, and later on in life, from 1828 to 1831, elected to the same office. He was one of the county commissioners from 1832 to 1835, and for one or two terms was a director of the poor. Mr. Bombaugh died April 23, 1844, at Harrisburg. He married, March 18, 1802, Catharine Reehm, born July 14, 1770, died March 22, 1855. They had Aaron, married Mira Lloyd, of Philadelphia; Catharine, d. s. p.; and Sarah, married David Hummel.

CONRAD BOMBAUGH.

Conrad Bombaugh, son of George Bombaugh, was born at Middletown, Pa., about 1750. He was a millwright by profession, and established the first mill at Standing Stone, now Huntingdon. About the commencement of the Revolution he located at Highspire, and when the county of Dauphin was organized, in 1785, we find him a resident of the new town. He was a prominent citizen of Harrisburg, was the senior burgess of the borough during the Whiskey Insurrection, and signed the address to Gen. Washington on passing through Harrisburg westward. He died in April, 1821, aged seventy-one; married Catharine Zell, and they had one child, Abraham.

REV. JACOB BOMBERGER.

Jacob Bomberger, son of John Bomberger and Mary Bauman, was born in 1744 in Warwick township, Lancaster Co., Pa. He received the rudiments of a German education, and was brought up on his father's farm. During the Provincial era he served as an officer in the Second Battalion of the Pennsylvania troops under Gens. Forbes and Bouquet. During the Revolution he was some time in service, but turning his attention to religion he began to study such theological works as were within his reach. After the peace of 1783 he went into the Western country, and for many years missionated among the Indians in the Northwest. During the war of 1812-14, well advanced in life, he returned to Pennsylvania and remained with his friends. He died near Harrisburg, on the 4th of August, 1829, at the age of eighty-five, and was buried in Sherer's burying-ground. The labors of Mr. Bomberger for many years were of that self-sacrificing spirit and devotedness which proved that others there were beside the zealous Jesuit and the faithful Moravian, whose religious fervor and Christ-like example stand out as shining lights in the galaxy of the followers of the doctrines and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth.

JOHN F. BOWMAN.

John F. Bowman was born in Lancaster County, Pa., May 10, 1771. His father was a farmer, residing on Pequa Creek, not far from Strasburg. John F. was brought up as a millwright, but subsequently entered mercantile pursuits. In 1809 he removed to Halifax, where he was a merchant from that period to 1830, when, believing a larger sphere of trade was opened for him, he went to Millersburg, where he successfully continued in business until his death, which occurred on the 6th of November, 1835. Mr. Bowman first married, in 1794, a daughter of Isaac Ferree, whose farm adjoined that of his father. By this marriage they had the following children: Eliza, Maria, George, and Josiah (married Elizabeth Rutter). Mr. Bowman married, secondly, in 1805, Frances Crossen, daughter of John Crossen. They had issue as follows: John J. (married Margaret Sallade), Levi, Louisa, Isaac, Mary E. (married Rev. C. W. Jackson), Lucinda (married Dr. Hiram Rutherford), Jacob, Emeline, and Benjamin. His second wife, Frances Crossen, born Aug. 13, 1786; died Sept. 30, 1846, and lies interred beside her husband in the old Methodist graveyard at Millersburg.

John F. Bowman was one of the representative men of the "Upper End," enjoyed a reputation for uprightness and honesty, and highly esteemed by those who knew him. Genial, yet quiet and unobtrusive, he never sought or would accept any local or public office.

CAPT. ADAM BOYD.

Adam Boyd, the son of John Boyd and Elizabeth Young, was a native of Northampton County, Pa., born in 1746. His ancestors were of that sturdy and fearless race who, after winning religious liberty at home, braved the perils of the ocean and a life in the wilds of America, that they might establish civil and religious freedom in the New World. "In the tenth of Queen Anne," John Boyd and a younger brother, Rev. Adam Boyd, sons of Rev. Adam Boyd, Sr., left Scotland and landed at Philadelphia. John married there the year following, Jane Craig, daughter of Thomas Craig, and subsequently became (1728) one of the first immigrants to the "Irish Settlement," now Northampton County. His son, John, born in Philadelphia in 1716, married, in 1744, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Young, "an Ulster baronet." Their eldest son was Adam Boyd, the subject of this sketch.

He learned the trade of a carpenter, and was following that avocation when the war of the Revolution called to arms. He was an early associator, and when the State of Pennsylvania had formed its little navy for the protection of the ports on the Delaware, Lieut. Boyd received a commission therein. During the year 1776, and the early part of 1777, he was most of the time in command of the armed sloop "Burke," and rendered efficient service in the conflict between the Pennsylvania navy and the British ships "Roebuck" and "Liverpool" in May, 1776. Growing tired of that branch of the service, Lieut. Boyd requested to be discharged, that he might volunteer in the land forces. Being honorably dismissed the navy, he at once entered the army proper, holding the same rank therein. He was at the battles of Brandywine and Germantown, with two of his brothers, one of whom was killed in the latter engagement. Subsequently, Lieut. Boyd acted as "master of wagons," and as such remained with the army until after the surrender at Yorktown.

Returning to the home of his mother, near Newville, he married and came to Harrisburg. While passing through Harris' Ferry, in the spring of 1782, Mr. Boyd was struck with the immense advantages offered by the location of the proposed town, and subsequently purchased of the proprietor a lot on the corner of Second and Mulberry Streets. In 1784 he became a permanent resident. The dwelling-house erected by him in 1792 on lots 210 and 212 of the original plan of the borough, on Second below Mulberry, is yet in the ownership of his descendants.

Upon the incorporation of the borough of Harrisburg, in 1791, he was chosen a burgess, Dr. John Luther being the other. In 1792 he was elected treasurer of the county, and held the office until 1806, when he declined a re-election. In 1809, Mr. Boyd was elected a director of the poor, and during his term of office the county poor-house and mill were erected.

Mr. Boyd died on the 14th of May, 1814; was interred in the Presbyterian graveyard, but subsequently his remains were removed to the Harrisburg cemetery.

In private trusts Mr. Boyd was very frequently employed. His correspondence and accounts show precision and method, particularly the case with which he managed the estate of the younger William Maclay. In person he was five feet eight inches in height, a stout, healthy, florid man, dark brown hair and eyes. At fifty-two years of age he had no gray hairs. He is rated on the "Mill Purchase" at £23 2s., being the fourth highest assessment upon that curious record.

Mr. Boyd married, in 1784, Jeannette Macfarlane, of Big Spring, Cumberland County, daughter of Patrick and granddaughter of James Macfarlane, who came from Ireland to Pennsylvania in 1717. Mrs. Boyd died in early life at Harrisburg, leaving one child, a daughter Rosanna, who married Hugh Hamilton in 1807. This estimable lady lived until 1872, when she died, the oldest inhabitant of Harrisburg, having been born here in 1786.

GEORGE BOYER.

George Boyer, son of George Boyer (1760-1814) and Anna Maria (1760-1831), was born Sept. 16, 1781, near Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He received a limited education, learned the trade of a tanner, and for a number of years carried on that enterprise at Harrisburg, where his father was "an early inhabitant." For a long time he kept the "Golden Lamb," a favorite hostelry in its day at the corner of Second and Locust Streets, which his father had established as early as 1792. Mr. Boyer was quite prominent in political affairs, served frequently in the old Borough Council, and was elected auditor of the county in 1827, serving three years. He was an energetic citizen, and popular. He died at Harrisburg Feb. 9, 1839, in his fifty-eighth year. Mr. Boyer was twice married, his first wife, Mary, born Oct. 6, 1786; died Dec. 10, 1808; his second wife, Mary, born Oct. 12, 1782; died Aug. 2, 1858.

JOHN H. BRIGGS.

John Hanna Briggs, son of Joseph Briggs and Caroline E. Hanna, was born in 1815, at Silver Spring, Cumberland Co., Pa. His ancestors were of English descent, and early settlers in Pennsylvania. He received a classical education, and was a graduate of Rutgers College, New Jersey. Returning to Harrisburg, where his parents had made their home, he began the study of law with James McCormick, then one of the leading lawyers at the capital, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar April 18, 1837, and at once entered upon a successful practice of his profession. Mr. Briggs took a prominent interest in municipal affairs, was nine years a member of Borough Council, of which body he was eight years president. He was a director of the old Harrisburg Bank, of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, and president of the First National Bank of Harrisburg at the time of his death, which took place March 29, 1872, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. "He had gained," says Rev. Dr. Robinson, "the reputation of a wise and able counselor, and an untarnished name. He was a most upright citizen, useful, patriotic, and public-spirited. He was a true friend, generous and forbearing. His social qualities and gentlemanly bearing surrounding him with friends." Mr. Briggs married Juliann Tod, daughter of Judge John Tod and Mary R. Hanna.

CAPT. JOHN BRISBAN.

John Brisban, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, was born Dec. 25, 1730. With an elder brother he came to America at the outset of the French and Indian war. He was a soldier in that sanguinary struggle for French supremacy in America, and held a lieutenant's commission in the English army. He was a part of the time in Canada, and was with Gen. Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham. For those services he received a grant from George III. of two thousand acres of land in Virginia. He subsequently settled in Lancaster County. He early espoused the cause of the Colonies, and receiving a commission as captain in the Second (Col. St. Clair's) Pennsylvania Battalion, Jan. 5, 1776, raised a company mostly in the upper part of then Lancaster County, now Dauphin and Lebanon, which was in active service in Canada. At the close of that arduous campaign he was transferred to the Third Regiment of the Pennsylvania Line, resigning in July, 1777. He subsequently returned to the service, and remained almost to the close of the Revolution, when he returned to his farm near "Bird-in-Hand," Lancaster County, and was appointed collector of military fines. He was, however, too kind-hearted to oppress the delinquents, consequently he became responsible to the government for the amount, which resulted in Capt. Brisban becoming poor and penniless. All the papers pertaining to his military services were sent to Washington for the purpose of securing a pension, but unfortunately lost. Capt. Brisban was twice married, and left issue by both. He died at the residence of his son-in-law, Samuel Rutherford, near Harrisburg, Pa., March 13, 1822, aged ninety-one years. He lies buried in Paxtang Church graveyard. Capt. Brisban was an ardent patriot, and a gentleman of generous impulses. He lived an eventful life, and died at a ripe old age, honored and respected by his fellow-citizens.

MERCER BROWN, M.D.

Mercer Brown was born near Westchester, Chester Co., Pa., April 22, 1795. After receiving a thorough academic education, he began the study of medicine under Dr. King, of Columbia. He graduated in 1816, and located at McCall's Ferry, at which point many persons at that time were being employed in the erection of the bridge over the Susquehanna, numbers of whom had been attacked by severe sickness. He subsequently removed to Wrightsville, where he remained several years, when he located in Middletown, and, until his death, which took place Feb. 19, 1871, he was regarded as the head of the medical profession there. Dr. Brown was long a prominent actor in local and State politics. He was a candidate for Congress at one time, but, his party being in the minority in the district, he was defeated. As a citizen he was highly respected and beloved. Dr. Brown married Rebecca Wolfly, daughter of Jacob Wolfly, an early settler at Middletown. She died April 2, 1861.

PETER BRUA.

Peter Brua, the son of John Peter Brua, was a native of Berks County, Pa., where he was born in 1771. He learned the trade of a carpenter, and came to Harrisburg about 1792. He served as director of the poor from 1818 to 1821; was a member of the Borough Council in 1824, 1826, and 1829; commissioned county treasurer Jan. 7, 1824, and was one of the county commissioners from 1827 to 1829. While in the latter office he was a prime mover in establishing the Lancasterian system of education, which preceded that of the common schools. Mr. Brua was a gentleman of sound practical sense, honest and upright, and highly honored in the community. He died at Harrisburg on the 1st of January, 1842, in his seventy-first year. He married Catharine Rupley, of Cumberland County, Pa., who died on the 19th of January, 1833, aged sixty years. They had six children,—Margaret, married Hon. Simon Cameron; Lucretia, married Jacob Hoyer; Mary, married Isaac McCord; Catharine, married Andrew Keefer; Jacob, who went as private in the Cameron Guards to Mexico, and died at Tampico, a few hours after receiving his commission as a lieutenant in the United States army; and John Peter, who was a paymaster during the late civil war and now on the retired list of the United States army.

JOHN JACOB BUCHER.

John Jacob Bucher, born Jan. 1, 1764, was the eldest child of Rev. John Conrad Bucher, an officer of the Provincial service, and stationed at Carlisle. The father had been successively promoted from ensign to lieutenant, adjutant, and captain; but finally exchanging the military for the ecclesiastical, he became chaplain. In 1768 the father resigned and moved to Lebanon, Pa., where he accepted the pastorate of the German Reformed congregation. Here, at the age of fourteen, Jacob Bucher began to learn the trade of a hatter with Michael Krebbs, father of the distinguished Rev. John M. Krebbs, lately of New York City. Whatever of education Jacob obtained must have been derived from his accomplished father, and by self-tuition, as evidenced by his "copy-book," still preserved and now ninety-six years old!

After his freedom from apprenticeship he visited some maternal uncles "out West." Starting on his trip via Harrisburg, in 1785, John Harris wanted him, as a hat-maker, to locate in his "town," which was as yet no town. Jacob, not being able to see it, went his way, and during his sojourn attended an Indian council on the spot where Cincinnati stands to-day. Having the ague during three out of four years on the lower Ohio, he returned to Lebanon in 1789. But his paternal relatives at Shaffhausen, Switzerland, induced him to visit them, and off he went by packet from Philadelphia to Amsterdam. He was absent about a year, and returning, located at Harrisburg.

In March, 1792, Jacob married Susannah Horter, a maiden scarce eighteen, and he built the house No. 103 South Front Street as a home. His hatter-shop stood at No. 8, near Market Street. About 1804 he moved to the corner building, which the Bucher family still occupies, after three-fourths of a century, a longer time perhaps than any other continuous residence in the town. Jacob Bucher had two sons, the late Judge John Conrad, of Harrisburg, and Hon. George H., now residing at Mechanicsburg. His daughters married, respectively, William Ayres, Esq., of Harrisburg; Robert Allen, Esq., of Philadelphia; Hon. Joseph Lawrence, of Washington Co., Pa.; and Robert Bryson, Esq., now of Harrisburg.

The public life of Jacob Bucher began with his election as coroner in 1796; appointed by Governor Mifflin a justice of the peace in 1798; elected to the House of Representatives in 1803, and re-elected for the sessions of 1805-6 and 1807-8. In 1810 he was appointed chairman of the commission to erect the State buildings, preparatory to removal of the capital from Lancaster to Harrisburg. Edward Crouch, of Dauphin County, and John Dorsey, of Philadelphia, were his coadjutors, but he being the resident commissioner, the bulk of superintendence naturally devolved upon him.

In 1812 he was nominated by the Democratic party for Congress, but the Federalists carried the district. He was sent again to the Legislature in 1814 and the session following.

In 1818, Governor Findlay appointed him an associate judge for Dauphin County, which position he held nine years, until his death, Oct. 16, 1827, aged nearly sixty-four. It is a coincidence worth noting that his son, John Conrad, occupied the same office also for twelve years prior to his death, Oct. 21, 1852:

The trusts which Jacob Bucher filled of a more private character were those which designate him as a man enjoying the confidence of his fellow-citizens, and in the church a member above reproach. From his judicious management of the State buildings, or some other reason, he became the common treasurer or financier of the town. *

HON. JOHN C. BUCHER.

John Conrad Bucher, the son of Jacob Bucher and Susannah Horter, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 28, 1792. He bore the ancestral name of his father's family. He received such an education as the schools of the town afforded, and entered practical life in 1813, as a clerk in the old "Land Department" of Pennsylvania, under Gen. Andrew Porter and Richard T. Leech. In 1830 he was elected to the Twenty-second Congress from the district comprising Dauphin and Lebanon. In 1839 he was appointed by Governor Porter an associate judge of the county of Dauphin, which position he held for twelve years. He frequently served as a member of the Borough Council, and was a school director from the adoption of the common-school system until the day of his death. Few men have taken warmer and deeper interest in educational matters. He was also a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy, of (then) Franklin College at Lancaster, and of Marshall College at Mercersburg, and of the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church. In the German Reformed Church, among the "fathers" of which his grandfather, the Rev. John Conrad Bucher, of Lebanon, was a distinguished minister, he was regarded as a devout and conspicuous man. He was well known in its ecclesiastical councils, having been frequently a member of Classis and Synod, where he took the lead among the laymen in debate, and was treasurer of the Board of

John C. Pugh

Domestic Missions, and of the Theological Seminary. For a long period he was an active member of the executive committee of the Harrisburg Bible Society, and president of the association at the time of his death. In private life he was amiable, "given to hospitality," and eminently just. His death was very sudden, having been found dead in bed on Sabbath morning, October 26, 1851, and occurred in his fifty-ninth year, just after returning from a church-meeting at Lancaster. Judge Bucher married, Jan. 17, 1820, Eleanor, daughter of Jacob Isett, of Huntingdon County, Pa., who survived her husband thirty years, dying at Harrisburg, March 6, 1881, at the age of eighty-three. They had John C., Susan (married Alexander Ray, of Washington City), Eleanor, and Eliza (married Richard H. Hummel). Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Hummel, both widows, alone survive.

GEORGE BUEHLER.

George Buehler, the son of Henry Buehler, a soldier of the Revolution, and Jane Trotter, was born near the town of Lebanon, Pa., in July, 1776. His parents were Moravians; they lie buried in Mount Hebron burying-ground, and were lifelong members of old Hebron Church. George received a good English and German education at the celebrated Moravian school at Litiz, and was subsequently brought up to mercantile pursuits. He was commissioned by Governor Mifflin justice of the peace for Lebanon township Dec. 3, 1799. The year following, under the auspices of the Harrisburg and Presqu' Isle Land Company, he removed to Erie, and was appointed in August, 1801, by President Jefferson, collector of the Eighteenth Collection District of Pennsylvania. Mr. Buehler took a prominent part in the affairs connected with the early organization of Erie County. At his residence, on the 2d of April, 1803, that county was organized for judicial purposes. He was a member of the first Council of the town of Erie in 1806, and in 1808 and 1809 was borough burgess. He was one of the first to aid in developing the Lake Erie trade, foreseeing at that early day the advantages of that magnificent port on the lakes. In 1811-12 he was a member of the Erie Light Infantry, Capt. Forster, which was in active service during a portion of that period. In 1813, owing probably to the war troubles on the frontiers, he came to Harrisburg and took charge of the "Golden Eagle." He died at Harrisburg on the 5th of August, 1816, aged forty years. Mr. Buehler married previous to removing to Erie, Maria, daughter of Peter Nagle, of Reading. She was born Dec. 25, 1779, and died at Harrisburg July 27, 1843; a lady of great amiability of character. Mr. Buehler was a man of sterling integrity, and his brief life was one of activity, enterprise, and industry. At Erie he stood high in the esteem of its citizens, and at Harrisburg his appreciation was none the less.

WILLIAM BUEHLER.

William Buehler, son of George Buehler and Maria Nagle, was born in 1808, at Erie, Pa. His father removed from Erie to Harrisburg in 1813, and died at the latter place in 1816. When a young man, the son went to Chambersburg, where he learned the mercantile trade. He subsequently removed to Philadelphia, where he was engaged as a merchant in the hardware business. He returned to Harrisburg about December, 1848, and took charge of the Buehler House, which had been conducted by the family since 1813. Here he remained several years, when he embarked in the insurance business, then comparatively in its infancy, and became State agent for the insurance company of North America. The result was the establishment of one of the largest insurance departments in the State, successfully and reliably carried on until his death. It was not alone in the business walks of life that Mr. Buehler was widely known and esteemed. For many years he was a prominent and active member of the Protestant Episcopal Church; was warden of St. Stephen's Church, and the superintendent of its Sunday-school for a long period. He represented his church in the different dioceses to which he belonged, and took an earnest part in all questions that arose therein relating to the extension and prosperity of the church. From the organization of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania until his decease, he had been the treasurer thereof, a most responsible position, and by his good judgment, liberality, and kindness, did much to advance the financial interests of the new diocese. He was identified with the successful establishment of the Home for the Friendless, and was a member and officer of the Harrisburg Benevolent Society, which has done so much to relieve the poor and needy of the city. In every organized effort for public charity he took an active part, contributing and counseling, and working with his own hands to promote good works in others. But his individual charities were the most characteristic of the man, for it was by these that "he established for himself a brotherhood with men which made his name blessed among them." He died suddenly at Harrisburg on Sunday morning, June 12, 1881, aged seventy-three years. Mr. Buehler married May 17, 1831, at Chambersburg, Pa., Henrietta R. Snyder, who survives. Their children were Anna (married Robert A. Lamberton, LL.D., president of Lehigh University), Elizabeth (married, first, Charles Hammond, second, H. Stanly Goodwin), Catharine (married Capt. George Ramsey, United States Army), Dr. Henry B., William, and Edward.

COL. JAMES BURD.

James Burd, a Scot, was born at Ormiston, near Edinburgh, in 1726, son of Edward. He came to Philadelphia in 1747, married, 1748, Sarah, daughter of Edward Shippen, born 1780. Both died at Tinian, near Middletown, in Dauphin County, Pa. (Col. Burd in 1793, Mrs. Burd in 1784), and are buried in the graveyard at Middletown. Col. Burd resided from 1750 to 1753 at Shippensburg, as manager of the affairs of Mr. Shippen. About 1755 he came to Tinian, where he resided until his death. He entered the Provincial service (1755) as a commissioner with George Croghan, William Buchanan, and Adam Hoopes to lay out a road from "Harris' Ferry to the Ohio." He was then a captain; he is soon heard of as major, then lieutenant-colonel, and colonel in 1760. As there were but two regiments in service, his rank was a very prominent one. He fulfilled with great uprightness and punctuality all the public duties with which he was intrusted for quite twenty years. Then the stirring days of the Revolution came, and with it disaster to Burd as a public man. He seems to have entered heartily into the contest, but just when such experience as he had acquired would have been of the highest benefit, an unfortunate dispute about rank occurred; that, with insubordination in his command, and some criticism in the "Committee of Safety," caused him to resign his civil and military employments. His sons and son-in-law were good patriots, and a pretty thorough examination of the hasty conduct of Burd convinces us that he was, notwithstanding this affair, in accord with the leading patriots with whom he was surrounded. He was a man of fine form, hardy and healthy, an advanced and prosperous farmer, hospitable in his intercourse with his neighbors, and respected for his integrity as a civil officer from 1785, when Dauphin County was formed, until his death, in 1793. He died holding position as one of the county judges.

MICHAEL BURKE.

Michael Burke was born on the 29th of September, 1797, in Templetrathen, County Tipperary, Ireland. Having received a limited education, he left his native land in his eighteenth year for Newfoundland, where an uncle was extensively engaged in the fisheries off that coast. There he remained only a brief period, being eager to reach the United States. His first destination was Lockport, N. Y., where he secured a position as book-keeper for a prominent contractor. He here gained his first idea of a business which he subsequently successfully followed. In 1824 he secured a contract on the Erie Canal, and upon its completion went to Akron, Ohio, to construct a section of the canal at that place. From thence he came to Pennsylvania, this State being largely engaged in perfecting her system of internal improvements, and a wide field for Mr. Burke's business energies was open before him. Securing the contract for that portion of the Juniata division of the Pennsylvania Canal between Mexico and Lewistown in 1829, he fixed his permanent home at Harrisburg. Identifying himself with the business and welfare of the town of his adoption, he was chosen to the Borough Council, and in the establishment of the first system of water-works took an active and warm interest. During a portion of this period he was president of the legislative body of the town, and on several occasions became personally responsible for the payment of loans secured for the construction of the water-works. Upon the completion of the through transportation to Pittsburgh by the Pennsylvania Canal, Mr. Burke, with several others, commenced a packet-line from Philadelphia to the former place, he having his office at Harrisburg. He also became interested in the Portable Line, in which enterprise, however, he sustained a loss of thirty-five thousand dollars; but not discouraged, he continued in other business ventures. The first or pioneer blast-furnace erected at Harrisburg was by Mr. Burke and Governor Porter. It was erected along the line of the Pennsylvania Canal above State Street. While in successful operation several years, Mr. Burke withdrew from the firm, owing to his connection with several contracts on the various railroads then building in the State. He constructed portions of the Pennsylvania road between Harrisburg and Pittsburgh, and on the Northern Central between Harrisburg and York. He had contracts in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and was also engaged in the construction of reservoirs, building one at Baltimore, Md., in 1860, and was engaged in the erection of one in Washington City at the time of his death. He died at Harrisburg on the 15th of August, 1864, in his sixty-seventh year. Few men have exhibited more public spirit than Mr. Burke, and during his entire residence at Harrisburg he was held in the highest esteem by his fellow-citizens, who admired his energy and remarkable business capacity. To those who knew him best he was kind, obliging, genial, and noble-hearted.

Mr. Burke married, on April 6, 1824, Mary A. Finley, of Lockport, N. Y., who survives. Their children have been: William (deceased), John Michael (deceased), George Washington, Josephine (married James Brady, second), Martina (married Edward P. Kearns), and Regina.

WILLIAM CALDER, SR.

William Calder, eldest child of John Calder and Naomi Norris, was born in Belair, Harford Co., Md., July 24, 1788. The father was a native of Scotland. William remained on the farm of his parents in Harford County until he was of age, when he removed to Baltimore, and soon thereafter to Lancaster, Pa. When the seat of government was removed from Lancaster to Harrisburg he came to the latter place, and resided there up to the time of his death.

In 1817 he married Mary Kirkwood, who was born in Armagh, Ireland, of Scotch-Irish parents, and emigrated to this country when seven years of age. Their children were John, Mary (wife of Wells Coverly), William, Matilda (wife of Charles A. Keller), and James. His wife died in 1858, and in 1860 he married Margaret C. Walmer, of Dauphin County, by whom he had no issue. He died March 5, 1861, and of his children none now survive him except the youngest, Rev. James Calder, D.D., of Harrisburg.

Immediately upon leaving Harford County, Mr. Calder became interested in lines of stage-coaches and the United States mail service, and for fifty years this was his chief business. Up to the time of the sale of the public works of Pennsylvania he was associated with Alexander Wilson, of Lewistown, Jacob Peter of Philadelphia, Silas Moore, of Hollidaysburg, and other gentlemen in the "Pioneer," "Good Intent," and "Express" companies for the transportation of passengers and mails by cars and canal packet-boats. He never lost his fondness for farming and live-stock, and maintained several of the most fertile farms in Dauphin County. Enterprises for the development of the resources of the country and particularly the business of Harrisburg received his support. He built many houses, favored the introduction of manufactures, and at the time of his death possessed an ample fortune. *

WILLIAM CALDER.

John Calder (1749-1806) resided near Belair, Md. His eldest son, William (1788-1861), married Mary Kirkwood (1790-1858), who bore him children: John, Mary (wife of Wells Coverly, proprietor of the Coverly House, Harrisburg), William (subject of this sketch), Matilda (wife of Charles Keller), and Rev. James Calder (the youngest surviving in 1882).

William Calder was born July 31, 1821, and died July 19, 1880. He had limited education from books, being inducted into the stage-line business at the age of twelve years. At the age of sixteen his father put him in charge of the Philadelphia Packet Line from Columbia to Pittsburgh. In 1851 he assumed the management of his father's business, and in 1857 undertook the completion of the Lebanon Valley Railroad. In 1858 he became a member of the well-known banking firm of Cameron, Calder, Eby & Co., which afterwards became the First National Bank, of Harrisburg, of which Mr. Calder was chosen president. The same year he was elected a director of the Northern Central Railway, and was active in preserving Pennsylvania's interests in that corporation. At the breaking out of the rebellion he rendered the government important service through his large knowledge in the purchase of horses, and supplied the government with no less than forty-two thousand horses and sixty-seven thousand mules, establishing the price ($125 and $117.50) so low as to effect a very great saving to the government in this department. Mr. Calder was always foremost in the promotion of Harrisburg's industrial enterprises. He was one of the founders of the Harrisburg Car-Works, the Lochiel Rolling-Mills, the Harrisburg Cotton-Mills, Foundry and Machine-Works, the Fire-Brick Works, and the Pennsylvania Steel-Works.

In 1873 he was commissioned by Governor Hartranft a trustee of the Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital, and reappointed in 1876. In 1876 he was appointed by the same Governor a member of the commission to devise a plan for the government of cities, and in 1880, just prior to his death, he was elected a director of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb. For many years he ably officiated in the management of city affairs through its Councils. He was among the founders of the Harrisburg Hospital and the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was an attendant. He was formerly a Whig, latterly a Republican, and influential in local and State politics, and one of the Presidential electors from this State in 1876.

Upon the occasion of President Lincoln's visit to Harrisburg, when a plot was laid to assassinate him on his return to Baltimore, Mr. Calder was selected to escort him safely to take another train from the one intended at first, and thus his enemies' designs were thwarted. His widow is Regina Camilla, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Krause) Greenawalt. Their children are Edmund Kirkwood (died Dec. 31, 1862, aged thirteen years), William Jacob, Catharine Krause, Theodore Greenawalt, Regina, and Mary Kirkwood Calder. *

MAJOR BRUA CAMERON.

William Brua Cameron, son of Simon Cameron and Margaret Brua, was born Aug. 1, 1826, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a classical education, and graduated at Princeton College in 1847, studied law with James McCormick, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Jan. 23, 1849. He located at Middletown, managing certain business enterprises of his father. He was appointed major and paymaster in the United States army May 1, 1861; retired the 4th of November, 1863, on account of impaired health. Maj. Cameron died at Middletown, Jan. 13, 1864, and is buried in the cemetery at that place. He married, Oct. 18, 1852, Elizabeth Bastedo, daughter of Gilbert and Marian Bastedo, of Nelson, Province of Ontario, Canada. Mrs. Cameron, while on a visit to her old home in Canada, took ill, and died there in 1870. They had issue,—Marian Bastedo, married David Watts; Simon Brua, d. s. p.; and Janet.

JOHN CAMERON.

John Cameron, son of Charles Cameron and Martha Pfoutz, was born Feb. 8, 1797, in the village of Maytown, Lancaster Co., Pa. He received the ordinary education of the public schools of the town, and at an early age apprenticed to the trade of a tailor. He came to Harrisburg in 1816, where he started in business. Governor Shulze appointed him register and recorder of the county of Dauphin, Jan. 17, 1824. He was frequently chosen member of the Borough Council of Harrisburg. He subsequently engaged in merchandising, dealt largely in cattle, and became interested in the through stage lines. In 1837 he removed to Lancaster, retired from business, and died there May 7, 1841; buried at Harrisburg. Mr. Cameron was twice married,—first, to Catharine Hutman, daughter of Matthias Hutman, of Harrisburg, born Sept. 1, 1796, died Nov. 1, 1821; secondly, to Mary Shulze, of Myerstown, Lebanon Co., a sister of Governor John Andrew Shulze. He left a son and a daughter; the former died early, the latter became the wife of Dr. Muhlenberg, of Lancaster. Mr. Cameron was quiet and unobtrusive, an intelligent and enterprising business man.

JOHN CARSON.

John Carson, the son of John Carson and Sarah Dickey, was a native of Paxtang, born in 1758. His father was a settler on the Susquehanna as early as 1733, kept a store, and was a captain on the frontier in 1755-57. His mother was a daughter of Moses Dickey, who was quite prominent in pioneer times. He received a frontier education, which, among the Scotch-Irish settlers, was thorough, and was raised up on his father's farm. He was an early associator, and an officer during the Jersey campaign of 1776. From 1786 to 1791 he served as a member of the Assembly. Under the Constitution of 1790 he was commissioned an associate judge of the county, Aug. 17, 1791, an office which he filled acceptably and creditably until his sudden death from apoplexy on Friday, Oct. 10, 1817. His wife, Sarah Dickey, born in 1760, died March 2, 1823.

JONATHAN CHANDLER.

Jonathan Chandler was born in Beaver Valley, New Castle Co., Del., about eight miles from the city of Wilmington, in 1792. He was one of the sons of Jehu Harlin Chandler. His ancestors were Quakers, who came from England shortly after the arrival of William Penn, and settled in that part of Delaware and in the lower part of Chester County, Pa. The family became so prominently identified with Beaver Valley that in the early times it was known as Chandler's Hollow. Jonathan Chandler received the ordinary education within his reach in those primitive days. When quite a young man he left his Beaver Valley home and settled in the upper end of Chester County, near Sadsburyville, and carried on quite extensively for those days the business of blacksmithing, which he had learned in Delaware. On the 1st day of June, 1819, while living in Chester County, he married Mary Griffith, who was born at the Trappe, in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1793, but came to Chester County when a young woman. Mr. Chandler removed from Chester County to Harrisburg, arriving on the 11th day of August, 1828. Here he continued his business for some years, and became quite prominent in it in the preparation of iron used in the construction of locks and bridges on the Pennsylvania Canal, and in connection with the famous stage-lines of Slaymaker & Co. and the Good Intent Packet Line. His wife, Mary Griffith Chandler, died in Harrisburg on the 29th of July, 1837. In 1839 he married Julia Ann Mowrer, who had been reared in the family of George Prince. She was born in Sunbury, Northumberland Co., and died in Harrisburg, July 22, 1882. Jonathan Chandler died in Harrisburg, Jan. 6, 1847. His children by the first marriage were Benjamin Franklin, Jehu Harlin, Rachel Ann, Ellen Louisa, and William Griffith; by the second, Mary Elizabeth, Sarah, George Prince, and Julia Ann. Mr. Chandler took much interest in all that pertained to the prosperity and welfare of Harrisburg during his life here, was a man of fine social qualities and liberal views.

COL. ROBERT CLARK.

Robert Clark, son of Charles Clark and Ann Brownfield, was born Jan. 2, 1740, in Derry, Lancaster (now Londonderry) township, Dauphin Co. His father was one of the first settlers in the "Barrens of Derry," his first warrant bearing date April 3, 1734, for two hundred acres. In 1765 his wife, Ann Brownfield Clark, having died, 12th of April of that year he divided his land between his sons, Robert and Walter, and died a few years thereafter. Robert was brought up as a farmer, receiving the limited education of frontier times. During the French and Indian wars he was in active service, both as a private and an officer. He was with Col. Clayton on his march to Wyoming, and with Col. Bouquet in 1764. When the thunders of the Revolution rolled from the eastward he entered heartily into the contest. On the 11th of August, 1776, he was commissioned captain in the Flying Camp, and was in the Jersey campaign of that year. He was commissioned sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, April 26, 1780, and May 4, 1781, appointed one of the auditors for paying the depreciation certificates at Lebanon. During the entire struggle for independence Col. Clark was active, energetic, and patriotic. He represented the county of Dauphin in the Assembly of the State from 1785 to 1788, having previously represented the county of Lancaster, when he declined a re-election. During the organization of the militia, after the Revolution, he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Fourth Battalion of Dauphin County. About 1795 he removed to Chillisquaque, Northumberland Co., Pa. Although well up in years, his military ardor seems to have remained, and he was commissioned Aug. 2, 1800, captain of the Second Troop of cavalry, Second Brigade, Ninth Division, composed of the counties of Northumberland, Lycoming, and Luzerne. He died at Chillisquaque, Jan. 23, 1821, at the age of eighty-one years. Col. Clark's life was a long and eventful one, and he witnessed many changes in the affairs of the State and nation, and in which he had performed a prominent part. He was a man of influence in his native county, and his pious walk and conversation was none the less remarkable. He was one of the elders of Old Derry Church, an humble and consistent Christian. Col. Clark married, Aug. 20, 1765, Sarah Hutchison, born June 7, 1745, in Derry, died Aug. 19, 1820, daughter of John Hutchison, who died Sept. 6, 1765. Their children were, as taken from the family record in Col. Clark's own handwriting,—

"Charles Clark, our first born, was born Aug. 3, 1766.

"Our twin children were born July 6, 1768; one died when twenty-two hours old, and the other, Margaret, died Sept. 4, 1768.

"Our daughter, Ann, was born Oct. 3, 1769.

"Our daughter, Mary, was born Oct. 17, 1772, and died Feb. 4, 1773.

"Our daughter, Margaret, was born Dec. 26, 1773.

"Our son, John, was born June 6, 1776.

"Our son, Robert, was born Sept. 28, 1778.

"Our daughter, Mary, was born Sunday, March 25, 1781.

"Our daughter, Sarah, was born Feb. 9, 1786."

The remains of Col. Clark and his wife lie in Derry graveyard, now Montour County, Pa.

PHILIP CLINE.

Philip Cline, son of Philip Kline, was born in the District of Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, on the 14th of July, 1780. Receiving a preliminary English education in the schools of the city, he learned the trade of brick-maker, and located at Harrisburg about the year 1803, where he established brick-works and a pottery. Most of the brick used in the State capitol were furnished by him. During the second war with England he served as first lieutenant in Capt. Richard Knight's company, and on the latter's resignation at Baltimore was promoted to captain. For almost thirty years Capt. Cline filled the position of high constable of the borough of Harrisburg. He was a man of influence, and highly respected by his fellow-citizens. He died in the year 1850. Capt. Cline married about 1803, Hannah, daughter of Patrick Walters, a wagon-master in the Continental army of the Revolution. She died at Harrisburg, Aug. 18, 1830.

CAPT. JAMES COLLIER.

James Collier was born of Scotch-Irish parents, in what is now Swatara township, Dauphin Co., April 20, 1752, on the farm adjoining the village of Churchville on the east. He began his military career in 1776, as first lieutenant of Capt. John Reed's company of the "Flying Camp," was employed in many of the skirmishes around New York and up the Hudson; was at the battle of Long Island, and among those who covered the retreat. For bravery in this campaign he received a captain's commission, and for meritorious conduct at the battle of Brandywine, Gen.

Lafayette presented him with a sword and epaulets. During the last years of the war Capt. Collier was employed principally on the frontiers against the Indians, and achieved distinction as an Indian-fighter. In 1778 he built Fort Muncy, near which one of his soldiers, Peter Boal, lost his scalp, but survived the injury. Upon the return of peace, Capt. Collier retired to his farm, and was known as a quiet, peace-loving citizen. He was, however, in common with every other patriot of his day, a genuine hater of Tories. His feelings in this respect were the more bitter on account of the Tories of North Carolina having for years sought the life of his brother, Col. John Collier, who lived in that State and was an officer in the army. Failing in their attempts upon his life, they destroyed his property and burned his house. One of the leading spirits in this outrage was one Lytle, who had formerly been a resident of Paxtang, but had removed to North Carolina shortly before the war. Against this man Capt. Collier felt peculiarly aggrieved, and had frequently been heard to declare that if ever he "laid eyes on the rascal he would chastise him severely." One Sunday morning, some years after the war, the captain was sitting in his pew at Paxtang Church, awaiting the opening of the morning service, when a stranger entered, whom Collier immediately recognized to be Lytle the Tory. He was on a visit to some friends at Middletown and accompanied them to church. The sacredness of the place protected him for the time being, but when the congregation was dismissed the captain quietly provided himself with a stout section of a grape-vine, which he put to soak in a neighboring spring. At the conclusion of the afternoon service, when the congregation was about to separate, Collier armed himself with his grape-vine and rode up to Lytle, who had just mounted, and introduced himself as the brother of John Collier, of North Carolina, and explained that there was an unsettled account between Lytle and the Collier family which he proposed now to adjust, and immediately brought his grape-vine into requisition. The Tory ran his eye over the spectators, but seeing no sympathy in their countenances put spurs to his horse and galloped off, with the captain close beside him belaboring him at every jump. They passed many people jogging along on their way home from church, and among others one of the deacons and his wife. The deacon was silent, but the wife called out, "Lay it on, Jamie, lay it on!" The race was "neck and neck" for a quarter of a mile, when the Tory, who had the better horse, began to leave Collier behind, but not before the grape-vine was worn to a stump. This transaction met with general approval. There were, however, a few good people who deemed it a breach of the Sabbath and thought the captain should be sessioned. Complaint was therefore made to Rev. John Elder, pastor of the church, who replied in some such language as this: "Served him right; he had no business to come to my church.

I am, however, sorry it happened on the Lord's Day, but if I had witnessed it I should have told the captain to lay on." This opinion from the moderator of the session, although not delivered officially, settled the business, and Collier never was called to account. In 1791 he sold his farm in Swatara township and went to Northumberland County, Pa. On the 31st of May, 1814, he started with his family for Ross County, Ohio, where he arrived on the 9th of July. Here he purchased a farm and spent the remainder of his days. He died Jan. 3, 1844, at the great age of ninety-two, and was distinguished throughout life for his frankness, integrity, and manly independence. *

COL. JACOB COOKE.

Jacob Cooke, son of John Cooke, was born in Londonderry township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., in 1735. His father was an early emigrant from near Londonderry, Ireland, and was a gentleman of means and influence. The son received the best education afforded in the Scotch-Irish settlement, and was brought up to the life of a farmer. During the French and Indian war he served as an ensign in Col. Elder's ranging battalion, and commanded the first military company enrolled for the war for independence in Pennsylvania, "The Association of the Liberty Company in Lancaster County." This company was organized in April, 1775, and portions of the command were in active service during the campaigns of 1776 and 1777. Col. Cooke filled the office of sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, assisting in the organization of troops. He was a justice of the peace many years, and served in the Assembly under the Constitution of 1776 from 1780 to 1785. He was an ardent patriot, a brave officer, and an influential citizen. He died in January, 1790, at his residence near the Round Top. He owned a large estate, especially in Northumberland County lands, and left at his death John, Mary (married John Lukens Wallis), Sarah (married Joseph Work), Elizabeth (married Charles Irwine), and Robert. The two latter resided on the Muncy farms. Col. William Cooke, of the Pennsylvania line, a gallant soldier of the Revolution, was a brother of Col. Jacob Cooke, and one of the administrators of his estate.

CAPT. JAMES COWDEN.

James Cowden, the fourth child of Matthew Cowden and Martha Johnson, was born in Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., on the 16th of June, 1737. James was brought up on his father's farm, enjoying, however, the advantages of that early education of those pioneer times, which among the Scotch-Irish settlers was remarkably comprehensive and ample. Apart from this he was well grounded in the tenets of the Westminster Confession, which among our pious ancestry formed a part of the instruction given to all.

Until the thunders of the Revolution rolled towards the Susquehanna, Mr. Cowden remained on the paternal acres, busily engaged in farming. At the outset he was a strong advocate for active defensive measures, and in favor of independence. He was one of the leading spirits at the meeting at Middletown, June 9, 1774, of which Col. James Burd was chairman, and whose action, in conjunction with those of Hanover, nerved the people of Lancaster in their patriotic resolves. Suiting the action to the word, Mr. Cowden and the young men of his neighborhood took measures towards raising a battalion of associators, of which Col. James Burd was in command, and a company of which was intrusted to Capt. Cowden. His company, although not belonging to the Pennsylvania line, was nevertheless in several campaigns, and did faithful service at Fort Washington, in the Jerseys, at Brandywine and Germantown, and in the war on the Northern and Western frontiers, defending them from the attacks of the savage Indian and treacherous Tory.

At the close of the war Capt. Cowden returned to his farm. Under the Constitution of 1790 he was appointed the justice of the peace for the district of Lower Paxtang, April 10, 1793, which he held up to the time he was commissioned by Governor Thomas Mifflin one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin, on the 2d of October, 1795, an office he filled acceptably and creditably. In 1809 was chosen Presidential elector, and was an ardent supporter of Madison.

Capt. Cowden married in 1777, Mary Crouch, a sister of Col. James Crouch, of the Revolution, a native of Virginia. She outlived her husband many years, and is buried in the graveyard of Paxtang Church.

Judge Cowden died at his farm in Paxtang very suddenly on Wednesday evening, Oct. 10, 1810, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

COL. CORNELIUS COX.

Cornelius Cox, son of John Cox and Esther, his wife, was born about 1750, in the city of Philadelphia. His father was a native of England, a physician of prominence in Philadelphia, in which city he died about 1770. He laid out Estherton, on the Susquehanna, in 1765, supposing at the time it would become an important place. Dr. Cox was twice married,—first to Sarah, widow of William Edgell, of Philadelphia; second to Esther —, of the same place. We know nothing further, save that their son was the subject of this sketch. Cornelius Cox received a good education in his native city. Some time prior to the Revolution we find him at Estherton in management of the estate left him by his father. He early espoused the cause of the colonies, was present at the meeting at Middletown which passed the patriotic resolutions of June, 1774, and when the people were called to arms was commissioned major of Col. James Burd's battalion of Lancaster County associators. Was appointed assistant commissary of purchases, and also issuing commissary July 7, 1780. Until the close of the Revolution he was actively engaged, whether it was in the collecting of flour for the French fleet, the gathering of blankets for the half-clad army at Valley Forge, or the superintending of the construction of bateaux for the use of Gen. Sullivan in his expedition against the Six Nations. In 1792 he was chosen one of the State electors for President in favor of Gen. Washington. Governor Mifflin appointed him one of the associate justices of the courts of Dauphin County, but preferring quiet he declined the honor. He died Feb. 3, 1803, at Estherton, aged about fifty-three years. Col. Cox married Mary Forster, born 1767, died Aug. 2, 1810, daughter of John Forster and Catherine Dickey.

COL. RICHARD M. CRAIN.

Richard Moore Crain, the son of Joseph Crain and Mary Moore, daughter of Andrew Moore, was born November, 1777, in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received a fair education, and was brought up on his father's farm. He became quite prominent in public affairs the first decade of this century, and during the incumbency of Gen. Andrew Porter as surveyor-general of Pennsylvania Mr. Crain received the appointment of deputy secretary of the land office, a position he acceptably filled through all the changes of administration for forty years, until the advent of Governor Ritner, when he was displaced. He then retired to his farm in Cumberland County, from which district he was sent a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1837, in which he was a leading spirit. During the War of 1812-14 he commanded a company of volunteers from Harrisburg, and was subsequently commissioned colonel of the Pennsylvania militia. Col. Crain died at Harrisburg, on Friday, 17th of September, 1852, aged seventy-five years. He married Elizabeth Whitehill, daughter of Robert Whitehill and Eleanor Reed, born 1771, died Oct. 2, 1848. They had Dr. Joseph; Elizabeth, married Leopold Wykoff; Mary Adaline, married Alexander Dean; Eleanor, married William Wilson Rutherford; and Agnes, died unmarried.

COL. EDWARD CROUCH.

Edward Crouch, the son of James Crouch, an officer of the Revolution, and Hannah Brown, was born at Walnut Hill, in Paxtang, Nov. 9, 1764. He was a merchant by occupation. At the age of seventeen he enlisted in the army of the Revolution, and commanded a company in the Whiskey Insurrection in 1794. He served as a member of the House of Representatives from 1804 to 1806, and was a Presidential elector in 1813. Governor Snyder appointed him one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin April 16, 1813, but he resigned upon his election to the Thirteenth United States Congress. He died on the 2d of February, 1827, and is buried in Paxtang graveyard. "In private life he was an able and an honest man," wrote one of his contemporaries, and the record of his life shows him to have been a gentleman of uprightness of character, and as honorable as he was influential. Col. Crouch married Margaret Potter, born 1775, died Feb. 7, 1797, daughter of Gen. James Potter,¹ of the Revolution. Their only daughter married Benjamin Jordan, who succeeded to the estate of "Walnut Hill."

COL. JAMES CROUCH.

James Crouch was born about 1728, in Virginia. The Crouches were an old family who emigrated at an early day from England and settled in King and Queen County, near the court-house. James Crouch received a good education, came to Pennsylvania prior to 1757, purchasing about three thousand

He was prominent in the political agitation consequent upon the dispute with the mother-country. There was no meeting of the patriotic inhabitants of the then large county of Northumberland held without his presence and led by his advice. He was a colonel in 1775; appointed a brigadier-general April 5, 1777, with John Armstrong as first, John Cadwalader second, Samuel Meredith fourth. His services in the Pennsylvania campaign of 1777 were very distinguished. With the troops under his command, raised in the frontier counties, he obtained for Washington important information regarding the movements of the enemy, and with great vigilance gave all the annoyance possible to the foraging parties that were sent out of Philadelphia.

On the 11th of December, while the army under Washington were on their march to Valley Forge, after a portion of it had crossed the Schuylkill at Matson's Ford, it was found that the enemy under Cornwallis were in force on the other side. "They were met," writes Washington, "by Gen. Potter, with part of the Pennsylvania militia, who behaved with great bravery, and gave them every possible opposition till he was obliged to retreat from their superior numbers." In the spring of 1778, Washington wrote from Valley Forge, "If the state of Gen. Potter's affairs will admit of returning to the army, I shall be exceedingly glad to see him, as his activity and vigilance have been much wanted during the winter." In 1781 he was vice-president of the State, in 1782 commissioned a major-general, and in 1784 one of the Council of Censors, and was within a few votes of defeating for president the most distinguished man in the State, John Dickinson. He served in the field in his military capacity through the whole Revolution, and was trusted by all its leaders,—Washington, Greene, Pickering, Mifflin, and his fellow-brigadiers. His residence was in Penn's Valley, in the present Centre County, from 1772 to the time of his death, in November, 1789, at which moment he was one of the associate or bench justices of Northumberland County. He left one of the most extensive and valuable estates in Pennsylvania. His remains rest in the burial-ground at Brown's Mill, south of Chambersburg, in Franklin County.

Gen. Potter was married twice,—first, Elizabeth Cathcart, of Philadelphia. They had Elizabeth C., married James Poe, of Franklin County. Second wife, Mrs. Mary Patterson, widow of James Patterson, of Mifflin County, who died in April, 1783, near Middletown. They had James, "the judge," who married Mary Brown, of "Brown's Spring," Kishacoquillas Valley, Mifflin Co.; Mary, married first, George Riddle, secondly, William McClelland, of Northumberland County; John, died; Martha, married Andrew Gregg, of Centre County, subsequently United States senator; Margaret, married Edward Crouch, of "Walnut Hill," Dauphin Co.

acres of land in York County, where the town of Wrightsville now stands, on which he settled for a few years, but which he subsequently sold, and removed to then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he bought one thousand acres of land. He was a soldier of Quebec, being a sergeant in Capt. Matthew Smith's company of Paxtang volunteers. On his release from captivity he became an officer of the associators, and subsequently paymaster of the battalion. He served during the whole of the Revolutionary war with honor and distinction. He died at his residence, Walnut Hill, near Highspire, on the 24th of May, 1794, aged sixty-six years. Col. Crouch married, Sept. 22, 1757, Hannah Brown, born 1727, died May 24, 1787. Their children were Edward; Mary, married Col. James Cowden; Elizabeth, married Matthew Gilchrist, removed to Washington County, Pa.; and Hannah, married Roan McClure. Col. Crouch's papers, perchance the most valuable documents concerning the Revolution extant in this locality, were wantonly destroyed about ten years ago.

CAPT. JOHN DENTZEL.

John Dentzel, a native of Holland, on the Rhine, was born about 1745. He received a thorough university education, including law and medicine. A romantic attachment and marriage to a daughter of an illustrious family of the country caused him to come to America at the outset of the Revolution. He warmly espoused the cause of the colonies, and was in active service. Subsequent to the war he located at Harrisburg, where he became quite prominent. He seems to have practiced both law and medicine. In 1792 he was appointed one of the medical examiners for invalid pensioners; and he is denominated as "Lawyer Dentzel," who commanded a company during the Whisky Insurrection of 1794, although probably he was only a justice of the peace, an office he held at the time of his death. On the 8th of December, 1803, he accompanied the citizens of the town who had gone to escort the remains of their old comrade, Maj. Brooks, who had died at Elizabethtown; when a short distance, the bridle of Capt. Dentzel's horse broke, and that gentleman was thrown against a fence and almost instantly expired. He was an intrepid officer, a good citizen, and a polished gentleman. Mr. Dentzel was twice married; his first wife, Eve Dentzel, died March 18, 1795, "a lady much respected and admired." On the 10th of February, 1799, he married Jane Gilchrist, who survived her husband several years. By his first wife he had Mary, married Thomas Clyde, the parents of John J. Clyde, Esq.; Sarah, married James Kernan; Henry, who learned printing with John Wyeth, went to Norfolk, Va., was collector of the port there a number of years, married and left issue. By his second wife he had Raymond, who went to Armstrong County, married and left issue.

MAJ. JOHN SHELLY DETWEILER.

John Shelly Detweiler was born on the 18th of October, 1829, in Londonderry township, Dauphin Co., on a farm occupied by his father, David Detweiler, near what is now known as the Buck Lock, Pennsylvania Canal. His mother, Susan Detweiler, was a daughter of William Shelly, of Shelly's Island. When ten years old he attended the school in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and continued there until he was sixteen years old, when he came to Harrisburg and entered the printing-office of Theophilus Fenn, where he remained but a short time, and then went to Lancaster, entering the office of the Lancaster Examiner and Herald.

Leaving the Examiner office, Mr. Detweiler entered Franklin and Marshall College, at which institution he pursued a course of regular studies and graduated with high honor, after which he began the study of the law with Gen. George B. Ford, of Lancaster City, and was admitted to the bar of that county in 1850. He remained in Lancaster only a few months after his admission, and came to Harrisburg in the winter of that year, entering at once in the practice of the law here, in which profession he continued until the breaking out of the civil war.

At the organization of the Ninth Cavalry, Mr. Detweiler took an active part in securing the necessary companies to make up the regiment, and as captain of Company E was very prominent in securing a completed organization. He was commissioned captain Oct. 17, 1861. While on duty in Tennessee he was appointed on the staff of Gen. DuMont. On the 19th of March, 1863, Capt. Detweiler was appointed major of the regiment, and on the 2d of April of the same year he resigned his commission and returned to Harrisburg, when he was appointed United States recruiting officer at this point, which post he held until the close of the war. In 1864, Mr. Detweiler was appointed Deputy United States assessor of internal revenue under Charles J. Bruner, which office he held until it was abolished in 1871. In 1872 he was appointed by Judge Cadwallader register in bankruptcy, which office he held at the time of his death. In 1874, Mr. Detweiler was nominated and elected by the Republicans county solicitor for the term of three years.

Maj. Detweiler married Eunice Parke, daughter of Benjamin Parke, of Harrisburg, and they had three children who survived their father. He died at Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 16, 1878.

REV. WILLIAM R. DEWITT, D.D.

William Radcliff DeWitt, the son of John DeWitt and Katharine Van Vliet, was born at Paulding's Manor, Dutchess Co., N. Y., on the 25th of February, 1792. His ancestors were among the first immigrants from Holland to New Netherlands, in 1623. His early years were spent in commercial pursuits, but about 1810 he turned his attention to the sacred ministry. He studied with Dr. Alexander Proudfit, of Salem, N. Y., and entered Washington Academy. The War of 1812 interrupting his studies, he volunteered in the regiment of Col. Rice, and was in service at Lake Champlain at the time of McDonough's victory, Sept. 11, 1814. After the close of the war, in 1815, he entered Nassau Hall, Princeton, as a sophomore, but subsequently entered the senior class of Union College, Schenectady, where he graduated with distinction, completing his theological studies under Rev. Dr. John M. Mason, of New York. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New York April 23, 1818. In the fall of that year he came to Harrisburg by invitation, and was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church Oct. 5, 1818. He was received by the Presbytery of Carlisle April 13, 1819, but not ordained until the 26th of October, that year. Dr. DeWitt received the degree of A.M. in course from Union College, and in 1838 the University of Pennsylvania conferred on him the title of Doctor of Divinity. From 1854 to 1860 he held the office of State librarian, appointed by Governors Bigler and Pollock. In 1854 he felt the necessity of taking a colleague, Rev. T. H. Robinson, D.D., the present minister. He died at Harrisburg, Dec. 23, 1867, in his seventy-sixth year. Dr. DeWitt was twice married, his first wife being Julia A. Woodhull, daughter of Rev. Nathan Woodhull, of Newtown, L. I. His second wife was Mary Elizabeth Wallace, daughter of William Wallace, of Harrisburg, who survived her husband. During a ministry of nearly fifty years in Harrisburg, Dr. DeWitt enjoyed the confidence of all his ministerial brethren. In the community he was greatly appreciated and respected by all classes. As a theologian he had few equals in the ministry, and although firm and decided in his views, he was liberal and catholic in spirit. His published writings were limited to twelve or thirteen pamphlets, the most popular of which was a small volume entitled "Her Price above Rubies." He preached many powerful discourses, a volume of which should certainly be preserved in permanent form.

GEORGE DOCK, M.D.

George Dock, second child of William Dock and Margaret Gilliard, was born 23d of May, 1823, at Harrisburg, Pa. Though of very delicate constitution, he was sent to school at an early age, and received a liberal education. In September, 1840, he entered the office of Professor William E. Horner, of the University of Pennsylvania, as a private student. He matriculated at the medical department of the University in the summer of 1841, attended the course of lectures at the Medical Institute, and having pursued the full course at the University, session of 1842, he was elected resident student in Blockley Hospital, entering upon his duties the 1st of May, where he faithfully served one year, gaining no little reputation as a thorough anatomist. In the spring of 1844 he graduated from the University of Pennsylvania. Returning to his home at Harrisburg, he assumed the duties of his profession. In the autumn of 1845, at the solicitation of Professor Horner, he removed to Philadelphia, and the winter following was engaged by the former as his private dissector at the University. During the war with Mexico he was tendered the position of assistant surgeon, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, but his health prevented its acceptance. In January, 1847, he was elected physician to the Dauphin County almshouse, where he served one year. Advised to take a sea-voyage for the benefit of his health, in October, 1849, he sailed for Europe, and while there visited the different hospitals of Paris and London. On his return he resumed the practice of his profession. For a period of thirteen years he was a member of the board of trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, in 1854 elected a member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, while in July following Pennsylvania College conferred on him the honorary degree of Master of Arts. On the 17th of March, 1856, he was appointed Professor of Surgery in the Philadelphia College of Medicine, which he at first declined, but subsequently, by great persuasion, accepted the position. During the winter following, his health becoming seriously impaired, he was compelled to withdraw from all active professional duties. In 1860 he made a second visit to Europe, and upon his return quietly settled down in his office, regaining a handsome practice in his specialty,—diseases of the eye. In 1861 he was commissioned surgeon of the Sixteenth Regiment

Pennsylvania Volunteers, subsequently placed on the board of medical examiners to pass on the qualifications of candidates for appointment on the medical staff of the Pennsylvania forces in the army. From this time forward until 1868 his health was fair, but subsequently became seriously impaired, until at last he was obliged to relinquish entirely the duties of his profession. On the 10th of August, 1874, he was suddenly taken with a hemorrhage of the lungs, but not until the 17th of August, 1875, did the messenger come, and the spirit of George Dock pass from its frail tenement. Had he possessed the physical strength, most of the brilliant suggestions of his gifted and active mind would have been carried out to a successful result. He had by nature a strongly-marked, bold, original, positive, and incisive mind. As it was, he was never idle. He made his mark in the profession he so dearly loved and highly honored. Few men were more greatly esteemed, for he was to all genial and kind and courteous. Dr. Dock married, July 30, 1844, Clara S. Rehrer, daughter of Col. Thomas J. Rehrer, of Harrisburg, who, with one daughter, survive.

WILLIAM DOCK.

William Dock, the son of Philip Dock¹ and Elizabeth Killian, was born in East Earl township, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 3d of February, 1793. In 1800 his parents removed to Newville, Cumberland Co., where they resided until their death. His early education was limited. At the age of seventeen he went to Carlisle, where he was brought up to merchandising. In 1813 he removed to the Susquehanna opposite Harrisburg, where he kept the public ferry one year; the subsequent spring coming to Harrisburg. In 1814, he took charge of the Harrisburg ferry, then controlled by the county of Dauphin. In 1816 he was appointed collector of tolls eastern end of the Harrisburg bridge, which position he filled five years. He entered into the mercantile chandlery trade in 1822, which he successfully continued until 1845, when he entirely relinquished business. In March, 1842, he was appointed one of the associate judges of Dauphin County. In 1849 he received the nomination by the Democracy for Congress in the Fourteenth District, then composed of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill Counties. The judge made a good canvass, but his party were in the minority. In 1851 he was chairman of the State convention which nomi-

He married Elizabeth Killian, born in East Earl township Aug. 27, 1763; she died at Newville Feb. 7, 1848, and there buried. There were children, among others, as follows: Elizabeth, married John Dean; removed to Ohio, where their descendants reside. Susan, married Jacob Bigler; they were the parents of Governor John Bigler, of California, and Governor William Bigler, of Pennsylvania. Amelia, married George Gray, and left issue: Jacob, married Eliza Kiesecker Ott, and left issue: William, married Margaret Gilliard. Philip, d. s. p.

nated William Bigler for Governor; had repeatedly been a delegate to the Lutheran Synod; and in 1856 appointed a trustee of Pennsylvania College. He served as a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy twenty years, and was actively connected with several business enterprises. Judge Dock died at Harrisburg Aug. 4, 1868. He married in 1818 Margaret Gilliard, of Middletown, who died May 30, 1862, in her sixty-eighth year. They had children, William Gilliard, Dr. George, Gilliard, and William, of whom Gilliard alone survives.

PHILIP DOUGHERTY.

Philip Dougherty, son of Dennis Dougherty and Catharine Maginty, was born on the 24th of March, 1806, near Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father came to America from Ireland about 1805, and settled in Derry township, not far from Middletown, where he died about 1824. His wife (née Catharine Maginty), whom he married in Ireland, died about 1845, in Harrisburg. Their children were Mary (wife of Hugh Dougherty) and John, both born in Ireland, Philip (the subject of this sketch), James, Catharine (wife of Edward Sweeny), Dennis, Charles, Hugh, and Daniel Dougherty. From the age of eighteen Philip Dougherty was busily occupied as a contractor on canals and railroads, and was largely engaged in the construction of important public works, such as the Pennsylvania Canal, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, Delaware and Raritan Canal, Union Canal, Lehigh Canal, Northern Central Railroad, New York and Erie Railroad, Pennsylvania Railroad, Camden and Amboy Railroad, and the Dauphin and Susquehanna Railroad. He continued in the business until February, 1863, when he was chosen president of the Mechanics' Bank of Harrisburg, organized at that time, a position which he filled until his death, which occurred at Harrisburg Feb. 3, 1865, in his fifty-ninth year. He was also a director of the Northern Central Railroad, the Middletown Bank, and the Harrisburg Gas Company, of which he was one of the founders. Mr. Dougherty was very successful in business, combining great energy and force of character with quick perception, sound judgment, and strict integrity. He dispensed a liberal hospitality to his many friends, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. Of a warm and generous nature, his feelings, impulses, and actions were of an elevated character, and his friendship permanent, strong, and useful. He was ever ready to aid the deserving and relieve the unfortunate, and in all respects was a valued member of the community. Mr. Dougherty married, June 10, 1833, at New Brunswick, N. J., Mary W., daughter of John Clark and Rebecca Whiteside. Mrs. Dougherty was born in 1813, and now (1883) resides in Harrisburg. Their children who reached maturity were James Dennis, who graduated at Georgetown College, class of 1857, was a lawyer by profession, and a captain of artillery during the Rebellion, and colonel on the staff of Governor Packer, of Pennsylvania, and died April 2, 1878; William E., for many years engaged in the banking business in Harrisburg, and now resident clerk of the United States Senate at Washington, D. C.; and Mary F., wife of Bernard J. McGrann, contractor and banker, of Lancaster, Pa. *

JOHN DOWNEY.

John Downey, the son of John and Sarah Downey, was born at Germantown, Pa., in the year 1770. He received a classical education in the old academy there, and in 1795 located at Harrisburg, where he opened a Latin and grammar school. At this period, in a letter to Governor Thomas Mifflin, he proposed a "Plan of Education," remarkably foreshadowing the present common-school system, and which has placed him in the front rank of early American educators. He was for many years a justice of the peace, and served as town clerk for a long time. He was the first cashier of the Harrisburg Bank, largely instrumental in securing the erection of the bridge over the Susquehanna, and one of the corporators of the Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike Company; was a member of the Legislature in 1817-18, and filled other positions of honor and profit. He died at Harrisburg on the 21st of July, 1827, and the Oracle speaks of him as "a useful magistrate and a pious man." He wrote much for the press, and a series of articles published in the Dauphin Guardian, entitled "Simon Easy Papers," were from his pen,—sparkling with wit; they are worth a permanent setting, as a valuable contribution to literature.

Mr. Downey married, June 5, 1798, Alice Ann Beatty, daughter of James Beatty, Esq., one of the first settlers at Harrisburg. She died in Ashland County, Ohio, May 14, 1841. Their adopted daughter, Eleanor Downey, married Hon. Daniel Kilgore, of Ohio.

JACOB R. EBY.

Jacob Rupley Eby, the son of Ephraim C. Eby (1783-1833) and Susannah Rupley (1784-1844), was born Nov. 18, 1816, at Columbia, Lancaster Co., Pa. His father, born near Lancaster, was a miller by occupation, and belonged to the Mennonites,—“never went to law and never voted.” He had seven children. Ephraim C. Eby died at Middletown, owning at the time the mill at Highspire. Jacob R. was brought up to the business of his father until the age of fifteen, in the mean time enjoying the advantages of the education afforded by the pay-schools of that day. He learned the trade of a carpenter. After serving his apprenticeship he took a trip south, working at his trade; returning, however, at the end of ten months, when he entered mercantile life. While thus engaged, Messrs. Cameron, Lauman & Clark, who were building the improvements at Wrightsville, known as the Tide-water Canal and Columbia Dam, offered him a position which he accepted. This gave him an insight into the building of public works, when his industry, integrity, and capacity attracted the favorable notice of a prominent lumber merchant of Middletown, who gave him an interest in his business simply on account of his superior qualifications and without requiring the investment of capital. He retained this valuable position for six years, when he disposed of his interest to advantage, and with his brother E. C. Eby purchased the stock and good-will of the grocery and forwarding business of John H. Brant, on one of the best sites in this city. The business subsequently was conducted by himself and sons. Mr. Eby was largely interested in many of the industrial establishments of the city, being a stockholder and director of the Harrisburg Car- and Machine- and Foundry-works. He was president for several years of the First National Bank and likewise of the State Agricultural Society. He was at the time of his death a prison-inspector, which position he had held for many years. He died Feb. 11, 1883, at Harrisburg, in his sixty-seventh year. Mr. Eby was married in 1843 to Elizabeth Gross, who still survives. They had three children, Maurice, William Howard, and Fannie.

MAJOR OLIVER EDWARDS.

Oliver Edwards, third son of Abraham Edwards and Martha Greenfield, was born Oct. 24, 1824. His parents were natives of Baltimore, where they married, removed to Pittsburgh, and subsequently to Harrisburg about 1819. Oliver's education in the schools was limited, but his mind being active and inquiring, he read much and studied at night after the work of the day was over, thus becoming very well self-educated, and developed into a man of considerable attainments. When young he learned the trade of bootmaking with his father; later in life he was selected as a school-teacher under the common-school system, and proved to be one of the most successful ever employed in the Harrisburg schools, as numbers of young men of the present day can testify. Mr. Edwards was much afflicted with asthma and unable to do military duty, but in order to render some service during the war he became the agent for the reception and distribution of the Dauphin County Relief Fund for the support of those whose husbands, fathers, and sons were in the army. It was a very onerous duty, and he performed it faithfully and well, declining any remuneration whatever for his services. In 1860 he was elected one of the first aldermen of the city of Harrisburg. Upon the election of Gen. A. S. Rounfort as mayor of the city he appointed Mr. Edwards as committing magistrate and chief clerk in the mayor's office. He was elected to succeed Gen. Rounfort, and was inaugurated mayor of the city in March, 1866. He was subsequently elected an alderman of the Fourth Ward in 1872, which position he occupied up until the time of his death, which occurred in Harrisburg on the 13th day of October, 1874. Mr. Edwards was an active man, of quick perception, fine social qualities, and possessed of much useful information. The Rev. George F. Stelling, of the Fourth Street Lutheran Church, preached a very able funeral sermon shortly after his death in relation to Mr. Edwards' religious experience. On the 7th of August, 1851, he married Rachel Ann Chandler, daughter of Jonathan Chandler and Mary Griffith. The marriage took place in Harrisburg, where his wife was born, on the 13th of August, 1830, and died therein on the 5th of July, 1865. Two daughters survive the parents,—Mary Griffith and Rachel Louisa (married Daniel A. Musser).

JACOB ELDER.

Jacob Elder, eldest son of John Elder and Elizabeth Awl, and grandson of Rev. John Elder, was born in Paxtang in 1780. He received a thorough English and classical education, learned the art of printing at Lancaster, and in 1802 commenced the publication of the Dauphin Guardian, one of the most influential newspapers published in the early days of Harrisburg, as it was the first Democratic English newspaper there. In 1815 he prepared and published "A History of the Late War," and was the author of a preliminary work on the history of the United States. Under his arduous literary labors Mr. Elder's health failed him, and he died at Harrisburg in October, 1816, at the early age of thirty-six years. He never married. His entire life was an active and busy one, and he exerted a great influence in the times he lived.

COL. JOSHUA ELDER.

Joshua Elder, second son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Baker, was born in Paxtang township (now Dauphin County), Pa., on the 9th of March, 1744/5. He was a farmer by occupation. During the frontier troubles of 1763-64 he was in active military service. When the Revolution broke out he was a leader on the patriot side, and appointed one of the sub-lieutenants of Lancaster County, as also a justice of the peace, serving until the close of the war. He was a prominent advocate for the formation of the county of Dauphin, and under the Constitution of 1790 was commissioned by Governor Mifflin one of the associate judges of the courts, Aug. 17, 1791. The appointment, however, of Sheriff Clunie to the bench on the resignation of David Harris, who had removed to Baltimore, so incensed him that he peremptorily resigned. He was appointed by Governor McKean prothonotary Jan. 5, 1800, a position he filled by re-appointment until Feb. 6, 1809. In March, 1810, he was elected Burgess of the borough of Harrisburg. He died at his residence in Paxtang on the 5th of December, 1820. Judge Elder was twice married,—first, to Mary McAllister, who died Nov. 21, 1792; secondly, to Sarah McAllister, who died Dec. 6, 1807.

COL. ROBERT ELDER.

Robert Elder, eldest son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Baker, was born June 11, 1742, in Paxtang. He was educated at the academy in Chester County, and was destined by his father for the ministry. His inclinations, and the breaking out of the French and Indian war, when the boy enlisted with his father as a ranger on the frontiers, determined otherwise. With his Scotch-Irish neighbors he entered heartily into the contest for independence, and throughout the war of the Revolution was in the field or engaged in organizing the associators, of which he was colonel, succeeding Col. Burd in the command of the companies raised in Paxtang. At the close of the conflict he continued his occupation of farming, avoiding public office, preferring the quiet of domestic life. He died Sept. 29, 1818, in Paxtang, aged seventy-six years. Col. Elder married Mary J. Thompson, of Derry; she was born Oct. 19, 1750, and died Aug. 18, 1813.

JOHN ELDER, JR.

John Elder, Jr., son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Simpson, was born Aug. 3, 1757, in Paxtang. He was educated under Joseph Hutchinson, a celebrated teacher in his day, and gave special attention to land surveying. He was a farmer. At the commencement of the Revolution, although a youth of eighteen, he was enrolled among the associators, and was an ensign in Col. Burd's battalion. On the 18th of April, 1780, he was appointed deputy-surveyor, and for several years filled that position. He was elected sheriff of the county of Dauphin in 1794, serving from the 19th of November, that year, until Oct. 17, 1797. Like the majority of persons who have filled that responsible office in this locality, he came out of it the poorer. Capt. Elder died at his residence in Paxtang, April 27, 1811, in his fifty-fourth year.

SAMUEL ELDER.

Samuel Elder, son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Simpson, was born Feb. 27, 1772, in Paxtang. He was educated at the schools of Joseph Hutchinson and Joseph Allen, and followed farming in his early years. He was a soldier of the Whiskey Insurrection, and held a position in the military establishment of 1798. He filled the office of sheriff of Dauphin County from Oct. 23, 1800, to Oct. 21, 1803, which, as in the case of his brother John, financially crippled him. Mr. Elder died at Harrisburg on the 26th of September, 1815, aged forty-three years. In paying brief tribute to his memory the newspapers of the day speak in the warmest terms of his faithfulness as a public officer, his prominence as a citizen, and the upright character of his entire life, passing away in the vigor of manhood. Mr. Elder married, March 7, 1798, Margaret Espy.

REV. JOHN ELDER.

John Elder, second son of Robert and Eleanor Elder, was born Jan. 26, 1706, in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland. He received a classical education, and graduated from the University at Edinburgh. He subsequently studied divinity, and in 1732 was licensed to preach the gospel. His father, who had removed from Scotland and settled near Lough Neagh, in County Antrim, Ireland, subsequently emigrated to America and settled in the Province of Pennsylvania, in then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. Four or five years later the son followed the footsteps of his parents and friends and came to America.

Coming as a regularly licensed minister, he was received by New Castle Presbytery, having brought credentials to that body, afterwards into Donegal Presbytery on the 5th of October, 1737. Paxtang congregation having separated from that of Derry in 1735, and Rev. Mr. Bertram adhering to the latter, left that of Paxtang vacant, and they were unanimous in giving Rev. John Elder a call. This he accepted on the 12th of April, 1738, and on the 22d of November following he was ordained and installed, the Rev. — Black presiding.

The early years of Mr. Elder's ministry was not one of ease, for in the second year the Whitefield excitement took a wide spread over the Presbyterian Church. He preached against this religious furor, or the "great revival," as it was termed, and for this he was accused to the Presbytery of propagating "false doctrine." That body cleared him, however, in December, 1740; "but the separation was made," says Webster, "soon after, and the conjunct Presbyters answered the supplications sent to them the next summer, by sending Campbell and Rowland to those who forsook him. He signed the protest. His support being reduced, he took charge of the 'Old Side' portion of the Derry congregation." Following closely upon these ecclesiastical troubles came the French and Indian war. Associations were formed throughout the Province of Pennsylvania for the defense of the frontiers, and the congregations of Mr. Elder were prompt to embody themselves. Their minister became their leader,—their captain,—and they were trained as rangers. He superintended the discipline of his men, and his mounted rangers became widely known as the "Paxtang Boys." During two summers at least, every man who attended Paxtang Church carried his rifle with him, and their minister took his.

Subsequently he was advanced to the dignity of colonel by the Provincial authorities, the date of his commission being July 11, 1763. He had command of the block-houses and stockades on the frontiers extending from Easton to the Susquehanna. The Governor in tendering this appointment expressly stated that nothing more would be expected of him than the general oversight. "His justification," says Webster, "lies in the crisis of affairs. . . . Bay at York, Steele at Conococheague, and Griffith at New Castle, with Burton and Thompson the church missionaries at Carlisle, headed companies and were actively engaged." During the latter part of the summer of 1763, many murders were committed in Paxtang, culminating in the destruction of the Indians on Conestoga Manor, and at Lancaster. Although the men composing the company of Paxtang men who exterminated the murderous savages referred to belonged to his obedient and faithful rangers, it has never been proved that the Rev. Mr. Elder had previous knowledge of the plot formed, although the Quaker pamphleteers of the day charged him with aiding and abetting the destruction of the Indians.

When the deed was done and the Quaker authorities seemed determined to proceed to extreme lengths with the participants, and denounced the frontiersmen as "riotous and murderous Irish Presbyterians," he took sides with the border inhabitants, and sought to condone the deed. His letters published in connection with the history of that transaction, prove him to have been a man judicious, firm, and decided. During the controversy which ensued he was the author of one of the pamphlets,—"Letter from a Gentleman in one of the Back Counties to a Friend in Philadelphia."

He was relieved from his command by the Governor of the Province, who directed that Maj. Asher Clayton take charge of the military establishment. Peace, however, was restored, not only in civil affairs but in the church. The union of the Synods brought the Rev. John Elder into the same Presbytery with Messrs. John Roan, Robert Smith, and George Duffield, they being at first in a minority, but rapidly settling the vacancies with New Side men. By the leave of Synod the Rev. Mr. Elder joined the Second Philadelphia Presbytery May 19, 1768, and on the formation of the General Assembly, became a member of Carlisle Presbytery.

"The fever-heat of the 'New Lights' soon abated; one after another of these religious fanatics returned; their churches rotted down; they live only in memory;" while by the death of the Rev. Mr. Roan, all dissensions were healed, and Paxtang and Derry were once more reunited. Mr. Elder was often heard to say "that among the many blessings bestowed upon him by the Giver of all Good, the return of these people to his churches again during his lifetime was among the greatest. He humbled himself before Almighty God for his merciful guidance through these severe trials, and that now his sore afflictions were healed by heavenly Love."

Foremost in opposition to the tyrannical rule of Great Britain, and in demanding their rights, were the descendants of those who had fled their own country for liberty's sake, and such were the members of Parson Elder's congregations. Too old to take up the sword, the minister of Paxtang and Derry assisted in raising the quota of troops allotted to his county, and was on the Committee of Safety for his section. In 1775 he delivered a powerful sermon on behalf of independence and the duty of his congregation in the crisis.

At the time the British army overrun New Jersey, driving before them the fragments of our discouraged, naked, and half-starved troops, and without any previous arrangement, the Rev. Mr. Elder went on Sunday as usual to Paxtang Church. The hour arrived for church-service, when, instead of a sermon, he began a short and hasty prayer to the Throne of Grace; then called upon the patriotism of all effective men present, and exhorted them to aid in the support of liberty's cause and the defense of the country. In less than thirty minutes a company of volunteers was formed. Col. Robert Elder, the parson's eldest son, was chosen captain. They marched next day, though in winter; his son John, at sixteen years, was among the first. His son Joshua, sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, could not quit the service he was employed in, but sent a substitute.

Until his death, for the period of fifty-six years, he continued the faithful minister of the congregations over which he had been placed in the prime of his youthful vigor, passing the age not generally allotted to man,—that of fourscore and six years. On the 17th of July, A.D. 1792, he laid by the armor of this earthly life, putting on that of immortality. His death was deeply lamented far and wide. Not one of all those who had welcomed him to his early field of labor survived him.

Charles Miner, the historian of Wyoming, gives this opinion of Rev. John Elder: "I am greatly struck with the evidences of learning, talent, and spirit displayed by him. He was beyond doubt the most extraordinary man of interior Pennsylvania. I hope some one may draw up a full memoir of his life, and a narrative, well digested, of his times. . . . He was a very extraordinary man, of most extensive influence, full of activity and enterprise, learned, pious, and a ready writer. I take him to have been of the old Cameronian blood. Had his lot been cast in New England he would have been a leader of the Puritans." He had, with one who well remembered the old minister, "a good and very handsome face. His features were regular,—no one prominent,—good complexion, with blue eyes. . . . He was a portly, long, straight man, over six feet in height, large frame and body, with rather heavy legs. . . . He did not talk broad Scotch, and spoke much as we do now, but grammatically."

His remains quietly repose amid the scenes of his earthly labors in the burying-ground of old Paxtang Church, by the side of those who loved and revered him. Over his dust a marble slab bears the inscription dictated by his friend and neighbor, William Maclay, first United States Senator from Pennsylvania. (See record of Paxtang Church.) Rev. John Elder was twice married, first to Mary Baker, daughter of Joshua Baker, of Lancaster, who was armorer under George II. of England, and they had four children. He married, secondly, Mary Simpson, daughter of Thomas Simpson, of Paxtang, and sister of Gen. Michael Simpson, of Revolutionary memory; and by this marriage there were eleven children.

THOMAS ELDER.

Thomas Elder, son of Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang, and Mary Simpson, was born Jan. 30, 1767, in Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. (now Dauphin Co.), Pa. He received a good English and classical education, especially under Joseph Hutchinson, a celebrated teacher in his day. He subsequently attended the academy at Philadelphia, where he graduated. Studied law with Gen. John A. Hanna, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the August term, 1791. He at once began the practice of a profession in which he became distinguished, and which he followed with great success for upwards of forty years. In the words of Hamilton Alricks, Esq., who presented the resolutions of the Dauphin County bar, which were adopted on the occasion of his decease, Mr. Elder "was eminent as a safe and sagacious counselor, a laborious and indefatigable lawyer." During the Whiskey Insurrection he volunteered as a private in Capt. Dentzel's company, which marched to the westward, preferring the ranks to that of a commissioned office which his company offered him. He subsequently held the office of lieutenant-colonel of the militia, and was frequently designated by the title of colonel. As a citizen in the early years of the borough of Harrisburg, Mr. Elder possessed public spirit and enterprise in advance of his contemporaries generally. He was the prominent and leading spirit in organizing a company to erect the Harrisburg bridge, the first constructed over the Susquehanna, and for many years the longest in the Union. Upon its permanent organization, he was unanimously elected the president, which office he held by annual re-election of the directors until his resignation in June, 1846. He was chosen president of the Harrisburg Bank in June, 1816, which office he held until his death. Governor Hiester appointed him attorney-general of the commonwealth, a position he filled with marked ability from Dec. 20, 1820, to Dec. 18, 1823, but he ever after positively refused to accept office, although he took a deep and active interest for many years in the political affairs of the State and nation. He was blessed with a physical constitution which enabled him to accomplish an extraordinary amount of labor without diminishing the elasticity of his spirits or the vigor of his mind. He lived to the advanced age of over eighty-six years, dying April 29, 1853, at Harrisburg. Mr. Elder was twice married. First to Catharine Cox, daughter of Col. Cornelius Cox, of Estherton; second, to Elizabeth Shippen Jones, daughter of Robert Strettel

Jones, of Philadelphia, and had issue by both marriages.

AMOS ELLMAKER.

Amos Ellmaker, the son of Nathaniel Ellmaker, was born in New Holland, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 2d of February, 1787. He graduated at Yale College, and after completing his law studies at the celebrated law-school under Judge Reeves, at Litchfield, Conn., he came to Harrisburg, and continued his studies under Thomas Elder, and was subsequently admitted to the bar at the December term, 1808. He was commissioned deputy attorney-general for the county of Dauphin, Jan. 13, 1809, serving until 1812, and represented Dauphin County in the Legislature from 1812 to 1814. He was appointed by Governor Snyder president judge of this judicial district, July 3, 1815. In 1814 he accompanied the volunteers to Baltimore as an aid to Gen. Forster. On the 30th of December, 1816, he resigned, to accept the position of attorney-general of the State, serving to 1819. In June, 1821, he removed to Lancaster, resuming the practice of his profession. He was the anti-Masonic candidate for Vice-President of the United States in 1832. Judge Ellmaker died at Lancaster on the 28th of November, 1851. He married June 13, 1816, Mary R. Elder, daughter of Thomas Elder and Catharine Cox, of Harrisburg, who survives. "Mr. Ellmaker," says Mr. Harris in his "Reminiscences," "was reported to be a good lawyer, and his addresses to the jury when at the bar were clear, distinct, and argumentative." As a gentleman, he possessed in an eminent degree those characteristics which distinguish men of rare endowment. He was well informed, and of a lively social disposition, and in all the relations and positions of life was a model worthy of imitation.

REV. JOHN MICHAEL ENTERLINE.

John Michael Enterline was a native of the Palatinate, Germany, where he was born in 1726. He was educated at the University of Leipsic, and ordained a minister in 1751. He emigrated to America about 1760, but to what locality is not known. He became pastor of what subsequently was organized as St. John's congregation, near Berrysburg, having settled in that neighborhood towards the close of the Revolution. He was a faithful minister of the gospel, and labored strenuously in his calling. He died in March, 1800, aged seventy-four years, leaving a wife, Anna Barbara, and children,—John Michael, John Paul, Daniel, Anna Mary, married Adam Lenker, and Elizabeth, married Henry Wirth. Many of his descendants are more or less prominent citizens of the "Upper End."

PROFESSOR JAMES P. ESPY.

James (Pollard) Espy, the son of James Espy, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., May 9, 1786. He was the youngest of ten children, and the seventh son. His father was a native of Hanover township, Dauphin Co., and had settled in Western Pennsylvania as early as 1780, removing about 1790 to the State of Kentucky, when the subject of our sketch was in his fourth year. His thirst for knowledge was from his childhood insatiable, and his means being limited, he began, while yet in his teens, teaching during a portion of each year to pay for the instruction received in the Transylvania University, Lexington, where he graduated at the age of twenty-one. The following year he was invited to Cumberland, Md., to take charge of a classical academy at that place, then newly endowed by the Legislature. His zeal for instructing the young was such that he soon made it a well-known institution, to which students came from every part of the country. In the mean time he studied law, went to Bedford, and was admitted to the bar there, subsequently going to Xenia, Ohio, whither his father had previously removed, where he practiced law four years. His profession did not seem to accord with the literary and scientific tendencies of his mind, and he accepted in 1817 a call to the classical department of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, and that city became his home for twenty years. During this period he published several pamphlets reviewing and rejecting the theories of storms and currents which prevailed, and these attracted the notice of the scientists of America. Professor Espy, having formed his own theory, brought it practically to the test of many storms. In 1841 he published his great work, "The Philosophy of Storms." Prior to its publication in this form the new theory had caused a sensation in the principal cities of England and France, and Professor Espy was invited to visit Europe and compare his results with those which had been reached by Redfield, Forbes, Pouillet, Fournet, and others. He accordingly visited Europe, and in September, 1840, the British Association appointed a day to entertain the professor's statement, which was made in the presence of Professor Forbes, Mr. Redfield, Sir John Herschel, Sir David Brewster, and other eminent naturalists. The discussion which followed was one of the most interesting ever reported in the journals of the Association.

In the Academy of Sciences at Paris the interest was equally great, and a committee consisting of Arago and Pouillet was appointed to report upon Espy's observations and theory. They were satisfied of the importance of the theory at once, and so reported. It was in the debate which took place in the Academy at this time that Arago said, "France has its Cuvier, England its Newton, America its Espy." On his return from this satisfactory visit Professor Espy was appointed corresponding member of the Smithsonian Institute. In 1843 he was employed by the War Department, in the Washington Observatory, to prosecute his investigations and collate the reports from the different observers throughout the country.

Several quarto volumes of this matter were published by the department. The remainder of his life was spent at the national capital, although his vacation days were enjoyed at Harrisburg amid the society of endeared friends. On the 17th of January, 1860, while on a visit to Cincinnati, Professor Espy was stricken with paralysis, from which he died on the 24th of the same month. His remains rest in the Espy burial lot in the Harrisburg Cemetery. He married, at the age of thirty-seven, Margaret Pollard, of Cumberland, Md., born Sept. 28, 1795, whose maiden name for some fancied reason he assumed, and was ever afterward known as James Pollard Espy. She died May 30, 1850, and is buried by the side of her husband at Harrisburg. They left no issue.

GEN. JACOB EYSTER.

Jacob Eyster, eldest son of George Eyster and Margaret Slagle, was born three miles west of Hanover, in what is now Adams County, Pa., June 8, 1782. He was a descendant of John Jacob Eyster, a native of the kingdom of Würtemberg, Germany, who emigrated to America between 1717 and 1727. Christian Eyster, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in Germany in 1710. The family settled first at Oley, in Berks County; from thence Christian removed, in 1736, to York County. The eldest son of Christian was Elias, born in 1734, who lived until almost a centenarian. His eldest son, George, born June 6, 1757, was a farmer and tanner, a soldier of the Revolution, captured at Fort Washington, and confined for some time on board the British prison-ships. He married, in 1780, Margaret, daughter of Jacob Slagle and sister of Col. Henry Slagle, of the Revolution. About 1783 they removed to near Hunterstown, within five miles of Gettysburg, where their son Jacob passed his youth and early manhood. When first enrolled among the militia of Adams County he was appointed first sergeant, rose to captain, and then major, and in 1814 appointed by Governor Snyder brigadier-general Second Brigade, Fifth Division, Pennsylvania militia. During the invasion of Maryland by the British that year he was employed by the Secretary of War (Armstrong) and the Governor of Pennsylvania in distributing and forwarding arms and supplies to the militia who were called into service. In 1811 he removed to Gettysburg and engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1818 he was a candidate for the House of Representatives, defeated by sixty-two votes, while the remainder of the Democratic ticket fell from three hundred to fourteen hundred behind. The year following (1819) he was nominated State senator for an unexpired term, elected, and subsequently for a full term. Previous to the nomination of Governor Shulze, Gen. Eyster was spoken of as a gubernatorial candidate. In 1822 he removed to Harrisburg, and in 1824 he resigned his seat in the Senate and was appointed deputy surveyor-general, an office he retained for fifteen years. He afterwards became cashier of a bank at Hagerstown, Md., but after a year's absence returned to Harrisburg, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died there on the 24th of March, 1858. He married, in 1810, Mary Middlecoff, of Adams County, who died at Harrisburg, March 24, 1867, at the age of seventy-five years. They had issue: Jacob M., Juliana (married Professor M. Jacobs, of Gettysburg), David A., Rev. William F., Alfred E., and Louisa C.

OBED FAHNESTOCK.

Obed Fahnestock, third son of Peter Fahnestock and Elizabeth Bolthouser, and grandson of Diedrich Fahnestock, who came to America as early as 1726, and settled at Ephrata about 1749, was born Feb. 25, 1770, at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa. He was brought up to mercantile pursuits, and came to Harrisburg about 1795, where he entered into business. He seems to have been a man of considerable intelligence and prominence, as almost thirty years of his life were spent in office. He was coroner from Nov. 3, 1802, to Nov. 3, 1805; director of the poor from 1811 to 1813; one of the associate judges of the county from Nov. 12, 1813, to July 30, 1818, appointed by Governor Snyder, when, owing to his dislike of Samuel D. Franks, who had been appointed president judge of the courts, he resigned; was burgess of the borough 1820 and 1821, and was frequently a member of the Council. He served as prothonotary from Jan. 17, 1824, to Jan. 29, 1830. Judge Fahnestock died at Harrisburg, March 2, 1840, aged seventy years. He married, April 19, 1796, Anna Maria Gessell, born Jan. 9, 1777; died Dec. 3, 1844.

CONRAD FAHNESTOCK.

Conrad Fahnestock, son of Peter Fahnestock and Elizabeth Bolthouser, was born at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1763. He received a fair education at the German school there, and learned the art of printing with the Ephrata brethren. He came to Harrisburg in 1791, and engaged with his brother Obed in merchandising. Subsequently he entered into partnership with Benjamin Mayer in the publication of the Morgenrothe, or "Dutch Aurora," as it was commonly called. Under the infamous alien and sedition act of the administration of the elder Adams, Messrs. Mayer & Fahnestock were arrested by United States officers and thrown into prison, but promptly released on bail. They were never tried. Shortly afterwards Mr. Fahnestock retired from the printing business and entered the mercantile trade at Middletown, where he died on the 80th of September, 1808. The Oracle speaks of him as "an industrious, honest, and valuable member of society."

JOHN FAGER.

John Fager, son of John Jacob Fager and Rosanna Lutz, was born June 10, 1768, in Oley township, Berks Co., Pa. His grandfather, John Henry Fager, born in 1714, in Germany, married Susanna M. Leuter, and emigrated to America, settling in Oley township, Berks Co., where he died in 1778. His son, John Jacob, born 1738, in the Palatinate, died in 1815, at Harrisburg, married Rosanna Lutz, born 1739; died 1802. Their son, John, learned the trade of a hatter in Reading, and came to Harrisburg about 1790, where for a number of years he carried on the business. He was one of the founders of the Evangelical

JOHN H. FAGER, M.D.

John Henry Fager, son of John Fager and Sarah Cleckner, was born in the year 1806, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received careful training and a good education. He read medicine with Dr. Martin Luther, one of the more prominent of the early physicians at Harrisburg, and attended medical lectures at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1829 he began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg, which he continued until his death, a period of forty-three years. In 1840, his attention being called to the homœopathic system, the doctor commenced the study of the new theory, and afterwards adopted it in his practice.

Mr H. Fager

Lutheran Church at Harrisburg in 1795; served as commissioner of the county of Dauphin, and for a number of years was a member of the Town Council. After retiring from active business, late in life, he was the collector of tolls at the east end of the Harrisburg bridge. He died at Harrisburg on the 10th of May, 1848, lacking one month of being eighty years of age. Mr. Fager married Sarah Cleckner, born 1772, died 1844, at Harrisburg, daughter of Frederick Cleckner, Sr., one of the first settlers at Harrisburg. They had ten children, of whom reached mature years were Sarah, married George Adams, of Harrisburg; Catharine, married Frederick Kelker, of Harrisburg; Samuel, George C., and John H.

He was quite a successful physician, and enjoyed the confidence of the community. Apart from his professional life, Dr. Fager was a valued citizen. For thirty-three years he was a member of the school board, during most of which period he was secretary or treasurer; for several terms a member of the Borough Council, and for fifty years an active worker in the Sunday-school of the First Lutheran Church. He died Aug. 18, 1872, aged sixty-five years. Dr. Fager was twice married,—first, to Eliza Jones (1810–1834), and had Albert J., who served as first lieutenant in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and now an alderman of the city of Harrisburg. He married, secondly, Mary H. Buffington, daughter of John Buffington and Isabella Fulton, and they had Dr. Charles B. (see biographical sketch), Ella E., Bella F., Annie M., and Dr. John H.

CAPT. GEORGE W. FENN.

George Washington Fenn was born at East Canaan, Litchfield Co., Conn., on the 20th of March, 1845. His father's name was Benjamin Sedgwick Fenn, and his mother's maiden name was Sarah Scranton, of East Guilford, New Haven Co., Conn. George died at Harrisburg, July 29, 1866, aged twenty-one years, four months, and nine days. He married Annie E. Roberts, daughter of Joseph Roberts, of Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 28, 1864. He finished his education at the Lancaster, Pa., high school; was a good mathematician, good grammarian, and had some knowledge of Latin. He was an apt scholar, and could master almost any study in a short time. He was for some time employed in the printing-office of his uncle, Theo. Fenn, Esq., acting in the capacity of reporter of local news. He removed with his uncle to Harrisburg in 1859, and was employed as a reporter in the State Senate. He raised a volunteer company in Harrisburg in 1864, called the Verbeke Guards, which was attached to the Two Hundred and Tenth Regiment, commanded by Col. J. Wesley Aul. He and part of his company were taken prisoners by Early's men in the Shenandoah Valley. The rebels stripped him of part of his clothing, and traveled him barefooted to Lynchburg or Staunton, but he eventually escaped and returned home before the end of the war, and was assigned to the Provost-Marshal's Department, holding court-martials, etc. After the war he, with Samuel B. Coles, established a printing-office in Lykens, from which they issued the Upper Dauphin Register, an office afterwards purchased by his brother, Samuel M. Fenn, altering the name to Lykens Register, and continued ever since.

COL. PHILIP FETTERHOFF.

Philip Fetterhoff, son of Frederick Fetterhoff and Susanna Heckert, was a native of Lancaster County, Pa., born Sept. 2, 1788. His father removed to Upper Paxtang township prior to 1806, and established a mill in what is now Jackson township. He was brought up to the occupation of his father. He commanded a company from his neighborhood which marched to the defense of Baltimore in 1814. After his return he was chosen colonel of one of the militia battalions. He was elected coroner of the county, serving from Oct. 24, 1821, to Nov. 20, 1824, and filled a number of local offices. Col. Fetterhoff died at his residence in Jackson township on the 4th of September, 1833. He married, in 1811, Eve Bayer, and left four children.

GOVERNOR WILLIAM FINDLAY.

William Findlay, the second son of Samuel Findlay and Jane Smith, was born near Mercersburg, Franklin Co., Pa., June 20, 1768. His progenitor, beyond whom he never traced his lineage, was Adjt. Brown, as he was called, who took part in the famous siege of Derry, and afterwards emigrated to America with his daughter Elizabeth. The daughter married Samuel Findlay, of Philadelphia. A son by this marriage settled, about 1756, in Cumberland (now Franklin) County, Pa. In the year 1765 he married Jane Smith, a daughter of William Smith. She died in her thirty-fifth year, the mother of eight boys, six of whom survived her. The subject of this sketch was the second of this family of sons. The Scotch-Irish settlers appreciated the importance of a good education. A knowledge of the common English branches they deemed indispensable for all their children, while one son in a family at least, if it could be accomplished by any reasonable sacrifice, received a classical education. William, in his boyhood, displayed that activity of mind and thirst for knowledge which were the characteristics of his manhood. His leisure hours were devoted to reading such books as were accessible. His instruction was, however, such as could be obtained in the schools of the neighborhood. The meagre advantages afforded him were studiously improved, and the natural activity of his mind and his ambition to excel enabled him to make substantial acquirements.

On the 7th of December, 1791, he was married to Nancy Irwin, daughter of Archibald Irwin, of Franklin County, and commenced life as a farmer on a portion of his father's estate which, at the death of his father, in 1799, he inherited.

He was a political disciple and a great admirer of Mr. Jefferson. The first office which he ever held was a military one, that of brigade inspector of militia, requiring more of business capacity than knowledge of tactics. To the veterans of the Revolutionary war it was given to become generals and colonels. In the autumn of 1797, that immediately succeeding the inauguration of John Adams as President of the United States, at a time when the only newspaper published in Franklin County was the organ of the Federalists, with its columns strictly closed against the Republicans, Mr. Findlay was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the State Legislature, which then sat in Philadelphia. He was again elected to the House in 1803. Mr. Jefferson had succeeded Mr. Adams in the Presidency, and the Republicans were in the ascendant in both national and State governments. The capital had, by the act of April 3, 1799, been temporarily established at Lancaster. Mr. Findlay, at this session, proposed that it should be permanently established at Harrisburg. The proposition then failed; but it was eventually carried, and in 1812 the removal was effected. He proved himself a leading member, and one of the most useful in the House, being placed in the most responsible positions. When the act to revise the judiciary system was before the House, Mr. Findlay offered additional sections, providing that a plaintiff might file a statement of his cause of action, instead of a declaration; for reference of matters in dispute to arbitration; that proceedings should not be set aside for informality; that pleadings might be amended, and amicable actions and judgments entered without the agency of an attorney.

GOVERNOR WILLIAM FINDLAY.

These provisions were not then adopted, but they afterwards became and still are a part of the statute law. The object aimed at by their mover was doubtless to enable parties to conduct their own cases in court without professional assistance. This the enactments have failed to accomplish; but they have been of great advantage to attorneys themselves, enabling them to cure their own errors and omissions, to which they as well as the unlearned are liable.

On the 13th of January, 1807, Mr. Findlay was elected State treasurer, whereupon he resigned his seat in the House. From that date until the 2d of December, 1817, when he resigned to assume the duties of chief magistrate, a period of nearly eleven years, he was annually re-elected by the Legislature to that office, in several instances unanimously, and always by a strong majority, not uncommonly being supported by members politically opposed to him. During nearly four years of this time the United States were at war with England, and the resources of the country were severely taxed.

In 1817, Mr. Findlay was nominated by the Republicans as their candidate for Governor. Gen. Joseph Hiester was selected by a disaffected branch of the Republican party, styled Old School men, to oppose him, who was supported also by the Federalists. The result was a triumph for Findlay, who was elected by a majority of over seven thousand votes.

In 1820, Governor Findlay again received the unanimous nomination of the Republicans for re-election, and Joseph Hiester was nominated, as before, by the Republicans of the Old School, and was supported by the Federalists en masse. Under the Constitution of 1790 the patronage of the Executive was immense. To him was given the power of appointing, with few exceptions, every State and county officer. This power, considered so dangerous that, by the Constitution of 1838 and subsequent amendments, the Executive has been stripped of it almost entirely, was, in fact, dangerous only to the Governor himself. For while he might attach one person to him by making an appointment, the score or two who were disappointed became, if not active political opponents, at least lukewarm friends. Many trained and skillful politicians had been alienated from the support of Governor Findlay by their inability to share or control patronage. The result was the election of his opponent.

At the general elections of 1821 the Republicans regained ascendancy in the Legislature. At the session of 1821-22, while Governor Findlay was quietly spending the winter with a friend and relative in Franklin County, he received notice that he had been elected to the Senate of the United States for the full term of six years from the preceding 4th of March. He immediately set out for the capital, where he took his seat, and served the entire term with distinguished ability. While he was in the Senate two of his brothers, Col. John Findlay, of Chambersburg, and Gen. James Findlay, of Cincinnati, Ohio, were members of the national House of Representatives. After the expiration of his senatorial term he was appointed by President Jackson treasurer of the United States Mint at Philadelphia. This office he held until the accession of Gen. Harrison to the Presidency, when, unwilling, at his advanced age, to be longer burdened with its cares and responsibilities, he resigned. The remainder of his life was spent in retirement with the family of his son-in-law, Governor Shunk, at whose residence, in Harrisburg, he died on the 12th of November, 1846, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

In person Governor Findlay was tall, with fair complexion and dark-brown hair. He had a vigorous constitution and a cheerful disposition. He was affable and courteous in his address, fond of conversation, but did not monopolize it. He understood and practiced the habits of a good listener. He exhibited great tact in drawing out the reserved and taciturn, and enabling them to figure well in conversation by giving rein to their hobbies. He possessed a remarkably tenacious memory of names and faces. After a long separation, he could recognize and call by name a person with whom he had had but a short and casual interview. His acquaintance was probably more extensive and his personal friends more numerous than those of almost any other public man of his day.

ISAAC S. FINNEY.

Isaac S. Finney, son of George Washington Finney and Elspay Smith, was born Sept. 6, 1835, at Hall-fax, Dauphin Co., Pa. He entered the navy as third assistant engineer in 1859, and joined the "Mystic," which was detailed for duty on the coast of Africa. On the 25th of November, 1861, he was promoted to the rank of second assistant engineer. He afterward joined the "Tuscarora," and was present during the engagement at Fort Fisher, and while engaged in the pursuit of the "Alabama," and remained on her till 1864, when he was promoted to the rank of first assistant engineer and ordered to shore duty; but this only lasted for a few days, for on the 23d of June he was ordered to join the frigate "Susquehanna," belonging to the North Atlantic squadron, and remained on her till the 25th of June, 1866, when he went on shore duty at the Philadelphia and Portsmouth navy-yards for a brief period of time. On the 25th of May, 1867, he joined the "Minnesota," and remained on her till the 31st of January, 1868. On the 26th of January, 1870, he joined the frigate "Colorado," fitting out for the Asiatic squadron, and remained on her till she went out of commission on the 25th of March, 1873. Upon his return he obtained his promotion to chief engineer. During the "Virginius" excitement, and when a war with Spain appeared probable, he voluntarily relinquished the agreeable position he held of superintendent of the construction of government machinery at Newburgh, on the Hudson, to join his old ship the "Colorado." From the evil effects of his six months' sojourn on board that vessel off the coast of Cuba and Key West he never recovered, and died at Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 19th of November, 1874. He was interred in the family burial lot in the Harrisburg Cemetery.

GEORGE FISHER.

George Fisher, the son of John and Catharine Fisher, influential Quakers of Philadelphia, was born in that city Feb. 10, 1732. His father purchasing a large tract of land on the Swatara, conveyed it to the son in 1754, and on which he settled about the same year. Foreseeing the advantages, George Fisher, in 1775, laid out a town on the highest portion of his farm, naming it Middletown. He married, in 1755, Hannah, daughter of Jonas Chamberlain, of Sadsbury township, Lancaster Co., Pa., by whom he had three children,—John, George, and Hannah. Mr. Fisher died Feb. 21, 1777. By will he devised to his son John the homestead, and to his son George the plantation at the mouth of the Swatara; his daughter receiving, in lieu of land, eight hundred pounds. John Fisher became a physician, and George Fisher a lawyer of considerable reputation at the Dauphin County bar. The latter was the father of Judge Fisher, of York.

R. JACKSON FLEMING.

Robert Jackson Fleming, the son of Samuel Fleming and Sarah Becket, was born Nov. 16, 1808, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Pa. He received an academical education, and while yet a young man became a teacher and lecturer on English grammar and on music, and took a trip to the then West, lecturing on his favorite topic. In 1834 he established the coach-making business on an extensive scale at Harrisburg, and continued it with success until his entire establishment was destroyed by fire June 15, 1865. He did not resume it. He built at his shop the first eight-wheel passenger-car which ran on the Pennsylvania Railroad, between Columbia and Philadelphia, also the first on the Williamsport and Elmira Railroad, taking it up the canal on a flat-boat. He was appointed notary public in 1861, and held the office until his death, for years doing the business of the Harrisburg National Bank in this official capacity. He died at Harrisburg, Dec. 2, 1874, in the seventy-second year of his age. He was deservedly honored in his adopted city as an upright and enterprising citizen, a man of intelligent and high moral character, and in the Presbyterian Church of which he was a lifelong member he was one of its elders for twenty years. Mr. Fleming married in 1845, Sarah Ann Poor, of McConnellsville, Ohio, and left one son, Samuel W.

JAMES FLEMING, M.D.

James Fleming, son of Samuel Fleming and Sarah Becket, was born June 25, 1810, in Washington County, Pa. In 1812 his parents removed to Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa., where his early years were passed. His boyhood was marked by a laudable ambition to excel in his studies, and the influence of his mother in this direction had its good effect not only during his youth, but throughout his life. Thrown upon his own resources at the age of eighteen, he resolved to educate himself by alternately acting as teacher and pupil, and pursued this course for seven years, thereby becoming conversant with the higher mathematics, the ancient languages, and French. Much of his time was passed in the States of Kentucky and Ohio. About 1835 he commenced the study of medicine, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in March, 1838. For four years he practiced his profession, but finding the duties too arduous for his slender constitution, his attention was drawn to the science of dental surgery, then comparatively in its infancy. Observing the necessity for good operators in this field, he went to Philadelphia and acquired a thorough knowledge of that specialty. Returning to Harrisburg, he met with deserved and well-marked success. During the remainder of his life he was a frequent contributor to both medical and dental journals, and occasionally to the newspaper press. He was a member of the Pennsylvania Association of Dental Surgeons and of the American Society, and one of the original advocates of the establishment of a dental college at Philadelphia, in which he was subsequently tendered a professorship, but declined. He was twice the recipient of the honorary degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. He was a director of the Harrisburg National Bank, president of the board of school directors, and an elder of the First Presbyterian Church. He died at Harrisburg, Jan. 30, 1875, in his sixty-fifth year. Dr. Fleming married, in 1852, Jeannette Street, daughter of Col. Thaddeus Street and Martha Davenport Reynolds, of Cheshire, Conn., a lineal descendant of Rev. John Davenport, the founder of New Haven. Her maternal grandmother, Martha Davenport, was a descendant of Oliver Wolcott, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Their children were Helen Street, married Daniel P. Bruner, a lawyer and civil engineer, and William Reynolds.

ROBERT FLEMING.

Robert Fleming, the fourth son of Robert Fleming and Jane Jackson, was born in Chester County, Pa., June 6, 1756. His parents were natives of Argyleshire, Scotland, who subsequently removed to Ireland, and from thence emigrated to America, about 1746, settling near Flemington, Chester Co. Prior to the Revolution they located within the limits of the "New Purchase," on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, but during the "Great Runaway," in 1778, they sought refuge among some friends in now Dauphin County. About 1784 they removed to Hanover township, Washington Co., Pa., locating on Harmon's Creek, where they resided at the time of their death, Robert Fleming at ninety-six and his wife at ninety-four. Robert Fleming, the subject of this notice, remained in Dauphin County; purchased land in Hanover township, on which he resided during his lifetime. On the 6th of February, 1783, he married Margaret, daughter of John Wright. He was one of the founders of the Harrisburg Bank, and instrumental in the erection of the Harrisburg bridge. He was an officer in the volunteer force of 1812, and filled acceptably various local offices. He was an elder in the Hanover Church during the ministrations of Rev. James Snodgrass. He died Feb. 4, 1817, and his wife Dec. 12, 1813, aged fifty-nine years.

JOHN FORD.

John Ford, son of Peter Ford and Rebecca Shipe, was born in the town of York, Pa., Jan. 5, 1780. His father was a silversmith, and an emigrant from England, and was an officer in one of the associated battalions of York County, serving in the war for independence. John received a fair English education, learned the trade of his father, and also that of a gunsmith. He came to Harrisburg in 1801, and established himself in business, which he continued quite successfully up to within a few years of his death. He was appointed State armorer in 1817, and superintendent of the arsenal at Harrisburg, an office he filled many years. He died at Harrisburg, Jan. 31, 1862, at the age of eighty-two years. He was a man of enterprise and ingenuity, scrupulously honest and upright. Mr. Ford married, in 1803, Mary Schnevely, of Cumberland County, Pa., born June 12, 1781; died Dec. 25, 1830. They had children as follows: George (married Catharine, daughter of George Stehley), Julianna (married John Wetzel), Maria (married Samuel Sloan), Charles, Susan (married George Welker), Eliza (married, first, Louis Shuler; second, Samuel Brenizer), Catharine (married George Balsley), and William.

tion" of 1794, and was on that expedition as an aid to Gen. Murray. He subsequently read law with Gen. Hanna, but never applied for admission, turning his attention to mercantile pursuits, in which he was very successful. During the military era of the government prior to the war of 1812 he was colonel of State militia, and in 1814, when the troops from Pennsylvania marched to the defense of the beleaguered city of Baltimore, he was placed in command of a brigade of volunteers. For his gallant services in that campaign the thanks of the general commanding were tendered in special orders. He served in the State Senate from 1814 to 1818. Gen. Forster was cashier of the Harrisburg Bank for a period of at least sixteen years, established the Bank of Lewistown, and in 1840 was cashier of the Exchange Bank of Pittsburgh. He subsequently became president of the branch bank at Hollidays-

GEN. JOHN FORSTER.

John Forster, the son of John Forster and Catharine Dickey, daughter of Moses Dickey, was born in Paxtang township, Lancaster Co., now Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 17th of September, 1777. He received a good education, and was at Princeton when a call was made by President Washington for volunteers to march to Western Pennsylvania to put down the so-called "Whiskey Insurrec-burg, but in a few years retired from all business pursuits and returned to his home at Harrisburg. He died there on the 28th of May, 1863, at the advanced age of almost eighty-six years. Gen. Forster was faithful, honest, and upright in all his business connections, and a good financier.

Gen. Forster married, first, Mary Elder, daughter of John Elder, and granddaughter of Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang, and their children were John, Joshua, Catharine, married Henry Antes; Rev. Thomas, of Mount Clement, Mich.; William, of Lancaster County; and Theodore, of St. Louis, Mo., a representative man of that metropolis. He married, secondly, Margaret Snodgrass, daughter of Benjamin Law, of Mifflin, Pa., and widow of Rev. James H. Stewart,¹ a Presbyterian clergyman of the Kishacoquillas Valley. Their children were Benjamin L., a lawyer of Harrisburg; Margaret S., married Maj. Edwin Vose Sumner, U.S.A., son of Gen. Sumner, of Fort Robinson, N. Y.; Ellen Rutherford, married George C. Bent, of Harrisburg; and Mary Elizabeth, married James Edward Cann, paymaster U.S.A.

THOMAS FORSTER, ESQ.

Thomas Forster (1st) was a native of County Antrim, Ireland, of Scotch parentage, born in 1696. He emigrated to America at an early period, and was among the first who took up land in what is now Paxtang township. He was a gentleman of means, had received a good education, and was for many years one of the Provincial magistrates. He was removed late in life, on account of his refusal to oust some squatters on Proprietary lands. He was a prominent personage on the then frontiers of the Province in civil affairs, and much interested in the establishment of Paxtang Church, to which he donated a valuable tract of land. During the Indian troubles he greatly assisted in preparing for the defense of the border settlements, and his name appears frequently in the voluminous correspondence preserved in the archives of the State. He died in Paxtang, 25th of July, 1772, aged seventy-six years, and is buried in the old church graveyard. Mr. Forster was never married; the principal part of his estate went to his brother John and nephew Thomas Forster, the latter named for him.

COL. THOMAS FORSTER.

Thomas Forster (2d), the son of John Forster, brother of Thomas Forster, Esq., and Catherine Dickey, was born in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 16th of May, 1762. He received a good education and was brought up as a surveyor. During the latter part of the Revolution was in arms for the defense of the frontiers. In 1794, during the so-called Whiskey Insurrection, he served as colonel of one of the volunteer regiments in that expedition. He was one of the associate judges of Dauphin County, appointed Oct. 26, 1793, by Governor Mifflin, resigning Dec. 3, 1798, having been elected one of the representatives of the State Legislature that year. At the close of 1799 or early in 1800, as the agent of the Harrisburg and Presqu' Isle Land Company, he permanently removed to Erie. In the affairs incident to the early settlement of that town and the organization of that county he took a prominent part. He was one of the first street commissioners of the town, president of the Erie and Waterford Turnpike Company, one of the directors of the first library company and its librarian, and captain of the first military company formed at Erie, and which, in 1812, was in service at Buffalo, Capt. Forster being promoted brigade inspector. In 1823 he was appointed by Governor Shulze one of the commissioners to explore the route for the Erie extension of the Pennsylvania Canal, and in 1827 was chairman of the meeting organizing St. Paul's Episcopal Church. In 1823 he was appointed by President Adams collector of the port at Erie, and successively commissioned by Presidents Jefferson, Madison, J. Q. Adams, and Jackson, filling the office until his death, which occurred at Erie, June 29, 1836. Col. Forster married, Oct. 5, 1786, Sarah Pettit Montgomery, daughter of the Rev. Joseph Montgomery, a member of the Confederate Congress. She died at Erie, July 27, 1808.

JOHN FOX.

John Fox, son of John Fox and Ann Margaret Rupert, was born June 10, 1780, near Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the country schools of the neighborhood, and a farmer by occupation. He became quite prominent and influential in the political affairs of the county, and served as a member of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania from 1831 to 1833. He filled the office of sheriff from Oct. 14, 1833, to Oct. 21, 1836, and again from Oct. 19, 1839, to Oct. 24, 1842. Apart from these positions of trust and honor, he served his neighbors in the various township offices with fidelity. He died at his residence in Hummelstown, July 19, 1853, aged seventy-three years. He was a representative man, not only of his family but of the county, a faithful officer, of strict integrity, upright and conscientious in all his relations with his fellow-men.

GOVERNOR JOHN W. GEARY.

John White Geary, the son of Richard Geary and Margaret White, was born Dec. 30, 1819, near Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland Co., Pa. The father was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, a native of Franklin County, and a man of education, refined tastes, and superior moral excellence. His mother was born in Washington County, Md. They removed to Westmoreland County soon after their marriage, where Richard Geary engaged at first in the manufacture of iron, which proving unsuccessful, he resorted to teaching, a profession he pursued the remainder of his life. The son turned to commercial pursuits, but convinced by a short experience in a wholesale house in Pittsburgh that this would not prove to him a satisfactory sphere of life, he yielded to his natural predilections for mathematics, and applied himself to the study of civil engineering. Having mastered the principles of that profession, he commenced the study of the law, in the belief that it would increase the chances of a successful career, and was admitted to the bar, though intending to adopt engineering as his fixed vocation. With this end in view he went to Kentucky, where he was engaged, partly in the employ of the commonwealth and partly in that of the Green River Railroad Company, to make a survey of several important lines of public works. His success in the Southwest opened the way to advancement in his native State, and he soon after became assistant superintendent and engineer of the

GOVERNOR JOHN W. GEARY.

Allegheny Portage Railroad. While occupied with the duties of this position, in the month of May, 1846, President Polk sent a message to Congress, informing that body that "war existed with this country by the act of Mexico," and asking for men and money to enable him to maintain the rights and vindicate the honor of the government. The burst of enthusiasm was instantaneous and general, and Geary was among the first who responded to the call for volunteers, in a short time raising a company in Cambria County, to which he gave the name of American Highlanders. At Pittsburgh, his command was incorporated with the Second Pennsylvania Regiment, commanded by Col. Roberts, of which he was immediately elected lieutenant-colonel. The regiment joined the army of General Scott at Vera Cruz, and served with conspicuous gallantry in Quitman's division during the memorable advance upon the Mexican capital. Lieut.-Col. Geary's first experience of actual war was in the partial though spirited action of the Pass of La Hoya. In the storming of Chapultepec he was wounded, and in the assault upon the immediate defenses of the city, at the Garita de Belen, he again led his regiment with so much judgment, coolness, and intrepidity that upon the capture he was assigned to the command of the great citadel, as a mark of Quitman's appreciation of his services. From the time when the army entered the valley of Mexico, Col. Roberts was disqualified for duty by sickness, and the command of the regiment devolved upon the lieutenant-colonel. Shortly after the surrender of the capital, Col. Roberts died, and Lieut.-Col. Geary was elected to succeed him.

On the 22d of January, 1849, President Polk, in grateful recognition of his services in the Mexican war, appointed Col. Geary postmaster of San Francisco and mail agent for the Pacific coast, with authority to create post-offices, appoint postmasters, establish mail routes, and make contracts for carrying the mails throughout California. Having received his commission, on the 1st of February, in company with his wife and child, sailed from New York for the Pacific coast. On the 1st of April he landed safely at San Francisco, and entered at once upon the discharge of his duties. For a time he was obliged to content himself with the rudest accommodations, and to perform his work under many disadvantages. But here, as in all previous situations, his methodical turn and practical tact soon enabled him to improvise all needful facilities, and brought the labors of the office under an easy and expeditious management.

The intelligent and obliging dispatch with which Col. Geary had discharged his duties as postmaster and mail agent so won the confidence and esteem of the people of San Francisco, that when the time arrived for the election of town officers he was unanimously chosen first alcalde, though there were ten different tickets submitted to the choice of the voters. Shortly afterwards this mark of appreciation on the part of the citizens was followed by another equally flattering on the part of the military governor of the Territory, Brig.-Gen. Riley, who appointed him judge of first instance. These offices were of Mexican origin, and they imposed onerous and important duties. The alcalde was sheriff, probate judge, recorder, notary public, and coroner. The court of first instance exercised both civil and criminal jurisdiction throughout the city, and besides this adjudicated all those cases arising under the port regulations which usually fall within the cognizance of courts of admiralty. At the close of his first term he was re-elected, receiving all but four votes of the whole number cast, and continued in office until the Mexican institutions were superseded by the American forms of municipal government.

In a vote upon the first city charter and for officers to serve thereunder, May 1, 1850, Judge Geary was elected first mayor of San Francisco by a large majority. As mayor, he rendered valuable service in perfecting the municipal organization, in restraining the tendency to extravagant expenditure of the public funds, sustaining the city's credit by judicious management of its finances, and by an honest disposal of the public property saved to the corporation many millions of dollars.

Owing to the failing health of his wife, Col. Geary, on the 1st of February, 1852, sailed from San Francisco, intending to go back and remain permanently in California, but the death of the former and other circumstances unforeseen caused him to change his purpose, and gave a new direction to his whole course of life. After having spent about three years in retirement, and had in a measure brought the condition of his farm into conformity with his own ideal of what such an estate should be, President Pierce invited him to Washington for the purpose of tendering to him the Governorship of Utah, which, after due acknowledgment of the compliment, he respectfully declined.

Not the government of Utah but of Kansas was the great problem of Mr. Pierce's administration. A bloody civil strife was being waged in that Territory, and the political state of the whole country was convulsed on the subject of its affairs. One Governor had been removed for refusing to conform strictly to the Federal policy in regard to slavery, and another was preparing to flee from the Territory through fear of assassination. In view of the pressing exigency, the thoughts of the President reverted to Col. Geary, and after consultation in July he was appointed Governor of Kansas, and proceeded immediately to his new field of labor, arriving at Fort Leavenworth on the 9th of September, 1856. His administration extended only from that date to March, 1857.

Governor Geary was at his farm in Westmoreland when the sound of the Rebellion's first gun broke upon the ear of the nation. Early on the morning following the eventful day he drove his farm-wagon to the neighboring village, and there first heard the news of the assault upon Fort Sumter. In less than an hour after reading the telegram he had opened an office for the enlistment of volunteers. As soon as he could communicate with the President he tendered his services, and was immediately commissioned colonel, with authority to raise a regiment for the defense of the Union. In the course of a few weeks he received applications from sixty-six companies, soliciting permission to join his command. On account of the numerous and urgent appeals he was permitted to increase his regiment to sixteen companies, with one battery of six guns, making the full complement to consist of fifteen hundred and fifty-one officers and men. The artillery company was that which subsequently became so celebrated as Knapp's Battery. Of Gen. Geary's services during the Rebellion we shall not refer further than to say they were brilliant, and gave him honor few enjoyed, and when the war closed he had reached the rank of major-general.

When, in the spring of 1866, the Republican leaders began to consider the important question of selecting a candidate for the chief magistracy of the State, it soon became apparent that the name of Gen. Geary was everywhere received with favor. His ripe experience in the conduct of civil affairs and his distinguished services in the field commended him alike to the gratitude of the popular heart and the sanction of the popular judgment. After a very spirited canvass he was elected over his competitor, Hiester Clymer, by a majority of over seventeen thousand votes, and was inaugurated on the 15th of January, 1867.

Governor Geary was elected to a second term, which he filled with acknowledged ability. A few weeks after his successor in office was inaugurated he died suddenly while sitting at the breakfast-table. The entire city and State were shocked by the unexpected event. The Legislature, then in session, at once adopted measures for the funeral obsequies at the State's expense. To no former Executive had ever such a distinction been accorded, and every respect that could be shown was paid to his memory. He was buried at Harrisburg, and over his grave the State he loved so well and served so faithfully erected a monument of bronze creditable to the great commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Governor Geary married, on the 12th of February, 1843, Margaret Ann Logan, daughter of James R. Logan, of Westmoreland County. Three sons were the issue of this marriage, one of whom died in infancy, another, Edward R., killed in the battle of Wauhatchie, and the other, William, a graduate of West Point and lieutenant in the United States army. Mrs. Geary died on the 28th of February, 1853, and in November, 1858, Governor Geary was married to Mrs. Mary C. Henderson, daughter of Robert R. Church, of Cumberland County. After Governor Geary's death his widow married Dr. H. Earnest Goodman, of Philadelphia.

MOSES GILLMOR.

Moses Gillmor was born in the townland of Burt, parish of Templemore, county of Donegal, six miles from the city of Londonderry, province of Ulster, Ireland, about the year 1749. Until his seventeenth year he remained in Ireland, when he came with an uncle to America, settling in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. Prior to the Revolution he returned to Ireland on business connected with his father's estate, but the breaking out of the war delayed his return until about 1783. The next year, November, 1784, according to Parson Elder's marriage record, he married Isabel Wallace, third daughter of Robert and Mary Wallace, of Hanover. Upon the laying out of the town of Harrisburg in 1785, Mr. Gillmor purchased a lot on Market Square, built a house, and established himself in the mercantile business, which he successfully carried on a number of years. He was quite prominent in local political affairs, and in the church of which he was one of the founders—the First Presbyterian—he was an elder for thirty-four years. Mr. Gillmor died at Harrisburg, June 10, 1825, aged seventy-six years, and with his wife, Isabel (born in 1755, died Sept. 16, 1828), is buried in Paxtang Church graveyard. Their children were Thomas, born 1785, died 1793; Mary, born 1787, died 1793; William, born 1789, died Aug. 28, 1856; Robert, born 1791, died Nov. 13, 1867; Margaret, born 1793, died 1839.

COL. CHRISTIAN GLEIM.

Christian Gleim, fourth son of George Christian Gleim and Anna Maria Mathias, was born Jan. 10, 1780. He received a fair education and subsequently went to Philadelphia, where he entered the printing-office of Ezra Bailey, serving with Duane, Binns, Marshall, Wynkoop, and others who became men of note. He next went to Richmond, Va., and thence to Baltimore. There he married Martha Henry, daughter of John Henry. In 1812, Mr. Gleim settled in Harrisburg, and was appointed printer of the Senate Journal in English. He served as ensign of Capt. Thomas Walker's company, and returned as paymaster United States volunteers. In October, 1821, he was elected sheriff of Dauphin County, serving three years. In 1830, Col. Gleim removed to Pittsburgh, where he resided until his death, which occurred Sept. 21, 1861. Col. Gleim was an enterprising and prominent citizen of this locality sixty or seventy years ago. He was a highly-cultivated Christian gentleman.

COL. ALEXANDER GRAYDON.

Alexander Graydon (1st), born 1714, at Longford, Ireland, was brought under the care of his maternal grandfather in Dublin, and was designed for the pulpit. He received a suitable education therefor, to which having added many of the accomplishments at that time in fashion, he became afterwards distinguished in Philadelphia, both as a scholar and a gentleman. He emigrated to America in 1730, settling in Philadelphia, where he entered mercantile life. About 1740 he removed to Bristol, Bucks Co. Here, notwithstanding his Quaker surroundings, he was greatly esteemed and respected—nay, honored and revered—for his many excellent qualities of head and heart. Among the officers first enrolled for the defense of the Province of Pennsylvania we find the name of Alexander Graydon, as captain of a Bucks County company, in 1747, and subsequently as colonel of the county regiment. After the defeat of Braddock, when it was found necessary to raise troops for defensive operations against the marauding Indians, Col. Graydon was offered the position of field-officer in the Provincial corps, but declined the appointment. He died at Bristol in March, 1761, aged forty-seven years. He was "a man of unquestionable probity, and there was also much of attraction in his character." He was twice married,—first to a Miss Emerson, prior to his coming to America, and they had two children; second, in 1750, to Rachel Marks (see biographical sketch), and left four children,—Alexander, Rachel (married Dr. Andrew Forrest), Andrew, and William, concerning all of whom we shall make mention.

CAPT. ALEXANDER GRAYDON.

Alexander Graydon (the younger), son of Alexander Graydon and Rachel Marks, was born April 10, 1752 (N. S.), at Bristol, Bucks Co., Pa. At the age of six years he was sent to Philadelphia to the care of his maternal grandfather, and put to the school of David James Dove, an Englishman, and much celebrated in his day as a teacher. He was afterwards entered at the academy now the University of Pennsylvania, where he was placed in charge of the Rev. Mr. Kinnesley, teacher of English and Professor of Oratory. In 1761 he entered the Latin school of John Beverage. At the age of sixteen he left college, and some eighteen months after commenced the study of law with his uncle, Edward Biddle, Esq., of Philadelphia. In 1773 he was, on account of impaired health, sent by the latter to York, to the care of Samuel Johnson, prothonotary of the county and a lawyer of some prominence, where he remained about six months, when he returned to his home at Philadelphia. The study of law was continued, at the suggestion of his uncle, with James Allen, second son of William Allen, then chief justice of Pennsylvania. About the time when he should have been admitted to the bar the war of the Revolution opened, and, imbued with the military ardor and patriotic spirit of the hour, he received the appointment and was commissioned captain Jan. 5, 1776, of Col. John Shee's (Third Pennsylvania) battalion. Of his services, his being taken prisoner at the capture of Fort Mifflin, on the Hudson, Nov. 16, 1776, and of his being released on parole, we can only refer to his "Memoirs." He was exchanged in April, 1778. Having lost his rank by reason of his capture and parole, he did not again enter the service. His mother having removed to Reading during the occupancy of Philadelphia by the British, thither Alexander went, and being admitted to the bar of Berks County, began the practice of his profession. Upon the organization of the new county of Dauphin in 1785, through the influence of Gen. Mifflin, Mr. Graydon was appointed by the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania prothonotary of the county. He removed there, and performed the duties of his office in a manner alike creditable to himself and advantageous to the public.

During the Whiskey Insurrection of 1794, when Gen. Washington reached Harrisburg, the address of the burgesses was from the facile pen of Mr. Graydon, while upon the accession of John Adams to the Presidency, the letter of the citizens of the county to that functionary shows his elegant diction. Upon the election of Governor Thomas McKean, he was suddenly displaced from office. He then retired to a small farm near the borough, where he continued to reside until the year 1816, when he removed to Philadelphia with the intention of engaging in literary pursuits, and, with a view to the increase of a very restricted income, of entering upon the business of a publisher. Ere he could mature the plans, however, he yielded to the mandate which all must obey, and closed this life on the 2d day of May, 1818.

Mr. Graydon was twice married,—first to — Wood, sister of Lieut.-Col. Joseph Wood, of Col. Arthur St. Clair's (Second Pennsylvania) battalion of the Revolution, who died at Harrisburg in 1794. His second wife was Theodosia Pettit, daughter of Col. Charles Pettit, of Philadelphia, who survived her husband eighteen years. He had no children by either marriage. Mr. Graydon was ardently attached to literature and to literary pursuits. He was a frequent and acceptable contributor to the Portfolio in its palmiest days of popularity and influence. These contributions, which, for the most part, were modestly denominated "Notes of a Desultory Reader," contain his opinions of the authors whose works he had read, accompanied with occasional critiques upon their style, and all invariably written in a strain of candor and ease, affording indubitable evidence of the elevation and purity of his own sentiments, and of an enlarged, well-disciplined, and highly-cultivated mind. These articles, with others written from time to time for the press, of which a memoranda list is in existence, deserve to be collected in a volume and printed. In 1811 he published at Harrisburg "Memoirs of a Life chiefly passed in Pennsylvania within the last Sixty Years, with Occasional Remarks upon the General Occurrences, Character, and Spirit of that Eventful Period." In 1822, John Galt, of Edinburgh, well known for his valuable contributions to English literature, caused its republication in that city, to which he prefixed a dedication to the American envoy then resident near the Court of St. James. In this dedication he says of the "Memoirs:" "It is remarkable that a production so rich in the various excellences of style, description, and impartiality should not have been known to the collectors of American books in this country, especially as it is, perhaps, the best personal narrative that has yet appeared relative to the history of that great conflict which terminated in establishing the independence of the United States. The candor with respect to public occurrences which it displays, the views of manners in Pennsylvania prior to the memorable era of 1776, and the incidental sketches of historical characters with which it is enriched cannot fail to render the volume a valuable addition to the stock of general knowledge, and will probably obtain for the author no mean place among those who have added permanent lustre to the English language." In 1846, John S. Littell, of Philadelphia, edited the work, with notes, index, etc., which was printed in an octavo of five hundred pages, changing the title to "Memoirs of His Own Times, with Reminiscences of the Men and Events of the Revolution," by Alexander Graydon. Of this edition many copies were issued, and it too has become rare.

WILLIAM GRAYDON.

William Graydon, the son of Alexander Graydon and Rachel Marks, was born near Bristol, Bucks Co., Pa., Sept. 4, 1759. He was educated in Philadelphia, and studied law under Edward Biddle, of that city. He came to Harrisburg upon the organization of the county of Dauphin, and began the practice of his profession, being admitted at the May term, 1788. He was the first notary public, commissioned Sept. 2, 1791, and a leading man in the borough during the "mill-dam troubles" of 1794-95. He was many years a member of the Town Council and president thereof, and subsequently one of the burgesses. He was the author of "Forms of Conveyancing" (in two volumes), "The Justice's Assistant," and edited "An Abridgment of the Laws of the United States" in 1802. Mr. Graydon was prominent in the organization of the First Presbyterian Church, and for many years an elder thereof. He died at Harrisburg, on the 18th of October, 1840, in the eighty-second year of his age. "Mr. Graydon," says Rev. Dr. Robinson, "was a man of fine literary tastes, was highly esteemed as a gentleman of the old school, in his manners refined, courteous, of unblemished integrity in the many trusts committed to him, of high and honorable principles, and in the church and walks of Christian life a man of true piety and deep devotion." H. Murray Graydon, of this city, and Dr. William Graydon, of Dauphin, are his sons.

COL. TIMOTHY GREEN.

Timothy Green, son of Robert Green, was born about 1733, in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. His father, of Scotch ancestry, came from the north of Ireland about 1725, locating near the Kittochtinny Mountains on Manada Creek. The first record we have of the son is subsequent to Braddock's defeat, when the frontier settlers were threatened with extermination by the marauding savages. Timothy Green assisted in organizing a company, and for at least seven years was chiefly in active service in protecting the settlers from the fury of the blood-thirsty Indian. In the Bouquet expedition he commanded a company of Provincial troops. For his services at this time the Proprietaries granted him large tracts of land in Buffalo Valley and on Bald Eagle Creek. At the outset of the Revolution Capt. Green became an earnest advocate for independence, and the Hanover resolutions of June 4, 1774, passed unanimously by the meeting of which he was chairman, show that he was intensely patriotic. He was one of the Committee of Safety of the Province which met Nov. 22, 1774, in Lancaster, and issued hand-bills to the import that "agreeable to the resolves and recommendations of the American Continental Congress that the freeholders and others qualified to vote for representatives in Assembly choose by ballot sixty persons for a Committee of Observation to observe the conduct of all persons towards the actions of the General Congress; the committee, when elected, to divide the country into districts and appoint members of the committee to superintend each district, and any six so appointed to be a quorum, etc." Election was held on Thursday, 15th December, 1774, and among others Timothy Green was elected from Hanover. This body of men were in correspondence with Joseph Reed, Charles Thompson, George Clymer, John Benezet, Samuel Meredith, Thomas Mifflin, etc., of Philadelphia, and others. They met at Lancaster again, April 27, 1775, when notice was taken of Gen. Gage's attack upon the inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay, and a general meeting called for the 1st of May at Lancaster. Subsequently he organized the Hanover Battalion of Associators, most of the men being experienced riflemen, of which he became colonel. The command was in active service.

Upon the erection of the county of Dauphin, Col. Green was the oldest justice of the peace in commission, and under the Constitution of 1776 he was presiding justice of the courts. He continued therein until under the Constitution of 1790, which required the presiding judge "to be learned in the law," Judge Atlee was appointed.

After his retirement Judge Green returned to his quiet farm at the mouth of Stony Creek, where he had erected a mill and other improvements. He died there on the 27th of February, 1812, and lies buried in the quiet graveyard on the hill back of the borough of Dauphin. Hon. Innis Green was his son.

INNIS GREEN.

Innis Green, the eldest son of Col. Timothy Green and Mary Innis, was born in Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa., March 25, 1776. His early years were spent on his father's farm, but he received a tolerably fair English education, an essential in the Scotch-Irish settlements. His father, who built a mill at the mouth of Stony Creek about 1790, dying in 1812, Innis took charge of it. He was appointed one of the associate judges of Dauphin County by Governor Findlay, Aug. 10, 1818, resigning Oct. 23, 1827, having been elected to the National House of Representatives. He served during the Twentieth and Twenty-first Congresses. Governor Wolf, Jan. 26, 1832, reappointed him associate judge, a position he held at the time of his death, which occurred on the 4th of August, 1839. His remains lie interred in the cemetery at Dauphin. Judge Green laid out the town (which for many years went by the names of Port Lyon and Greensburg) about the year 1826. He married in 1804, Rebecca Murray, daughter of Col. John Murray, of the Revolution.

JACOB M. HALDEMAN.

Honeste Gaspard Haldimand (Caspar Haldeman), of Thun, Switzerland, became a citizen of Yverdon, Canton de Vaud, in 1671. His grandson Jacob, born Oct. 7, 1722, in the Canton of Neufchatel, died Dec. 31, 1784, in Rapho township, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he settled on first coming to this country, and purchased a considerable tract of land. He was a member of the Committee of Safety for his adopted shire on the breaking out of the war of the Revolution.

Jacob Haldeman's near relative was the noted British general, Sir Frederick Haldimand, K.B., who served with distinction in the armies of Sardinia and Prussia, entered the military service of King George II. in 1754, was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Sixtieth Regiment Royal Americans, 1756. In 1776 he was commissioned a general in America, and subsequently commander-in-chief of His Majesty's forces as Governor of the Province of Quebec, where he received the honor of knighthood, May 19, 1778. A tablet has been erected to the memory of Gen. Haldimand in Westminster Abbey, in the chapel of Henry VII. A niece of Sir Frederick was Jane Haldimand, Mrs. Dr. Alexander Marcet, a distinguished woman, and the first writer to attempt to popularize science by the publication of her "Conversations on Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Botany, Mineralogy, Language, and Political Economy." Of this last work Macaulay said, "Every girl who has read Mrs. Marcet's little dialogues on political economy could teach Montague or Walpole many lessons in finance," and Faraday gleaned his first knowledge of science from the book which heads the list.

Jacob Haldeman's son John (1753-1832) settled at Locust Grove, Lancaster Co., Pa. John's fourth son, Henry Haldeman, was the father of the distinguished Samuel Stehman Haldeman, LL.D., Professor of Comparative Philology in the University of Pennsylvania.

John Haldeman was an enterprising and influential citizen. He was a large land-owner, and engaged largely in business pursuits, in partnership with Robert Ralston, of Philadelphia, in the China trade, and he was a member of the Bingham Court and First General Assembly of Pennsylvania. He resided at Locust Grove until late in life, when he removed to Columbia, in the same county, where both himself and wife died.

Jacob M. Haldeman, second son of John and Mary (Breneman) Haldeman, obtained a good English and German education under the private instruction of an English officer, and seemingly inherited practical ideas from his father. At the age of nineteen he was sent on horseback by his father to Pittsburgh, making his journey through many Indian settlements, to purchase flour to send down the river in flat-boats to New Orleans.

About 1806, assisted by his father, he purchased the water-power and forge at the mouth of Yellow Breeches Creek and established himself in the iron business. He added a rolling- and slitting-mill, and by his energy and industry soon became one of the foremost iron manufacturers in the State. His superior iron found steady market, and upon the establishment of the arsenal at Harper's Ferry he supplied the government with iron, especially during the war of 1812-14, which he forwarded across the South Mountain on muleback to the Ferry, where it was manufactured into guns, many of which may be seen to-day, stamped 1812. At that time he founded Haldemanstown, now called New Cumberland, at the junction of the creek and river, and it may be here remarked that it had been one of the points in question in the Congress at New York as the proposed site of the national capital, and he also built a saw-mill and grist-mill at the same place.

Following the war of 1812, during the depression, he invested largely in farms and real estate, and engaged in the management of the same, a business so varied and large as to require his constant attention, and he managed it all without the aid of an assistant or clerk. In 1830 he removed to Harrisburg and purchased a residence built by Stephen A. Hills, architect of the capitol building, on Front Street, on the bank of the Susquehanna, where he continued to reside until his death. His connection with the Harrisburg Bank and the Harrisburg Bridge Company as president, with the Harrisburg Car Company as one of its founders and a director, and with the Dauphin Deposit Bank as one of its founders made his name familiar in business and financial circles during his residence here, and made him known to the community as a man of sterling integrity, discretion, and superior business ability. He was never solicitous of public place or the emoluments of office, and led a strictly business life. As a citizen, he was independent in his political views, was an attendant of the Presbyterian Church, and a contributor to all worthy local enterprises.

His wife, Eliza E., daughter of Samuel Jacobs and Sarah Templin, and granddaughter of Richard Jacobs, of Wales, was born June 13, 1789, at Mount Hope Furnace, Lancaster Co., Pa. She survives in 1883, and occupies the homestead in Harrisburg, and although in her ninety-fifth year of age, she retains to a remarkable degree her faculties, and dictated many of the facts for this sketch. Mrs. Haldeman is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Their children are Sara Jacobs, widow of the late William W. Haly, of Cork, Ireland, a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia, and author of "Troubat & Haly's Practice," resides at the homestead in Harrisburg. Mary Ewing was the wife of Robert J. Ross, a banker of Harrisburg, and died in 1878. Caroline Jacobs, Elizabeth Templin, and Anne died young. John, born Sept. 19, 1821, died in Denver, Col., July 13, 1865. Jacob S., born Oct. 13, 1823, for many years president of the State Agricultural Society, ex-member of the State Legislature, and ex-Minister to Sweden, resides in Harrisburg. Susan Frances, wife of Dr. Mortimer O'Connor, a graduate of the Dublin schools of medicine, and formerly a surgeon in the British service, and Richard Jacobs Haldeman, born May 19, 1831, educated at Yale, Heidelberg, Germany, and Berlin, was editor and proprietor of the Harrisburg Patriot for several years, and the founder of the Harrisburg Daily Patriot, and member of Congress for two terms. *

HENRY HALL, M.D.

Henry Hall, son of Elihu Hall and Catharine Orrick, was born in Cecil County, Md., in 1772. His ancestor, Richard Hall, of Mount Welcome, was one of the earliest settlers at the Head of the Elk. Henry studied medicine, and came to Harrisburg in 1794, where, as was usual with our early physicians, he kept an "apothecary-shop." Dr. Hall's was "on the bank next to Mr. Elder's tavern." He was quite a successful practitioner, but died early, closing his young life on the 30th of May, 1808. Dr. Hall married, April 26, 1800, Hester, daughter of Hon. William Maclay, and left four children. Mrs. Hall was a highly-intelligent woman; she died at Harrisburg.

REV. WILLIAM M. HALL.

William Maclay Hall, eldest son of Dr. Henry Hall and Hester Maclay, daughter of Hon. William Maclay, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 16, 1801. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy and Princeton College; studied law with Francis R. Shunk, and admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the April term, 1822. He began the practice of law at Lewistown, and became one of the most brilliant advocates in the Juniata Valley. Subsequently, imbued with the conviction that it was his duty to enter the ministry, he abandoned the law, studied theology at the Allegheny Seminary, and was licensed to preach by the Pittsburgh Presbytery. He was stationed at Milroy, Mifflin Co., Pa., but, owing to partial failure of health, was appointed agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions at Philadelphia. At this period he was connected with the New School Assembly, but afterwards transferred his relations to the Old School and joined the Presbytery of Carlisle. After acting some years as agent of the General Assembly, Board of Foreign Missions, he accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Bedford, Pa., where he labored until declining health compelled him to relinquish his charge. He died at Bedford, Aug. 28, 1851, where he was interred, but in 1878 his remains were removed to the cemetery at Harrisburg. The Rev. Mr. Hall married Ellen C. Williams, daughter of Robert Williams and granddaughter of Rev. Joshua Williams, born 1805, in Centre County, Pa.; died Jan. 23, 1878, at Harrisburg. Their children were Henry, William Maclay, George, Catharine, Louis W., Mary, and Nellie.

HUGH HAMILTON.

Hugh Hamilton, the son of John Hamilton and Margaret Alexander, was born at "Fermanagh," now in Juniata County, Pa., on the 30th of June, 1785. He received a careful preparatory education, and with his brother John was sent to Dickinson College, where he graduated. He studied law under Thomas Elder, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1805. At the time of his admission to the bar Judge Henry had ordered the prothonotary to issue commissions on parchment. Accordingly the descendants of the young lawyer have his commission "on parchment," issued 21st of June, 1805, signed by "Joshua Elder, Pro'thy, by order of the Court," with the seal of the county attached. In 1808, Mr. Hamilton edited and published The Times at Lancaster, and upon the removal of the seat of government to Harrisburg, with William Gillmor, The Harrisburg Chronicle, the leading and influential newspaper at the State capital for twenty years. The Chronicle was the first paper in Pennsylvania which gave full and systematic Legislative reports. He died at Harrisburg, on the 3d of September, 1836, aged fifty-one years. Mr. Hamilton married, Jan. 6, 1807, Rosanna, daughter of Adam Boyd and Jeannette MacFarlane, born Dec. 1, 1789, died April 17, 1872. They are both buried in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Mr. Hamilton was a vigorous and polished writer, and his editorials were models of elegant composition. For a quarter of a century he wielded considerable political influence through his newspaper. He was an active and enterprising citizen, twice chief burgess of the corporation of Harrisburg, frequently a member of Council, and highly esteemed in social intercourse.

T. ALLEN HAMILTON.

Thomas Allen Hamilton, son of Hugh Hamilton (1786-1886) and Rosanna Boyd (1786-1872), was born Feb. 14, 1818, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a good education, and learned the trade of a printer in his father's office, at which he worked until he received the appointment of an assistant engineer on the State canals under Col. James Worrall, but he abandoned both avocations in order to join a brother in a business, which they successfully prosecuted until his death. He served as a member of the City Councils of Harrisburg a longer continuous period than any other citizen has ever done, being elected for about twenty years in succession, generally without serious opposition, although many epochs of great public excitement intervened to produce fierce and close political contests. His neighbors never failed to ascertain his political opinions, yet, whether voting for or against him, they always rejoiced to know that he was their representative and the leader of the municipal legislature. In the language of a contemporary, "Mr. Hamilton, in his intercourse with his fellow-citizens, was courteous to all, liberal to the poor, positive in opinion, methodical in business, reticent, deliberate, but prompt in judgment." His integrity was never impeached in public or private transactions. He died unmarried Dec. 14, 1874, at Harrisburg, in the same house in which he was born.

JOHN W. HAMMOND, M.D.

John Wesley Hammond, son of Rezin Hammond and Nancy Lee, was born in Anne Arundel County, Md., in 1804. His grandfather, Maj.-Gen. John Hammond, of the British army, came to Maryland in 1764 and purchased a large tract of land in Anne Arundel, and there the father, Col. Rezin Hammond, was born. Young Hammond received his education mainly from private tutors up to the time of studying medicine. He graduated in medicine at the University of Maryland in 1825. In 1832, Dr. Hammond located in Somerset County, Pa., but in 1834 removed to Williamsport (now Monongahela City), Washington Co., Pa., where he continued the practice of his profession. On the election of Governor Ritner, he was appointed, in 1836, chief clerk in the auditor-general's office, and removed to Harrisburg. He held this position through several administrations, and was afterwards for a number of years cashier of the State treasury. In 1853 he removed to Philadelphia, where he died in 1879, at the age of seventy-five. Dr. Hammond married, in 1826, Sarah, daughter of Jonathan Pinkney, Esq., of Annapolis, Md., and a niece of William Pinkney, the distinguished lawyer, senator, and diplomatist. They had children,—Rev. J. Pinkney; Dr. William A., formerly surgeon-general United States army, now of New York City; Elizabeth Pinkney, Charles Elliot, and Nathaniel Hobart. Of these the first two and last-named are living. Dr. Hammond was held in the highest esteem by his fellow-citizens for his urbanity, integrity, and intellectual ability.

GEN. JOHN A. HANNA.

John André Hanna, son of Rev. John Hanna and Mary McCrea, was born about 1761, at Flemington, N. J. He received a good classical education under his father, who was a most excellent tutor. He served in the war of the Revolution. Towards its close came to Pennsylvania and studied law with Stephen Chambers, of Lancaster, whose acquaintance he had made in the army, and was admitted to the bar of Lancaster County at November session, 1788. He located at Harrisburg upon the formation of the county of Dauphin, and was among the first lawyers admitted there. He took a deep interest in early municipal affairs, and there was little transpiring looking to the welfare and development of the new town in which Mr. Hanna did not take part. His marriage with a daughter of John Harris, the founder, brought him into unusual prominence. He represented the county in the Legislature, and in 1795 elected to the United States Congress, a position he filled up to the time of his death by successive re-election. During the Whiskey Insurrection he was a brigadier-general of the Pennsylvania troops, in command of the Second Brigade, Second Division. In 1800, Governor McKean commissioned him a major-general of the Third Division of the militia forces of the State. He died at Harrisburg on the 13th of July, 1805, aged forty-four years, and is buried in the cemetery there. Gen. Hanna married Mary Harris, daughter of John Harris and Mary Reed, who died Aug. 20, 1851, in the eighty-first year of her age. They had nine children: Esther Harris, d. s. p.; Eleanor (1st), d. s. p.; Sarah Eaton, married Richard T. Jacobs; Henrietta, died unmarried; Caroline Elizabeth, married Joseph Briggs; Frances Harris, married John Carson McAllister; Juliann C., married John Fisher; Mary Reed, married Hon. John Tod; and Eleanor (2d), d. s. p.

MAJOR DAVID HARRIS.

David Harris, youngest son of John Harris and Elizabeth McClure, was born at Harris' Ferry, Feb. 24, 1754. He received a good education, and was a student under the Rev. Dr. Allison. At the time of the breaking out of the Revolution he was in Baltimore, but he volunteered in Col. William Thompson's Pennsylvania Battalion of Riflemen, and subsequently was commissioned paymaster thereof. He served in different positions until the close of the war, when he returned to Baltimore, and married Miss Crocket, of that city. After the death of his father, being one of the executors of the estate, he came to Harrisburg, and was appointed by his old companion-in-arms, Governor Mifflin, one of the associate judges of Dauphin County, Aug. 17, 1791. This position he resigned on the 20th of February following to accept an appointment in the Bank of the United States. Upon the establishment of the office of discount and deposit in Baltimore, he accepted the cashiership thereof. Maj. Harris died in that city on the 16th of November, 1809, at the age of fifty-five years.

DAVID HARRIS.

David Harris, son of Robert Harris and Elizabeth Ewing, was born March 17, 1796, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received his education in the schools of the town and at the Harrisburg Academy. At the age of eighteen he went to Philadelphia, where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits several years, when he returned to Harrisburg and established himself in the general transportation business in connection with the canal, and subsequently in merchandising. For many years he was clerk of the Borough and City Councils, was a justice of the peace under the borough charter, and one of the first aldermen elected under the city charter. In 1814, Mr. Harris marched to Baltimore—the youngest man who carried a musket—with the Harrisburg Volunteers, and was among the last survivors of that band of brave men. Upon his retirement from Councils he lived in quiet retirement, his great age rendering it impossible for him to participate in any active business. He was a man of strict integrity, and lived a quiet and correct life, doing what he had to do faithfully, beloved and respected by his friends and neighbors. He died on the 14th of March, 1880, at Harrisburg. Mr. Harris married Elizabeth Latimer, a descendant of Archbishop Latimer.

ROBERT HARRIS.

Robert Harris, son of the founder, John Harris, and of Mary Reed, daughter of Adam Reed, Esq., of Hanover, was born at Harris' Ferry on the 5th of September, 1768. He was brought up as a farmer, and resided in the early part of his life in the log and frame building on Paxtang Street, now used as a public school. His farm extended from the dwelling-house down the river to about the present location of Hanna Street, and thence out over the bluff, including the ground occupied by the Catholic Cemetery, containing about one hundred acres.

By the death of his father, in 1791, much of the business affairs of the family was early intrusted to him. He was possessed of considerable public spirit, aiding in the establishment of various enterprises, including the bridge over the Susquehanna, the Harrisburg Bank, and the Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike road, in the first two of which he was a director and perhaps also in the last. Mr. Harris was appointed to various public trusts. He was one of the State commissioners to survey and lay off a route for the turnpike from Chambersburg to Pittsburgh, also for improving the Susquehanna, in the course of which the commissioners descended the river below McCall's Ferry. When the Assembly of the State decided to remove the seat of government to Harrisburg, Mr. Harris was selected as one of the commissioners for fixing the location of the capitol buildings preparatory to the removal.

During the mill-dam troubles, in 1795, Mr. Harris was one of the party of prominent citizens who finally tore down the Landis dam, the site of which was in the lower part of the city, and to which was attributed much of the sickness then prevailing here. He was one of the first to rush into the water, and it was said that he was then laboring under an ague chill, but never afterwards had a return of it.

During the War of 1812-14, Mr. Harris was appointed paymaster of the troops which marched to

ROBERT HARRIS.

Baltimore, and acted as such at York, where the soldiers were discharged.

He was elected to Congress and took his seat in 1823, and by a re-election served therein until the 4th of March, 1827. On one of the occasions he brought home with him a picture, made before the days of daguerreotyping, of the celebrated John Randolph, of Virginia, representing him on the floor of the House of Representatives enveloped in a large coat, extending his long, lank arms and his bony finger as he pointed it at Henry Clay and others in the course of his impassioned and sarcastic harangue.

Mr. Harris served in Congress during the Presidency of John Quincy Adams, and of course knew him. When Gen. Taylor, as President, was in Harrisburg, Mr. Harris was appointed to deliver the address of welcome on the part of the citizens. During the subsequent intercourse with Gen. Taylor he observed to him that he had dined with all of the preceding Presidents. He was married in Philadelphia in the spring of 1791, during the Presidency of Gen. Washington, and dined at his table, and there or elsewhere with Adams, Jefferson, Madison, and probably Mr. Monroe. He was intimately acquainted with Gen. Harrison when a lieutenant in the army, had entertained him at his house in Harrisburg, and was invited to dine with him during his brief term as President. He was on friendly terms with John C. Calhoun, and was well acquainted with Gen. Jackson.

After the State capital was removed to Harrisburg, the residence of Mr. Harris, who had in 1805 purchased the Harris mansion from his brother David, and from that period occupied it, was the centre of attraction at the seat of government. He entertained many of the prominent men of the State and of the Legislature. At his house might have been seen Governor Findlay, Samuel D. Ingham, Thomas Sergeant, William J. Duane, Governor Wolf, and various other persons of distinction, including Isaac Weaver, of Greene County, Speaker of the Senate from 1817 to 1821, a gentleman of marked presence, and who, Mr. Harris said, more resembled Gen. Washington than any other man he had ever seen. During the Presidency of Gen. Washington, Mr. Harris, then a young man, accompanied the party on board the "Clermont," the steamboat of John Fitch, when that vessel made its trial trip on the Delaware.

The first prothonotary of Dauphin County was Alexander Graydon, and the first register Andrew Forrest, both sent from Philadelphia by Governor Mifflin, with whom they had served as fellow-officers in the war of the Revolution. Governor McKean for some reason refused to reappoint Mr. Forrest, and tendered the appointment to Mr. Harris. He, however, recommended the retention of Mr. Forrest, but Governor McKean informed him that if he did not accept the office he would appoint some one else. He accordingly accepted it, but, it is said, divided the fees with Mr. Forrest for some time, and perhaps until his death.

Until the close of his long life Mr. Harris was quite active in body and mind. He died at Harrisburg on the 3d day of September, 1851, being within two days of fourscore and three years of age. His remains repose in the beautiful cemetery now within the bounds of our city by the Susquehanna. His warm and lifelong friend, Rev. William R. DeWitt, D.D., delivered the funeral discourse, which we recollect well of hearing, in which he paid a most glowing tribute to the memory of Robert Harris. He died not unwillingly in the faith and hope of a Christian, and in the respect and kind regard of his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Harris married in Philadelphia, May 12, 1791, Elizabeth Ewing, daughter of the Rev. John Ewing, D.D., provost of the University of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Harris was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 2, 1772, died at Harrisburg, April 27, 1835, and is there buried.

GEORGE WASHINGTON HARRIS.

George Washington Harris was born June 28, 1798, in the old ferry-house, now the location of Harris Park school-house. He was a son of Robert Harris, who was a son of John Harris, the founder of the city of Harrisburg, and grandson of John Harris, the first settler. His mother was Elizabeth Ewing, daughter of the celebrated Rev. John Ewing, D.D., provost of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Harris' early education was received at the old Harrisburg Academy and the select schools of the day. Subsequently he went to Dickinson, Jefferson, and the University of Pennsylvania, graduating at the latter institution. He studied law, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1820. He remained at Harrisburg several years, during a portion of which period he served as deputy attorney-general for the county of Dauphin. He afterwards removed to Philadelphia and entered into law partnership with Calvin Blythe. He returned to Harrisburg and resumed his place at the Dauphin County bar, and was appointed reporter of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, publishing a series of volumes of reports. For a number of years he filled the position of secretary to the Library Committee of the United States Senate. Mr. Harris recently edited the journal of Mr. Maclay, one of the first United States senators from Pennsylvania. He died at Harrisburg Sunday morning, Aug. 13, 1882. Mr. Harris married Elizabeth Mary, daughter of Dr. Henry Hall and Hester Maclay, daughter of Senator Maclay, his wife surviving him at near fourscore.

SAMUEL W. HAYS.

Samuel Wallace Hays, eldest son of John Hays and Martha Wallace, was born Oct. 30, 1799, at Newville, Cumberland Co., Pa. He received the education so freely given by the Scotch-Irish to their children. He came to Harrisburg in 1821, where he resided until 1825, when he went to Philadelphia, returning to the former place in 1828, which from that period became his permanent home. Mr. Hays then began business, which he successfully carried on until a few years prior to his death. He died May 18, 1855, at Harrisburg, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He was an earnest, laborious worker in his church (Presbyterian), of which he was one of the ruling elders from 1840 to his decease. For a period of twenty-seven years he was superintendent of the first infant Sunday-school, which he organized in 1828 in Harrisburg, and only relinquished its care when failing health compelled him to give up his charge. The Rev. Dr. Robinson bears this testimony of him: "I remember him as a quiet, modest man and patient sufferer. The little I knew of him endeared him to me. . . . He was a warm friend and lover of the young, kind and genial in his intercourse with them, and an admirable teacher." Mr. Hays married Margaret Moore, of Locust Grove, Mifflin Co., Pa. She died in 1851. They left an only child, Isabella M.

WILLIAM W. HAYS.

William Wallace Hays, son of William Patton and Rosanna Keller, was born Oct. 23, 1836, in Harrisburg. He received his preparatory education in the public schools and Harrisburg Academy, entered the sophomore class of Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, in 1853, graduating in 1856. He then went to Texas, where he remained two years, teaching in Victoria and Goliad. After returning North he began the study of law with Robert A. Lamberton, Esq., and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Dec. 6, 1859. He began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg, continuing it until his appointment by Governor Curtin, in 1861, as chief clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. On May 1, 1866, he was appointed Deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth, discharging the duties of that office until the close of Governor Curtin's administration. He then resumed his profession of the law, and in connection with it served as clerk to the board of claims from January to June, 1868. In October following, having been nominated by the Republicans of the city of Harrisburg, he was elected mayor thereof, the duties of which office he entered upon Jan. 11, 1869. His health, however, soon began to fail him, and he died in office March 31, 1870, in his thirty-fourth year. "Mr. Hays was truly a Christian gentleman, he thought more of right than he did of life. His nature was of that intensity which inspires men to die for the truth, while his convictions on all subjects relating to the ordinary and extraordinary affairs of life, here and hereafter, were governed by the strongest principles of religion and justice." Mr. Hays married, March 5, 1861, Mary S. Day, of Wooster, Ohio, and had four children,—William and Jessie Wallace, who are dead, and Mary Winifred and Martha Wallace, now residing with their mother in Wooster, Ohio.

JOHN E. HELLER.

John E. Heller was born in 1834, in Rush township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His early education was more or less limited, for at the age of thirteen we find him an apprentice to the art of printing in the office of the American, at Sunbury, Pa., where he remained until he was twenty years of age. Afterwards, for several years, he was foreman in the office of the Miners' Journal, Pottsville. He then began the study of law, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 30, 1865, and began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg. His life of labor was comparatively brief, however, for he died rather suddenly at the residence of his father, in Rush township, Jan. 30, 1866, aged thirty-two years. His remains were interred in the Rush Church graveyard. "Mr. Heller," wrote the editor of the Sunbury American, who knew him well, "was a young man of exemplary conduct and good character, and with industry and good business habits he had a bright future before him."

JAMES HENDERSON, M.D.

James Henderson, son of Dr. William Henderson, was born in the year 1827, in Dauphin County, Pa. He received a good academical education, studied medicine with his father at Hummelstown, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1856. He began the practice of medicine at Philadelphia, subsequently went to Plymouth, Ohio, but his father dying in 1859, he returned to Hummelstown. During the war for the Union he was captain of Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was at the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, being wounded at the latter. He was a brave officer, and was held in high esteem by his fellow-officers and the men of his company. He afterwards went into service as assistant surgeon of the Two Hundred and First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and after the war resumed his profession at Hummelstown. His practice became quite extensive, but his health subsequently failed him, and he died of consumption on Thursday, April 12, 1880, at Hummelstown.

FREDERICK HEISELY.

Frederick Heisely was a native of Lancaster County, Pa., where he was born Oct. 17, 1759. He learned the trade of clock- and mathematical instrument-maker with a Mr. Hoff, of Lancaster town. During the Revolution Mr. Heisely served in one of the associated battalions, and was in service during the Jersey campaign of 1776. About 1783 he removed to Frederick, Md., where he established himself in business. In 1812 he came to Harrisburg, and took a prominent part in the affairs of the borough, filling the offices of assistant burgess and Town Council. He was treasurer of the county of Dauphin from 1827 to 1829. He died at Harrisburg March 12, 1843, and is there buried. Mr. Heisely married, Nov. 6, 1783, Catharine Juliana Hoff, of Lancaster, born Sept. 15, 1763; died Dec. 3, 1839. Their children were: Justina Margaret, born July 3, 1785, died at Harrisburg, unmarried; Sophia, born Sept. 21, 1787, married George Rigney, of Frederick, Md., and left issue; George J., born Nov. 29, 1789, married Anna Maria Kurtz; Frederick Augustus, born July 3, 1792, married Catharine Hoffman, removed to Pittsburgh, where they died; John, born Nov. 30, 1794; Catharine, born April 22, 1797, married Jacob Keller, died at Frederick, Md.; and Caroline, born Feb. 9, 1800.

GEORGE . . HEISELY.

George J. Heisely, son of Frederick Heisely and Catharine Juliana Hoff, was born Nov. 29, 1789, at Frederick, Md. He learned silver-smithing with his father, and at the end of his apprenticeship went to Lancaster, where he remained nine months under instructions. He then established himself in business at Harrisburg, which he successfully carried on, making the manufacture of surveyors' compasses and town-clocks a specialty. His father, shortly after removing to Harrisburg, entered into business with him. George J. Heisely was acknowledged to be unsurpassed for his skill in making surveyors' instruments, many of which were used in all parts of the country. In 1814, as a private in Capt. Thomas Walker's company, he marched to Baltimore for the defense of that city, and was one of the last survivors of that famous military organization. In 1863, when Pennsylvania was invaded by the Confederate army under Lee, he enlisted as a private in Capt. Charles Carson's Company of Home Guards. In the early days of the borough he was burgess of the town, and frequently served as member of the Municipal Council. He died at Harrisburg on the 27th of June, 1880, in his ninety-first year. He married Anna M. Kurtz, daughter of Benjamin Kurtz, of Harrisburg. Of his children, Kurtz, the only son, died in the prime of his early manhood unmarried. His daughters were: Caroline (married Leander N. Ott), Louisa C. (married Walter F. Fainestock) Anne M. (married Daniel Eppley), and Elizabeth (married Dr. Charles C. Bombaugh).

COL. DANIEL HERR.

Daniel Herr was born on the 14th of December, 1795, at Hagerstown, Md. His ancestors were among the first settlers in Lancaster County, Pa., from whence the family name has become wide-spread. Daniel learned the trade of a house-carpenter, an occupation he pursued several years. During the late war with Great Britain he was lieutenant-colonel of a volunteer regiment in active service. In later life he followed hotel-keeping. He kept the Tremont House at Philadelphia, the Mansion House at Reading, and that famous hostelry, Herr's Hotel, now the Lochiel, at Harrisburg. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and during the Anti-Masonic crusade never swerved from his allegiance to the fraternity, being Master of his lodge from 1835 to 1838, inclusive. He was a man pure in purpose, amiable, kind, and generous-hearted, yet firm and decided as to opinions and duty. He died at Harrisburg, sincerely regretted, on the 11th of July, 1857, in his sixty-second year. Col. Herr married, Feb. 15, 1820, in Gettysburg, Pa., Sarah Gilbert, daughter of Boise Gilbert and Susanna Fox, born Feb. 14, 1801, and died April 13, 1880, at Harrisburg. Their children were George Isaiah, d. s. p.; John Davenport, married Jane Nancy Sutton; Margaret Ann, married, first, Peter Nagle Coleman, second, George Leonard; Amelia Matilda, married John Peter Hassler; Andrew Jackson; Jacob Gilbert, married Mary Taylor; Susanna, married Dr. Jacob G. Wiestling; Sarah Isabella, married George Z. Kunkel; Daniel B.; William Henry Harrison, d. s. p.; Mary Elizabeth, married Charles Lipps; Louisa Irene, married Charles A. Bannvart.

REV. DANIEL HERTZ.

Daniel Hertz, son of Ludwig and Rosanna Hertz, was born April 23, 1796, in Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received a limited education, but early in life was put to the printing business. Not agreeing with his health, he abandoned that art for the trade of bricklayer, which he learned with his brother. In the winter months he engaged in teaching school and application to study, and so continued until he was induced by his friend, Rev. Isaac Gerhart, to prepare for the ministry, under whom he began his preparatory studies, finishing them with the Rev. Dr. Helfenstein, of Philadelphia. He entered upon the duties of the ministry about 1821, and shortly after received and accepted a call to Ephrata. His charge then embraced several congregations, and his trial sermon was preached at Muddy Creek, in the same church in which he closed his labors, forty-five years and six months afterwards. His pastorate was a long and faithful one. He died Sept. 22, 1868, aged seventy-two years. In the language of a contemporary, the Rev. Hertz "was laborious and faithful in his ministry. He pursued his calling with almost unexampled devotion. He was systematic and conscientious, his manner and deportment high-toned and manly. Like his Heavenly Master, he went about doing good."

GEN. GABRIEL HIESTER.

Gabriel Hiester, Jr., son of Gabriel Hiester and Elizabeth Bausman, was born in Bern township, Berks Co., Pa., Jan. 5, 1779. He received a good English and German education, and his early years were spent on his father's farm. His father being an active politician, the son was early imbued with the same spirit. In 1809 he was appointed by Governor Snyder clerk of the courts of Berks County, and in 1811 prothonotary, holding these offices until 1817. During the war of 1812-14 he was brigade major, and served under Gen. Adams, of Berks County, during the campaign at Washington and Baltimore. Under appointment by Governor Findlay, he held the office of associate judge from 1819 to 1823. Governor Shulze appointed Judge Hiester surveyor-general, when he removed to Harrisburg. He held that position from May 11, 1824, to May 11, 1830. He was a Presidential elector in 1817, and again in 1821, casting his vote for James Monroe. About 1833 he erected the first rolling-mill in this neighborhood, at Fairview, on the Conedoguinet. He died there suddenly, Sept. 14, 1831, in his fifty-sixth year, and is buried in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Gen. Hiester married, May 12, 1803, Mary, daughter of Dr. John Otto, of Reading, who died at Estherton, Jan. 9, 1853. They had children,—Louisa; Harriet, married C. E. Bioreu; Augustus O.; Gabriel; and Catharine, all of whom are deceased except Augustus O., of Estherton.

JOHN HOYT HICKOK.

John Hoyt Hickok, the eldest child of Jesse Hickok and Betsy Hoyt, was born at Wilton, Conn., Nov. 27, 1792. He was brought up on his father's farm, receiving the usual educational advantages of the time at the winter school and a few sessions at a neighboring academy. When about seventeen years of age he commenced teaching during the winter months, pursuing meanwhile, in connection therewith, his own studies, until finally, soon after attaining his majority, he selected and embarked in teaching as his life profession.

Mr. Hickok married, in 1814, Mary, daughter of Job Lockwood and Sarah Hickok, of Wilton. Mrs. Lockwood was a native of Wilton, and a daughter of Nathan Hickok and granddaughter of Nathaniel Hickok, who was, as is supposed, a cousin of the father of Jesse Hickok, so that John H. Hickok and his wife were distantly related by blood.

He spent some years teaching in Western New York, from whence he emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1823, teaching a select and boarding-school in Union County until 1828, when he removed to Lewistown, Mifflin Co., and took charge of the academy there, at that time a largely patronized and well-known institution, which, aided by a corps of teachers, he conducted successfully until 1836, Mrs. Hickok having the superintendence of the ladies' department of the school.

In 1836 he embarked in the book publishing business at Chambersburg, continuing in it until the spring of 1839, when he removed to Harrisburg, where he was engaged in teaching. He died there on Jan. 14, 1841, his death resulting from injuries received on the preceding 12th of December as he was attempting to step on the platform of a car on the Cumberland Valley Railroad at Front and Mulberry Streets, the train being in motion.

SAMUEL HILL.

Samuel Hill, the son of Arundel Hill, was born about 1760 in England. His ancestors belonged to one of the representative families of that country. He received a good English and classical education, and learned the trade of clock and watch maker in London. He came to America about 1785, and shortly afterward established himself in business at Harrisburg. He was a skilled and ingenious workman. He was quite prominent in the early affairs of the new town, and was among the first to jump into the water to tear down the obnoxious mill-dam in Paxtang Creek in 1795. He was a volunteer in Capt.

Reitzel's company on the expedition to the westward in 1794, and twice visited England on matters connected with his father's estate, then considered quite an undertaking; and what particularly distinguished his last visit was his reception by his fellow-citizens of Harrisburg on his return, which was an ovation, showing what a strong hold he had upon his friends in America. He died very suddenly while sitting in his chair on Monday evening, Nov. 6, 1809, aged forty-nine years, and the Oracle speaks of his loss to the community as "irreparable." Mr. Hill married Nancy Beatty, daughter of Capt. James Beatty, of Harrisburg. She died at Steubenville, Ohio.

SAMUEL HOLMAN.

Samuel Holman, son of Conrad Holman, Jr., and Rachel Guss, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 11, 1793. Conrad Holman, Sr., the grandfather, was born in New Castle County, Del., in 1738, and died at the residence of his son in Perry County, Pa., in 1822. Conrad, Jr., born in Chester County in 1768, died in Perry County in 1841; he married Rachel, daughter of Charles Guss and Mary Shunk. Samuel learned the trade of house-carpenter, and came to Harrisburg after his majority, where he successfully pursued his business, and was widely known as a builder and architect. Among the public works constructed under his supervision and according to plans were bridges over the Susquehanna at Clark's Ferry and Harrisburg, and over the Schuylkill River at Schuylkill Falls. He was the architect for the court-houses at Lewistown and Harrisburg. For several years he was supervisor of the public works between Columbia and Millerstown. He was a man of much energy of character in whatever business he engaged. During the War of 1812-14 he went as fifer in Capt. Walker's company, which marched to the defense of Baltimore, and in his old age served as a volunteer for the defense of Harrisburg when in 1863 it was threatened by Gen. Lee. He frequently was a member of the Borough Council, and took a deep interest in the prosperity of his adopted town. He died at Harrisburg, Sept. 28, 1863. Mr. Holman married in 1822, Sarah, daughter of Daniel Hertz and Elizabeth Kisner, born at Harrisburg, Dec. 5, 1800, and there died Oct. 22, 1863. They had five children living at the time of their death,—Ann Elizabeth (married Samuel Alleman), Rev. Samuel Augustus, William Simon, Mary Ellen (married Dr. A. L. Alstead), and Sarah Frances (married George A. Klugh).

COL. GEORGE R. HORTER.

George Reis Horter, son of Valentine Horter and Magdalena Reis, was born in 1784 at Germantown. His parents came to Harrisburg in May, 1785, and his early education was received in the "Latin Schools" of the new town. He learned the trade of a hatter with his brother-in-law, Jacob Bucher. When his brother-in-law, Henry Beader, was appointed register of the county, Mr. Horter served as his deputy. During the second war with Great Britain he was appointed third lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, United States army, May 1, 1814, subsequently promoted captain for meritorious services, and served until peace was declared, when he resigned. He subsequently took a prominent part in the volunteer military organizations of his day. He was transcribing clerk of the Pennsylvania Senate a number of years. Col. Horter died at Harrisburg in March, 1830, aged about forty-six years. He never married. He was a prominent politician and active Freemason, and was held in high esteem by the citizens of his adopted town. It is related that on his return from a trip to New Orleans, about 1805, the bells of the town were rung in honor of his arrival, so highly was he respected for his geniality and social standing.

JACOB HOUSER.

Jacob Houser, the son of Daniel Houser and Anna Ebersole, was born in 1803, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather was an early settler from Switzerland, locating in then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co., now Swatara township, Dauphin Co. He served as a wagon-master during the war of the Revolution, and lived to an advanced age, dying in May, 1800, leaving a wife, Elizabeth, and children as follows:

- i. Jacob; m. Barbara ———, and removed to Bald Eagle Valley, Centre Co., Pa.
- ii. Martin; m. Anne ———, and settled in Allen township, Cumberland Co., Pa.
- iii. Anne; m. Jacob Good, of Swatara.
- iv. Daniel; m. Anna Ebersole; b. 1778; d. Aug. 29, 1849.
- v. John.
- vi. Elizabeth; m. Samuel Good.

Daniel Houser located at Harrisburg about 1800 and established a nailery. All the nails and spikes used in the construction of the old Harrisburg bridge were made by Mr. Houser and Mr. Allison. Daniel Houser had three children, John, Jacob, and Catharine (married Samuel Pool).

Jacob Houser received the ordinary education of the schools of the borough, and was apprenticed at an early age to coach-making. Completing his trade, in partnership with John A. Weir he carried on that business for several years. He subsequently, in connection with his brother John, who had entered mercantile life, went into the dry-goods business. Later he was in the hardware trade, in partnership with William H. Lochman. Mr. Houser filled a number of municipal and county offices, was a director of the Harrisburg Bank for many years, and always held in high esteem for his strict integrity and high moral character. He died March 9, 1881, at Harrisburg, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He married

John Houser, the elder of the brothers, was a justice of the peace many years; died Oct. 22, 1860, aged fifty-nine years; married Mary Crabb, daughter of William Crabb, of Middletown, who died May 24, 1862, at Harrisburg, and they left several daughters and one son,—Elizabeth, Louisa (d. s. p.), Alice (married Alfred E. Eyster), and Daniel (married Susan Sponsler).

GEORGE HOYER.

George Hoyer, son of John Hoyer, was born in the year 1757, in York County, Pa. He learned the trade of carpenter, and in 1785 came to Harrisburg with his brother-in-law, Christian Kunkel, and began merchandising, in which he proved successful. He became quite prominent in the new town, and had the honor of being elected the first burgess of the borough. He served frequently as a member of the Town Council. He died May 25, 1841, at Harrisburg, aged eighty-four years, a gentleman of pure purpose and honorable integrity. Mr. Hoyer married, at York, Catharine Kunkel, born 1760, died July 27, 1835, at Harrisburg, and there buried. Of their children Jacob married Lucetta Brua, daughter of Peter Brua, and left descendants; Eliza, died 1881, unmarried; and Sarah, died 1869, unmarried.

FREDERICK HUMMEL.

Frederick Hummel was a native of the Pfalz, in Germany, born April 14, 1722. With some friends he came to America about 1738, and subsequently took up a large body of land where Hummelstown is located. In 1762, foreseeing the advantages, he laid out on a portion of his tract a town, which he named Frederickstown, but was changed upon his death to that now bestowed upon it. He donated land for the erection of the Lutheran and German Reformed Churches, and erected a school-house, directing that English branches should be taught therein. He was an active participant in the French and Indian war, and when the frontiers were setting an example to the people of the three original counties to prepare for resistance to British injustice he was chairman of the patriotic meeting of Derry, held at Hummelstown in June, 1774. He died at his residence on the 25th of June, 1775, aged fifty-three years. He was the ancestor of a large family, who can look with pride to the high-born zeal, energy, and patriotism of their progenitor. His remains, with those of his wife and children, are interred in the Lutheran Church graveyard at Hummelstown.

Very little is known of the ancestor, Frederick Hummel, but some insight into his character may be gained from the following advice to his children contained in his will: "After this I leave my Blessing to them all, and have God before you always, then the Lord and great Jehovah will Bless you now and for evermore, Amen."

COL. FREDERICK HUMMEL.

Frederick Hummel (3d), born Dec. 24, 1782, in Derry township, Dauphin Co., Pa., was the oldest son of David Hummel (1761-93) and Mary Toot (1764-1858). He was brought up as a farmer, receiving the limited education thus afforded in the country schools of the township. When but a stripling of eighteen, in company with his brothers, he offered his services to his country at the outset of the Revolution, and was in the campaign in the Jerseys and in and around Philadelphia in 1776 and 1777, and at the close of the war for independence was major in the battalion of associators. In the political affairs of the county he became quite prominent, and wielded considerable influence, owing to his great popularity. He was colonel of the militia, a position he held many years; served as justice of the peace several terms, and was commissioned by Governor Ritner an associate judge of the county April 5, 1837. He died at Hummelstown, Oct. 31, 1847, aged sixty-five years. Col. Hummel married Barbara Metzgar, daughter of Jacob Metzgar, of Derry, born Sept. 1, 1779, died Nov. 22, 1861, and with her husband buried in the old Lutheran churchyard at Hummelstown.

VALENTINE HUMMEL, Jr.

Valentine Hummel, son of Frederick Hummel (grandson of the founder of Hummelstown) and Susannah Hamaker, was born March 12, 1812, at Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. At the age of thirteen he was sent to Harrisburg, in care of his uncle, Judge Hummel, receiving the benefit of two years' English education in the schools of the borough. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to the printing business, with Jacob Babb, publisher of the German paper, the Morgenrothe. At the age of twenty-one Mr. Hummel was taken into partnership, and the firm of Babb, Hummel & Bigler were for many years printers for the State and publishers of the German Democratic organ, the Morgenrothe. In 1850, Mr. Hummel was elected register of wills and recorder of deeds for Dauphin County, which office he creditably filled one term. He subsequently engaged in merchandising, in which he continued until a few years before his death. During the Rebellion, during the invasion of Pennsylvania, he was lieutenant of the Home Guard, Capt. Nevin. For several years he was deputy collector of internal revenue Fourteenth District, and for a long period collector of city taxes, and served in the board of school control. In the church (Zion's Lutheran) he took an active part, and was superintendent of its Sabbath-school until physical disability prevented him from performing the duties of its service. He died at Harrisburg, Thursday morning, Aug. 26, 1880. Mr. Hummel married Jane Nelson, and they had issue: William V., J. Frederick, and daughters married respectively Dr. Charles B. Fager, L. H. Kinneard, Sturgeon Child, and R. W. Bailey. In every position in life Mr. Hummel was zealous, conscientious, and upright.

VALENTINE HUMMEL.

Valentine Hummel, son of Frederick Hummel (2d) and Regina Ricker, was born Feb. 7, 1787, at Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. The education he received was quite limited, only such as was afforded by the country schools of the time. In 1806 he began as an apprentice to Philip Leebrick, of Hummelstown, to learn the trade of a saddler. In 1810 he went to Harrisburg, and forming a partnership with Michael Lebkicher, his old shopmate at Hummelstown, began the saddlery and harness-making business. Messrs. Hummel & Lebkicher subsequently engaged in merchandising, the running of saw- and grist-mills, the lumber trade, and the purchase of land both in the city of Harrisburg and on the Cumberland side of the Susquehanna, until the death of Mr. Lebkicher in 1854, when the survivor retired from all active business. Mr. Hummel was elected a representative of Dauphin County to the legislative session of 1822-23, and again in that of 1840. Governor Shulze appointed him one of the associate judges of the county, Nov. 12, 1827, a position he resigned March 20, 1837. Both in the Legislature and while upon the bench Judge Hummel served the public with the same fidelity and honesty of purpose as characterized him and made him remarkable in his private business. For one-third of a century he was a director of the public schools, and at the time of his death a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy. A great believer in humane treatment, he advocated, while a member of the school board, the total abolition of corporeal punishment, but without success. For many years he had been interested in the old Harrisburg Bank, had served as a director, and at the close of his life was president of that institution. He died at Harrisburg on the 4th of September, 1870, in his eighty-fourth year. His wife, Elizabeth Walborn, died Oct. 25, 1867, aged seventy years. Of Judge Hummel it may be said, he was a man of great temperateness of habit in all things, was economical and frugal, unostentatious, and enjoyed life in a calm, quiet, and rational manner.

PHILIP IRWIN.

Philip Irwin, son of Henry Irwin (died 1815) and Margaret Fisher (1777-1859), was born Aug. 30, 1815, in Lancaster County, Pa. His educational advantages were comprised in one or two winters at a country school. By self-application and industry, however, he became well informed, and with great activity and energy was generally successful in his enterprises. For many years he was engaged in building railroads, the scene of his operations being the Northern Central, Ohio and Mississippi, Erie, Lebanon Valley, Lake Shore, Michigan Southern, and other railroads. Although an active politician he never sought or held office, his business interests requiring all his time and attention. He died at Middletown on the 11th of December, 1878, aged sixty-three years. Mr. Irwin married Nov. 24, 1840, Anna Eliza Etter, daughter of George Etter and Nancy Shelly, who survives. Their children are Margaret, Ann, Mary Ellen, George Henry, Franklin Etter, Jenny Lind, Philip Etter, and Lillian.

CAPT. JOHN B. JOHNSON.

John Bucher Johnson, son of David Marshall Johnson and Susan Dorothy Bucher, was born Jan. 26, 1833, at Harrisburg, Pa. His father came from Beaver County, Pa., of which he was a native, and held a clerkship in the Land Department of the State, when he married the youngest daughter of Hon. Jacob Bucher, of Harrisburg. Young Johnson spent his boyhood at Harrisburg, and was a cadet at Capt. Partridge's Military School, but completed his education at Washington College, Pa., where he graduated in the class of 1852. He adopted civil engineering as his profession, and until 1861 was engaged in several of the public improvements in this State. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he entered the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiment, Col. Jarrett, and was appointed captain of a company from Pittston. On May 14, 1861, he was appointed by the Secretary of War, Gen. Cameron, first lieutenant in the Sixth Cavalry of the Regular Army, and was subsequently made brevet major and lieutenant-colonel for meritorious service. He became captain by regular promotion Feb. 3, 1865. He served on the staff of Gen. Hancock at Baltimore and at New Orleans, and was afterwards assigned to several stations in Texas. In April, 1870, he was obliged to leave Texas on account of failing health, and returned to his home at Harrisburg, where he died June 24, 1871. Capt. Johnson was of handsome form and chivalrous bearing, upright, a true soldier, creditable to his family and country.

OVID F. JOHNSON.

Ovid F. Johnson was born in the valley of Wyoming, near the town of Wilkes-Barré, Pa., in the year 1807, and was descended from some of the early settlers of that historic locality. His paternal grandfather, the Rev. Jacob Johnson, was a superior linguist and man of rich education and culture, a graduate of Yale College, where he took his degree as early as 1740, with distinguished honor. In 1778 he was called from his home in Connecticut to reside in Wilkes-Barré. After that terrible event, the massacre of Wyoming, he assisted Col. Dennison with his advice and influence, in protecting the inhabitants that remained, and the original articles of capitulation were in the proper handwriting of Mr. Johnson. In quite a lengthy biography written of him in the year 1836, by the venerable writer and historian of Wyoming, Charles Miner, appears this: "When the Revolutionary war broke out, Mr. Johnson took his stand early and firmly in behalf of freedom. And through the whole contest he rendered the utmost service in his power, which from his learning, talents, and the respect he commanded, was very considerable. A son born while the animated discussions preceding the Revolution were going on and the elder Pitt was thundering his anathemas against ministers for their tyrannous conduct to the colonies, Mr. Johnson named Jehoiada Pitt. . . . Jehoiada is sometime since deceased, but a son of his with hereditary genius is winning his way to enviable distinction." This latter is the subject of this sketch. At the close of his early education in which he had as school and classmates many who afterwards rose to positions of eminence and distinction, he commenced the study of the law with John N. Conyngham, of Wilkes-Barré, afterwards Judge Conyngham. He was duly admitted to the bar and entered into the practice of the law at that place. In 1833 he removed to Harrisburg, and there married Jane Atricks, daughter of James Atricks and Martha Hamilton. In 1859, at the early age of thirty-two years his talent secured for him the appointment as attorney-general of Pennsylvania. In 1841, seeking a wider field for the practice of his profession, he removed to the city of Philadelphia. In 1842, his term of office having expired, he was re-appointed, and served through a second term until 1845.

As an orator, Mr. Johnson was brilliant; as a lawyer he had superior abilities, and somewhat of a wide-known reputation, being frequently employed to try cases in different States of the Union.

In personal appearance, Mr. Johnson was fine-looking, being six feet two or three inches in height, large and well developed in proportion. He died at Washington City, D.C., whither he had gone in the interest of a prominent legal claim, in the month of February, 1854. It may be here remarked that, in addition to Mr. Johnson's legal ability, he had a high reputation as a political writer. He was the author of the celebrated "Governor's Letters," published during the administration of Governor Ritner, and which purported to give the ludicrous side to the political characters then figuring in the politics of the State.

U. J. JONES.

Uriah James Jones was born at New Berlin, Union Co., Pa., in 1818. He learned the art of printing at New Berlin, Lewisburg, and Harrisburg. While a journeyman at the latter place he wrote and set up the novel of "Simon Girty the Outlaw," a book which is now very rare. In 1845, Mr. Jones went to Hollidaysburg, where he was engaged with O. A. Traugh in the publication of the Democratic Standard, and through its columns secured a national reputation for his witticisms. In 1850 he published the Keystone at Pittsburgh, but the paper proving unsuccessful he resumed his place on the Standard the year following. During 1855-56 he wrote and published a "History of the Juniata Valley," the first historical work which gave a full record of the pioneer life of that locality, much of which was gathered from the lips of early settlers or their children. In 1859, Mr. Jones went to Lancaster as editor of the Express, and in 1860 removed to Harrisburg, where he took a position on the Patriot and Union. At the same time he was a regular correspondent for New York, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh newspapers, and also a contributor of literary articles and sketches to the magazines. It may be mentioned that in 1859 he published a pamphlet "Advice to Travelers," which has furnished the material for several American guide-books. Mr. Jones was accidentally killed by the cars at the railroad depot, Harrisburg, Nov. 19, 1864. He married, in 1846, Margaret L. Traugh, of Hollidaysburg, who survives.

ANDREW J. JONES.

Andrew J. Jones, son of Robert Thomas Jones¹ and Margaret Williamson, was born, 1803, in County Donegal, Ireland. He received a fine English education, and early in life came to Harrisburg, where he learned merchandising with John Cameron. Subsequently, in partnership with his brother Samuel T., he entered into the mercantile business, which they successfully carried on for many years. Mr. Jones became quite prominent in political affairs, and in 1848, upon the election of Gen. Zachary Taylor to the Presidency, was appointed postmaster at Harrisburg, a position he acceptably filled four years. He died at Harrisburg Jan. 18, 1867, aged sixty-four years. Mr. Jones was thrice married, first, to Mary Ann Jones, daughter of Thomas Jones and Margary Donnelly, of Perry County, Pa. She died in March, 1843, and there was issue: Robert Thomas, d. s. p.; John Cameron (1833-56); and Samuel T. Second, to Susan B. Ayres, daughter of William Ayres and Mary Elizabeth Bucher, of Harrisburg. Third, to Sarah A. Buckman, of Burlington, N. J., and there was issue: Virginia R. and Andrew J.

¹ Robert Thomas Jones was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, emigrating to America in 1808. He married Margaret Williamson, a native of Ireland. They had issue:

- i. Mary Ann.
- ii. David S.
- iii. Margaret; m. Thomas E. Ellis.
- iv. Robert H.; m. Sarah Morrill Eggle.
- v. Andrew J.
- vi. Samuel T.
- vii. Eliza; m. Rev. Francis H. Eitschie.

BENJAMIN JORDAN.

Benjamin Jordan, son of Thomas Jordan and Rachel Steele, was born July 19, 1779, on the ground where the town of Milton, Northumberland Co., Pa., is located. Thomas Jordan the first of his family was an emigrant from Scotland, coming to America prior to 1700, and settled in Cecil County, Md. He and his family were rigid Presbyterians, and attached themselves to Christianna Church, located just over the line in the State of Delaware. In the yard of that church the remains of four generations of the Jordan family rest. Thomas Jordan, father of Benjamin, was born near this old church prior to 1752, from whence he removed to Northumberland County, prior to the war of the Revolution. When the son was only a few weeks old the family were driven from their home by the marauding Indians, when they located in York County, where Thomas Jordan died. He married Rachel Steele, the eldest sister of Gen. Archibald and Gen. John Steele, of Revolutionary memory. In 1805 Benjamin Jordan removed to Lancaster, where he engaged himself in the business of bookseller with William Dickson, at the same time assisted in editing the Lancaster Intelligencer until 1808, when he was appointed weighmaster of the port of Philadelphia. In 1816 he resigned and came to Dauphin County, taking up his residence at Walnut Hill. Mr. Jordan represented the Dauphin district in the State Senate 1846-1850. He died at his residence May 24, 1861, in the eighty-second year of his age. Mr. Jordan married, Oct. 29, 1811, Mary Crouch, born Oct. 23, 1791, at Walnut Hill, Dauphin Co., Pa.; died Oct. 27, 1846, at the same place; daughter of Edward Crouch and Margaret Potter. They are both interred in old Paxtang Church graveyard.

ABRAHAM JURY.

Among the earliest settlers on the Wiconisco was Abraham Jury, or, as it is sometimes written, Shora. He was of French-Huguenot descent, and emigrated from Switzerland about 1755. He located within the valley not far from the town of Millersburg. He was a farmer, and took up a large tract of land. In the Revolution he served during the campaign in the Jerseys, and subsequently on the frontiers, as did also his eldest son, Samuel. He died in August, 1785, leaving a wife, Catharine, and the following children: Samuel, Abraham, Mary, Magdalene, Margaret, Catharine, Susannah, Salome. Samuel, we presume, either removed from the valley or died early, for Abraham, Jr., seems to have come into possession of the old homestead. The latter died in November, 1805, leaving John, who was of age, and Jacob, Hannah, and Sally, minors.

GEN. JOHN KEAN.

Gen. John Kean was one of the earliest settlers of Harrisburg, one of the first judges of Dauphin County, a county commissioner for eight years, two terms State senator from Dauphin and Berks Counties, register-general of Pennsylvania, elector in 1800, voting for Mr. Jefferson for President, and for many years a justice of the peace at Harrisburg. He was the son of John Kean, born in Ireland, 1728, who came to America 1742, served as captain in the Revolution, died at Harrisburg, 1801, aged seventy-three. His wife, Mary Dunlap, was born 1721, died at Harrisburg, 1819, aged ninety-eight. The only son of this union was John, who was born in Philadelphia, Oct. 3, 1762. His father was located in Dauphin (then Lancaster) in 1775. In 1780, John, Jr., was called into service, and was with the army until after the taking of Yorktown. Upon his discharge he was placed with Mr. Clunie, a merchant, at Hummelstown, second sheriff of Dauphin County, at a salary of one hundred dollars a year and boarding. In this period he taught himself conveyancing and surveying. In 1785 he came to Harrisburg, as partner of Clunie.

In 1786 he married his first wife, Mary, daughter of Hon. Robert Whitehill, of Cumberland County. In 1787 he was elected a county commissioner. Having lost his first wife, he married in 1789, secondly, Jane, daughter of Capt. John Hamilton. In 1788 he was one of the members of "the Harrisburg Conference," held at "The Compass," the old ferry-house, at Paxtang and Vine Streets. He was one of the first managers of the library company, established in 1787; of the trustees of the Harrisburg Academy, 1788; treasurer of the Presbyterian congregation; chosen captain of our first volunteer company upon the resignation of Gen. Hanna, and president of the first fire company. In 1792 he was appointed a judge. In 1796 he purchased, "with John Elder, Jr., New Market Forge, about three miles from Palmyra, for twenty-two thousand dollars, and removed thence." A few years before he had been elected to the State Senate, and was re-elected in 1798, serving until 1802. In 1805 he was appointed by Governor McKean register-general, at a salary of $1333.33, serving for three years. He removed to Philadelphia in 1810, was a merchant there, returned to Harrisburg in 1813, was again appointed justice of the peace by Governor Snyder, and died Dec. 9, 1818, aged fifty-six years, one of the most active and influential of the early citizens of Harrisburg. He was brother-in-law by his marriages of Col. Richard M. Crain, Hugh Hamilton, Esq., James Alricks, Gen. Jacob Spangler, and Moses Maclean, Esq. He left no male descendants. Two of his daughters are living, residents of this city.

FREDERICK KELKER.

Frederick Kelker, son of Anthony Kelker and Mary Magdalena Meister, was born Oct. 29, 1780. His early education was extremely limited, and consisted in a few months' attendance at the parochial school on the churchyard of the Reformed Church at Lebanon. In May, 1801, he entered the store of Oves & Moore, and in March, 1805, removed to Harrisburg, where, in partnership with his former employers, he established in that town the first exclusively hardware-store. In 1811 he purchased the interest of his partners and became the sole owner. In 1823, his health failing, he relinquished business, and disposed of it to two of the young men who had been in his employ. He continued, however, to reside in the house in which he first settled until his decease. Through all that period he manifested great interest in the welfare of his successors in own quiet and unobtrusive way to the amelioration of the condition of the poor, sick, and friendless. In the vigor of manhood he filled many minor positions in the community in which he lived, always rejecting political preferment. For several terms he was a member and president of the Borough Council; was a director of the branch established by the Philadelphia Bank in Harrisburg, a director of the Harrisburg Bank, a director of the common schools when they were first established in Pennsylvania, and was ready at all times to co-operate with his fellow-citizens in all the benevolent enterprises of the day. In business, and there was perhaps no year in which a portion of his capital was not to a greater or less extent used by them whenever they desired it. He was remarkable for punctuality and integrity. A close observer of human nature and a safe counselor, being often appealed to by his fellow-citizens, calm and modest in his demeanor, he was not to be swerved from his purposes when he felt that he was in the line of duty. His habits of industry and economy led to the acquisition of a competency, and the latter half especially of his long life was devoted in his the church of which he was a member (the Reformed) he was prominent; presided at the meeting on the 17th of November, 1820, to establish the first Sunday-school in connection with the church, and active in the measures adopted for erecting the church building yet standing. He died at Harrisburg on the 12th of July, 1857, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. Mr. Kelker was twice married,—first to Lydia Chamberlain, daughter of Charles Chamberlain, of Philadelphia; second to Catharine Fager, daughter of John and Sarah Fager, of Harrisburg.

JOHN KELKER.

John Kelker, fourth son of Anthony Kelker and Mary Magdalena Meister, was born at Annville, Pa., June 12, 1776. He received a good education, or rather such as the country afforded during the Revolutionary era, and was brought up to mercantile pursuits, and learned the trade of a hatter. In 1812 he was elected sheriff of Dauphin County, and permanently removed to Harrisburg April 29, 1813. He was appointed deputy marshal for the county, and took the census thereof in 1830, and served as county treasurer from 1829 to 1832. Mr. Kelker was an officer of the Reformed Church, Harrisburg, and one of the building committee when the present church was erected. He died at Harrisburg on the 29th of April, 1859, at the age of eighty-three. "In social life," wrote a contemporary, "he was an example of urbane manners, of warm and genial friendship, of generous hospitality, and he was everywhere welcomed as a man of courteous and kind disposition." Mr. Kelker married, in 1798, Sabina, daughter of Henry Shantz and Sabina Meily, of Lebanon, who died at Harrisburg, Dec. 26, 1853, and had issue.

REV. EMANUEL KELLER.

Emanuel Keller, son of Peter Keller and Catharine Schaeffer, was born Sept. 30, 1801, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the schools and academy of the borough, and pursued his classical studies under the direction of his uncle, the Rev. Benjamin Keller. He subsequently entered Dickinson College, where he remained two years, when he began the study of theology with the Rev. Dr. Lochman, of Harrisburg. In 1826 he was licensed by the Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania, and the same year began his ministerial labors at Manchester, Md. Thence he removed to Mechanicsburg, Pa., where he continued in the pastorate until a short period before his death, his enfeebled health obliging him to resign his charge. He died at Mechanicsburg on the 11th of April, 1837, in the thirty-sixth year of his age, and is buried in Trindle Spring Church graveyard. The Rev. Mr. Keller married, April 14, 1825, Sabina Seltzer, of Harrisburg. They had five children.

JOHN PETER KELLER.

John Peter Keller, son of Charles Andrew Keller and Judith Barbara Bigler, was born at Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 28, 1776. His ancestor belonged to one of the oldest families in Switzerland, and emigrated to America in 1735. John Peter learned the trade of a brass-founder, coming to Harrisburg in 1796. In 1801 he established himself in business as brass-founder and rope-maker, which proved successful, and afterwards in general merchandising. He was a member of the Borough Council almost continuously from 1810 to 1824, and was quite prominent and influential in the public affairs of his day. He was identified with nearly all the early enterprises of the town, such as the Harrisburg Bridge Company, Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike Company, and at his death was the last survivor of the original board of directors of the Harrisburg Bank. He was a gentleman of thrift, industry, and indomitable energy, upright, honored, and respected by his fellow-citizens. He was no less decided and influential as a Christian, being one of the founders of the Lutheran Church in Harrisburg. He died at Harrisburg on the 1st of October, 1859, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. Mr. Keller was twice married. His first wife was Catharine Schaeffer, daughter of Rev. Frederick Schaeffer, D.D., of Lancaster, born Nov. 6, 1774, died Dec. 19, 1842, and by whom he had the following children: Frederick, George, Rev. Emanuel, Eliza, married James R. Boyd; Maria, married Lewis L. Plitt; Catharine, married James Gilliard; John Peter; Sophia, married Thomas Montgomery; William, Frederick George, Benjamin, Peter Charles, and Charles Andrew. His second wife was Mrs. Rachel Cochran, widow of William Cochran, formerly sheriff of the county, who survived him thirteen years.

MARTIN KENDIG.

Martin Kendig, son of John Kendig and Elizabeth Hill, was born in Sunbury, Northumberland Co., Pa., Dec. 31, 1797. After receiving a fair education he learned the trade of saddle- and harness-making at Harrisburg, and upon attaining his majority established the business at Middletown, carrying on, in company with his brother Daniel, the lumber trade. Subsequently the latter, with Judge Murray, erected a large saw-mill at the mouth of the Swatara, and established an extensive lumber trade. He served as one of the auditors of the county from 1826 to 1828, and represented Dauphin County in the Legislature from 1837 to 1839. Mr. Kendig died on his farm, adjoining Middletown, on the 28th day of May, 1860. He was thrice married, and left several children. Mr. Kendig was an enterprising citizen, and a gentleman of probity and worth, highly esteemed in the community, and influential in public affairs.

WILLIAM H. KEPNER.

William H. Kepner, son of Samuel and Sarah Kepner, was born in 1810, in Bern township, Berks Co., Pa. His father was a millwright, came to Harrisburg in 1823, and erected the first steam flour-mill in the neighborhood of Harrisburg. William H. adopted the occupation and trade of his father, and at the death of the latter continued the business, acquiring an extensive reputation in this and adjoining States for the superior quality of his millstones. For a period of twenty years Mr. Kepner filled various prominent positions in the municipal affairs of the borough and the city. He served several terms in the old Town Council, and upon the amendment of the borough charter was elected the councilman-at-large. He was elected the first mayor of the city of Harrisburg, an office he filled acceptably and well. He was at one time the Democratic candidate for associate judge of the county, and although his party were greatly in the minority, came within a small vote of an election. He was one of the organizers and president of the Harrisburg Fire Association. In all public positions he was faithful to his trust, and conscientiously exercised the authority reposed in his hands. In the city of his adoption he took a large and liberal interest in its growth and general prosperity. He died Jan. 18, 1871, at Harrisburg, aged sixty years. Mr. Kepner married, in 1842, Cassandra Loucks, daughter of George Loucks (1786-1849) and Susan Weltzhoffer (1795-1842), of York County, Pa., and their surviving children are George L. and Ida J., married O. P. Grove, of Harrisburg.

REV. WILLIAM KERR.

Rev. William Kerr was born in Bart township, Lancaster Co., Pa., Oct. 13, 1776. His father dying early, he was left to the tender care of a pious mother. After some years spent in the schools of the neighborhood, he was sent to Jefferson College, Canonsburg, where he graduated. For some years thereafter he was principal of an academy at Wilmington, Del. He subsequently placed himself under the care of the Presbytery of New Castle, and was shortly after ordained by that body. He preached in Harrisburg about the years 1804-5, and upon the resignation of the Rev. Mr. McFarquahar was sent to supply the pulpit of Old Donegal Church. In the fall of 1808 the congregation at Columbia made application to Mr. Kerr for part of his time; it was not, however, until the year following that he consented to give them a portion of his ministerial labors. He continued to be the stated supply there until the first Sunday in January, 1814, when he preached his farewell sermon. Mr. Kerr also preached at Marietta in addition to his charge at Donegal. He died in that town on the 22d of September, 1821, aged forty-five years, and is interred in Old Donegal Church graveyard. The Rev. Mr. Kerr married Mary Elder Wilson, daughter of James Wilson and Mary Elder, of Derry, born 1788, died Feb. 22, 1850, at Harrisburg, and their children were Mary, married Hermanus Alricks, of Harrisburg; William M., J. Wallace, James Wilson, and Martha, married Dr. Edward L. Orth, of Harrisburg. As a minister, there were few who stood higher in the estimation of his brethren in the Presbytery for his excellent Christian character and his worth as a preacher of the gospel, than the Rev. William Kerr.

CHRISTIAN KUNKEL.

Christian Kunkel, son of John Christian Kunkel, was born in the Palatinate, Germany, July 10, 1757.

His father arrived in Pennsylvania Sept. 23, 1766, subsequently locating at or near York. Christian was brought up to mercantile pursuits. In the war of the Revolution he was in Col. Slagle's battalion of associators, and was in active service during the campaign around Philadelphia in 1777. In 1786, in company with his brother-in-law, George Hoyer, he came to Harrisburg. Here he at once entered into business, which with his indomitable energy and industry proved highly successful. He was one of the prime movers and contributed towards the organization of the first German Church in Harrisburg. He was Burgess of the borough in 1796, and frequently a member of the Council. He was elected, in 1809, one of the directors of the branch bank of Philadelphia at Harrisburg, and the same year appointed by Governor Snyder one of the commissioners for erecting a bridge over the Susquehanna. Mr. Kunkel's eventful and honored life closed at Harrisburg, Sept. 8, 1823. He was twice married. His first wife, Anna Catharine Hoyer, died Aug. 17, 1796, aged thirty-seven years. His second wife, who was Anna Maria Elizabeth Welshaur, of York County, died July 24, 1862, aged eighty-eight years. They are all buried in the Harrisburg cemetery. Mr. Kunkel had a large family. By his first wife he had George, John, Susannah, married David Hummel; Mary, married Peter Fahnestock, and Jacob. By his second wife there were Elizabeth, married John C. Barnitz; Benjamin, Catharine, married Joseph Ross; Sarah, married James Gilliard; Magdalena, Lydia, married John P. Keller; Rev. Christian Frederick, and Samuel.

JOHN C. KUNKEL.

John Christian Kunkel, son of George Kunkel and Catharine Ziegler, was born in the year 1816, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a liberal scientific and classical education in the schools at Gettysburg and at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, at which latter institution he graduated. After leaving college he entered Carlisle Law-School, under Judge Read, subsequently reading law with James McCormick, and admitted to the Dauphin County bar. After his admission to the bar he remained several years in the office with Mr. McCormick. He rapidly gained a large practice and a reputation which few members of the bar enjoy. He also became active in politics, and in the earnest and exciting campaign of 1844, when the young men of the nation had made Henry Clay, then in the zenith of his career, their standard-bearer, the best talent and the most brilliant eloquence that ever graced the American rostrum was called into requisition. Amid all the magnificent display and power of logic that of the young orator of Pennsylvania, as Mr. Kunkel was recognized, was conspicuous as well for force of argument as for grace of delivery. The same year he was elected to the Legislature, re-elected in 1845, and again in 1850. In 1851 he was elected to the State Senate, and was chosen Speaker of that body at the close of the first session of his term. As a legislator, Mr. Kunkel was prominent for the wisdom of his counsel as well as for the power of his eloquence. His services at the capital added greatly to his already wide reputation as a pure statesman and accomplished scholar.

In 1854 and again in 1856 he was elected to the United States Congress. During the four years he spent at Washington City he was regarded throughout the country as one of the ablest statesmen at the national capital. In 1858 he retired from public life and gave his exclusive attention to the practice of his profession, varying the course of his life by occasionally helping a friend in a political canvass, and wherever he went he was always the favorite of the people. In 1868 he was stricken down by paralysis, and he never fully regained his health, dying on Sunday, Oct. 16, 1870, at the age of fifty-four years. Perchance the loss of no member of the Dauphin County bar was so severely felt as that of Mr. Kunkel, if we are to judge of the glowing, sincere, and fraternal tributes paid to his memory by his brethren in the profession at the time of his death. Mr. Kunkel married Elizabeth Crain Rutherford, daughter of Dr. William Wilson Rutherford and Eleanor Crain, who, with two children, one of whom since deceased, survived.

BENJAMIN KURTZ.

Benjamin Kurtz, son of Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz, was born in Tulpehocken, Berks Co., about the year 1765. Under parental instruction he became a good classical scholar, and taught school several years. He came to Harrisburg about 1790, and was quite prominent in the new town. He was chosen town clerk in 1797, and subsequently elected coroner for the county, serving from Jan. 30, 1800, to Nov. 3, 1802. He represented Dauphin County in the Legislature from 1809 to 1812, and was greatly instrumental in securing the location of the seat of State government at Harrisburg. A man of indomitable energy and force of character, they were mainly exerted in the accomplishment of a purpose, which was at the time duly appreciated by his constituents. He died in 1839, at Harrisburg. Mr. Kurtz married Elizabeth Gardner, of York, Pa. Their children, all born at Harrisburg, were:

- i. Cassandra, married John Henning.
- ii. Anna Maria, married George J. Heisely, of Harrisburg.
- iii. John N., married Anna Murphy.
- iv. Rev. Dr. Benjamin, born 1795, died 1866, at Baltimore, Md.; married, first, Ann Barnett, of Hagerstown, Md.; second, Catharine Baker, of Winchester, Va.; third, Mary Calhoun, of Chambersburg, Pa.
- v. Henry, who removed to Kentucky, there married and died.
- vi. Emanuel, died at Bloody Run, Pa., unmarried.

vii. Louisa, married John De Pui, who was clerk of the Pennsylvania Senate several years, and died at Harrisburg in March, 1829, while holding that position; they left one daughter, Elizabeth.

viii. Caroline, married Andrew G. Miller, who removed from Gettysburg to Milwaukee, and became the first United States district judge of Wisconsin.

SAMUEL LAIRD.

Samuel Laird, the son of Samuel Laird (1732-1806) and Mary Young (1741-1833), daughter of James Young, was born at Carlisle, Pa., on the 15th of February, 1769. His father was for many years one of the Provincial magistrates of Cumberland County, and, under the Constitution of 1776, one of the justices of the courts. Mr. Laird received a classical education, studied law at Carlisle, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the September term, 1792. He located at Harrisburg, and soon secured a large and successful practice. In the early years of the borough he took a leading part in its local affairs, and was a prominent actor in the first decade of its history. He died at Harrisburg, Jan. 15, 1815, aged forty-five years. He married Elizabeth Montgomery, second daughter of the Rev. Joseph Montgomery, who died Oct. 12, 1814, aged forty-four. Their remains lie interred in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Mr. Laird was a good lawyer, a pleasant speaker, and a courteous, honorable gentleman of the old school.

SAMUEL LANDIS.

Samuel Landis, the son of Abraham Landis and Susannah Reineohl, was born at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 22d of June, 1813. His father was a native of Berks County, and came to Dauphin County shortly after his marriage. His father dying while the son was only eleven years old he was taken from school and put to merchandising first at Halifax and afterwards at Harrisburg. With a limited education he applied himself to study, and when about twenty he taught school during the winter. About 1835 he purchased a store at Halifax, and was in continued mercantile business thirty years. In 1851 he removed to his farm near Halifax, but commissioned justice of the peace, April 10, 1855, he returned to the town. In 1801 he was elected associate judge of the county. From February, 1874, until his death, March 8, 1876, he was cashier of the Real Estate Bank at Harrisburg. Judge Landis married, June 22, 1836, Margaret Kinter, daughter of Isaac Kinter and Elizabeth Henry, of Rockville, who survives. In church matters he took a prominent part, held the position of recording steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church thirty years, was a member of the first Sunday-school organized at Halifax, of which for many years he was the superintendent. By his will he donated five hundred dollars for the benefit of the library. Judge Landis was a faithful and zealous Christian gentleman. He was a vice-president of the Dauphin County Historical Society at the time of his death.

PROFESSOR DAVID H. E. LAROSS.

David Henry Earnest LaRoss, the son of Rev. Joseph LaRoss and Elizabeth Earnest, was born Jan. 9, 1827, at Bloomsburg, Columbia Co., Pa. His father died when his son was an infant, and his mother, an exemplary woman, when he was eleven years of age. Thus early left an orphan, he was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood. After varied employments he returned to Hummelstown with his maternal uncle, and shortly after apprenticed himself to the trade of cabinet-maker. After serving his time he began clerking at Harrisburg, where he remained several years, at the same time closely applying himself to study. He subsequently entered Lafayette College, Easton, where he remained two years, his limited means not permitting him to remain for graduation. He then began teaching as a profession. In 1860 he was first elected county superintendent of public schools, in which position he served until his death, except in 1872, when he was elected to a term of office by a vote of sixty-five out of ninety polled, yet, owing to some defect and objection by several boards of directors, the person who received the next highest number of votes was commissioned superintendent. He was, however, re-elected in 1875 and in 1878, and again in 1881, when his vote was almost unanimous. Professor LaRoss died at Hummelstown, Sunday, Oct. 22, 1882, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He married, first, in 1853, Sarah A. Coil, of Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa., who died in January, 1867, and there was issue: Joseph, John, Mary, Gertrude (married Eli Kline, of Allentown), Carroll, Robert, Sarah, and Eva. He next married Annie W. Breneman, of Elizabethtown, Pa., who died two years afterwards without issue. In 1872 he married Fannie Hummel, of Hummelstown, and there was issue: Fannie, Claude, and Edna.

WILLIAM LAUMAN.

William Lauman, the son of George and Elizabeth Lauman, early settlers at Middletown, was born in that borough on the 18th of June, 1772. He learned the trade of a hatter in Philadelphia, where he became acquainted with Elizabeth Meyers, and married her. He then returned to Middletown, where he carried on a successful business. He was chosen to the Legislature in 1827, serving two terms, having previously been county auditor, 1822 to 1825. Mr. Lauman kept the "stage office" near Centre Square, and on the 24th of December, 1829, succeeded John McCammon as postmaster, an office he held until his death, which occurred on the 18th of December, 1882. He was succeeded by his widow, who filled the position until June, 1834, when she removed from the borough. Mrs. Lauman died at Morgan's Corners, near Philadelphia, on the 4th of July, 1853. Her remains rest by those of her husband in the old Lutheran graveyard in Middletown. They had nine children, four of whom are living,—Eliza, widow of John Croll; Hannah, William M., and Edward J. The late Maj. George M. Lauman was one of their sons. Mr. Lauman was an industrious and enterprising citizen, hospitable, generous, and social.

SAMUEL M. LAWRENCE.

Samuel M. Lawrence, son of Joseph Lawrence and Maria Bucher, was born in Washington County, Pa., Dec. 14, 1835. His father's death occurring when he was six years old, his mother removed two years later to Harrisburg, her former home, where she continued to reside during the remainder of her life, and here Samuel received his principal education, although attending Jefferson College for a time. From boyhood he was a remarkable student, and had a perfect hunger for knowledge.

At an early age he adopted the profession of civil engineering, and was engaged in the survey of the Sunbury and Erie (now Philadelphia and Erie) Railroad, and continued on it until its completion in 1864. He was perfectly familiar with every part of the road, and had traveled it all on foot from Sunbury to Erie. He was one of the four original contractors who built the Oil Creek Railroad, and was also chief engineer of it. He was also engaged in the survey of the Warren and Franklin Railroad at the time of his death.

He was nominated by the Republican party in the counties of Clearfield, McKean, Jefferson, and Elk for the Legislature, and represented them in the session of 1860-61, thus spending this winter in Harrisburg, his old home. Not having a taste for politics, he declined further nominations.

He married, April 4, 1864, Hanna Green, of Germantown, Pa., daughter of Hon. John Green. He resided in Warren, Pa., the last three or four years of his life, dying there Oct. 17, 1864, in his twenty-ninth year. He is buried at Harrisburg, in the cemetery where also lie his mother and brother, W. C. A. Lawrence.

Few men have had more devoted or a larger number of friends than the subject of this sketch, and few have left behind them kindlier memories than he.

WILLIAM C. A. LAWRENCE.

William Caldwell Anderson Lawrence, son of Joseph Lawrence and Maria Bucher, was born May 18, 1832, in Washington County, Pa. His grandfather, John Lawrence, of English birth, emigrated to America at an early day, and settled near Hunters-town, Adams Co., Pa. There he married Sarah Moffet, by whom he had ten children. John Lawrence died about 1786, and three years afterwards his widow removed with her family to Washington County, Pa., and settled on a farm lying upon the head-waters of Pigeon Creek. Of the sons of John Lawrence, John settled at Beaver, Pa.; twice represented the county in the Legislature, subsequently removing to Delaware County, Ohio, where he died. Samuel followed his brother to Beaver County, and located upon a farm; he was nine years prothonotary of the county, and twice elected to the State Assembly. He died about 1823. Joseph Lawrence, the youngest of the family, remained in Washington County; in 1818 was chosen to the Legislature, and served continuously until 1826, being Speaker of the House during the sessions of 1820 and 1822. In 1826 he was elected to Congress; in 1834 and 1835 returned to the Legislature, and in 1836 elected State treasurer. In 1838 he was a candidate for Congress, defeated by seventeen votes, but elected in 1840. He died in Washington City, April 17, 1842, and his remains were interred in the Congressional burying-ground. He was twice married. By his first wife, Rebecca Van Eman, there were Joseph, George V., Sarah, and Samuel. By his second wife, Maria Bucher, who died in 1861, there were John J., James K., William C. A., Samuel, and Susan. William Caldwell Anderson Lawrence was educated at Washington College, where he graduated in 1850; came to Harrisburg, and began the study of law with John C. Kunkel. He was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 31, 1853, and entered upon the practice of his profession at Harrisburg as law-partner of Mr. Kunkel. He was elected to the Legislature in 1857, 1858, and 1859, and was Speaker of the House of Representatives, sessions of 1859 and 1860. He died at Harrisburg, April 21, 1860. Mr. Lawrence was remarkable for genius of a rare order, and his success at the bar and in public life at the commencement of his career gave promise of a future of extraordinary brilliancy, frustrated by his early death.

REV. JOHN GEORGE LOCHMAN, D.D.

John George Lochman, son of Nicholas Lochman and Maria Schneider, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 2, 1778. After proper preparation he entered the University of Pennsylvania, at which he graduated, and from which institution he subsequently received the doctorate. He studied theology under the direction of the celebrated Dr. Helmuth, a graduate of the University of Halle, and for many years Professor of German and Oriental Languages in the University of Pennsylvania. He was licensed to preach in 1794, and soon after accepted a call to Lebanon, where he remained twenty-one years. In 1815 he was elected pastor of the United Evangelical Lutheran congregations at Harrisburg, Middletown, and Shupp's, where he labored with great fidelity and the most satisfactory results. In 1817 he was president of the German Lutheran Synod of the United States.

Dr. Lochman's useful life terminated at Harrisburg on the 10th of July, 1825. The congregations in their appreciation of his services erected a handsome monument over his remains, which are interred on the southeast side of the church. His wife, Susanna Hoffman, died on the 27th of June, 1830, and is buried by his side. Their son, the Rev. Augustus Lochman, D.D., who succeeded his father at Harrisburg, is now the venerable minister at York. Dr. Lochman was an able and popular preacher, was held in high estimation by the church, and exercised an unbounded influence. He was the author of "The History, Doctrine, and Discipline of the Evangelical Lutheran Church," published in 1817, and several other works. Their children were Rev. Dr. August H. (of York, Pa.), William H., Louisa (married Rev. Rothrauff), Susan (died unmarried), Camilla B. (married William Keller), Emma (married John Heis, of Illinois), and Annie (married Frederick V. Beisel).

ANTHONY W. LOOMIS.

Anthony Wayne Loomis, eldest son of Ashbel Loomis and Mary Scott, was born April 11, 1806, at Alstead, N. H. The Loomis family in America is descended from Joseph Loomis, who emigrated from Braintree, County Essex, England, in 1638, and settled at Windsor, Conn. One of his descendants was Eleazer Loomis; who married Jemima Crandall and removed from Tolland, Conn., to Alstead, N. H., in 1783. He died March 17, 1822, and his wife in April, 1838, at Alstead. Their son, Ashbel Loomis, born Sept. 16, 1779, married Sarah Scott, daughter of Capt. William Scott, one of the first settlers of Petersborough, N. H. Capt. Scott was born in May, 1738, in Townsend, Mass.; served in the French and Indian war from 1756 to 1758 in Canada; was in the war of the Revolution, and after the peace of 1783 was a government surveyor on the Western lakes. He died in Litchfield, Sept. 19, 1796, from sickness caused by exposure in his surveying expeditions. Ashbel Loomis died Aug. 31, 1824, and his wife, Sarah Scott, Sept. 10, 1841. They had four children,—Anthony Wayne, William, Nancy (married Horace Hannblit), and Mary (married Lewis Slader). Anthony W. Loomis came to Pennsylvania in 1827, and began teaching. He first taught a writing-school at Liverpool, and next year at Harrisburg. He subsequently engaged in the lumber trade near the foot of Berry's Mountain (now the Wiconisco Canal site), and afterwards turned his attention to farming. In 1844 he established the Halifax Herald, which he edited and published about two years, when he began merchandising, lumbering and farming until his death, which occurred at Halifax, Aug. 4, 1864. He was an expert penman, having learned the art under the best masters in Boston, and for a third of a century was one of the leading business men in the region of Halifax. Mr. Loomis was twice married,—first, June 3, 1835, to Maria Brubaker, of Halifax, born March 5, 1814, died May 28, 1848, daughter of Joseph and Barbara Brubaker, and there was issue,—Albert Scott, Daniel Brubaker, Barbara Ann, and William Anthony; secondly, April 2, 1844, to Mary Murray, of Middletown, born March 14, 1818, daughter of Francis Murray and Margaret Snyder, and there was issue,—Francis Murray, Charles Cass, George Otis, Walter Jefferson, Sarah Margaret, and Mary Agnes.

JAMES McCAMMON, M.D.

James McCammon, of Scotch ancestry, was a native of the County Down, Ireland, born about 1778. He was educated at Edinburgh, and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine at the university of that city. He subsequently served two years in the London Hospital, under that celebrated physician, Dr. Fordyce. He came to the United States about 1804, and located at Newville, in Cumberland County, where he had a very general and extensive practice. In September, 1811, he removed to Middletown, where his brother John resided and was postmaster,—at that period a preferable field to the Cumberland Valley,—and was very successful. He died at Middletown on the 7th of November, 1815, and was buried in the old Presbyterian graveyard on High Street, in that borough. He left a wife and three children, who afterwards removed to Zanesville, Ohio. Dr. McCammon was a skillful surgeon, and ranked high in his profession. Socially he was agreeable in conversation and of refined manners.

JOHN McCAMMON.

John McCammon, of Middletown, was born in the county of Down, Ireland, about the year 1774, and emigrated to the United States when about seventeen years of age. He resided a short time in Chester County, from whence he came to Middletown, where he followed his trade of stone-mason. He married there, and afterwards kept the principal hotel and stage-office on Main Street, near Centre Square. When Gen. Lafayette, on his visit to America, in 1824–25, passed through Middletown on his way to Harrisburg, he and his escort dined at the house of Mr. McCammon. Mr. McCammon was appointed postmaster early in 1803, and continued to hold the office until Dec. 24, 1829, a period of nearly twenty-seven years. He died July 24, 1838, aged sixty-four years, and is buried in the old Presbyterian graveyard in Middletown. Two of Mr. McCammon's daughters have served lengthened terms as postmistresses here,—Mrs. Catharine A. Stouch, from Feb. 17, 1849, to May 15, 1857, and Mrs. Rachel C. McKibbin, the present postmistress, who was first appointed April 5, 1867, and has received three appointments since, making in all a period of about forty-seven years for the family as postmasters. Mr. McCammon was a consistent member of the Paxtang Presbyterian Church. Two children are still living, viz., Mrs. R. C. McKibbin, of Middletown, and David C. McCammon, Esq., of Gettysburg.

JAMES McCORMICK.

James McCormick, son of William McCormick and Margery Bines, was born in 1801, near Silver Spring, Cumberland Co., Pa. When less than three years of age he lost his father by a fatal accident. Paternal care thus devolved upon his mother, a bright, determined woman, and by her his preparatory studies were carefully made, fitting him at an early age for Princeton College, where he graduated with reputation and began the study of law with Andrew Carothers, Esq., of Carlisle. He was admitted to the bar of Cumberland County in 1823, and to that of Dauphin County at the August term, 1825. He opened an office on Market Street, in a one-story frame house next to the Washington Hotel, then kept by Joseph Henzey. His was a most successful career, which never faltered as long as he was able to give his professional duties any attention, and, indeed, followed him after his retirement from all actual pursuits of it. Mr. McCormick served in Town Council, as good citizens should when called upon to perform a duty so useful and often very vexatious. He was president of that body, also of the Dauphin Deposit Bank, of the Harrisburg Cemetery, of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, and of the trustees of the Pine Street Presbyterian Church. In all these positions he was a cautious and able adviser. He uniformly declined candidature for office, as also offers of the higher honors of his profession. He died at Harrisburg Jan. 18, 1870, and is buried in the cemetery that owes so much of its elegance to his foresight and judicious counsel. Mr. McCormick married, in 1830, Eliza Buehler, only daughter of George Buehler and Maria Nagle, of Harrisburg, who survived her husband ten years. Upon his retirement he gave the powers of his active mind to the management of a large estate, consisting of furnaces, rolling-mills, grist-mills, and farms. All these interests were successful, and, notwithstanding his physical disability, conducted in a masterly and systematic manner.

REV. WILLIAM McFADDEN.

William McFadden was born May 8, 1804, in Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestors, who were among the earliest settlers in that locality. His advantages of education were exceedingly limited, and at his majority we find him a day-laborer on the Pennsylvania Canal, then in the course of construction. Under the religious teachings of the Rev. John Winebrenner, he became a convert to his faith. Leaving the work of the canal, he went to Harrisburg and worked at shoemaking with Jacob M. Aul, a local preacher of the Methodist Church. His early education having been neglected, he felt an earnest desire for study and self-improvement, and during his leisure hours was kindly cared for and instructed by the then wife of the Rev. Mr. Winebrenner, who took a warm interest in him. She encouraged the young student, and when others laughed at her for her cheerful labor bestowed upon the ardent but young and uneducated shoemaker, she, seeing the undeveloped talent, quietly remarked that "she thought he would yet make a preacher." Her expectations were more than realized in after-years, for McFadden not only became a preacher, but a powerful minister for good. After a residence of several years in Harrisburg, he removed to Mount Joy, Lancaster Co., and was early associated with the church organization in that place. He continued to work at his trade, but was not very successful. A friend, however, finding him to be an excellent workman, induced him to move into the business portion of the town, and his work was such as commended him to general patronage.

He began his work of the ministry by exhorting at prayer-meetings, assisting the preachers at protracted meetings, and his eloquence was such as to soon bring him into general notice. He applied for and received license from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, which met in Mechanicsburg in December, 1832, and in connection with the Rev. Jonathan Hawk, was appointed to the Dauphin Circuit. At the succeeding eldership he reported considerable progress on his field of labor, and the eldership appointed him, with Mr. Keller, to York County. From thence until within a few years of his death, when failing health obliged him to cease active labors, Elder McFadden was actively engaged in the work of the ministry. During the administration of Governor Pollock he was a messenger in the State Department, and there was a warm personal attachment between them, which lasted until Elder McFadden's death. While a resident of Lancaster County, he was for a year an active agent of the Bible Society. He died Jan. 30, 1874, and his remains lie near those of his former friend and associate, Rev. John Winebrenner, in the Harrisburg Cemetery. The Rev. Mr. McFadden was wonderfully gifted with the power of song, and the recollection of his clear, melodious voice is still fresh in the memory of many. His preaching was plain, practical, close, and searching. As a natural orator he had few superiors, and as a great revivalist who could appeal to the hearts of his hearers, and by his unstudied eloquence get them into sympathy with himself, he had few equals.

WILLIAM MACLAY.

William Maclay, son of Charles Maclay and Eleanor Query, was born July 20, 1787, in New Garden township, Chester Co., Pa. In 1743 his father removed to now Lurgan township, Franklin County, where his boyhood days were spent upon the paternal farm. When the French and Indian war broke out he was at Rev. John Blair's classical school in Chester County, and desiring to enter the service of the Province his tutor gave him a recommendation "as a judicious young man and a scholar," which secured him the appointment of ensign in the Pennsylvania Battalion. He was promoted lieutenant in the Third Battalion, Lieut.-Col. Hugh Mercer, May 7, 1758; accompanied Gen. Forbes' expedition that year, and especially distinguished himself at the battle of Loyallhanna. In Bouquet's expedition of 1763, he was in the fight of Bushy Run, while in the subsequent campaign of that gallant officer he was stationed with the greater portion of the Second Pennsylvania on the line of the stockade forts on the route to Fort Pitt as lieutenant commanding the company. For these services he participated in the Provincial grant of land to the officers connected therewith, located on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, and most of which he assisted in surveying. He studied law and was admitted to the York County bar April 28, 1760, but it is doubtful if he ever practiced his profession at that court, the continued Indian war, and his subsequent duties as surveyor, engrossing his entire time, although from a letter of John Penn's it would seem that he was afterwards admitted to the Cumberland County bar, and had acted for the prothonotary of that county. At the close of the French and Indian war he visited England, and had an interview with Thomas Penn, one of the Proprietaries, relative to the surveys in the middle and northern parts of the Province, and was the assistant of Surveyor Lukens on the frontiers.

In 1772 he laid out the town of Sunbury, and erected for himself a stone house, which was standing a few years since. Upon the organization of the county of Northumberland he was appointed prothonotary and clerk of the courts. He also acted as the representative of the Penn family, and took a prominent part in the so-called Pennamite war. In writing to the Secretary of the Province in April, 1778, he says, "If hell is justly considered as the rendezvous of rascals, we cannot entertain a doubt of Wioming being the place;" but much as he was prejudiced against the Connecticut settlers he foresees the future value of the land in that valley, and advises Penn not to sell his reservation there.

At the outset of the Revolution, although an officer of the Proprietary government, William Maclay took a prominent and active part in favor of independence, not only assisting in equipping and forwarding troops to the Continental army, but marched with the associates participating in the battles of Trenton and Princeton. During the Revolution he held the position of assistant commissary of purchases. In 1781 he was elected to the Assembly, and from that time forward he filled the various offices of member of the Supreme Executive Council, judge of the Courts of Common Pleas, deputy surveyor, and one of the commissioners for carrying into effect the act respecting the navigation of the Susquehanna River. About this period he visited England in the interest of the Penn family.

In January, 1789, he was elected to the United States Senate, taking his seat there as the first senator from Pennsylvania. He drew the short term, and his position terminated March 3, 1791, his colleague, Robert Morris, securing the long term. His election to this body raised him upon a higher plane of political activity, but contact with the Federal chiefs of the Senate only strengthened his political convictions, which, formed by long intercourse with the people of Middle Pennsylvania, were intensely Democratic. He began to differ with the opinions of President Washington very early in the session; he did not approve of the state and ceremony attendant upon the intercourse of the President with Congress, he flatly objected to the presence of the President in the Senate while business was being transacted, and in the Senate boldly spoke against his policy in the immediate presence of President Washington.

The New England historians, Hildreth and Goodrich, repute Thomas Jefferson as the "efficient promoter at the beginning and father and founder of the Democratic party." Contemporary records, however, show beyond the shadow of a doubt that this responsibility or honor, in whatever light it may be regarded, cannot be shifted from the shoulders or taken from the laurels of Pennsylvania statesmanship. Before Mr. Jefferson's return from Europe, William Maclay assumed an independent position, and in his short career of two years in the Senate propounded ideas and gathered about him elements to form the opposition which developed with the meeting of Congress at Philadelphia on the 24th of October, 1791, in a division of the people into two great parties, the Federalists and Democrats, when, for the first time, appeared an open and organized opposition to the administration.

The funding of the public debt, chartering the United States Bank, and other measures championed necessarily by the administration, whose duty it was to put the wheels of government in motion, engendered opposition. Mr. Maclay, to use his own language, "no one else presenting himself," fearlessly took the initiative, and with his blunt common sense (for he was not much of a speaker) and Democratic ideas took issue with the ablest advocate of the administration.

Notwithstanding the prestige of Gen. Washington, and the ability of the defenders of the administration on the floor of the Senate, such was the tact and resolution of Mr. Maclay that when, after his short service, he was retired the Senate and succeeded by James Ross, a pronounced Federalist, their impress was left in the distinctive lines of an opposition party, a party which, taking advantage of the warm feeling of our people towards the French upon the occasion of Jay's treaty with Great Britain in 1794, and of the unpopularity of the alien and sedition laws passed under the administration of President John Adams, in 1798, compassed the final overthrow of the Federal party in 1800.

While in the Senate Mr. Maclay preserved notes of its discussions both in open and secret sessions, with observations upon the social customs of the first statesmen of the republic, which have recently been published and edited by George Washington Harris. Upon his retirement, he resided permanently on his farm adjoining Harrisburg, where he erected the stone mansion for many years occupied by the Harrisburg Academy. In the year 1795 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and again elected in 1808. He was a Presidential elector in 1796, and from 1801 to 1803 one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin. He died at Harrisburg on the 16th of April, 1804, in the sixty-seventh year of his age, and was interred in old Paxtang Church graveyard. Mr. Harris, who edited his journal, gives us this summary of Mr. Maclay's character: "He was a man of strict integrity, of positive opinions, having implicit confidence in his own honesty and judgment, he was inclined to be suspicious of the integrity of others, whose sentiments or action in matters of importance differed from his own, and the journal to which reference has been made is evidence of the strength of his intellect." "In personal appearance Mr. Maclay is said to have been six feet three inches in height, and stout and muscular. His complexion was light, and his hair in middle age appears to have been brown and was worn tied behind or clubbed."

Mr. Maclay married, about 1769, Mary Harris, eldest daughter of John Harris, the founder of Harrisburg, and his wife Elizabeth McClure.

MORDECAI MCKINNEY.

Mordecai McKinney, son of Mordecai McKinney and Mary Chambers, daughter of Col. William Chambers, was born near Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Pa., in 1796. He was educated at Dickinson College, where he graduated quite young. He studied law under Judge Duncan, of Carlisle, completing his instruction at Harrisburg, being admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the May term, 1817. In 1821 he was appointed district attorney of Union County, serving three years. In 1824 he was chosen clerk to the county commissioners of Dauphin County, and Oct. 23, 1827, Governor Shulze appointed him one of the associate judges of the same county. Subsequently Judge McKinney turned his attention to the compilation of law books, and published "McKinney's Digest," "Our Government," "Pennsylvania Tax Laws," and other works of professional value. He died at Harrisburg on the 17th day of December, 1867, the result of injuries received from a street car three days previous. Mr. McKinney married Rachel Graydon, daughter of William Graydon, who died at Harrisburg April 12, 1856. The Rev. Dr. Robinson so accurately summarizes the characteristics of Judge McKinney's noble life that we cannot refrain from quoting him largely: "His life as a man and a citizen was completely transfused by his religion, sanctified and elevated by it. He was modest and unobtrusive in manners, free from all guile, a man of sterling honesty and conscientiousness. He was remarkably free from all taint of selfishness and all pride. Spending all his years in comparative poverty, no more contented, happy, and trusting man walked the streets of this city. As a citizen he was faithful to all obligations, a friend of all that was venerable and good, a defender of law, and a supporter of all that tended to the welfare of society. He was distinguished as a philanthropist. There was a nobleness about his loyalty to principle, to the cause of the poor, the oppressed, and the despised that might well command universal admiration."

REV. PIERCE MAHER.

Pierce Maher was a native of Ireland, born about 1813, and was educated at Maynooth College, where he graduated. He came to this country in 1836, and shortly after began the study of theology in Philadelphia, and subsequently appointed pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Harrisburg. Until the establishment of the bishopric of Harrisburg, for a period of thirty-two years, the Rev. Maher was the beloved and revered pastor of that church, and the writer of this sketch holds in his affection and memory the most pleasing recollection and warm friendship of that pious and devoted minister of the gospel of Christ. From Harrisburg he went to Norristown, where he remained until his death, which occurred on the 28th of December, 1873, at the age of sixty. Father Maher was a gentleman of extensive classical attainments, and had the reputation of being an earnest and faithful preacher and priest.

JOHN MEETCH.

John Meetch, the son of an Irish magistrate, was born in Enniskillen, county of Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1724. He received a good education. Marrying in opposition to his father, he came, with his wife, to America about 1752, landing at New York. From thence they went to the head-waters of the Susquehanna, finally passing down that river, locating on the north side of Peter's Mountain, thus being one of the early pioneers of that locality. In 1756 his family was driven off by the Indians, but returned when the settlers had organized for their own defense. In the French and Indian war Mr. Meetch took up arms in aid of the frontiers, and when the storm of the Revolution burst upon the country he was an active participant, being in Capt. John Reed's company during the Jersey campaign of 1776-77. Mr. Meetch died at his residence in 1794, his wife surviving him only a few years. They had five children who reached maturity,—Nancy, married John Cavet, went to Knoxville, Tenn., where she died at the age of ninety; Mary, married — Brown, removed to Westmoreland County; Rebecca, married — Dunlap, settled in Erie County; Elizabeth, married Robert Lyon, removed to Northumberland County; and John, who married, and remained on the homestead.

WILLIAM H. MILLER.

William Henry Miller was born in Landisburg, Perry Co., Pa., Feb. 28, 1829, and died in Harrisburg Sept. 12, 1870. His father, Hon. Jesse Miller, was one of the purest and wisest public men who has ever helped to make for Pennsylvania an honest history. He held many stations of high trust, filled them with diligence and ability, and came out of them all with spotless hands. He was member of Congress during Gen. Jackson's administration, first auditor of the United States treasury under President Van Buren, and he was appointed Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania under Governor Francis R. Shunk, at which time he removed from Washington, D. C., to Harrisburg, where he died in the month of August, 1850. William H. Miller's early life was characterized by an eagerness and thirst for knowledge, bright intellect, with all of that exquisite disposition to oblige, that benevolence in small things, which has been defined as the highest politeness, which made him in after-years the most charming and winning of companions. There was no taint of deceit in his composition, and he made friends as his days lengthened. He was graduated at Franklin and Marshall College, read law with Hermanus Alricks, an eminent member of the profession in Harrisburg, and was admitted to practice Nov. 18, 1846. Upon his appointment as prothonotary of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in 1854, he took up his residence in Harrisburg, and served with ability in that capacity until 1863. He was for one term clerk of the State Senate, and for a number of years connected with the Harrisburg Patriot. In 1862 his popularity was evinced by his election to the Thirty-eighth Congress of the United States by the people of his district, in the face of a heavy party majority, where he served with high reputation. He died in his forty-second year, in the prime of a busy and useful life. In every position he performed his duty with zeal, faithfulness, and ability. He was a vigorous writer, a judicious counselor, and a fearless and eloquent advocate. The wronged and oppressed all found a defender in William H. Miller. He never stopped to calculate the consequences or count the fee when the humble and the weak appealed to him for counsel and assistance against powerful injustice. His views of the duties of a public man were pure and elevated, and he faithfully carried them out in practice. His scorn of the corrupt arts which prevail in modern legislation was intense and uncompromising, and his friendship warm and sincere. Every appeal to his bounty met a hearty response. Mr. Miller was one truly loved by his fellow-men. The rich sought his society, the poor his counsel and advice in their day of trouble, and they never appealed in vain.

He married Ellen, the eldest daughter of the late Christopher L. Ward, of Towanda, Pa., who, with one son, Jesse Miller, survives him. His father was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1807, where his father was a pioneer settler, was a prominent lawyer, editor, and wealthy and influential citizen. He resided most of his life at Towanda, and a writer said of him, after his death, in 1870, "The summary of his virtues may be set down,—an industrious spirit, a ceaseless energy, a sound judgment, a generous hand, a liberal mind, and a most tender heart." He possessed the largest and most valuable private library in the State, comprising some fifteen thousand volumes, which has been, since his death, donated, by Mrs. Miller, to Lafayette College. *

ANDREW MITCHEL.

Andrew Mitchel, a native of Dublin, Ireland, born Nov. 1, 1754, emigrated to America in 1774, on the eve of the Revolution. Espousing the cause of the colonies, he took position as an officer among the defenders of his adopted country. He was a gentleman of finished education and excellent moral training,—having been destined for a clerical life,—adopted teaching as an avocation, and in the dearth of preceptors after the peace of 1783, had gratifying success as an educator. He came to Harrisburg in 1791, and in June, 1795, married Margaret, the widow of Capt. John Hamilton. He was one of the burgesses of the borough in 1799, and served a number of years in the Town Council. Mr. Mitchel was an officer and early member of the Presbyterian Church, and greatly assisted in its first organization. He died Dec. 21, 1825, at his residence on Front Street, now Mrs. Dr. Rutherford's. His daughter, Jane Alexander, wife of Dr. Thomas Whiteside, was the only child who survived him.

REV. ANDREW D. MITCHELL.

Andrew Dinsmore Mitchell was born in York County, Pa., Feb. 2, 1824, and there he passed his early life. He graduated at Jefferson College in 1841, and afterwards spent some time in teaching. In 1844 he matriculated at Princeton Theological Seminary, where he prepared for the ministry. He came under the care of the Carlisle Presbytery in 1849 as a licentiate from the Donegal Presbytery, and at the same time calls were placed in his hands from the united charge of Paxtang and Derry. These he accepted, and in 1850 was ordained and installed pastor of that people, whom he acceptably served until 1874, when at his own request the pastoral relation was dissolved. Subsequently he declined certain positions that were in his offer, but in 1876 he accepted the appointment of post chaplain in the United States army by his friend, the Hon. J. D. Cameron, then Secretary of War. He spent five years at the military prison of Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and was transferred in the fall of 1881 to Fort Grant, Arizona, where he died on the 26th of March, 1882, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. Mitchell had also been the very acceptable stated clerk of the Carlisle Presbytery from 1857 to the year of his appointment as chaplain, 1876, when he resigned, and received the special commendation of the Presbytery for his very faithful services. He had been repeatedly sent by his Presbytery as a commissioner to the General Assembly, and in 1868 he was elected moderator of the Baltimore Synod, when the Carlisle Presbytery formed a part of that body. As a preacher he was clear, logical, and instructive, and as a presbyter regular in his attendance and eminently useful. He was very decided in his convictions, both theological and political; he was no less tolerant of the opinions of others, and was a warm friend of the union between the two branches of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Mitchell married a daughter of Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling, of Middletown, Pa.

CHARLES MOWRY.

Charles Mowry was born in Litchfield, Providence Co., R. I., in 1777. He received a classical education, and came to Pennsylvania about 1800, and engaged in teaching. In 1808 he began the publication of the Temperate Z., at Downingtown, Chester Co. This was subsequently changed to the American Republican, and Mr. Mowry continued its publication until 1821, when he came to Harrisburg in the interest of William Findlay, who was a candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania for a second term, and became editor of the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, previously the Harrisburg Republican. This paper he eventually disposed of to Gen. Simon Cameron, who had been associated with him as copartner in its management, in order that he might assume the duties of canal commissioner, to which he had been appointed by Governor Shulze. During his career as editor he acquired considerable celebrity as a political writer, and exercised a marked influence upon the policy of his party. He died at Harrisburg July 29, 1838. He married, March 31, 1812, Mary Richmond, daughter of George Richmond, of Sadsbury township, Chester Co. She died March 28, 1862, aged seventy-six years. They had six children,—three sons, since deceased, and three daughters,—Mary, married Samuel D. Young, and is a widow; Susan, married Hon. David Fleming; and Jane, unmarried.

CHARLES EDWARD MUENCH.

Charles Edward Muench, a native of Mettenheim, Wurtemberg, in the Palatinate of Chur Pfalz on the Rhine, Germany, was born Jan. 7, 1769. He was of Huguenot-French descent, his grandfather, Charles Frederick Beauvoir, fleeing France during the religious persecutions, and purchasing the "Muench Hoff," took his surname therefrom. Charles Edward, the younger, was early sent to Heidelberg, where he completed his theological studies. It was just at the commencement of the general war in Europe when, on the occasion of his home being invaded by the French army, he received and accepted a commission as captain of a company of hussars in the allied armies, in which service he was severely wounded by a pistol-ball in the leg, and a sabre cut on the left hand. He commanded the guard that conducted Lafayette to the prison at Olmutz. On the 8th of July, 1794, he was promoted quartermaster under Sir Francis, of Wiedlungen. On the very day of his promotion he married Margaretha Bieser. In 1798 he came to America, where he taught a German school successively at Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., and Rehersburg, Berks Co. In 1804 he removed to Lykens Valley, at the Hoffman Church school property; but discouraged somewhat at the wild appearance of the land, he went to Union County. Subsequently, in 1806, the congregation at Hoffman Church requested his return, when yielding thereto he once more entered upon the duties of his station. For a period of twenty-eight years he was a faithful teacher, and although not the ordained minister, yet very frequently conducted the religious services in Hoffman Church, and officiated on funeral occasions. He was greatly beloved by the people, and his death, which occurred on the 8th of January, 1833, occasioned sorrow in many a household. His beloved wife, Margaretha, died in the following year (1834), and their remains lie interred side by side in the graveyard of old Hoffman Church. The Rev. Muench was exceedingly expert with the pen, had a refined artistic taste as to drawing and designing, and in the ornamentation of books and inlaying of furniture. He was a musician of no ordinary ability, and was an adept in all those essentials characteristic of the home-culture of the Germans of the better class.

CAPT. JAMES MURRAY.

James Murray, son of William Murray, was born in Scotland about 1729. In 1768, James Murray took out a patent for the tract of land on which he resided, located in Upper Paxtang township, and then surveyed to him. In 1775 he was chosen a member of the Committee of Safety for his township, and on the 8th of November of that year took his place in the general committee for Lancaster County. On the 4th of July, 1776, at a military convention representing the fifty-three battalions of the associators, he was present as one of the captains for that county. The roll of his company is given in the Revolutionary history of the county. With John Rodgers and John Harris, on the 8th of July, 1776, by appointment of the Provincial Conference, he superintended the election held at Garber's Mill for the Sixth District of Lancaster County, to make a choice of delegates to the convention that assembled on the 15th of the month, and which framed the first constitution of the State. During that and the following year he was almost in constant active military service with his company. He commanded one of the companies of the Tenth Battalion, Lancaster County militia, and was with the expedition up the West Branch in 1779. The exposures to which Capt. Murray was subjected during the Revolutionary struggle brought on an attack of rheumatism, from which for many years prior to his death he was a constant sufferer. He died at his residence in Upper Paxtang on the 15th of March, 1804, aged seventy-five years. Capt. Murray married Rebecca McLean, a native of Scotland.

CAPT. JOHN MURRAY.

John Murray, son of William Murray, was a native of Scotland, born about 1731. In 1766 he took up a tract of land lying on the Susquehanna, immediately above his brother James' farm, which adjoined the present town of Dauphin. He commanded a rifle company, which in March, 1776, was attached to Col. Samuel Miles' battalion, and participated in the battles of Long Island, White Plains, Trenton, and Princeton. He was promoted to major April 18, 1777, and lieutenant-colonel of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment in 1780, serving until the disbanding of the army in 1783. He then returned to his family and farm. Governor Mifflin appointed him a justice of the peace Aug. 29, 1791, the only political office he ever held. He was an ardent Whig of the Revolution, and a brave officer. He died on the 3d of February, 1798, in his sixty-eighth year, and his remains rest in the cemetery near the borough of Dauphin. Col. Murray married, 29th of December, 1762, Margaret, daughter of Andrew and Rebecca Mayes. She died June 22, 1807, aged seventy-four years. They are both buried in the old cemetery at Dauphin.

ANTOINE NININGER.

Antoine Nininger was born in 1787, in the Province of Alsace, France. He entered the French army under Joseph Bonaparte, was taken prisoner and confined at Gibraltar six months, subsequently removed to Canada, from whence he made his escape. He came to Harrisburg about 1815, became a dealer in cattle, which business he carried on for twenty-five years, when he retired from active business. He died Aug. 22, 1866, at Harrisburg, aged seventy-nine years. Mr. Nininger was highly respected by his fellow-citizens for his uprightness of character and his integrity. He married, in 1820, Katharine May (born 1800 in the city of Philadelphia; died 1833 at Harrisburg), daughter of Bernhard and Agnes May, natives of Amsterdam, Holland. They had issue: William, John (married Catharine Kelker Ramsey), Agnes (married, first, Col. William Sanders, second, Joseph Kemp), James, Catharine, Bernhard, Antoine, Mary Jane, and Eliza, of whom Agnes alone survives.

HENRY ORTH.

Henry Orth, only son of Adam Orth and Catharine Kucher, was born in 1770 at Lebanon, Pa. He received a good English education, and was brought up in the iron business. At the death of his father he became the owner of New Market Forge, but being elected sheriff of the county of Dauphin, commissioned Oct. 17, 1797, like the vast majority who have followed him in that office, he became financially shipwrecked. In 1801 he was elected State senator, serving until 1804, when he positively declined further continuance in office. Governor Snyder appointed him flour inspector of the port of Philadelphia in January, 1809, but he resigned this office in April following, when he entered mercantile pursuits in Philadelphia. He remained in that city until the close of the late war with England, when he removed to Baltimore, and had there established a successful business as a merchant, when he suddenly died in 1816, at the age of forty-six. Mr. Orth married, in 1797, Rebecca Rahm (born November 22, 1773; died Dec. 31, 1842, at Harrisburg), daughter of Michael Rahm, of Derry, and left issue.

ADAM H. ORTH.

Adam Henry Orth, eldest son of Henry Orth and Rebecca Rahm, was born at Harrisburg in 1798. He studied law, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the November term, 1822. He held the office of district attorney for Dauphin County in 1827 and 1828, and for several years, in addition to the duties of his profession, he was transcribing clerk of the House of Representatives. He died in Harrisburg on the 15th of October, 1833. He married, May 3, 1832, Elizabeth, daughter of John B. Cox, of Estherton, who survived her husband several years. Mr. Orth was a promising lawyer, a faithful officer, and was a gentleman refined and courteous.

EDWARD L. ORTH, M.D.

Edward Lawrence Orth, youngest son of Henry Orth and Rebecca Rahm, was born in 1813, at Baltimore, Md. His father dying while the son was in early life, the mother removed to her former home, Harrisburg, where the boy was carefully brought up. He received the education of the borough schools, and entered the Harrisburg Academy, where he pursued the higher branches. He subsequently began the study of medicine with his brother-in-law, Dr. Luther Reily, afterwards attending the lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution he graduated March 12, 1834. Locating at Harrisburg, he began the practice of his profession in partnership with Dr. Reily, which continued until the death of the latter. Few practitioners became as successful as these noted physicians were, and none at the capital were ever so deservedly popular. For seven years after the death of his lifelong friend, Dr. Orth continued his professional life, enjoying not only a large practice, but the confidence and love of his numerous patients. He died at Harrisburg on the 15th of April, 1861, in his forty-seventh year. As a physician, Dr. Orth was learned, skillful, self-sacrificing, sympathetic, and faithful. In the community he was greatly beloved for his unassuming, gentle, and gentlemanly demeanor. In the language of a contemporary, "he was a man of fine culture, a careful, attentive, and conscientious physician, quiet and unobtrusive in manner." For many years he was one of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church, was a director of the Harrisburg Bank, and served in the Borough Council. Dr. Orth married Martha Kerr, daughter of the Rev. William Kerr, of Donogal, and their children are Mary (married Jacob F. Seiler), Dr. Henry L. (a prominent surgeon of Harrisburg), and J. Wilson, of Pittsburgh.

WILLIAM PATTON, M.D.

William Patton, son of Thomas Patton and Eleanor Fleming, was born in 1775 in Derry township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received a good education, studied medicine under the elder Dr. William Simonton, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. He located at Hummelstown, and was in successful practice there at his death, which occurred the 30th of March, 1816. Dr. Patton married, March 24, 1808, Eleanor Kean, daughter of Gen. John Kean, of Harrisburg. After his decease she married Christian Spayd, of Hummelstown.

JAMES PEACOCK.

James Peacock, the eldest son of William Peacock and Mary McArthur, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., April 8, 1788. His education was in a great measure due to his mother's care and tuition, with self-application in after-years. At the age of fifteen he began to learn the printing business with Mr. Edward Cole, of Lewistown, where he remained until 1807, when he went to Lancaster to work on the Intelligencer. In 1809 he was employed by the celebrated John Binns, of Philadelphia, on book work, and subsequently by Mr. Dinnie on the Portfolio. While in the latter establishment, he became intimate with quite a number of the liberati of that period, and concerning whom he has left some interesting "Reminiscences." In 1811, Mr. Peacock returned to Lancaster, and from thence came to Harrisburg, where, in December of that year, he started the Pennsylvania Republican, which he continued to publish for about eight or nine years, in the mean time being one of the printers to the Senate and House. In December, 1821, he was employed as an assistant clerk of the Senate, and in March, 1822, received the appointment of postmaster at Harrisburg in place of Mrs. Wright, who had recently deceased, an office he held under different national administrations until the 15th of November, 1846. In December, 1847, he removed to Philadelphia, where he became identified with the publication of the Evening Bulletin, The Sun, and Neal's Saturday Gazette, which he managed with all the tact and skill of his early years, relinquishing his labors only a brief time prior to his death. He died in the city of Philadelphia on the 23d of August, 1863, and is interred in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Mr. Peacock was twice married,—first, to Frances C., daughter of Matthias Slough and Mary Gibson, of Lancaster, who died Oct. 27, 1837; and, secondly, to Mrs. Louisa V. Sims, of Mount Holly, N. J., who died in 1869. Mr. Peacock was ever held in high esteem by the citizens of Harrisburg, whether as journalist, or his occupancy of the post-office for a quarter of a century. He always took an active part in public affairs, and was largely instrumental in organizing St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, in which there has been erected a tablet to his memory. He was a gentleman of dignified manners, of refined culture, and a sincere Christian.

HENRY PEFFER.

Henry Peffer, son of George Peffer and Susanna Bader, was born in the year 1789 in Paxtaug. He received a fair education, turned his attention to book-keeping, and followed clerking for many years. In 1814 he was an officer in one of the companies of volunteers which marched to the defense of the beleaguered city of Baltimore. He was clerk to the county commissioners, and from 1848 to 1850 served as a member of that body. For many years he was an inspector of the Dauphin County prison, the secretary of the board, and an efficient officer. He was an alderman of the Second Ward of the city of Harrisburg at the time of his death, which occurred on the 9th of February, 1867, at the age of seventy-eight years. He was interred in old Paxtaug Church graveyard. Mr. Peffer married late in life, and had no children.

GEN. ANDREW PORTER.¹

Robert Porter emigrated to America from Ireland in the year 1720. He came from what is known as the Isle of Bert, which is distant about nine miles from the city of Londonderry. He landed at Londonderry, New Hampshire, and soon afterwards purchased and settled on a farm in what is now Worcester township, Montgomery Co., Pa., about four miles distant from Norristown. He occupied this farm until the day of his death, which took place on the 14th of July, 1770, in the seventy-second year of his age. The records of the church show that in 1741 he was an elder of the Norristown Presbyterian Church. He reared a large family,—nine sons and five daughters. Some of his sons moved westward and southward. Those who stayed and those who went became generally farmers or tradesmen. The most successful and prominent of his sons was Andrew, born on his father's farm on the 24th of September, 1743. He seems to have shown a taste for reading the few books he could procure. At the age of eighteen or nineteen his father had determined on his learning the trade of a carpenter with an elder brother; but, after a few months' trial, he was declared to be too fond of books and of figures, and too little disposed to work to be useful as an apprentice. Believing that his aversion to labor and his fondness for books were such that he would never be successful as a farmer or mechanic, the father determined on fitting him for the occupation of a country schoolmaster. The boy was sent for a short time to Mr. Mennon's school, during which he made rapid improvement, especially in mathematics, and then opened a small school in the neighborhood of his father's residence.

In the spring of 1767 he removed to Philadelphia, and took charge of an English and mathematical school, which he conducted with much reputation until the spring of 1776, when, at his country's call, he bade farewell to these peaceful avocations to enter into her service. During his residence in Philadelphia, he had made much progress in his mathematical studies, and had become an accurate astronomer.

On the 19th of June, 1776, he was commissioned by Congress a captain of marines, and ordered on board the frigate "Effingham." At this time his school contained about one hundred scholars, and enabled him to support comfortably a family of five children who had recently lost their mother; but all considerations of family and self seem to have been lost in the cause of his country. Not finding among the marines an opportunity of rendering the service he desired, he was shortly after transferred to the artillery; a corps in which, from his previous studies, he was qualified to be more useful. He continued to serve as a captain of artillery until the 13th of March, 1782, when he was promoted to a majority, to rank as such from the 19th of April, 1781. He was subsequently promoted successively to the ranks of lieutenant-colonel, lieutenant-colonel commandant, and colonel of the Fourth (or Pennsylvania) Regiment of Artillery, which latter station he held at the disbanding of the army.

While in the army he was personally engaged in the cannonade at Trenton, and in the battles of Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. In the last-mentioned action nearly all of his company were killed or taken prisoners, and in the first, he received on the field in person the commendation of General Washington for his conduct in the action. In the month of April, 1779, he was detached with his company to join General James Clinton's brigade in the operations under Gen. Sullivan against the Indians.

When the siege of Yorktown was determined on, Col. Porter was ordered to proceed to Philadelphia, and superintend the laboratory at which the various kinds of ammunition for that siege were prepared.

The grand object for which the American patriots had taken up arms having been accomplished by the peace of 1783, and the army having been disbanded, Col. Porter retired to private life, and to the cultivation of his farm. While thus employed, he performed for many of his neighbors the offices of executor, trustee, and guardian, and the papers and documents which yet remain show that he discharged these trusts with such exactness and fidelity that his acts passed without a question.

The trustees of the University of Pennsylvania tendered to him the Professorship of Mathematics in that institution, which he declined. He was subsequently appointed by the Supreme Executive Council of the State one of the commissioners for running, by astronomical observations, the lines between Pennsylvania and Virginia, and Pennsylvania and what is now Ohio. In this business he was engaged during the years 1784, 1785, 1786, and 1787. He shortly after retired to his farm in Norristown township, Montgomery Co., within a few miles of the place of his nativity, on which he continued to reside until the spring of 1809. In the year 1800 he was appointed, in conjunction with Gens. Irvine and Boude, to settle the controversies of the Pennsylvania claimants in the seventeen townships in the county of Luzerne, but resigned the situation in the next spring. In the same year he was appointed brigadier-general of the First Brigade, Second Division of Pennsylvania militia, and shortly after, on the removal of Gen. Peter Muhlenberg to Philadelphia, he was made major-general of the division.

In the month of April, 1809, Governor Snyder selected him to fill the office of Surveyor-General of Pennsylvania, which situation he held until his decease. He found the office in much disorder, remodeled it, and brought order and system out of confusion.

During the years 1812 and 1813 he declined the positions of brigadier-general in the army, and Secretary of War of the United States, both of which were offered to him by President Madison, believing that his advanced age would prevent the execution of the duties of either situation with that efficiency which the public good and his own reputation required.

Andrew Porter was twice married, first, to Elizabeth McDowell, on the 10th of March, 1767, and after her death (which took place on the 9th of April, 1778), to Elizabeth Parker, on the 20th of May, 1777.

By his first marriage Gen. Porter had issue:

i. Robert, b. 10th of January, 1768; served in the latter part of the war of the Revolution as a lieutenant in an artillery company; was admitted to the bar on the 15th of May, 1789, and practiced law in Philadelphia successfully for many years; was appointed by Governor Snyder president judge of the Third Judicial District, composed of the counties of Berks, Lehigh, and Northampton; discharged the duties of this office for many years, and then resigned his commission and retired to private life; died at Brookville, Pa., on the 23d of June, 1842.

ii. Elizabeth, b. 27th of September, 1769. She married Robert Parker in 1790, and settled at Lexington, Ky., where she died in 1851. Her husband died in March, 1800.

iii. Mary, b. 12th of March, 1771. She married her cousin, Robert Porter, and settled in Kentucky, where she became the mother of four children,—Eliza, Andrew, Benjamin, and Caroline.

iv. and v. Andrew and William, twins, b. 9th of April, 1773. They both became merchants, Andrew, in New Orleans, where he died on the 11th of October, 1805, and William, in Baltimore, where he died on the 16th of November, 1835.

Gen. Porter by his second wife had,—

vi. Charlotte, b. 1st of February, 1778. She became the wife of Robert Brooke, Esq., of Philadelphia, and the mother of five sons and three daughters.

vii. Anna Maria, b. Jan. 1, 1781; d. in April, 1781.

viii. Alexander Parker, b. May 8, 1782; d. in August, 1782.

ix. John Ewing, b. May 11, 1784; studied the law in Philadelphia, in the office of his brother, Robert, and entered on the practice of his profession in April, 1805, in the counties of Chester and Montgomery. His fine appearance and address soon gave him a good position at the bar. Having entered into a matrimonial engagement, which was broken in a way that incurred the censure of his father, the father wrote sharply, and the son resented the interference deeply. The latter immediately changed his name to that of Parker (his mother's maiden name), and took a resolution, which he sternly kept, not to see his father again. He journeyed on horseback southward, and, arriving in North Carolina, changed his profession, and, after studying that of medicine, became a successful and useful physician. His death took place at Plymouth, in that State, on the 14th of November, 1819. He died unmarried.

x. Harriet, b. 19th of October, 1786. She became the second wife of Col. Thomas McKeen, for many years the president of the Easton Bank.

xi. David Rittenhouse, b. 31st of October, 1788.

xii. George Bryan, b. Feb. 9, 1791; having graduated at the law school at Litchfield, Conn., then enjoying a national reputation, he settled in Lancaster, Pa., and subsequently represented that county in the Legislature. In 1832, President Jackson appointed him Governor of the then Territory of Michigan, and having held that office for about two years, he died on the 18th of July, 1834. Andrew, the second son of George B. Porter, entered the army on the breaking out of the Mexican war. He became first lieutenant of a company of riflemen, and took part in the battles of Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, and Chapultepec. After the city of Mexico had been taken he was made lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant meritorious conduct. In 1850, Gen. Scott spoke of him to the writer in terms of high praise for the part he had taken in these several battles. During the late civil war Col. Porter was appointed provost-marshal of Washington, and then provost-marshal-general of the Army of the Potomac. He took part in the battles of Yorktown, Williamsburg, Chickahominy, and the Seven Days' Battle under McClellan, in which some of the hardest fighting of the war was done. He had now risen to the rank of brigadier-general, but his health having become impaired by fatigue and exposure, he resigned his position in the army, and died in Europe, whither he had gone for the restoration of his health.

xiii. James Madison, b. Jan. 6, 1793; having been admitted to the bar on the 24th of April, 1813, he settled permanently in Easton in 1818, and for more than forty years practiced his profession as a lawyer throughout the eastern portion of Pennsylvania with eminent success. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1838, and, having been proposed as president of that body, was defeated by the election of Hon. John Sergeant by a majority of one vote, but subsequently presided over the convention during Mr. Sergeant's absence as a member of Congress. He afterwards became president judge of the district composed of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill, and while holding that office was appointed by President Tyler Secretary of War. On retiring from this position he resumed the practice of his profession, and was afterwards elected judge of the district which lies at the extreme north-eastern portion of the State. He resigned this office from ill health, and died at his home in Easton on the 11th of November, 1862. Andrew Parker, the second son of James M. Porter, having been educated at West Point, entered the cavalry service, and was first employed as a lieutenant during the Indian hostilities in the West. He subsequently became a captain in the commissary department. After the breaking out of the Rebellion he was appointed assistant commissary-general of the Army of the Potomac, under McClellan. Gen. Thomas, on being promoted to the command of the Army of the Southwest, solicited his appointment as commissary-general in that army, which was accordingly made. His death took place soon after the close of the war.

Gen. Andrew Porter died at Harrisburg on the 16th of November, 1813.

GOVERNOR DAVID R. PORTER.

David Rittenhouse Porter, the son of Andrew Porter and Elizabeth Parker, was born Oct. 31, 1788, near Norristown, Montgomery Co., Pa. He received his early education at an academy in Norristown, where the branches of a good English education, mathematics, and the elementary classical studies were successfully taught. With his brothers George and James he was here pursuing a course preparatory to entering Princeton College, when the buildings of that institution were destroyed by fire, and the purpose of a collegiate course was abandoned. When the father was appointed surveyor-general he took his son, David, with him to the seat of government as his assistant. While thus employed the son also studied law, with the intention of entering upon its practice at Harrisburg, but the labor and confinement of these double duties were too severe, and his health was so much impaired, as was thought, to preclude the possibility of his pursuing any sedentary employment. He decided, therefore, to seek more active occupation, and removed to the county of Huntingdon, where he engaged in the manufacture of iron.

The Messrs. Dorsey then owned that magnificent estate known as the Barre Forges. Mr. Porter was first employed by them for a year as a clerk, and during the following year was made manager of their works. Having thus acquired an acquaintance with the business, he embarked in it on his own account, in partnership with Edward Patton, on Spruce Creek, but so great was the depression into which all branches of manufactures fell for some years succeeding the War of 1812 that their enterprise was not successful. He continued, however, through life to take a deep interest in all that related to the business.

He was in 1819 elected a member of the Assembly from Huntingdon County, and was returned for the following year, having as a colleague John Scott, father of the present senator of the United States.

On retiring from the Legislature he was appointed by the Governor prothonotary and clerk of the several courts of Huntingdon County, and to these were afterwards added the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills. There was then little business in these offices, and the pecuniary returns were meagre. He had in 1820 married Josephine, daughter of William McDermott, who had emigrated from Scotland for the purpose of manufacturing steel by a new process, and who was one of the pioneers in that art.

In 1836 he was elected a member of the State Senate from the district then composed of the counties of Huntingdon, Mifflin, Juniata, Perry, and Union. The soundness of his judgment and the readiness of his understanding made him an acknowledged leader.

In 1838, Mr. Porter was elected Governor of Pennsylvania, and in 1841 was re-elected by a majority almost four times as great as that given at his first election. His inauguration as Governor occurred on the 15th of January, 1839.

Governor Porter took much interest in the success of the system of common schools, then in its infancy, and having appointed Francis R. Shunk superintendent, devoted with him much time in resolving the numerous and difficult questions which then came up from the county officers for decision.

His efforts to sustain the credit of the State and to secure the payment of interest on the public debt drew upon him national attention, and were frequently noticed in Europe, where many of the obligations of the State were held. By his recommendation the act of 1840 was passed, requiring the interest on the State debt to be paid in specie or its equivalent. One of his last acts as Governor was the suppression of the riots which occurred in Philadelphia in 1844, and the courage and decision displayed on his taking command of the military in person were generally commended and long remembered by men of all parties. Both branches of the City Council, then opposed to his administration, honored him with an expression of their thanks, and a resolution unanimously passed by those bodies was presented to him in person, accompanied with an address by the mayor of the city.

Having completed, in 1845, the longest term as Governor allowed by the new Constitution, he retired from public life and returned to his favorite pursuit of making iron. The adaptation of anthracite coal to the manufacture of this metal was then almost unknown, and having given much reflection to the subject and made many practical experiments, he erected at Harrisburg, at a large cost, the first anthracite furnace built in that portion of the State.

He was for many years the friend of the late President Buchanan, and the correspondence which they maintained for a long period shows how frequently that statesman consulted him on questions of national interest and how greatly he relied upon his judgment. There was another public man with whom his intimacy was even closer, Gen. Sam Houston, of Texas, whose career as a military commander, an executive officer, and effective orator is yet fresh in the public recollection, to whom he made a visit just on the eve of the Rebellion.

Governor Porter returned to his home in Harrisburg, and contributed his influence to sustain the government in the fierce conflict which had commenced. He scouted the doctrine of secession. To encourage others he shouldered his musket at the age of more than seventy years, and with the young men of the town joined in military drill. He rejoiced greatly over the success of the Union arms.

During the winter of 1867, while attending at night a meeting of his church, he contracted a severe cold. While others regarded the attack as light, he believed that it would prove fatal, and began to prepare for the approaching change. During the succeeding summer he was able to walk out, but in the beginning of August his strength declined. With great composure and even cheerfulness he arranged several matters of business, and conversed calmly of his approaching end. On the 6th of August, surrounded by several children and a devoted wife, his hands having been folded on his breast, he thanked those about him for their kindness and dutifulness, and composed himself as if to fall asleep. As one and another passage of Scripture was repeated he expressed his assent, until the pulse became still and the aged heart ceased to beat. He had passed away as gently as a child falls to sleep in its mother's arms. The public business was, at the request of the Governor of the commonwealth, generally suspended. Large numbers of citizens came from every section of the State to pay to his memory the last sad tribute of their respect.

STACY POTTS.

Thomas Potts, the ancestor of Stacy Potts, was a Quaker who emigrated from England with his wife and children, in company with Mahlon Stacy and his family, in the ship "Shield," and landed at Burlington, N. J., in the winter of 1678, she being the first ship that went so far up the Delaware. Stacy was a leading man in the Society of Friends and in the government of West Jersey.

At Trenton, in 1731, Stacy Potts was born. He received a good education, and learned the trade of a tanner, a business which he successfully carried on at least up to the time of the Revolution.

Mr. Potts seems to have been a very enterprising and public-spirited citizen. In 1776, besides owning a tannery, he built the steel-works on Front Street, Trenton, and after the close of the Revolution was largely interested in the erection of a paper-mill in the same locality. This was prior to the publication of Collins' Bible. In December, 1788, it was advertised by its proprietors, Stacy Potts and John Reynolds, as "now nearly completed."

Mr. Potts took a warm interest in the invention of John Fitch, and was one of the company formed to assist that famous inventor in his experiments, and he, with others, were instrumental in obtaining for Fitch fourteen years' exclusive privilege on the Jersey side of the Delaware.

About this period Stacy Potts came to Harrisburg. It is difficult to divine what were his motives in leaving his native town where he was very popular, and with his ample competency remove to this then new town on the Susquehanna. His second marriage may perchance have had somewhat to do with his removal from Trenton. Coming to Harrisburg he made large purchases of land, and whether it was due to this fact or his agreeable manner, Stacy Potts became quite prominent, was chosen to the Legislature in 1791 and in 1792. During the mill-dam troubles of 1793-95, Mr. Potts was quite active, and was one of the committee of citizens who were willing to take upon themselves all responsibility accruing by the destruction of the obnoxious dam. He served as burgess of the borough, and was a member of the Town Council. From 1799 to 1803 he again represented Dauphin County in the Legislature.

Mr. Potts' sudden departure from Harrisburg is really as inexplicable as his coming to it. He seems to have gone to Trenton about 1805.

Stacy Potts subsequently became mayor of Trenton, an office he held for several years. He died in that city April 28, 1816, in his eighty-fifth year.

Mr. Potts was thrice married. We have no knowledge as to his first wife. He married, about 1790, Miss Gardiner, of Philadelphia, a Presbyterian lady of superior intelligence. She died at Harrisburg in 1799. His third wife was Mrs. Mary Boyd, widow of John Boyd, of Harrisburg. She survived her husband many years; died at Harrisburg Sept. 25, 1844, aged eighty-four years. Mrs. Boyd was the daughter of George Williams, and had by her first husband James Rutherford and George Williams Boyd, the ancestors of the Boyd family of Harrisburg. Mr. Potts had issue by his first and second wife. Stacy, Jr., who married Polly, daughter of Leonard Sommers, of Harrisburg, was a lawyer of ability, and died at Philadelphia in 1831, aged fifty-three years; Rebecca, married George Sherman, editor of the Trenton Federalist; Anna, married William Potts, of Trenton; Stacy Gardiner, born at Harrisburg in November, 1799, became one of the justices of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, a position he held some years. He was a gentleman of prominence in public and private life, and died at Trenton in 1865.

JAMES PH. PUGLIA.

James Ph. Puglia came to Harrisburg about the beginning of this century as a physician and druggist, his place of business was on Front above Chestnut Street. He was probably of Spanish descent, and evidently of good education. He was master of Perseverance Lodge, A. Y. M., in the course of his residence; was of a pugnacious temper, being involved in a series of disputes with his lodge; a great Jeffersonian, in which cause his caustic pen overflowed with adjectives; venting himself at last in publishing an opposition to the Oracle of Dauphin, under the fiery title of The Phoenix of Harrisburg; the first, perhaps the only, issue was of Wednesday, Oct. 26, 1803; its motto,—

"I die to be born, my body and name
From ashes arisen shall revive in fame."

"Press work by Thomas Atkinson, printer." He also was author of two or three works, of no great circulation. After residing here some years, we find him "sworn interpreter" to the courts in Philadelphia, from 1812 to 1816, after which he passes beyond our present research.

THOMAS RAMSEY.

Thomas Ramsey was born near York, Pa., on the 15th of June, 1784. With a limited education acquired during his early years, he learned the trade of blacksmithing, at that period an important occupation. About 1806 he located at Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., and there carried on business. In 1814 he was a corporal of Capt. Moorhead's company of the First Regiment, Col. Kennedy, which marched to the defense of Baltimore. Mr. Ramsey died at Hummelstown on the 4th of May, 1826, at the age of forty-two years. He married Elizabeth Kelker, daughter of Henry Kelker and Elizabeth Greenawalt, of Lebanon, born Sept. 8, 1791, and died at Harrisburg 5th of February, 1858. Hon. Alexander Ramsey, former Secretary of War, is their son. Mr. Ramsey was an industrious, enterprising citizen, patriotic, generous, and held in great esteem by his fellow-citizens.

CHARLES C. RAWN.

Charles Coatesworth Rawn, the son of David Rawn and Elizabeth Cheyney, was born in the city of Washington in 1801. His grandparents, Caspar and Barbara Rahn (as the name was originally spelled), were natives of Germany, one of whose daughters, Elizabeth, was the mother of Governor Francis R. Shunk. Mr. Rawn's father dying when Charles was seven years of age, at Staunton, Va., his mother removed her family to her farm in Thornbury, Delaware Co., Pa. He was educated at the West Chester Academy, then in charge of that distinguished principal, Mr. Gause. In 1826 he came to Harrisburg and began the study of law with Francis R. Shunk, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Jan. 18, 1831. He at once commenced his career as a successful pleader, and up to the time of his death was considered one of the leading criminal lawyers at the Dauphin County bar. He was an earnest antagonist of human slavery, and during the days of the Fugitive Slave law was the eloquent pleader in behalf of the poor black. He died at Harrisburg on the 18th of December, 1865. Mr. Rawn married Frances, daughter of Joseph Clendennin and Elizabeth Slough, of Harrisburg, who survives.

THOMAS J. REHRER.

Thomas Jefferson Rehrer, only son of Godfried Rehrer and Eva Leiss, was born Nov. 8, 1797, near Rehrersburg, Berks Co., Pa. His grandfather Godfried Rehrer or Röher settled there at an early day. During the French and Indian war his residence was on the direct road to the frontier settlements. He married Magdalena Etchberger, and their son, Godfried Rehrer, born in 1769, represented Berks County in the Legislature in 1817, 1820, and 1823. Thomas J. received a good education, was brought up to a mercantile life, but subsequently retired to his farm. While engaged in farming he was elected a member of the Legislature, in which he served two terms. At the close of the last session he removed to Harrisburg, having accepted a clerkship in the land-office of the commonwealth. He remained in that department, with the exception of two intervals of three years each, until 1866, filling the position of deputy or chief clerk under the several organizations of the office. His long service there made him unusually familiar with the business, and its bearing on the land interest of the State, together with his faithful attention to the duties, was appreciated and recognized by all who had business to transact in the surveyor-general's office. He died Feb. 28, 1872, at Philadelphia. Mr. Rehrer married Salome Weiser, daughter of John Weiser and Elizabeth Anspach, born Jan. 8, 1799, on the Conrad Weiser farm, about twelve miles west of Reading. She died Oct. 30, 1842, at Harrisburg, and is there buried. Their children were: Clementine M., Clara S. (married Dr. George Dock, of Harrisburg), Miranda E. (married Lewis G. Osbourn, of Philadelphia), and Erasmus Godfrey.

LUTHER REILY, M.D.

Luther Reily, the seventh son of Capt. John Reily of the Revolution and Elizabeth Myers, was born Oct. 7, 1794, at Myerstown, Dauphin (now Lebanon) Co., Pa. On the death of his father he came to Harrisburg, and shortly after began the study of medicine with Dr. Martin Luther. In the War of 1812-14, he marched as a private in Capt. Richard M. Crain's company of volunteers to Baltimore, subsequently being detailed as assistant surgeon. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of medicine at Harrisburg, and subsequently was at the head of the profession there. Although not taking an active part in politics, he was more or less prominent in public affairs. He was elected to and served as member of the Twenty-fifth Congress. Dr. Reily died at Harrisburg on the 20th of February, 1854, deeply lamented by the community, who appreciated him as "the good doctor." His wife Rebecca, daughter of Henry Orth, survived her husband only a few months. Their children were Elizabeth (died unmarried), Emily (married Dr. George W. Porter), John W., Dr. George W., and Caroline.

REV. JOHN ROAN.

John Roan was born in Greenshaw, Ireland, on the 30th of April, 1717 (O. S.). He was brought up as a weaver, but began to study for the ministry early in life, and emigrated to Pennsylvania, sailing from Ireland on the 6th of July, 1739, landing the 3d of September following. He entered the "Log College," and taught school on the Neshaminy and in Chester County while pursuing his theological studies. He was licensed by the "New Side" Presbytery of New Castle, June 27, 1744. The following year (1745) he was settled over the united congregations of Derry, Paxtang, and Conewago, the latter having one-fifth of his time, and was ordained on the 16th of August, that year. The minutes of the Synod placed Roan in Donegal Presbytery, and "points of difficulty," says Webster, "continually arose." Towards the latter days of his ministry Mr. Roan missionated frequently on the south branch of the Potomac. He died on the 3d of October, 1775, and is interred at Derry Church graveyard. On his tombstone is this inscription:

"Beneath this stone | are deposited the Remains | of an able, faithful | courageous & successful | minister of Jesus Christ | The Rev'd John Roan | Pastor of Paxton, Derry & Mount Joy | Congregations | from the year 1745 | till Oct. 3, 1775 | when he exchanged | a Militant for a triumphant Life | in the 59th year of his Age."

The Rev. John Roan married Ann, daughter of James Cochran and Ann Rowan, of Chester County, born in 1722. She died on the 22d of April, 1788, in Upper Octorara, Chester Co.

EDMUND W. ROBERTS, M.D.

Edmund Wilson Roberts, youngest son of John Roberts, was born about 1806, at Washington, Pa. He was a graduate of Yale College. His brother, Dr. James Roberts, born in 1780, at Washington, first located at Harrisburg, subsequently removing to Peoria, Ill., where he died about 1834. While at Harrisburg, his younger brother, Edmund W., came there and studied medicine under his care, subsequently graduating from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. He afterwards located at Harrisburg, and entered upon a successful career in the practice of his profession. He died at Harrisburg, Nov. 10, 1865, at the age of fifty-eight years. Dr. Roberts married Caroline Ross, daughter of Andrew Ross and Hannah Templin, of Washington City, and a sister of Robert J. Ross, of Harrisburg; she died Jan. 23, 1877, at Newburg, N. Y.; buried at Harrisburg. They had two children, Mary, died in 1867, at Harrisburg, married Rev. B. B. Leacock, D.D., of the Episcopal Church; Dr. Robert Ross, died April 4, 1875, at Harrisburg, at the age of thirty-seven, who rose to eminence in his profession, married — Foote, daughter of Judge Foote, of the State of New York, and they left two children.

COL. JOHN ROBERTS.

John Roberts was born in Roberts' Valley, Dauphin Co., in the year 1789. He received a good English education, and studied law under Thomas Elder, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at February term, 1812, and commenced the practice of his profession at Harrisburg. He was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, serving during the sessions of 1827 to 1829, and was prothonotary and clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions from Jan. 29, 1830, to Dec. 30, 1835. Mr. Roberts possessed an inexhaustible fund of legal and other information, but never excelled at the bar; his reputation was that of an elementary lawyer and a safe professional counselor. He was one of the best mathematicians in the country, and a skilled engineer. For many years he was the surveyor for the borough. He was a good musician, and his knowledge of pomology and botany was extensive. His life was a long and useful one. He died at Harrisburg in the month of February, 1873, aged eighty-three years.

REV. JOSEPH ROSS.

Joseph Ross, son of Dr. Joseph and Sophia Ross, was born July 14, 1798, at Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., Pa., where his boyhood was passed. At a proper age he went to Harrisburg to learn the mercantile business. Afterwards he engaged in said occupation in that place, and then moved to Middletown, where he continued keeping store till near the close of his life. In the year 1824 he became acquainted with Rev. John Winebrenner, who visited Middletown to preach the gospel, and under him became converted. At the first opportunity he identified himself with the Church of God, being one of the original members of that denomination at Middletown, where he continued to be one of its most active workers until his death. His name appears as a ruling elder in the journal of the Fourth Annual Eldership, held at Middletown, Dec. 25, 1833. He was licensed to preach at the Seventh Annual Eldership which convened at Churchtown, Cumberland Co., Nov. 5, 1836. At the time of his death, on the 26th of January, 1863, at Middletown, he was a member of the Board of Publication, and treasurer of the General Eldership, as well as treasurer of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. He traveled and labored in the ministry, at protracted and other meetings, "without money and without price," and was an eminently successful revival preacher. His liberality and benevolence were well known at home, and in all the churches. His warmth of heart and affection made him beloved by all his acquaintances. He was a strict disciplinarian, and a great lover of order. Besides, he carried his religion into his business, being scrupulously truthful and honest in all his dealings, loving justice and hating sin in every form. He was devotedly attached to the doctrines of the Church of God, fearlessly defended them, and worked actively to establish them.

ROBERT J. ROSS.

Robert James Ross, son of Andrew Ross, a native of Londonderry, Ireland, who came to America about 1800, and his wife, Hannah Templin, of Chester County, Pa., was born at Georgetown, D. C., in 1807. He received a good English and classical education, and was appointed by President John Quincy Adams midshipman in the United States navy, August, 1826, and subsequently promoted for meritorious conduct and services. Shortly after his marriage he resigned, and was appointed teller in the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania, at Harrisburg, then under the cashiership of James Lesley. In 1839 he was tendered the position of cashier in the Harrisburg Savings Institution, which he accepted, and when this corporation became the Dauphin Deposit Bank he remained its cashier until his death. Mr. Ross died at Harrisburg the 6th of October, 1861. He was enterprising and successful in business, and stood high in financial circles. He married, in 1833, Mary E., daughter of Jacob M. Haldeman and Eliza Ewing Jacobs, who died at Harrisburg in 1873, aged fifty-nine years. They had children,—Jacob H. (d. s. p.), Andrew, Jacob Haldeman, Eliza, Hannah (married Col. Reno, United States army), Roberta (married J. Wilson Orth), and Robert. Of these, Andrew, residing in York County, Pa., is the sole survivor.

REV. JACOB ROOP.

Jacob Roop, son of Jacob Roop, Sr., was born March 1, 1782, in Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father settled in the township during the war of the Revolution. The son received the meagre education given by the Mennonites to their children, which extended only to the elementary branches. His early life and the greater portion of his manhood were passed on the farm and in the blacksmith-shop, which latter he carried on forty years. In his thirty-third year he entered the ministry of the United Brethren in Christ, and the first twenty-three years of his ministerial life were spent at various points in Ohio, Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. During these years he was the active and zealous co-laborer with Otterbein, Behm, Getting, Newcomer, Neidig, Erb, and other fathers of that denomination. In his fifty-sixth year he commenced for the first time to travel a circuit, and traveled as an active itinerant seventeen years, when meeting with a severe injury, the remainder of his life he was an invalid. He died in Lower Swatara township on the 2d of December, 1875, aged ninety-three years. Mr. Roop was thrice married (his first wife being Fanny Witmer), all of whom he survived.

LEVI RUTHERFORD, M.D.

Levi Rutherford, the eldest son of John Rutherford and Jane Meader, was born in Paxtang in the year 1826. After the death of his father, in 1832, he was taken by his uncle, William Rutherford, in whose family he remained until he attained his majority. He received a liberal education, and read medicine under Dr. W. W. Rutherford, of Harrisburg, graduating at the University of Pennsylvania in March, 1849. He at once began the practice of medicine at New Cumberland, which promised bright, but his health failing, he was compelled to relinquish the duties of his profession. He returned home, and undertook the superintendence of the farm, hoping thereby to re-establish his health. This proved futile, for he gradually failed, and he died at Harrisburg on the 8th of February, 1851. Intelligent, amiable, and upright, Dr. Levi Rutherford's young life left a rose-tinted memory in many households.

COL. WILLIAM RUTHERFORD.

William Rutherford, the youngest son of Capt. John Rutherford, of the Revolution, and Margaret Park, was born in Paxtang, Aug. 4, 1776. He received a fair education, and was brought up as a farmer. Born amid the thunders of the Revolution, he inherited the military spirit of his father, and became quite prominent as an officer, serving in all the grades from a lieutenant up to that of a commission of colonel, which office he declined. In 1816 he was elected a director of the poor, and served as a member of the House of Representatives from 1819 to 1821, and again from 1829 to 1831. Col. Rutherford was one of the most influential men of his day in the county of Dauphin, and a representative man thereof. He died at his residence, near Harrisburg, on the 17th of January, 1850, in his seventy-fourth year. Col. Rutherford married, March 17, 1801, Sarah Swan, daughter of William Swan, who died June 18, 1852, aged seventy-three years. They are both buried in old Paxtang Church graveyard.

SIMON SALLADE.

Simon Sallade was born near Gratz, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 7th of March, 1785. His father, John Sallade, of French Huguenot descent, was a native of Bosel on the Rhine, born in March, 1739, emigrated, with other members of his family, to America at an early period, and was among the first settlers on the Wiconisco. He died at the age of eighty-eight years, in November, 1827, being blind about ten years before his death. He married, on the 8th of February, 1771, Margaret Everhart, daughter of George Everhart, born in Berks County in 1747, and concerning whom we have the following incident: Upon the Indian incursions on the east side of the Susquehanna, subsequent to the defeat of Braddock, in the fall of 1755, she was taken captive by the savage ma-raiders, near what is now Pine Grove, Schuylkill Co. She was an unwilling witness to the scenes of murder and atrocity, when the merciless Indians tomahawked and scalped her parents, brothers, and sisters, and beheld the home of her birth illuminating by its red glare the midnight sky, while only she of all her friends was left,—and she a prisoner with the cruel and bloodthirsty savage. Doubtless, there was some attractiveness of person or piteousness of appeal which saved her life. Of the wearisome years of her captivity among the Indians west of the Ohio we have little knowledge. It was not, however, until the power of the French on the "Beautiful River" was broken by the courage and skill of Gen. Forbes that the little prisoner was rescued and returned to her friends in Berks County. She lived to a ripe old age. John Sallade had five sons and two daughters, Simon being next to the youngest. Simon Sallade, owing to the want of schools in those early days in the valley, was obliged to depend upon the educational instruction given by his parents, but being an apt scholar, it was not long before he mastered the main branches in a good education. He was a great reader, and, although books were few in those days, he read and re-read those falling into his hands. Later in life, towards manhood's years, he acquired considerable knowledge by the aid of a teacher, whom he and some young men of his neighborhood employed for that purpose. He was quite a performer on the violin, and being of a social nature, he was often the centre and life of the many winter-evening gatherings of that time.

Mr. Sallade was a millwright by trade, acquiring much of his proficiency in that vocation from an apprenticeship to Jacob Berkstresser, of Bellefonte. Many of the old mills within thirty or forty miles of his home were of his designing, and in fact the workmanship of his hands. A self-made man, energetic, social, and industrious, he became in time one of the most popular men of the Upper End.

His constant contact with the people of all classes in social life or business relations resulted in his taking a warm interest in political affairs. Although a politician, he was such for the advancement of the public good. He was a Democrat of the old school, and when named for office, he appealed to the people instead of party for support. He was four times elected to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives. First, in the years 1819 and 1820, at the age of thirty-four years; next, in 1836-37, at the age of fifty-one years; and again, in 1853, when he was in his sixty-ninth year. Each time the Whigs were largely in the majority in Dauphin County, yet always when put in nomination by the Democratic party, Mr. Sallade, save in one instance, was elected. This defeat was due in part to a letter written at the time to Charles C. Rawn, Esq., chairman of the temperance committee, in which he announced his opposition to the passage of the Maine liquor law.

During his term in the Legislature he was the author of what was generally known as "Wiconisco Feeder Bill." To his zeal and tact that important legislation for the "Upper End" of Dauphin County owes its passage. Through this outlet the Lykens Valley coal-fields were first developed. He was the superintendent for the construction of the Wiconisco Canal, and held the appointment through the canal commissioners.

Simon Sallade died at the old homestead, near Elizabethville, on the 8th of November, 1854, and is interred in the village graveyard at that place. His wife was Jane Woodside, daughter of John Woodside, of Lykens Valley. She died Sept. 3, 1854, and is buried in the same graveyard.

JAMES SAVAGE.

James Savage was born in North Wales, Feb. 25, 1823, and died in Cimmaron, New Mexico, Nov. 10, 1881, where he was superintending a mine for his brother, Col. E. G. Savage. He emigrated to America with his parents, who settled in Minersville, where he learned the trade of a machinist. In 1849 he came to Wiconisco to put up the engine for the Lykens Valley breaker, which he ran a year, and then went to California. There he stayed two years, and returned in 1852, and accepted a position under the Short Mountain Coal Company. He hoisted the first car of coal ever taken out of the Wiconisco mines. In 1855 or 1856 he became superintendent of the Lykens Coal Company, under George E. Hoffman. In 1861 he went to California again, where he remained until 1865, when he returned and located at Gilberton, Schuylkill Co., in charge of the Gilberton Coal Company. In 1867, with Col. E. G. Savage and Benjamin Kaufman, under the firm-name of Savage, Brother & Kaufman, he leased a tract of coal land of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, developed what is now known as "Brookside Colliery," and established the operation as a successful one. Then they sold it to George S. Repplier & Co. He was subsequently its superintendent, and afterwards in various enterprises in Tremont for ten years. He may justly be regarded as the pioneer of the Wiconisco coal-mines.

MAJOR OLIVER W. SEES.

Oliver Washington Sees was born in the city of Philadelphia, on the 27th of October, 1835. He was the second son of David Sees and Ann Fell Edwards. His parents had removed from Harrisburg to Philadelphia in 1832, but returned to their old home on the first day of January, 1839. Oliver Sees did not have the advantages of a liberal education. When quite young, about twelve years of age, he became a messenger-boy in the first magnetic telegraph-office that was opened in Harrisburg after the wonderful discovery by Professor Morse, the office being under the management of David Brooks. The latter became very much interested in his bright-eyed, youthful messenger, and under his special care and teaching Oliver rapidly developed into an operator, and finally became one of the most expert and accomplished in the business. He was one of the first to learn to read messages by sound. His interest was so great in the success of the laying of the Atlantic cable that when the news reached Harrisburg of its final accomplishment, he was chiefly instrumental in getting up a very enthusiastic demonstration to celebrate that event. Mr. Sees' knowledge and special fitness in his business were so marked that on the 23d day of December, 1861, Governor Curtin appointed him chief of telegraph, with the rank of major, and shortly afterwards added that of chief of transportation, two very important positions during the war. The duties of these combined offices he discharged with signal ability and entire satisfaction. In connection with this arduous work the general government intrusted Maj. Sees with the key to the secret service cipher, used in the transmission of the most vital and important messages by the general government, in relation to matters at that critical period, and which could only be deciphered through a knowledge of this key. About this period he was appointed by Maj.-Gen. D. N. Couch, who was directing military operations at this point, on his staff, and mustered into the United States service. Immediately after the battle of Gettysburg, Governor Curtin ordered Maj. Sees to the battle-field to assist in caring for the dead and wounded Pennsylvania soldiers who fell on that memorable occasion, a duty he performed well. On his way back to Harrisburg he was taken very sick at Carlisle, and died in this city on the 30th day of September, 1863, before he was twenty-eight.

The following is an extract from the report of Col. M. S. Quay to Governor Andrew G. Curtin. Col. Quay was the successor of Maj. Sees as chief of transportation:

"The invasion of the State, in June, 1863, by the army of Gen. Lee, and your call for the militia forces which immediately followed, occasioned a large influx of business of pressing importance, which occupied the chief of the department, Maj. Sees, and his clerical force for weeks.

"The United States having assumed the payment of the expenses of the transportation of the militia, Maj. Sees was placed temporarily in their service, and assigned a position on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Couch, commanding the Department of the Susquehanna. He was relieved by Gen. Couch, at his own request, and was immediately afterwards ordered to Gettysburg by you to look after our dead and wounded.

"The extraordinary labors he found necessary during this period, extending at times through successive days and nights, with the exposure and fatigue sustained at Gettysburg, undoubtedly produced the illness through which your administration lost a faithful and competent officer, and his family a husband and father who was their only support."

Maj. Sees was married to Caroline, daughter of Charles Buehler and Sarah Hoover, at Harrisburg, on the 22d day of September, 1857; the widow and one daughter, Caroline, survive him. *

CAPT. WILLIAM E. SEES.

William Edwards Sees was born in Harrisburg, Feb. 3, 1832. He was the oldest son of David Sees and Ann Fell Edwards. His education was received in the common schools of his native place, and early in life commenced to learn the business of coach-trimming with his father, who was a skilled workman, and became in time a good mechanic. He was a member and an officer of the old Friendship Fire Company, of Harrisburg, noted for his efficiency and daring, and twice came very near losing his life in endeavoring to save the property of others, once at a fire in the United States Hotel and again at the cotton-factory.

When the war for the Union broke out, he enlisted as a private in the three months' service. In 1862 he was commissioned captain in the new Eleventh Pennsylvania, three years' service, but his health failing him, he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability.

On the 19th of April, 1855, he married Mary Catharine Kunkel, of the city of Baltimore, Md. She died on the 27th of February, 1856, leaving one son, David Sees. On the 13th of September, 1857, he married Mary Elizabeth Chandler, daughter of Jonathan Chandler and Julia Ann Mowrer.

Capt. Sees died Oct. 5, 1865, of consumption, contracted in the army, leaving one daughter by the second marriage, Catharine. The Rev. Charles A. Hay, D.D., pastor of Zion's Lutheran Church, published a memoir of Capt. Sees, detailing his religious life and experience, which is quite interesting.

CHRISTIAN SEILER, M.D.

Dr. Christian Seiler, the second son of Christian Seiler and Elizabeth Wolfarth, was born Nov. 24, 1804, in South Hanover township, within a few miles of Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received the rudiments of education, principally German, at the village school in Hummelstown, the English language at that date being spoken by few families of the neighborhood. His father removing to Harrisburg in 1821, the son was sent to the Harrisburg Academy, while that institution was under the care of Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Todd. He was of an inquiring turn of mind, an attentive student, and received not only a good English education, but acquired a knowledge of Latin and Greek. At an early day he had a predilection for military life, and in the year 1823 was elected captain of a juvenile infantry company in Harrisburg. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Cornelius Luther, a young physician of great promise, who died at Harrisburg in 1827, afterwards completing his studies with Dr. Samuel Agnew. He then attended the lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he graduated in March, 1828. Shortly after he commenced the practice of his profession at Halifax and vicinity, where his knowledge of the German language gave him great advantage. His practice extended through Upper Paxtang and Mifflin townships, in fact through all that section of country lying west of Peter's Mountain. He was succeeding well; but having married about this time, he concluded to remove to Williamsport, and for a while abandoned his profession for the mercantile business. The former had more charms for him, and after practicing a year or two at Williamsport he returned to Harrisburg, where he soon secured an extensive practice, which he retained until his death. In 1844 he was elected brigadier-general of the militia, after which he was more familiarly addressed. At the outset of the war with Mexico he offered his services, and was within a few votes of obtaining the command of a regiment of volunteers.

In politics, Dr. Seiler was a Democrat, and was several times nominated for the Legislature, and thrice for Congress, but although his party was in a hopeless minority, it was only through strenuous exertions that he was defeated. For nearly a quarter of a century he served as a director of the public schools of the borough of Harrisburg, and took a warm interest in educational matters. Up to about 1859, Dr. Seiler enjoyed excellent health, but at that time symptoms of disease of the heart manifested themselves, and he was obliged to forego much of the fatigue incident to his large country practice, in the which he was greatly relieved by his son, Robert H., who had studied medicine under his father, and graduated at Jefferson College in 1860. He was a man of uncommon endurance, and too frequently he yielded to the request of his patients. In February, 1873, after a long ride in the country, where he was detained longer than perhaps prudent, he was seized with a chill, and pneumonia developed itself. From this attack he never recovered, dying on the 11th of February, 1873, at the age of sixty-nine. Dr. Seiler married, on the 26th of March, 1833, Mary Hayes, daughter of William Hayes, Esq., of Lewisburg, Pa. She survived her husband only five years, dying at Harrisburg, in 1878. They had two children who reached maturity,—Dr. Robert H., who died in 1876, and Frank S., died Dec. 20, 1879.

JEREMIAH SEILER, M.D.

Jeremiah Seiler, son of Jacob Seiler and Christiana Fireoed, was born June 27, 1818, in Middlesex township, Cumberland Co., Pa. His early education was that received in the public schools of the country, but he applied himself closely to study and soon fitted himself for entering upon his life-work. He entered the office of Dr. Van Huff, of Mechanicsburg, and subsequently that of Dr. W. W. Dale, under whose instructions he pursued the course of study outlined as preparatory to his attending medical lectures, which he did at the University of Maryland, from which institution he graduated in March, 1843. He immediately began the practice of his profession, locating in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., where he continued until the year 1866, when he removed to Harrisburg. He was the first in his profession to administer chloroform in the practice of surgery west of Philadelphia. He was also one of the first of the interior physicians who in 1850, when typhoid fever made its appearance in the rural sections, to comprehend its nature and successfully control its fatal effects. He was elected to the Legislature as a member of the House from Dauphin County in 1866, serving for two years. The characteristics which were peculiar to the man as a physician marked his action as a legislator. He was studious and deliberate in all that he did and said, with a natural frankness and unaffected modesty which never fail as manifestations in the character of a truly honest man. While a member he served on the Committees of Divorce, Accounts, Passenger Railways, and Chairman of that of the State Library. With the close of the last session of his official position he resumed his professional duties, and was actively engaged therein at Harrisburg, where he died after a brief illness on the 16th of November, 1878, at the age of sixty years. Dr. Seiler married, March 19, 1842, Anna Elizabeth Stigleman, daughter of John and Rachel Stigleman, of Cumberland County, and their children were Rev. Galen W., missionary in India; Dr. John P., one of the consulting physicians to the City Hospital, Harrisburg; and Clara A.

WILLIAM SHAMMO.

William Shammo, son of John Shammo (1784-1868) and Sarah Reinoehl (1786-1870), was born March 13, 1819, at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received the limited education afforded by the village school during the winter months, and from his early years assisted his father, who was a merchant, thereby making himself thoroughly familiar with mercantile transactions. He was engaged in business many years at Halifax, and was successful in a marked degree. He was accepted as a safe counselor and sure guide in financial matters, and from the time of its organization, in 1870, was cashier of the Halifax Bank. He served as a member of the Borough Council and other positions of trust. He died at Halifax, Feb. 14, 1883, aged almost sixty-four years. As another has justly said, "He was a man of unimpeachable integrity, honest, of generous impulses, high-minded, and honorable;" he was in very fact a valuable citizen, and highly esteemed in the community in which he lived. Mr. Shammo married, Dec. 29, 1856, Catharine R. Beam, daughter of John and Mary Beam, of Halifax, and their children were Estelle, Byron A., Minnie L., Carrie M., Rosabelle, Myra A. (d. s. p.), and Bertha A.

MICHAEL SHEAFER.

Michael Sheaffer, son of George Sheaffer, was born Dec. 1, 1803, at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. For some years he resided in Harrisburg, and when quite a young man he married Susan Cloud, of Lancaster County, and made his home in that county a few years. They had issue: Adaline (married Rev. C. A. Wyeth), Henry J., John M. (a civil engineer, who died at Selena, Alabama, Aug. 11, 1871), Mary L. (married Theodore D. Irish), Harriet Matilda (married Joseph Davidson), Lucetta (died June 9, 1837), Anne Eliza (married John Thompson), George T. (died Nov. 4, 1867, at Ashland), and Benjamin Ingersoll. In 1831-32, the Lykens Valley Coal Company was organized, and commenced operations at what was then called "Bear Gap" (now Wiconisco). The company built a large log frame house, and Michael Sheaffer moved into it for the purpose of boarding the workmen and entertaining the members of the company. At that time the Upper End (now Lykens, Wiconisco, and Williamstown) was one vast wilderness, with a few log huts scattered around. He resided in this place up to the date of his death, Nov. 30, 1849, taking an active part in the development of the coal region. He was one of the contractors in the building of the Lykens Valley Railroad, also in the building of the aqueduct and other improvements at the mouth of the Wiconisco Canal feeder. After the first railroad was built from the Gap to Millersburg, he had the contract for the delivery of the coal, floating it across the river to Mount Patrick on the Pennsylvania Canal. His wife, Susan Sheaffer, who was a most estimable Christian woman, died at Harrisburg, Pa., on the 17th February, 1876. The remains of both rest in the cemetery at Harrisburg, Pa.

DANIEL SHEESLEY.

Daniel Sheesley, son of Daniel Sheesley and Mary Elizabeth Reigle, was born Sept. 16, 1815, in Lykens township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His education was quite limited. He came to Harrisburg at the age of twelve, and in its vicinity his life was passed. For many years he was engaged in the milling business, was an auctioneer, and trucker. He served one term as director of the poor, and was one of the directors of schools for Swatara township for a long period. He died at Harrisburg on the 21st of June, 1880, in his sixty-fifth year. He was a very pleasant and agreeable companion, extremely sociable and kind. Mr. Sheesley married, in 1837, Sarah Rissing, daughter of Lewis and Mary Rissing, and their children are William (present sheriff of the county of Dauphin), Mary (married Peter Reel), Sarah, Elizabeth (married John H. Tattnell), Daniel, Louisa (married Joseph E. Rhoads), Samuel, John, George Lewis, Catharine L., and Margaret J.

CAPT. JOSEPH SHERER.

Joseph Sherer, the son of Samuel Sherer, was a native of the north of Ireland, born in 1731. His parents came to America in 1734, locating in Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He was the recipient of an ordinary English education, and brought up as a farmer. During the French and Indian war he served as a non-commissioned officer, doing duty on the then frontiers. At the commencement of the Revolution he commanded a company in Col. Burd's battalion of associators, whose farms adjoined at Tinian, now Highspire. Capt. Sherer was a member of the Lancaster County Committee, and a member of the first Constitutional Convention of the State, which met at Philadelphia July 15, 1776. While in attendance on this body he took ill, returned home, and died on the 1st or 2d of December following. His remains were interred in the burying-ground of Paxtang Church, of which he was a member. He married, Feb. 6, 1759, Mary McClure; had eight children, as follows: Mary, married Samuel Cochran; Samuel, John, Jean, Richard, Joseph, William, and Catharine. Capt. Sherer was a man of influence on the frontiers prior to the Revolution, brave, energetic, and spirited.

JOHN SHOCH.

John Shoch, of German ancestry, was born in the city of Philadelphia on the 27th of March, 1763. In 1792 he located at Harrisburg, engaging in active business pursuits. During the "mill-dam troubles" of 1794-95, Mr. Shoch took a prominent part, and was on the committee to confer with the owners and abate the nuisance. For a long time he was a member of the Town Council, borough supervisor, and at one time burgess. He was director of the poor and county commissioner, serving the usual terms, when he was chosen treasurer of the county, an office he filled acceptably from 1812 to 1815. In 1810 he was appointed by act of the Assembly, with Robert Harris, of Harrisburg, Gen. Adamson Tannehill, William McCandless, of Pittsburgh, and Nathan Beach, of Beach Grove, Luzerne Co., one of the commissioners to survey what was then termed the northern and southern routes from Harrisburg to Pittsburgh, to ascertain the most practicable and preferable one for a turnpike-road. Both routes were duly surveyed with the aid of James Maginnis as surveyor, with Alexander Officer and John C. Bucher as chain-carriers. The commissioners reported in favor of the southern route, but when the Legislature met they thought it best to charter companies enough to turnpike both, and the result was a spirit of improvement by internal communication that gridironed and sandwiched the western part of Pennsylvania, and involved so many enterprising people financially that in 1821, during Governor Hiester's administration, an act of the Legislature called "The Improvement Bill" was enacted for their relief. Mr. Shoch labored hard and successfully for the removal of the seat of government to Harrisburg, for the erection of the bridge over the Susquehanna, the establishment of the Harrisburg Bank, of which he was one of its first directors, and the Harrisburg Academy, being a trustee for many years. Mr. Shoch retired from business about 1825. He died at Harrisburg Tuesday, Aug. 31, 1841. He married, in 1792, Salome Gilbert, of Philadelphia. She died at Harrisburg, Oct. 13, 1828. They are both buried in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Of their children one survives, Col. Samuel Shoch, of Columbia. Mr. Shoch always took a deep interest in the affairs of the town and county, and was highly esteemed by his fellow-citizens as a strictly honest and upright gentleman.

DAVID SHOPE, M.D.

David Shope, son of Jacob Shope and — Hart, was born July 25, 1808, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather, Andrew Schopp (or Shope), emigrated from the Palatinate, Germany, to America, arriving at Philadelphia Oct. 22, 1754, on the ship "Halifax" from Rotterdam. He settled in then Lancaster County, married, and was in service during the French and Indian war, afterwards permanently locating in what is now Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa.; on a tract of land in possession of his great-grandson. He had sons Bernhard, Jacob, and Adam. The first married, removed to Centre County, Pa., where his descendants now reside. Jacob and Adam divided the farm, the former of whom subsequently disposed of his, the latter dying on the old homestead at the age of ninety-one years. Jacob Shope, who lived to the age of eighty-seven, married a Miss Hart, and they had issue, — Abraham, Jacob, Bernhard, David, Barbara, Mary, Elizabeth, and Catharine. David, the subject of our sketch, worked on his father's farm until the age of sixteen, receiving such educational advantages as the country schools then afforded. He was afterwards sent to a select school in Cumberland County, and also that taught by Mr. Cummings at Brown's school-house on the Jonestown road. He taught school several terms, and at the age of nineteen began the study of medicine with Dr. Markley, of Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., and after the latter's death with his successor, Dr. Veasy. In October, 1832, he located in Hummelstown, where he continued in the successful practice of his profession until his decease, which occurred on the 2d of December, 1842, at the age of thirty-four years, and is buried in the Hummelstown Cemetery. Few practitioners stood higher in the confidence and esteem of the community in which he lived than Dr. David Shope. He never married.

GOVERNOR FRANCIS R. SHUNK.

Francis Rawn Shunk, the son of John Shunk and Elizabeth Rawn, was born Aug. 7, 1788, at the Trappe, Montgomery Co., Pa. His father was the son of Francis Shunk, who emigrated to America from the Palatinate, on the Rhine, in Germany, about the year 1715. His mother was the daughter of Casper and Barbara Rawn, also emigrants from the Palatinate. The mother of Francis Rawn Shunk was a woman distinguished for her kindness and affection, and the son ever spoke of her in terms of the most devoted attachment, and cherished her memory with filial piety. Her influence no doubt was greatly felt in the formation of his early character and its subsequent development. His father was a man of strong and stern mind, yet naturally facetious, and fond of indulging in this propensity.

The parents of Francis R. were not able to furnish the means or spare his time to secure in the ordinary way even the rudiments of an education. Much of his childhood and youth was devoted to manual labor. At the early age of fifteen he became a teacher, and soon after the instructor of the school at the village where he was born. From that time until 1812 he seems to have been employed as a teacher during the few months of the year the school continued, and the rest of the time as a laborer in the pursuits of agriculture. The intervals of toil were devoted to the improvement of his mind in every useful branch of study. In 1812 he was selected by Andrew Porter, then surveyor-general under the administration of Governor Snyder, to fill a clerkship in his department. While thus employed he commenced and prosecuted the study of the law with Thomas Elder, of Harrisburg. In 1814 he marched as a private, with many of his fellow-townsmen, to the defense of Baltimore. Soon after he was chosen first assistant, and then the principal clerk of the House of Representatives, and for many years performed with great fidelity the arduous duties of that office. He was subsequently elected secretary of the board of canal commissioners, and served in that capacity during a period when the condition of our public improvements called for the most constant and strenuous efforts on the part of the commissioners, and rendered the situation of their secretary anything but a sinecure. In 1839 he was chosen by Governor Porter Secretary of the Commonwealth. On retiring from that office he removed to Pittsburg, and engaged in the practice of the law. In 1844 he was called from his retirement by the voice of the people of the commonwealth to fill the highest office in their gift. He so conducted his administration as their chief executive that he received from them the highest expression of their confidence and regard by being re-elected with an increased majority, and that too against an opposing candidate of the most estimable character, whose exalted virtues and worth were acknowledged by all.

But he had scarcely entered upon the duties of his second term before he became the victim of a disease which in its early progress excited apprehensions in the minds of his friends that it might prove fatal. The Governor himself, though conscious that his disease was deep-seated, yet seemed to cherish with confidence the hope that the vigor of his constitution and the skill of his physicians would eventually restore him to health. It was not until the morning of the 9th of July, 1848, when a severe and copious hemorrhage from the lungs took place, that he gave up entirely the hope of life and felt that his days were indeed numbered. Upon that day, being Sunday, he wrote his letter of resignation,—the last public act of his life.

GOVERNOR FRANCIS R. SHUNK.

His professional attainments, especially in the more abstract principles of law, were large, and as a counselor he had few superiors. But he shrunk from the personal collision its practice in the courts involved, and retired from the bar to engage in employments and studies more congenial with his taste.

His administration as the chief magistrate of this commonwealth shows that he was no novice in the great and fundamental principles of government. His state papers indicate that he had deeply studied the questions of policy involving the great interests of Pennsylvania and the country at large, that he had looked at their remote as well as immediate consequences, and contemplated their influence on the progress and advancement of the entire community under the fostering care of our free institutions as well as their adaptation to the mere accumulation of gain. The opinions which these papers contain commend themselves to our attention, not only for the candor with which they are expressed, but for the reasons by which they are sustained.

Our common-school system had a deep hold on the affections of his heart. He knew it had many imperfections, particularly as it was carried into operation in some of the rural districts; he knew it was not accomplishing all that was desirable, but he believed it would yet work its way into the confidence of the people, and be itself the most efficient means of curing many of its defects. He rejoiced in the good it had effected, and with a generous enthusiasm exulted in the good it would effect.

We should do signal injustice to the character of Governor Shunk and omit one of the most important elements of his success in life if we did not refer to his moral as well as intellectual culture. He was a sincere, honest, upright man, pure in his private morals, and no less so in his public character. The political principles and policy avowed in his state papers were sincerely entertained. They were not set forth, as some who knew him not and did not agree with him may erroneously suppose, to please the popular taste. He never courted popular favor at the expense of sincerity and truth. The proverbial honesty of Governor Shunk was one principal cause of his popularity, both in public and private life. There were multitudes who did not properly estimate his intellectual worth, who did not adopt many of his political views, or did not belong to his political party, who yet believed him to be an honest, upright man in whom they could confide, and on that account gave him their support.

JAMES F. SHUNK.

James Findlay Shunk, youngest son of Governor Francis R. Shunk, was born April 18, 1836. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy, and at the University of Virginia, at which latter institution he attended a course of lectures on the science of law. Perchance the best education he received, and that which fitted him peculiarly for the profession of journalism, which he adopted, was the literary training he obtained by extensive reading and close study of the best English authors, and by a careful and rigid observance of language and style. He wrote the raciest English that flowed from the pen of any writer for the press in Pennsylvania. His power of sarcasm was immense, though he lacked that of invective. Many of his articles which appeared in print were attributed to some of the most eminent men of the country, and others often obtained the credit which of right belonged to him, so modest, unobtrusive, and even sensitive was he in regard to any publicity of his name as that of the author of the articles alluded to. He died quite young, being not yet thirty-eight years of age, as brilliant a journalist as ever held a pen, with intellect fully ripened, and a wide field before him for the exercise of his peculiar talents. He died at Harrisburg on the 20th of January, 1874. Mr. Shunk married a daughter of Judge Jeremiah S. Black, of York, who, with one child, survived.

DAVID SIMON.

David Simon, son of John Barnard Simon, was born about 1776 in the city of Philadelphia. His father was a native of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, and was an officer in the British provincial service. He came to America prior to the Revolution, and took up his abode in Philadelphia. He was twice married. As to his first wife we have no knowledge; his second wife being Maria Margaret Lochman, a sister of the Rev. John George Lochman, D.D., of the Lutheran Church. David Simon received a good education, and graduated at the College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania. A fine classical scholar, he began teaching as a profession in Philadelphia. Being a good musician, for many years he was the organist of St. Paul's Church, of Philadelphia. He subsequently taught school at Baltimore, Harrisburg, and Easton, at which latter place he died in 1830. Mr. Simon married Elizabeth Ireton, born 1780 near Mount Holly, N. J., died 1853 at Harrisburg, Pa. They had children as follows: Margaret Lochman, married Henry Barton, of Lancaster; John Barnard, of Harrisburg; Washington J., a prominent homœopathic physician of Philadelphia, who died in 1881; James Kemp, of Philadelphia; and Eliza, unmarried, who resides at Lancaster.

COL. SENECA G. SIMMONS.

Seneca G. Simmons was a native of Windsor, Vt., where he was born Dec. 27, 1808. He entered West Point, graduated therefrom in 1834, and was assigned to the Seventh United States Infantry. He served in the Florida and Mexican wars with marked credit, and properly promoted therefor. At the time of the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, Capt. Simmons was at his home in Harrisburg laboring under a severe injury. Upon the organization of the famous Reserve Corps he was chosen colonel of the Fifth Regiment. For his conduct in the autumn campaign of 1861 he was promoted major of the Fourth United States Infantry. During the Peninsular campaign of 1862, under Gen. McClellan, while leading the First Brigade of the Reserves, at Charles City Cross-Roads, June 20th, he fell in the thickest of the fight, breathing his last upon the field of honor. His remains were buried beneath a large tree, but being unmarked were not distinguished among the thousand who sleep their last sleep on the Chickahominy. The loss of Col. Simmons was greatly lamented. He was a gallant and brave officer, and had he been spared he would have done valiant service in the cause of the Union.

REV. ASHBEL GREEN SIMONTON.

Ashbel Green Simonton, youngest son of Dr. William Simonton and Martha Snodgrass, was born Jan. 20, 1833. His classical education began in the Harrisburg Academy, under the tuition of the Rev. Mahlon Long. After two years' preparatory study he entered the College of New Jersey, from which he graduated in 1852, his scholarship and acquirements being of the first rank. In the autumn of the same year he went to the South with his brother James and took charge of an academy for boys in Starkville,

A. G. Simonson

Miss., where he taught with much success for eighteen months. In July, 1854, he returned to Harrisburg and entered upon the study of the law. In the spring of 1855 he decided upon a theological course, and for this purpose prepared himself for entering the theological seminary at Princeton, which he did in September of that year. He was licensed to preach by Carlisle Presbytery, which met at Greencastle on the 14th of April, 1858. He had decided upon a missionary life, and after consultation and application to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, was ordered to Brazil. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Carlisle, at Harrisburg, April 14, 1859, and on the 19th of June following sailed from Baltimore in the merchant ship "Banshee" for Rio Janeiro. He arrived at the latter place on the 12th of August, and at once entered upon his field of labor. In November, 1864, he took the lead in the establishment of the Imprensa Evangelica, a semi-monthly newspaper for the dissemination of religious information among the people of Brazil. Although the demands made upon him of an editorial character were severe, in addition to preaching thrice per week in Portuguese and generally once in English—the latter to the English Americans living at Rio—yet they were met con amore. Having acquired facility in the use of the language, he composed with great ease and pleasure to himself. Educated Brazilians acknowledged their surprise at the elegance and force with which he wrote in their native tongue, and his leading articles in the Imprensa were characterized by great ability, clearness, and comprehension of the subjects treated. The paper continued to be with him a favorite means of spreading the truth among the native population of Brazil. In the spring of 1862 he returned to the United States, married Helen Murdock, daughter of William Murdock, of Baltimore, Md., on the 19th of March, 1863, and sailed for Brazil May 23, 1863, reaching the harbor of Rio on the 16th of July. His wife died after a short illness on the 28th of July, 1864, which to a missionary in a foreign land was an incalculable loss. It was indeed a severe affliction. But there was a duty to perform, and he labored zealously for the Master. Towards the close of March, 1865, he made a missionary tour into the province of São Paulo, returning to his post in Rio early in May.

The news of Lee's surrender, of the suppression of the Great Rebellion, and of the assassination of President Lincoln, reached that city in quick succession. When there was no longer a doubt that the last-mentioned sad event had occurred, he was requested to preach a sermon to the American residents on the occasion, which was delivered at a special service on May 21, 1865, to the largest assembly of his countrymen ever convened at Rio. The discourse was remarkable for its breadth of view, its philosophical tone, its enlightened and ardent patriotism, and for the force and eloquence with which it sets forth the duty of trust in God under the overwhelming calamity that had fallen upon our beloved country. Near the close of 1865 the Presbytery of Rio de Janeiro was organized at São Paulo, that being the mission station of his brother-in-law, Rev. A. L. Blackford. It was soon perceived that his overtaxed energies had begun to give way under the gradual approaches of the disease which forever ended his earthly activities. Unable to continue his labors, he left Rio for the home of his sister, at São Paulo, the last week in November, 1867. No relief came, and after a brief illness he died on the 9th of December following. He was buried on the same day from the little church of São Paulo, two Englishmen and two Americans officiating as pall-bearers, addresses being made in Portuguese by Rev. Mr. Blackford and Rev. Emanuel Pires, singing the hymn,—

"Fallamos do mundo feliz."
("We speak of the land of the blest.")

A large procession was formed, proceeding to the Protestant cemetery, where "upon a hillside overlooking the city of São Paulo, toward the plain where Brazil's cry of independence was first uttered and still echoes," they laid the faithful missionary to his final resting-place. The Rev. Mr. Simonton possessed a clear, penetrating intellect, a sound and discriminating judgment. His manner in public was quiet, unaffected, dignified, and self-possessed. In the relations of private life he was frank, genial, social, affectionate, and noble-hearted.

WILLIAM SIMONTON, M.D.

William Simonton, the elder, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1755. He was brought to this country at the age of ten by his uncle, the Rev. John Simonton, pastor of the Great Valley Presbyterian Church, in Chester County, Pa. Under the direction of this uncle he received his academic and professional education. Soon after completing his medical course he entered upon the practice of his profession, but at what place is unknown. On the 17th of November, 1777, he was married to Jane Wiggins, daughter of John Wiggins, Sr., of Paxtang, his uncle performing the ceremony. In 1784 he purchased a tract of land called "Antigua," containing one hundred and eighty-two acres, situated in West Hanover township, from Joseph Hutchinson. Upon this farm he resided all his life. Dr. Simonton died on the 24th of April, 1800, at the early age of forty-five. All the traditions that have reached us concerning his standard as a physician, a man, and a Christian, are highly favorable. A fitting testimonial to his life, labors, and character was prepared by the Rev. James Snodgrass, pastor of Hanover Church, and delivered on the occasion of his funeral. His remains, with those of his wife, are interred in old Hanover graveyard.

WILLIAM SIMONTON, M.D.

William Simonton, third son of Dr. William Simonton and Jane Wiggins, was born in West Hanover, Dauphin Co., Pa., in the year 1788. At the death of his father he was only twelve years of age. His early education was received under the direction of his mother, and consisted of the branches usually taught in the country schools of that period. As he was inclined to the medical profession, he studied Latin under the tuition of the Rev. James R. Sharon, pastor of Derry and Paxtang Churches. After the usual preliminary instruction under a private preceptor, he studied medicine with Dr. Meyrick, of Middletown, afterwards attending lectures of the Medical Department, University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, from which he received the degree of M.D. In the distribution of property resulting from his father's death, the farm "Antigua" was equally divided between him and his brother, John W. Simonton. The latter occupied the homestead until his death, in 1824, which occurred a few days previous to the death of his mother. After the erection of the necessary buildings in 1818, he took possession of his new home, where the remainder of his life was spent. While his time was devoted to the practice of medicine, the farming operations were carried on under his superintendence.

Dr. Simonton always took an interest in political affairs, and was accustomed to act with the Whigs in opposition to the Democrats, who had retained possession of the national government from the election of Andrew Jackson, in 1824. He was elected county auditor in 1823, serving three years, and in 1838 he was nominated as a candidate for Congress from the district then composed of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon, and was elected by a large majority. He was re-elected in 1840. During the extra session of Congress, held in the summer of 1841, Dr. Simonton's health gave way. Having been accustomed to an active life and to exercise on horseback, strict attention to public business, with confinement to the atmosphere of Washington during the heated term, so prostrated him physically that he was unable to attend regularly upon the sessions of 1842 and 1843. He never fully recovered his health, though he resumed his medical practice, which was continued nearly three years after the close of his congressional career.

Dr. Simonton died May 17, 1846, in Hanover. He married Martha Davis Snodgrass, daughter of the Rev. James Snodgrass, who died in April, 1862. Both are interred in the old Hanover Church graveyard.

In person, Dr. Simonton was five feet eleven inches in height, of good presence and proportions, with regular features and very black hair, which retained its color to the last. He was a modest, diffident man, but of a genial and friendly disposition. For some years previous to his death he was an elder of the Derry Church, and while in Washington a member of the Congressional prayer-meeting. He was a decided Presbyterian in his faith, and even took a deep interest in the affairs of the denomination to which he belonged. He was a strict observer of the Sabbath and of the services of the sanctuary. He maintained family worship, and was careful to give his children a religious training. He acquired a good reputation as a physician, and for many years had an extensive country practice.

CAPT. JOHN SIMPSON.

John Simpson, son of James and Mary Simpson, was born in Newtown or Buckingham township, Bucks County, Pa., about 1744. His parents went South, and were residing in North Carolina in 1783, and in Georgia in 1791. He learned blacksmithing, and in 1763 settled on the Susquehanna, in what was then Upper Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co. On the 15th of August, 1775, he was commissioned second lieutenant of Capt. James Murray's company in the Fourth Battalion of associators of Lancaster County. On the 28th of January, 1777, Lieut. Col. Cornelius Cox, of the battalion, ordered him to remain in the "Continental smith-shop" at Bristol. He served during the greater part of the Revolution, towards its close in command of a company of militia, when he returned to his farm. In the spring of 1793 he removed to Huntingdon, Pa., where he died on the 3d of February, 1807, in his sixty-third year. Capt. Simpson married, May 7, 1776, Margaret Murray, daughter of Capt. James Murray.

JOHN A. SMULL.

John Augustus Smull, the second son of John Smull and Harriet Pauli, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 1, 1832. Mr. Smull's parents came to Harrisburg shortly after their marriage, and there all their children were born. The death of John's father, in 1841, left his widowed mother dependent upon her own exertions and those of her eldest son, Le Van, who was then in his fourteenth year. An acquaintance with a number of members of the Legislature emboldened her to secure a position for him which would, in some measure, aid in her maintenance. Le Van was appointed page to the Speaker, the first one known to the legislative body.

In the spring of 1848, John was tendered the appointment of a midshipman in the United States navy, and would have accepted the position but for the opposition of his mother. Shortly after he concluded to learn the art of printing, and apprenticed himself at the Telegraph, then under the editorial supervision of Theo. Fenn, Esq., a noted journalist at that day. On the 14th day of April, 1849, Le Van Smull died, and the vacant position of page was secured for his brother John, then in his seventeenth year. In 1861 the office of resident clerk was created. The duties of this position were multiform, not only during the session of the Legislature, but in the recess. With an energy and industry most remarkable, affairs in this department were so systematically arranged that everything went as clock-work. He could tell everything relating to legislation, the progress of each bill, and to all inquiries would give the most satisfactory replies, his memory being unusually retentive. During the closing days of the session he was ready for all queries as to the status of every species of legislation before the House, so familiar did he make himself with whatever appertained to the business of the Assembly.

For a number of years Matthias' and Ziegler's Manuals were the guide-books of legislative practice. In 1867, Mr. Smull enlarged the ordinary Directory and Rules of the General Assembly by the compilation of the "Legislative Hand-Book," which has been published annually the past ten years as a State document. Twelve volumes were edited by Mr. Smull, carefully revised year by year, that for 1881 and for 1883 being edited by his brother, William P. Smull. "Smull's Hand-Book" has always been considered one of the most valuable of the State documents, and full sets of them are considered "rarities." A vademecum of information relative to the official life of the commonwealth, it is the book of reference for all knowledge thereof. The work has been imitated in other States, and even by the national government, but none of them can be compared to "Smull's Hand-Book" in usefulness. The necessities of legislation required the compilation of the work, and it is this necessity which perpetuates the labors of the lamented editor.

The duties of Mr. Smull's official position did by no means prevent him from taking an active interest in every public enterprise, and the citizens of his native town hold him in grateful remembrance for the energy he displayed in contributing to the advancement of its industrial and business enterprises. He was largely instrumental in the erection of the City Passenger Railway, of which he was director and secretary from the date of its organization. He was secretary of the Harrisburg Cemetery Association, and president of the Harrisburg Brick and Tile Company. He was largely interested in several land and building associations, the Harrisburg Car-Works, Farmers' Bank, and a member of the Fort Hunter road commission. He served many years as one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison, and was the efficient secretary of the board; was vice-president of the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society, in the management of which he took an active part, being a working member of committees at all annual exhibitions the past fifteen years. The foregoing were only a few of the enterprises and institutions in which Mr. Smull was prominent. Others equally as important found in him an able advocate and friend.

On Wednesday, the 9th of July, 1879, he left home for Asbury Park, in the hope to recuperate his lost energies, with the intention of stopping over at Philadelphia until Thursday noon. The day and night were exceedingly warm, and whatever may have been the cause, the next morning he was found dead in his bed. The announcement of the death of John A. Smull was received with sorrow at Harrisburg and elsewhere, for, as Col. McClure fitly said in his editorial, "many a good and prominent citizen of Pennsylvania could have been better spared than John A. Smull, and his sudden death will carry grief to every part of the State." So widely known was he that not a newspaper in the commonwealth but had some tender expressions of regret over his death.

On Saturday evening, July 12, 1879, the funeral services were conducted in the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, Harrisburg, the Rev. William C. Cattell, D.D., president of Lafayette College, preaching the funeral discourse. At the grave the Knight Templar burial service was read. At the following session of the Legislature memorial services were held, and several eulogistic addresses were delivered concerning the deceased parliamentarian, and the House of Representatives unanimously ordered a memorial volume to be published comprising a biography of Mr. Smull, and the proceedings had in that body relating thereto. Mr. Smull never married, and at his death his estate went to a cousin, who died shortly after, and to his brother, William Pauli Smull.

GEORGE SMULLER.

George Smuller, son of John Smullor (1780-1840) and Susanna Shirtz (1782-1864), was born Oct. 7, 1805, at Jonestown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He acquired a fair English education in the schools of his day, and in early life followed the occupation of a tailor. He subsequently became extensively engaged in the lumber business with the Union Canal Company, and a contractor in the public works of the State. He was afterwards appointed collector of tolls in the Union Canal at Middletown, a position he filled many years, resigning in 1857, when he was elected president of the Middletown Bank. As first officer of that institution, Mr. Smuller won for himself the highest confidence in the community, which he retained down to the close of his busy and active life. He died at Middletown, on the 19th of August, 1882, aged almost seventy-seven years. Few men stood higher in any community than he. His life was characterized by great goodness of heart and true nobleness of soul, which won for him the love and esteem of his fellow-men and neighbors. Mr. Smuller married Caroline Fisher, daughter of Dr. Karl and Mary Fisher, of Middletown, born 1805, at Middletown, died Jan. 5, 1870. Their children were Lehman, d. s. p.; Mary; Elizabeth, married George F. Mish, M.D.; Annie G., married Henry J. Meily; Ellen, married David G. Swartz, of Chicago; and Caroline.

REV. JAMES SNODGRASS.

James Snodgrass, the son of Benjamin Snodgrass, was born near Doylestown, Bucks Co., Pa., July 23, 1763. His grandfather came from the north of Ireland about the year 1700, locating in Bucks County, Pa. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1783, and was for a brief time a tutor therein. He studied theology under direction of the Rev. Nathaniel Irwin, then pastor of the church at Neshaminy, and was licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of Philadelphia in December, 1785. After preaching about a year and a half in destitute places in the central and northern part of New York, on the 16th of October, 1787, he accepted the call of the Hanover congregation of May previous, and until his ordination on the 13th of May, 1788, he gave his attention to that church. At his installation there were present of the Presbytery of Carlisle the revered and honored ministers Revs. John Elder, John Hoge, John Linn, John Craighead, Robert Cooper, and Samuel Waugh. His pastorate extended over a period of fifty-eight years, and he was the last who ministered at Hanover. His death occurred July 2, 1846, and he lies interred in old Hanover Church graveyard. The Rev. Snodgrass was twice married. His first wife, Martha, born Nov. 12, 1760, died Dec. 20, 1828; his second wife, Nancy, born in 1770, died Jan. 24, 1839, and are both interred in the same graveyard.

REV. JAMES SNODGRASS.

CHARLES A. SNYDER.

Charles Albright Snyder, son of Simon Snyder and Catharine Michael, was born May 29, 1799, at Selinsgrove, Pa. His grandfather, Simon Snyder, was an emigrant from Moravia, while his mother's father was Eberhart Michael, a prominent personage in the early history of Lancaster County. Charles A. was educated by private tutors, and early in life began contracting. In 1837 he was one of a partnership in the building of the West Feliciana Railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana. For several years he was a clerk in the prothonotary's office at Sunbury and afterwards at Harrisburg. In the latter part of his life he was a justice of the peace, alderman, United States commissioner, and a notary public. He died at Harrisburg on the 8th of November, 1868, aged sixty-nine years. Mr. Snyder was a good land-lawyer and had a very extensive knowledge of land titles in Pennsylvania, and was often sought by prominent members of the bar in consultation on such subjects. He owned considerable bodies of coal land, which have now become valuable, but which he was compelled to part with because of the slowness of internal improvements; was interested in the copper- and nickel-mines of Lancaster, Pa., and Connecticut; developed the first cannel-coal mines in Missouri; was pioneer in such early enterprises, which always turned out disastrous at the time, but as the country improved, and modern appliances and new inventions came in vogue turned out well. In fact, he was too far in advance of the times. Mr. Snyder married, in 1828, Barbara Keller, daughter of John Keller, and their children were Catharine (married B. F. Etter), Edward, Eugene, Mary, Emma (married Dr. George H. Markley), Charles, Simon, and John Keller, the two latter deceased.

REV. HENRY G. STECHER.

Henry G. Stecher, son of George Stecher, was born July 16, 1792, near Easton, Northampton Co., Pa. Received an academical and collegiate education; and began the study of theology at Easton. He was ordained pastor of the Lutheran Church at Logansville, York Co., Pa., in 1819, and served that congregation faithfully until 1830, when he accepted a call to the church at Hummelstown. His charge included other congregations, and he was as energetic in his devotion to the wants of his widely-scattered flocks as he was earnest in his expounding of religious truths. He was well educated, a profound theologian, and of an exceeding amiableness of character. In April, 1854, he resigned his charge, owing to advancing years and physical inability. From that point until the close of his life he resided at Hummelstown, surrounded by all the charms of the domestic circle of a good man. He died there on the 20th of April, 1870. Rev. Mr. Stecher married Julianna Fouse, daughter of George Fouse, and who survives in her eighty-sixth year. They had children as follows: Mary Ann (died at seventeen); Adeline (married Henry L. Hummel, of Hummelstown); Julianna (died 1881; married David Zacharias, of Reading, and left issue); Amanda (married John Fisher, of Middletown); Albert (married Rebecca Groom, of York County); Theodore A. (was educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, with the intention of entering the ministry: about 1860 went into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Altoona, under Engineer Herman Haupt; subsequently transferred to general ticket agent at Philadelphia, which position he filled creditably until his death in 1880, which took place at Ardmore, near Philadelphia); George (married Bell Haines, of Philadelphia), Sarah (d. s. p.); Caroline; Frank B.

DAVID UMBERGER, M.D.

David Umberger, son of John Umberger and Margaret Elizabeth Wenrick, was born Dec. 26, 1796, in Lower Paxtang township. His early life was passed in the mercantile business at Harrisburg, where he subsequently studied medicine with Dr. Martin Luther. He attended medical lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in 1823. He commenced the practice of medicine the same year at Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., thence to Dauphin County in 1827, to Lebanon County in 1837, and in 1845 returned to his native county, locating at Linglestown, where he successfully pursued his profession until old age prevented. In 1842, Dr. Umberger was the Democratic candidate for Congress in the district composed of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill, and although defeated, his party being in a minority, received a vote especially gratifying. He died at the residence of his son in Dauphin, on the 29th of July, 1874. Dr. Umberger married March, 1823, Juliet Roberts, born 1804, died Dec. 6, 1862, daughter of John Roberts, of Washington County, Pa., and sister of Dr. Edmund W. Roberts, of Harrisburg.

JAMES C. VERBEKE, M.D.

James C. Verbeke was born in Holland, in the year 1785. His father was a native of that country, and his mother was born in Yorkshire, England. The son was educated for the ministry, but afterwards studied medicine at the University at Leyden, where the two degrees, Doctor of Medicine and of Pharmacy, were conferred upon him. After finishing his course he entered the French army as physician, and through the efforts of his father was assigned to the regiment commanded by Col. Lehmanowsky, a friend and acquaintance, with the request that he should have a watchful care over him. The doctor remained with the regiment in all its memorable campaigns, being always employed in the provisional military hospitals, performing the duties of the two branches of the profession only, as persons were not allowed to practice more than such as was inseparable from the other, so that each might thoroughly understand his calling, and be enabled to gain a livelihood. In consequence of this condition of things he never was on the field of battle, but was always engaged in administering to the sick. Even at the battle of Waterloo, when the hospital was taken and retaken six times in one day by the English and French, he saw nothing of the fight. After that sanguinary and decisive conflict, when the star of Napoleon had set, he entered the Dutch navy as a physician, on board a man-of-war, where he remained two years, and then resigned. Afterwards being detected in a plot, in which Col. Lehmanowsky was engaged also, to carry off Napoleon from St. Helena, they had to flee the country, when he was helped by friends to reach England, and was engaged by the celebrated Scotch navigator, John Arrowsmith, as physician on board his vessel, then about making a trip to America, which landed at Philadelphia in 1817. The port physician, Dr. Perkins, after examining his letters of references and his diploma, immediately gave him a situation as clerk in his drug-store. Miss Gertrude Kemmelar, having come to America to visit a brother, and landing at Philadelphia, she chanced to call at the drug-store, on Second Street, near Callowhill, with a prescription, when, both coming from the same country, and the doctor being addressed in his own language, an acquaintance was formed, and in 1818 they were married at the house of John Dillinger, a friend, with whose family Miss Kemmelar stopped. In the year 1819 they removed to Harrisburg, where the doctor opened a drug-store on Market Square, in the house of John Norton, and practiced medicine in the country and all the surrounding towns, traveling as far as Halifax, Middletown, and other places, on horseback, through which he became universally known by every one, some of the oldest inhabitants still remembering him. After a few years of practice, he relinquished it, to enter into other business, and was successful in gaining a considerable estate. Mrs. Verbeke died in 1855, and Dr. Verbeke in 1856, leaving two children, William K. and Margaretta Dillinger, married Theophilus Fenn. *

CAPT. THOMAS WALKER.

Thomas Walker, son of James Walker and Barbara McArthur, was born in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., about 1780. He was brought up a farmer, learned surveying, and was deputy surveyor of the county of Dauphin from October, 1804, to April 20, 1809. About the year 1810 he removed to Harrisburg and began merchandising. He was captain of the "Harrisburg Volunteers" who in 1814 marched to the defense of Baltimore. He was appointed by Governor Hiester prothonotary of the county March 10, 1821, which he held until Jan. 17, 1824. He was elected sheriff the latter year, commissioned Oct. 18, 1824. He died on the 19th of March, 1843, in the sixty-fourth year of his age, and is buried in Paxtang Church graveyard. Capt. Walker was an ardent patriot, a popular officer, and an active, enterprising citizen.

CAPT. BENJAMIN WALLACE.

The families of Wallace who settled in the Swatara region of Pennsylvania emigrated from County Antrim, province of Ulster, Ireland, and made location on Swatara, Manada, Beaver, and Bow Creeks between the years 1788 and 1743. The ancestor of Benjamin Wallace was James, who married before he emigrated (1787-88), and located on the Swatara. He was driven from his home by the Indians in 1756. In 1759 he was again upon his farm, as appears by his receipts for taxes. Benjamin was born in 1738, at the time of the raid about eighteen years of age, and as his father's refuge was "the Irish settlements near the Delaware," his son formed such acquaintance there as led him to choose two of his three wives from the daughters of his father's friends. He married first, in 1741, Letitia, who was daughter of John, who was son of James Ralston and Mary Cummock, of Northampton County. She dying, left one child, Mary Wallace, who married James B. Wilson, of Hanover. They removed to Erie about 1800. She died there in 1844, at the age of eighty-three. Capt. Wallace married secondly, in 1767, Elizabeth, daughter of John Culbertson and Ann McNair. When the Revolution occurred, Mr. Wallace entered with the spirit of his race. He held a command in the battle of Long Island, was taken prisoner at Fort Washington in November, 1776, captive for nearly a year, when he was exchanged and returned to his family. In December, 1777, he makes application for the discharge of his brother, Michael Wallace, who had been "put under guard" for the reason that he had obtained "a warrant for a substitute in Boyd's battalion for abuse." The Supreme Executive Council granted the application and discharged his brother. In what this "abuse" consisted we are not informed. We do not further hear of him in public or private life until 1780, when he was appointed a magistrate. In the affairs of the Hanover Church, on Bow Creek, he appears to have taken a deep interest, as his name is found upon nearly all the papers relating to it from 1783 to 1792. In 1785, upon the formation of Dauphin County, he was appointed one of the judges. He retained this station until the adoption of the Constitution of 1790, when the mode of constituting courts was changed. He, however, continued in the commission of the peace until his death.

Judge Wallace died Dec. 8, 1803, and is buried in Hanover graveyard on Bow Creek. He was taught the trade of wheelwright. The fathers of one hundred years ago never omitted training their sons in some useful avocation.

REV. BENJAMIN J. WALLACE, D.D.

Benjamin John Wallace, son of William Wallace, son of Benjamin and Eleanor Maclay, daughter of William Maclay, was born at Harrisburg, January, 1810. His father dying when he was only six years of age, he was left to the care of an amiable and excellent mother, whose early training fitted him for the position he occupied with so much success in his maturity. When of suitable age he became a pupil in the Harrisburg Academy. That institution was then in charge of able instructors. The culture he received at this school fitted him for admission to the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he was rapidly gaining a foremost place, when his heart convinced him that a higher avocation was to be his calling. He left West Point, was prepared for Princeton College and the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, under the care of Rev. John Hutchinson, of Mifflintown, a former tutor in the Harrisburg Academy. After graduating with high honor he was licensed to preach, and was called at once to a Western charge. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by his alma mater. His elegance as a writer and eloquence as a speaker soon brought him into great prominence in his denomination and in all religious circles, so that when the Presbyterian Quarterly, the organ of the "New School," was projected he was at once selected as its editor. His brilliance of style gave character to this publication, and as long as he lived it was a prosperous and popular publication. Mr. Wallace was pastor of churches in Pittsburgh, York, at other points, president and professor of Delaware College, at Newark, in that State.

Unfortunately for his fame as an author, his literary productions are scattered throughout the ephemeral publications of his time. It need not be repeated that both as speaker and writer he was captivating and graceful, of fine stature and polished address, in society one of the most entertaining of a long roll of able men, whose cultivated minds directed the thoughts of the generation of which Dr. Wallace was so distinguished an ornament.

He married, at Pittsburgh, Nov. 5, 1852, Sarah Cochran, daughter of George Cochran (of Richard). Dr. Wallace died in Philadelphia in 1862, at the age of fifty-two years, and was buried there. His widow survived until 1869, when she died at Pittsburgh.

GEN. JAMES WALLACE.

James Wallace, son of Robert and Mary Wallace, was born in 1750, in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) County, Pa. He received a good English and classical education at Philadelphia; but at the death of his father remained upon the ancestral farm in Hanover, where he resided until the close of his active and busy life. In the war for independence, he was a member of Capt. William Brown's company, in actual service during the vigorous campaigns in and around Philadelphia and in the Jerseys. In 1779 he commanded a company of rangers for frontier service, and at the close of the war was major of a battalion of associators. In the subsequent military organizations, as directed by the State and national governments, he rose to be brigadier-general of the militia, and is thus distinguished. He served as one of the commissioners of the county from 1799 to 1801; was elected to the House of Representatives of the State Assembly, serving from 1806 to 1810. He was chosen to the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Congresses of the United States, and was distinguished in that body, not so much for his eloquence in debate, but for his practical common sense and remarkable executive ability. Having served six years faithfully, to the regret of his constituents he declined a renomination, and retired to the quiet of farm life, where he spent the evening of his days.

Gen. Wallace died Dec. 17, 1823, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., and is interred in old Hanover Church graveyard.

JOSEPH WALLACE.

Joseph Wallace, son of James Wallace and Rachel Elder, was born 29th March, 1786, in now Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received a good English education, and about the year 1809 or 1810 we find him the manager of New Market Forge, Lebanon Co., for John Elder; subsequently employed at Hope Furnace, Lancaster Co. He removed to Harrisburg prior to 1812, and with Joshua Elder entered into mercantile life; afterwards in business alone for many years. In the War of 1812-14 he volunteered with the Harrisburg Artillerists, and marched as far as York. His itinerancy we have given elsewhere, it being the only one preserved us. He served in the Borough Council, and was borough treasurer a long term of years. He was quite prominent as an anti-Mason, having been chairman of the State Committee during the Ritner campaign, and afterwards appointed deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth under that administration. For many years he was secretary and treasurer of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, of the Middletown Turnpike Company, and Peter's Mountain Turnpike Company. Mr. Wallace died at Harrisburg, Feb. 22, 1867, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was a gentleman of high moral character and worth, greatly esteemed in the community, and ever enjoyed their confidence and respect. Mr. Wallace married, May 28, 1816, Sarah Evans Cummins (born Jan. 16, 1787, in Centre County, Pa., died Aug. 21, 1858, at Harrisburg), daughter of Joseph Cummins and Sarah Evans, and they had six children.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

William Wallace, the eldest son of Benjamin Wallace and Elizabeth Culbertson, was born in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., in October, 1768. He received a classical education, graduated at Dickinson College, studied law at Harrisburg under Galbraith Patterson, and was admitted to the bar at the June term, 1792. He became interested in the Harrisburg and Presqu' Isle Land Company, and about 1800 removed to Erie, in the affairs of which place and in the organization of the county he took an active and leading part. About 1810 he returned to Harrisburg, and partly resumed his profession. Besides being a member of the bar he was a partner of his brother-in-law, John Lyon, at Pennsylvania Furnace. He was nominated by the Federalists for Congress in 1813, but was defeated. He was elected the first president of the old Harrisburg Bank, and was burgess of the borough at his death, which occurred on Tuesday, May 28, 1816. His remains are interred in Paxtang Church graveyard. Although actively engaged in business, it did not destroy his social life. To his friends his house was always open. None of these were more welcome than his brethren of the legal profession. In those days there was a good deal of circuit-traveling by lawyers. Members of the Lancaster and Carlisle bars practiced at Harrisburg as well as at their homes. Many of these were frequent visitors at Mr. Wallace's house. Chief among these was Chief Justice Gibson. He and Mr. Wallace had become friends when the latter was a student at Dickinson College, and their friendship continued until his death. He was a polite, urbane man, of slight frame and precise address. Mr. Wallace was twice married, first, in 1803, to Rachel Forrest, daughter of Dr. Andrew Forrest, of Harrisburg; she died at Erie in 1804. He married, secondly, in 1806, Eleanor Maclay, daughter of Hon. William Maclay, who died at Harrisburg in 1823. Mrs. Eleanor Maclay Wallace was a woman of fine talents and great force of character. As a young lady, she had gone with her father to the capital, and acted as his private secretary. While she enjoyed society, she was more deeply interested in the political questions which came before the first Congress for settlement. It was in harmony with those early tastes that after her marriage she read more than one elementary work in her husband's legal library. She was a woman of profound piety, of fine social qualities, and of notable gifts and attainments of mind.

REV. BEVERLY R. WAUGH, A.M.

Beverly Roberts Waugh, son of Right Rev. Beverly Waugh, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Catharine Bushby, was born at Liberty, Md., July 16, 1824. He received a thorough English and classical education, and entered Dickinson College, where he graduated. His alma mater subsequently conferred upon him the degree of A.M. Mr. Waugh was licensed to preach by the Baltimore Conference, but accepted the position of Professor of Mathematics and English Literature in the Baltimore Female College, an institution then in the full tide of success. In 1853 the trustees of the Pennsylvania Female College at Harrisburg secured him as principal of that institution, in which position he labored faithfully and successfully to the day of his death. It was not alone in the capacity of teacher that Mr. Waugh devoted his energies and talents, but his labors were varied, incessant, faithful, in season and out of season, for the good of humanity. His devoted Christian life-work ended on the 24th of March, 1861, in his thirty-seventh year. He married, in 1853, Sarah S., daughter of George Beatty, Esq., of Harrisburg, who, with a daughter (Eliza B., married Charles A. Kunkel), survive. Mr. Waugh published several discourses.

JAMES W. WEIR.

James Wallace Weir, youngest son of Samuel Weir and Mary Wallace, was born Aug. 9, 1805, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a good education, excelled as a scholar, and his taste for study and reading drew him towards the printing-office. He learned the art with John S. Wiestling, and after his apprenticeship spent some time in the printing-house of the Messrs. Johnson, of Philadelphia. On the 26th of November, 1833, having been chosen teller of the Harrisburg Bank, he accepted that position, holding it until Oct. 30, 1844, when he was chosen cashier of the bank. When the institution became a national bank in 1874, he was unanimously elected its cashier, which office he held until his death, which occurred at Harrisburg on Thursday, March 14, 1878, having been connected with the bank for over forty-four years. As a bank officer and a financier he gained an enviable distinction for his uniform courtesy, for unimpeachable integrity, and for ability of the highest order. Few bankers in the commonwealth can present a record equal to his in years of service, in successful administration of affairs through financial trouble, and for such rigid honesty. But not alone as a banker was he distinguished. He was gifted with rare social qualities and a graceful wit, which made him one of the most companionable of men. In movements for the reformation of society he was always foremost, not only giving his time and labor, but contributing freely of his means to the accomplishment of what he thought a philanthropic purpose. To the poor and lowly he was always a kind and true friend, and his charities, though not ostentatious, were made with a free and open hand. His literary taste and ability were of high order, and he frequently wrote for the press; was the author of several religious tracts, published by the American Sunday-School Union. In 1838 appeared a small volume, "Manual of Prayer," which was published with an introduction by Rev. Albert Barnes, of Philadelphia. In 1854 "The Closet Companion" appeared, and passed through several editions. In the Presbyterian Church, of which he was many years an elder, as in every walk and pursuit in life, he was active, energetic, consistent, pure in character, and lofty in purpose.

JOHN A. WEIR.

John Andrew Weir, second son of Samuel Weir (1744-1820) and Mary Wallace (1765-1830), was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 10, 1802. He was educated in the private schools of the town and at the Harrisburg Academy. He learned coach-making, and subsequently went into the hardware business, which he continued a number of years, afterwards connecting with it the drug trade, taking into partnership his nephew, D. W. Gross. During the administration of Governor Ritner he served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. In 1840 he was elected prothonotary of Dauphin County, a position he filled two terms (six years). While serving in this office he was chosen a director of the Harrisburg Bank, and afterwards became teller in that institution, in which capacity he continued until 1880. While performing these duties, he was treasurer of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg from its first establishment in 1850 to 1880. For nearly fifty years he was an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg, and took a warm interest in the promotion of the Sunday-school system. He was one of the first, firmest, and influential friends of the anti-slavery cause in Dauphin County. Mr. Weir died at Harrisburg, Oct. 10, 1881; he was twice married, first to Catharine Wiestling, second to Mary Matilda Fahnstock, having issue by each wife. Mr. Weir was universally esteemed by the citizens of his native city. No man had a more unsullied reputation or a purer personal record. "Uprightness, benevolence, energy, geniality, courage in duty, fidelity in earth's various relations, all sanctified and adorned by the Christian religion, eminently marked his well-rounded character."

CAPT. SAMUEL WEIR.

Samuel Weir, the eldest son of James Weir, was born near Ballymoney, County Antrim, Ireland, Sept. 29, 1744. He came to America in 1775, and located in the township of Derry, Dauphin Co., Pa. A year subsequently we find him in the army of the Revolution as lieutenant of infantry, rendering important service at Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. At the close of the war he removed to a farm he purchased near Harrisburg, but shortly after, in 1787, began merchandising in that town, and became one of the most prominent business men of the borough. He assisted in organizing the Presbyterian Church at Harrisburg, and was one of its first ruling elders. He died at Harrisburg on the 15th of August, 1820. He was twice married. By his first wife he had James, who died young; and by his second wife he had Samuel (who removed to South Carolina), John, Andrew, and James Wallace. Mr. Weir, says Rev. Dr. Robinson, "was always esteemed to be a man of probity and honor. In the church he was very active, and greatly devoted to its interests."

ADAM WEISE.

Adam Weise, son of John George and Eva Weise, was born Dec. 23, 1751, in New Goshenhoppen, Philadelphia (now Montgomery) Co., Pa. His parents soon afterwards removed to Heidelberg township, Berks Co. He received the limited education of frontier times, and learned the trade of a blacksmith. On the

J. W. Weir

2d of February, 1772, he married Margaret Elizabeth Wingard, of Heidelberg township, Berks Co., and the following year removed to Hagerstown, Md. At the breaking out of the Revolution he entered the service as sergeant in the Maryland cavalry. In 1782, Mr. Weise removed to Upper Paxtang township, and settled on the Wiconisco Creek, on the road now leading from Cross-Roads to Berrysburg. In 1788 he left the valley and located in Bethel township, Berks Co., but about 1796 returned to his old place on the Wiconisco. In 1802 he took up his residence in Millersburg, having previously been appointed by Governor Mifflin a justice of the peace, an office he held over thirty-four years. He erected the third house in the town, and a blacksmith-shop. His first wife dying March 29, 1828, Mr. Weise married in August following Mrs. Mary Kuehly, of Union County, who died on the 10th of September, 1820. In December, that year, he married his third wife, Mrs. Catharine Patton, who survived her husband thirty years. Squire Weise died Oct. 5, 1833, in his eighty-second year, and was interred in David's Reformed Church graveyard. His descendants are scattered over most of the States west of the Alleghenies. Mr. Weise was a faithful officer, and a good citizen.

PETER WENRICK.

Peter Wenrick, son of Francis Wenrick and Elizabeth Greiger, was born in 1773, near Linglestown, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father's family came from Germany and settled in what is now Lebanon County. Francis Wenrick subsequently removing to near Linglestown, where most of his family were born. Francis Wenrick was a soldier of the Revolution, had been at Brandywine and Germantown, and on the frontiers against the Indians subsequent to the massacre of Wyoming. He died about 1785, and with his wife Elizabeth Greiger (died February, 1797) was buried in Wenrick's Church graveyard. He had beside sons (Peter and Philip) several daughters. Peter Wenrick received a comparatively limited education, brought up on his father's farm, which he continued to occupy until his election to the sheriffalty, when he removed to Harrisburg. He served in that office from Oct. 19, 1818, to Oct. 16, 1821, and was always considered a faithful and efficient officer. He died at Harrisburg, Feb. 27, 1825, in the fifty-second year of his age. Mr. Wenrick married, Feb. 2, 1796, Susannah Umberger, daughter of John Umberger, and their children were John, Peter, Samuel, Francis, David, Joseph, Mary (married — Shofer), Elizabeth (married — Minshall), Susannah (married — Sloan), Sarah (married — Scott), and Rebecca (married — Umberger).

GEORGE WHITEHILL.

George Whitehill, the son of John Whitehill, was born in Donegal township, Lancaster Co., in the year 1760. His father purchased land in Paxtang prior to the Revolution and removed thither. He received a good education, and entered mercantile pursuits. He began the hardware business at Harrisburg about 1800, and was quite successful. He was appointed by Governor Snyder one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin, Oct. 20, 1817, but on the 30th of July, 1818, with his colleague, Obed Fahnestock, resigned, owing to the commissioning of Judge Franks as president of the court by Governor Findlay that year. Judge Whitehill died at Harrisburg on the 7th of January, 1821. His wife, Abigail, born in 1762, died April 12, 1825. They are both buried in Paxtang Church graveyard.

CAPT. MICHAEL WHITLEY.

Michael Whitley was born in 1730, in the North of Ireland. He came to America when a young man, and settled in what was then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. He was a farmer by occupation, and was in good circumstances when the war of the Revolution aroused the war-eagles on the Susquehanna. He raised a company of associators for Col. Robert Elder's battalion, and was in active service in the Jersey campaign of 1776, and the battles of Brandywine and Germantown. On the 6th of December, 1777, he was severely wounded in a skirmish at Chestnut Hill, taken prisoner, and died a few days thereafter at Philadelphia. Capt. Whitley was a brave and gallant officer, and the commendations of his superior officers show how highly he was esteemed. He left a wife, Martha, who died in Paxtang, Nov. 11, 1813, aged about ninety years, and children as follows: Michael, born 1758; died Jan. 14, 1843; a soldier of the Revolution, "passed through a long life, a highly respected and beloved citizen." William married, and had Michael, married Jean Simonton; and John, removed to Lewisburg, Union Co., Pa. Sarah, Elizabeth, married John Ward, of Paxtang, and had Michael; Sarah, married Robert Simmons; — married Dr. Price; Amelia; and Mary, married — Storms. Mary, died unmarried. Jean, died unmarried. Margery (Martha), married — McKinley.

SAMUEL C. WIESTLING, M.D.

Samuel Christopher Wiestling was born at Oschatz, in the Canton or District of Meisichen, on the 4th of June, 1760, during a visit of his mother to her parents. The home of his parents was Colba, on the river Saale, in Lower Saxony. Inasmuch as the military law of Prussia required all Prussian officers and citizens to have the name of every child recorded in the church-book of the town wherein it was born, this was done in his case. The record was also made in the military canton-book or soldiers' roll of Oschatz. He was baptized soon after, his sponsors being Samuel Ludwig Goldman, Christopher Henry Ahren, and Mrs. Catherine Elizabeth Wiestling, all residents of Colba. His parents were Christopher Martin Wiestling and Dorothea Elizabeth (Goldman) Wiestling. His father, who held the office of secretary of Colba, and was widely known, died in 1769. The widow afterwards married Michael Horst, a justice of the peace, of Acken, on the river Elba, in whom Samuel found a kind parent; was sent to school, and carefully educated. Subsequently, being influenced and guided by the counsel of his preceptors, Herr Ruprecht and his brother-in-law, the Honorable Inspector Gehring, his step-father persuaded him to study theology, and through the recommendation of those mentioned he was received into the Hallische Weisenhaus. But this life was irksome to him, and unsuited to the natural bent of his mind, and, becoming discontented, he returned to his home at Colba.

In April, 1774, he was placed under the instruction of the State Surgeon and "Land Physician," Dr. Unger, but the doctor having died on the 1st of May, 1776, he with a good recommendation went to Halle and put himself under the care and tuition of Field-Surgeon Ollenroth, with whom he remained until 1778. This gentleman very kindly secured for him regular college privileges, under Professors Mäkel, Nestsky, Dr. Younghaus, and others. As war broke out about this time between the Emperor Joseph and King Frederick II.,—the bone of contention being Bayern,—and a part of the Prussian army being stationed in Alsace, under Prince Henry, he was recommended by his principal for the position of lazarsurgeon, and was accordingly examined and appointed on June 3, 1778.

On July the 1st, the army marched to Dresden, and the field hospital was removed to Thorgan. In the beginning of October he was taken sick, in consequence of which he obtained leave to return home. On recovering his health, in November, he went to Halle and resumed his studies under the professors already named until the year 1779, when he went to Dresden for the purpose of continuing his studies in anatomy in the then existing preparatory institute, under the care of the Elector's counselor, Pietchen. Here the branches of anatomy, physiology, physics, materia medica, chemistry, pathology, and therapeutics were as thoroughly taught by Dr. Hoffrath and Professors Meiden and Thomriane as they were in Halle; but botany was neglected, though chirurgery was also thoroughly taught by the general surgeon, Wilde. In the spring of 1780 he went to Berlin to prosecute, under the Berlin State accoucheur, Dr. Hagan, his studies in obstetrics, which he had already commenced at Halle, under Catenius, Lossicke, Schmucker, and Thedus. He remained during the summer in a private college of medicine, chirurgery, and anatomy.

In October of the same year he returned to Dresden, to visit the preparatory school of anatomy. In April of the following year he went to Amsterdam, to visit John Herman Osterdyke, who had been his intimate friend in Halle, and who was now a doctor of medicine in Amsterdam. This afforded him an opportunity to visit the Land and Sea Hospital located there, and also the Amsterdam College of Medicine and Surgery, of which Dr. Herman Gerhard Osterdyke, the father of his friend, was the president. Through the kindness of the general surgeon of the hospital, the Hon. B. Hasson, he had free access to the Gast-Huys. His friend going to Halle to hold his "Inaugural Disputations," in order to the promoting, under the supervision of Dr. Leopold Osterdyke, and at his earnest persuasion he gladly accompanied him. He remained in Halle until April, 1782, when he returned to Amsterdam, where he attended the Hospital and College of Medicine and Surgery until June of 1782, when he was appointed to a position as navy doctor and surgeon, he having passed a creditable examination before the Committee of the Honorable Board of Admiralty.

At this time an expedition started out from the Netherlands to America, under the ambassador from Holland, with two ships laden with linen, a frigate, and a cutter. He was ordered to duty on this expedition as navy surgeon. He set sail on June 4, 1783, with a favoring wind. His record says, "We left Texel, and on Oct. 4, 1783, we reached the port of Chester on the Delaware, in Delaware County and State of Pennsylvania. The voyage was not all smooth sailing, as we encountered high winds and rough seas. Indeed, on one occasion one of the vessels came very near swamping and emptying us all out into the sea. However, with hard work, good management, and the interposition of a kind Providence we kept above water and arrived safely on terra firma."

As it was obligatory upon all students and artisans in Germany to travel and see the world before they could pursue the practice of their chosen profession or trade, our young doctor concluded to see something of the New World before returning. He accordingly left the vessel in company with a friend by the name of Godfrey Fritchey, and started on foot on a tour of observation. They traversed Middle Pennsylvania, which was not then, as now, "the garden spot of the world," but was sparsely settled, and the whole country deeply impressed with the desolation and devastation consequent upon the Revolutionary war. Visions of the "home beyond the sea," however, beckoned them to return, and they turned their footsteps towards Philadelphia with a view of finding a vessel to carry them home.

At the Trappe, in Montgomery County, in Pennsylvania, they fell in with a gentleman by the name of Messemer or Minsker, who was proprietor of an inn at that place, who, learning that the subject of this sketch was a thoroughly-educated German physician, succeeded in persuading him to tarry with him, as he had a sick wife, who had been bedridden for a long time, and upon whom he had expended quite a sum of money to physicians, to little or no purpose. This was an episode in his life that shaped his destiny for the future. This man offered to pay him twenty dollars in hand, with his boarding for self and friend, and find the medicine. He regarded this a good and advantageous offer, under the peculiar circumstances, and accepted it. The case was a serious and obstinate one, and although it baffled others, he was entirely successful, and this fortunate turn of affairs afterwards proved to be the foundation of a large and paying practice at the Trappe. About 1785 he married Miss Anna Maria Bucher, and his friend Fritchey married a sister.

About the year 1792 or 1793 he, with his family and that of his father-in-law, removed to Dauphin County, locating on farms along the Blue Mountain, on the road leading from the Susquehanna River to Linglestown. His new home was about two miles from the river and five miles from the city of Harrisburg, in now Susquehanna township. Here he continued in pursuit of his profession (while his wife superintended the farm) until the spring of 1811, when they removed to the town of Harrisburg, where his practice greatly increased until the year 1817, when he was stricken with paralysis, which terminated his medical career. He died April 20, 1823, in the sixty-third year of his age, thus ending a life of active usefulness, respected by all who knew him. He left eleven descendants,—seven sons and four daughters. Two of his sons—Samuel C. Wiestling and Joshua M. Wiestling—were in the profession when he died, and one studied medicine after his death, to wit, Benjamin J., who is still in practice in Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa. The children who survived him were: John S. Wiestling, Anna Maria (intermarried with Abraham Gross), Samuel C. Wiestling, M.D., Rev. Jacob H. Wiestling, Eliz. Dorothy (intermarried with Norman Callender), Joshua Martin Wiestling, M.D., Frederick Wiestling, Sarah (intermarried with Rev. Henry Wagner), Benjamin Wiestling, M.D., George P. Wiestling, and Catharine (intermarried with John A. Weir). *

JOSHUA M. WIESTLING.

Joshua Martin Wiestling, son of Dr. Samuel Christopher Wiestling, Sr., and his wife, Anna Maria Bucher, was born on the 28th day of February, A.D. 1797, on his father's farm, at the foot of the Kittochtinny or Blue Mountains, about five miles from Harrisburg, in Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was baptized at Shoop's Church, in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., by the Rev. Christian H. Kurtz. In the year 1811, being then of the age of fourteen years, he moved with his parents into the town of Harrisburg, where he continued to reside until his death. Although afforded but limited facilities of acquiring an education by attending the schools of that period, yet, having the advantage of the instructions of his father, who was a man of thorough education and culture, and being himself an indefatigable student, reading and studying whenever and however the opportunity presented. He grew to manhood with his naturally fine mental endowments admirably cultivated, and liberally developed. Of studious habits and love of knowledge, these characteristics adhered to him throughout his life. A man of original thinking powers, and possessed of mental capacity of a high order, he gave, notwithstanding an extensive and laborious medical practice, diligent investigation to all the leading questions of the day, and careful study in the wide and diversified field of general knowledge. He was consequently upon all the leading subjects of information a natural scholar, and throughout his whole life was recognized by his fellow-townsmen as in the front rank of general knowledge and a man of very general powers. His special field of usefulness, however, was that of medicine. In his preparation for his profession, his preceptors were his father, Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Sr., and an elder brother, Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Jr., both thoroughly educated physicians of skill and wide experience. He attended the course of medical lectures of the University of Pennsylvania. His father becoming disabled to continue in active practice, by reason of a paralytic stroke in the year 1817, he succeeded him in his profession, first in partnership with his brother, Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Jr., which continued for a few years, and subsequently alone. This was about the year 1821 or 1822. Acquiring a large and extensive practice, both in town and country, he prosecuted the duties of his profession with a degree of faithful devotion and judicious skill, which won for him the admiration and high regard of the medical fraternity and the unlimited confidence of the whole community.

In his religious convictions Dr. Wiestling was well grounded and faithful. While yet a young man he was confirmed into full membership of the Salem Reformed Church, of Chestnut Street, Harrisburg, and in the study and interpretation of Holy Writ relied implicitly upon the teaching and doctrine of the Heidelberg Catechism, the symbol and standard of Reformed faith, and in it he unwaveringly lived and confidently died, cherishing its principles and truths with tenacious fidelity.

In politics Dr. Joshua Wiestling was, as parties were then divided, an ardent Whig, being a great admirer of Henry Clay, and a firm advocate of a protective tariff for the fostering of our diversified resources and industries. In political contests he took a lively interest, and was active and efficient during campaigns, and for a year or more he was the chairman of the Dauphin County Whig Committee, and issued a published address to the voters of the county, in which he discussed the views of the day with logical force and statesmanlike ability.

In stature he was about six feet in height, broad-shouldered, of large head, erect in carriage, full-chested, rather stout in figure and person, and dignified in appearance. He was of a cheerful disposition, affable in his manners, generous in his impulses, of sympathetic and benevolent habits, unselfish and forbearing, and, as a consequence, he was popular throughout his life.

As a practicing physician he had among his students of medicine his younger brother, Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling (who settled in Middletown), Dr. Theodore Hale, and Dr. Jacob G. Wiestling. While engaged in the active duties of his practice, and apparently in the midst of excellent health, Dr. Wiestling died suddenly of apoplexy at his home in Harrisburg, on Sunday, the 15th day of January, A.D. 1854, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. His contemporaries in the practice of medicine in Harrisburg, in their action upon his death, paid this grateful tribute to his memory and worth:

"That in the sudden removal of our worthy brother from his enlarged sphere of usefulness, the profession of medicine loses one of its most zealous votaries, the community at large one of its most able physicians, and the borough of Harrisburg one of its most esteemed and respected citizens. That his moral worth and social qualities in the walks of private life were such as to elicit the esteem and commend the admiration of all whose privilege it was to know him."

Dr. Wiestling was married on the 22d day of January, 1824, to Catharine Youse, daughter of George Youse, of Harrisburg.

Dr. Wiestling left surviving him his widow, who died within seven weeks afterwards, six children, to wit: Mary Ellen (intermarried with T. T. Worth, Esq., of Lebanon), Dr. Jacob G. Wiestling (intermarried with Susanna Herr, daughter of Daniel Herr), Catharine (married, first, to James D. Bartholomew, d. s. p., and, second, S. G. Lewis, deceased, with issue), Annie E. Wiestling, Joshua Martin Wiestling (married Georgianna Hoover, of Gettysburg, Pa.), and Julia A. Wiestling (married C. Penrose Sherk, of Lebanon).

GEORGE P. WIESTLING.

George P. Wiestling, son of Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Sr., and Anna Maria Bucher, was born May 4, 1808, in Paxtang (now Susquehanna) township, Dauphin Co., Pa. A few years after, his father located at Harrisburg, where he practiced his profession, and where he died. George P. was educated in the schools of the borough and the Harrisburg Academy. He learned the art of printing with his brother, John S. Wiestling, who edited and published the Pennsylvania Intelligencer. He afterwards worked as a compositor in the different newspaper offices at the State capital. About the year 1842 he established himself in the wood and coal trade, in which he continued down through life, being one of the first to engage in it. For a period of fifty years he was leader of the Reformed Church choir. Having a love for music, and being endowed with fine talents in that direction, he took special delight in their cultivation. He was an active member of the church with which he so long identified himself as its musical leader, and for forty-four years an elder. He was faithful to every trust, honest and upright in all his dealings with the world, earnest and sincere in every good work, and his memory will remain green in the hearts of those who honor him. Mr. Wiestling died at Harrisburg, May 31, 1883, in his seventy-sixth year. He married Margaret Berryhill, daughter of Samuel Berryhill, and their children who survive are Col. George B., of Mount Alto, Franklin Co.; Edward, of Franklin County; Anna Mary, and Ellen.

REV. JACOB H. WIESTLING.

Jacob H. Wiestling, son of Samuel C. Wiestling and Anna Maria Bucher, was born in 1793 in Montgomery County, Pa. He was educated at Harrisburg, studied theology under the Rev. ——— there, and was licensed by the Reformed Synod to preach the gospel in 1812, and about the same time received and accepted a call to Hanover, York Co., Pa., which included three congregations in his charge. Owing to some difficulty with reference to the Manchester congregation, he stood disconnected from the Synod for some years. In 1821 application to that body was made in his behalf, and in the following year he was received. Several other congregations were added to his charge, and his field of labor consisted of five congregations, in which he continued to preach to the end of his life. He died at Hanover, in the year 1826, at the age of thirty-three years, and is buried in the graveyard connected with the Reformed Church at that place. Mr. Wiestling was a man of talent and more than ordinary pulpit abilities. He was conscientious and faithful in the discharge of all his public and private duties, and his piety and moral deportment were of an undoubted and unexceptionable character. Respected and esteemed by the community generally, he was especially beloved by the people of his own charge, among whom he labored with much acceptance.

JOHN PETER WILLIARD.

John Peter Williard was a native of Switzerland, born in 1745. He came to America as a soldier in the British service, but shortly after landing effected his escape. He then volunteered in the cause of the Colonies, and was with other deserters stationed on the Indian frontier or as guard of prisoners of war. At the close of the Revolution he took up a tract of land in Lykens township, called "Amsterdam," where he settled, began farming, and subsequently married. He died in 1821, at the age of seventy-six. His wife died the following year (1822), aged seventy-seven. They left the following family: Adam, who came into possession of the homestead. His children, Joseph, John A., Henry B., and Adam, Jr.,

REV. JOHN WINEBRENNER, V.D.M.

then divided the farm. Part of it yet remains in possession of the descendants. Samuel remained in the valley, a farmer and had a large family; Anna Maria married John Philip Umholtz.

CAPT. JAMES WILSON, OF DERRY.

James Wilson, son of Moses and Jean Wilson, was born June 3, 1755, in Derry township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received the best education the country schools then afforded, and spent some time at the college of Philadelphia. He had just returned to the quiet of frontier farm life when the war of the Revolution opened, and in which he took a prominent part. He was an officer in the associated battalions, and was in at least three active campaigns,—that of the Jerseys in 1776, at Brandywine and Germantown in 1777, and on the frontiers against the British and their allies, the Tories and Indians of New York, in 1779. He was a justice of the peace a long time. In 1788 and 1789 he served as one of the commissioners of the county of Dauphin, from 1798 to 1803 represented the county in the State Legislature, and filled other positions of honor and trust. He, however, preferred the quiet of an agricultural life to political office, and it was on his farm that he passed the greater number of his days. He died on the 17th of April, 1835, at fourscore. Mr. Wilson married May 18, 1784, Mary Elder, daughter of Rev. John Elder and Mary Simpson. She was born Jan. 12, 1760, in Paxtang, and died Jan. 31, 1843, at Harrisburg, but with her husband is buried in old Derry Church graveyard. Their daughter, Mary Wilson, married Rev. William Kerr, pastor of Donegal Church.

THOMAS WILSON.

Thomas Wilson, of Scotch-Irish parentage, was born at Philadelphia about 1768. He learned the trade of a printer, was a gentleman of considerable literary attainments, and wrote freely on the subjects of his time for the leading newspapers of his native city. In 1811 he removed to Baltimore, where he conducted a newspaper. In the defense of that city, when attacked by the British in 1814, he enlisted as a private in Capt. James McConkey's company of the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Maryland Volunteers, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Kennedy Long. In 1813, Mr. Wilson returned to Philadelphia, where he became foreman on Mr. Duane's newspaper, The Aurora, contributing also to its columns. He died at Philadelphia about 1828. He married Lydia Oakford, of English parentage, who survived her husband several years. Mr. Wilson was the author of a number of works, the names of only two, however, coming to our knowledge,—“The Biography of the Principal American Military and Naval Heroes, comprehending details of their achievements during the Revolutionary and late Wars,” two vols., published by John Low, 130 Cherry Street, New York, 1821; “The Picture of Philadelphia for 1824,” published by Thomas Town, 38 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

THOMAS L. WILSON.

Thomas Low Wilson, the son of Thomas Wilson and Lydia Oakford, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., on the 26th of March, 1800. He learned the art of printing with his father, who was a prominent craftsman in his day. In 1811 his parents removed to Baltimore, where in the defense of that city both father and son enlisted as privates in Capt. James McConkey's company, Twenty-seventh Maryland Regiment. In 1816 the family returned to Philadelphia, where both Wilsons worked on Mr. Duane's Aurora. Subsequently the son went to Washington City to work on the National Intelligencer. In 1828 he published the Intelligencer, Petersburg, Va., where in connection he printed the Lynchburg Democrat in 1837. In 1838, on the recommendation of the veteran editor, Ritchie, he came to Harrisburg as editor of The Reporter, to combat the errors of the Anti-Masonic party. Upon the return of the Democracy to power Mr. Wilson was chosen secretary to the board of canal commissioners, a position he occupied almost uninterruptedly until the abolishment of the canal department in 1859. He served during this period one year as collector of tolls at Middletown, and one year as deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth at the close of Governor Porter's administration. He died at Harrisburg on the 28th of February, 1861. Mr. Wilson married on the 6th of May, 1824, Julianna Margaretta Bender, of Washington City, who survives in her eighty-third year. A gentleman prominent in public affairs thus summarizes the character of Mr. Wilson: “He was an honest man, one of that stern, inflexible, and unbending old-school integrity, which made him die a poor man rather than become a party to unholy plunder from the coffers of the Commonwealth.”

REV. JOHN WINEBRENNER, V.D.M.

John Winebrenner was born in Frederick County, Md., March 24, 1797. He was partly educated at the Glades school in Frederick, and partly at Dickinson College, Carlisle. He studied for the ministry under the Rev. Mr. Helfenstein, in Philadelphia, and was ordained by the Potomac Synod of the Reformed Church in September, 1820, at Hagerstown. That year he was called to the Salem Church at Harrisburg, at the same time ministering to Shoop's, Wenrick's, and the Freiden's churches in the neighborhood. It was during his pastorate that the present church edifice, Third and Chestnut Streets, Harrisburg, was erected. Mr. Winebrenner ministered there from Oct. 22, 1820, to March 23, 1823, when, owing to his religious views on revivals, Sunday-schools, anti-slavery, and the temperance movement, with the allowing of non-ordained persons to preach in his pulpit, becoming obnoxious to his congregation, a separation took place. In a number of pamphlets he issued, Mr. Winebrenner vigorously defended his principles from the attacks made right and left by his opponents; and he did not cease therefore to "preach the word." Subsequently his energies were devoted to the establishment of a new denomination, called by him the Church of God, but known in early years as Winebrennarians. He met with remarkable success, and although but fifty years have passed since the Rev. John Winebrenner promulgated the doctrines of baptism by immersion and the washing of feet, the ministers of that church number probably five hundred, and the membership well on to sixty thousand. Mr. Winebrenner was the author of a number of religious and controversial works, those on "Regeneration," "Brief Views of the Church of God," and a volume of "Practical and Doctrinal Sermons" being the more important. He edited for several years the Gospel Publisher, now the Church Advocate. In the early years of his ministry he was an uncompromising opponent of human slavery. The Rev. Mr. Winebrenner died at Harrisburg, on the 12th of September, 1860, at the age of sixty-three. Over his remains, in the Harrisburg cemetery, the denomination have erected a handsome monument.

NICHOLAS B. WOOD.

Nicholas Baylies Wood, son of James Wood, was a native of Vermont, born April 2, 1792. He was well educated, and came to Harrisburg about 1809, teaching school in the neighborhood. He subsequently took charge of the school of Abiathar Hopkins, who had entered into law partnership with Francis R. Shunk. In the mean time he studied under Mr. Hopkins, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in October, 1818, and soon acquired an extensive practice. He was appointed by Governor Shulze deputy attorney-general for Dauphin County, January, 1824, serving until January, 1827. Mr. Wood died at Harrisburg, Saturday, Sept. 1, 1832, aged thirty-nine years. He was a gentleman of fine abilities, and enjoyed the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens. He married, Dec. 5, 1822, Catharine, daughter of Henry Belder, Esq., who survives; and their children were Henry Belder, a lawyer, residing in New Jersey; Alpheus, married and residing in England; and America, married Maj. Henry Sheaffer, of Harrisburg.

GOVERNOR GEORGE WOLF.

George Wolf, the son of — Wolf, was born Aug. 12, 1777, in Allen township, Northampton Co., Pa. His father was an emigrant from the Alsatian provinces, Germany. He left two sons,—Phillip and George,—who inherited the vigor, good sense, and integrity of the father. George was educated at a classical school established in Northampton County by a society formed for the purpose, which was presided over by Robert Andrews, A.M., a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. He here acquired a good knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages, and of the sciences usually pursued in a liberal education. Leaving this school, he for a time had the charge of his father's farm, and also acted as principal of the academy in his native township. He soon after entered the prothonotary's office of Northampton County as clerk, and at the same time studied law under the direction of the Hon. John Ross. He early espoused the political principles of Mr. Jefferson, and in 1799 advocated the election of Thomas McKean Governor, the latter being at that time affiliated with the Republicans. When Mr. Jefferson became President he appointed Mr. Wolf postmaster at Easton. Afterwards Governor McKean appointed him clerk of the Orphans' Court of the county, which position he held until 1809. In 1814 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and the year following was a candidate for the Senate, but defeated on account of a division of the party and the formation of a double ticket.

GOVERNOR GEORGE WOLF.

In 1824 he was elected a member of the United States House of Representatives, and was re-elected for the two succeeding terms, having no opposition in the first two elections, and being returned in the latter by a very large majority. While in Congress he acquired the reputation of a hard worker and a conscientious, upright member. He was a pronounced friend to American industry, and labored and voted for those measures which would best protect and foster it and build up the prosperity of the country.

In 1829 he was nominated as candidate for Governor, and was triumphantly elected. He was not an aspirant for the office of Governor. He received the nomination without knowing that any considerable strength in the nominating convention was in his favor. But when the will of the people was declared he abandoned a lucrative practice at the Northampton court and devoted himself unreservedly to the duties of chief magistrate. The State had embarked in gigantic schemes of public improvements designed to connect the Eastern waters with the Western,— traversing that formidable barrier, the Allegheny range,—and the rivers of the centre with Lake Erie and the streams from the north. When he took his seat in the gubernatorial chair he found these works projected and in various stages of progress. An immense debt had been contracted, and before these expenditures could be made to realize anything the sum must be doubled and quadrupled. The finances were in a deplorable condition. The credit of the State was at so low an ebb that capitalists were unwilling to place their money in the hands of the commonwealth. In this emergency it became necessary to resort to a compulsory loan from the banks whose charters required them to lend to the State. It was at this period that Governor Wolf came into office. The outlook was most gloomy, and to a Governor who should have figured to himself a rule of ease and enjoyment would have afforded little promise. There were two courses for him to pursue, either break down the system of improvements, throw away the most of what had been expended, and allow the State to languish on with paralyzed industry, or by a bold and vastly expensive policy finish what had been begun, even with the certainty of contracting an enormous debt for future generations to liquidate. He resolutely took the responsibility of the latter course, and he had no sooner come to the executive chair than he addressed to the Legislature, in his message, a recommendation for the vigorous prosecution of the public works, and the adoption of a system of taxation by which adequate funds would be realized for regularly paying the interest on past loans and such as in the future might be negotiated. The independent attitude assumed by the Governor had a magical effect. The caviller was silenced, and the popular will secured.

The most substantial and enduring merit of Governor Wolf was evinced in his advocacy of a system of popular education, and to him is largely due the honor of its adoption. In compliance with the judicious recommendation of the Governor, "by great industry, assiduity, and perseverance a mass of valuable information was obtained, which unfolded a fund of knowledge in relation to the advantages, the utility, the cheapness, in short, the decided preference which a system of common schools, of general interest, and sustained and encouraged by the public bounty, maintained over every other plan of education of a private or partial character." Being thus provided, a bill was drawn embodying what were believed to be the best features of those systems which had been most successful in other States, and at the session of 1834 it "passed both branches of the Legislature with a unanimity," says the Governor, "rarely equaled, perhaps never surpassed, in the annals of legislation." It was a consummation for which he had long and earnestly labored, and must have been a source of gratification and a subject of gratulation through life that his administration was graced with an event of such momentous import. There were still troubles to be encountered in putting it into successful operation, and great labors were required of his successors in preserving the principle intact. But the Rubicon was passed, the system was inaugurated, and, thanks to the labors of wise men and the care of an overruling Providence, the banner then thrown to the breeze has never been furled.

The Governor was a candidate for a third term, but a division having arisen in the party by which he had been supported, and a third candidate in the person of Henry A. Muhlenberg being presented, the vote was divided and Wolf was defeated. In the following year he was appointed by Gen. Jackson to one of the most responsible positions in the government, that of first comptroller of the Treasury of the United States. For two years he discharged the duties of this office most acceptably, and at the end of that period he was appointed by President Van Buren collector of the port of Philadelphia. On the 11th of March, 1840, he died very suddenly, while yet in the vigor of manhood, greatly lamented, in the sixty-third year of his age. His remains rest in the cemetery at Harrisburg. His only daughter became the wife of Henry Buehler, of Harrisburg, and their children were George Wolf Buehler and Mary, the wife of Rev. Thomas H. Robinson, D.D.

THOMAS WORLEY.

Thomas Worley, son of Daniel Worley, was born Jan. 7, 1799, near Hanover, York Co., Pa. He was descended from Francis Worley, one of the first settlers west of the Susquehanna, in what is now York County, and who took a prominent part in the events of that section of the Province of Pennsylvania. Thomas Worley had slight opportunities for education, receiving, however, that which the schools of his native village afforded and the night schools of Harrisburg. He came to the latter place at the age of fifteen, where he learned the trade of wagon-maker and wheelwright. He established himself in business, and during the era when the transportation between the Eastern cities and Pittsburgh was carried on in wagons his business was quite extensive. Not anxious for political preferment, he was, nevertheless, elected a director of the poor for the county of Dauphin, and filled several municipal offices with ability and faithfulness. He was a man of good habits, of sterling integrity, and of great perseverance in the pursuit of what he deemed right, and perchance no man in his sphere of life ever exercised a greater or a better influence over the neighbors and friends with whom he was associated. He died at Harrisburg, on the 18th of April, 1868, aged sixty-nine years. Mr. Worley married, about 1825, Mary Uhler, born Oct. 26, 1800, in Dauphin County, Pa., died Oct. 2, 1878, at Harrisburg, daughter of John Uhler, "one of the most amiable of women." Their children were Susannah, Rev. Daniel, Frederick Uhler, Solomon, Thomas, Richard Fulton, and William.

MAJOR JOHN WRIGHT.

John Wright was a native of Ireland, born about 1745. He came to America in early life, and located in New Jersey, where he probably taught school until the opening of the war of the Revolution. He held the position of a quartermaster in the New Jersey troops during the struggle for independence, and at the close of the conflict settled at Paterson, in that State, from which place he removed to Harrisburg, about the year 1797, and opened, on the 10th of August of that year, "an English school in the German school-house" there. On the removal of John Wyeth as postmaster by President Adams in 1798, Maj. Wright was appointed to that office. This he took charge of in connection with his school, holding the office until his death, which occurred on the 4th of January, 1814. He married, at Trenton, N. J., Aug. 14, 1778, Rose Chambers, daughter of Alexander Chambers, one of the leading merchants of that town during the last half of last century. Her mother, Elizabeth Chambers, was one of the matrons who received Washington at the bridge at Trenton on the 21st of April, 1789. Mrs. Wright was one of Harrisburg's most estimable women, and on the death of her husband succeeded to the post-office, which she retained until her death, in March, 1822. Maj. Wright was an ardent patriot, an excellent teacher, a faithful officer, an active, energetic citizen, and one of the leaders of public opinion seventy and eighty years ago.

JOHN WYETH.

John Wyeth, son of Ebenezer Wyeth and Mary Winship, was born March 31, 1770, at Cambridge, Mass. He was at an early age apprenticed to the printing business, and on reaching his majority was induced to go to San Domingo, to superintend a large printing establishment. While there the insurrection of the blacks occurred, and all that he had acquired was lost. It was with great difficulty that he even succeeded in escaping from the island, and then only by the connivance of a friend, one of the officers who assisted in searching the vessels about leaving the port. Dressed as a common sailor, and working among them, he eluded their vigilance, and subsequently reached Philadelphia. In relating to his friends the incidents of that rebellion, one of the most cruel and vindictive the world ever knew, there was one which seemed ever to rise up as a present vision instead of a past reality. It was the execution of two of the leading rebels who had been captured. They were broken upon the wheel, and afterwards, when the machinery stopped, left in that condition to die. In this state one of them asked for a pinch of snuff, but no one seemed willing to grant this boon to the culprit, when Mr. Wyeth, borrowing a snuff-box, went and held pinch after pinch to the nose of the unfortunate criminal. Arriving at Philadelphia, he worked some time in the different printing establishments there, and in 1792 went to Harrisburg, where, in connection with John W. Allen, he purchased the paper started the previous year by Maj. Eli Lewis, and commenced the publication of the Oracle of Dauphin, a newspaper he successfully carried on until November, 1827. Mr. Wyeth's paper supported the Federal views of that great party during the whole course of its existence. Its columns were open, nevertheless, to the communications of all. In those days, before the principles of Republican rule were fully digested, many a nervous essay was put forth on either side of the question by able men of both parties. He was appointed postmaster of Harrisburg in October, 1793, under the administration of President Washington, of which he was a strenuous advocate and admirer. He was removed in July, 1798, by Mr. Adams' postmaster-general, on account of the incompatibility of the office of postmaster and the editor of a newspaper.

In connection with his newspaper, Mr. Wyeth established a book-store and a publishing-house, from which he issued a large number of books, the most notable of which were an early "History of the United States of America," Gaydon's "Memoirs," and a music-book compiled by himself. The circulation of the latter for that early day was wonderful, its several editions aggregating one hundred and twenty thousand copies. To this he supplemented a second part, intended especially for the Methodist Church, of which there were published about twenty-five thousand. He was one of Harrisburg's most energetic citizens, and was deeply interested in its prosperity and welfare. He caused the construction of several valuable improvements, which remain as evidences of his enterprising spirit and good judgment. He was one of the earliest friends of the Harrisburg academy, and served as trustee, of which body he was also president. Upon his retirement from publisher he removed to Philadelphia, where he died Jan. 23, 1858, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. His life thus prolonged was marked by affability and cheerfulness, and his philosophy was of a practical character. He was exceedingly industrious, and whilst in business could always find something for his hands to do. And in later life, when the concerns of his printing-office were transferred to younger hands, he knew how to divide his time between his reading and his social pleasures.

Mr. Wyeth was twice married,—first to Louisa Weiss, daughter of Lewis and Mary Weiss,¹ of Phila-

¹ Lewis Weiss, born Dec. 23, 1717, in Berlin, Prussia, studied conveyancing, and emigrated to America, landing at Philadelphia on the 13th of December, 1755, where he opened an office on Arch Street, between Fourth and Fifth. He was one of the founders of the German Society of Philadelphia, of which he was president. He was a Moravian, and delphia. She was the mother of all his children, and died in 1822. He married secondly, in 1826, Lydia Allen, of Philadelphia.

J. M. Lyette

JOSIAH C. YOUNG.

Josiah Carothers Young, son of Daniel H. Young and Sarah Duncan, was born April 17, 1821, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the common schools of the borough, and learned the trade of a carpenter, which occupation he followed several years. He subsequently taught school, and at the time of his death was a teacher in the public schools of Harrisburg. For a long period he was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Dauphin and Harrisburg. From 1860 to 1868 he was prothonotary and clerk of the courts of Dauphin County, a position he filled with great acceptability. He died at Harrisburg, April 1, 1881, aged almost sixty years. He was a faithful and conscientious public officer, an honored and respected citizen, while in the Methodist Church, of which body he was an ordained local preacher, highly esteemed as a sincere and devout laborer. Mr. Young married Sept. 21, 1843, Catharine Mary Kinter, daughter of George and Elizabeth Kinter, who survives, and their children were William N., John W., George C., Charles W., Albert H., Charles C., and William L., of whom John W. and William L. survive.

COL. GEORGE ZIEGLER.

George Ziegler, the son of George Ziegler, a native of the Palatinate, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., July 3, 1768. He was brought up to mercantile pursuits, came to Harrisburg in 1795, and began merchandising, in which he was quite successful. In his early life he took an important part in public affairs. He was frequently a member of the Borough Council, was lieutenant-colonel of the Sixty-sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Militia, in 1807, and coroner from Jan. 12, 1809, to Dec. 18, 1811. Col. Ziegler died at Harrisburg, Aug. 28, 1845, aged seventy-seven years. His wife, Elizabeth, born Dec. 6, 1777, died Jan. 2, 1853. They left three daughters, Catharine, married George Kunkel; Mary, married Rev. John P. Hecht; and Elizabeth, married Rev. Frederick Rothrock. Col. Ziegler was an estimable citizen, a gentleman of sterling integrity and worth.

GEORGE ZINN.

George Zinn, son of John Jacob Zinn and Catharine Greenawalt, was born April 6, 1810, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a fair English education in the schools of the borough, and early in life began to acted as an attorney for that denomination prior to 1782, and was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1786. He died Oct. 23, 1796, at Philadelphia. One of his daughters married George Kline, of Carlisle; another, John Wyeth, of Harrisburg, both printers and editors.

learn the trade of tanning with his father, who had established a large business in the town many years previous, and to which the son eventually succeeded and successfully carried on for over thirty years. He served in several local offices, and in whatever trusts confided was faithful. He died at Harrisburg on the 21st of January, 1878, in his sixty-eighth year. He was a gentleman of considerable force of character, of strict integrity, of amiable manners, and was deservedly held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens. Mr. Zinn married, April 19, 1836, Anna Margareta Miller, daughter of John Jacob Miller and Elizabeth Beader, who survives. They had Mary, married William H. Eckels, paymaster U. S. A.; John and George, of Philadelphia; Amy, married George Smith; Catharine and Charles, died young; and Margey, married Dr. Ross Swartz.

ROBERT AUCHMUTY, M.D.

Robert Auchmuty, the son of Samuel Auchmuty, was born near Sunbury, Northumberland Co., Pa., in the year 1785. He was descended from an old Celtic family of Scotland. Robert Auchmuty, the first of the American family of that name, an eminent lawyer, was in practice at Boston, Mass., as early as 1719. He died in 1750, leaving several children. Among these, Robert, who in 1767 became judge of the Court of Admiralty at Boston; Samuel, who was rector of Trinity Church, New York City; and Arthur Gates. The latter came to Pennsylvania as early as 1765, and located in then Lancaster County. In that year we find him commissioned as an Indian trader, "with permission to trade with the natives at Penn's Creek, Shamokin, and such other forts as may by his Majesty or the Provincial authorities be established." He first settled at the mouth of Penn's Creek, on the Isle of Que, and from thence removed to the opposite side of the Susquehanna, a few miles below Fort Augusta, in what is now Lower Augusta township, Northumberland Co. During the war of the Revolution, Samuel Auchmuty, one of his sons and father of the doctor, entered the patriot army, and was in service from the winter at Valley Forge until the close of the war. The veteran's remains rest in the old burial-ground at Millersburg unmarked, and the spot unknown. Dr. Robert Auchmuty received a good education, studied medicine, and began the practice of his profession at Millersburg about 1830-31. Apart from the duties of his profession he served many years as a justice of the peace, being first commissioned by Governor Ritner. He was an enterprising, active citizen, and a warm advocate of the common-school system, when that noble measure was adopted, and was a gentleman beloved and respected by his fellow-citizens. He died at Millersburg in 1849, at the age of sixty-four, and is buried in the new cemetery at that place. He was the father of S. P. Auchmuty, of Millersburg.

JACOB AWL, OF PAXTANG.

Jacob Awl was born Aug. 6, 1727, in the north of Ireland. He learned the trade of a tanner, was a man of means when he came to America, and settled at an early date in Paxtang, near his relative, John Harris, of Harris' Ferry, where he took up a large tract of land which he improved, erected a tannery, and on which he lived to the time of his death. He became a prominent personage in Paxtang, was an ensign and lieutenant in Col. John Elder's battalion of rangers in the frontier wars of 1756 to 1764, and at the outset of the war for independence, aided by his counsel and his purse in organizing the associated battalions of Lancaster County, which did such effective service in the Revolution. When the new county of Dauphin was erected, Mr. Awl was appointed one of the commissioners in the act relating thereto, and John Harris afterwards appointed him one of the trustees or commissioners for the public grounds ceded by him at the laying out of the town of Harrisburg for public uses. He was a representative man, influential and potential in the county, yet preferred domestic retirement to the struggle of office; and when he was offered the nomination for representative in the General Assembly, he positively declined. He died at his residence in Paxtang, Sept. 26, 1793, at the age of sixty-six years. Mr. Awl married Sarah Sturgeon, born Sept. 1, 1739; died June, 1809.

JOHN W. COWDEN.

John Wallace Cowden, son of Matthew Benjamin Cowden and Mary Wallace, was born Aug. 29, 1817, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father was long in public life, and for years was an associate judge of the county. John Wallace was brought up as a farmer, but as he grew to maturer years his attention was turned to surveying, and he came to Harrisburg, where his latter days were passed as a practical surveyor, and where he died on the 22d of July, 1872. He was, writes a contemporary, "an unobtrusive, modest, and estimable citizen, successful in his business, trustworthy in all the relations of life, and a sincere and earnest Christian." Mr. Cowden married Mary E. Hatton, daughter of Frederick Hatton and Mary Barnett, of Lower Paxtang. They left a large family.

JAMES ELDER.

James Elder, son of Robert R. Elder and Sarah Sherer, was born Aug. 18, 1826, in Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His early years were spent on his father's farm. At the age of twenty-four he removed to New Castle, Pa., where he engaged in mercantile business until the death of his father in 1858, when he returned, and with his brother Robert purchased the homestead farm. During the war for the Union Mr. Elder raised a company for the emergency. In 1867 he embarked in the coal trade with a younger brother, withdrawing in 1869, and entered into partnership in the lumber business, in which he continued until failing health compelled him to relinquish all active pursuits. He left the farm and took up his residence in the city of Harrisburg, where he died Jan. 12, 1877, in his fifty-first year. Mr. Elder married, March 2, 1854, Rebecca O. Whitehill, daughter of John Whitehill, and they had Catharine O., Robert R., Martha K., Edward, and Ida.

HOTHER HAGE, C. E.

Hother Hage, son of Jens Friedrich and Gertrude Heitmann Hage, was born April 9, 1800, in the city of Copenhagen, kingdom of Denmark. He was a graduate at fourteen years of age of the Royal University of Copenhagen. In 1819 he came to the United States and settled upon a tract of land known as "Gallagher's Improvement," situated on Clearfield Creek, Clearfield Co., Pa., presented him by his father. He built a log hut and remained there about nine years, passing that time in studying, clearing the land, and hunting. In 1832 he found employment on the construction of the State canals in his chosen profession of civil engineering. In 1835 he was employed as chief engineer on the construction of the West Feliciana Railroad of Louisiana, a short line of road running from Bayou Sara to Woodville. During the years 1836-38 he was chief engineer of the Franklin Railroad, in Pennsylvania. May 30, 1838, he was appointed by the canal commissioners of the State principal engineer upon the survey of a route from the town of Chambersburg to Pittsburgh, also on the Raystown branch of the Juniata, as contemplated in the act of the Pennsylvania State Legislature, passed April 14, 1838. April 19, 1847, he was appointed principal assistant engineer of the eastern division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, under Wm. B. Forster, Jr. In 1852 he was employed in the construction of the Dauphin and Susquehanna Coal Company Railroad. From Sept. 1, 1850, to July 19, 1859, he was principal engineer on the enlargement of the Union Canal. July 19, 1859, he was appointed by Governor William F. Packer a commissioner to examine that portion of the line of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad lying between the harbor of Erie and the borough of Warren. On the 24th of April, 1860, was elected civil engineer to make survey and plan of the city of Harrisburg. In 1866 he was employed in the office of the assessor of United States internal revenue, continuing in the employ of the government until 1872, in which year, on the 27th day of June, he departed this life. Mr. Hage was married Dec. 18, 1849, by the Rev. J. Baker, of Lancaster, Pa., to Mary A. Kendig, second daughter of Henry and Salome Kendig, of Lancaster County.

James Elder

CAPT. JOHN P. RUTHERFORD.

John Parke Rutherford, son of William Rutherford and Sarah Swan, was born Feb. 14, 1802, in now Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was a farmer, and brought up in that pursuit. He held many places of public trust in his life; was superintendent of the Wiconisco Canal as early as 1837, an auditor of the county, a jury commissioner, and was vice-president and treasurer of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society. He was a strong anti-slavery advocate, as all his family were, and many a weary pilgrim in the days of the fugitive slave act, sore of foot and heart, found in Capt. Rutherford hospitable assistance, material aid, and manly encouragement. He hated slavery because he considered it a moral sin and a political blight upon the free institutions of America. During the late Rebellion he served as quartermaster in the United States army, ranking fourth on the list. While stationed at Harper's Ferry he was captured in one of the raids on that stronghold, but released on parole. He was then ordered to Camp Douglas, and subsequently to Charleston, S. C. In the latter city, about the close of the war, he contracted a disease from the effects of which he never fully recovered. He died at his residence in Swatara on the 12th of May, 1871, aged sixty-nine years. Capt. Rutherford married Eliza Rutherford, daughter of Samuel Rutherford, born Oct. 30, 1801, who died Jan. 30, 1850, and their children were Samuel Silas Brisban, William Swan, John Alexander, Elizabeth Martha, Sarah Marguot (married Rev. Job D. Randolph), Mary Jane (married John Elder), and Eleanor Gilchrist.

WILLIAM W. RUTHERFORD, M.D.

William Wilson Rutherford, son of William Rutherford and Sarah Swan, was born Nov. 23, 1805, in Paxtang (now Swatara) township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was, in the fourth generation, from Thomas Rutherford, one of the earliest settlers of the valley, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Whiteside, of Harrisburg, then a prominent physician, in 1830, and after the removal of Dr. Whiteside continued under the instructions of Dr. Dean. He attended the lectures of Jefferson Medical College, 1830 to 1832, graduating from that institution on the 7th of March, the latter year. He located first at Mechanicsburg, where he remained nearly a year, when entering into partnership with his preceptor, Dr. Dean, he removed to Harrisburg, where for forty years he practiced his profession, winning for himself an honorable name not only at home but abroad. Dr. Rutherford had what few physicians possessed,—a most perfect knowledge of diseases in general; and it mattered little what the case, his diagnosis, when called in consultation, was final as it was accurate. An extensive practice of over forty years in every department of medicine and surgery gave him such a perfect knowledge of his profession that the loss of his advice and assistance in difficult cases has been severely felt by his surviving brethren.

For eight years prior to his death he had been the regularly-appointed surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, although he served it some ten years previously when called upon. From the organization of the old Harrisburg Gas Company he was one of its directors, and at his death president of the company. In numerous other enterprises he took an active part, and was always one of Harrisburg's public-spirited citizens. His life was an eventful one, and one fraught with many incidents of interest. In season and out of season, in life and in death, his good-natured face appeared upon the stage, gladly, even tearfully, welcome. He died at Harrisburg on the 13th of March, 1873, aged sixty-seven years. Dr. Rutherford married Eleanor Crain, daughter of Col. Richard M. Crain, who survives. Their children who lived to mature years were Dr. Alexander, who died shortly after his father; Sarah, married Capt. W. Harvey Brown, U.S.A., also deceased; and Elizabeth Crain, widow of the late John C. Kunkel.

BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY.

II.

HAMILTON ALRICKS.

Hamilton Alricks, son of James Alricks and Martha Hamilton, was born June 1, 1806, at Oakland Mills, in Lost Creek Valley, then Mifflin County. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy at such a period as those who passed through it, from 1816 until 1826, know that the whole land was stricken with poverty, and collegiate education out of the question. Indeed, out of the thirty students of the classics at the academy, and among them the son of Governor Findlay, but one is remembered, who went, or could afford to go, to college. With such an education as the school could afford, and the study of history on top of it, Hamilton Alricks commenced reading law with Samuel Douglas, Esq., afterward attorney-general, and was admitted to practice in 1828. From the outset he exhibited more than ordinary ability, connected with indomitable energy and perseverance.

He has labored steadily at his profession for fifty years; rising usually at five in the morning, but at the same time taking such outdoor exercise as to secure sound, vigorous health, and is at this day able to endure as much mental and physical labor as most men younger in years, and withal, finding in the midst of professional engagements as much time and leisure to devote to strangers, and the hospitalities and civilities of life, as any other man in the community. During his professional career he has been engaged at every term of the court, in the trial of many of the most important civil and criminal cases, and in numerous cases in the Supreme Court, as the reports will show from 2d Watts to the last volume of Outerbridge. In the outset of his practice he was engaged as counsel by Mr. Gest, in the case of Gest vs. Espy, 2d Watts 266, after Thomas Elder, Esq., a senior member of the bar, had abandoned the case, upon a verdict being found for defendant. Mr. Alricks removed the case to the Supreme Court, where he succeeded in reversing the judgment. On one occasion, in arguing a case in the Supreme Court, and while reading an authority, he was abruptly interrupted by Judge Houston, saying, "That is not the law." "But," said Mr. Alricks, "I am citing from the opinions of the court."

Judge Houston sharply responded, "I don't care; for no judge ever declared such to be the law." To which Mr. Alricks further replied, "I have been reading the opinion of the court, delivered by your honor." "Then," said the judge, "the reporter took me down wrong; let me see the book." After examining it for some time, the judge closed it with the remark, "After all, I don't think this authority has any application to the case in hearing."

Proceedings were commenced before the Legislature of Pennsylvania about the year 1845, and testimony taken for the purpose of framing articles of impeachment against the Hon. William N. Irvine, judge of the York and Adams judicial district, and the only counsel of the respondent was Mr. Alricks, who conducted the defense with such skill and ability that the committee refused to report articles.

The then State treasurer and auditor-general on several occasions selected Mr. Alricks to argue cases on the part of the commonwealth involving questions of constitutional law. His argument before the Supreme Court of the United States in Butler et al., late Canal Commissioners of Pennsylvania, vs. the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 10th Howard United States Supreme Court Reports, 402, was not only well received by the profession as a sound exposition of the law, as to what constitutes a contract within the meaning of the Tenth Section of the First Article of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a State from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts; but also as an able definition of the power of the Legislature to create and abolish offices, to impose taxes, etc., and will remain a lasting memorial of his research, industry, and ability as a lawyer.

In his long course of practice, and it has been an extensive one, it is not known that he ever had any rude or personal controversy with any member of the bar. He began the world without a dollar, and by his talents, integrity, and industry has risen to the front rank in his profession and acquired an ample competency, at no time condescending "to stoop" to politicians or any other class of men in order to obtain office or professional business.

He ambition Alricks

He has not entered the arena of politics, that maelstrom which has shipwrecked so many able men, but it has been his fortune, for his good professional reputation and success, and for his private gain, that he has lived in a district in which for fifty years he has acted politically with the minority. He was one year a member of the Legislature; was a member of the Chicago Convention in 1864, which nominated Gen. McClellan for President, and the series of resolutions drawn up and offered in the convention by him abounded in patriotic sentiments, evincing a rare and marked ability. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention for the revision of the constitution of the State, in 1872-73, that held its sessions first in Harrisburg and subsequently in Philadelphia, and acted on the committees on Cities and City Charters, and on Religious and Charitable Corporations and Societies. He has also been a director of cemetery, school, hospital, and bank in Harrisburg.

Mr. Alricks married, Dec. 28, 1837, Caroline, daughter of Rev. Levi Bull, D.D., of Chester County, Pa., a son of Col. Thomas Bull, of Revolutionary fame. She was born Aug. 3, 1811. Their only daughter, Annie, is the wife of Benjamin L. Forster, a lawyer of Harrisburg, and their only son, Levi, a student at Yale in the class of 1866, read law with his father, and has been a member of the Dauphin County bar since his admission, in 1865. *

CHARLES L. BAILEY.

Charles Lukens Bailey, son of Joseph Bailey and Martha Lukens, was born March 9, 1821, in Chester County, Pa. His paternal ancestors were of English, and his maternal ancestors of Welsh, descent. His great-grandfather, Edward Bailey, was a resident of Bucks County, and his grandfather, William Bailey, a resident farmer in Philadelphia County, Pa. His father, born in 1796, settled in Chester County in 1819, where he carried on farming until 1838, when he engaged in the iron business at the old Lukens Mill in Coatesville, and there manufactured boiler-plate for six years. In 1844 he removed to Berks County, near Pottstown, and erected on the site of the "Old Forge" of the Pine Iron-Works, a rolling-mill, and carried on business alone for a few years, and afterwards in connection with his sons (Joseph Bailey & Sons) until within a short period, when he retired from active life, leaving his manufacturing interest then in the hands of his son, Joseph L. Bailey. The other children of Joseph and Martha Bailey were Charles L., Sarah, Edward (manager of the iron-works at Glasgow, Montgomery Co.), Dr. George (of Philadelphia), William (treasurer and manager of the Thorndale Iron Company), Hannah, and Anne (deceased).

Charles L. Bailey, eldest son, obtained his early education at the Westtown School, Chester County, and for some time thereafter was a clerk in the drug-store of Thomas Evans & Co., Philadelphia. His career in the iron business began in 1838 as a clerk for his father at Cotesville, where he became thoroughly conversant with the details of the business carried on at that place. He removed with his parents to Berks County, where he continued his clerkship for five years, and from 1849 to 1852 was a partner with his father in the Pine Iron-Works.

In August of the latter year, Mr. Bailey removed to Harrisburg and founded the old Central Iron-Works, which he has latterly used as a puddling-mill. Here he continued business until 1859, when he became interested with the late James McCormick in the nail-works at Fairview, Cumberland Co., rebuilt the works, and carried them on successfully until 1866, when he retired from the firm, and in connection with his brother, Dr. George Bailey (Charles L. Bailey & Bro.), founded and erected the present Chesapeake Nail-Works in Harrisburg, now carried on under the firm-name of Charles L. Bailey & Co., Artemus Wilhelm being a part owner in the concern.

In 1869, Mr. Bailey removed to Pottstown, and until 1875 was the treasurer and general manager of the Pottstown Iron Company, manufacturing nails, boiler-plate, and pig-iron. Closing out his interests there he returned to Harrisburg, and in 1877-78 erected the present Central Iron-Works, contiguous to the Chesapeake Nail-Works, of which he is president. Mr. Bailey is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of progress and enterprise, as his various industrial undertakings attest, and although his mind is largely absorbed in business pursuits, he has not held entirely aloof from duties incumbent upon him as a citizen. He is one of the directors of the Harrisburg National Bank, president of the board of trustees of the Market Square Presbyterian Church, and in 1880 he was appointed by Governor Hoyt a trustee of the Pennsylvania Insane Asylum. He was elected a member of the Select Council of the city in 1877, was a member of the State Legislature in 1879, and in 1881 he was again elected a member of the Select Council, chosen president, and served as chairman of the Finance Committee. Mr. Bailey married, in 1856, Emma H. Doll, daughter of William Doll and Sarah M. Elder, of Harrisburg, whose maternal great-grandfather was Rev. John Elder. Their surviving children are William Elder, a graduate of Yale, in the class of 1882; Edward, Jr., a graduate of Yale Scientific Course in the class of 1881;

Charles L., a student at Yale; James B., and Emma D. *

JULIUS AUGUSTUS BECK.

Julius Augustus Beck, son of John Beck (born at Graceham, Md.; died Feb. 11, 1873), and his wife Joanna Augusta (born at Hope, N. J., died in February, 1877), was born April 2, 1831, in Litiz, Lancaster Co., Pa., and was educated at the Litiz Academy, of which his father, John Beck, was principal. In early life he devoted himself to the art of sculpture, and in 1855 visited Italy for the purpose of perfecting himself in that branch of the fine arts. In 1861 he turned his attention to portrait and landscape painting, an occupation in which he still continues. He married Miss Susan Maria Kepple, daughter of Henry and Catharine Kepple, of Lancaster, Pa., and their children are Abraham Raphael, Catharine Augusta, Henry Kepple, John, Martin Augustus, Marion, Edith Isabella, and Mary Alice.

PETER BERNHEISEL, SR.

Peter Bernheisel, son of John Bernheisel and Catharine Loy, was born Aug. 18, 1806, in Cumberland (now Perry) County, Pa. His father was a native of Berks County, Pa., where he was born May 12, 1765, settled in Perry County about the year 1800, and where he died on the 21st of September, 1825. His mother was also a native of Berks County, born May 1, 1768, and died in Perry County on the 31st of August, 1833. Peter's early education was limited to the schools of the county until 1822, when he went to Carlisle, where he learned the trade of a carpenter and builder. About the year 1832 he came to Harrisburg, where he became a contract builder until the year 1859. He was the builder of the county jail and the Presbyterian Church on Second Street. He served as a member of the old Borough Council during the shiplaster era, and filled other municipal offices. In 1859 he relinquished house-building and went into the lime business. Mr. Bernheisel married, first, on the 28th of August, 1826, Margaret Uhler, daughter of John and Catharine Uhler (1809-1848), and their children were John Frederick (d. s. p.), Jeremiah (d. s. p.), Peter, Augustus (d. s. p.), George (d. s. p.), William Henry, and Jacob Houser (d. s. p.); married, secondly, Elizabeth Shott, daughter of John and Barbara Shott, and they had Barbara Catharine (d. s. p.), Valentine Hummel, and Rebecca Shott (married William Painter); married, thirdly, Frances Benedick, daughter of Bernard and Elizabeth Sigman.

MAJOR L. S. BENT.

Luther Stedman Bent, son of Ebenezer Bent and Nancy Stedman, was born Dec. 6, 1820, at Quincy, Norfolk Co., Mass. His ancestors were early settlers at Milton, in that State. Luther S. attended the public schools until the age of twelve years, afterwards working on the farm until his fifteenth year, when he went to Boston, where he served five years with the New England Glass Company, situate in East Cambridge, then one of the largest establishments in the country. From that period until the commencement of the Rebellion he was engaged in the glassware and crockery business at Boston. In May, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and participated in the battle of Big Bethel. Being mustered out at the end of his term of service at Boston, he re-enlisted as a private in Company K, of the Eighteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, for three years, and served in all the grades of non-commissioned and commissioned officer to that of captain. He served through the various campaigns in which his regiment was engaged in the Army of the Potomac, and was wounded in the right hand at the second battle of Bull Run. He remained with his command until their muster out, when he was detailed to take charge of a battalion of veterans and recruits. For meritorious services at Peebles' Farm he was promoted brevet major, was afterwards, on the recommendation of Gen. Griffin, commissioned by President Lincoln as major in the United States army, at the same time by the State of Massachusetts a lieutenant-colonel, on which commissions he was never mustered. His battalion having become decimated in numbers, it was consolidated with the Thirty-second Massachusetts, when at his request he was mustered out as a supernumerary officer. He returned home, and shortly after made engagements with the officers of the Union Pacific Railroad, and remained in their employ from the commencement to the completion of that great enterprise, filling various positions. During the last two years he was one of the largest contractors for grading that road, comprising two hundred miles through Salt Lake Valley and the Promontory. He subsequently became engaged in cattle-raising on the plains, and was one of the pioneers in that business, being among the first to establish cattle ranches along the line of the railroad in Nebraska. Here he remained three years. Returning to the East he married a daughter of S. M. Felton, Esq., of Philadelphia, which relations brought him into connection with the Pennsylvania Steel Company. In 1874 he took the superintendency of that immense establishment, and as the progress and history of that company is given elsewhere, we shall not further refer save that none have contributed more to its success than the energy, business management, and forethought of the subject of this sketch.

ANDREW K. BLACK.

Andrew Krause Black, son of Joseph Black (1794-1848) and Elizabeth Krause (1803-72), was born Jan. 16, 1826, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the borough, and learned the trade of bricklayer and builder, in which occupation he is still engaged. He served as a member of the Select and Common Council of the city of Harrisburg, and for several years was one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison. He represented the county in the Legislature in 1871 and 1872, and under the Constitution of 1874 represented the city of Harrisburg in that body in 1877 and 1878. Mr. Black married, in 1849, Rebecca Irwin Clark, daughter of William and Maria Clark, of Clark's Ferry, and their children were Emma, Harriet, George Murray, Alfred T., Irene Elizabeth (married J. C. Harlicker), Maria Clark, and Amy Chaplin.

COL. FREDERICK K. BOAS.

Frederick Krause Boas, son of Frederick Boas (1785-1817) and Elizabeth Krause (1797-1847), was born April 5, 1815, at Harrisburg, Pa. He attended the schools of the borough until his sixteenth year. From August, 1832, to April, 1838, he was a clerk in the Harrisburg post-office, then assistant postmaster, as superintendent (not regularly) until July, 1848. He studied law with the late Judge Krause, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 22, 1837, in which profession he has been since engaged. He was appointed by Governor Porter aid on his staff, with the rank of colonel, which he held from 1839 to 1845; was school director from 1839 to 1848, being treasurer of the board from 1840 to 1842, and also served in the Borough Council six years, from 1846 to 1849. Col. Boas married in 1871, Sarah C. Nolen, daughter of William and Maria Nolen, of Harrisburg.

WILLIAM D. BOAS.

William Dick Boas, son of Jacob Boas and Sarah Dick, was born Sept. 6, 1803, at Harrisburg, Pa. He learned the art of printing with George Getz, of Reading, on the Berks and Schuylkill Herald, and afterwards worked at his profession in Philadelphia, Allentown, and Harrisburg. In 1837 he purchased an interest in the Reporter office at Harrisburg, in partnership, first, with Samuel D. Patterson, and then with William F. Copeland, retiring in 1842. During this period he was printer of the journals and bills of the House and Senate. He was cashier and clerk in the State treasurer's department during the administrations of Bickel, Bailey, Magraw, and McGrath, about nine years in all; was a clerk in the surveyor-general's office, and four years prothonotary of the county of Dauphin. From 1866 to 1868 he was one of the publishers of the Patriot. Mr. Boas married, in 1828, Martha Ingram, born Nov. 30, 1808, died Aug. 23, 1850, and their children are Margaret Ingram and Emma Elizabeth.

JACOB C. BOMBERGER.

Jacob Kaufman Bomberger, son of John Bomberger (1773-1847) and Elizabeth Kaufman (1784-1857), was born Dec. 11, 1817, at Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa. His education was received in the schools of the town, which at that period were quite limited. His early life was passed in merchandising, and subsequently in the business of banking. During the sessions of the State Senate for 1851 and 1852 he served as assistant clerk of that body; the year following, upon the establishment of the Mechanics' Bank, was made cashier of that institution. In the historical reference to that bank we have alluded to its subsequent transfer to Mr. Bomberger as its sole owner, and through whose energy, financial tact, and ability it has become one of the most successful banking-houses in Pennsylvania. For many years Mr. Bomberger held the position of one of the trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, under the appointment of the Governor.

GEORGE M. BRUBAKER.

George M. Brubaker, son of Jacob Brubaker and Sarah Mark, was born July 19, 1824, in Millersburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather, David Brubaker, of German ancestry, resided near Millersburg, on a farm. He married a Miss Dover, and of their children, Jacob, born in 1795, learned the trade of a tanner, located some years in Chambersburg, Pa., then in 1822 removed to Millersburg, where he died in 1838. Jacob Brubaker married in 1823 Sarah Mark, of East Hanover township, Lebanon Co., who survives. Of their children who reached mature age were George M. and Margaret R., married —

Eberly. George M. Brubaker received a common-school education, and spent several years in clerking. He subsequently, in connection with his stepfather, Simon West, engaged in the tanning business, which was continued until 1847. He then began merchandising, and in 1864 made the hardware business a specialty. Mr. Brubaker married first, Feb. 12, 1850, Elizabeth Beaver, died July, 1856, daughter of George Beaver, of Perry County, and they had Clara, George, Mary, and Charles; married secondly, in July, 1857, Mary Jane Lime, daughter of Jacob Lime, of Schuylkill County, and they had Albert, William, Sarah, John, Wood, Mark, and Ray. Mr. Brubaker was the first president of the Lykens Valley Bank, now the First National Bank of Millersburg, and was also one of the founders of the Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens. He is a gentleman of enterprise and public spirit, and prominently identified with the leading industries of the Upper End. *

JAMES DONALD CAMERON.

James Donald Cameron, son of Gen. Simon Cameron and Margaret Brubaker, was born in 1833, at Middletown, Pa. He received a classical education, and studied at Princeton College. Upon leaving college he entered the Middletown Bank as clerk, of which he subsequently became cashier. From 1866 to 1874 he was president of the Northern Central Railroad, in which latter year the road was leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Gen. Grant appointed him Secretary of War, May 22, 1876, which he held until the close of that administration. In 1876 he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Cincinnati, and upon the resignation of his father, Gen. Cameron, as United States senator, was elected by the Legislature to fill the vacancy, and subsequently re-elected for the full term ending March 3, 1885. Mr. Cameron was twice married,—first to Mary McCormick, daughter of James and Eliza (Buehler) McCormick, of Harrisburg, who was the mother of all his children; and secondly to Ellen Sherman, daughter of Judge Sherman, of Cleveland, Ohio.

GEN. SIMON CAMERON.

Simon Cameron, son of Charles Cameron and Martha Pfoutz, was born March 8, 1799, at Maytown, Lancaster Co., Pa. On the paternal side he is descended from the clan Cameron, of Scotland, who shared their fortunes with the unfortunate Charles Edward, whose star of hope sunk on the field of Culloden. Donald Cameron, his great-grandfather, was a participant in that memorable battle, and having escaped the carnage made his way to America, arriving about 1745-46. He afterwards fought under the gallant Wolfe upon the Heights of Abraham, and during the war with France was in continuous service. His grandfather, Simon Cameron, was an early associator in the Revolution, and took the oath of allegiance June 1, 1778; a brother, John, signed the same day. Of the latter Gen. Bingham, of Philadelphia, is a grandson. On the maternal side he is descended from Conrad Pfoutz, an emigrant from the Palatinate, Germany. He settled in Lancaster County, and Pfoutz's Valley, in now Perry County, perpetuates the name of a hero of the border warfare of Pennsylvania in the days when the treacherous Delawares and perfidious Shawanese sought to desolate the homes of the early pioneers of our State,—John Pfoutz. Charles Cameron and Martha Pfoutz had a large family, yet a remarkable one, and the history of our country gives but few instances of the successful career of an entire family, among whom the subject of this sketch is the most prominent.

When young Cameron was about the age of nine years his parents removed to Northumberland County, where his father shortly afterwards dying, he was early cast upon his own exertions. There were then few advantages afforded by public schools, and his educational facilities were exceedingly limited. Having an unquenchable fondness for books, young Cameron was able to perceive no other means so likely to satiate his appetite as a printing-office, it seeming to him the chief centre of thought in the community in which destiny had fixed his lot. He therefore entered, in 1816, as an apprentice to the printing business with Andrew Kennedy, editor of the Northumberland County Gazette, at Northumberland, where he continued one year, when his employer, owing to financial reverses, was obliged to close his establishment. Being thus thrown out of employment, he made his way by river-boat and on foot to Harrisburg, where he secured a situation in the printing-office of James Peacock, editor of the Republican, with whom he remained until he had attained his majority.

In January, 1821, he went to Doylestown, Pa., at the solicitation of Samuel D. Ingham, where he published the Bucks County Messenger. As editor of this paper he evinced a breadth of information which, in view of his limited advantages, seemed astonishing. In March of the same year he entered into partnership with the publisher of the Doylestown Democrat, and the firm merged their papers into the Bucks County Democrat, which publication was continued until the close of the year 1821, when the establishment passed into the hands by purchase of Gen. W. T. Rodgers. The succeeding winter Mr. Cameron spent in the office of Messrs. Gales & Seaton, publishers of the National Intelligencer, at Washington, as a journeyman printer. He returned to Harrisburg in 1822, and entered into partnership with Charles Mowry in the management of the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, then the organ of the Democratic party at the State capital, and enjoyed the official patronage of the State administration, and was elected one of the printers to the State, a position he held seven years. Having been the early friend and supporter of Governor Shulze, upon his ceasing to be State printer, he was honored by that executive with the appointment of adjutant-general of Pennsylvania, the duties of which office he discharged with ability and to the satisfaction of the public.

Gen. Cameron at an early period took a deep interest in the development of internal improvements, and took extensive contracts upon the Pennsylvania Canal, then in process of construction. In 1826 he began building the section between Harrisburg and Sunbury, and after this was well under way he took one or two sections on the western division of the canal. When Louisiana granted a charter to the State Bank of that commonwealth, it provided that the bank should build a canal from Lake Pontchartrain to New Orleans. Gen. Cameron took the contract for that great work, which was then regarded by engineers as the greatest undertaking of the time. In 1831 he started for New Orleans. He employed twelve hundred men in Philadelphia, and sent them by sea to that city. He, with his engineers and tools, went down the Mississippi River, embarking at Pittsburgh. He spent nearly half a year upon the work, and demonstrated beyond a doubt its entire feasibility. He was recalled from his work on the Lake Pontchartrain Canal by a summons from Maj. Eaton, Secretary of War under Gen. Jackson, who requested him to return to Pennsylvania and organize a delegation to the National Convention, which had been called to meet in Baltimore. This was in the interest of Martin Van Buren for the Vice-Presidency. Calhoun had served eight years, had quarreled with Gen. Jackson during his second term, and had otherwise put himself in antagonism to the prevailing popularity of Jackson. Gen. Cameron respected the summons, came home and organized a delegation that went to Baltimore in the interest of Mr. Van Buren for the Vice-Presidency. This was the first National Convention ever held in the United States. Mr. Cameron was requested to accept the permanent chairmanship of that convention, but declined, and a gentleman from North Carolina was selected.

After the National Convention in Baltimore he was appointed a visitor to West Point by Gen. Jackson, and upon performing his duties on the Hudson he made his first trip to New England. He went with a brother of Bishop Potter, of Pennsylvania, and thoroughly inspected the paper-mills and other manufactures of that section.

In the winter of 1832 the Legislature chartered the bank at Middletown, and he became its cashier. From the first the bank was successful, but the duties of cashier were so limited that Gen. Cameron sought other fields of labor and usefulness, although he remained there twenty-five years. He projected and created the railroads from Middletown to Lancaster, from Harrisburg to Sunbury, from Harrisburg to Lebanon, and at the same time gave large encouragement to the Cumberland Valley Railroad. And in this connection it may be stated that the Northern Central Railroad from Harrisburg to Baltimore was captured by him from Baltimore interests and made a Pennsylvania institution; and he was at one time president of not less than four corporations, all operating lines within a few miles of the spot where he was born.

In 1838, President Van Buren tendered to Gen. Cameron the appointment of a commissioner with James Murray, one of the most respected citizens of Maryland, under a treaty with the Winnebago Indians to settle and adjust the claims made against the Indians by the traders. These claims were for goods furnished the Indians during a long period of years, and the sum appropriated by the treaty was three hundred thousand dollars. In many cases the commissioners found the claims of the traders unjust, and every account allowed by them met with the approbation of the commissioner appointed by the Indians. In the settlement of some of the claims, the aggregate amount having been reduced from over a million to about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, the traders refused to accept the award, and went to Washington with charges against the commissioners. It had been the usual custom to give the entire appropriation to the claimants, but this course did not allow of any division. The charges were met by a demand from the commissioners for a re-examination, which resulted in the appointment of a new commissioner the next year, under whose direction the Indians were assembled in council, who approved by a united vote of their council the entire acts of Messrs. Cameron and Murray, and the account thus adjudged was paid by the government.

In 1845, when James K. Polk tendered the State Department to James Buchanan, and that gentleman resigned his seat in the Senate of the United States, an election to supply the vacancy became necessary. Gen. Cameron was at this time in recognized sympathy with the Democratic party, and selected as the representative of the wing of the party which favored the policy of a protective tariff. The regular caucus nominee of the Democracy, however, was George W. Woodward, which was regarded as a free trade triumph, rendering it possible for some other Democrat known to be honestly devoted to the ever-cherished policy of the State to be elected by a union of the Whigs, Americans, and those Democrats in favor of the protective policy. The result was the election of Simon Cameron to the United States Senate. From March, 1845, to March 4, 1849, he served his State faithfully in that body, and proved himself true to the great interests committed to his charge, and he never wavered in the support of the principles on which he was elected. It may be here stated that President Polk at the first seemed inclined to ignore Mr. Cameron, declaring his election to the Senate as having been outside the party organization; but this treatment he found to his cost was not conducive to his own peace of mind, sent for Gen. Cameron, made a truce with him, and there was never any more trouble.

In the winter of 1857 the entire opposition members of the Legislature, consisting of Whigs, Native Americans, and Tariff Men, selected Gen. Cameron as their candidate to fill the place of Senator Brodhead, whose term of service expired on the 4th of March that year. The Democratic caucus nominated Col. John W. Forney, then the intimate friend of President Buchanan, who had written a letter to the Legislature naming him as his choice for the senatorship, although a large portion of the party were in favor of Henry D. Foster, who was an outspoken tariff man. The united votes of the opposition, with three Democratic votes, two from Schuylkill and one from York, in which counties Gen. Cameron possessed great strength and popularity on account of his firm devotion to their industrial interests, were cast in his favor, and he was elected for the full term. He took his seat in the Senate on the 4th of March, notwithstanding the futile assault made by his colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. Bigler, upon his title to the place, and which that body refused to consider. Gen. Cameron's return to the United States Senate brought him again prominently before the public, and in the political movements which preceded the campaign of 1860 he was named as the choice of Pennsylvania for the Presidency, and his name early associated with that of Mr. Lincoln in connection with the Republican national ticket.

Gen. Cameron's national career began at the Chicago Convention in 1860, when the Republican party, crystallized into a national organization, made its open, clear, and stern antagonism to slavery. With intuitive sagacity the advocates of slavery recognized in the Republican party the force which would ultimately overthrow it, and men like Gen. Cameron were recognized as the leaders of that force. There was no mistaking the measure on which it entered on the canvass in 1860. When Mr. Lincoln was nominated, Gen. Cameron made himself felt in such a manner as to win the confidence of that illustrious statesman. After the great political battle of that year, Gen. Cameron was the first of those to whom Mr. Lincoln turned for counsel, and the offer of a cabinet office by the latter to the former was a voluntary act, and that appointment would have been made the first in the selection of his cabinet had not intrigues interfered to defer it at the time. Mr. Lincoln looked on Gen. Cameron from first to last not only as his political, but his warm personal friend, and there were no such relations existing between the President and his other constitutional advisers. This fact was well known when the cabinet was organized. While he was in the War Department his counsel was not only potential in cabinet meetings, but was sought by the President in private, and heeded in such a marked manner as to create a feeling of hostility, which caused the President much unpleasantness. Then, too, believing that the civil war would require all the available resources of the nation to preserve the Union, doubting the speedy settlement of the trouble, he began as Secretary of War a scale of preparations to combat it which puzzled the oldest officers in the army and chagrined the leaders of the Rebellion, who had calculated much on the supineness and lethargy of the Northern people. Gen. Cameron frustrated this hope by his energy, but he had the Cabinet to a man against him. When he sought to furnish the necessary supplies for the army, he was met by sickly sentimentalism about settling the war in diplomacy. The Confederates resorted to the ruse of diplomacy by means of commissioners, for the purpose of retarding this activity, but at the same time Gen. Cameron was filling up the arsenals which had been despoiled by the former Secretary of War, thus supplying the army with huge quantities of ordnance, and commissary and quartermasters' stores, etc. Such work naturally attracted the attention of the sordid, excited the timid, aroused the jealous, and confounded the suspicious. The minister who thus labored to equip his country for a struggle with treason, the proportions of which he alone seemed fully to appreciate, was assailed for each and all of these acts. Mr. Lincoln had the fullest confidence in his Secretary of War; he believed in his sagacity and relied on his courage, but he could not wholly withstand the clamor, the outgrowth of cowardice on the one side and the cunning greed of adventurers on the other, so that Gen. Cameron, to relieve Mr. Lincoln from embarrassment, resolved to resign, and on the 11th of January, 1862, returned the portfolio of the War Department to the President; but in that act he commanded the renewed confidence of Mr. Lincoln, who the day he accepted his resignation nominated the retiring minister for the most important diplomatic mission in his gift. Nor was this all: Mr. Lincoln insisted that Gen. Cameron should name his own successor, an act which no retiring cabinet officer ever did before or since. The mission to Russia involved the safe and sagacious handling of our relations with the Czar's government at a moment when it demanded the most prudent direction. The kindly relations which existed between the colossal power of the North and the great republic of the West dated back in their amity when Catharine declined to take part with England in the suppression of American Colonial Revolution for independence. Gen. Cameron restored this feeling, and thus frustrated English and French intrigue to organize an alliance with Napoleon III. at its head in the interest of the Southern Confederacy. The country has never fully appreciated this fact, because it was a part of its diplomacy which admitted of no correspondence. This object accomplished, concluded Gen. Cameron's mission to Russia. There was in fact nothing more to do in St. Petersburg but to maintain what had been established, and he could with safety ask for his credentials and retire.

The relations between Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Cameron were always most cordial, and immediately upon his reaching the United States the latter was the accepted citizen-counselor at the White House. At this time efforts were being made looking to defeating the renomination of Mr. Lincoln for a second term. It was a period of great solicitude to the President, who with characteristic modesty declined to make any movement in his own behalf. In the winter of 1864 the intrigue referred to was talked of in political circles at Washington as a success. Gen. Cameron visited the national capital repeatedly at that time, and on reaching his farm after a return from one of these visits had a paper prepared, embodying the merits of Mr. Lincoln as President, acknowledging the fidelity and integrity of his first administration, and declaring that his renomination and re-election involved a necessity essential to the success of the war for the Union. That paper was submitted to the Republican members of both branches of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, every one of whom signed it, and in this shape was presented to Mr. Lincoln, and telegraphed to the country at large. Its publication accomplished all that the forethought of its originator anticipated. In three weeks after the issuing of this letter, it was a curious spectacle to watch the precipitation with which the Republicans in all the States hastened to declare in favor of Mr. Lincoln's renomination; so that when the National Convention assembled to do that act, there was no opposition to him.

From 1864 to 1866, Gen. Cameron took a very active part in the politics of Pennsylvania, giving to the organization of the Republican party a prestige which enabled it to bear down all opposition. He was the one leader of that party who could rally it in despondency and hold it in fidelity to its pledges.

In 1866 he was re-elected to the United States Senate, a position he held a longer term of years than any man sent to the same body from the State of Pennsylvania. His influence on national legislation was as great as that of any man that ever served in the Senate. The singularity of this influence is revealed in greater force when it is remembered that he seldom participated in debate. He made no pretension to oratory, but his talk was sound, his argument lucid, and his statement of fact impregnable. What he lacked in fervid, flashing speech he made up in terse, solid common sense. From the time he entered the Senate until he resigned his seat in 1877—a continuous service of eleven years—he was recognized as one of its most useful and reliable members, and at the date of his resignation was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a position only accorded to a senator of admitted statesmanship. He was foremost always in practical legislation. His opinions on questions of commerce, manufacturing, finance, internal improvements, fortifications, and the public domain were always accepted as guiding counsel. He encouraged the building of the first Pacific Railroad, was a warm supporter of opening the public lands to actual settlers, and no man in Congress before or after he left it did more, and few as much as he, for the fostering, promotion, and protection of American industry. He lost no opportunity to advocate and further the organization of new States, and regarded the expansion of the boundaries of the Union as the only true course to preserve the equilibrium of power between the sections. He made history as few other statesmen in this country created it, by producing results in the practical walks of life, such as make men prosperous and happy, that stimulate the growth of communities, whereby the country has been constantly rendered powerful abroad and a blessing to its people at home. History in its broadest scope will ever keep such individuals before the generations of men which are to live in this country, for their models in public affairs.

Gen. Cameron married Margaret Brua, daughter of Peter Brua, of Harrisburg, and their children were Rachel, married Judge Burnside, of Bellefonte; Brua; Margaret, married Richard J. Haldeman; James Donald; and Virginia, married Wayne MacVeagh.

THOMAS M. CHESTER.

Thomas Morris Chester, son of George Chester and Jane Maria Russell, was born March 11, 1834, at Harrisburg, Pa. In January, 1851, he entered the preparatory department of Avery College, Allegheny City, where he remained until January, 1853, when he sailed for Liberia, West Africa, in the ship "Ban-shee," arriving at Monrovia on the 3d of June, same year. At Monrovia he attended the Alexander High School for one year, then returned to America, and in December, 1854, entered the junior class of Thetford Academy, Vermont. He graduated from that institution in 1856. In January, 1857, he entered upon the duties of superintendent of recaptured Africans from American slave-vessels at Cape Mount, Liberia, to instruct them in civilized customs. He published and edited The Star of Liberia, at Monrovia, and was the correspondent of the New York Herald at that point. In January, 1862, he returned to America on account of the civil strife, and assisted in recruiting the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Regiments, the first colored troops raised for the war. In 1867 he went to England, entered the Middle Temple, one of the Inns of Court at London, for the study of law, and was called to the English bar in 1870. While in England he was appointed aide-de-camp to President Payne, of Liberia, with the rank of major, and was intrusted with important missions to the courts of Russia and Belgium. In July, 1870, Avery College conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. On his return to the United States in 1871, he went to New Orleans, and received the appointment of storekeeper in the customs service. In March, 1873, he was admitted to the practice of law in the courts of Louisiana, by being admitted to the Supreme Court of the State. Governor Kellogg the same year appointed him brigadier-general of the first brigade of Louisiana militia. In 1875 was appointed district superintendent of public education of the first division, comprising seven parishes, including the white and colored schools, and in 1876 superintendent of the fifth division, comprising thirteen parishes. In 1878 was appointed United States commissioner for the district of Louisiana. On the 22d of June, 1881, he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and at the November term, 1882, made his first appearance at the bar of his native city and county.

James Calder.

REV. JAMES CALDER, D.D.

James Calder, son of William Calder and Mary Kirkwood, was born Feb. 16, 1826, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the borough, the Harrisburg Academy, Partridge's Military Institute, and entered Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., in 1845, from which he graduated 1st of August, 1849. In September following he joined the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was stationed in Lancaster County, where he remained until 1851, when he was appointed missionary to China, sailing from New York in the spring of that year. He reached Foo-Chow, his missionary station, in July following. He remained at this point until the year 1854, when, having changed his views on church polity, he withdrew from the denomination, and returned to the United States. Soon after he became pastor of the Bethel Church, Harrisburg, until the year 1859, and in the mean time editor of the Church Advocate, the organ of the Church of God. In 1857, while serving in this pastorate, he took charge of the Shippensburg Collegiate Institute, continuing there one year, until, owing to the death of his wife, he returned to Harrisburg.

In 1862 the larger part of the congregation here with their pastor connected themselves with the Free-Will Baptist denomination, and erected a new church building on State and Fourth Streets. The Rev. Mr. Calder ministered to that congregation until 1869, when he was elected president of the Free-Will Baptist College, Michigan. He continued at the head of that institution two years; when, in 1871, the presidency of the Pennsylvania State College having become vacant by the death of Dr. Burrowes, Mr. Calder was invited to succeed him. He accepted the position, returned to Pennsylvania, and until June, 1880, remained in charge of that institution. He then resigned, and came to Harrisburg, where he now resides. The past three years he has filled the position of Lecturer of the State Grange of Pennsylvania, and at the same time assistant editor of the Farmers' Friend, published in the interest of the State Grange. Hilldale College, in 1866, conferred upon Mr. Calder the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. Dr. Calder married first, in 1850, Ellen C. Winebrenner, daughter of the Rev. John Winebrenner, who died in 1858. He married, secondly, Mrs. Eliza D. Murphy, daughter of the late Nicholas Reamshart, of Harrisburg.

Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens. Mr. Carl married, Feb. 5, 1865, Caroline Klinger, daughter of John A. Klinger, of Lykens Valley, and they had Lincoln, Calvin, Hattie Cardella, and James Abram Garfield. *

JOHN J. CLYDE.

John Joseph Clyde, son of Thomas Clyde (1788-1821) and Mary Dentzel (1789-1845), was born Dec. 14, 1813, in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of Harrisburg, and learned the trade of bookbinder. In 1834 he established himself in business in Brownsville, Fayette Co., Pa., and two years after started the Fayette Journal, which he continued for three years. In 1840 returned to Harrisburg and purchased the bindery of Samuel H. Clark, connecting a book-store therewith. In 1849 he was elected treasurer of the county of Dauphin, and in 1851 started the Whig State Journal. The year following purchased the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, uniting it with the Journal. In 1853 sold the establishment to John J. Patterson, and commenced the publication of the Chrystal Fountain. The same year bought one-third interest in the Pennsylvania Telegraph, which in 1855 he sold to Mr. Bergner. During the Presidential campaign of 1856 he published the American. The same year started the Daily Herald, which was continued until 1858, when he sold to O. Barrett and entered the service of the Lebanon Valley Railroad as its agent. Mr. Clyde married first, in 1834, Emeline Harvey, born 1811, in Perry County, Pa., died April, 1870, at Harrisburg, daughter of John and Mary Harvey, and their children were Virginia D., Joanna H., Mary A., Thomas H., Olive L., John Joseph, Edward W., Harvey E., and Annie C. He married, secondly, Mrs. Eliza (Jacobs) Cornyn, of Harrisburg.

FREDERICK W. COOVER, M.D.

Frederick Welty Coover, son of Jacob Coover and Lydia A. Welty (1828-1860), was born Feb. 1, 1852, at Coover's Mill, on the banks of the Yellow Breeches Creek, in Upper Allen township, Cumberland Co., Pa. He received his education in the public schools of the township in winter, and in select pay schools in summer. He began the study of medicine in 1870, with Dr. W. W. Rutherford, of Harrisburg, with whom he continued six months, when being taken seriously ill he removed to his home at Dillsburg. Upon his recovery he continued his studies with Drs. G. L. and J. M. Shearer of that place. In October, 1872, he matriculated at the University of Pennsylvania, medical department, where he attended three full courses of lectures, and in addition the special spring course of 1873. He graduated in March, 1875, and on the 12th of April following entered upon the duties of resident physician of the City Hospital, Harrisburg, being the first to fill that position. The year succeeding he began the general practice of medicine in Harrisburg; was elected one of the visiting physicians to the hospital, in which position he continues connected with that institution. In 1878 he was elected physician to the county almshouse, and now (1883) serving his sixth term. Dr. Coover married, April 19, 1881, Elizabeth Faerster, only daughter of George and Catharine Faerster, of Harrisburg.

JOSEPH H. COOVER, M.D.

Joseph Henry Coover, son of Samuel Coover and Sarah Stayman, was born June 15, 1838, in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa. He was educated at Cumberland Valley Institute, Mechanicsburg, where he was prepared for entering the junior class of a college course, but determining to lead a professional life, commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Eli H. Coover, in the fall of 1860, and later with Professor D. Hayes Agnew, of Philadelphia, attending Jefferson College lecture course, 1861-62. In the spring of the latter year he was appointed by Governor Curtin one of the commissioners to investigate the sanitary condition of the Pennsylvania soldiers in the Army of the Potomac. Upon his return he went before the United States Medical Board, at Philadelphia, for examination, and was placed in charge of the reserve of the Fifth United States Artillery, Army of the Potomac. In the fall of 1862 he returned to college, where he graduated in March, 1863. Afterwards sent as assistant surgeon to the General Hospital, Nashville, Tenn.; from thence to the Officers' Hospital, at Annapolis, Md., where he remained until the winter of 1864, performing, as Surgeon Baers, U.S.A., says, "some of the most difficult operations in surgery, and discharging his professional duties at all times in a highly scientific manner, reflecting both credit to himself and honor to the medical fraternity." The winter of 1864-65 was spent at college and in the wards of the different hospitals of the city of Philadelphia. The following spring Dr. Coover located at Harrisburg, in the practice of his profession. Desiring to lessen the burden of his practice, he was led to devote special attention to diseases of the eye, ear, and throat, and with this object in view he went to Europe, where, during the years 1878-79, he pursued his studies in the specialties referred to in the hospitals of Vienna and London, under the most eminent and skillful surgeons and physicians in the world. Dr. Coover married, in 1865, Flora L. Wolford, daughter of Col. John Wolford, of York Springs, Pa. *

WILLIAM KERR COWDEN.

William Kerr Cowden, the son of Matthew B. Cowden and Mary Wallace, was born Jan. 5, 1822, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was brought up a farmer, receiving such facilities of education as the schools of the township afforded prior to the adoption of the common-school system. He continued the occupation of a farmer until 1868, when he removed to Harrisburg and engaged in the coal and lumber business, subsequently establishing a planing-mill. For a decade of years he has been one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison. Mr. Cowden married Elizabeth M. Elder, daughter of Joshua Elder and Mary C. Gillmor.

JOHN B. COX.

John Bowes Cox, son of John Bowes Cox (1780-1831) and Matilda Willis McAllister (1787-1858), was born Nov. 19, 1817, at Estherton, Pa. He was descended from Dr. John Cox, who laid out Estherton, whose son was Col. Cornelius Cox, of the Revolution, father of John B. Cox, Sr. The children of the latter were Catharine Mary (married A. O. Hiestler), Elizabeth (married Adam H. Orth), Matilda Willis, John B., George Washington (d. s. p.), Rachel, Esther Amelia (married Joseph E. Piolett), Cornelius, and George W. (deceased). Of the foregoing, John B., the subject of our sketch, was educated at the academies at Litiz, Burlington, N. J., West Chester, and York, Pa. He learned the profession of civil engineer, which occupation he pursued several years, subsequently engaging for a long period in flour and saw-milling enterprises, when he retired from active pursuits. Mr. Cox married, in 1844, Rebecca E. Lightner, daughter of John and Rebecca Lightner, of Pequa, Lancaster Co., Pa., and their children were Matilda Willis, Mary Richardson (married Ed. H. Buehler), John Bowes, Rebecca Hopkins, Edward Buchanan, and Catharine Hiestler.

WILLIAM HOWARD DAY.

William Howard Day, son of John Day (1783-1828) and Eliza Dixon (1793-1869), was born Oct. 16, 1825, in the city of New York. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, in the private school of Rev. Frederick Jones, and prepared for college in the high school, Northampton, Mass., then in charge of Rev. Rudolphus B. Hubbard and Tutor Dwight, subsequently of Yale College. In 1843 he entered Oberlin College, graduating in 1847. He learned the art of printing in the Hampshire Gazette office at Northampton, and afterwards turned his attention to teaching and lecturing. In 1850 he was elected by the colored citizens of Ohio, at a State conference, to plead their cause before the Ohio Constitutional Convention. From 1852 to 1855 he edited The Alien American at Cleveland, having previously been local editor of the Cleveland True Democrat, now the Leader. In 1861 he was invited to take the lecture platform in Great Britain, and remained there particularly at the request of the American residents from the North to explain to the people of England the issues at stake in the great civil conflict then transpiring in the United States. Returning to his native country he resumed his profession of teacher. In 1867 and 1868 he was superintendent of schools in the district of Maryland and Delaware under the United States government. During the incumbency of Gen. Harrison Allen as auditor-general of Pennsylvania, 1872-75, he held a clerkship in the corporation department of that office. In 1868, Mr. Day was ordained an elder in the African Methodist Episcopal Zion connection, and in 1875 and 1878 was secretary of the General Conference of that body. He was the first person of color elected to the board of school control of the city of Harrisburg, serving from 1878 to 1883.

JOSEPH W. DURBIN.

Joseph W. Durbin, son of William Durbin and Hannah Clapp, was born Nov. 12, 1834, in County Somerset, England. His grandfather, Samuel Durbin, was a native of County Somerset, England, married a Miss Green, and their children were William, James, Simon, George, Emily, and Elizabeth. William married Hannah Clapp, of County Somerset, and their children were John, Samuel, Joseph W., James C., and Ann. William Durbin emigrated to America with his family when in his fiftieth year, and now resides in Lykens Valley. At the age of twelve Joseph W. Durbin removed to Monmouthshire, Wales, where he was engaged in active labor until he came to the United States. He first settled in Schuylkill County, and four years later at Lykens, where he was employed in the coal-mines. Having discovered an attractive field for mercantile ventures at Williamstown, then a mere hamlet, he soon after removed to that point and established himself in business, which he successfully carries on. Mr. Durbin married, May 6, 1855, Louisa Hulett, daughter of Joseph Hulett, of Monmouthshire, Wales, and they have had James, Hannah L., William J., Samuel W., Elizabeth Simpson, and Leonidas, of whom four are living. He is a director of the Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens, and president of the Central Pennsylvania Conservatory of Music. *

chased a large number of lots and erected the first houses at Baldwin (now Steelton). In 1871 he laid out an extension to Steelton, now known as Upper Steelton, the same year the village of Highland, and in 1872 what was lately known as Lower Steelton, all now comprised within the limits of the borough of Steelton. In 1876 he laid out the Baldwin Cemetery, for the burial of white persons, and Midland Cemetery for colored persons. Mr. Dunkle erected a substantial market-house, and was the prime mover in the building of a public hall at Steelton. As one of the pioneers of this thriving town, of which he was the first burgess, his enterprise and energy are pre-eminent. Apart from his real estate interests, he is

JOSIAH A. DUNKLE.

Josiah A. Dunkle was born Sept. 11, 1834, in Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. In 1846 his parents removed to a farm in Swatara township, where the son resided until 1853. He then learned the trade of a carpenter, and as contractor and builder was thus actively engaged until 1872. The same year he relinquished his coal and lumber business, in which he had large interests. He was the first to purchase a plot of ground where Churchville is located, and where he resided several years. When the Pennsylvania Steel Company were first constructing their works he pur-largely engaged in merchandising. Mr. Dunkle married Mary Bishop, daughter of William Bishop, and they had two sons and five daughters. *

WILLIAM H. EGLE, M.D., M.A.

William Henry Egle, son of John and Elizabeth Egle, was born Sept 17, 1830, at Harrisburg, Pa. His father dying when he was four years of age, he went to his paternal grandmother's, to whom he was indebted for his careful training during childhood and youth. He was educated in the private and public schools of Harrisburg, and for two years attended Harrisburg Military Institute, under the care of Capt. Alden Partridge, where he pursued the study of the classics and higher mathematics. Not having the opportunity of entering college, he determined to learn the art of printing, and for this purpose spent three years in the office of the Pennsylvania Telegraph, during most of which time he was foreman of the establishment. Subsequently he had charge of the State printing. In 1853, having been a frequent correspondent to the monthly magazines, he undertook the editorship of the Literary Companion, which was discontinued at the end of six months, at the same time the editing of the Daily Times, afterwards merged into one of the other newspaper ventures of Harrisburg. In 1854 he began the study of medicine with Dr. Charles C. Bombaugh, of Harrisburg, during a portion of which period, that and the following year, he was an assistant teacher in the boys' schools of the then North Ward, afterwards mailing clerk in the post-office under Messrs. Brant and Porter. In the fall of 1857 he resigned his position, and entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in March, 1859. The same year he located at Harrisburg, and was in the practice of his profession there when, in 1862, after the battles of Chantilly and the second Bull Run, he was telegraphed by Adjutant-General Russell, of Pennsylvania, to go to Washington to assist in the care of the wounded, which duty he performed. In September of that year he was commissioned assistant surgeon of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in the summer of 1863 surgeon of the Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia. At the close of service with the latter command he resumed his practice, but afterwards at the earnest solicitation of Adjutant-General Thomas, of the United States army, he accepted the appointment by President Lincoln as surgeon of volunteers, and was ordered to Camp Nelson, Kentucky, to examine the troops for the United States regiments then organizing in that State. He was subsequently detailed with the cavalry battalion under Col. James Brisbin, now of the United States army, thence ordered to the Department of the James under Gen. Butler, and assigned to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps. During the Appomattox campaign he was chief executive medical officer of Gen. Birney's division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, and upon the return from that campaign ordered to the Rio Grande with Gen. Jackson's division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, as its chief medical officer. While at Roma he was repeatedly sent for by Gen. Canales, of the Liberal army of Mexico, for consultation, and at the earnest request of Don Flores, the alcalde of the city of Mier, performed several difficult operations with such success that during the further residence on the Rio Grande patients were brought him from places as remote as Monterey and San Luis Potosi.

In December, 1865, he resigned the service and returned home, when for a brief period he partially resumed the practice of his profession. Turning his attention to historic research, he commenced the preparation of his "History of Pennsylvania," which was published in 1876; at the same time, in connection with Hon. John Blair Linn, edited twelve volumes of the second series of the "Pennsylvania Archives." Apart from these he published the following: "Poems" in 1848, "Parson Elder, a Biography," "Col. Timothy Green," "The Dixons of Dixon's Ford," "Historical Review of Dauphin County," "Notes and Queries, Historical and Genealogical," first and second series, 1879-82, "History of the Counties of Dauphin and Lebanon in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania," 1883. In 1877, in consideration of his researches into the history of Pennsylvania, Lafayette College conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts. Upon the organization of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, in 1870, Dr. Egle was appointed surgeon-in-chief of the Fifth Division with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and subsequently in the consolidation of the commands transferred to surgeon of the Eighth Regiment, and is the senior medical officer in the National Guard of Pennsylvania. He has been honored by election as corresponding member of a number of historical and learned societies in America and England. Dr. Egle married, in 1860, Eliza White Beatty, daughter of George Beatty, of Harrisburg; and their children were Beverly Waugh (d. s. p.), Sarah Beatty, and Catharine Irwin. A. B. H.

DANIEL EPPLEY.

Daniel Eppley, son of George Eppley (1786-1852) and Susan Brookhart (1800-1850), was born July 26, 1817, in Fishing Creek Valley, Fairview township, York Co., Pa. He was educated in the common schools of the neighborhood, and brought up on his father's farm. On the 6th of October, 1834, he came to Harrisburg and entered the dry-goods store of George and Bernard Geiger, where he remained six years, when he made an engagement with Messrs. Elder & Piper in the same business. In April, 1847, he established himself in the mercantile trade, which he successfully conducted until in 1870 he retired from all business pursuits. On the organization of the Farmers' Bank of Harrisburg, in May, 1872, Mr. Eppley was chosen a director of that institution, and at present is president thereof. He has served in the various municipal offices of school director, city and county auditor, and also one of the trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg. Mr. Eppley married, June 2, 1845, Louisa Geiger, daughter of Bernard and Charlotte Geiger, of Harrisburg, who died March 2, 1849, leaving a daughter, Mary Lavinia, married Walter B. Fahnestock, of Pittsburgh, both dead, leaving two children. He married, secondly, Dec. 24, 1850, Anna Maria Heisely, daughter of George J. Heisely and Anna Maria Kurtz, of Harrisburg, and their children were Edward Kurtz, d. s. p.; Helen Elizabeth, married William H. Lyter; and Annie Maria.

BENJAMIN F. ETTER.

Benjamin F. Etter, lawyer of Harrisburg, and ex-deputy attorney-general of Pennsylvania, was born at Middletown, Dauphin Co., Sept. 29, 1824. He obtained his early education at the Middletown Academy. At the age of twenty-two began reading law with James Fox, a lawyer of Harrisburg, and was admitted to practice on Nov. 24, 1851. He opened a law-office in Harrisburg the same year, and has been engaged in general practice in the civil courts of the county and State since, a period of thirty-one years. Mr. Etter was appointed and served for six years as deputy attorney-general under Attorney-General William M. Meredith, and for a short time under Attorney-General Benjamin H. Brewster. His safe and judicious opinions as a counselor, his integrity and fidelity to his clients, and his uncompromising desire to defend the wrong and encourage the right have given him a high reputation in the profession. He married, in 1857, Catharine A., daughter of Charles

A. and Barbara A. (Keller) Snyder, of Lancaster, Pa. Her father was a relative of Governor Snyder. Their surviving children are Charles F., clerk in the First National Bank of Harrisburg; Nannie E.; and George E. Etter, a student in Princeton College. His parents, George and Nancy (Shelly) Etter, died at Middletown, the former in 1850, aged sixty-seven; the latter in 1826, aged thirty. His grandfather, Abraham Etter, settled in Dauphin County, from Lancaster, about 1800, where he died, and was of German origin. His maternal grandfather was Abraham Shelly, of York County, Pa.

A. K. FAHNESTOCK.

Adam K. Fahnestock, son of Obed Fahnestock (1770-1840) and Anna Maria Gessel (died 1842), was born July 12, 1806, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was descended from Diedrich Fahnestock, one of the earliest settlers at Ephrata, Lancaster Co. Adam K. was educated in the schools of the borough, and at the academy at Litiz. He was brought up in mercantile pursuits, and for many years carried on brick-making extensively. He was engaged in the hardware business about fifteen years, and in 1838 established a glue manufactory at Harrisburg, which he successfully carried on for a long period. Mr. Fahnestock was thrice married,—his first wife being Sybil T. Holbrook, the mother of all his children, who were Harris C. (the prominent banker of New York), Holbrook (d. s. p.), Morris James (d. s. p.), Sybil Amelia (married T. H. Hubbard), Charles A., Wallace Weir, and Louis.

CHARLES B. FAGER, M.D.

Charles Buffington Fager, son of Dr. John Henry Fager and Mary H. Buffington, was born in the year 1837, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, read medicine with his father, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1864, and commenced the practice of his profession at Harrisburg. He was a medical cadet in the United States army in 1862, and contract assistant surgeon in 1864, vaccine physician of Harrisburg, 1866-67, and one of the founders of the Homœopathic Medical Society of Dauphin County in 1866. Dr. Fager married Susan A. Hummel, daughter of Valentine Hummel, of Harrisburg.

SAMUEL M. FENN.

Samuel M. Fenn, son of Benjamin Sedgwick Fenn and Sarah Scranton, was born Aug. 8, 1839, in Canaan, Conn. He removed in early life to Harrisburg, and became an inmate of the home of his uncle, Theophilus Fenn, then editor of the Pennsylvania Telegraph, where he received such advantages of study as could be afforded him. At the age of sixteen he entered the office of the Palladium, at New Haven, Conn., and served an apprenticeship to the art of printing. In September, 1862, Mr. Fenn enlisted in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and served until the close of the war for the Union. After an interval he returned as foreman on the Hartford Times, and in November, 1868, removed to Lykens, having purchased the office and effects of the Upper Dauphin Register, which was subsequently changed to Lykens Register, which he has continued to edit and publish, having "brought both ability and energy to bear in its publication." Mr. Fenn married, April 14, 1872, Addie Miller, of Shrewsbury, York Co., Pa., and they had Emma M. and George B.

PROFESSOR L. O. FOOSE.

Lemuel Oliver Foose, son of James Foose (1811-1875) and Catharine Boyer (born 1817), was born Jan. 16, 1838, in Juniata County, Pa. He was educated at Markleville Academy, Perry Co., Pa., and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, leaving the latter institution at the close of the junior year in 1863. While attending the academy, and to some extent the college, he taught school. In 1864 he took charge of the academy at Aaronsburg, Centre Co., Pa. In 1866 and 1867 was superintendent of schools at Lima, Ohio; in 1868-69 superintendent of schools at Miamisburg, Ohio, and from 1869 to 1879 teacher in the Boys'

High School, Harrisburg. In 1879 he was elected superintendent of schools for the city of Harrisburg, which position he now holds. Of his work at Harrisburg, it may be said that especially in the high school he succeeded in bringing about system and order; a course of study was adopted and improved from time to time, the standard of scholarship and discipline raised, and the general scope and mission of the school so enlarged that it has reached a high grade among similar institutions in the State. Mr. Foose married, in 1868, Elizabeth Eleanor Kuhn, daughter of Rev. Samuel and Eleanor M. Kuhn.

REV. C. H. FORNEY, D.D.

Christian Henry Forney, son of Christian T. Forney (1806-1860) and Barbara Strohm, was born Oct. 17, 1839, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the common schools, St. Thomas Institute, Milesburg Normal School, and Oberlin College, where he completed the course preparatory to the study of theology in 1860, and entered upon the ministry at Mount Ivy, Lancaster Co., Pa., in November of that year, where he remained until April, 1863. He also preached at Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Pa., from April, 1863, to April, 1866; at Harrisburg, Fourth Street, from April, 1866, to April, 1868; Lancaster City from April, 1868, to April, 1870, since which time he has been in charge of the editorial department of the church paper of his denomination, preaching only on special occasions. He was chaplain of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania in 1868, and has been twice Speaker of the East Pennsylvania Eldership of the Church of God; once Speaker of the General Eldership; almost a continuous member of the standing committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership since 1869; member of Board of Missions and Board of Incorporation of the East Pennsylvania Eldership; member of the Executive Board of the General Eldership; continuous member of Board of Education of the General Eldership until elected on the Executive Board; a continuous member of the Board of Education of East Pennsylvania Eldership. In 1866 he was elected assistant editor of the Church Advocate, and upon the death of the editor, in 1869, became editor-in-chief, which position he still occupies. In June, 1881, Hillsdale College, Michigan, conferred upon him the degree of D.D.

ABRAHAM FORTENBAUGH.

Abraham Fortenbaugh, son of Samuel Fortenbaugh and Mary E. Miller, was born Aug. 5, 1838, in Newberry township, York Co., Pa. His grandfather, Peter Fortenbaugh, was of German birth; emigrated to America, and settled on a farm in Newberry township, York Co., Pa. He married and had eleven children, of whom Samuel, born April 14, 1818, was a farmer and merchant; died May 5, 1866; narried Mary E. Miller, daughter of Henry Miller, of York County, Pa., died Oct. 11, 1881. Their children were Mary Ann, Abraham, Anne, Samuel H., Mary Ellen (married Prowell), Samuel, and Robert, of whom Abraham and Mary Ellen alone survive. Abraham Fortenbaugh during the early years of his life assisted his father on the farm and in the store, receiving such educational advantages as the country schools afforded. At the age of sixteen he became a clerk at Goldsboro', whither his father had removed, two years later going into business connection with his father at Yocumtown, where he remained until 1864. He removed to Halifax, and engaged in general merchandising, and soon established a large and rapidly increasing trade. He represented the county of Dauphin in the State Legislature, sessions of 1874-75 and 1876. He is a director and vice-president of the First National Bank of Millersburg, and one of the founders of the Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens. Mr. Fortenbaugh married in 1862, Mary E. Byrod, daughter of John Byrod, of Halifax, and they had Seward B., d. s. p.; Mary, Catharine, and Samuel.

DAVID FLEMING.

David Fleming, lawyer, of Harrisburg, Pa., was born in Washington County, Pa., July 17, 1812; is one of a family of eleven children, and the son of Samuel and Sarah (Beckett) Fleming. His paternal grandfather was of Scotch ancestry, and a native of Ireland. He settled in Cecil County, Md., from Ireland, afterwards in Chester County, Pa., and subsequently at Bald Eagle, from which place, with his family, he was driven away by the Indians. In the attack one son, Samuel, father of our subject (1761-1851), was shot through the arm. He afterwards settled in Washington County, and in 1812 removed to Dauphin County, where he spent the remainder of his active life, a farmer, in West Hanover township. The family attended and were members of the Presbyterian Church there, under the well-known clergyman, Rev. James Snodgrass.

David Fleming spent his boyhood on the farm, obtained his early education at the common school and "Harrisburg Academy," and for several years, alternating with attending school, he was a successful teacher here and in Baltimore County, Md., in the latter place teaching classics and the higher mathematics. On account of ill health he turned his attention to business pursuits, and became a clerk for Dr. D. N. L. Reutter, a contractor on the Baltimore and Port Deposit Railroad, and after a time took charge for him of the shipment of pine timber for the navy-yard at Washington, D. C., from North Carolina, making several trips by sea and greatly improving his health. In 1838 he returned to Harrisburg, and for several years edited a local paper and reported the proceedings of the Legislature for four Philadelphia journals, including the United States Gazette. In 1839 he entered the law-office of William McClure as a student, was admitted to the bar at Harrisburg in November, 1841, and has uninterruptedly practiced his profession since. Mr. Fleming has regularly practiced in the Supreme Court of the commonwealth since 1843, and the reported decisions of that tribunal will show that he has been concerned in a large proportion of the cases removed from Dauphin and other counties, many of them involving principles of great importance. Of late years he has attended to bankruptcy practice in the two Federal courts.

He closed his labors as newspaper correspondent in 1847, and was elected chief clerk of the House of Representatives, and served during that session. He was renominated by the Whigs in 1848, but a tie in that body and the absence of one of his friends gave the place to the Democratic candidate by one vote. In 1854 he was elected district attorney, served three years, and declined a re-election. In 1863 he was elected to the State Senate, and served for three years in that body, being chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary during his second year, and Speaker in the closing session of his term. Outside his profession, Mr. Fleming has been identified in various ways with most of the leading interests in Harrisburg. He was one of the founders of the Harrisburg Car-Works in 1853, subsequently obtained its charter, and succeeded William Calder upon his death in 1880 as president, and also a member of the board and stockholder of the Foundry and Machine Company, which originated from the same enterprise, member of the board and counsel for the Lochiel Iron Company, and assisted in the organization of its successor, the Lochiel Rolling-Mill Company. He was counsel and one of the directors of the Harrisburg National Bank for many years, and was one of the incorporators in organizing the First National Bank of Harrisburg, for which he has been counsel since. He was a director of the Inland Telegraph Company, and afterwards of the United States Telegraph Company until its consolidation with the Western Union lines, and has been counsel for the latter, as well as for the Atlantic and Ohio and the Pacific and Atlantic Telegraph Companies, the Columbia Oil Company, and many other large corporations in several important suits, involving the taxation of these corporations by the State. He was one of the originators of the first Harrisburg Gas Company, and had been president of the People's Gas and Gaseous Fuel Company of Harrisburg. Mr. Fleming was one of the founders and secretary and treasurer of the Harrisburg City Railroad (now railway), and has been a director since its reorganization. He is a trustee for the Home of the Friendless of Harrisburg, and a member of the board of trustees of the Market Square Presbyterian Church, of which he was president for many years. He is one of the oldest Sunday-school teachers in the city, and has always aided in every enterprise tending to better educate the rising generation, and he was patriotic and rendered support to the Union cause by his influence and means during the civil war. Mr. Fleming's law partner, with whom he has been associated since 1870, is Mr. S. J. McCarrell, present district attorney for Dauphin County, who read law with him and was admitted to practice in 1867.

He married, in 1852, Susan, daughter of Charles and Mary (Richmond) Mowry, of Harrisburg. Her father published the first newspaper at Downingtown, Pa., and after his removal to Harrisburg he was appointed one of the first canal commissioners in the State, and conducted a newspaper in company with Gen. Simon Cameron.

Their children were Charles M., a graduate of Princeton College and member of the Dauphin County bar, recently deceased; Sarah, a graduate of Vassar College; David, a graduate of Princeton College, cashier of the foundry and machine-works; and George R., a law student.

LEWIS H. GAUSE.

Lewis H. Gause, son of Samuel Gause (1781-1865) and Mary Bailey (1784-1868), was born Oct. 28, 1821, at Unionville, Chester Co., Pa. He was educated in the country schools of Delaware and Chester County, and at Westtown boarding-school. After having taught school a good many years, he graduated in 1861 from the State Normal School of New Jersey, located at Trenton. In early life he commenced teaching; came to Harrisburg in 1843 as teacher in the boys' high school of the South Ward, where he continued until 1851, when he became teacher of the sciences in the agricultural school at Mount Airy, conducted by Professor John Wilkinson, for one year. From December, 1852, to the spring of 1855 he taught at Treemount Seminary, Norristown, when he took charge of the Olive Branch, which he edited two years. In 1857 went to Springfield, Ohio, to engage in a newspaper venture, but purchasing a farm, followed farming two years, teaching during the winter. In 1859 he returned East, took charge of one of the public schools at Plainfield, N. J., subsequently attending the State Normal School as stated. During the Rebellion he entered the United States service, serving until the close of the war, and was made clerk to Maj. E. L. Moore, paymaster in the United States army. In October, 1865, he resigned, and established a select school at Harrisburg, which he successfully conducted ten years. In 1875 was elected by the school board of the city of Harrisburg supervisory principal of the Reily Street schools, which position he has since filled. Mr. Gause studied law while conducting the Harrisburg Institute, under John C. Kunkel, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar December, 1868. He married, Oct. 28, 1847, Sarah Fish Moore, daughter of Levi Moore and Sarah Fish, of Amherst, Mass., and their children are Leander M., Charles S., Helen, Frank L., Lucy G., and Laura B.

J. Z. GERHARD, M.D.

Jerome Z. Gerhard, son of William T. Gerhard (born Dec. 10, 1809, still living) and Elizabeth Seibert (1812-1881), was born Nov. 6, 1842, in Cherryville, Northampton Co., Pa. He was prepared for college in the high school at Lancaster, Pa., and the preparatory department of Franklin and Marshall College, and graduated from that institution in 1864; entered the office of Dr. John L. Atlee, of Lancaster, in September of that year, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1868, and at once opened an office in Lancaster, where he remained nearly two years in active practice. During this time he was visiting physician to the Children's Home, and one of the physicians to the Lancaster County Hospital. Feb. 1, 1870, he entered upon the duties of first assistant physician in the Harrisburg Hospital, and Feb. 12, 1881, succeeded Dr. Curwen as superintendent, which position he still holds. During the year 1877 he spent five months on the continent, and thoroughly inspected the methods of treatment practiced in hospitals there.

DANIEL W. GROSS.

Daniel Wiestling Gross, son of Abraham Gross (1781-1835) and Anna Maria Wiestling (1789-1856), was born March 11, 1810, in Middle Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of the borough of Harrisburg and at the academy there. He learned the profession of druggist and apothecary, and commenced business in 1830, and has continued therein until the present. He served in the municipal offices of member of Town Council and school director a long period. He was for many years one of the trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, and afterwards its treasurer; is president of the board of trustees of the theological seminary of the Reformed Church, vice-president of the board of trustees of Franklin and Marshall College, and was president of the board of publication of the Reformed Church of the United States for many years. Mr. Gross married, in 1841, Elizabeth Kunkel, eldest daughter of George Kunkel, of Harrisburg, who died in 1882, and their children were George A., John K., Joshua Wiestling, Daniel Wiestling, d. s. p., Edward Ziegler, Henry Sahler, Robert, d. s. p., and Mary Elizabeth, d. s. p.

A. BOYD HAMILTON.

Adam Boyd Hamilton was born in Harrisburg, in a house belonging to his grandfather Boyd, now No. 210 South Second Street, of a Sunday morning, Sept. 18, 1808, son of Hugh Hamilton, who was son of Capt. John Hamilton, and of Rosanna Boyd, only child of Adam Boyd. Both these ancestors were purchasers of property in 1785, both erected substantial brick mansions, and both died and are buried at Harrisburg. The subject of this notice received his first school training under Misses Graham and Smith, at Second and Mulberry Streets, Charles Still, Maginnes, Birkman, Hamilton, Tod, Davies. Most of his time was devoted to picking up the trade of printer in his father's establishment, the Harrisburg Chronicle. At this early period two late chief justices of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, Messrs. Lewis and Thompson, were employed there, as well as many other gentlemen who rose to social and political position. Having been carefully trained as a printer, after leaving the Harrisburg Academy he was appointed to a position in the engineer corps of the Juniata division of the State works, under De Witt Clinton, Jr., as chief. The partner of his father having died, he returned to Harrisburg and became partner in the Chronicle, where he continued until that paper was disposed of to other parties. He was chosen, when scarcely of voting age, one of the printers to the Legislature. After spending a couple of years in an unsuccessful business venture in the South, he returned to Harrisburg, and shortly after appointed to a position at Washington City; resigned, taking control of the Pennsylvania Reporter at Harrisburg; after a year or two was unanimously chosen assistant clerk of the Senate, resigning that, and becoming joint partner in the Pennsylvanian at Philadelphia with Mifflin, Parry, Joseph Neal, J. W. Forney, and S. D. Patterson. When that venture closed, became, under the contract law, printer to both houses of Congress, and at the repeal of that law, which carried his contract with it, came to Pennsylvania. Again became printer to the State until 1861, when he retired from that business and became an agriculturist. He has held many municipal offices,—a school director for twelve years; president of the Select Council, and one of the commissioners of 1860, and of a subsequent one in 1870, to make a plot of the city of Harrisburg; president of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society, the Dauphin County Society; at present a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy, secretary of the board of managers of the Harrisburg Hospital from the first meeting on the subject in 1872, president of the board of trustees of Derry Presbyterian Church, and the only president the Dauphin County Historical Society has had since its formation.

HON. THOMAS S. HARGEST.

Thomas Sewell Hargest, son of William E. Hargest (1819-72) and Rachel A. Taylor (born 1827, still living), was born Nov. 24, 1845, in Baltimore County, Md., and was educated in the public schools of Baltimore City. He came with his parents to Harrisburg in 1861, and in 1863 entered the army of the United States. He had previously studied the rudiments of some of the classics, physics, etc., and during the last year of the war studied law at Winchester, Va., and was admitted to the bar in August, 1877. In the early part of the year 1868 he was appointed commonwealth attorney for the county of Shenandoah, Va., and subsequently, in the same, judge of the Twelfth Judicial Circuit, embracing the counties of Page, Warren, Shenandoah, Rockingham, and Highland, which position he held until legislated, with all the judiciary of the State, off the bench, by the Democratic Legislature in 1870, when he resumed the practice of the law at Winchester, Va. In 1874 he returned to Harrisburg, and was elected city solicitor in 1876, and twice re-elected. He married, April 3, 1867, Virginia Diffenderfer, youngest daughter of William and Harriet Diffenderfer, of Winchester, Va.

PAUL A. HARTMAN, M.D.

Paul Augustus Hartman, son of John Joseph Hartman and Wilhelmina Stoeber, was born Dec. 24, 1850, in Lebanon, Pa. He was educated in the public schools, at the State Normal School, Kutztown, Berks Co., and at Dickinson College, Carlisle. He then entered the office of Dr. Robert H. Seiler, of Harrisburg, and began the study of medicine under his instructions. He attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, from which institution he graduated in March, 1874, and began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg, where he is now located. He is a member of the Dauphin County Medical Society, and of the State and American Medical Associations.

J. R. HAYES, M.D.

Joshua Roberts Hayes, son of Nathaniel Hayes (1792-1876) and Matilda Barwick (born 1797), was born in 1832, in New Castle County, Del. He received his primary and academic education at New Castle Academy, and entered the full course at the University of Pennsylvania in October, 1852, graduating from the medical department of that institution in 1855, having pursued the previous study of medicine under the late Dr. John B. Brinton, of West Chester, and the late Dr. George W. Norris, of Philadelphia. After graduating, in 1855, he settled in the practice of his profession at Rock Island, Ill., and while there, for a period of five years, attended professionally Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, and other celebrities in that State when they attended the courts of that county and district. When the war of the Rebellion broke out Dr. Hayes returned to Pennsylvania, and in 1861 was commissioned surgeon of the Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in this and other commands served during four years. For a period of nine months he was in medical charge of Camp Curtin, at Harrisburg, and while there examined over ten thousand recruits. He was in seventeen battles of the late war, and performed or assisted in nearly eight hundred capital operations. In 1879 he established at Harrisburg a weekly newspaper,—The Saturday Night,—of which he continues to be the editor and proprietor. He is the patentee for several inventions for paving, and has devoted much time to the production of artificial stone, etc., and also for the utilizing coal, and machinery to compress the dust of coal. In addition to all these enterprises the doctor finds time to practice his profession. He married, in 1858, Elizabeth Rutter, daughter of John and Maria Rutter, of West Chester, and their children are Areta V. and John Lawrence.

JACOB M. HENSEL.

Jacob Myers Hensel, son of John Hensel and Elizabeth Myers, was born Jan. 7, 1825, in Lancaster. His grandfather, William Hensel, who was of Scotch and German descent, resided at Lancaster, Pa., and had children,—John, Jacob, William, Mary, and Elizabeth. John, the eldest son, born Aug. 8, 1785, died in his fifty-third year; married Elizabeth Myers, of Lancaster, born Aug. 7, 1785, and they had William, Mary Ann, Amelia, Christopher, Henrietta, Selina, Elizabeth, Sarah, and Jacob M. Jacob M., the subject of our sketch, passed his boyhood in Lancaster, received the ordinary school education until his sixteenth year, when he went to the trade of an iron-moulder at Margaretta Furnace, York Co. He then spent several years at Philadelphia and Baltimore, when, in 1865, he located in Lykens, where he established a factory and machine-shop, in which he is at present engaged. Mr. Hensel married in 1849, Catharine A. Cameron, daughter of Alexander Cameron, of Canada, and one daughter survives her mother.

J. M. Hensel

A. J. HERR.

Andrew Jackson Herr, son of Daniel Herr (1795-1857) and Sarah Gilbert (1801-80), was born Dec. 31, 1832, in Greencastle, Franklin Co., Pa. He was educated at the Zane Street Grammar School and the high school at Philadelphia, from which latter institution he graduated in 1845. He shortly after commenced the study of law with James McCormick, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 20, 1850, locating at Harrisburg in the practice of his profession. He served, by election, as district attorney nine years; was counsel for county commissioners one year, and represented the county of Dauphin in the Legislature in 1868 and 1869; was member of the State Senate in 1875 and 1876, and in the latter year re-elected for full term of four years; elected president pro tem. of the Senate at the close of the session of 1878, and re-elected to that office in the session of 1879. In November, 1880, he was re-elected again for full term of four years. Col. Herr married, first, Martha Linn Coyle, daughter of Scott Coyle and Martha Linn; secondly, Nannie M. Coyle, and their children were Daniel, a member of the Dauphin County bar, and Martha Coyle, d. s. p.; married, thirdly, Nannie Gilmore, daughter of James Gilmore and Eleanor McKinney, and they had Eleanor Gilmore. It may be here stated that in his early years he was a frequent contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and Neal's Gazette, of Philadelphia. When fifteen years of age he published three novels, entitled "Maid of the Valley," "Story founded on the Revolution," and "The Corsair," founded on the revolt of San Domingo. These books were republished in England. A novel called "The Chain of Destiny," also appeared from his pen.

A. O. HIESTER.

A. O. Hiester, son of Gabriel and Mary Otto Hiester, was born at Reading, Nov. 11, 1808. At twelve years of age he was sent to Downingtown Academy, in charge of Joshua Hoops, a Hicksite Quaker, next sent to Lebanon and placed under the care of Rev. Mr. Ernst, a Lutheran preacher, by whom in company with A. E. Shulze, son of Ex-Governor Shulze, he was prepared for college. In 1824 entered Dickinson College, graduating in 1828, and was subsequently a trustee for many years; was elected a delegate with Dr. E. W. Roberts to the Infant-School Convention, which met in Washington, 1830. Traveled there in an old-fashioned gig, and dined with Henry Clay the day before the convention met. Then spent one year studying law in the office of Judge Krause. Law not being congenial to his taste, he abandoned the study, and spent six months at Huntingdon Forge (owned by Dr. Shoenberger); leaving there he spent six months with Reuben Trexler, at Long Swamp Furnace, in Berks County. Returned to Harrisburg, and in 1830 and 1831 assisted in the erection of the rolling-mills at the mouth of the Conedoguinit Creek, when his father, in partnership with Norman Cullender, built a large boiler-plate and bar-iron mill. Took an active part in the management of the business until 1836, during the most disastrous period throughout the United States to ironmasters that they have been called to pass through.

He was a director many years of the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania until it was closed; was a director of the old Harrisburg Bank until it was changed, and is now a director of the Harrisburg National Bank. He was appointed associate judge by Governor Johnson to fill a vacancy occasioned by death, and was twice subsequently elected by the people for terms of five years each. He was also appointed one of three commissioners by the court of Dauphin County, under an act of the Legislature, to hear testimony and report their opinion of the damages sustained by individuals consequent upon Stuart's raid through the counties of Fulton, Franklin, and Adams. The commission consisted of Col. James Worrall, a gentleman from Lebanon County, and himself. He was by them elected chairman of the commission. He was chairman of the committee of arrangements of the first State fair, held at Harrisburg in 1851; was one of the five commissioners, composed of Judge Watts, Judge Miles, H. N. McAllis, Mr. Walker, and himself, to select a location for the State Agricultural College, and after it was finished annually elected a trustee for about fifteen years. His son, Gabriel, who graduated at the college, has taken his place, and is now a trustee. He was also secretary of the State Agricultural Society for four years. For six years he was a trustee of the State Lunatic Hospital.

While attending to his farm he has led an active business life, having settled twelve estates as executor, acted as trustee for eleven persons, as guardian for ten children, and assignee for the settlement of three estates. He was among the first of the subscribers to the Harrisburg Cotton Factory, the Harrisburg Car-Works (of which he was a director), of the Harrisburg Street Passenger Railroad (of which he was president), and of the Fort Hunter Road Commission, of which he has [been secretary and treasurer since its organization.

In 1835 married Catharine M. Cox, daughter of John B. Cox, recently deceased. *

WILLIAM HOFFMAN.

William Hoffman, son of Jacob Hoffman (born 1805) and Eve Elizabeth Weiser (1805-1881), was born Sept. 7, 1831, in Jordan township, Northumberland Co., Pa. His grandfather removed from Berks facture of agricultural implements, which was continued until 1878, when he resumed his former business. In 1860, Mr. Hoffman was elected a justice of the peace, which office he held for twenty years. In 1877 he was chosen burgess of Uniontown borough, and is a director of the First National Bank of Millersburg. Mr. Hoffman married, Oct. 20, 1853, Lydia Willier, daughter of Adam Willier, of Lykens township, and they had W. Jacob, J. Weiser, Sarah E. (married — Enrick), Kate A., and Eulera J. *

County, where he was born, to Lykens Valley at an early day, locating on a farm near Berrysburg. He married Rebecca Kuntzman, and they had Daniel, George, Jacob, John, and seven daughters. Jacob learned the trade of a carpenter, married Eve Elizabeth Weiser, and they had William, John, Mary (married — Witmer), Sarah (married — Moyer), and Elizabeth (married — Deppen). He removed to Northumberland County, where he followed farming and cabinet-making, and there most of their children were born. William Hoffman's early life was passed on his father's farm, and his educational advantages were limited to the country schools. In 1859 he removed to Uniontown, Dauphin Co., where he engaged in merchandising until 1865, when, having retired from mercantile pursuits, he began the manu-

WILLIAM T. HILDRUP.

Thomas Hildrup (1754-1795), a native of England, came to America and settled at Hartford, Conn., in 1766, where he learned the trade of a jeweler, and carried on that business there during the remainder of his active life. He was an influential citizen of the place, and was appointed and served as postmaster of Hartford for several years. He had five sons,—John, Joslin, Thomas, William, and Jesse,—and two daughters. Jesse Hildrup (1789-1865) spent his life as a tanner and shoemaker in Middletown and a farmer in Danbury, Conn., and died in Belvidere, Ill. His wife was Sophia Turner, of Middlefield, and their children were William T., Mary (married Rev. S. C. Howe, a Methodist clergyman), Jesse (a lawyer of Chicago, Ill.), Martha, and John (a machinist in the car-works at Harrisburg). William T. Hildrup, son of Jesse Hildrup, was born Feb. 6, 1822, in Middletown, Conn. His early life was marked by a desire for education and a full knowledge of mechanics. At the age of nineteen, with only twenty-five dollars in money, but with self-reliance, industrious habits, and a will to do for himself, he left his home to carve out a fortune for himself. He worked at the carpenter's trade for two years in Cape Vincent, N. Y., then proceeded to Worcester, Mass., where he became an employé in the Bradley Car-Factory. Here he began as a journeyman mechanic in a business that he became so thoroughly master of in nine years as to merit the highest place in the concern, and become principal manager of the works. It was here that decision, capacity of mind to direct and manage, and a natural talent for mechanics first developed in Mr. Hildrup, and were recognized by his superiors. He was a close student of mechanical theories, business rules and usages coupled with practical ideas. For one year following, he engaged in manufacturing car-wheels and car-castings in Elmira, N. Y. In 1853, upon invitation, he came to Harrisburg and was the leading mind in organizing the Harrisburg Car-Works, of which he was chosen future business manager, and has continued to conduct them successfully since, a period of thirty years. Finding only crude mechanics, he organized a free drawing-school the following winter, and taught mechanical drawing for mechanics, and ornamental drawing for painters, which resulted in preparing men for proficient work in the car-shops, and was the preliminary education for some who afterwards gained distinction as master mechanics in different parts of the United States. By his enterprise and superior capacity, coupled with capital brought to his aid, he has been the chief man in building up the manufacturing interests of Harrisburg. Every enterprise has succeeded under his supervision, and not one ever failed or proved a loss to its creditors. Urged to take the management of the Lochiel Iron Company in 1862, he lifted it out of distress, started it, and saved the company a large amount of money. A second time when the company was in difficulty he was made temporary president, managed it for nine months, lifted it from a large debt, and reorganized it under a charter of the Lochiel Rolling-Mill Company, with additional capital and a new organization. Thus Mr. Hildrup's thorough mechanical education and executive ability have been brought to the notice of the largest corporations in the city, and made useful to the interests of Harrisburg. Knowing the difficulty of the artisan in securing instruction, he interested himself in obtaining a bill from the Legislature in 1873 in behalf of a "Mechanic's High School," was made chairman of a commission to establish it, but sufficient appropriation not being made on account of the panic of that year, the school has never been established, although he caused to be added to several now existing colleges special mechanical professorships covering the interests of general and specific technical education.

Mr. Hildrup planned and constructed the fortifications for the defense of Harrisburg during the late civil war, and in connection with William Calder, furnished the government 42,000 horses, 67,000 mules, and 5000 oxen during the four years of the Rebellion. He was one of the incorporators of the First National Bank of Harrisburg, and has been a director since. He is the inventor of a great improvement for upsetting and enlarging the end of an iron rod, so that the thread shall be as long as the rod itself. In 1881, desirous of freeing himself from the entire care of his business interests in Harrisburg, he removed his family to Washington, D. C., where he spends a part of his time. He married in October, 1846, Harriet E. Esselstyne, daughter of Col. John B. Esselstyne, of Cape Vincent, N. Y., who died in 1876. His surviving children are Jessie, William T., and Clara. His present wife is Emma J. Piper, of Philadelphia. *

GEORGE R. HURSH.

George R. Hursh, third son of Christian and Eliza Hursh, was born Feb. 6, 1835, in Fairview township, York Co., Pa. He was brought up on his father's farm. At the age of sixteen he was sent to the Cumberland Valley Institute, where he remained about eighteen months. He then entered the office of Dr. A. J. Herman, of Carlisle, and began the study of medicine, and in due time attended lectures in Jefferson Medical College, where he graduated in March, 1857. He first located in New Cumberland, where he practiced two years, then removed to New Market, York Co. In September, 1864, he was appointed assistant surgeon in the army, and was stationed in the United States Hospital at York, Pa. Towards the close of the Rebellion he resigned his position, and resumed the practice of medicine at New Market. In 1868 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and the year following re-elected. In 1871 he removed to Harrisburg, where he has since remained in the practice of his profession. In 1876 he was appointed on the medical staff of the city hospital, Harrisburg, a position he now holds. Dr. Hursh married, in 1859, Sarah A. Reiff. *

COL. WILLIAM W. JENNINGS.

William Wesley Jennings, son of William Jennings (1807-1875) and Elmina Elizabeth Boas, was born July 22, 1838, at Harrisburg, Pa. His father came to Harrisburg about 1823, to learn the trade of coach-smith, where he married, and subsequently established a foundry, which he successfully carried on for a long period. His grandfather, William Jennings, raised a company in the Juniata Valley for the War of 1812-14, but died very suddenly before the company left home. William W., the subject of this sketch, attended the public schools of Harrisburg until his fifteenth year, when he commenced to learn the trade of an iron-moulder in his father's foundry. From 1860 to 1875 he was engaged in the iron business. During the war of the Rebellion he raised the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, a nine months' regiment, and was in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville (see history of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment, ante p. 202). Shortly after being mustered out of service the Gettysburg campaign opened, and Col. Jennings was placed in command of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia. From 1864 to 1866, Col. Jennings served as sheriff of the county of Dauphin, and again from 1876 to 1878. Upon the death of Mr. Calder, president of the First National Bank of Harrisburg, in 1880, he was elected to that position, in which he continues, and is the president of the Commonwealth Guarantee Trust and Safe-Deposit Company.

FRANCIS JORDAN.

Francis Jordan, son of John and Jane Jordan, was born in Bedford County, Pa., Feb. 5, 1820. His father was of English and his mother of Irish parentage, both highly esteemed for their intelligence and Christian virtues. He was educated by his maternal uncle, a Mississippi planter, at Augusta College, Kentucky, and at Franklin and Marshall College, Pennsylvania. He studied law, was admitted to practice, and soon after was appointed district attorney of Bedford County, and subsequently elected to the same position. At the outset his official conduct was able, his indictments being so accurately drawn that not one of them was quashed for informality. In 1850 he became the law partner of Alexander King, of Bedford, subsequently president judge, which relations continued until 1861. In 1855, Mr. Jordan commenced his public career, and was elected to the State Senate for a term of three years. There he was made chairman of the committee charged with drawing a bill for the readjustment of legislative districts under a new apportionment, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, composed of some of the best legal talent in the State, and a prominent advocate of the bill authorizing the sale of the public works. He declined a re-election, and was soon after appointed one of a commission of three to revise the civil code, which duty was postponed on account of hostilities, and finally passed to other hands. He was also tendered the appointment of attorney-general of the State by the Governor, which he reluctantly declined by reason of the complications attending it.

A pressing exigency called for a sudden concentration of troops upon the central border and at Cumberland, Md., in the fall of 1861. Upon the request of Governor Curtin, Mr. Jordan accompanied the noted Reserve Corps as assistant quartermaster, and while thus employed, without solicitation or even knowledge, he was appointed by President Lincoln paymaster in the army, and promptly confirmed, and served for two and a half years in Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana, during the last four months of which time being chief paymaster in the Army of the Mississippi, and disbursing during his entire term four million dollars, under a bond of only twenty thousand dollars, rendering a satisfactory account. Urged by Governor Curtin he resigned his position, and was appointed by him military agent of the State at Washington, where the manifold interests of Pennsylvania were ably represented, and under his management the claims of our soldiers were promptly examined and paid. The Legislature, recognizing his efficient services, passed an act conferring upon him the rank of a colonel of infantry. In 1866, Col. Jordan was chosen chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and conducted the canvass with great ability and discretion, resulting in the election of Gen. Geary, who appointed Col. Jordan Secretary of the Commonwealth, in which capacity he served with ability for six years.

In 1871, pending the agitation for the revision of the State Constitution, he wrote and published a paper advocating a revision and detailing his reasons, which was well received, and on the 19th of February, 1872, upon invitation, he delivered an address before the Social Science Association, of Philadelphia, and afterward in Pittsburgh, advocating thirteen amendments, covering the most vital defects of the old instrument, twelve of which were adopted by the State Convention. These papers served to establish the reputation of Col. Jordan as a sound lawyer, and elicited strong commendation from intelligent men both within and without the commonwealth.

Col. Jordan was prominently presented in the nominating convention as the successor of Governor Geary, but withdrawn to harmonize conflicting interests, and in the same convention his vote was next to the successful candidate for judge of the Supreme Court, although he was not before the convention for the office. Col. Jordan took up his residence in Harrisburg upon his appointment as Secretary of the Commonwealth, and in 1872 resumed the practice of law in partnership with Hon. Louis W. Hall, since which time he has acted as counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad, and various other corporations. On Nov. 4, 1882, following the resignation of Secretary Quay, he was appointed by Governor Hoyt Secretary of the Commonwealth. Col. Jordan is an esteemed citizen, recognized as an able advocate and judicious and safe counselor, and possessed of sterling integrity in all his business relations.

About the same time he had also been prevailed upon to accept the presidency of the Pennsylvania Telephone Company. This is a new corporation, having half a million of dollars capital, and its operations extending from Easton, on the Delaware, to Chambersburg, including Harrisburg, York, Columbia, Reading, Pottsville, Mauch Chunk, and other important points.

His first wife, Louisa Farquhar, was the adopted daughter of Hon. Job Mann, ex-State treasurer and ex-member of Congress, and bore him children,—William F. Jordan, publisher of the Era, a daily newspaper of Bradford, Pa., and Mary Alice, wife of Walter F. Moore, of Bedford. His present wife, Mary, is a daughter of Rev. William M. Hall, a Presbyterian clergyman, and sister of Judge Hall, of Bedford, and of Hon. Louis W. Hall, his law partner. *

MAJ. JOHN B. KEEFER.

John Brua Keefer, son of Andrew Keefer (1803-1876) and Catharine Brua (1810-1886), was born April 10, 1832, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received his education at the public schools of the borough and at the Harrisburg Military Institute, established by Capt. Alden Partridge in 1845. Subsequently he learned the trade of a machinist in the shops of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad at Reading. From 1853 to 1864 he carried on a foundry and machine-shop at Cressona, Schuylkill Co., Pa.; then engaged in the oil trade in Venango County; afterwards carrying on the rolling-mill business at Allentown; and from 1870 to 1877 in the manufacture of fire-brick at Harrisburg. On the 13th of February, 1877, he was commissioned by President Grant major and paymaster in the United States army, and at present in active service. Maj. Keefer married, Nov. 27, 1854, Caroline R. Boyer, of Reading. Their children were Horace A., Catharine A. (married Lieut. J. W. Duncan, U.S.A.), Edith M. (married M. H. Paxton), Mary F., Frank R., and Caroline E.

RUDOLPH F. KELKER.

Rudolph Frederick Kelker, son of Frederick Kelker and Catharine Fager, was born Feb. 17, 1820, at Harrisburg, Pa. In March, 1835, he entered the hardware-store of Oglesby & Hinckley, successors to his father, to learn the business, and continued with them until May, 1838, when, owing to delicate health, he left the establishment and gave attention to the improvement of his father's lands in the vicinity of Harrisburg. On the 18th of November, 1842, he purchased the interest of Mr. Hinckley and carried on the hardware business with his partner, Mr. Oglesby, until the death of the latter, March 21, 1846. He continued the business alone until May following, when he associated with him his two brothers, and conducted the same under the firm-name of Kelker & Brothers, remaining in business until May 14, 1851, when, on account of failing health, he retired from mercantile pursuits. In 1852 he was elected a director of the Harrisburg Bank, in which institution he has served a number of triennial terms, and is at present a member of the board. For several years he was a director of the First National Bank and a manager of the Harrisburg Cemetery. In the incorporation of Harrisburg as a city, he was appointed, with seven other citizens, by the Legislature on the commission to lay out the streets and avenues necessary in the new territory included within its limits. Since 1854 he has served as a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy, and was for a long time secretary and treasurer.

From 1866 to 1872, Mr. Kelker was one of the directors of the poor for the county of Dauphin, and through his instrumentality proper legislation was secured, new additional buildings erected, and such improvements made in the general management of the almshouse as greatly alleviated the condition of the unfortunate inmates. He was one of the founders of the City Hospital, a manager since its organization in 1873, from March, 1878, its treasurer, and was on the committee to superintend the construction of the new building recently erected. In 1873 and 1874 he was one of the trustees of the Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, and at the organization of the Harrisburg City Passenger Railway Company, in 1874, was made a director, and also since Nov. 2, 1874, has been its treasurer. Apart from these active duties of citizen-life, Mr. Kelker's labors in the Reformed Church, of which he is a prominent member, it is here deemed proper to summarize. His parents were also members of the Reformed Church, and on the 27th of April, 1823, he was enrolled as a scholar in the Sunday-school. On the 27th of December, 1835, he was confirmed by Rev. J. F. Berg, D.D., a member of the church, a deacon of the church from 1841 to 1849, an elder in the same from 1849 to 1875, excepting the year 1867, and since May, 1883, has filled the same position. From October, 1836, until April 29, 1850, he served as a teacher, and from the latter date until January, 1870, as superintendent of the Sunday-school, when, at the request of the consistory of the church, he took charge of an adult Bible class, which during the first year increased from twelve to ninety members, and at the close of December, 1874, it numbered one hundred and sixty-one, when the class was assigned by the consistory to religious institutions of the city. For many years Mr. Kelker was one of the vice-presidents of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath-School Association, and for the last three years one of the vice-presidents of the board of managers of the American Sunday-School Union.

In 1845, Mr. Kelker was elected a trustee of Marshall College, Mercersburg, and subsequently, until 1869, a corporate trustee after its union with Franklin College, of Lancaster, as Franklin and Marshall College. The Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church the pastor of the church on account of Mr. Kelker's anti-ritualistic views. Being thus relieved of his work in the Sabbath-school, he accepted an invitation to organize and take charge of an adult Bible class of both sexes, to be composed of persons of all denominations, as well as of those who had no church relation, which organization was effected under the name of the "Salem Bible Class of Harrisburg," now numbering two hundred and sixty-eight members, and has had connected with it during its existence more than seven hundred persons. The class has a valuable library, and for years has been one of the established was incorporated in 1859, and he was one of the five trustees named in the charter and the first president of the board. For a number of years he was treasurer of Synod, and at present is vice-president of the board of trustees. Since 1863, with the exception of three years (1875-78), up to the present time he has served as treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the General Synod of the Reformed Church. He was a member of the synodical committee to prepare the "Triglott Tercentenary Heidelberg Catechism," published in 1863, but dissented from the final action of that body, believing the many changes made in the new English translation as wholly unwarranted and uncalled for. He repeatedly represented his congregation in Classis, and the Classis as delegate to the Synod; was a member of the Synod of York in 1866, and made powerful opposition to the adoption and reference of the "New Order of Worship" to General Synod. In 1867, with others, he united in a call for a convention of the ministers and elders of the Eastern Synod, which assembled at Myerstown, Pa., to protest against the "Order of Worship," as being contrary to the doctrines and cultus of the Reformed Church. One of the results of this movement was the establishment, in 1869, of Ursinus College, at Freeland, Montgomery Co., Pa., under the presidency of Rev. J. H. A. Bomberger, D.D., with a university charter, thus enabling the institution to teach theology as well as the classics. In 1879, Mr. Kelker served as a member of the "Peace Commission," a body consisting of twelve ministers and twelve laymen, chosen by direction of the General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States by the several District Synods to assemble at Harrisburg, Pa., and adjust the differences existing in that church in doctrine, cultus, and government. After eight days' discussion a basis of union was unanimously adopted, and a new era in the history of the church was opened up, which brought peace and harmony. The work of this commission was unanimously approved of by the General Synod, and the same persons were at once appointed by it to prepare an "Order of Worship" for the denomination suited to its wants and evangelical in its character.

In June, 1839, at his suggestion the Sunday-school teachers of Harrisburg founded the Harrisburg Sunday-School Union, and of which he was the first secretary, and upon its reorganization, in 1854, was chosen president thereof. He was one of the founders of the Young Men's Christian Association, in December, 1854, and president of the same in 1856. Mr. Kelker has likewise been deeply interested in the temperance work. In 1837, at the suggestion of and in connection with an intimate friend, James Cowden, they started the first total abstinence society in Harrisburg, as previous to this date the temperance organizations allowed the use of malt and vinous liquors. In 1840 he took a prominent part in the Washington temperance movement, and has often represented the cause in State conventions. Since their organization he has been the chairman of the executive committee appointed by the Christian citizens of Harrisburg, a number of years ago, to watch the applications for license, so as to prevent improper persons from obtaining the same, and to require all engaged in the liquor traffic to conform to the provisions of the license laws. As foreman of the grand jury of the county in 1871, 1873, and 1879, he made presentment of the license law as a public nuisance, and gave valuable statistics on the subject which attracted great attention. The report of 1873 was widely circulated, more than fifty thousand copies being printed by the friends of the temperance cause. In accordance with the suggestions of this report, almost one-half of the applications for that year for hotel and saloon liquor license were refused by the court. Mr. Kelker married June 17, 1844, Mary Anne Reily, daughter of Gen. William Reily, and their children were Frederick, Luther Reily, Rudolph Frederick, and William Anthony, of whom the second and fourth are living.

AGNES KEMP, M.D.

Agnes Kemp, daughter of Antoine Nininger and Katharine May, was born Nov. 4, 1823, at Harrisburg, Pa. She was educated partly at the public schools and at Mrs. Kingsford's seminary at Harrisburg, afterwards pursuing the study of the languages under competent instructors. In 1843 she married Col. William T. Sanders, of Harrisburg, who died in 1853. In 1855 she commenced the study of medicine in the city of New York, but the following year abandoned it, owing to domestic duties. In 1857 she married Joseph Kemp, a lawyer of the Blair County bar. In 1875, having ample leisure, she resumed her medical studies and entered the Women's Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution she graduated in 1878. The following year was spent in the hospitals of New York and other cities. In 1879 she returned to Harrisburg and began the practice of her profession, which she continues. She was the first woman admitted a member of the Dauphin County Medical Society.

WALTER H. KENDIG.

Walter Henry Kendig, son of Martin Kendig and Rebecca McFarland, was born June 3, 1830, in Middletown, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the borough, and learned merchandising. He afterwards was engaged with Philip Irwin and Stephen Atherton in several extensive railroad contracts on the New York and Erie Railroad. Returning to Middletown he engaged in the lumber business with Daniel Kendig & Co., and at present is in the same business as Kendig & Lauman, late Kendig, Bricker & Lauman. He was appointed postmaster at Middletown by President Lincoln, and removed by President Johnson. Mr. Kendig married on the 25th of December, 1856, Jane E. McMurtrie, daughter of William McMurtrie, of Huntingdon, Pa.

JOSEPH H. LANDIS.

Joseph H. Landis was born on the 14th day of May, 1832, in Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. He is the son of Christian Landis, who was born in 1807, and Elizabeth Hammaker, who was born in 1810. He attended the ordinary schools of the time, and subsequently the Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, but did not take the full course. Worked some time on a farm, and was clerk in a store two years. He became manager of the Cameron Furnace at Middletown, and afterwards a partner of Landis & Co. in the same furnace. In 1878 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives, and served one term of two years, was on several important committees, but declined a second election. He is at present secretary of the Lochiel Iron Company, and superintendent of the Lochiel Furnaces; was married, about 1864, to Matilda L. Crist, daughter of the late George and Mary Crist, of Middletown, and their children are George C., Matilda C., Joseph Henry, and John C.

M. W. McALARNEY.

Matthias Wilson McAlarney, son of John McAlarney (1800-1874) and Catharine Wilson, was born June 7, 1840, in Mifflinburg, Union Co., Pa. He was educated at the University of Lewisburg, graduating in the class of 1861. He learned the art of printing in the Chronicle office at Lewisburg, and from 1861 to 1867, a period of six years, published the Potter Journal at Coudersport, Pa. During the war was deputy provost-marshal of the Eighteenth District. Studied law with Hon. Isaac Benson, of Coudersport, and was admitted to the bar 27th of February, 1867. The same year he removed to Harrisburg, and entered upon the practice of his profession. From 1874 until the close of 1882 was more or less actively engaged in editorial work on the Harrisburg Daily Telegraph. In 1868 he was appointed clerk to the commission to settle the border claims, and in 1871 was attorney for the commonwealth in connection for the same work in the county of Cumberland. On the 23d of September, 1874, he was appointed postmaster at Harrisburg, reappointed in 1878, and again in 1882. During the erection of the United States court-house and post-office, he was appointed disbursing agent, and upon its completion, in 1882, custodian of that building. Mr. McAlarney married, Feb. 28, 1867, Ada Hoffman, daughter of Jacob and Eve Hoffman.

COL. HENRY McCORMICK.

Henry McCormick, son of James McCormick son of William, and Eliza Buehler, daughter of George, was born at Harrisburg, March 10, 1851. He had his education at the Harrisburg Academy, Partridge's Military Institute, and graduated at Yale College in 1852. Upon his return from college he commenced the study of the law with his father. His taste being for a more stirring pursuit, he gave it up and learned the iron business at Reading furnace, now Robesonia, at the first opportunity purchasing an interest in the Henry Clay and Eagle furnaces, near Marietta, Lancaster Co. In 1857 Paxtang furnace came under his management, and in 1866 the nail-works at Fairview, in Cumberland Co., at the mouth of the Conedoguit Creek, which he has successfully conducted since. In 1865, before a railway spanned the continent, he crossed the great plain and mountain range to the Pacific coast, returning by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1877 he visited Europe. Long before these journeys he had shown his devotion to his country. At the opening of the Rebellion he offered his life and services to the cause of patriotism, gathering a company of volunteers, Company F, Lochiel Grays, of the Twenty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the three months' service. When this organization was disbanded he was at once chosen colonel of the First Regiment Pennsylvania militia, under Maj.-Gen. John F. Reynolds, by whom he was assigned to the command of the First Brigade. The object of forming this division being accomplished by the contest at Antietam, it was mustered out of service.

Under the act relative to a new geological survey of Pennsylvania, he was appointed by Governor Hartman a commissioner, and by his colleagues its treasurer. These positions he occupies at present. As a co-trustee of his father's estate he has shown tact and judgment, and in the pursuit of all the business in which he is engaged great energy and success. To all benevolent objects he is a most generous giver, without ostentation or publicity. As an evidence of the esteem in which he is held it may be stated that when a candidate for Congress, in 1882, his majority in his native county was one hundred and fifty-nine, while his party was in a minority of nearly fifteen hundred on the vote for other offices. He was married June 29, 1867, to Annie Criswell, daughter of John Vance Criswell and Hannah (Dull) Criswell, having children,—Henry Buehler, Vance, Mary (d. s. p.), Hugh (d. s. p.), and Annie.

JAMES McCORMICK.

James McCormick, son of James McCormick son of William, and Eliza Buehler, daughter of George, was born at Harrisburg, Oct. 31, 1832. He was educated in the common schools, Capt. Partridge's Military Institute, the Harrisburg Academy, graduating at Yale College in 1853. Studied law under his father, was admitted to the bars of Dauphin and Cumberland Counties, and practiced for several years. Upon the death of his father he became one of the trustees of his estate, a charge that absorbed his time and attention to such a degree that he abandoned his profession; the magnitude of this estate, and the enterprises conducted under it, requiring caution, prudence, and judgment in its management. Mr. McCormick has shown all these qualities in the successful performance of his duties. He has never held political office, but in the religious and charitable work of the day occupies a conspicuous position. He has been an elder in the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, from its foundation in 1858, a successful Sunday-school tutor, president and trustee of the Young Men's Christian Association; in all the active work of his denomination a most efficient and liberal agent; a large contributor to the Home for the Friendless in this city, to all charitable objects, and from its opening president of the Harrisburg hospital, and one of its most active, attentive, and competent advisers. He married at Harrisburg May 26, 1859, Mary Wilson Alricks, daughter of Hermanus Alricks and Mary Wilson Kerr, having children,—Hermanus (d. s. p.), Henry, James, William, Donald, Eliza, Mary (d. s. p.), and Robert.

ANDREW S. McCREATH.

Andrew S. McCreath, son of William McCreath (died 1878, aged seventy-five) and Margaret Crichton (died 1870, aged sixty-three), was born March 8, 1849, in Ayr, Scotland. He was educated at Ayr Academy, and Glasgow University for classical course, and took special chemical courses at Andersonian University, Glasgow, under Professors Penny and Dr. Clark, and subsequently at Göttingen, under Professors Wochler and Filtig. He came to America in 1870, and assumed charge of the chemical laboratory at the Pennsylvania Steel Works, where he remained till August, 1874, when he was appointed by the State geologist, chemist to the Second Geological Survey of Pennsylvania, which position he still holds. He has prepared three reports for the State geologist, and special reports on the mineral resources along the lines of the Shenandoah Valley, Norfolk and Western, and New River Railroads. He was married Feb. 4, 1875, to Eliza, daughter of Charles L. and Mary W. (Hummel) Berghaus.

MAJ. ELBRIDGE McCONKEY.

Elbridge McConkey, son of David McConkey (1800-1868) and Sarah Brinton, was born July 29, 1840, in West Chester, Pa. He was educated at East Hampton, Mass., University of Virginia, and Harvard University, from which he graduated in July, 1861. He studied law at Harvard and with Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, and admitted to the Chester County bar in 1863. He was aide-de-camp to Gen. McCall, First Division Pennsylvania Reserves, Fifth Army Corps, captain and brevet major, 1861-63. He was resident clerk of the House of Representatives in 1875-76 and 1883-84. He has been secretary of the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society since 1869. He married in 1863, Fanny W. Berghaus, daughter of Dr. Charles L. and Mary W. (Hummel) Berghaus, of Harrisburg, and their children are John, Charles B., Mary B., and Sarah B. McConkey.

COL. GEORGE F. McFARLAND.

George McFarland, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to this country from Scotland before 1760, and settled in Chester County. His son, John, was born about 1760, and became a miller. He married Mary Temple (born of English parents, Aug. 1, 1775), and soon after removed to Cumberland County, settling not far from Shiremanstown, where he died about 1818, and was buried in the Shiremanstown burial-ground; the family then removed to Dauphin County. Here the son, John, for a time the main support of the widow and family, grew to manhood, following his father's trade, that of a miller, and married Elizabeth Fisher, born and raised in Dauphin County. Of their children, George Fisher McFarland, the subject of this sketch, was born on the 28th of April, 1834, at what was then Todd's Mill, in Swatara township, Dauphin Co. When two years of age his father removed to a farm in Lower Paxtang township, one mile north of Linglestown, where he remained twelve years. George attended school at Gilchrist's school-house, five or six weeks in each winter, the only educational opportunity he enjoyed until nearly fifteen years of age, when his father removed to Harrisburg. At sixteen years of age he assumed charge of a select school on Duncan's Island, in May, 1850; the following winter in Perry County, and in August, 1857, a select school at Berrysburg, Dauphin Co., following with the public winter school, and then a select school till the next August, when he was employed as assistant teacher at the Freeburg Academy, in Snyder County, where he remained fifteen months. About the close of the year 1853 he became ticket agent at Lewistown, remaining eighteen months. He taught several months at Lewistown in 1856, when he leased the Freeburg Academy for four years. This venture was a successful one. In December, 1858, he purchased the McAllisterville Academy, Juniata County, whither he at once removed, and continued until the civil war, when he organized a company among his teachers, pupils, and friends, and enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he afterwards became lieutenant-colonel. His regiment participated at Chancellorsville battle, he occupying an advance position with seven hundred men. He led his regiment at Gettysburg, and entered the first day's fight with four hundred and sixty-six men and twenty-one officers, of which number one hundred and thirteen men and seven officers were able to answer roll-call at night. He himself was severely wounded, both legs being shattered, necessitating the amputating of the right one below the knee. He was removed to McAllisterville, and although unable to leave his bed for almost a year, soon resumed charge of his academy, classes going to his bedside to recite. In April, 1864, he was appointed a clerk in the State Statistical Department. On the inauguration of the soldiers' orphan-school system, in October, 1864, he changed his academy into the first school established under this noble charity. He was appointed superintendent of soldiers' orphan schools April 28, 1867, by Governor Geary, and immediately began the work of organizing and perfecting the system, visiting and grading the schools. He prepared the original act, which was adopted almost without amendment, authorizing the schools, and served four years in this position. On the 28th of April, 1871, assumed control of the Temperance Vindicator, increasing its circulation from three hundred to upwards of five thousand. This weekly was maintained until 1877, when the extreme stringency of the times caused its discontinuance. His time since then has been devoted to the oversight of the McAllisterville Soldiers' Orphan School, of which he assumed proprietorship in 1871. *

SAMUEL McILHENNY.

Samuel McIlhenny, son of Samuel McIlhenny (1787-1864) and Mary Carson (1803-1871), was born June 4, 1823, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Lower Paxtang township, and was brought up a farmer. At the age of seventeen he apprenticed himself to William J. Kaul to learn the trade of a tanner, since which period in life he has followed that occupation. In 1849 he commenced business for himself at Linglestown, in which he continues. Taking an active part in the political affairs of the county, Mr. McIlhenny was elected county auditor in 1869, serving three years, and in 1873 elected one of the county commissioners, and re-elected in filling that responsible station six years. During his term of office various needed reforms were made in the administration of the public affairs of the county, and much credit is due Mr. McIlhenny for his efforts in this direction. He has filled the various township offices, and in 1879 was appointed one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison. Mr. McIlhenny married, Jan. 9, 1847, Catharine Ann Culp, born April 30, 1823, near Fisherville, Jackson township, Dauphin Co.; died Sept. 15, 1881, at Linglestown, daughter of Louis Culp and Sarah Maria Albert. Their children were Sarah R., John H., Mary Ann (d. s. p.), Kate Ann, Lydia J., Elizabeth E. (married Jacob Balt-haser), Samuel C. (d. s. p.), Susan S., George W., Emma E., William A., Anna Maria, and Minnie C.

CAPT. THOMAS F. MALONEY.

Thomas Francis Maloney, son of Daniel Maloney (1795-1864) and Mary Houran (born 1800), was born 19th of August, 1843, in County Tipperary, Ireland. His parents emigrated to America in 1847, and settled at Harrisburg. Thomas F. was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, afterwards at St. Michael's Seminary, near Pittsburg, and St. Vincent's College, at Latrobe, Pa. He learned the trade of a machinist with W. O. Hickok, at the Eagle Works, Harrisburg. During the Rebellion he enlisted as a private in Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, July 22, 1862; appointed corporal of the company July 26, 1862; promoted sergeant Aug. 1, 1862; promoted first sergeant

Aug. 6, 1862; and to adjutant of an independent battalion Nov. 4, 1862; mustered out with the regiment May 8, 1863. He was appointed conditionally by Governor Curtin second lieutenant and mustering officer United States volunteers Aug. 4, 1861, and upon the organization of the Two Hundred and First Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, was commissioned captain of Company F, Aug. 27, 1864, serving with the command in the Army of the Potomac until his muster out by reason of General Order No. 94, A. G. O. War Department series, June 21, 1865. Upon the reorganization of the First City Zouaves of Harrisburg, Capt. Maloney, in 1869, was elected first lieutenant, and Dec. 16, 1870, commissioned captain of Company A of the Zouave Battalion. When the National Guard of Pennsylvania was established, the company became known as the City Grays of Harrisburg, and on the organization of the Eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania National Guard, was attached to that command and mustered in as Company D. He was recommissioned Dec. 14, 1875, and Dec. 16, 1880, is one of the senior captains in the service, and has repeatedly refused a field office, preferring to remain with his company, which has no superior in the National Guard. On the 1st of February, 1883, he was appointed arsenal-keeper of the State arsenal at Harrisburg, a position he now holds. Capt. Maloney married, in 1863, Ellen Casey, daughter of John Casey and — Powers, of Harrisburg, and they have one child living, Ellen. It may be stated in this connection that Capt. Maloney is the author of a military manual on "Guard Duty," which is considered an authority on that subject.

GEORGE MATHESON.

George Matheson, son of Adam Matheson and Isabella Wright, was born Oct. 27, 1828, at Jedburgh, Roxburyshire, Scotland. He enjoyed the benefit of only a common school education, and in June, 1845, left home and entered the employ as an apprentice of George and Robert Stephenson, the celebrated locomotive- and engine-builders, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. He remained with them the full term of five years, making himself proficient in all departments of the business. He afterwards worked a few months in England, but in October, 1850, embarked from Glasgow for America. On the second day after his arrival in New York City he commenced work in the shops of Hoggs & Delamater, and subsequently labored in and had charge of other works, finally settling down in the employ of the Old Novelty Iron-Works, where he remained ten years. He then assumed charge of the erection of engines in the vessels which were fitted out by the Fulton Iron-Works of James Murphy & Co., New York, remaining in that position several years. The civil war being then in progress, he had charge of all the outside work of that firm, including the fitting out of government vessels. In 1864 he was appointed superintendent of the East River Iron-Works, Samuel Secor & Co., at that time largely engaged in building marine and stationary engines. It was here he first became acquainted with the manufacture of tubing, having built the machinery for the Bergen Tube-Mill of New Jersey. In 1869 he entered into an arrangement with parties, afterwards incorporated as the National Tube-Works Company, to erect works for them in East Boston, Mass., and subsequently acted as superintendent of the works until 1872, when it was decided to erect a more extensive establishment at McKeesport, Pa. Mr. Matheson took entire charge of the projected works, and they were built under his management. He acted as general superintendent of this establishment until 1880, introducing several improvements in tubing manufacture, and successfully operating Siemens' gas regenerator furnaces, which had never been used in this country for that purpose, and not successfully in England. In 1880 he removed to Middletown, and with his sons projected and established the large and successful works of the American Tube and Iron Company, and of which his sons, A. Scott and James H. Matheson, have the general management. Mr. Matheson married, May, 1850, Isabella Hewison, a native of Newcastle, England, and they have had eleven children, of whom eight survive,—A. Scott, James H., Isabella H. (married John Sword, of Scotland), Elizabeth, Mary A. H. (married A. W. Momeyer), Hannah H., William D., and Cornelia C. *

B. P. MEYERS.

Benjamin F. Meyers, son of Michael D. Meyers, (1809-1867) and his wife, Sarah Shaff, was born July 6, 1833, near New Centreville, Somerset Co., Pa. He was educated at the Somerset Academy and Jefferson College, Canonsburg. Studied law under Hon. William H. Koontz, of Somerset, and was admitted to the Somerset County bar in 1855, and to that of Bedford County in 1856. In the year following he abandoned the profession of law to engage in journalism. He published the Bedford Gazette from 1857 to 1873, and from June, 1868, has been the publisher and editor of the Harrisburg Daily and Weekly Patriot. Represented the county of Bedford in the State Legislature in 1864, and was elected to the United States Congress from the district composed of the counties of Somerset, Bedford, Fulton, Franklin, and Adams, serving from 1871 until 1873. He was printer to the State from 1874 to 1877, delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago in 1864, and at Cincinnati in 1880, and participated generally in the speaking campaigns of his party in this and adjoining States. Apart from his editorial labors, he has been an occasional contributor to literary periodicals. Mr. Meyers married, in 1854, Susan C. Koontz, daughter of Jacob and Rosa Koontz, of Somerset, Pa., and their children are Rosa S., married Ellis L. Mumma; Edwin K., Henry S., Susan I., and William K.

GEORGE F. MATTER, M.D.

George Frederick Matter, son of Michael Matter and Sarah Crum, was born Aug. 14, 1840, in Lykens Valley. John Matter, the great-grandfather, of German parentage, located in Lykens Valley at an early day. He had six sons, of whom George married a Miss Rumberger, and their son Michael, born in the valley, married Sarah, daughter of Frederick Crum. Michael Matter died Jan. 11, 1880, his wife

June 10, 1876. George Frederick, the subject of our sketch, was brought up on his father's farm until the age of eighteen, when he was sent to an academy at Markleville, Perry Co., Pa., where he remained two years. He studied medicine under Dr. Samuel Stites, of Millerstown; entered Jefferson Medical College in 1862, from which institution he graduated in 1866, having in the mean time served in the army nine months as hospital steward. After practicing his profession over three years in Perry County, Dr. Matter removed to Williamstown, Dauphin Co., where he continues in active practice. He married first, in 1866, Louisa J. Logan, of Port Royal, Pa., died Dec. 4, 1876; married, secondly, Annie J. Yeager, of Williamstown, and they had George Clare and Ralph Wilber.

JACOB F. MILLER.

Jacob F. Miller, son of Jacob Miller and Sarah Fackler, was born Dec. 14, 1834, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father, born 1799, in Lower Paxtang, removed to West Hanover about 1834, where he died in 1870. His wife, Sarah Fackler, died at the age of sixty-three, and their children were Samuel, Susanna (married Jacob Brain, of Lower Paxtang), David E., and Jacob F. Jacob F. remained on his father's farm until he attained his majority. He is a farmer, and has served ten years as justice of the peace in West Hanover. Mr. Miller married, in 1853, Caroline Forney, daughter of John Forney, of West Hanover, and their children were Monroe, d. s. p.; Alfred J.; Robert Scott, a farmer in Iowa; Emma J., married James M. Rauch, of West Hanover; and John J., d. s. p.

WILLIAM MITCHELL.

William Mitchell, son of Joseph Mitchell (1783-1832) and Elizabeth Zearing (1789-1859), was born Sept. 17, 1814, in Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the Dickinson College preparatory school, and took a partial course in Dickinson College, where he studied civil engineering. He was prothonotary of the Court of Common Pleas and clerk of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County two terms, 1855-61. He married, March 15, 1849, Angelica Ehrman, daughter of Christian and Mary F. Ehrman, and their children are Mary Augusta, married Rev. S. Hubbard Hoover; William Sullivan, d. s. p.; Ehrman Burkman; and Samuel Morton, d. s. p. Ehrman B. Mitchell, son of the foregoing, was born April 11, 1854, in Harrisburg, Pa. He was graduated from Dickinson College in 1874, and admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1875. He was elected prothonotary and clerk of the Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County in 1879, and re-elected in 1882.

GEORGE F. MISH, M.D

George Frederick Mish, son of George Mish (1794-1850) and Catharine Doll (1796-1877), was born July 5, 1827, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a good English and classical education at the Harrisburg Academy and the military institute at Norwich, Vt. He learned the art of printing, and subsequently studied medicine with Dr. Joshua M. Wiestling, at Harrisburg. He graduated from the medical department, University of Pennsylvania, in 1853, and commenced the practice of medicine, first at Harrisburg for a few years, when he located in Middletown, where he continues to reside in active professional life. During the war of the Rebellion he served as assistant surgeon of the Fifteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry from 1862 to 1865. Dr. Mish married, in 1859, Mary E.

Smuller, daughter of George Smuller and Caroline Fisher, of Middletown, and their children were Caroline S., George Smuller, Mary C., and Frederick.

H. K. MYERS, M.D.

Henry K. Myers, son of John Myers and Elizabeth Keiser, was born Feb. 10, 1841, in Perry County, Pa. His great-grandfather was a soldier of the Revolution, and a resident of Bucks County, Pa., where the grandfather, Philip Myers, was born. About the year 1800 the latter removed to Perry County, where fifteen, when he was sent to school at Markleville, and later to the McAllisterville Academy, teaching during the winter. On the 21st of September, 1861, he enlisted in Company H, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry, and appointed sergeant; promoted first lieutenant of Company I, May 27, 1863. He served during all the campaigns of the Army of the Cumberland, and commanded a company in Sherman's "march to the sea;" was subsequently captured and sent to Libby Prison. Having prior to his going into service began the study of medicine, he re-he had previously purchased a tract of land. He married Magdalena Shue, and their children were Elizabeth, Catharine, John, Philip, and another who died in infancy. John Myers, born in 1817, followed farming until his removal to Maryland, where he died. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Isaac Keiser, first mayor of Burlington, Iowa. Their children were Henry K., Elias, d. s. p., Catharine (married — Stewart), Mary Ann (married — Neiffer), Eliza, d. s. p., and Margaret (married — Fries). Henry K., the subject of this sketch, was brought up on his father's farm until the age of sumed his studies by entering the office of Dr. Henry C. Caslow, of Halifax, attended his first course of lectures at Burlington, Vt., the second at the University of Maryland, where he graduated March 9, 1867. He at first located at York, afterwards removed to Augusta, Pa., and at the end of three years became a resident of Lykens, where he continues in the practice of his profession. In whatever relates to the prosperity of the "Upper End," Dr. Myers takes a deep and prominent interest, and is president of the Lykens Valley Savings Fund and Loan Corporation.

Bro Neagley

JOHN NEAGLEY.

John Neagley, son of Daniel Neagley and Margaret Gable, was born Oct. 10, 1827, in Lykens Valley. His ancestor, Jacob Neagley, an emigrant from Wurttemberg, Germany, settled at first in Berks County, subsequently removing to Lykens Valley, where he permanently located. He had two sons, Joseph and George. Joseph, born Sept. 15, 1766, died July 12, 1828, married Maria Hoffman, born Jan. 8, 1773, died Feb. 18, 1840. Their children were Daniel, George, Elizabeth, Magdalena, Catharine, and Sarah. Daniel, the eldest, born Nov. 12, 1797, died Feb. 2, 1878, married Margaret Gable, and their children were George, John, Joseph, William, Daniel, Isaac, Mary, Catharine, Sarah, Margaret, and Hannah. Of these, John Neagley, the subject of this sketch, received a limited education, and learned the trade of cabinet-making at Liverpool, Perry Co. Upon his return home he established himself in business, but at the expiration of two years removed to Freeport, Ill., subsequently coming back to Pennsylvania, where for a period of seventeen years he conducted cabinet-making and undertaking at Liverpool. In 1869 he established a planing-mill at Millersburg, which he now carries on. Mr. Neagley married, Dec. 22, 1853, E. R. Murray, daughter of John and Anna Murray.

JOSEPH H. NISLEY.

Joseph Herman Nisley, son of Martin Nisley (1786-1868) and Fanny Landis (1788-1871), was born Feb. 11, 1831, in Lower Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools, brought up a farmer, and afterwards engaged in the hardware business at Middletown. In 1865 he was appointed United States assessor, serving until elected prothonotary of the county, which office he acceptably filled from 1867 to 1878. He represented the county of Dauphin in the State Legislature in 1875-78. He is now connected with the Middletown Furniture Manufactory, one of the successful industries of that growing town. Mr. Nisley married Mary Catharine Croll, daughter of Henry and Mary Croll, and their children are Annie Croll, Lillian Frances (married William M. Lauman), Mary Josephine, and Fannie Heikes.

MORTIMER O'CONNOR, M.D.

Mortimer O'Conner is a native of County Kerry, Ireland. He received a classical education; commenced the study of medicine at Dublin, in October, 1846, and graduated there May 6, 1851. For a period of ten years he was connected with the English service as medical officer. He came to America permanently in 1863, and on the 13th of February, 1864, married Susan Frances Haldeman, daughter of Jacob M. Haldeman and Eliza E. Jacobs, of Harrisburg. He resides in that city, partly in practice of his profession.

"Upland," afterwards Chester, now Delaware County, and resided in or near Darby, where or in Philadelphia County the descendants long continued to reside. John Pearson, his grandfather, resided for the most of a long life in the village of Darby, or on his farm in its vicinity, during which time he raised a numerous family and held several offices of trust and importance, among others that of State senator for four years, of which body he acted as Speaker for some period about the year 1800. In the year 1827 he sold his farm in Delaware County and moved to Newcastle, then Mercer County, Pa., where he died in the year 1829, in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

Bevan Pearson, his fourth son, emigrated to Mercer

John J. Pearson

HON. JOHN J. PEARSON.

John J. Pearson held the office of president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon, for a period of nearly thirty-three years. Of Judge Pearson's early family history we know but little. Tradition says that they emigrated from Cheshire, England, to the Province of Pennsylvania at a very early period, and settled in what was then called

County, Pa., with his family in the year 1805, and settled on a tract of wild land which he had previously purchased, cleared a comparatively large farm, and constructed good buildings. He had on the 25th of October, 1795, married Anna Warner; they are the parents of the subject of our present memoir, who was their third son. They lived on their farm until they moved to the town of Mercer in the year 1809, where they resided for the remainder of their lives. At the election in the fall of 1808, Bevan Pearson was elected to the Legislature of Pennsylvania from Mercer County, and in the spring of 1809 was appointed to fill the offices of prothonotary, clerk of the several courts, register of wills, and recorder of deeds for that county, all of which offices he held for a period of nine years. He filled various other important county offices afterwards by election or appointment, and died on the 27th of September, 1842; his wife, Anna, died on the 6th of April, 1855.

John James Pearson was born in Delaware County, Pa., on the 25th of October, 1800, and was taken with his father's family to Mercer County in the fifth year of his age. He received a reasonably good education in the best school of that county, in a grammar boarding-school for the Latin and Greek languages, and by private tuition became very conversant in the Latin language and various branches of science, but never had the advantage of a regular collegiate education. He wrote for a considerable time in his father's office, and in the month of January, 1820, entered on the study of the law, under the instruction of the Hon. John Banks, then a lawyer of high standing and extensive practice in Mercer and the neighboring counties, and who was afterwards elected for several different terms to the Congress of the United States, and ultimately appointed president judge of the Third Judicial District, composed of the counties of Berks, Northampton, and Lehigh, which office he filled for over ten years, with great honor to himself and benefit to the public.

Mr. Pearson, after studying law diligently for two and a half years, was admitted to the bar at the August term of the court in Mercer County in the year 1822. A few months afterwards he removed to Franklin, Venango Co., and entered on the practice of his profession in the counties of Crawford, Mercer, Venango, and Warren, in all of which he practiced regularly, and occasionally in those of Erie, Beaver, and Butler, it being the practice of the lawyers of that day to travel around large circuits. A considerable portion of the legal business of Western Pennsylvania then was the trial of land titles, with which Mr. Pearson became very familiar. In the spring of 1830 he removed with his family to Mercer, his former home, and continued to reside there and practiced his profession in the same counties enumerated until the year 1849, when, on the 7th day of April of that year, he was, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by William F. Johnson, Governor of the State, to the office of president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, composed of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon, and moved with his family to Harrisburg in the summer of that same year, where he has resided ever since.

The judicial business of Dauphin County was found at that time to be greatly in arrears, being back as much as five or six years. This was partly owing to the large population, but mainly to the great amount of State business: all of the pecuniary claims by or against the Commonwealth had then and now to be tried in the county of Dauphin. With great labor and perseverance the business was in a few years so brought up that all cases desired to be heard could be tried in a short and reasonable time. The causes in Lebanon County were generally tried at the second term.

A change having been made in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, by which the judges were made elective, the president judges for a period of ten years, he was, in the autumn of 1851, elected and commissioned president judge of the same district, and again elected in the years 1861 and 1871, each time by a unanimous vote of the people, and without opposition.

The judicial business of this district was of more than ordinary magnitude and importance, involving as it did very many claims of the commonwealth of immense amount and great constitutional difficulty, involving momentous questions both under the Constitution of the United States and of this State, besides a more than ordinary amount of new and important criminal cases, and those arising on the equity side of the court.

His term of office expired on the first Monday of January, 1882, he having declined a re-election, being then in his eighty-second year.

During his residence in Mercer he was twice elected to office,—first to the Congress of the United States, for the counties of Beaver and Mercer, for the years 1835 and 1836, and afterwards, in the autumn of 1837, to the Senate of Pennsylvania, for the same counties for four years, for three of which he acted as chairman of the judiciary committee, then the most important and laborious one of the body; the duties were performed to the general satisfaction.

In the term of his judicial career he received from three different colleges of the State the honorable degree of LL.D.

In Judge Pearson's long and laborious life he was twice married,—first, on the 13th of October, 1827, to Ellen, only daughter of Gen. Samuel Hays, a very prominent politician of Venango County. She died in February, 1840. Afterwards, on July 12, 1842, he married Mary Harris Briggs, only daughter of Joseph and Caroline Briggs, granddaughter of Gen. John André Hanna, and great-granddaughter of John Harris, the founder of Harrisburg. She is still living.

BENJAMIN S. PETERS.

Benjamin Snyder Peters, son of William Peters and Elizabeth Snyder, was born March 19, 1834, in Londonderry township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather, Jacob Peters, was a native of Lebanon County, and died there. He married Barbara Beeley, of Lebanon. She died at Altoona. Their son, William Peters, was born in Londonderry township, now Cone-wago township, Oct. 27, 1811, and is still living. His wife was Elizabeth Snyder, daughter of Abraham Snyder, a native of Switzerland. She was born April 15, 1812, in Londonderry township, and is living. Benjamin S. Peters received a common school education, and at the age of sixteen entered a store at Kelly's Corner, Lebanon Co., to learn merchandising, and afterwards at Myerstown. In 1858 he commenced business at Palmyra Landing, in Lebanon County, where he remained until 1862, when he removed to Middletown, where he entered into partnership with his uncle in the mercantile trade. At the dissolution of the firm he purchased the store of Yetman Eves, and for several years was the senior partner of the firm of Peters & Brother. He retired from business in January, 1883, and when the Farmers' Bank was established was made a director and chosen president, which position he now fills. Mr. Peters married in November, 1855, Sarah Rupp, daughter of John Rupp and Polly Beane, of Lebanon County, and their children were Emma, Jerome G., and Elizabeth.

HUGH PITCAIRN, M.D.

Hugh Pitcairn, son of John Pitcairn and Agnes McEwing, was born in Johnston, Scotland, in August, 1845. While in his infancy his parents came to the United States, and settled in Allegheny City, Pa. His early education was acquired in the common and high schools of that city. In 1859 he entered the office of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Pittsburgh to learn telegraphy. In less than six months he was directed to take charge of the telegraph-office situated at the end of double track, Mill Creek, Huntingdon Co., where he continued one year, when he was appointed operator in the general office at Altoona. In this place he fulfilled the duties of clerk and operator until 1865, when he was called to Harrisburg as assistant train-master of the Northern Central Railway. Subsequently he was promoted to the situation of train-master, and two months later received the appointment of acting assistant superintendent and superintendent of the Susquehanna Division, while the directory at their ensuing meeting confirmed him as assistant general superintendent, and in this capacity he served two years. He was offered the position of superintendent of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, with the office at Mauch Chunk, Carbon Co., Pa. (now known as the Lehigh and Susquehanna Railroad, leased by the Central Railroad of New Jersey), but later was sent by the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad to Kentucky for the purpose of completing and taking charge of the Evansville, Henderson and Nashville Railroad. After the completion of this road he was appointed general superintendent, and assisted in the purchase of the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad, thus making a through line from Nashville, Tenn., to Evansville, Ind. He continued in charge of this road until its sale to the St. Louis and Southeastern Railroad, when he accepted the position of superintendent of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad (Pan-Handle Route) at Pittsburgh, where he continued until the early part of 1875, when failing health compelled him to resign. He then went to Europe, attending clinical lectures in the hospitals of London, subsequently graduating from Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. In 1880 he located at Harrisburg in the practice of his profession. Prior to leaving for Europe he had associated with H. C. Dean, of Altoona, as proprietor and editor of the Altoona Daily and Weekly Tribune, one of the largest and best inland papers of the State, and has continued to hold the same until the present time, though taking very little part in its active management since he entered the practice of medicine. *

C. A. RAHTER, M.D.

Charles A. Rahter, son of Christian Rahter and Charlotte Wehmeier, was born Aug. 9, 1839, near Minden, Westphalia, Prussia. His parents came to America about 1845, and settled near Littlestown, Adams Co., Pa. Charles A. was educated at the Hanover Classical Institute, Littlestown, and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. Commenced the study of medicine, attending his first course of lectures at the University of Maryland, and the second course at the Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, from which institution he graduated in July, 1864. He began the practice of his profession in Harrisburg in July, 1865, where he has continued, except during the time he was absent in Europe; was acting assistant surgeon United States army at Fairfax Seminary, Va., and Campbell, Washington, D. C., general hospitals in 1864-65. During the Franco-German war he was an assistant surgeon at the garrison hospital, Coblenz, on the Rhine, and surgeon in charge of the barrack hospital, St. Johann, Saarbrucken, Germany. At the close of the war he resigned, traveled through France, Switzerland, Italy, and Austria, returned to Harrisburg, and resumed the general practice of his profession. He was one of the founders of the Dauphin County Medical Society, one of its presidents, one of the vice-presidents of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, and a member of the Pathological Society of Philadelphia.

Dr. Rahter married, in 1875, Mary R. Keffer, daughter of Peter B. and Ann M. Keffer.

JACOB RIFE.

Jacob Rife, son of Henry Rife and Susan Shelly, was born March 2, 1805, in now Londonderry township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of the time, and worked on a farm until he went to learn the tanning trade with William King, of Middletown. He afterwards carried on the business for himself several years at what is known as the Keystone Tannery, at the same time conducting a small farm, now within the limits of the borough. Mr. Rife married, on the 12th of August, 1828, Mary Bomberger, daughter of Jacob and Sophia (Ettel) Bomberger, and their children were Susan, married Lewis P. Brady; Sophia, married Enoch Matlack; Henry J., of Philadelphia; Mary, married William C. Ross, of Iowa; Joseph B.; Margaret S., married David C. Kolp, of Iowa; Clara Lawrence, John Winebrenner, Jacob Flake, and William Bomberger. Of the foregoing, John Winebrenner Rife, born Aug. 14, 1846, was educated in the common schools and Crittenden's Commercial, from which latter he graduated in 1862. He learned tanning with his father, and when the latter retired from active business he and his brother Jacob took charge of the Keystone Steam Tannery, where they are extensively engaged in the manufacture of leather. He served in the One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. Jacob Flake Rife was born Sept. 29, 1848; was educated in common schools and at Pennsylvania College. He learned the tanning trade with his father, and is now associated with his brother above named in the business.

JOHN RINGLAND, M.D.

John Ringland, son of James Ringland and Magdalene Bomberger, was born Jan. 9, 1825, in Middletown, Pa. His paternal grandfather was a native of County Down, Ireland, and came to America in 1793. He died at Lancaster, Pa., in 1842. His son, James Ringland, born Dec. 5, 1795, in Chester County, Pa., settled in Middletown about 1821, where he entered mercantile life, at first in charge of the store of John Thompson, and subsequently establishing himself in business in that place, and also a branch store at Portsmouth, which was only opened during "the rafting season," for the accommodation of the lumbermen. He married Magdalene Bomberger, daughter of John Bomberger, born Sept. 16, 1799, who is yet living in Middletown. They had four children,—John, James, who died in April, 1855; Eliza Jane, married Samuel L. Yetter, of Middletown; and Mary M., married Benjamin F. Kendig, of Harrisburg. John Ringland, the eldest, was educated in the common schools of Middletown. At the age of fifteen he entered the Examiner and Herald office at Lancaster to learn the art of printing, with R. White Middleton, who afterwards sold the office and removed to Carlisle, where he purchased the Carlisle Herald, John accompanying him, as also back again to Lancaster, when he sold out the Herald and purchased the Lancaster Union. Here he remained until 1845. In 1846, Mr. Ringland commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling, of Middletown, and graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1850. He located at Portsmouth, now Middletown, where he entered upon the practice of medicine, but was subsequently compelled to relinquish it owing to impaired hearing. In the fall of 1852 he engaged in the lumber business at New Cumberland, in which he continued until the spring of 1855, when he returned to Middletown, and established himself in the drug business. In 1860 he was elected recorder of deeds and clerk of the Orphans' Court of Dauphin County, and re-elected in 1863. While at Portsmouth, in 1850, a post-office was established there, and Dr. Ringland appointed postmaster. He has served as justice of the peace, was census enumerator in 1880, and filled various borough offices. Dr. Ringland married, in 1850, Margaret E. Smith, daughter of Henry Smith, of Middletown, and their children were James Henry, Robert Wiestling, d. s. p., John, Augustus, Kate Shelly, d. s. p., Mary Jane, Louisa Bomberger, Harry Smith, d. s. p., Maggie Smith, d. s. p., Anna Laura, Edwin Shott, d. s. p., Edlith Matilda, d. s. p., and Almada Kunkel.

REV. THOMAS H. ROBINSON, D.D.

Thomas Hastings Robinson, son of William Andrew Robinson (1795-1871) and his wife, Nancy Cochran, was born Jan. 30, 1828, in Northeast township, Erie Co., Pa. He entered Oberlin College, Lorain County, Ohio, in 1846, having prepared in the preparatory department of the same institution, and graduated in 1850, pursuing the full course. During his college vacations he taught in public and select schools, and for a year or more after his graduation he was principal of the academy at Ashtabula, Ohio, and for six months was principal of the Normal School at Farmington, Ohio. He entered the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa., in 1851, graduating in April, 1854. He was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Ohio, June 13, 1854, and in July following was called to the colleague pastorate of what is now known as the Market Square Presbyterian Church, Harrisburg, as an associate with the Rev. William R. DeWitt, D.D. He began his ministration in October, 1854, and was ordained and installed on the 21st of January, 1855. After the withdrawal of Rev. DeWitt, in 1864, and his decease in 1867, he has continued in sole charge of the church. In 1868, Hamilton College, New York, conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He has been stated clerk of the Synod of Harrisburg 1870-82, and now stated clerk of the Synod of Pennsylvania, of which he was moderator one year. For one or two years he was president of Wilson Female College, Chambersburg, trustee of Princeton College, N. J., since 1875, and a director of Allegheny Theological Seminary from 1874. The Rev. Dr. Robinson married, 1856, Mary Wolf Buehler, daughter of vania. He received the education afforded by the select schools of Paxtang Valley, and most of his life he has passed in farming. For several years he has been president of the First National Bank of Hummelstown; has been identified with other corporations, and active in various local enterprises of the day. In 1835 he was a captain of the Tenth Company, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia. For many years he has been one of the vice-presidents of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society, in the founding of which he took a prominent part.

in now Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the farm where he now resides. He is the great-grandson of Thomas Rutherford, the progenitor of the family here. Being the only surviving son, he succeeded to the farm property of his father upon his death, Nov. 26, 1833, and has made farming his main business through life. In early manhood Mr. Rutherford was elected captain of the Dauphin Cavalry, and hence his military title. He has been active in politics, and was elected member of the Legislature on the Whig ticket in 1848, and re-elected in 1849. In 1847 he was elected to the State Senate for three years on the Republican ticket. He has been treasurer of Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society for a long time, elected in 1864, and re-elected annually ever since. Mr. Rutherford has been identified with the various offices in his township, and in old Paxtang Church is a ruling elder. He married, March 19, 1833, Keziah Parke, of Chester County, and have issue.

COL. SAMUEL SHOCH.

Michael Shoch, the grandfather of Col. Samuel, was a native of Germany, and on his emigration to America settled near Philadelphia. He had several children, among whom was John, whose birth occurred at the paternal home near Philadelphia. He in 1792 removed to Harrisburg, Dauphin Co., and there remained until his death in 1842. He married Miss Salome Gilbert, of Philadelphia, and had children,—Mary, Sarah, Rebecca, Eliza, Cassandra, Samuel, John, Jacob, and one who died in childhood. Samuel, whose life is here briefly sketched, was born in Harrisburg, May 28, 1797. His career covers some of the most eventful periods in our national history, and has been so closely identified with local events that it forms an inseparable part of them. His early education was commenced at preparatory schools before the establishment of the present school system, and continued at the Nottingham Academy, Cecil Co., Md. His further education and preparation for professional life were the result of personal application directed only by himself.

As early as 1812 he was recorder of patents under John Cochran, secretary of the land-office, and recorder of surveys in the office of Andrew Porter, then surveyor-general. In September, 1814, he joined the Harrisburg Artillerists, a company formed within twenty-four hours after the British had burned the capitol at Washington, and was the youngest man in the four companies that volunteered from Harrisburg on that occasion. The company marched to York and thence to Baltimore, and remained on duty there until the British withdrew and abandoned their contemplated attack on that city.

In May, 1817, he began the study of law under Hon. Amos Ellmaker, attorney-general, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1820. He was always aggressive, and as a young lawyer displayed great energy and fearlessness in prosecuting what he believed to be wrong. He took an active part in an unsuccessful attempt to impeach Judge Franks, of the Lebanon and Dauphin district, for alleged offenses.

In 1835 he was elected clerk of the House of Representatives by a union of the Whig and Anti-Masonic members, defeating Francis R. Shunk, the Democratic candidate. In 1837 he was secretary to the convention which gave us the Constitution under which Pennsylvania lived from 1838 to 1873, and at the adjournment of that body was unanimously thanked. The colonel finds special pleasure in recounting his services with that body.

In 1839 he cast his fortunes with Columbia, and went there to live, having been elected cashier of the Columbia Bank and Bridge Company. The company had a nominal capital of $150,000, but actually not more than $80,000 to $100,000, as a bridge costing more than $175,000 had been swept away by an ice freshet in 1832, and the loss had not been wholly made up. The capital was afterwards increased, first to $250,000, and in 1837 to $322,500, with a change of title to Columbia Bank. In 1865 the bank accepted the national bank law and became the Columbia National Bank, with a capital of $500,000, at which it still remains, with a surplus fund of $150,000. He has thus maintained official relations with the corporation as its cashier and president for forty-four years, during a period the events of which are matters of local history.

Col. Shoch was, in 1842, married to Mrs. Hannah Evans, daughter of Amos Slaymaker, of Lancaster County, who was the leading manager of the line of stages between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Her death having occurred in March, 1860, he contracted a second alliance in August, 1865, with Miss Anna E., daughter of Robert Barber, of Columbia, Pa.

In 1848, Col. Shoch was appointed aid to Governor William Johnson, which by courtesy conferred upon him the title of colonel, a title by which he is better known than by his Christian name.

In 1860 the colonel was a member of the State committee of the Republican party, and a delegate to the National Convention at Chicago which nominated Abraham Lincoln, the martyr President.

During the war he was foremost in deeds of charity and patriotism, and presented to the first company formed in Columbia a beautiful and costly silk flag. He always took a warm interest in our public schools, and through his active exertions and liberal donations the "Shoch Library," in honor of its patron, was established.

Col. Shoch also took an active interest in local enterprises, and was at one and the same time president of the Columbia Gas and Water Companies, the Old Public Ground Company, and the Marietta, Chestnut Hill and Washington Turnpike-Road Companies. He was also treasurer of the Reading and Columbia Railroad Company, but resigned in 1862, before going abroad on a continental tour. He was for ten years president of the school board of the borough of Columbia, during which period a spacious edifice, devoted to the use of the public schools, was erected. He served a term as director of the poor of Lancaster County, two terms as county auditor, was a trustee of the Millersville Normal School, and director of the Wrightsville, York and Gettysburg Railroad. If responsible official positions are a measure of public confidence, then Col. Shoch was favored above all his fellow-citizens.

The colonel was always an active worker in the Sunday-school cause. In the early part of his professional career, he was both a teacher and superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Lutheran Church in Harrisburg. Within the last ten years his youthful enthusiasm for the cause has been specially reawakened, and his active services as teacher of a Bible class in the Columbia Fifth Street Presbyterian Sunday-school, together with the erection, furnishing, and endowment of their beautiful chapel (named "Salome" in honor of his mother) attests the sincerity of his motives. In 1854 and for several years thereafter, he maintained at his own expense a public night-school, employed teachers, and furnished books, etc., for the benefit of apprentices and other young persons who could not attend school during the day, and was happily rewarded by finding the school well attended. Many of the pupils since grown up have become prominent and well-to-do citizens, who gratefully acknowledge the advantages they derived from the enterprise.

In politics he has been uniformly and radically anti-Democratic, a great admirer of Thaddeus Stevens, and is in full accord with Republican administration.

The colonel's has been an eventful and busy life, and even now, when he has just crossed the threshold of his eighty-sixth year, not a single duty is neglected, not a responsibility evaded, and not an energy relaxed.

Having faithfully performed the duties of cashier of the Columbia National Bank for a period of thirty-nine years, he was, in December, 1878, elected its president, and notwithstanding his age, continues his routine of duties, beginning at eight o'clock in the morning and remaining to witness the settlement of all accounts after the bank closes. His principal diversion is his violin, an instrument of unusual excellence, which affords him many happy hours.

With a mind fresh and vigorous, and with a remarkable activity of body and buoyancy of step, he has reasonable expectations of passing many more years of usefulness. *

RT. REV. J. F. SHANAHAN.

Jeremiah Francis Shanahan was born July 17, 1834, at Silver Lake, Susquehanna Co., Pa. He was educated at the Academy of St. Joseph's, Binghamton, N. Y., afterwards entering the Theological School of

St. Charles Borromeo, at Philadelphia, from which he graduated, and was ordained to the priesthood the 3d of July, 1859. He was then appointed rector of the school preparatory to the Theological Seminary, where he continued until his appointment as bishop of the diocese of Harrisburg. His appointment dates from 3d March, 1863, and he was consecrated bishop by his Grace the late Archbishop Wood, at Philadelphia, on the 12th of July, 1863. Of the labors of Bishop Shanahan, it need only be stated that in the period which has intervened the new Roman Catholic diocese of Harrisburg has wonderfully increased in the number of priests, laity, churches, and parochial Ursinus College, then known as Freeland Seminary. He taught school three years, then entered Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, where he graduated an A.B. in 1862. Resumed school-teaching for two years, when he entered the office of Dr. Jacob Rickabaugh, of Chester County, and in 1867 graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. He located at Lancaster, where he practiced eight years, when he removed to Wiconisco, Dauphin Co., and resumed his profession. Dr. Schofield married, June 27, 1871, Mary M. Black, daughter of Hon. James Black, of Lancaster, and they had Eliza, Isadore, James B., Gertrude, and Walter Shafer. *

schools, to which the good bishop has recently established a theological school.

EDWARD L. SCHOFIELD, M.D.

Edward Lane Schofield, son of Edward L. Schofield and Susanna Force, was born Nov. 16, 1840, in Chester County, Pa. His father, of Scotch and English descent, born Oct. 30, 1796, in Chester County, Pa., died May 30, 1865, at Reading, Pa., married Susanna Force, of Chester County, who deceased Dec. 29, 1878. They had children,—William, Rebecca, Jacob, Martha, Ellen (married Rev. H. A. Cleveland), Isabella (married Rev. John F. Meredith), Sarah, Edward L., and John W. Edward Lane was educated in the public schools of the county, and at

JACOB SHOPE, M.D.

Jacob Shope, son of Abraham Shope and Elizabeth Wasser, was born Sept. 6, 1819, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His mother was the daughter of Dr. John L. Wasser, who was ship-surgeon on a Swiss vessel, and emigrated to America in 1769. His advantages of an early education were limited, and at the age of sixteen entered the office of the Gospel Publisher as an apprentice to the art of printing. He subsequently took charge of the office as foreman, then spent some time at Philadelphia, when returning to Harrisburg he there remained until the spring of 1840. He commenced the study of medicine with his uncle, Dr. David Shope, and began the practice of medicine in 1842, and upon the death of the latter located at Hummelstown, taking charge of the large practice left by the former. Until 1865 he continued in the active prosecution of his profession, and with much success. Dr. Shope married, in 1843, Esther Mann, daughter of E. J. Mann, of Hummelstown. Their children were Charles David (at the age of seventeen enlisted in Capt. Matthew's company of the One Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; was severely wounded in the hip at Gettysburg; subsequently rejoined his command; promoted sergeant-major of Col. McCoy's regiment; killed in front of Petersburg June 19, 1864), Elizabeth, Ernest Mann, Ada Esther, Agnes May, and Carrie Lenah.

MAJOR H. J. SHEAFER.

Henry Jackson Sheaffer, son of Michael Sheaffer and Susan Cloud, was born May 21, 1826, in Lancaster County, Pa. When about six years of age his father removed to what was then called "Bear Gap," now Wiconisco, in the upper end of Dauphin County. Here he resided with his parents, getting a few months' schooling during the winter season, until the age of fifteen, when he went to learn the drug business at Harrisburg. He continued in this employment for four years, when he went to South Carolina and resided for some time in Columbia, the capital. Coming North, he settled in the town of Milton, Northumberland Co., and engaged in the drug trade. In 1848 he was married to America O. Wood, daughter of Nicholas B. Wood. At the death of his father, he removed to the old home at Wiconisco, for the purpose of settling his father's estate.

In 1856 he removed to Mendota, Dakota Co., Minn., where he engaged in the lumber business, in connection with Eli Pettijohn and Franklin Steele, of Fort Snelling. They built a large mill at the mouth of the Minnesota River, and had extensive yards on the Minnesota River. In the fall of 1858 he was elected a member of the Minnesota Legislature from Dakota County, and for some time took an active part in the politics of the young State. After the breaking out of the war all business was completely paralyzed, and in the fall of 1861 he returned to Harrisburg. During the winter of 1861-62 he recruited a company for the One Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was mustered into service as captain of Company I. At the battle of Antietam his brigade fought in the noted corn-field almost fronting the Dunkard Church, and suffered terribly in killed and wounded. At one time, the line being driven back, both color-bearers were shot dead and left on the field. Capt. Sheaffer, ascertaining the fact, returned alone and rescued the colors, and rejoined his command without injury. On Dec. 21, 1862, he was commissioned major of the regiment. In the Gettysburg campaign, on the first day of the fight, shortly after Reynolds was killed, Maj. Sheaffer was severely wounded, but did not leave the field until the afternoon of the third day's fighting. Early in the fall he rejoined his command and participated with his regiment in the many battles they were engaged in up to March 8, 1865 (the expiration of his term of service), and was mustered out. After the war he made Harrisburg his permanent home and engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1873 he was elected sheriff of Dauphin County, serving his term of three years.

HON. JOHN W. SIMONTON.

John Wiggins Simonton was born in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., in 1830 (the exact register of his birth is missing from the record), son of Hon. William Simonton, son of William and Elizabeth W., daughter of Rev. James Snodgrass. His preparatory education was received at the country school near Hanover Church, continued at the Strasburg Academy, Lancaster County, then at Lafayette College, Easton, graduating at the College of New Jersey in 1850. His choice of profession was the law, and was entered as a student with Hon. Hamilton Alricks at Harrisburg, admitted to practice at the April term, 1853. With a very brief interval his residence has since been at Harrisburg. He married, July 8, 1856, Sarah H., daughter of George Kunkel, merchant, and Catharine Ziegler. It may be safely said of Judge Simonton that he never sought an office, his ambition was to be a thorough lawyer, and as such win success, and before office sought him he was considered a safe counselor as well as capable one. He was chosen district attorney in 1866. As soon as another opportunity presented itself to honor him with higher station, his fellow-citizens chose him without serious opposition, in 1881, president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, to succeed Judge Pearson. Every opinion handed down since he has held this important position has shown an intimate knowledge of the laws of his native State, of his literary ability, acute perception of such facts as are necessary in considering cases, and in nearly every instance have been sustained by the higher court.

GEORGE W. SIMMONS.

George Washington Simmons, son of Robert Simmons and Sarah Ward, was born Feb. 17, 1814, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father was a native of Paxtang, of English ancestry, and died about 1859, aged seventy-five years. He married Sarah Ward, daughter of John Ward and Elizabeth Whitley, daughter of Capt. Michael Whitley, of Paxtang. She died at Dauphin at the age of seventy-three. The children of Robert Simmons and his wife, Sarah Ward, were George, Washington, John, Jane (married Samuel Fertig), Matilda (married — McCullough), Robert, and Mary (married Revere Hetzel). George W., the subject of this sketch, passed his early years on his father's farm, came to Harrisburg in 1831, and learned chair-making, with George W. Boyd. After serving his apprenticeship, he began business for himself, which he carried on about ten years. He was for three years in charge of a packet-boat on the Pennsylvania Canal, and from 1849 to 1862, a baggage-master on the Pennsylvania Railroad. He was subsequently elected warden of the Dauphin County prison, a position he filled fourteen years, when he retired from active life. Mr. Simmons married in 1836, Elizabeth Bates, of Middle Paxtang, and their children have been: John (who died at Philadelphia, in 1881), William Henry (d. s. p.), Major Oliver, Annie, Martha (married Nelson Kilgore), and Frank.

ALEXANDER SLOAN.

Alexander Sloan, son of Robert Sloan (1769-1833) and Sarah McCormick (1779-1843), was born Oct. 9, 1802, at Harrisburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the private and select schools of Harrisburg, especially under that eminent mathematician, James Maginnis. He learned the trade of cabinet-maker with his father, and, after the latter's death, continued the business alone up to 1864, after that period for several years in connection with Mr. Boyd. Mr. Sloan married Sept. 19, 1833, Mary Todd, daughter of James and Sarah Todd, of Hanover. She died at Harrisburg on the 2d of December, 1871, in her sixty-third year, and their children were Robert (d. s. p.), Sarah (married H. Murray Graydon), Margaret A. (married Harry Shantz), and Isabella D. (d. s. p.).

ROBERT SNODGRASS.

Robert Snodgrass, son of Benjamin Snodgrass (1791-1861) and Ann Wilson (1797-1843), was born Oct. 12, 1836, in East Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He entered Lafayette College in 1854, and graduated in July, 1857. He prepared for the study of the law in Virginia, in 1860 and 1861, and subsequently studied with John W. (now Judge) Simonton, and admitted to the bar of Dauphin County May 4, 1863. He was United States commissioner prior to 1871, prothonotary of Supreme Court, Middle District, from November, 1871, to January, 1882. Since January, 1882, he has been deputy attorney-general of Pennsylvania. He was married, Dec. 25, 1866, to Anna E., daughter of William and Ann Peale, of Shippensburg, Pa., and their children are Frank Peale, Horace Wilson, Robert Davis, and Anna McNair Snodgrass.

JOHN D. SNYDER.

John D. Snyder, son of John Snyder and Elizabeth Wert, was born Dec. 9, 1827, in Lykens Valley. His grandfather, Leonard Snyder, of German parentage, was born in Lancaster County, and settled on a farm in Lykens Valley. He married Anna Maria

Shott, of the valley, and had children,—John, Samuel, and Elizabeth. John married Elizabeth Wert, and they had among others Jacob, Leonard, John D., and Emanuel. The early life of John D. Snyder was spent on the homestead farm. At the age of seventeen he went to Berrysburg and learned the trade of an iron-moulder. On finishing his trade, he passed one year in working at his occupation in Pittsburgh, when he purchased an interest in the establishment of his former employer at Berrysburg, which business he continued. In 1863 he was elected a justice of the peace; in 1871 an associate judge of the county, and at the expiration of his term of office re-elected to his former position, which he now holds. Judge Snyder married, in 1849, Hannah Lark, daughter of Christopher Lark, and their children were Sarah Jane (married Peter S. Bergtresser), Lewis F., Ann Mary, Edwin G., John T., Rachel B., Catharine E., Joseph H., and Arthur L., of whom five are living. Mr. Snyder has been a zealous friend to all measures for the advancement of the cause of education and the advancement of the industrial interests of his neighborhood. *

REV. W. H. H. SNYDER.

William H. H. Snyder, son of John Snyder (1812-1856) and Jane Howe (1812-1844), was born Dec. 9, 1836, at McConnellstown, Huntingdon Co., Pa. In early life he attended the common school at McConnellstown, and subsequently was clerk in a dry-goods store, also in Read & Son's drug-store, in Huntingdon, and in the spring of 1855 entered the academy at Mercersburg, Pa., where he studied theology, and in the fall of the same year the Tuscarora Academy, of Juniata County, Pa. He taught school in the winter of 1856, and returned to Tuscarora Academy in the spring of 1857; entered Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pa., in September, 1857, and graduated from that institution in July, 1861. He was pastor of the Reformed Church (English) at Akron, Ohio, from Jan. 1, 1864, to Dec. 16, 1864, and commenced his pastorate of Salem Reformed Church, Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 18, 1864. He was chaplain of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania in 1873, and chaplain of the Senate of Pennsylvania in 1876. He has been secretary of the Board of Missions of the Synod of the United States for ten years, also a member of the Board of Trustees of Synod for two terms (ten years). He married, April 20, 1865, Mary Naomi, daughter of Daniel and Mary Erisman, of Lancaster, Pa., and their children are Mary and John Paul.

ELI SWAB.

Eli Swab, son of Jacob Swab and Catharine Metz, was born the 7th of October, 1823, in Mifflin (now Washington) township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was brought up on his father's farm, and received the limited education offered by the schools of the Lykens Valley region prior to the introduction of the common-school system. He afterwards learned the trade of a tanner, but never pursued the business. He began merchandising at Williamstown, which he continued for several years, but subsequently left it for farming, in which he is now engaged. He was elected one of the commissioners of the county of Dauphin in 1874, and re-elected in 1876, serving six years, an office he filled very acceptably. Mr. Swab married Nell Cooper, daughter of John Cooper, one of the representative men of the valley.

CHARLES V. THOME, M.D.

Charles Vosey Thome, son of Dr. Samuel H. Thome and Margaret Jeffries, was born June 16, 1839, in Palmyra, Lebanon Co., Pa. His father, born in 1806, in Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., practiced medicine forty-five years at Palmyra, and was not only a skillful physician, but popular in his profession and a leading citizen, having several times been the Democratic nominee for Congress, but defeated on account of his party's minority vote. He died in 1880, and his widow survives. Their children were Dr. William, of Palmyra; Dr. Charles V.; Emma J., married Dr. P. J. Roebuck, of Litiz, formerly State senator; John, and Samuel. Charles V. Thome, the subject of this sketch, was educated at the common school and at White Hall Academy. He was reading medicine with his father as the Rebellion broke out, when he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. W. W. Jennings. Upon being mustered out of service he resumed the study of medicine, and graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1866. He practiced his profession one year at Palmyra, when he was appointed assistant physician in the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane at Harrisburg, where he remained four years; then two years at Litiz, and in 1873 permanently locating at Earlyville, Dauphin Co. Dr. Thome married in 1875, Emma Early, daughter of M. Early, of East Hanover.

ALEXANDER F. THOMPSON.

Alexander F. Thompson, son of Alexander Thompson and Isabella Penman, was born Dec. 7, 1845, in Pottsville, Schuylkill Co., Pa. His father was a native of Dolkeith, Scotland, where his life until his twenty-first year was spent, when he emigrated to America and located in Schuylkill County, Pa., engaging in the coal business. He died in December, 1873; was twice married,—first, to Isabella Penman, of Scotland, and had nine children; second, Mary Bast, of Pottsville, and had eleven children. In 1867, the father having removed to Porter township, in that county, Alexander F. was employed either in labor upon the farm or in mills owned by his father. On Aug. 2, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, serving nine months. On the 30th of June, 1863, enlisted in Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, serving during the emergency. On the 20th of January, 1864, he joined Company G, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, in which he continued until the mustering out of the regiment, Aug. 28, 1865. Mr. Thompson resumed employment in coal-mines in various parts of the State until 1871, when after an interval spent in study and business he began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1876. The same year he established himself at Lykens, where he has continued to reside in the practice of his profession. Mr. Thompson was elected to the Legislature, session of 1881, and re-elected to that of 1883. He married, Oct. 24, 1872, Lizzie A. Hawk, daughter of William Hawk, of Wiconisco. *

JOHN TILL.

John Till, son of William Till and Catharine Miller, was born April 18, 1804, in the district of Kensington, Philadelphia. His parents were natives of Philadelphia, and he was the fourth child of ten sons and one daughter. Like his father, grandfather, and most of his male relatives, John was brought up a shipbuilder, learning that trade with the Messrs. Vaughan, of Kensington. In the winter of 1834 he came to Harrisburg to build a boat for W. P. Orrick, of Reading, who was extensively engaged in transportation on the Pennsylvania and Union Canals. Returning to Philadelphia after finishing his contract with Mr. Orrick, he entered into partnership with James Main, a ship-builder of that city, and removed to Harrisburg in August, 1835, establishing a boat-yard at the foot of North Street, on the canal. At that period boat-building was the leading business at Harrisburg. About 1840, owing to want of proper facilities, the firm purchased a location on the west side of the canal below Mulberry Street, where they constructed a large basin connected with the canal on the tow-path, over which they built a draw-bridge. At this place they carried on the building of boats for many years. A large number of packet-boats were built by them. During the winter the packet- and other boats of Leech & Co.'s extensive transportation line were repaired, the number filling the basin and the canal from Paxtang Street to now Herr Street, from one winding bridge to the other. It may be here stated that Messrs. Till & Main constructed on the river-bank below Mulberry Street two boats and one schooner for parties in New York City, which were launched in the Susquehanna during a rise and floated to the bay. In 1852 the firm erected a saw-mill adjoining their boat-yard, where they carried on a large lumber business. In 1853, Mr. Main died, and for several years Mr. Till conducted the enterprise alone, subsequently engaging in the coal trade a brief period, when he retired from all business pursuits. He served one term in the old Borough Council, for sixteen years a member of the school board, and was elected county treasurer for one term. Mr. education as the schools there afforded. He subsequently became the general agent of the Lykens Valley Coal Company, which necessitated his removal to Millersburg. He was thus employed until 1861, and four years later became identified with the Summit Branch Coal Company as their agent, when he constructed the basin and pier used by that corporation in their extensive operations. For several years he was superintendent of the Wiconisco Canal. He was thus actively employed until 1869, when he retired from all business enterprises. He is now the presi-

F. Wenrich

Till married, Nov. 6, 1825, Rebecca Rutter, of Philadelphia, who died May 16, 1871, at the age of sixty-five years. Their surviving children are William B.; Rebecca, married G. L. Suttle, of New York; and Mary E., married David C. Burnite, of Harrisburg.

FRANCIS WENRICH.

Francis Wenrich, son of Peter Wenrich and Susanna Umberger, was born Sept. 9, 1810, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father, having been elected sheriff of the county, removed to Harrisburg in 1819, where Francis received such education as the schools there afforded. He has ever evinced a keen interest in the growth and prosperity of Millersburg, especially of its educational development. Mr. Wenrich married, in 1839, Mary Light, daughter of Squire Adam Light, of Millersburg, and their children were Isadore (married Mr. Stoner), Joseph, Mary, and Ellen.

BENJAMIN J. WIESTLING, M.D.

Benjamin Joseph Wiestling, son of Samuel Christopher Wiestling and Anna Maria Bucher, was born Sept. 16, 1805, in Middle Paxtang, Dauphin Co., Pa.

He was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, whither his father removed in 1811, and also in the old Harrisburg Academy. He began the study of medicine with his father, and subsequently continued under the instructions of his elder brothers, Drs. Samuel C. and Joshua M. He attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, graduating from the medical department of that institution in March, 1827. He located at Middletown, Pa., where for over a period of fifty years he has been in the practice of his profession, and, although not as active as in his younger years, his skill is constantly brought into requisition. Dr. Wiestling married, June 23, 1831, Matilda Eveline Ross, a native of Georgetown, D. C., daughter of Andrew Ross and Hannah Templin.

GEN. EDWARD C. WILLIAMS.

Edward Charles Williams, son of Charles Williams (died 1835) and Rebecca Adams (died 1849), was born Feb. 10, 1820, in the city of Philadelphia. His father was a native of Philadelphia, his mother of Mount Holly, N. J., of Scotch parentage. The son was educated in the public schools of his native city, then organized under the old Lancasterian system. He learned the trade of a book-binder with Jacob Snyder, completing it with Robert P. Desilver. He shortly after came to Harrisburg, where he established himself in business, firm of Clyde & Williams, book-binders and stationers. For several years they did the State binding and also published several important works. In December, 1846, upon the call for volunteers for the war with Mexico, Mr. Williams raised a company called the Cameron Guards, which were accepted and formed a part of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment. As the history of that company is a portion of the history of Capt. Williams, our readers are referred to the sketch relating thereto. Previous to going to Mexico he had been connected several years with the old Dauphin Guards, one of the finest military organizations in the State, and was in service during the Philadelphia riots of 1844. Upon Capt. Williams' return from Mexico he was elected as an Independent, in 1850, to the office of sheriff of Dauphin County, serving the full term. When the Rebellion broke out and a demand was made for troops, Governor Curtin sent for Gen. Williams, who had been commissioned several years prior brigadier-general of Dauphin County militia, and at once directed to organize Camp Curtin, full particulars of which will be found in "Dauphin County in the War for the Union." Gen. Williams had the honor of being the first volunteer mustered into service for the defense of the Union. After organizing Camp Curtin, he organized Camp Slifer at Chambersburg. He commanded a brigade during the three months' service, was with Patterson in the Shenandoah, and subsequently mustered out at Washington City. He was then appointed by President Lincoln, through Secretary of War Cameron, colonel of the Lochiel Cavalry, directed to raise twenty-four companies of that branch of the service, which he accomplished in a very short time. Three battalions of raw cavalry it was difficult to handle, but by hard work Gen. Williams got his command into splendid discipline and drill; went into camp at Jeffersonville, Ind., where he exchanged his Pennsylvania horses for good Kentucky stock. After inspection by Gen. Buford, he was ordered to the front under Gen. Buell. On reaching Green River, and when ready to cross that stream, Gen. Williams was directed to take the advance, but the same evening, the news of the capture of Fort Donelson obviating that movement, he was ordered back, and his command cut up and distributed over Kentucky and Tennessee. His own regiment, the Ninth Cavalry, became very popular in that section with all classes of people, owing to their good discipline and behavior.

Gen. Williams was at Henderson with his regiment when Buell and Bragg made their march into Kentucky; was ordered to Louisville without delay, and from thence to Crab Orchard, where he prevented Kirby Smith's cavalry from entering Kentucky at that point. His services in that campaign were indeed arduous. Owing, however, to a question of rank, in which not only he but other officers in the volunteer service were concerned, he peremptorily resigned and returned to Pennsylvania.

Gen. Williams was twice married,—first, Jan. 16, 1843, to Selina Hetzel, daughter of John Hetzel, of Harrisburg; died May, 1865, at Harrisburg. He married, secondly, June 5, 1873, at Chapman, Pa., Mrs. A. E. Hetzel. Gen. Williams is now a resident of Chapman, Snyder Co., where he is engaged in merchandising.

JOHN O. WITMAN, M.D.

John Otto Witman, son of Benjamin Witman (1774-1856) and Margaret Otto (died in 1848), daughter of Dr. John A. Otto, was born Jan. 11, 1802, in Reading, Pa., and was educated at private schools and the Reading Academy. He studied medicine under Dr. Luther Reily, attended lectures at University of Pennsylvania in 1826-27, and received the honorary degree of M.D. from the University of Maryland in 1848. He commenced the practice of medicine in Harrisburg in 1827, and continued till 1832, when he removed to Gratz, Dauphin Co., where he practiced till 1837, when he returned to Harrisburg and associated himself with Drs. Luther Reily and E. L. Orth, which partnership continued till 1840. He then moved to Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa., where he continued in an active and extensive practice till the fall of 1870, when bodily infirmity compelled him to relinquish all except office-work. He was a clerk in the surveyor-general's office under Gabriel Hiester during Shulze's administration, and physician to Dauphin County almshouse in 1827-28. He was first married, April 17, 1828, to Caroline Orth, daughter of Henry and Rebecca Orth. She was born in 1811, and died in Harrisburg, Jan. 10, 1848. Their children were Dr. Henry Orth, Luther Reily, Edward Lawrence, and Rebecca Catharine, married Robert H. Moffitt, D.D.S. His second wife was Margaret S., daughter of William Reed, of Dauphin County.

JAMES WORRALL, C.E.

James Worrall is a native of Limerick, Ireland, the son of John Worrall, of that city, merchant, who failed in business in consequence of some decree of the first Napoleon. He had cargoes of provisions on the ocean, and when the continental ports were closed against them they had to be sacrificed or rot in the ships, a fate which bankrupted their owner. He then emigrated to this country, and being a man of education he began teaching, in which occupation he successfully continued until his death at Philadelphia in 1845. He left a large family, of whom James, the subject of our sketch, was the eldest. The latter entered the establishment of Carey, Lea & Co., booksellers, where he remained several years, when he secured a position on an engineer corps under Judge F. W. Rawle. The first road Mr. Worrall ever held was on a railroad in Northumberland County in 1831, and, strange to say, the road was only commenced to be built in 1882, more than half a century later than its preliminary survey. He continued with Judge Rawle into 1832. In 1833, under Judge Benjamin Wright, one of the engineers of the Erie Canal, he assisted in making the surveys and maps of the great St. Lawrence Canal, between Prescott and Cornwall. He then joined the engineer corps on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, where he remained two years. In the fall of 1835 he helped Col. Schlatter on a survey across New Jersey for a railroad from Trenton to New Brunswick, which, through the opposition of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, was never built. Mr. Worrall then took service on the James River and Kanawha Canal, under Judge Wright, consulting engineer, and Charles Ellet, Jr., constructing engineer. He was subsequently called back to Pennsylvania by Hother Hage to make a survey over the Allegheny Mountains on a line from the Cumberland Valley to Pittsburgh. He was given the division from Bedford across the mountains as far as the Laurel Hill, a reconnoissance from thence to Greensburg, and again a survey from the latter point to the Youghiogheny at the mouth of the Sewickly. This was in 1838, and here Mr. Worrall first showed his skill and judgment, but the fact of their existence was not to be discovered until some forty-five years afterwards, when the highest engineering ability of the year 1882 was called upon for an opinion on the location then made; they unanimously pronounced it the true location for the road, the South Pennsylvania, and adopted it without hesitation. There was some difficult engineering suggested by Col. Worrall east of Bedford, upon which the syndicate of engineers was called upon to pronounce, which also they unanimously approved. It is questionable whether it would not have been hard to find, in the early history of engineering, an engineer who, locating a road upon a single examination, so marked it, as that the improved science of forty years later adopted it as the best without hesitation.

Limited as these personal sketches are, we can only refer in brief to other points in the career of Col. Worrall. He was afterwards engaged with Milnor Roberts as principal assistant engineer in the Erie extension of the Pennsylvania Canal; in 1844 became interested with others in canal and railroad contracts in the United States and Canada. In 1850 he was chief engineer of the Union Canal, where he continued until the completion of its enlargement, when he became principal engineer on the western division of the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad. Upon the completion of this work he returned to Harrisburg. After the year 1861 he acted as clerk in the quartermaster's department during the war. At the close of the Rebellion he was again engineering across the State for projected routes to the West; afterwards on a canal survey in Illinois, returning to Pennsylvania in 1869, since which period he has been prominently identified with the fishery commission of the State, and to him much that has been accomplished in that direction is due.

FRANCIS WYETH.

Francis Wyeth, son of John Wyeth and Louisa Weiss, was born April 6, 1806, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy, and learned the art of printing in his father's office, subsequently entering Jefferson College, Canonsburg, from which institution he graduated in November, 1827. On his return home his father, who had conducted the Oracle of Dauphin thirty-five years, transferred that paper to his son, which he edited and published several years. He also entered into the business of bookseller and publisher. At the time Mr. Wyeth took charge of the Oracle the Whig party had just come into existence, of whose principles and policy he was an enthusiastic supporter. Becoming, however, tired of an editor's life, he sold out the newspaper establishment about 1831, continuing his other business until 1859, when he disposed of that. In April, 1861, at the outbreak of the Rebellion, he was placed in charge of the quartermaster's department at Camp Curtin, where he continued until the general government assumed control over all the military organizations of the State.

On the 20th of July, 1862, Governor Curtin appointed him one of the commissioners from Pennsylvania to visit all the hospitals in the Army of the Potomac, in the interest of the volunteer soldiers of the State who were sick or wounded, and, as his commission read, "to supply the wants of the suffering and needy as far as lies in your power, without infringing on any of the regulations or rights of the army, and assure each and all that their condition awakens the liveliest interest and sympathy of the people and Governor of Pennsylvania." Returning home, he reported the condition of the wounded soldiers, with this recommendation, that where it is possible "those from Pennsylvania be transferred to hospitals in their own State, that they might be near to their friends and acquaintances." This was subsequently carried out during the continuance of the war. On Nov. 28, 1863, he was again directed to visit the various hospitals. For a long term of years he has been one of the trustees of the Harrisburg Academy, and since 1879 president of the same. Mr. Wyeth married, May 29, 1829, Susan Huston Maxwell, daughter of William and Ann Maxwell, of Franklin County, Pa., who died Dec. 24, 1841, at Harrisburg, and they had among others William Maxwell, of St. Joseph, Mo., John, and Francis H., of Philadelphia. Mr. Wyeth married, secondly, Sarah C. Carson, daughter of Charles Carson, of Harrisburg, and their children were Charles C. (died in infancy) and Packer C., of Indian Territory.

JAMES YOUNG.

James Young is a grandson of Peter Young, gentleman, who resided near Sinking Springs, Berks Co., Pa., during the Revolutionary war, who performed active service during that trying struggle, and whose patriotism was evidenced by the public recognition of the Continental authorities. On Dec. 14, 1776, he was commissioned by the Council of Safety of Philadelphia second lieutenant of the Third Battalion of Berks County militia. The commission is signed by David Rittenhouse, vice-president. On May 17, 1777, he was commissioned by the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania second lieutenant of a company of foot in the Fourth Battalion of militia, Berks County; and on May 10, 1780, he was commissioned by the same authority lieutenant of a company in the Sixth Battalion of militia, of the same county. Those were the days in which militiamen fought the battles of their country.

James Young's maternal grandfather was David Ettla (son of David, who died in 1781), a native of Germany, who emigrated to this country about 1766, and settled at Middletown, Pa., where he pursued the occupation of a tailor for the greater part of his life. He was an important man in the history of the early settlement of that now prosperous borough, and was one of three commissioners appointed by the king of England to raise the necessary funds for the building of the old St. Peter's Lutheran Church, of Middletown. While in the performance of the duties incumbent upon him in that position, he on one occasion walked from Middletown to Philadelphia, through what was then a desolate and almost impassable section of the State. He married Magdalena Oldweiler, also a native of Germany, and had children,—David, who married Elizabeth Croll, of Middletown, settled at Covington, Ky., where he died leaving issue; Phillip, who married Sarah Radenbaugh, pursued the occupation of a hatter in Middletown, where his descendants still reside; Conrad, a shoemaker by trade, who married Annie Smuller, of Middletown, pursued his vocation in Hummelstown for some time, and died in 1836, leaving issue still in Middletown; Jacob, who married Miss Hertz, of Harrisburg, and followed the calling of a shoemaker at that place, where he died leaving issue; and Sophia, who married Peter Young.

James Young, son of Peter and Sophia Young, was born at Swatara Hill, two miles east of Middletown, Pa., on July 25, 1820. His father, Peter Young, born Nov. 13, 1781, emigrated from Berks County, and passed the greater part of his life in the business of hotel-keeping. From 1820 to 1834 he was the proprietor of the stage-house on Swatara Hill, and on Feb. 1, 1835, took charge of the Washington House, Middletown, and kept it until his demise on Sept. 29, 1844.

James Young enjoyed only a common-school education, and passed his earliest years of usefulness in assisting his father in the hotel business. At this early period he evinced a remarkable degree of activity and ambition, and willingly performed the most menial labor if it conduced to his pecuniary advantage. By close economy and a careful and abstemious course of living, he had accumulated in 1839 a sum of money sufficient for him to purchase a canal-boat, which he ran for one year between Hollidaysburg and Philadelphia. In 1840 he established a lumber-yard at Middletown, to which he subsequently added the coal business, and for twenty-six years engaged in successful trade in these lines, at the same time furnishing supplies to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company under contract. He was also the purchasing agent for the Northern Central Pennsylvania Railroad Company for a number of years, and during the late war engaged in laying a portion of the second track for that company, under contract. About 1859 he purchased a valuable limestone quarry at Leaman Place, Lancaster Co., which he still owns and operates, and from which he has furnished a large amount of stone for building the bridges and abutments for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

James Young is emphatically a self-made man. Though springing from good stock, he started out in life a poor boy, and has won his present proud place among the representative men of his State by faithful, earnest work and the exercise of indomitable pluck and resolution. He owns a large amount of real estate in Middletown and elsewhere, including the Washington Hotel, in which he began his business life, the opera-house, and divers stores and dwelling-houses. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and is identified with various local institutions and enterprises. He is president of the American Tube and Iron Company of Middletown, president of the Cameron Furnace of the same place, and a director in the Commonwealth Guarantee Trust and Safe Deposit Company of Harrisburg, of the Farmers' Bank of Middletown, of the First National Bank of Lebanon, Pa., of the Lochiel Rolling-Mill Company, and has been a director of the Harrisburg, Portsmouth, Mount Joy and Lancaster Railroad Company for over twenty years. He is also a member of the State Board of Agriculture of Pennsylvania, by appointment of the Governor, and vice-president of the State Agricultural Society.

Though politically a Republican, he has always declined public position, feeling at the same time a warm interest in State and national politics. He is a regular attendant and supporter of St. Peter's Lutheran Church, of Middletown. He married Ann, daughter of Isaac and Catharine Redsecker, of Elizabethtown, Pa., on June 8, 1848, and his children have been R. I. Young, residing in Baltimore, Md.; Delanson J. (deceased); Catharine S., wife of H. P. Dunbar, of Harrisburg; Sarah H. (deceased); James S., engaged in business with his father; Simon Cameron, civil engineer in the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; and Henry P., residing at Columbia, Pa. *

JOHN W. YOUNG.

John Wesley Young, son of Josiah Carothers Young and Catharine Mary Kinter, was born Oct. 11, 1846, at Rockville, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, read law in the office of David Fleming, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Jan. 21, 1868. From 1871 to 1874 he was clerk to the county commissioners, and from 1877 to 1883 solicitor of the county of Dauphin. He served as a member of the board of school control from 1876 to the present time (1888); was president of that body from 1877 to 1882 continuously, and is now secretary of that body.

THE PRIDE OF DAUPHIN COUNTY.

PERCHANCE nowhere in the United States are there to be found a series of farms which, for all that represents farming of the highest order in every detail, than those located near the borough of Middletown, and owned by Col. James Young, of that place. A faithful chronicler of the county could certainly not afford to omit proper and full notice of these examples of indomitable perseverance, enterprise, and energy; and so widely noted have these farms become that we may justly style them the "Pride of Dauphin." It has not been an uncommon thing to have visitors almost every week from even the most remote States and Territories in the Union, comprising Presidents of United States, Governors of States, and distinguished professional men in almost every walk of life, while they have been viewed and admired and appreciated by the titled nobility of Europe.

These farms extend along the turnpike road two and a half miles, and along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad about the same distance, running back about a mile, more or less; nine of them lying west of Middletown, in what is Lower Swatara township, the others in Londonderry township, east of that town. There are eleven in number, named respectively Locust Grove, Sunset, Grand View, Eagle, White Hall, Thorndale, Rosedale, Roland, Oak Lane, Keystone, and Evandale, to which may be added a small place whereon are erected a number of houses, including a large tobacco warehouse, to which the name of Youngsport is given, and the same characteristics seem to control all,—method, system, neatness and order, superbly managed, and in the highest state of cultivation. The situation of this fine estate is so varied, with scenery so enchanting, that few landscapes there be more magnificent for pen or pencil.

These goodly acres did not come to their present owner by inheritance, nor all at one time. One farm after another has been added to the original purchase until over fourteen hundred acres, as rich and as well cultivated as any the sun shines on, are in his possession. They are specimens of "high art" in farming, the results of care, thrift, and energy.

Oak Lane, the homestead farm, is the better known to visitors, and it is a fair specimen of all the rest. Neat residences, with closely-mown lawns, capacious barns and outbuildings, whitewashed fences, well-kept gardens, well-cared-for fruit-orchards, all go to show that there is some master-spirit to direct and control. It is not alone "fields well tilled and barns well filled" which attract visitors, although these are important factors in Mr. Young's farming, for he farms to a purpose, and that is to see what he can make out of it. At Oak Lane is kept that splendid herd of Jersey and Alderney cattle to which Col.

Young has given so much attention, and which are at once his boast and pride. Here are found fifty-five milch cows, all of choicest strains, many of them importations, while the rest were grown by their present owner. We have seen many a choice herd, but never one like this. High breeding is seen in every animal. Their gracefully shaped heads, handsome bodies, and fine proportions are a sight to see. There they stand in their stalls, row after row, once seen not soon to be forgotten. Standing in straw up to their knees, some lying half buried in it, their coats are as fine and as glossy as a lady's sealskin coat. One can rub a white handkerchief over them without soiling it. Their stalls are so arranged that all filth is at once carried off and the cattle left clean and sweet. In addition to the milking cows there are a number of head of young stock, from the calf a few days old to the graceful heifer verging into cowhood. There, too, stand the sires, three in number, worthy of the admiration they receive from all who see them. What these cattle have cost their owner the author does not know, but seventy odd cattle, worth from a hundred to a thousand dollars each, are in themselves a respectable fortune. In 1882 five thousand dollars' worth of milk from this dairy was sold in Middletown. The young stock is disposed of with equal readiness. The demand is much greater than the supply. Calves sell readily from one hundred to two hundred dollars. So it is seen this costly herd of cows is not merely ornamental, but kept for revenue, and perhaps return a larger per cent. on their cost than any of the farming operations. All the stock purchased or raised is carefully registered; its pedigree can at once be told, and owner and purchaser know all about the animal. The soiling system is pursued here. Until after laying-making they do not leave their stalls, except twice daily for water. All the grass they can eat is cut and carried to them. They eat two large wagon-loads of it daily. It is hardly more trouble to do this than to look after the cows when turned out to pasture, while its advantages are many and obvious. It has been proved again and again by experiment that thirty-six acres of grass by the soiling system will easily support fifty head of cows, while the same number, if turned into a pasture-field, would in a month completely use up the grass in a hundred-acre field, eating it in part and destroying far more than they consume. The cattle themselves seem to thrive better by this system. All the doors and windows of the large barn where they are stabled are kept open. It is as light almost as out of doors; the cool winds of the early summer blow through it, and the temperature is far more comfortable than outside. They seem to enjoy the situation thoroughly, and as one passes along, reading each cow's name on the large printed card above her stall, one can almost fancy they appreciate the admiration they excite.

Oak Lane contains two barns, one for the fine-bred cattle, and the other for the fat stock. Overhead is the room where the feed is arranged and cut, run by steam. Corn-cribs are arranged on each side of the loft, and every other convenience for the proper distribution of feed exists. A large tank holding fourteen hundred gallons of water, supplied by a windmill, is situated in the basement, and it has never failed to give a full supply. The hennery is a neat-looking building, with a good supply of "Plymouth Rocks," while the pig-pens, containing a cross between a Chester White and Berkshire, are admirable in their design and construction. In the sheep department, Mr. Young has pure-bred Southdowns and lambs, which are in a thriving condition. The steam-chest, wherein all the feed for the other establishments is cooked, is rather an ingenious and useful invention. It is a long, substantially-built box, about eight feet in length and four feet deep. It is placed on four wheels, and filled with the necessary quality and quantity of feed. The box is then run into a house alongside of the boilers, and steam-pipes are then attached. By this means it is prepared, and when ready for shipment four horses draw it to the different estates. It supplies enough to the eleven places, starting out every morning.

As we have before remarked, Col. Young aims at big crops, and to get them he manures most liberally. He buys no manure and seldom uses fertilizers. In the winter of 1882-83 he fed two hundred and ninety-four steers; the year before he fattened three hundred and thirteen. Thirteen hundred very large loads of manure were the result. There is also the large tank, mounted on wheels, by which hundreds of barrels of liquid manure were carried out to those fields and places that seemed to require it most. Although he had out three hundred and fifty acres of corn, not a grain was sold, but large quantities were bought and fed. Last year more than six thousand bushels of wheat were sold, but not one ounce of straw. He has far more than he can use himself; the rest is given to others, and returned to him in the shape of manure. The three hundred and sixty acres of grass this season will give him a surplus of at least four hundred tons of hay above his own needs. Last year he sold three hundred and fifty tons. Every ton of hay and every sheaf of wheat was put into the barns, as was also nearly all the corn-fodder. No farmer needs to be told what a saving both of time and money and material this is. All the work on these fourteen hundred and forty acres is done by thirty-six mules; two of these do the dairy work besides. The land and barns lying close together permit of a great economy in this particular. Double this number would be required if this land was held by a dozen owners. There is but a single driving horse on the farms. As we have said before, no money is wasted on elaborate and costly dwellings. They are plain, neat, substantial, and in excellent repair, but there is nothing spent for show. The contiguous farms allow of great economy in the matter of fences. The fields are very large. One grass-field contains one hundred and six acres. There are wheat-fields of seventy acres. One corn-field is nearly a mile long; it contains one thousand and seventy-seven hills of corn, three feet nine inches apart in the row, making a total length of row of four thousand forty-nine feet. That would have made long "throughs" in the days of scythe and cradle. It may be observed that the fields are cultivated within a few inches of the fences. The usual strip of two or more feet of vacant ground is absent along the rails. Every available inch is made to yield its tribute. A rough calculation shows that at least five acres have been reclaimed in this way. This is equal to a hundred and twenty-five bushels of wheat, or its equivalent in some other crops, as the case may be. No feature struck the Duke of Sutherland more at his visit than this, who was accustomed to the hedgerows and wide borders of England. The force of men employed the year through is thirty-five. In harvest-time the number is doubled, and these are always utilized in ditching, draining, and leveling. Hills are scraped down and low places filled. So large a number of men and animals are a great advantage. When occasion demands, they can all be concentrated at a given point, and quick work made of a field of grain or grass. Twenty-three big loads of hay hauled into one barn in a forenoon is evidence of this fact. Of course machinery is employed wherever it can be in the hay- and harvest-fields.

It is not only faster, but is cheaper than hand labor. Tobacco is also grown; only twenty acres in 1888. The yield, owing to the high farming, has been invariably large hitherto. Col. Young grows his tobacco crops in his fields.

We may say that the owner, with his son as assistant, exercises personal supervision of all his farms. There are no renters or croppers. All is his, and all receives his careful attention. He keeps the run of his hands and the work, and knows exactly what is being done on each farm from day to day. Daily visits are made to every part of the estate, for he finds his highest pleasure in being the first farmer in the land. No wonder that the Duke of Sutherland, after going over the place, said that he had no idea there was such a tract of land between the Atlantic and Pacific. Not only is there not another such a farm or series of farms in Pennsylvania, but it has not its equal on the Western Hemisphere. We make the assertion fully aware of its widest meaning. We think we have seen some single farms in other sections of the country where the land was as well cultivated, the fences as good, the fields as clean of weeds, the grounds around the buildings as neat and free of rubbish, the buildings as well kept, and the general order and thrift as good; but we know there is not another tract of land over fourteen hundred acres in extent under one ownership that will compare with Col. Young's, either in Pennsylvania or in North America.
