

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

FAITH AND FAITHFULNESS.

The possession of living faith in the soul is expected and understood to result in an enlarged and uplifted life, that will be characterized by creditable conduct and useful actions. It is anticipated that when one is saved he will be better, more reasonable, more useful and more happy in every way, his life being a blessing to himself and to others, and a glory to God. It is expected that faith will be followed by good works. The Lord laid down the principle in the illustration of the good tree that would naturally bring forth good fruit.

On the other hand, the lack of divine grace in the soul leaves one open to the exercise of merely natural and sinful impulses, unguarded and unrestrained by help from on high. It is a dangerous thing for one to be unsaved, and, so, unprotected in his soul. David realized that it was only from the bestowal of divine grace that he would be protected so that he would possess truth in the inward parts and be made in the hidden parts to know wisdom.

Paul prayed that he might be delivered from "unreasonable and wicked men," adding, "for all men have not faith," emphasizing the fact that if men are not saved, having Christian faith within their souls, they are peculiarly liable to be not only wicked, but unreasonable as well. It is a great thing to be saved, thus having in one's life the grace of God that not only tends to help one in escaping evil, but also in attaining to what is actually good. A good tree brings forth good fruit and an evil tree brings forth evil fruit. A saved soul is in the way of being good, and an unsaved soul is in the way of remaining wicked and unreasonable.

Faith in the soul, or true religion, is not a mere personal emotion, but a positive power, the most powerful and practically forceful factor for good in all the world. He who is committed to a religious life, and is in covenanted alliance with God, may be counted on to live and to work for the things that are true and honest, just and pure, lovely and of good report. The good tree will inevitably bring forth good fruit. It was more than an exhortation when Paul urged that they who believe in God are to be careful to maintain good works. There was and is the well-grounded expectation that they will do so.

Out of faith will grow faithfulness. They who believe are the ones whom we expect to be found diligent in doing God's will, and in accomplishing what is necessary for the advance of his kingdom. Out of this faith grow the graces of Christian life and the ripe fruits of Christian usefulness. The soldierly quality of steadfastness grows out of the fact that the soldier has taken the "sacramentum," or oath, when mustered into the army. The Christian quality of faithfulness is founded on the fact that in a personal faith in Jesus Christ one has come into sacramental union with his Lord, and, having faith in him, it is expected and assured that he will be found faithful.

Personal faith in Christ is the beginning and assurance of all that is desirable in Christian experience. He who has this is already in possession of eternal salvation. He who is a true believer in Jesus Christ is saved for service, here and now, as well as for the future and forever. He is saved, so that he is made righteous and reasonable, with the possibility of being filled, even here and now, with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

AN OUTRAGE BY "LIBERALS."

The American Tract Society, which always stands for evangelical truth and the accepted standards of evangelical Christian belief, has been betrayed by liberals into printing and publishing teachings that it has always held in reprobation. In publishing explanatory notes on the International Sabbath School lessons in Spanish for Latin America, the notes were furnished by the editors of the Committee on Christian Literature of the Committee on Co-operation for Latin America. The Tract Society says it does not believe that any of the members of the committee had any knowledge of the false teachings in the notes, but that they permitted the editors to prepare and pass them on to the Tract Society, and the Society in simple faith accepted and printed them, thinking that they were reliable. It is an example of "liberal" perfidy. Men who are determined to teach infidelity will sneak it into Sabbath school literature, or pulpit, or theological seminary lectures. It seems that common truth and honesty have no place in the program of those who are bent on "liberal" propaganda. The Tract Society has discontinued its publication of this rationalistic teaching, and promises increasing care in the future in guarding against the enemies of the Gospel of Christ. It appeals to all friends of the Bible to stand with it in maintaining the Faith and in honoring the Book, and promises, if possible, to publish an annual volume in Spanish on the Sabbath school lessons that can be depended on. This is one more chapter on the subject of the viper methods of modernist Bible literature to betray Christ and to deceive and mislead the people.

A FICTITIOUS ISSUE.

We have already referred to the attempt of liberal theology men to drive a wedge into the conservative line by assuming that all conservatives are pre-millenarians, and that the issue is between rationalism and pre-millennialism.

This has raised considerable opposition, particularly in Baptist quarters, where, as in other churches, the fact is recognizable that some conservatives are, and others are not, pre-millenarians, and that the issue is between infidelity and Christian faith.

Dr. W. B. Riley, in The Baptist, discussing the Real Question before the Northern Baptist Convention, says:

The line of cleavage is not the question of millennialism. If it were, the breach could be healed. As we see it, it is the conflict between German rationalism on the one side and the old evangelical faith on the other side; the conflict between modernism and orthodoxy; the conflict between the doctrine of the divine immanence—pantheism—and the divine transcendence—theism; the conflict between the question of an "inepired Bible" or an "evolved book;" a "divine Christ" or a "highly developed man;" between "the efficacy of the shed blood of Jesus" and "the efficiency of self-sacrifice;" the conflict between infallibly-based doctrines and a religious basis that shifts with the rise of every man.

A GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY.

Rev. W. H. Claggett, D. D., whose picture is on the first page, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination as a Presbyterian minister, on April 21, in the Washington and Compton Avenue Church, St. Louis, where he was baptized as a boy. He has had a long and useful ministry. He has two sons in the Presbyterian ministry, Rev. T. Anderson Claggett, of Garden City, Kan., and Rev. D. M. Claggett, of Junction City, Kan. His brother, Rev. T. J. Claggett, of Fountain Green, Ill., is also a Presbyterian minister. It was a happy thing that these should be able to be with him at the celebration of his golden anniversary, and join with him in conducting a communion service in the church in which he first confessed Christ. The Presbytery of St. Louis recognized the interesting nature of his anniversary and extended to him hearty greetings and congratulations. Dr. Claggett has occupied many positions of great responsibility and has done large service in the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CAPSULES AND CONTENTS.

A correspondent writes that in criticizing Dr. Fosdick's sermon on Progressive Christianity "the Herald and Presbyter chewed the capsule and threw away the medicine it contained." He thinks "the Federal Council intended the sermon not as a theological discussion, but as a rebuke to certain capitalists who sought to rebuke ministers and the Y. W. C. A."

That may have been the intention, but if so, it was not well carried out. Four-fifths of the sermon was a rehash of skeptical criticisms of the Bible, with the assertion of Dr. Fosdick that he was "not on the defensive for these new views," but "on the offensive." We have expressed our opinion as to the attack on the Y. W. C. A. and the Pittsburgh ministers, and made no criticism of that part of the sermon, but we did criticize and were justified in criticizing the sermon as a practical repudiation of the evangelical doctrine of Inspiration.

The capsule and medicine illustration does not illustrate. If the sermon is a capsule or container, the "new views" are as much a part of the contents as the comment on the Pittsburgh matter, and these new views are not medicine, but poison.

BANKS AND CHURCHES.

Every one who is at all intelligent and well informed knows that the moral condition of a community is very closely associated with the life and influence of the churches. Very little hope for stable business conditions could there be in a community where religion has no place. A worth-while-building must have a worth-while foundation.

Emphasis was recently given to this facts by the five banks at Portsmouth, Ohio, by an advertisement in their local papers. In a prominently displayed advertisement, five columns wide and eighteen inches deep, the banks invited their employees and every citizen of the town to attend some church on the following Sabbath. It contained this statement: "Every banker in Portsmouth knows that if churches had not been here since the beginning of the town, the banks could not stay a week—would never have been here. Law and order must precede safe banking. Churches induce law and order."

Those who are less intelligent than bankers, and less responsible, financially and otherwise, sometimes imagine that they are conferring a great favor on the Church when they occasionally attend them or contribute to their support. The favor and assistance are in the other direction. Really respectable and responsible men would hardly venture to live or do business in a town that is without a church.

The best there is in the best of men goes into the life of the churches, and their contribution to the church life, under God, is the best assurance of peace and order in the life of the town.

SUSTENTATION.

Dr. Henry B. Master, of the Ministerial Relief and Sustentation Board, has written a very full and satisfactory statement, showing from the standpoint of actuarial life insurance figures, why it is not practicable, at present, at least, for those who belong to the 70 class in the sustentation scheme to be transferred to the 65 class. This latter class is made up of younger men, for the most part, who will be compelled, in the long run, to pay in as much as do those who belong to the 70 class. It may be that after a time, those who belong to this 70 class may be able to transfer to the 65 class, but it will be necessary, if it is done, to pay a sufficient sum to equalize the obligation. At present the Board is not able, financially, to make the change. Until the funds are increased the matter must be deferred.

WASTEFUL IF NOTHING MORE.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters shows how many fires are caused by the carelessness of tobacco smokers, as they drop lighted matches, or throw away cigar or cigarette stumps. Undoubtedly many millions of dollars damage is caused by these persons, a sheer and outright loss by fire, in addition to the tremendous cost involved in the purchase of the tobacco. Of cigars the number smoked annually is 7,271,670,000 and of cigarettes 42,456,880,000, while to light them 137,000,000 matches a day are required. The cost for smoking is at least $800,000,000 a year, with no account for chewing or pipe smoking. Of course, no one claims for a minute that this does any good. The constant contention never rises above the plane that, for some persons, it does no harm; or that it does not do much harm; or that it does not do any very extreme harm. Those who do not use it, and know, assert that it does very great harm. The money thus expended, even by professed Christian people, would go very far in extending the kingdom of God.

THE CANADIAN ASSEMBLY.

Reports from the Canadian Presbyterian Assembly read very much like those from our own and the Southern Assembly. The same questions are raised and discussed and settled or referred.

The matter of union with the Methodist and Congregational Churches was apparently settled in the affirmative. We are not sure but our announcement of this result was a trifle too positive, or at least premature. The sentiment and vote were for union, but one of the resolutions of the report was amended so that the committee is to report to next Assembly. Another resolution was amended to read: "That for the continued peace and harmony of our Church we refer our action to the membership of our Church, to be guided by them as to the steps and the expedition with which organic union shall be consummated." This was referred to the Union Committee.

The size and expense of the Assembly was considered and it was voted "to refer to presbyteries and synods the question whether they prefer a biennial meeting or reduce the representation to one in twelve."

An item of interest indicating the trend of things ecclesiastical, and particularly the increase of fraternal sentiment among Episcopalians, was the presence of the Moderator of Assembly in the pulpit of St. Paul's Anglican Church on Sabbath. Another matter mentioned by the Presbyterian Witness was the increasing influence of elders in the Assembly.

We have come through another Fourth of July, and the most of us have passed through it safely. The sane method of celebration is much better than the method of some years ago, which left the country strewn with the dead and wounded almost like a battlefield. We think it better to be patriotic without so much mutilation and slaughter.

It is to the credit of the International Reform Bureau, in which two Presbyterian ministers are leaders, Dr. Robert Watson as president and Dr. W. F. Crafts as secretary, that they did their best to stop the brutal prize-fight of last Saturday. The soul of the nation spoke through them as they opposed the evil and gross proceeding.

Attorney-General Daugherty showed proper discernment when he said, last week, that he did not intend to go to the Jersey City prize ring because he "had too much respect for the opinion of people who disapprove of prize-fights." A proper regard for the opinions of good people is a grace that tends to hold one in a safe and proper course in life.

Of course it is hot weather, and of course it is vacation time for some people. But we all need the restraints and the comforts of true religion, even in summertime, even though there be some abridgment in the length and the number of public religious services. At least is it true that "men ought always to pray and not to faint."

Admiral Sims may not have been the person to say it, and he may not have said it in the choicest language, but he expressed the sentiments of real Americans exactly as to the hyphenated Irish in the United States who are trying to get our country embroiled in war with Great Britain in favor of the rebellious element of the South Ireland counties.

The Lutheran Church Herald, noting the statement that in a certain small section of Iowa there are fifty abandoned Protestant churches, says that this is not due to overlapping or financial stringency. "The cause," it says, is "in rationalistic and materialistic tendencies which have appeared in the rural home mission work, which has attempted to substitute poultry raising and other farming practices in the house of God for the positive and whole-hearted preaching of Christian faith and life. This was done with the expectation of popularizing Christianity. But it failed." It concludes: "Our country churches are still the great strongholds of our Church, and when our good, substantial farmers go to church they do not expect to be instructed in hog or sheep raising, but expect their pastor to speak to them about the great works of God and guide them in the way of truth and salvation. They are not fed by the husks of human wisdom, but are given the bread of life."

Buddhists in Japan are copying the methods of Christian missionaries. The Sabbath-school Convention in Tokyo was followed by a counter convention. Thirty thousand Buddhist Sabbath-school children took part in the festival, which was designed to obliterate the impressions of the Christian demonstration. It is also announced that a Buddhist Salvation Army has been organized to counteract the influence of the Christian Salvation Army. It purposes to wage opposition to the Christian organization.

The Presbyterian of the South, speaking for the people of the South as expressed in the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, says: "There is a growing feeling that the welfare of the Church and of the country demands that there shall be earnest and united effort put forth by God's people to meet and overcome the efforts that are being made to destroy the sanctity of the Sabbath day."

The widespread protest against over-organization and the increase of ecclesiastical machinery is not limited to the Presbyterian Church. It is manifest in the papers of various denominations. The Congregationalist says of the "World Movement" similar to our New Era Movement, that "sentiment is increasingly averse to interposing an overhead agency between the churches and the societies, which are their boards, and that if the latter need any promotional agency, let it be developed by the Commission on Missions and let that commission be responsible for it." It concludes: "We would not then need, in addition to the Council's own Executive Committee and the Council's Commission on Missions, a third separate agency, independent, as the Congregational World Movement has been these two years."

Other churches are having troubles, as our Church has, over the Interchurch deficit. The United Presbyterian Assembly found that its share of this gigantic failure was $445,000, and took this action with reference to it: "That the boards and institutions concerned take care of their obligations in this matter for at least another year, and that this Assembly direct the Missionary and Efficiency Committee to present a plan to the next Assembly for liquidating these obligations."

Episcopal papers indicate that the plan urged last year to establish a fixed date for Easter is likely to succeed. An agreement has been reached, it is said, between the English Church and the Pope by which the second Sabbath of April will become the fixed date. A bill to that effect has been introduced in Parliament, and it is expected that the Pope will make a decree to that effect for the Catholic world. It is hoped that the change will take place next year.

We have several inquiries as to the reported discovery of a letter written by Jesus shortly after the crucifixion, and only recently published. There has been no such discovery. The report, which we have seen, gives details of the alleged discovery and extracts from the letter, all of which show it to be a fake.

LIFE IS NO DREAM.

BY FRED SCOTT SHEPARD.

Life is no dream, but service due
To Master-God and fellow-man;
If long or short may be the span,
We must not fail but e'er be true.

Life's obligations none may shirk,
Be talents many or but few;
If we but seek our best to do,
Our hands will find a suited work.

Life is a gift! The Father's love
Will guide and guard and e'er up-cheer;
If faithful be our service here,
"Well done" we'll hear in heaven above.

THE SINFULNESS OF SIN.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

We do not enjoy writing on the subject of sin. We prefer to write on pleasanter themes. But as the Bible was written to warn men of the terrible dangers and ruinous results of indulgence in sin, and to exalt the divinely provided remedy for sin, the Lord Jesus Christ, it would ill become us and would be folly and sin indeed in us to steer clear of this subject. Rather will we follow the example of St. Paul by "warning every man and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." (Col. 1:28.)

As Henry Van Dyke says: "Christ tells us that sin is real, and that it is the enemy, the curse, the destroyer of mankind. It is not a part of man as God made him. It is a part of man as he has unmade and degraded himself. It is the marring of the divine image, the ruin of the glorious temple, the self-mutilation and suicide of the immortal soul. It is sin that casts man down into the mire and drags him from the fellowship of God into the company of beasts. It is sin that leads him into the far country of famine and leaves him among the swine. Therefore, we must hate sin, and fear it and abhor it, always and everywhere."

Oh, if sin is so black and guilty a thing as to make necessary the sacrifice of God's pure and perfect, God's divine Son, how intense should be our hatred of it! If for us that suffering was borne, how abominable to our eyes should be the sin which caused it!

Listen to the following from a recent thoughtful and spiritually-minded writer:

"There is no better test of spiritual growth than increasing sensitiveness to the repulsiveness of all kinds of sin, and deepening consciousness of the constant peril from it in which every human soul lives. In the greatest saint there are all the possibilities which, being worked out, make the greatest sinner, and the truer the saintliness the deeper the consciousness of this fact. The materials out of which heaven and hell are builded are found in every life, and the man who slowly builds heaven within him has constantly the terrible knowledge that he has only to put forth his hand in another direction in order to build hell; both are within reach. But as a man builds heaven his vision of the infernal possibilities of life grows clearer, and his horror of wrong-doing becomes more constant and controlling. The disguises under which evil hides itself become more apparent, until the beautiful mask produces even a momentary illusion; the hideous face is seen at a glance. When one has come to see sin as it is and to loathe and hate it, not for its consequences, but for itself, he has gone a long way toward that final redemption from its power which we call salvation. But we are never saved until we have looked sin in the face, and know that it is not only a terrible reality, but that it has touched the best of us with its defilement, and that at some moment of our lives, the noblest of us must cry: "O, God, the Son, Redeemer of the world, have mercy upon us, miserable sinners!"

Can it be possible that there is one who, knowing the facts about the destructiveness of sin and his own ill-desert; knowing, too, how graciously and completely Jesus Christ delivers from its fatal power all who appeal to him in faith—can it be possible that such a one is not drawn out in grateful love to him who died for us and rose again? True, the Savior did not consult any of us individually before making the sacrifice of himself. Ah, he knew, far better than we, the depth of our need, and that there was no other eye to pity, no other arm to save. And in order that from our earliest experience of sin's ruinous power and our earliest consciousness of our need of deliverance from it we might have an Almighty Deliverer within reach. He made provision long, long ago for our pardon, our cleansing, our complete redemption.

We count it love and sacrifice when a stranger, walking along the street, sees a little child in danger from a runaway team, and at great risk to himself rushes into the middle of the street and rescues the child from impending death. The stranger did not consult the child before rescuing him. But that child, grown to manhood, learns the story of that rescue, inquires the name and address of his deliverer, open up a correspondence with him, and assures him that out of gratitude for his self-sacrificing act he is at his service at any time, for he is under lasting obligations to such a friend.

Remembering Christ's dying love for you, dear friend, have you opened up a correspondence with him? Have you expressed to him your gratitude? Have you offered to him your services? For the deliverance Christ has effected for you is greater than the deliverance the stranger effected for the child. Your deliverance is from the fatal power of evil and its awful penalty. Your rescue is from eternal death.

Dear friend, I want good Dr. Cuyler to speak to you. In an earnest sermon one Sabbath morning he said to his congregation in the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church:

"Some of you, turning from this discourse this morning may say it was nothing but sacred poetry, because your life is only the steady, monotonous round of a mill-horse—tomorrow across the ferry, home at night, through its routine in the shop, in the counting room, in the family, on the Sabbath in church—and say, 'I see nothing in my life that sparkles or shines, or has these sublime characteristics you speak of.' Ah, my friend, grant that your life may be the mill-round of the mill-horse; you turn a shaft which reaches through the wall into eternity, and the humblest life in this house sets in motion revolving wheels that shall at last grind out for God's garner the precious grain or else the worthless chaff of a wasted existence. So again I say, life is the porch of eternity, the only one we shall ever have; and you are to decide now whether it shall be the uplift from strength to strength, from glory to glory, or the plunge downward and still downward and deeper downward to darkness and eternal death."

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

Sabbath, June 26th, was a notable day in the history of Woodward Avenue Church of Detroit, for it was the tenth anniversary of the erection of the beautiful building in which this congregation worships. The pastor, Dr. Joseph Wilson Cochran, and the Committee of Arrangements, had invited the two former pastors, Dr. Sherman L. Divine and Dr. W. H. Wray Boyle to have a part in the services, but only the former was able to accept the invitation. He preached in the morning and spoke in the evening, as did also the pastor and Dr. J. M. Barkley. These were impressive services. It is perhaps safe to say that no other church in our denomination has had such a remarkable growth in numbers, finance and benevolent activities. Granting that it has a wonderful location, yet it took leadership in pulpit and pew to secure such results. Fourteen years ago, when the organization of a Presbyterian Church on North Woodward Avenue was contemplated by a few men and women with prophetic vision, a letter was addressed to 278 persons, who had been previously called upon. They were asked to state on a return postal card whether they favored such a movement. Just forty-seven of the 278 showed enough interest to even return the cards. Of these thirty-four were favorable and thirteen unfavorable. We have wondered how many of the 231 who consigned the postal cards to the waste basket realize that the thirty-four favorable replies led to the organization of a church now enrolling over two thousand communicants. The church was organized March 17, 1908, with 134 members. Dr. Divine and his splendid corps of officers must be given full credit for the work of the next few years, for in October, 1913, when Dr. Boyle succeeded Dr. Divine, he found a total active membership of 1,355. As this church is now the largest in membership of any Presbyterian church in Michigan, its future will be rather in the line of colonization than of added membership. But the happiest fact of its life is the wonderful growth of missionary activity and giving.

On this Sabbath, June 26th, the cornerstone of the contemplated new building of Trinity Presbyterian Church was laid with impressive services, conducted by the pastor, Rev. D. S. Carmichael, Dr. W. T. Jaquess, Rev. Maurice Grisby, Rev. Dr. M. E. Anderson and Rev. S. D. Waterbury. It was started as a mission of Emmanuel Church, by Dr. Angus H. Cameron, when he was the pastor of that church. It is in a growing community and promises to be a very important church in the near future.

Every large city of America has its Americanization problems, but Detroit, from its too rapid growth, is especially troubled. Last Sabbath, June 26th, at the Board of Commerce, 450 new citizens of forty different nationalities were accepted as American citizens. If it seems unusual to do such work on a Sabbath afternoon, there were good reasons for it, and a distinctly serious tone was given to the ceremony by the fact that two Detroit pastors were assigned duties that were certainly religious. Dr. Hugh Jack, pastor of Central Presbyterian Church led the great audience in prayer, and Dr. Minot C. Morgan, pastor of Fort Street Presbyterian Church, gave an address on "The Spirit of America," at the close of which he presented in the name of the "Sons of the American Revolution," a silken flag to each new citizen. As Presbyterians we ought to appreciate the fact that two Presbyterian ministers, rather than, as usual, Romish or Episcopal bishops were the ones honored on such an occasion. This is something so absolutely new in the history of public ceremonies in Detroit that we almost gasped as we read the program. Evangelical Christianity is not in very high favor with the public dignitaries of our city, any more than it is with the public press, which, except as to advertising rates, is blissfully ignorant that evangelical Christianity has any existence here. Possibly a new era is dawning, and we wait almost breathlessly to see if this is so.

Detroit is to have fifty vacation Bible schools this summer. The following are to be held in Presbyterian churches, Fort Street, First, Central, Grace, Hamtramck, St. John's, Covenant, Italian, Armenian and Immanuel, ten out of the fifty. The Baptists have twenty-three, the Methodists ten, the remainder being divided among the Reformed, Congregational, Evangelical and Disciple churches.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

I desire to express through the paper, my appreciation of the very kind words of sympathy that have come to me from my friends, upon the death of my brother. Such words from such friends are a good ointment to a sore heart.

One other thing, I have wanted to say for some time, and I do not know of a better time than now to say it, and a better way than through this letter. I remember with some pride the action of our Assembly at Columbus a few years since, when with a sort of abandon, it challenged the whole Protestant Church in the United States to sit down with it and consider the question of union of all these forces. This has been the attitude of the Church in all its history and I am proud of it, and would not have it otherwise, and yet I am wondering if we have not gone as far as propriety and good Christianity would warrant in that direction. The door is wide open now and the whole people know it is, then would it not be wise to let it rest at that point for a time? It is true that while these questions are live ones, we are more or less divided in our minds, and the work which we ought to do may be neglected. I move therefore that the door be propped open if need be, and that we all get to work at the task which is big enough for every ounce of power we have and every dollar of money we have, and let us see what will be the net result. Courtship is a good thing in its place, but even as good a thing as it is may be overdone.

Now having unburdened myself of this, I want to call attention to a report that has just reached this office from one of our Logging Camp missionaries, in the hope that it will shed as much light on this subject to others as it has for me.

He says that visiting in the homes of the community and taking an interest in their children and their homes is a practical necessity before he attempts to preach to them. This shows that men of the woods are not so very different from the men we know everywhere. It is impossible to do much for men with the Gospel until you have established some sort of contact with them beforehand. So this man rightly says, "preaching is done more by deed and action than by words of mouth, but the preaching service is regarded of great importance by some of the people." It is natural for these men to take an interest in the men who show some interest in them, so these missionaries of ours take their packs upon their backs and go among the men in the woods, eat with them, take interest in their games, talk with them about the things uppermost in their minds, and then get them to hear the message with which their hearts are full. The agents of every sort of fad find here a congenial soil for their doctrine, because they show some interest in the men and their toil, and condition. So must we who go to them with the Gospel.

It is the old, ever new story of Him who was in all points tempted like as we are and therefore knows how to succor those of us who are sorely tempted. It is when we put our hand on the arm of the man and call him brother that we start thoughts of friendship in his mind. More and more am I convinced that the ministry must have the passion of Christ if this world is to be brought nigh unto him. I can not understand the man who goes before his people from week to week with a half-hearted message and gives it in a perfunctory way.

Out of his despair Peter said, "Lord, to whom shall we go," and it seems to me that the same feeling is growing among men at this time. We do not know of ourselves where to go or what to do, to change mankind or modify society.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

This is a great week in New York. It began with the "wet" parade up Fifth Avenue, a considerable crowd marching as a protest against the prohibition constitutional amendment, and it will end with the parade of Christian Endeavorers up Fifth Avenue, Saturday, at noon, as an indorsement of the passage of the prohibitory amendment. The contrast will speak for itself. There are times when the devil overreaches himself.

What a contrast also in the crowds last week from out of town and the crowds this week, the one crowd after a prize-fight, the other seeking the glory of the Lord. When Saturday's parade reaches the Mall in Central Park, services will be held in memory of members of the Christian Endeavor Society who gave their lives in the world war. The chief speaker will be William Jennings Bryan. It is hoped that the President of the United States will be able to come to New York to review the procession and make an address. Saturday evening Mr. Bryan will lecture in the Tent Evangel on "The Menace of Darwinism in American Education and in Religion."

The New England evangelist, Dr. S. P. Fairbanks, will speak in the Tent Evangel every evening of this week except Saturday. Street, shop and tent meetings, conducted by the Evangelistic Committee of New York, are well attended. Up to June 25th, 925 meetings have been held in forty-nine centers, with a total attendance of 83,261. Another tent was opened last Sabbath for colored folks, on West 144th Street. Rev. J. W. Anderson, pastor of the Mount Nebo Baptist Church, will be in charge. Other tents for the colored people will be opened from week to week, as occasion may demand. Sixty teams of Christian Endeavor delegates will co-operate with the Evangelistic Committee in street meetings during the World's Convention this week.

In an endeavor to adequately reach the one hundred thousand Spanish-speaking residents of Greater New York, very few of whom are regular church attendants, the pastors and workers of the Protestant Spanish-speaking churches have formed an organization. Dr. Juan Orts Gonzales, pastor of the Iglesia Evangelica Espanola, 109 East Twenty-second Street, was elected president; and Rev. Alberto Baez, pastor of the Spanish-speaking Methodist church, Brooklyn, N. Y., secretary.

Rev. Dr. John A. Marquis, secretary of the Home Mission Board, preached, last Sabbath, in the West End Presbyterian Church. Rev. Dr. A. E. Keigwin, pastor. Rev. A. P. Fitch, of Amherst, preached in the Brick Church; Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie, secretary of the Board of Church Erection, preached in the Broadway Church, and Captain Gipsy Pat Smith was at the Lafayette Avenue Church, Brooklyn.

Stony Brook, Long Island, will be the center of larger activities this summer than ever before. Stony Brook's calendar for 1921 is as follows: Brooklyn Sunday-school Union District Conference, July 1st to 4th; Victorious Life Conference, July 16th to 24th; Missionary Conference, July 25 to 31st; Young People's Conference, Aug. 1st to 7th; Messianic Conference, Aug. 14th to 19th; General Conference, Aug. 21st to 28th; Long Island Bible Institute, Aug. 20th to 31st.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

A most eventful occasion for the Presbytery of Chicago and its most sacred charge, when the Board of Directors and many friends assembled at the property of the Presbyterian Home, to break ground for the most attractive and commodious group of buildings in all the middle west. The contract has been let for the erection of the wing for the old people, and the wing for the convalescents. The contractor promises that the building will be ready for occupancy by the first of January. The location is in the west part of the city of Evanston and comprises now thirty acres. The original purchase was a twenty-acre tract known as the Wilson farm. Mr. Heddenburg, a director, made the Home a present of six acres adjoining the first purchase and the directors now hold an option on four more acres. The whole tract is most admirably adapted to such an institution. There is orchard, woods, meadows, farm and small fruit of many varieties. The ceremony of ground breaking was most interesting. Dr. W. S. Bryan, president of the Home, presided, and in his usual fervor of interest, told anew the story of the Home. Among those who took part were Messrs. James Patten and David R. Forgan. The entire group of buildings to be erected was outlined with stakes and cord, the outline measuring one thousand feet. At the appointed moment, Mr. Obern, president of the Women's Auxiliary, waved a small American flag and all began to dig, each one of the directors having found his place nearest the location of the room which he had endowed. The occasion was graced with the presence of one of the first givers, and doubtless the oldest of the many friends of the Home, Mrs. Ruth Quinlan, who has reached her ninety-fifth birthday. At the call of Dr. Bryan, "Nick and Bill," the farm team which has been purchased for the Home farm, took part in the ground breaking. It is a time of sincere congratulation that the end is now in sight for the permanent home for our old people.

Mr. Wilber P. Blessing, the faithful and efficient manager of the local Presbyterian bookstore, returned last week from an extended trip to London and the Continent. Mr. Blessing started on his combined business and pleasure trip shortly after he left the Presbyterian Hospital. He returns much improved in health.

Rev. B. M. Brown, evangelist, is supplying the Congregational Church of Wheaton while a search is being made for a pastor. The Presbyterian Church of Wheaton is being supplied by a Congregational minister while the session are finding a pastor.

Rev. Robert Clements, pastor of the Austin Church, delivered the baccalaureate address at Parsons College, at Fairfield, Iowa, and incidentally brought home a Degree of D.D., which was most worthily bestowed.

Rev. Anson T. Dewey, who has been taking a post-graduate term at the University of Chicago during the past winter, has been appointed Educational Director for the Synod of Kansas by the Sabbath School Board.

Dr. A. C. Zenos, of McCormick Seminary, is supplying the pulpit of the First Church of Bloomington, Ind., for the present month.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

The final meeting of our Ministerial Association until next September was held June 27th, and was addressed by Dr. E. C. Cort, medical missionary to Siam, whose story energetically and graphically told, revealed the sanitary needs of that land and people, confided wholly to the care of our Church.

On June 25th the Murrysville Church celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its dedication with an address by Rev. J. M. Duff, D.D., at one time a student in the academy at that place. The historical address was delivered by Rev. J. M. Spargrove, son of Rev. Geo. M. Spargrove, its first pastor, which was followed by a short address by George M. Spargrove, a grandson of the first pastor, and a recent graduate of Grove City. The present pastor is Rev. R. F. Getty, who for ten years has carried on the work with great devotion and success.

Rev. James B. McClure, who has been received by the Presbytery of Washington from the Presbytery of Carlisle, will be installed as pastor of the Unity Church some time in August by Rev. J. P. Stoops, Rev. E. J. Kneppshield, Rev. A. M. Riggs, and Rev. Samuel Davis.

On August 27th, Rev. W. W. Dinsmore, lately of Coal Center and Roscoe churches, will be installed as pastor of the churches of Lower Ten Mile and Pleasant Hill by Rev. C. E. Houk, Rev. E. J. Kneppshield, and Rev. C. L. McKee.

At the communion of the Third Church, this city, held June 19th, four persons were received on profession and nine by letter. This church will be supplied during July on the 3d, 10th, 24th and 31st, by Rev. S. S. Palmer, D.D., of Columbus, Ohio; on the 17th by Rev. T. C. Pears, Jr., and on the four Sabbaths of August by Rev. H. B. Smith, D.D., of Los Angeles, Calif., who is also to deliver a course of lectures at the Summer School, Grove City, Pa.

The marriage in the near future is announced of Rev. S. C. Black, D.D., of Washington and Jefferson College, to Miss Harkness, connected with the faculty as Professor of Latin of Tulane University, Louisiana, and a graduate at the same time with Dr. Black from Parsons College.

The First Church received, on June 19th, twelve members by profession and eight by letter, and six children were baptized. The pastor, Rev. Maitland Alexander, D.D., has left for his summer home at Dark Harbor, Me., and the church will be supplied on the 3d and 24th of July by Rev. W. A. Jones, D.D., associate pastor; by Rev. Clarence E. Macartney, D.D., of Philadelphia, on the 10th and 17th, and by Rev. Burleigh Cruikshank, assistant pastor, on the 31st.

Prof. D. S. Schaff has gone to Alaska for his vacation.

In this region of Scotch Presbyterians we note with regret that the pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian Church in Paris was obtained by the Duke of Marlborough to officiate at the religious ceremony of his marriage. We could have wished that he had shown more of the stamina and religious principle which the pastor of the American church exhibited in refusing to officiate. Any minister who participates in such a ceremony for such persons condones the violation of Christ's law, and encourages divorce, an encouragement needed by neither the Marlboroughs nor Vanderbilts.

On Oct. 6th. in St. Paul's Church, Chicago, Ill., the Afro-American Presbyterian Council will hold a series of meetings, to discuss questions relating to the large usefulness and true progress of the Negro Presbyterian church members.

On the 25th of June, the Historical Society of Western Pennsylvania, held a meeting at Economy, Pa., to mark the making of the old Hall of the Economy Society a monument to, or memorial of that defunct social community. This building stands in the lower part of the town of Ambridge, on the shore of the Ohio, and, with a number of old houses, is the last vestige of an attempt, begun more than a century ago by George Rapp to establish a religious communism. Judge Baldwin, of Beaver, in his address on Saturday, was correct in saying that these "Harmonists," for such was their designation, left Europe, as did the Pilgrim Fathers, for freedom of worship and liberty of development. So did the Moravians, and the Dunkards, and the Winebrennerians. These Harmonists settled first in Butler County, Pa., then moved to Indiana, where they prospered financially, and finally moved to this site on the Ohio, to which they gave the name Economy in 1824. Industrious, frugal, moral, with few desires for art, pleasure or expensive life, by agriculture, fruit raising and manufactures, they accumulated wealth. But they opposed marriage, and held all possessions in common, giving to those who retired only the amount they brought at their entrance. Mild and simple pleasures were encouraged, and true to the German traditions, a skilled instrumental band was developed. The houses had no front door on the street, but on the backyard, possibly to discourage gossip with the passersby. Such a community of goods, combined with the industry of the Teutonic native, and discouragement of expenditures, resulted in large wealth, sufficient, as the members grew old, to hire outside assistance, in crops, and factory. Despite the strong moral supervision and religious ideals at the beginning, a community, which contravened the law of marriage and the family, and disdained the responsibilities, virtues and joys of parentage, could have but one end, and one result. Material prosperity may, and generally does, attend such communion, but it is warped, defective and circles to death. So this community at last held only two members, one of them a comparatively young man, who, it is not invidious to say, had noted the declining membership, and aged heirs, and bided his time, knowing, as the courts ultimately decided, that the last member held the properties, practically without responsibility. This hall and a few houses are a curiosity, the outward sign of an experiment often made by men in other centuries, always ending in defeat. The asceticism of the earlier church, the rise and fall of monastic life, the staggering course of the mendicant orders, the fallacious claims of convent and celibacy of the clergy to-day, reveal the same manmade theories of isolation, which Christ never taught, and a true study of the Bible never will encourage. Socialism and communism on the ignes fatui of larger but narrow minds. So many of us are hopeful of a Utopia, or a Platonic republic. Robert Owens bought the Indiana property of these Harmonists for this community. In New England the Brookfarm Mystics dreamed of a happier and less material life, where Hawthorne hoed corn, Margaret Fuller talked while she cooked the meals, Emerson and Dana and Alcott and Geo. William Curtis drove the cattle home and raked the hay, and saw their castles in Spain dissolve in the heat of the field. Judge Baldwin's praise of the underlying principle of the Economites is justified. But the saving grace of the Pilgrims and the Puritans was that they sought the highest education, and the true breadth of life, and never forget that the basis of the truest civilization and the richest living is the Christ-loved family, and the home of faith, and prayer, and little children's care.

MONTANA MUSINGS.

BY REV. J. F. SHEPHERD, D.D.

Rev. F. W. Thompson has resigned the church of Polson, to take effect within ninety days. This is a beautiful little city on the picturesque Flathead Lake, in one of the finest climates of the Northwest. The church is well officered and is an attractive field.

Elder E. L. Geddes, of Whitefish, has deeded twenty acres of beautiful young evergreen forest land to the Whitefish Church as an athletic ground, especially for use in scouting. This land overlooks this flourishing city and will be a great asset to this rapidly growing church.

The Cut Bank Church, Rev. V. P. Martin, pastor, is remodeling and enlarging their house of worship so as to take care of the growing demands of the people, it being the only Protestant church in this fine county seat.

The work at Roy, under the pastorate of Rev. W. W. Landis, is making remarkable progress. Their support of the pastor at that place has been increased $200, and they have sold their buildings and are occupying the Lutheran church, for the purchase of which they are negotiating.

Rev. George Edwards, in charge of the Coffee Creek group, not content with the work on this large field, is reaching out to other needy places, giving the Gospel to these on week nights and speaking three times on Sabbath. Such activity and devotion ought to be an example to some, even young men, who seem content to do as little as is demanded and are deaf to the many Macedonian cries all about.

Among the daily vacation Bible schools that are flourishing this year are Cut Bank, Helena First, Great Falls First, Havre First and Harlowtown.

The Synod of Montana will meet in Great Falls July 12th to 17th. Entertainment will be provided for all on the Harvard plan. A program, lasting over Sunday, is in preparation. Nearly all the Boards will have strong men present. Schools of instruction and work will be held under the direction of Dr. King and Dr. Robinson. The brethren of the synod will have a daily symposium of short addresses on home missions, conducted by the writer.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

Rev. John A. Troxler, pastor of the church in Mayfield, held a Vacation Bible School during the month of June, in our church building, which is well adapted to the work, as it has many rooms. He gave a fine course of instruction in the Bible, and Mr. James T. Smith, of Bowling Green, assisted him in the school work.

The writer held services at Dixon last Sabbath. This church, as well as some others, is needing a pastor.

Quite a number of people in the Presbytery of Princeton will attend Ovoca this year. The Young People's Conference will be attractive and interesting. We ought to have a large number there. The program for the Bible Conference is strong and attractive.

A SOLUTION.

There is food for thought in an article in a secular magazine on "The Bible Test at Harvard." Reference is made to the licensing of a candidate for the ministry who ignored the requirements of presbytery and passed by a literary test. This might in part serve as an answer to one of your correspondents, "Why Do Not People Go to Church?"

When the ministers of the Word devote themselves to education for eternity, they will arouse an interest that will absorb the important parts of education and of amusement and awaken men.

RELIGIOUS NEWS

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Rev. R. B. A. McBride, D.D., from La Jolla to Long Beach, Calif., 620 East Fifth Street.

Rev. T. Charles Thomas, from Washington, D. C., to Ocean Grove, N. J., for the summer.

Rev. John Todd, from Lisbon to Fremont, Ohio.

Rev. Selby F. Vance, D.D., from Cincinnati, O., to Charlevoix, Mich., Sequanota Club, for the summer.

Rev. Robert Watson, D.D., from New York, N. Y., to Atlantic Highlands, N. J., for the summer.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Horace C. Currie, of California, Pa., died at McKeesport Hospital, May 31st. The burial was at Kent, his former home.

Rev. James K. Argo, of Cherry Valley, N. Y., died June 6th, at Tampa, Fla., where he had gone for his health. He was born at Ironton, O., and in 1887, after graduating at Drew University, was ordained in the M. E. Church. Thirty years ago he came into the Presbyterian ministry and served, among other charges, at Galion, Belle Center and Findlay, O., in Green Hill Church of Philadelphia, and in Cherry Valley, N. Y. He was a good and devoted minister, highly regarded and loved by all who knew him.

Rev. H. M. Steidley, of Fort Collins, Col., student pastor under the Presbyterian Board of Education at the Colorado Agricultural College, Fort Collins, died June 11th, in the seventy-first year of his age. His going is a great loss to the college, where he had done faithful spiritual work for two years, and to the First Church of Fort Collins, with which he had been twice associated in the pastorate. Great grief and appreciation are expressed by Rev. Dr. C. D. Darling and by the other members of the session. Mr. Steidley was born at Palmyra, Ill., May 8, 1851. He was a life-time active servant of Jesus Christ. For thirty years he was State Secretary of Sabbath-school Work in Illinois, Tennessee and Nebraska. For thirteen years he had made his home with his family at Fort Collins, and was loved and trusted by all. He is survived by his wife and five children. His funeral was conducted by Dr. C. D. Darling in the First Church of Fort Collins.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The North Church, Rev. W. A. Motter, pastor, received sixty-five members on June 19th, the Sabbath before the Friday evening, June 24th, when Mr. Motter was installed.

The Evanston Churches hold outdoor union services on Sabbath evenings in July and August, meeting in the Presbyterian Church, Dr. L. E. Lee, pastor, in case of rain.

The churches held patriotic services last Sabbath, emphasizing the fact that religion must be mixed with our national life, as with our family and business life, if our nation is to be safe.

Lane Seminary Board of Trustees held a meeting last Tuesday to see to the business necessary in the prosperous opening of the work in the fall.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Dr. Lampe and his family are leaving on July 6th for their summer home in Charlevoix, Mich., where they will remain until September. Regular services will be held at the West Church during his absence.

Miss Jane Thompson, a missionary of our Board, at Bangola, India, has returned to her home in St. Louis, on a furlough after seven years' service, to visit her mother here. Miss Thompson is supported by the young people's societies of the St. Louis Presbytery. Monday evening of last week, a reception in her honor was given at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ranken, under the auspices of the St. Louis Presbytery.

The Sabbath-school field representative, Rev. W. D. Vater, spent the first Sabbath in June at Taylor Springs, Ill. Rev.

James R. Sager and his workers from Hillsboro are taking great interest in this undertaking.

Rev. R. Marshall Davis, D.D., pastor of the First Church, recently delivered the commencement address at the College of the Ozarks in Arkansas.

An encouraging note in the efforts of the denominations to pay their quotas in the underwritings for expenses of the Interchurch World Movement is sounded by the Disciples of Christ, who at a meeting of their Underwritings Committee, June 29, in St. Louis, found that nearly $500,000 of their total of $626,000 has been pledged or assured. This comes after an active campaign so far of only three months. The leader in this campaign is Dr. A. E. Cory.

Rev. Karl Frederick Wettstein gave an interesting illustrated lecture, "My European Travels," before the young people's society of the Sidney Street Church, of which he is pastor, Friday evening.

Dr. MacIvor, of the Second Church, leaves on Monday of this week on his vacation in his own car. He will first undertake driving to Pittsburgh, and then on to Nova Scotia, his early home, where his relatives still reside. Affairs at the church will be left in charge of the assistant pastor, Rev. N. L. Euwer. The Daily Vacation Bible School started the first week at Second Church with fifty-nine children.

At the Mitchell Mission, Alton Presbytery, a successful all-day Sabbath school meeting was held on June 26th, under Rev. W. D. Vater, field representative. Three services were held with a bountiful dinner and supper. The attendance was encouraging.

Last Sabbath morning the pulpit of King's Highway Church was filled by Rev. F. W. Burham, D.D., president of the United Christian Missionary Society.

OHIO.

Rev. Hugh I. Evans, of Marysville, Ohio, has accepted a call to the Second Church of Portsmouth, Ohio, to succeed Rev. Dr. George P. Horst. He is a graduate of Wooster and of Princeton Seminary, and will begin his new work Sept. 1st.

The First Church of Xenia, Rev. W. H. Tilford, pastor, received three members on June 26th. A delightful reception was given to Mr. and Mrs. Tilford on June 28th.

The First Church of Coshocton, Rev. Joseph A. Speer, pastor, is to be supplied during July by Dr. Moses Breeze.

Ten new members were received into the First Church of Lancaster, June 28th, making 120 during the pastorate of Rev. W. J. Holmes.

In the Clyde Church on May 4th the mothers and daughters had a banquet in the church parlors, at which 150 were served. On Sabbath, May 8th, the ladies had charge of the morning exercises in the observance of Mothers and Daughters' Day. On June 15th the ladies served a supper to 150 men. The after-dinner program consisted of male choruses, led by Mr. Frank Crockett and addresses by Rev. Mr. Moore, of Sandusky; Judge John Ray, of the same city, and Mr. Armstrong, of the Boy Scouts, of Sandusky County. It was a great affair. Rev. Isaiah Revenaugh is pastor.

The ministers, their wives and children, of St. Clairsville and Wheeling Presbyteries, held a picnic near St. Clairsville, Ohio, June 28th. A meeting was held and young people's work was discussed. Rev. John Sharpe spoke of the Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

The First and Second Churches of Bellaire have united and plans are being made to build a new church.

About fifteen Daily Vacation Bible Schools are being conducted in St. Clairsville Presbytery.

The Westchester Church has been dissolved and the property sold.

Rev. John W. Neel and family, of Bridgeport, Ohio, are attending summer school at Auburn Theological Seminary. During his absence his church, Kirkwood, will be closed for improvements, costing $3,000. Mr. Neel has been pastor of this church for over nine years. Last year 100 new members were received.

Central Church, Zanesville, Dr. W. L. Whallon, pastor, received fourteen members at the June communion.

The Presbytery of Lima met in the Market Street Church of Lima on June 27th. Rev. George H. Gibson was chosen moderator for the six months beginning with the fall meeting. Arrangements were made for the installation of Rev. William A. Reed at Van Buren on July 17th, by Rev. W. L. Alexander, Rev. W. Frank Reber and Rev. M. E. Todd. The fall meeting will be at Blanchard.—Ralph W. Kohr, S. C.

INDIANA.

Rev. R. C. Hartman has received seven members into the Poland Church and eight into Jordan Valley since last November.

The men's Bible class, Elkhart, Rev. Campbell L. MacKay, pastor, had an average attendance of 206 for the last thirty-nine weeks, and the class collections were $1,002. The church received four members on June 26th and two infants were baptized.

Rev. Malcolm McNeal, pastor of McKinley Avenue and South Side churches, Vincennes, is conducting a largely attended Daily Bible Vacation School in Bethany Church.

Oakland City Church is now vacant. Those interested may address Rev. J. B. Miller, D.D., who for the present is at Winona Lake, Ind.

North Park Church has almost doubled in the few months' pastorate of Rev. Marvin Ballew. A manse will probably be erected soon.

Farmersburg has met with a great loss in the death of Mrs. Nancy Brown, aged ninety-two. Two of her sons are officers in the Sugar Grove Church and one at Farmersburg.

Dr. J. B. Miller, chairman of the Vacancy and Supply Committee of Indiana Presbytery, is anxious to secure a minister for Oatsville, Olive Branch and Union churches.

A fine Vacation Bible School of 133 is being carried on at Hosmer by the pastor, Rev. J. C. McClung.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Washington and Jefferson College, Dr. Samuel Charles Black, president, graduated a class of fifty-six last week. The degree of D.D. was conferred on Rev. B. F. Farber of Pittsburgh, Rev. J. R. Fleming of Scotland, Rev. J. P. Irwin of China, Rev. R. Lincoln Long of Toledo, O., and Rev. E. E. Robb of Philadelphia.

The fifteenth anniversary in the pastorate of Rev. R. A. Rinker in the church of Pittston was observed on June 26th. The church is now seventy-nine years old.

Old Donegal Church celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of its organization on June 16th. The original deed was made by Thomas Penn in 1740, granting two hundred acres to the Presbyterian church at Donegal. The presbytery, long known as Donegal, is now Westminster.

Rev. Dr. Wilson Aull, formerly pastor at East St. Louis, Ill., and Mr. G. B. St. John have been added to the staff of the Presbyterian General Board of Education, to engage in the lecture and publicity work of the Board.

The Presbyterian Association of Harrisburg and vicinity has passed resolutions recording their great appreciation of Rev. Dr. Lewis S. Mudge, who goes from that city to become the General Assembly Stated Clerk, and promising to him their continued prayers for divine guidance, so that he may fill his new position "with ever increasing success and with the ever growing confidence of the church."

MISSOURI.

The Eldorado Church received three members on profession recently. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Mitchell, preached the memorial sermon on May 29th.

The Linwood Church, Dr. Harry C. Rogers, pastor, which during his pastorate of fourteen years has grown from a membership of 300 to 1,600, has an ambitious program before it of filling the whole square with Presbyterian institutions, one of which is a Presbyterian hospital. It is now raising $220,000 for a new church building. Of this, $70,000 is already subscribed, and the membership is divided into sixty classes, with sixty captains, to raise $2,500 each and make up the $150,000.

Dr. John Timothy Stone is to spend June 28th with the church.

The Presbyterian Assembly at Hollister is to be held from Aug. 3d to 10th, with a fine program. The Young People's Conference is from July 27th to Aug. 2d. Dr. E. E. Stringfield, of King City, Mo., is secretary.

COLORADO.

Rev. Louis E. Humphrey was installed pastor at Paoli, June 7th, by Rev. H. B. Vale and Rev. Leroy C. Ilsley. The ladies of the church served luncheon to over two hundred and fifty. A new bell and a pulpit set have been installed. Children's Day was observed, with an offering to the Board of over $25.

I am directed by the Presbytery of Gunnison to announce through the church papers that Rev. J. Edie Stewart, formerly of Ouray, Col., was suspended from the ministry by said presbytery at a meeting held at Palisade, Col., May 24, 1921.—J. A. Hunsicker, S. C.

IOWA.

On Children's Day in Aububon, Rev. William Mack, pastor, ten infants were baptized. The Sabbath School Missions offering was $27. A Vacation Bible School is being conducted here, supervised by the pastor. A weekly Bible School is to be started in September.

During the past few weeks the pastor at Manning, Rev. W. W. Tait, D.D., has baptized four infants and two adults and received seven new members, five of them on confession. Two new elders were recently ordained and installed. The outlook is encouraging.

Rev. J. L. Howie and Rev. J. Frank Reed, of Sioux City, received the degree of D.D., from Buena Vista College at the recent commencement.

Rev. Arthur Boyd, D.D., was installed as president of Buena Vista College at the commencement.

The ministers of Sioux City held a devotional meeting June 8th and 9th, with great profit. Moderator F. H. Shedd presided.

The Third Church, Sioux City, Rev. J. L. Howie, D.D., pastor, is conducting its second Vacation Bible School with over 100 enrolled. Some 525 are enrolled in the Sabbath school.

The Presbytery of Iowa has engaged Rev. Horace O. Bethel, of Des Moines Presbytery, to take up the work of pastor-at-large in this presbytery. There are number of vacant churches in Iowa Presbytery. Those interested may write Rev. Warren F. Goff, D.D., at Fort Madison, chairman of the H. M. Committee, or Rev. H. O. Bethel, at Fairfield, Ia.

In Fort Madison Church since April 1, 1920, ninety-one members have been welcomed, fifty-two of whom were received on Easter morning. A Sabbath school addition to the present church building, modern and adequate for future needs, is to be constructed at a cost of about $30,000. Fort Madison bids fare to become one of the notable manufacturing cities in the Upper Mississippi Valley. Rev. Warren F. Goff, pastor, has received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Parsons College at Fairfield, of whose board of trustees he is vice president.

Donnellson and Argyle, two mission fields in Iowa Presbytery, are being supplied during the summer months by Brainerd N. Covert and S. J. Russell Ensign, students in McCormick Seminary.

On June 15th the fiftieth anniversary of the Holland Church was observed. Rev. John E. Drake, D.D., is the present pastor and under his ministry the church has grown to be the largest in the synod of the West. Dr. Drake presided and read a history of the church, which was founded by Rev. Jacob Brinkema in 1871. The founder of the church was represented by his son, Rev. B. J. Brinkema, D.D., of Middletown, Ohio, who delivered an address. Rev. B. Vander Laş was the second pastor for twenty-six years and he was represented by his son-in-law, Rev. Albert E. Boell, of George, Iowa, who delivered a missionary sermon. Rev. John E. Drake, D.D., who has served the church for twenty-one years, had the pleasure of presenting his son, Rev. A. E. Drake, McCormick graduate of 1921, who delivered a sermon. The anniversary sermon was by Rev. L. H. Hayanga, missionary evangelist of the Synod of the West, and a personal friend of the three pastors. The offering of the day was devoted to Home and Foreign Missions and totaled $1,500.

MINNESOTA.

The First Church of Minneapolis, the parent Presbyterian church of Minnesota, was organized June 11, 1835, with twenty-two members, and on June 12th, or eighty-six years after, Rev. Dr. John T. Bergen, D.D., pastor, preached a historical sermon.

Rev. Charles F. Geiger was installed as pastor of the Blooming Prairie Church, Winona Presbytery, on June 14th, by Rev. B. F. Pearson, Rev. F. C. Boller, Rev. J. B. Lyle, D.D., and Rev. Robert Nelson.

Rev. Raymond J. Rutt was installed pastor of the Oliver Church, Minneapolis, on June 14th. Dr. A. B. Marshall, his instructor in Omaha Theological Seminary, preached the sermon; Dr. J. T. Bergen gave the charge to the pastor, and Dr. J. O. Buswell the charge to the people. Oliver Church has sent two missionaries into the foreign field, Rev. Paul Doltz to the Philippines, and Rev. Charles Clark to Korea, and for each of them it has recently provided an automobile. After the installation, Dr. Marshall went East to attend a reunion of his class at Princeton.

MONTANA.

The Synod of Montana will meet in Great Falls July 12th to 17th, with the First Church, Rev. Leo L. Totten, pastor. Entertainment will be on the Harvard plan.

Rev. W. H. Christian, of Deer Lodge, has accepted a call to Willard, O., to begin work there Aug. 1st. Mr. H. E. Stetson is clerk of session at Deer Lodge.

At a meeting of the Church Federation of South Dakota in Mitchell, June 15th, 125 ministers and laymen were present to arrange the campaign to retain the laws of the state already enacted pertaining to the Sabbath, and moving-picture shows, and for the enforcement of prohibition. South Dakota has a state sheriff, and an organized movement is on to repeal the law requiring that office, as well as to repeal the law pertaining to Sunday baseball and moving pictures. A committee was appointed to co-operate with the State Anti-Saloon League, the W. C. T. U., and the women's clubs of the state, to prevent such repeal.

The church of Alexandria has called Rev. Homer Greene.

Rev. J. W. Taylor was installed at Wolsey, June 28th, by Rev. Paul S. Johnson, Rev. L. C. Bell and Rev. H. P. Carson, D.D.

Kalispell Presbytery will meet at Great Falls, Mont., July 13th, on floor of synod.—B. Scott Bates, S. C.

WISCONSIN.

In Immanuel Church, Milwaukee, Dr. Jenkins recently asked of the officers and members a strict observance of the Sabbath. The death of Mr. Henry M. Ogden, for many years a prominent trustee, is a great loss to Immanuel Church.

The annual summer conference for young people at Green Lake, July 20-27, will be a fine place for study and preparation for better work in church activities.

The Woman's Synodical Missionary Society met on June 1st at Calvary Church, Milwaukee. Mrs. Cooravadt, a returned missionary from China was one of the speakers—Immanuel Church has lost two prominent workers, Mrs. A. L. Cary and Mr. Henry M. Ogden—The Federation of Christian Churches, meeting at Calvary Church, planned to raise $7,000 for its mission work among the young people in Milwaukee.

Several of our Waukesha workers are booked for the numerous special meetings and conferences at Weenah and Green Lake. Dr. W. O. Carrier preached the baccalaureate sermon recently at Carroll College.

Miss C. S. Johnson, of Mary Holmes Seminary, is visiting her brother, Rev. Dr. T. S. Johnson, at Beaver Dam, and is much encouraged with her labors among the colored girls of the South. The Mary Holmes School was founded by Rev. Mead Holmes as a memorial for his wife. Mr. Holmes preached in Wisconsin in the early days and was much interested in the missionary work among colored people of the South

Rev. E. B. King preached the baccalaureate sermon for the high school at Horicon on June 19th.

Dr. Lilas Evans, of Los Angeles, Cal., has returned to Wisconsin, and to his old friends at Ripon, and preached the baccalaureate sermon at Ripon College June 19th.

CALIFORNIA.

Rev. C. P. Hessel, of Arcata, has become Stated Clerk of Benicia Presbytery, succeeding Rev. W. H. Sutherland, of Fort Bragg, now of Lemon Cove, Cal.

Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, Rev. H. B. Smith, D.D., pastor, has eleven of its own members in foreign mission fields. It entirely supports four foreign missionaries and assists in the support of four others.

Los Angeles Presbytery has 27,587 communicant members in its ninety-seven churches. During the past year 1,817 members were received on profession and 3,644 by certificate.

Dr. Herbert Booth Smith, of Immanuel Church of Los Angeles, is to preach in the Central Church of Denver, July 24th; address the national convention of the Young People's Christian Union of the United Presbyterian Church in Old Stone Church, Cleveland, O., July 28th, and hold a week's meeting in Malden, Mo. The four Sabbaths of August will be spent in the Third Church of Pittsburgh and the last ten days of the month at the Grove City Bible conference, where he conducts the devotional hour each day. The summer preachers for Immanuel pulpit are: July 24th, Rev. John A. Leusinger, assistant pastor; July 31st, Rev. W. H. Wray Boyle, D.D.; August 7th an 14th, Dr. Clinton W. Lowrie; August 21st and 28th, Dr. James K. Thompson.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The Synod of South Dakota had 1,665 additions to its members last year, of whom over 1,000 were on profession.

A young people's conference is to be held at Lake Kampeska, near Watertown, July 13-19, where Rev. J. W. Christianson is pastor. The expense is to be as low as $15 for the week.

At Huron College thirteen students graduated this year. Dr. J. M. Wilson, of Omaha Seminary, preached the baccalaureate sermon and Dr. W. M. Hamilton, of Sioux City, Iowa, gave the commencement address.

The following churches have recently secured ministers: Artesian, Rev. Wendell Pontius; Dallas, Rev. Arthur E. Hall; Lodgepole, Rev. George H. Harper; McIntosh, Rev. Bruce N. Daris. The ministers of the following churches have resigned: Rev. Thomas Bell, from Castlewood; Rev. Wm. Anderson, from Salem.

The summer school of Huron College opened June 13th with an increased enrollment. The college has been without a president since last November, but expects one soon.

The Sabbath school convention of South Dakota, in session at Mitchell, has an attendance of over 1,000 members and representatives from almost every county in the state.

WYOMING.

Moorcroft Church, Rev. S. E. Fels, pastor, is taking steps to secure a new manse.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

A BAPTIST LEADER.

Dr. J. B. Gambrett, a leader and notable figure in the Southern Baptist Church, is dead in his eightieth year.

A JULY FOURTH WISH.

BY JOHN C. MINOR.

I wish I'd been a Boston boy
In seventeen-seventy-five,
When Hancock, Adams, Paul Revere
And Prescott were alive;
And when they called on Washington
To come from far away
And take the place of highest rank
Upon that July day.

I wish I'd been in Cambridge then;
The elm is standing still Where Washington first saw the men
Who fought at Bunker Hill,
And where they came from far and near,
In patriotic bands,
To greet the great Virginian,
And follow his commands.

I wish I'd heard the fife and drum
That sounded night and day
And called the Minutemen to come
Where duty showed the way.
I wish I could have stood with them
Beneath the Cambridge tree
When Washington raised high the sword
That made our country free.

But that was very long ago;
The days of Washington
Were much unlike the days we know
And all their task is done.
Our duty, though, in peace or war,
Has never changed a bit—
To love our land with loyal hearts,
And give our best to it. —Ex.

HOME-MADE TORPEDOES.

John Hancock Green was five years old and had a grievance. His sister, Mariannina, was half-past six. It was Fourth of July, and all the other boys had firecrackers, but Johnny had none.

Though there were no firecrackers, there were a few torpedoes that Uncle Joey had bought, but these were soon gone.

Suddenly Mariannina had an idea. She picked up the torn covers of one of the exploded torpedoes. It was common white tissue paper. She examined its contents. The torpedoes seemed to be made of sand and salt and things. "Johnny," cried she, "supposing we make some torpedoes!"

"I don't believe dey'll torpede," answered Johnny gloomily.

"We can't tell till we try," said Ninny. "I've got plenty of tissue paper that came in the box with my beautiful wax doll."

"Oh, yes!" said Johnny; "but what's de stuffing made of?"

"What should you think it was?" asked Ninny.

"Looks like sand and gravel," replied Johnny. "But sand hasn't got any fire-bang to it, cause I've frowned it ever so many times."

"Perhaps red pepper would help," suggested Ninny. "Anyway, I'm going to get some."

"You'd better get bofe kinds of pepper!" cried Johnny as Mariannina ran into the house.

Ninny soon returned with spice box, scissors and tissue paper.

Ninny cut and Johnny mixed. Both children began to sneeze.

"First we'll twist up two, just to try," said Ninny.

But just as they had finished the two, a curly head appeared above the high fence. The head belonged to Angelina Thurston.

"What you doin'?" she called.

"Oh, just making torpedoes," answered Johnny.

"Gi-gi' me one?"

"I couldn't exactly give 'em away," responded Johnny.

"Pooh!" said Angelina. "I don't believe they're any good, anyhow."

"Don't let's fire off any till she's gone," whispered Mariannina, "cause if anything should happen that they wouldn't be good, she'd laugh at us. Let's make more."

Soon there was a fine large pile of beautifully formed torpedoes, looking for all the world like those you buy in the store.

"Now, then," said Mariannina, her cheeks red with excitement, "let's try 'em. You try first."

She held her breath, and had her fingers ready to stop her ears. Johnny straightened himself, took aim, and furiously hurled one of the largest torpedoes against the stone. Alas and alas! It fell as noiselessly as a nowflake.

"It doesn't torpede," said Johnny plaintively.

He tried another and another, with same result. Those plump and beautiful torpedoes, half filling the little cart, were failures!

Mariannina wept. But the dinner bell rang and they went in.

Now, all this time Uncle Joey, hidden behind the library blinds, had been chuckling quietly to himself. Still smiling, Uncle Joey opened the door of the library closet. On the top shelf were two packages of torpedoes, intended as a pleasant surprise. Uncle Joey slipped out in the yard and put them in place of the torpedoes the children had made.

After dinner the children went again into the shady yard. The little cart with its little load of torpedoes was still there. John Hancock picked up a torpedo, sighed, and let it fall. Bang! To his immense surprise that torpedo was a success! He tried another and another. Oh, joy!

Then Angelina appeared on the rain barrel.

"See our torpedoes?" cried Johnny. "Smell em? Hear 'em?" And he threw three together.

"I say, will you give me a cent's worth?" asked Angelina.

She tossed down a cent, while Johnny, standing on a soap box, gave her five torpedoes.

Then Isabel and Amabel, the Bolton twins, sauntered into the yard. They had a cent between them, and, seeing Angelina's purchase, they, too, wished to buy. Johnny sold them a cent's worth.

"Made 'em ourselves," he said airily.

"How did you do it?" asked the twins in awe.

"Oh, it's easy," answered Johnny. "Just take sand and salt and red pepper and black pepper, and twist 'em up in paper. I could do it wiv my eyes shut."

Johnny, intent upon proving to the twins the ease with which torpedoes could be made, mixed more "stuffing." Mariannina cut two covers, and there were now two brand-new home-made torpedoes—one for Isabel and one for Amabel.

"Aim, fire, bang!" shouted Johnny. Isabel and Amabel obeyed. A painful surprise awaited them. The little white balls dropped as gently as kernels of popcorn.

Then Uncle Joey had to come out and set all things right in the eyes of everybody. When the truth was known and Angelina and Isabel and Amabel found that they had bought common store torpedoes they objected.

"I only bought 'em," said Angelina,

'cause I thought they were home-made."

"So did we," added the twins.

"All right," said Uncle Joey kindly; "bring the torpedoes, and you can have your money."

"But we've fired 'em all off."

"Well," replied Uncle Joey, "I suppose I shall have to pay you out of my own pocket." But as he had no change smaller than five-cent pieces, he was obliged to give five cents to Angelina and five to the twins. Then it occurred to him that it was rather cruel to leave out John Hancock and Mariannina, so he gave five cents to each of these. "Now," said he, looking around at the little group, "I hope everybody is satisfied.—Ex.

MAINTAINING LIBERTY AND TRUTH.

Did they finish the fight that day
When the Liberty Bell was rung?
Did they silence the noise of war
When Liberty's triumph was sung?
Was Freedom made sovereign indeed
When the old bell pealed to the world
That the reign of oppression had ceased,
And the banner of Freedom unfurled?
A battle has waged since the world was new,
The battle is on, God calleth for you.

HOW PEGGY AND BETTY CELEBRATED INDEPENDENCE DAY.

BY HELEN M. RICHARDSON.

"I'm going to wear my white dress," said Peggy.

"And I'll wear mine!" agreed Betty.

"I'll wear my red sash and blue hair ribbon," Peggy went on to say.

"And I'll wear my blue sash and red hair ribbon," Betty asserted.

"Won't it be fun," both said together.

Then two little girls giggled and squeezed each other's hands. One ran up the street and one skipped down.

And so it happened that on Fourth of July morning Peggy seated herself at the breakfast table in her white dress, red sash and blue hair ribbon. And Betty appeared at about the same time, in a house not far away, in a white dress, and a blue sash, and a red ribbon tying her dark curls.

"Good morning, little Goddess of Liberty," Peggy's father said, bowing politely.

"Good morning, papa," Peggy replied, with a demure courtesy.

In a house three blocks away Betty's big brother Dick lifted her aloft as she entered the breakfast room and called her his little Fourth of July girl.

By and by Peggy and Betty met in Betty's yard. A large American flag was flying from the house-top. This was Brother Dick's surprise to the two little Fourth of July maidens.

Then, after a while, when the sun grew hot, Betty's mother set a little round table on the broad veranda; and on it were some of Grandmother Parker's blue-an-white saucers filled with pink ice cream. It was not as red as the stripes on the flag, or as Peggy's sash, or Betty's hair ribbon. But, my! didn't it taste good! and didn't these two little girls feel patriotic while they were eating it!

This was Mother Parker's surprise.

After the feast was over, there was a loud chug-chugging out in the garage; and out rolled an automobile all decorated with flags, in which these happy children had a most delightful ride.

This was Father Parker's surprise.

Of course, Peggy felt as if just dressing up was not quite all her part. But pretty soon the automobile chug-chugged up her own drive-way, and they were all invited into dinner, and had some more pink ice cream in Peggy's grandmother's blue-and-white dishes.

This was a surprise that Peggy's father and mother had prepared. For when little girls begin the day by surprising other people into patriotism, it is no more than fair for these same people to turn about and surprise them.

"What a happy Fourth of July this has been!" said Peggy, as she took off her red sash and blue hair ribbon and neatly folded them.

"Oh," sighed Betty, sleepily, as she took off her blue sash and red hair ribbons and folded them, just as Peggy had done, "how I wish it was going to be Fourth of July again tomorrow!"

Then two happy, tired little children cuddled down in their beds and the birds sang them to sleep.

THE BIRTH OF THE AMERICAN FLAG.

When freedom, from her mountain height,
Unfurled her standard to the air,
She tore the azure robe of night,
And set the stars of glory there.
She mingled with its gorgeous dyes
The milky baldric of the skies,
And striped its pure celestial white
With streakings of the morning light.

OWNING UP.

"What'll we do next?" asked Fred, rather discontentedly: "I've got a whole bunch of firecrackers."

"We've done most everything," answered Ned. "I'm hungry. Fourth of July ain't much, after all."

It really did seem to those boys as if they had done all that was worth doing in the way of snapping crackers and torpedoes. Yet there was Freddy Gray with a bunch of firecrackers still on hand, and one or two over.

"See here!" Freddy had an idea. "Let's hitch 'em up in the top of the old maple and touch 'em off. The old thing's almost dead, and they're going to cut it down pretty soon. There's leaves enough to hide the crackers, though. Isn't that just the thing, now?"

It certainly was, so they all agreed, and Fred pulled off his jacket and went up the tree. He was down in a minute, but not before the popping had begun.

How funny it was!

People began to stop and look up and down and around, and just then, as luck would have it, Dr. Bell's wife and little girl came driving by.

The horse was old and steady, and hadn't thought of such a thing as getting frightened for years.

But he never before had seen a tree going off in that style—and the old maple, too, that he had known ever since he was a colt. So he pricked up his ears, and stopped and snorted, and then broke into a run up the road and over the hill out of sight.

"Who did that?" asked Lawyer Graham, crossly. "Who tied those firecrackers up there? Dr. Bell can make him smart for it. He ought to smart—it'll teach him a lesson! I'd make an example of him."

Oh, dear! Freddy knew he looked pale and frightened. He left as though every one could see he was the boy that ought to "smart." He wondered if Mrs. Bell and Katy tipped over, and what would be done to him. Oh, what made him? what did he do it for? "I'm glad 'twasn't me," said Ned. "But we won't any of us tell 'twas you, Fred."

As if that could be any comfort to heartbroken little Fred, when he himself knew he did it. He couldn't speak. There was a dreadful lump in his throat. He went home, sad enough, and he could only eat the least bit of lemon pie for his dinner.

"Are you sick, Freddy?" asked mamma.

Oh, dear, what should he do? He wished he dared ask about Mrs. Bell and Katy. He wondered how Dr. Bell would make him smart. Anyhow, he didn't believe he could feel worse than he did that minute.

He went out in the stable pretty soon, and climbed up on the hay. If he lives to be a hundred, he will always remember that Fourth of July afternoon. How his heart thumped when at last he slid down the haymow, red-eyed, worried little Fred.

He didn't say a word to any one, but started off through the pasture. Dr. Bell's house was half a mile away, but it didn't seem so far to Fred that afternoon. He was there before he knew it, and then he didn't dare go in. The blinds were shut, and everything was very still—as if somebody were sick, Fred thought, and he couldn't help thinking, too, it might be Mrs. Bell or Katy.

He went to the door at last, and asked for the doctor. Dr. Bell was in his study, and Fred went slowly in there. Dr. Bell put down his paper and pushed back his chair.

"Well, my boy," said he, "what can I do for you?"

Fred choked up. "How—how's Mrs. Bell and—Katy, sir?"

"Why?" cried the doctor in amazement. "What's the matter with them?"

"The—horse," gasped Freddy. "Oh, Dr. Bell, I tied the crackers up!" And then the story burst out—the whole funny, pitiful story.

"Well, well," said the doctor, and he threw back his head in a hearty laugh. "Maria did say old Nobby got scared, but, bless your heart, he didn't hurt anybody. He ran right home, and got there quicker than he would if he had walked. Now, you had better stay for supper, my boy. Maria will like to hear about this."

Freddy stayed to supper. He thought Dr. Bell the nicest man he had ever seen. And he thinks the best way is to "own right up."

BOBBY'S PRAYER.

Dear Father, there's the other boy to-night,

Who's praying to a god that's made of wood;

He asks it to take care of him till light

And love him—but it won't do any good.

He is so far I can not make him hear;

I'd call to him and tell him, if I could,
That you'll take care of him, that you are near

And love him—for his god is made of wood.

I know he'd ask you if he only knew;

I know he'd love to know you if he could.

Dear God, take care of him, and love him, too—

The other boy, whose god is made of wood.
—Everyland.

THE FOURTH IN OTHER LANDS.

The cordial celebrations of our Independence Day in France, England and South America are grateful to every far-seeing citizen of the United States. We want to live not merely in peace, but also in cordial relations with all the peoples of the world. The machinery for such relations in practical working is sure to come; but the cordiality that is volunteered in the meantime is specially welcome—Congregationalist.

A POPULAR HOLIDAY.

"The Fourth of July comes so soon after Christmas," writes a lady who has become conscious of the swift flight of time.

But Christmas comes sooner after the Fourth of July, several days sooner.

Both holidays, however, are very popular, each in its own way, and it is well that they occur about half a year apart.

Christmas is a universal festival, while Independence Day is national, but as the one is utilized to make conspicuous God's gift of love to mankind, so the other should be used to glorify the gift of freedom to the new world.

Our nation is to be congratulated at having arrived at saner ideas respecting the festivities of Fourth of July celebrations. More thoughtfulness and less noise, more patriotism and less folly, more improvement and less carousal, become the national holiday, for certainly intellectual and moral values harmonize well with popular rejoicings and ever-growing love of country.

But of all the constant little duties connected with July Fourths from year to year, the inculcation of love for the Stars and Stripes should be ever prominent.

Edward Ellis in his "History of Our Country," says: "Our flag has been through more battles and has moved over more victories on land and sea, than any other flag in the world, and more than a million men have laid down their lives that Old Glory should float aloft."

Teach the children one and all to honor the flag and to expect from it protection in whatever civil trials and dangers that may come.

In an Eastern city years ago a veteran Union soldier was in the habit of telling his six-year-old grandson stories of the great Civil War and incidents involving loyalty to the flag.

One thought he continually impressed upon the boy's mind was that the flag of the United States meant protection to every one beneath its folds, no matter how young or weak.

One night the child could not sleep and asked for some one to be with him, suggesting that he needed protection.

The grandfather laid the flag over him and told him he was safe.

In a few moments he fell asleep with one chubby hand clutching the flag and his sweet face bespeaking a feeling of perfect safety.

So let all the children be taught. And let grown people take pains to make the flag more and more the symbol of righteousness as well as freedom, of sobriety as well as liberty, of peace and kindness as well as greatness and strength.—Michigan Chr. Advocate.

THIRD QUARTER.

Lesson III—July 17.

THE CONVERSION OF SAUL.

(Acts 9:1-12, 17-19a.)

1. And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest.

2. And desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound into Jerusalem.

3. And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven:

4. And he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?

5. And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks.

6. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do.

7. And the men which journeyed with him stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.

8. And Saul arose from the earth; and when his eyes were opened, he saw no man; but they led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus.

9. And he was there three days without sight, and neither did eat nor drink.

10. And there was a certain disciple at Damascus, named Ananias; and to him said the Lord in a vision, Ananias. And he said, Behold, I am here, Lord.

11. And the Lord said unto him, Arise, and go into the street which is called Straight, and enquire in the house of Judas for one called Saul, of Tarsus: for, behold, he prayeth,

12. And hath seen in a vision a man named Ananias coming in, and putting his hand on him, that he might receive his sight.

17. And Ananias went his way, and entered into the house; and putting his hands on him said, Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus, that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me, that thou mightest receive thy sight, and be filled with the Holy Ghost.

18. And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized.

19. And when he had received meat, he was strengthened.

Golden Text: "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief" (1 Tim. 1:15).

Catechism—Q. 29. How are we made partakers of the redemption purchased by Christ? A. We are made partakers of the redemption purchased by Christ, by the effectual application of it to us by his Holy Spirit. Q. 30. How doth the Spirit apply to us the redemption purchased by Christ? A. The Spirit applyeth to us the redemption purchased by Christ, by working faith in us, and thereby uniting us to Christ in our effectual calling.

INTRODUCTORY.

Saul of Tarsus became a Christian. It was a most unlikely change in his life. No one who knew him during his early life, or during his mature early manhood, would have imagined that this bright, scholarly, bigoted Pharisee, who was so zealous for Judaism, would ever leave it, to become a follower of Jesus Christ, whom he opposed with all his might, persecuting his disciples, and doing all in his power to put an end to the Christian religion. But God had a plan for him. This lesson tells how God found his way into the heart and life of this man and made him a Christian, and then, afterward used him to make him the most distinguished and forceful teacher and leader that has ever been in the Church since the days of Christ. Saul was moral and religious, in his way, but he learned a new way in the life of faith in Jesus Christ. Let us study carefully the lessons of this quarter, and we shall be most richly rewarded for our efforts.

EXPOSITORY.

1, 2. Saul was so zealous that he made himself seem like a veritable monster. This description makes us think of one who is almost a raging demon. He did not wait to be called on for this work, by the enemies of Christ, but he assumes the character of chief inquisitor and persecutor himself. He seeks from the ecclesiastical leader, the high priest, that he might be commissioned to go to Damascus, and other strange cities, in other countries, and there, among the Jewish communities, seek out any who had accepted Christ, arrest them, bind them, men or women, and bring them back to Jerusalem for condemnation and punishment. If men could only be as zealous for the service of Christ as some persecutors have been in their blind opposition to him, this might be a different world before long.

3-7. He was near the end of his long journey of one hundred and fifty miles. But he was nearer the end of his journey of sin. He was about to come into the beautiful city of Damascus. But he was nearer coming into the beautiful and happy experiences of the Christian life. All at once there came to him a great light. It was brighter than the noon-day sun. It was not lightning, nor a physical stroke of any kind. It was Jesus Christ who appeared to him from heaven. James and Peter and John saw Christ in his glory on the mount of transfiguration. Paul sees him on the way to Damascus. Infidels have tried to make out that it was a sun-stroke or something of the sort. It was not. Sun-strokes and lightning strokes do not have the effect that this appearance of Jesus had. He fell to the earth and heard a voice saying unto him: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Saul answers: "Who art thou, Lord?" He knew it was not the voice of man, but of God. The answer comes to him: "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." When Saul was persecuting Christians he was fighting Jesus, and it was a hopeless fight. It was hard, or hopeless for him to kick against the pricks, or goads, as oxen when they are being driven. Then comes from Saul his expression of submission and conversion. He submitted his will and his life to Jesus. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" We should all say this and say it through life. Then came to him the direction to go into Damascus and learn what God would have him know. The men who were with him, heard a voice, but saw no one. Jesus appeared not to them, but to Saul.

8, 9. He was led into Damascus. He was blind and was so overcome that for three days he neither saw nor ate nor drank. He was face to face with God.

10-12. The Lord had begun his good work and he was to finish it. He had a servant, a believing follower in Damascus, by the name of Ananias. Instead of being bound and persecuted by Saul, he was to be the instrument in God's hands to deliver Saul from bondage. The Lord tells him to go to the house where Saul is, and gives him assurance that Saul was ready, for "behold, he prayeth." When people are converted they become praying people. When people really pray to the Lord they are Christians. Saul had become a Christian.

17-19. Ananias goes to him. In the first place he put his hands on him in familiar and friendly greeting. He was not afraid of him, nor did he hold himself aloof. He spoke to him words of authority and kindness. He told him that he came in the name of Jesus, as his servant. He told him that he had come to restore his sight, and this was a great thing that Saul could understand and appreciate. But he was to do a still greater thing. By means of his help, as God's messenger, Saul was to receive the Holy Ghost. When one receives this great blessing he is a new creature, born again, from on high. It was all as Ananias said. Sight came to the blind eyes. Assurance of salvation came to the believing heart. Then, as all should, who accept Christ, he arose, confessed Christ and was baptized. He was a Christian man, and he began to live as a Christian. So let us all believe, confess, and serve Jesus Christ.

PATRIOTISM.

It's not in throwin' your cap in air
And shoutin' your candidate's praise.
It's not in arguin' all day long
Until you are red in the face.
It's to vote as you pray
On election day.

—That's patriotism.

It's not in swellin' a torch-light parade
And settin' off rocket and flare.
It's not in yellin' applause each time
Your candidate speaks on the square.
It's to do your best work
And not play the shirk.

—That's patriotism.

It's not in votin' the ticket straight
However its platform may read;
It's not in makin' a god of a man
Just because he's appointed to lead.
It's livin', forsooth,
At the dictates of truth.

—That's patriotism.

It's not in singin' the national air,
Or salutin' Old Glory each morn.
It's not in bombast and boastful acclaim,
And blowin' the national horn.
It's treatin' folks right,
Be they black, yellow or white.
It's barin' your heart to God's sunlight.

—That's patriotism.

AN AMERICAN'S CREED.

I believe in the United States of America, as a government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign nation of many sovereign states; a perfect union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.—William Tyler Page.

THE TRUE PATRIOT.

He loves his country, but he loves still more the kingdom of God.

He cares too much for his country to uphold her in any wrong.

He does not reserve his patriotism until he has a chance to die for his country; he lives for her.

He does not urge the selection of the best men for candidates, and then refuse to serve when called upon, though at the cost of time and money and inclination.

He does not vote for bad men, and then plead that he did not know they were bad. He takes time to investigate the character of candidates.—Selected.

He that can not forgive others breaks the bridge over which he must pass himself.

Live the life of prayer and thereby keep open the highest spiritual approaches through which the divine guidance may most surely manifest itself

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, JULY 17.

Endeavor Topic: Judging Unkindly. Matthew 7:1-5.

It is not wrong to judge as to the moral quality of acts, or of people. The Bible insists that we shall not find our associates among the wicked, and, in order that we may determine who are the wicked and the scoffers, we must pass moral judgment. The Bible teaches us also that we are not to do what is wrong or to approve what is evil, and in order to act wisely and well we must pass moral judgment.

It is evident, then, that when we are told not to "judge," we are not instructed to shut our eyes as to the right and wrong of people and of conduct, but that we are urged to avoid being harsh and censorious in our treatment of others. We can see that a man is sinful and his conduct evil, and yet we need not hate and denounce him. We may try, as Christ showed us, to save him. Kindness and good counsel will sometimes do what hatred and abuse will not. In fact, abuse and hatred and harshness are not calculated to do any good.

Christ taught us that we are to know a tree by its fruit, and he told us that when a tree brings forth evil fruit we may know it to be an evil and worthless tree. Why should he have told us this if he did not wish us to practice this sort of judgment? We must be careful to know who are good people and who are wicked people, and we must be concerned over the moral condition of the world and the life that lies all around us. We pity people who are "color-blind" and who can not distinguish green from red, say, but it is infinitely worse for any one not to be sensitive and intelligent in noticing what is right and what is wrong.

Sometimes persons become so careless that they cease to notice or to care as to right and wrong. They become blunted in their moral perceptions, or, as Paul wrote, "past feelings." It is a terrible condition. We should strive to avoid it. We should keep our hearts tender and our conscience sensitive. Then God's Spirit can guide us safely along the way of life.

It resolves itself into this, that we must judge, but that we must not be harsh and censorious. Our attitude toward others will probably be reflected by their attitude toward us. We must expect good people to consider us wicked if we do wickedly. It would be right and commendable for them to characterize our conduct as immoral if we break God's moral laws. We must expect to be judged by moral standards, as to whether we and our lives are wrong, or right. But if we know that we are trying hard, struggling earnestly, to do what is right, we are sure to feel sad and discouraged if we meet with coldness and harshness instead of sympathy and helpfulness.

It is hard, even for the strongest and best circumstanced, to live a victorious life right along, always doing the right and good thing, and feeling encouraged and spiritually uplifted. People may know how one fails, but they do not always know how hard he has tried; they may see how he falls before temptation, without always knowing how hard and prayerfully he has resisted.

Let us try hard to do our full duty and to avoid all the evil that assails us; but let us not be too greatly cast down when others condemn us when we fail. In it all let us learn to be sympathetic and patient with others, even though we never forget that right is right in God's sight, and that wrong is wrong.

PRAYER MEETING

JULY 13.

THE DUTY AND USE OF REST.
Mark 6:30-32; Luke 12:15-23.

Our bodies are not very strong, and we need to take good care of them if we get the service out of them that we should seek to secure. They need not only to be nourished by proper food and drink, protected by proper clothing and shelter, but they need rest. God has provided for this by giving us the night, each twenty-four hours, in which we find sleep and rest after the toil of the day, but he has also given us the weekly Sabbath, as a day for physical rest, and spiritual nourishment.

But over and beyond all this he gives us the privilege of an occasional vacation or time of rest. Saturday is quite generally a day of rest for school children and teachers, and a great many business houses and factories are adopting the plan of a half-day holiday on Saturday afternoon. This frequently works well, affording a time for rest and recreation and personal duties, so that the way is opened for the proper observance of the Sabbath as a day for spiritual life and service.

Then, besides, a good many persons have the opportunity for a week or two, or a few weeks of complete rest and relaxation, in a real vacation, often in the summertime, in which they may obtain a fuller freedom from care and work, and may become rested and ready for their steady work. Not every one secures this, but some do, and perhaps it would be well if all were able to enjoy it.

Thus we see that, in many different ways, the complicated machinery of our physical life has rest provided for it, so that, like material machinery, it may be cooled down and oiled and brought back to normal conditions, and fitted to bear the strain for a much longer time than if kept under incessant movement.

It is our duty to God, as well as to ourselves, to see that our bodies are taken care of properly, so that we may glorify God by means of them, in doing the good things and living the good life for which we are intended. In our eating and in our drinking and in everything else, including, of course, our rest and our recreation, we are to do all to the glory of God. We are to rest in a way to get the best good out of it, and to reveal our sense of responsibility to God. Thus with a high and religious purpose we are to live every part of our earthly life.

It is possible to have too much rest, and too many holidays. If one sleeps too much he becomes a sleepyhead in any and all of his life. If he eats too much he overworks his digestive apparatus and breaks down his health. If he eats or drinks poison, intoxicants or opiates, he ruins his life. If he has too many holidays, or too much time spent in vacation, he has his regular work too much broken into, and life fails of its truly serious purpose. This is seen in such countries as Mexico and Italy, where there are so many holidays that the serious life of the whole nation is broken up, and a fragmentary, pleasure-loving sort of life becomes the attitude of the people as a whole.

Let those who have vacation times use them and not abuse them. As Christ said to his disciples that they should go into the desert apart and rest awhile, and they went with him, let us take Christ with us whenever and wherever we go. Let us remember that it is only for "awhile," and let us prepare to get back to our work and glorify God in our busy life, rested, refreshed and recreated by means of the rest afforded us in the kind providence of God.

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

On the Fourth of July, as on no other day of the year, is the patriotism of American citizens brought to a focus. It is the most generally observed of the national holidays. Many of the practices associated with the day are far removed from the intent of those who made it a national institution. The display of flags is, of course, natural. The exploding of fireworks may have some faint suggestion of the noise of muskets and cannon. Ball games, sports of various kinds, picnics, with occasional meetings of war veterans and spread-eagle speeches—these form the usual program. What gave us the day is only a passing thought.

No disrespect toward noble ancestors is intended by the manner in which the day is spent. Had it not been for their large vision and earnest efforts, there would have been no such pleasures and privileges to enjoy, and no mood to enjoy them. The best expression of appreciation for a gift is not always in the thanks that are spoken, but in a proper use of that gift. So an unconscious tribute to the worthy men of the past may be paid by those who seem entirely forgetful of the events which the Fourth of July is meant to commemorate.—United Presbyterian.

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be fairly described as "a carbonated, flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffeine contained in each:

Black tea—1 cupful	.....	1.54 gr.
(hot)	(5 fl. oz.)
Green tea—1 glassful	.....	2.02 gr.
(cold)	(8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	.....	.61 gr.
	(prepared with 1 fl. oz. of syrup)

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity.

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

GENERAL NEWS

THE WAR IS ENDED.

After two and a half years of "technical war" and actual peace, the state of war between the United States and Germany has been ended.

The House last Thursday, by a vote of 263 to 59, passed the resolution declaring the war to be at an end, and on Friday the Senate adopted the same resolution by a vote of 38 to 19.

SEEKING TO INTRODUCE ECONOMY.

President Harding, the Cabinet and 600 officials who guide Government expenditures, met with Director Charles G. Dawes, of the new budget system, to lay what was hailed as the foundation for a new era of economy in Federal administration.

The President opened the conference with the declaration that "there is not a menace in the world today like growing public indebtedness and mounting expenditures."

He referred to the gathering as a first and extraordinary method adopted to meet emergency, and gave way to Mr. Dawes, who, in the forty-five-minute talk that followed alternately cajoled, threatened and reassured his auditors, addressed the President and admonished Cabinet members personally.

ARMY MEASURE A LAW.

President Harding has informed Congress that while he had signed the army appropriation bill with its provision for a reduction of the regular army to 150,000 men by next October 1, it might be necessary to ask for a modification of the measure later to avoid embarrassment to the Secretary of War.

The Executive declared in a special message sent to both the Senate and the House that summary dismissal from the army of men who had enlisted for a longer period than October 1, would seem to involve a repudiation of a moral obligation by the Government, which would have its effect upon the morale of the army and possibly influence enlistments in the future.

The nature of the modification which might be asked for later was not disclosed, nor did the President explain how it was proposed to meet the moral obligation to the men and, at the same time, carry out the direction of Congress to reduce the force by 70,000 men in the next three months.

PERMANENT TARIFF BILL INTRODUCED.

One half the basis upon which the Administration expects to restore normalcy in America was submitted to the public last week. The other half is expected within two months. The first is the permanent tariff bill, composed of 346 pages.

Generally speaking the rates are about the same as those in the Payne-Aldrich act.

There is, however, a general tendency toward a lowering of the rates, and two highly important innovations that reflect 1921 progressivism. It is the protection voted last November.

The bill is estimated to produce between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 a year, at least $200,000,000 more than the Democratic Underwood-Simmons tariff of 1913, which was as productive as the Payne law's higher schedules because imports were twice as great during the operation of the Democratic document.

There are four outstanding differences between the Fordney draft and the Payne tariff:

1. The Fordney tariff permits the President to enter into trade agreements with other countries by lowering American duties 20 per cent, provided that the contracting Government offers a similar reduction in its minimum rates. This is known as a "bargaining" tariff.

2. Ad valorem duties are assessed on the basis of American valuation at home instead of the value of the commodity in the country whence it is exported.

3. It places a limited embargo on all dyestuffs and coal tar products for three years, to give to such American industries opportunity to become established solidly.

4. The wool schedule is reconstructed entirely.

AIR FORCES MAKE TWO HITS WITH EIGHTY BOMBS.

The radio-controlled battle ship Iowa, representing an enemy fleet attacking the Atlantic Coast, was located in a few minutes less than two hours by army dirigibles when fifty miles off shore and ninety miles north and east of Cape Henry.

More than a score of bombing planes, manned by naval and Marine Corps personnel, rushed to the scene in response to radio messages from the blimps that "enemy" had been located, and hurled eighty dummy bombs of various sizes at the Iowa, registering two hits in the fore-castle.

The ease with which the air forces located the Iowa, knowing only that the vessel was somewhere between Cape Hatteras and Cape Henlopen, a distance of about 215 miles, was a source of surprise to most naval officers who witnessed the bombing and gratification to the army men.

Weather conditions were ideal for the test, which was postponed the day before because fog would have given the lone Iowa an advantage.

IRISH RIOTERS REFUSE TO TAKE PART IN CONFERENCE.

Premier Lloyd-George's offer to consult with the Ulster Premier, Sir James Craig, and with the leaders of the South Irish revolutionists has been spurned by the latter, who notified the Prime Minister that, "a conference in London between representatives of Southern and Northern Ireland and the British Government, owing to its limitations, is impossible of acceptance in its present form."

IT IS NOW MR. CHIEF JUSTICE TAFT.

William Howard Taft, former President of the United States, is the new Chief Justice of the United States, succeeding the late Edward Douglas White.

He was nominated on Thursday by President Harding for the highest judicial office of the nation. The Senate, as an act of courtesy to a former President, confirmed the nomination without the usual reference to a committee.

For the first time in the history of the republic, it will have been the experience of one man to have filled the offices of President and Chief Justice of the United States.

Opposition to the confirmation of Justice Taft's nomination was negligible, only three Republicans and one Democrat, all known as radicals, voting against confirmation.

More than fifty persons lost their lives during the "Fourth" holiday, according to reports received from cities throughout the country.

Seven men drowned at beaches near New York, and another ended his life in a reservoir as a result of insanity caused, it is believed, by the excursive heat.

Five persons were killed and twenty-seven injured as the result of an explosion at Whiting, Ind.

Chicago reported a death toll of twenty during the three-day period.

A ballonist plunged to death during a street performance at Springfield, Ohio.

The list of fatalities was swelled hourly by premature explosions, heat prostrations, drownings and other mishaps in many cities.

Thousands of opponents of prohibition marched in a parade in Fifth avenue July 4th to express their opposition to the eighteenth amendment and to demand the repeal of the Volstead act.

By a vote of 250 to 93, the House has passed the Willis-Campbell bill forbidding doctors to prescribe beer as a tonic in case of sickness.

The measure now goes to the Senate, where it is hoped to rush it through.

Sir Ernest Shackleton, who commanded the British Antarctic expedition in 1907-09, which reached within 97 miles of the south pole, and also the Antarctic expedition in 1914-16 will be the leader on a new voyage covering 30,000 miles of uncharted sections of the Southern Atlantic Seas. He will sail from London the end of August in a 200-ton ship, brigantine-rigged, named The Quest.

HOME AND FARM

PEACHES.

Before preparing fruit make sirup (three pounds nine ounces sugar to one gallon of water or five pounds eight ounces sugar to one gallon of water) allowing about one cup of water for each quart jar. Put in one cracked peach pit for every quart of sirup. Boil sirup for five minutes. Strained honey or other sirups can be used in place of a part of the sirup usually required.

Sort the fruit, using firm, sound, uniform peaches for canning and putting aside the soft broken ones for jam. Peeling may be done by immersing in boiling water about one minute or until skins slip easily. Remove, plunge for a minute into cold water, and slip off the skins. Cut into halves and pack at once in previously boiled jars, placing the halves in overlapping layers, the concave surface of each half being downward and the blossom end facing the glass. Fill each jar with hot sirup and paddle carefully to remove bubbles. Partially seal jars. Boil (process) quart jars in a water bath for twenty minutes and half gallons thirty-five minutes. When thoroughly cold test jars for leaks. Store in a cool, dark, dry place.

Firm, perfect peaches may be floated in boiling water for about twenty seconds after being peeled. They are then cut in halves, seeds removed and packed as indicated above. Peaches floated in this manner are made more flexible and pack to better advantage. They also become mellow, absorb more sirup and are finer in flavor.—Department of Agriculture.

Pickled Watermelon Rind.—Four pounds rind, two pounds granulated sugar, three-quarters pint cider vinegar. Prepare and cut the watermelon rind into strips about one inch wide and two inches long. Boil the vinegar and sugar for fifteen minutes, add the rind and cook until tender. Fill into hot, sterilized jars and seal at once.

Rhubarb and Raisin Pie.—Place in a mixing bowl, one and one-half cups of flour, one-half level teaspoon of salt, three level teaspoons of baking powder.

Sift to mix and then rub seven tablespoons of shortening into the flour. Then add five tablespoons of cold water to form a dough. Divide into two parts.

Roll out the lower crust and then place on the pie-plate and brush liberally with a good salad oil. Set in a cool place while rolling the top crust.

To prepare the rhubarb cut the rhubarb in inch pieces and then wash well. Place in a saucepan, cover closely and steam for ten minutes. Cool and then place the rhubarb in the prepared pie-plate and spread evenly. Now place in a small bowl, four level tablespoons of flour, two-thirds cup of sugar. Rub between the fingers to blend and then spread over the rhubarb. Then a layer of raisins—use about one-third of the package. Wet the edges of the pastry with cold water. Make four or five little gashes in the center of the top crust, lift on the pie and press the edges firmly into position. Crimp the edges of the pastry and then brush the top crust just before placing in the oven with beaten egg and two tablespoons of milk.

Bake in a slow oven for forty-five minutes. Remove the pie twice during this time and brush with the egg mixture. This is called glazing the pie. This work must be done very quickly and brushed very lightly so as not to break the top crust.

PROFIT IN DYEING.

There comes a time in the life of many a garment of colored wash material, when the color it once possessed is streaked and faded. The blue has turned a dirty oyster color, yellow is streaked tan, green is more yellow than green, lavender is either very pale or actually turned to light blue through the action of washing powders on the lavender dye.

With children's clothes the places that receive hardest wear—cuffs and collars especially—also show discoloration and dirt in spite of careful washing. This is why some persons prefer pure white for children's clothes. They never discolor and they may be boiled freely, because of their lack of color, so as to keep them snowy and spotless.

But don't forget that faded and grimy clothes may be dyed so as to give the garments a new lease on life. The color selected should be darker than the color of the old material, but this does not mean that it need be dull. It sometimes happens that a child's frock or suit has both become faded and is too small. Now, although there may be none of the original material with which to let it down, it is quite possible to dye a little plain material with the faded garment with which to mend it.

It is quite easy for the amateur to get interesting effects from the process known as tying and dyeing. To do this you tie a knot in the material before you put it in the dye vat so that the dye takes on an interesting design, leaving the part of the material within the knot free from the dye. Silk dyed in this way makes interesting cushion tops or lamp shade covers, especially for the summer cottage or bungalow where you wish to gain interesting effects at small cost.

DON'T SAY "STOP THAT!" WITHOUT SAYING, "YOU MAY DO THIS."

The grandmother who had brought up seven children to vigorous, happy and well-poised maturity dropped in to see her young daughter-in-law. She was greeted by the sounds of sobs and howls from behind the closed door. The young mother explained, her face set hard, "Elsie has been naughty. She is being punished."

The grandmother sank into a chair, praying for wisdom. "I never punished one of mine in any such way in all my life," she advanced mildly, "and they never disobeyed me, either."

"Why, Mother Burton!" cried the young mother incredulously. "That's just impossible. What did you do when they didn't mind, when they acted as Elsie did just now? She was so naughty. You see that lovely set of Stevenson? I told her three separate times not to touch it, but she persisted in handling the backs of the books with her sticky little fingers."

"Well," said the grandmother, "Let's consider this case. I always tried to put myself in the children's place and tried to imagine why it was they wanted to do what seemed naughty, what there was in it that attracted them. Let's look at that Stevenson set. Yes, isn't it a beauty, all red leather and gold lettering? Why I believe it's the bright coloring that fascinated Elsie. There's nothing wicked in liking pretty bright things. She'd be a little dunce if she didn't. Why, if that had happened to me, I believe I'd have tried giving her something bright and shiny that she could play with."

"No, you don't understand Elsie," said the young mother, "that wouldn't work with her. It's stubbornness. You ought to have seen how angry she looked."

"Well, perhaps you got her 'mad' up," suggested grandmother, gently.

The young mother gave a skeptical, impatient gesture, "You can try it, and see for yourself."

The grandmother went quickly into the kitchen while the mother was unlocking the closet door, and by the time the sobbing, excited child had come out, she was back with an eggbeater and a bowl of soapy water.

Elsie looked blackly at her mother and marched straight toward the forbidden books. "You see," breathed the mother triumphantly.

"Elsie," called the grandmother brightly, "just see here what I've got. Mother says we may play with it, you and I. See, when you whirl the eggbeater around, how it makes the water all froth up. It's as good as beating eggs. Come over and try it."

The eggbeater's shiny blades shone clearly as they whisked about through the glistening, foaming suds. Elsie was too little to contain more than one idea at a time especially when one of the ideas was

$15 A WEEK TO SUPPORT FAMILY AND SEND BOY TO BLACKBURN

"I am a widow, with three children; a lad of sixteen, a girl a year younger—an infantile paralysis victim—and a little girl of eight. We have an income of $15 a week and I am able to do some writing to help out. If I can regain my full strength, I can, I am sure, write for religious publications, as I now do for an agricultural paper.

My boy must have agricultural work and training. He is a fine lad, despises profanity and smoking, and all things that so many young lads think smart."

This is one of the touching appeals that keep coming up to Blackburn College. Many more could be helped if more friends shared in this great work. I should like to tell you more about it. Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

such a beautiful one. She ran to the bowl and began to try to turn the beater.

At first Grannie had to hold the bowl steady, but in a moment the deft little fingers caught the trick, and whisk! how the suds foamed up! She beamed as she beat, absorbed, radiant, the little eyes blurred with tears brightening, the little, sullen angry face softening to a smile. "It's lovely," she pronounced solemnly.

Grannie and Mother began to talk about the weather and a new recipe for cookies! The crisis was past.

When Grannie stood up to go, half an hour later, she remarked casually to Elsie, "Oh, say, dear, Mother just loves those pretty red and gold books down there. And we are afraid that if you touch them you'll get them dirty. You'll try to remember about that, won't you? You wouldn't like mother to spoil your things."

Elsie's small mind had gone a long distance since that episode of the books. To her it seemed as though a long time had passed. And she certainly cared nothing about them, now. She nodded, peacefully, her eyes on the shining water. "Oh, I don't care anything about the books" she said when I've got this."—Ex.

THE BEST INSURANCE

"We insure our houses and factories, our automobiles, and our business through mutual and stock insurance companies, but the same amount of money invested in Christian education would give far greater results. Besides, Christian education can insure what no corporation can insure—namely, prosperity.

As the great life insurance companies are spending huge sums on doctors, scientific investigations, and district nurses to improve the health of the nation, so we business men should spend huge sums to develop those fundamental religious qualities of integrity, industry, faith, and service, which make for true prosperity. I repeat, the need of the hour is— not more factories or materials, not more railroads or steamships, not more armies or navies—but rather more Christian education. This is not the time to reduce investments in schools and colleges at home, or in Y. M. C. A. and similar work in China, Japan, Russia or South America. This is the time of all times to increase such subscriptions."

EDITORIALS

RAIN AND REVIVAL.

Rain is a great physical blessing, and a great necessity. If the seed is to germinate and grow into the ripened harvest, there must be rain to soften the ground and to refresh and invigorate the growing vegetation. Without it there is drought and famine. We watch anxiously for the rain in season, knowing that if it does not come, the earth can not produce the food that is needed by the whole animal creation.

We read of many famines that occurred in Bible times, and of the great suffering and anxiety that were brought to the people at various times by the distressing condition. While we do not have the same trouble to the same degree in our highly favored country, we know, in limited areas, what it is to suffer from shortened production on account of a long-continued lack of rain. China has been suffering from a famine, which has been one of the most terrible visitations in the history of our race, and it is barely emerging from it. The summer through which we are passing is one that is very depressing to many of the regions of our country, from the fact that there has been very little rain, and the growing crops on which people depend for food are sure to be greatly diminished or entirely cut off.

In view of all this we can appreciate the many references in the Bible to rain as an illustration of the spiritual favor and grace of God. This world would be a desert place, producing only the poorest and scantiest intimations of spirituality, were it not for the rich and abundant visitations of the Spirit of God, bringing vitality and refreshment and salvation to the hearts of men. The early rain that causes the seeds to sprout and grow is needed, and the latter rains are needed that sustain and mature the growing vegetation. So there is needed the early spiritual rain that causes one to come into the beginnings of Christian life, and the latter and frequent spiritual revivals that cause Christian life to be strong and fruitful.

We often pray for revival. It is well that we should. The power and grace of God's Spirit is the need of every Christian and of the United Church. When Christian people are listless in the service of Jesus Christ; when they are weak and limp and inefficient; when they allow little things and poor excuses to keep them away from the house of God and the place of secret prayer; when the Bible is not read regularly and with joy; when there is no heart-longing for the salvation of souls, and when the life slips readily into the ways of worldliness, there is great need for revival. Nothing but God's Spirit can restore the soul to the joy and the effectiveness of Christian life and service.

We have sometimes watched the clouds gather in the sky from which they have been long absent, and have heard the low rumble of the thunder that has promised the coming of the rain. As the drops have come down to refresh and gladden the weary and parched earth, we have welcomed the rain as the good gift of God in his loving providence. And so have we welcomed the reviving power of God's Holy Spirit as he has made himself known in the hearts of his people, and the Church has been filled with new life and sinners have been converted. Even so may God's Holy Spirit come in abundant power into our hearts and homes and churches today and fill us all with joy.

FUNDAMENTALS.

The action of the Northern Baptist Convention in session last month in Des Moines and that of the Pre-Convention Conference are an answer to rationalistic writers who have assumed that the line between liberals and conservatives is really between rationalists and premillennialists.

These writers began by charging that the Bible Union of China, which protested against the sending of rationalistic men as missionaries, was made up of premillennialists, and made the premillennial doctrine a fundamental. The statement of doctrine published by the Union at its organization, which simply affirmed evangelical doctrines without any assertion of premillennialism, took the wind out of these charges.

Then we heard that the Baptists would make premillennialism a fundamental, and there was much speculation as to what the convention at Des Moines would do. It was known that many conservative Baptist leaders were premillennialists and that many others were postmillennialists, while others simply believed in the coming of Christ according to promise, and in his statement that no man knoweth the time but that we are to be ready for him when he comes.

The conference met and the result is a confession of faith which affirms the doctrines affirmed by all evangelical churches. It is no more premillennial or postmillennial than our Presbyterian Confession of Faith or our Catechism or the Apostles' Creed.

It is good reading for Christians of every name. Indeed, excepting certain sections relating to church government and ordinances in which Baptists differ from other denominations, it will be approved by all evangelicals. We quote:

1. We believe that the Bible is God's Word, that it was written by men divinely inspired, and that it has supreme authority in all matters of faith and conduct.

2. We believe in God the Father, perfect in holiness, infinite in wisdom, measureless in power. We rejoice that he concerns himself mercifully in the affairs of men, that he hears and answers prayer, and that he saves from sin and death all who come to him through Jesus Christ.

3. We believe in Jesus Christ, God's only begotten Son, miraculous in his birth, sinless in his life, making atonement for the sins of the world by his death. We believe in his bodily resurrection, his ascension into heaven, his perpetual intercession for his people and his personal visible return to the world according to his promise.

4. We believe in the Holy Spirit who came forth from God to convince the world of sin, of righteousness and of judgment, and to regenerate, sanctify and comfort those who believe in Jesus Christ.

5. We believe that all men by nature and by choice are sinners, but that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life;" we believe therefore that those who accept Christ as Savior and Lord will rejoice forever in God's presence, and those who refuse to accept Christ as Savior and Lord will be forever separated from God.

Several papers assert that it takes advanced ground in its theory of biblical inspiration and in its dogma of "the visible return of our Lord." This is not true. The "visible return," without specifying the time, is no more advanced on the premillennial than the statement of our confession that he "arose with the same body with which he suffered," and "shall return to judge men."

"TRIUMPHANT BRUTALITY."

The shameful prize-fight that recently disgraced New Jersey and, with it, the whole country, has had a tremendous materializing and brutalizing effect upon the unbalanced and immature element of the population. Immense areas in the newspapers have been given up to discussion and reports as to the participants and their training and measurements and achievements and appearance, and to nauseating reports of the fight.

Of course it was a crime against the State law, and against all that was right and good, but such considerations were swept away by a crowd of persons who were thirsty to see blood, and by officials who did not want to oppose a multitude set on doing evil. Our Reform League tried to prevent and arrest the proceedings, but it was like whistling against a simoom, or reading the riot act to a tiger. And now the pugilist element want to make this a permanent institution in New Jersey for the glorifying of brutality.

New Jersey has been peculiarly unfortunate in recent years, in its position as to prohibition and prize-fights, under the lead of a low-toned governor and a bare majority of evilminded legislators. It would be vastly to the credit of the good people of the state if they could change the conditions and be able to make the State stand on the moral side of things.

It has become possible for a Spanish critic to sit in just judgment on this disgraceful exhibition and tell America how far down it has permitted itself to sink in the scale of morality. The President of the Spanish Academy of Madrid, Jose Ortega Munrilla, says:

"The victory of Dempsey over Carpenter constitutes the culmination of triumphant brutality. The second of July, 1921, will be famous in the annals of barbarity. Two men sell their health and dignity to a curious multitude which pays them to destroy themselves with punches. They do not fight because they hate. Salaried combatants represent the most infamous prostitution; those who speculate thereon represent the vilest lucre, while those attending represent the stupidest cruelties."

The words are none too strong. The combatants, speculators, attendants and newspaper correspondents and publishers have done their best to set up a brutal standard. The winner has been glowingly described as the "greatest man in the world." We are reminded of the words in Ben Hur, where, in description of Roman standards of life, in the times of its lowest moral decadence, General Wallace makes one of his characters say that "To be a Roman is to be a brute." This is the standard sought to be set up in Christian America by the men and women who attended that prize-fight.

May God help those in the name of Christ and his Gospel who are urging the young people of this land and of the world to think on the things that are true and honest, just and pure, lovely and of good report, and to estimate the true Christian gentleman as "the greatest man in the world."

MIGRATORY FAITH.

Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick's sermon on Progressive Christianity, with its condemnation of static believers who hold to the old fundamental doctrines, and its plea for a migratory faith, is receiving considerable attention in the religious papers. Most of them hold that stable theology is better than one which is not sure of anything. Some resent the suggestion that those who hold fast to the orthodox faith simply cling to childish things, etc.

The Lutheran says: "We confess to a sense of weariness for being told ever and anon by such migratory theologians as Dr. Fosdick that because we hold definite and vital beliefs taught in the Scriptures, we are 'statics,' and that because we believe in the things Jesus held to be of prime importance, no field is left open to us for the enlargement of our faith."

It also expresses its distrust of men who "have not courage to tell us what articles of common faith believed from Apostolic times to this day should be discarded, and never yet have told us definitely what they themselves believe."

Of course we can not expect one who pleads for a migratory faith as better than a static faith, to really declare what his faith is. If nothing is settled and his faith today may be all gone to-morrow, he finds it safer not to go on record.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS AND UNION.

The Presbyterian Standard suggests that editors are not infallible, but that when they make mistakes they can correct them. It says: "Our Standards confess that Assemblies and Synods do err. To which may be added this postscript, And church papers also." It thereupon modifies its statements as to the action of the Southern Assembly on the question of union with our Assembly, and particularly its endorsement of the changed personnel of the Committee on Comity with the Northern Church, on the ground, as expressed by the Moderator, that a new committee "could resume negotiations without prejudice."

It says: "That sounds fair and honest, but suppose this new committee resumes negotiation, without prejudice it may be, but without knowledge also, while the committee on the other side has all the knowledge and a prejudice, intensified by the fact that they lost in the first round a few years ago."

It explains that the editor was under great pressure and wrote hastily. It says: "The temptation was to judge from the face of the matter, forgetting that in the Assembly there are wheels within wheels, with the most innocent looking men pulling the ropes unseen, or else using some young man who, flattered by the attention of older men, is willing to pull their chestnuts out of the fire."

Having quoted the Standard's which is an indication of Southern Presbyterian sentiment, it is necessary also to quote its present expression, which is less favorable to union.

OPPOSITION TO GOOD LAWS.

It is in the large cities, generally, that we find the difficulties in connection with the making and enforcing of good laws for moral purity, for prohibition and for the observance of the Sabbath. Loose and worldly elements congregate there, and encourage one another in lives that are stubbornly set against any sort of restriction. What is called "liberalism" and "personal liberty" heads up in the foreign elements and the criminal classes in the cities. The city of Cincinnati, for instance, succeeded, for several years, in thwarting the whole state of Ohio in its attempts to place prohibition in its constitution.

It is in these large cities that the enforcement of law is defied. Here is raised the cry that "prohibition is unpopular," that "nobody wants it," that "a minority has forced prohibition on the great majority." Of course the cry is a falsehood. An immense majority in the state of Ohio has at last secured a prohibitory constitutional amendment, and has passed the enforcement law. This is true in the nation at large, also, where forty-five states with a hundred million inhabitants voted for national constitutional prohibition, while only three states with three million inhabitants voted against it.

But it is true for these groups, neighborhoods, communities, or wards, in these cities that "nobody wants such restrictive laws." What then? Are these settlements to be a law unto themselves? Is Bolshevism to rule in this country? No! This is a republic. The majority rules. If these anarchistic groups think to rebel against the laws of the land, because they can gather into settlements of discontent, and if they think they can be a law to themselves, the sooner they come to know the truth the better. No nation can run or live on that principle. The law of majority rule in our republic must be upheld. If people do not conform to it they are traitors and must be dealt with. If they do not like it they should go to Russia, and find the evil results of their system. Law and order must be enforced here, and they will be enforced. Let obstructive elements get out of the way, or let them learn the principles of good citizenship, and live as good citizens in this good land.

"CLAIM EVERYTHING."

The liquor malcontent minority, beaten in every election almost, all over the country, for the continuance of the crime-producing and disease-breeding saloon, are now trying the "claim-everything" method to make an impression where the facts and figures are all against them. On the Fourth of July they held a parade in New York City, and forthwith telegraphed to the U. S. Senator from New York that the hundred thousand men in the procession would back him up in his attempts to repeal the prohibition amendment and the Volstead law. The dispatches, published in the daily papers, state that there were exactly 14,922 in the parade, counting 944 musicians and policemen. We are reminded of the nine tailors who published their proclamation headed "We, the people of England." This "wee wet" crowd may make many claims, but the wise thing for them is to cool off and dry up and obey the laws.

Rev. E. S. Pollock, President of the European Christian Endeavor, said in the International Convention in New York, last week, what is well attested: "There is no starvation in Ireland. There are no starving poor in Ireland. The savings banks were never so flush as they are today, and wages were never so high, not only in the north, but in the south and west." In view of the campaign, by the rebellion propagandists, to raise money for Ireland, this is interesting and instructive.

It is urged by Dr. Robert E. Speer that any money collected for China famine relief, and not yet forwarded, be sent at once to the Foreign Mission Boards, that it may be sent to the foreign missionaries, to use in such individual cases as are pressingly in want. It is a wise direction.

It would be well for every one to read the obituary of Mr. and Mrs. McKinney in this paper, whether personal acquaintances or not. All Christian people should train their children to attend the Sabbath church services and weekly prayer meeting, as well as the Sabbath school. There would be no danger of the Church losing its strength and membership if they would do so. The habit of church attendance needs to be taught as one of the prime essentials in Christian service.

The great procession of Christian Endeavorers in New York City last Saturday was a most impressive object lesson in loyalty to Christ and his Church. Gathered from every state in the Union, and from many foreign lands, they were representative of the best and most promising elements in the world.

A recent discussion of social questions by the "Information Service" of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, begins as follows: "When there are so many unchristian aspects of our present industrial order, we must guard against a too rigid orthodoxy in defending the status quo." We suggest that it might have added a warning against too liberal radicalism. Orthodoxy is correct teaching, or right doctrine. The council might just as well warn its treasurer and statisticians against too rigid honesty in keeping their accounts.

Bishop Kinsolving, of the Episcopal Church, is alarmed over the present age tendency to extravagance and centralization of power. He says: "The church has gone wild on the subject of centralization and appropriation. The campaign launched in the Episcopal Church to raise $14,000,000 a year for three years was thrust upon many Episcopal clergymen who did not favor it." Another Episcopal leader says: "There are many of them, honest, earnest, plodding parish priests, who are harassed and hindered—they are not helped—by this top-heavy contraption that is raised above their ministry."

Religious life finds scope and activity even in warm weather and vacation time. There are sins to be resisted and there are graces to be cultivated. But there is a promise for each passing day.

HYMN OF DEDICATION.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

Our Father, God, on thee we wait,
In songs of joy our voices raise;
With thankful hearts we dedicate
This earthly temple to thy praise.

Here may the children learn of thee;
The hungry feed on bread divine;
The tempted find new strength, and see
The light of heaven upon them shine.

Here may the cross, uplifted, meet
The sinner's gaze, in tender love;
Thy children, in communion sweet,
Find foretaste of the bliss above.

Make us more Christ-like; may we learn
The joy of lives all given to thee;
Meet with us while our hearts all burn
To spread thy truth from sea to sea.
Detroit, Mich.

GREAT BIBLE CHAPTERS.

(NOAH, REST, SALVATION.)

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

In his "Beginnings of History" the French writer, Lenormant, says:

"The account of the deluge is an universal tradition in all branches of the human family, with the sole exception of the black race. And a tradition everywhere so exact and so concordant can not possibly be referred to an imaginary myth. No religions of cosmogonic myth possess this character of universality. It must therefore be the reminiscence of an actual and terrible event which made so powerful an impression upon the imaginations of the first parents of our species that their descendants could never forget it. This cataclysm took place near the primitive cradle of mankind, and previous to the separation of the families from whom the principal races were to descend."

But in the awful flood "God remembered Noah." (Gen. 8:1.) In the storms of life God remembers every soul that trusts him. "I know their sorrows," said Jehovah to Moses concerning the terrible bondage of the Israelites. (Ex. 3:7.)

"For a small moment have I forsaken thee but with great mercies will I gather thee. In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment: but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer."

What a strong faith was needed by the occupants of the ark! But the faith which enabled Noah to obey his God in the building of the ark, and in meeting the criticisms of the on-lookers would sustain him in any emergency.

"Tis by the faith of joys to come,
We walk through deserts dark as night;
Till we arrive at heaven our home,
Faith is our guide and faith our light."

And listen, dear friend, to this further assuring Word of the everlasting God who can not lie:

"For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth, so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee. For the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy upon thee." (Isa. 54:7-10.)

Now a beautiful thing took place. After the ark had rested on solid ground once more and the earth was dry, and Noah and his family and his sons' families had vacated the ark and all the animals had gone forth also,

"Noah builded an altar unto the Lord; and took of every clean beast and of every clean fowl and offered burnt offerings on the altar."

That was a becoming act of gratitude to God, who had spared precious lives from destruction. Why is not such an act of gratitude and worship every day fitting from every soul?

"My God, how endless is thy love!

Thy gifts are every evening new;
And morning mercies from above,
Gently distil like early dew.

"Thou spreadst the curtains of the night,
Great guardian of my sleeping hours;
Thy sovereign word restores the light
And quickens all my drowsy powers.

"I yield my powers to thy command;

To thee I consecrate my days;
Perpetual blessings from thy hand
Demand perpetual songs of praise."

May the day speedily come when every household will imitate Noah's beautiful act!

"There is something in the atmosphere of a prayer-consecrated household," says Dr. Marvin R. Vincent, "incapable of analysis or definition, but as clearly appreciable as a change of temperature. We have been in homes where the incense of that morning sacrifice seemed to diffuse itself through the entire day, and where the odor of countless offerings seemed to linger in every chamber, and to have been breathed into every department of household duty. We have knelt at family altars where it seemed as if God had come down to witness the setting up of the stone in the night's resting place, where he so filled the place with his presence that every heart realized it to be the house of God and the gate of heaven; and where every successive morning and evening witnessed a fresh crowning of him who led the devotions as a prince in prayer." ("The Family Altar.")

The ark is the type of Christ. He is our salvation from the deluge of sin and sorrow which threatens to overwhelm and destroy the souls of men. He is our eternal refuge from the shafts of Satan.

There is a touching story of a woman, the wife of a sailor, who, one lovely August day, climbed to the top of a mountain near her home to get a glimpse of the distant sea. Her husband had been a long time absent from home, and the lonely wife often used to go up to the mountain top to try if she could see any ship coming to port.

On that morning as she was sitting watching for some sail to appear on the distant horizon, suddenly a storm arose and there was no place for her to find shelter until she had descended into the valley. Her baby was with her and she sought to protect him from the fury of the blast by removing some of her outer garments and wrapping them around her child. She thus hid the little fellow so comfortably that he fell fast asleep and was not hurt or frightened in the least. But the devoted mother was exposed to the violence of the storm. Sometimes she would lie down and let it pass over her, then would rise up and go on, praying for strength to bring the baby home safely. That prayer was answered and the woman's life was also spared, although for six weeks afterward she suffered from a terrible fever. Two weeks after her recovery from the fever, her husband returned home and her cup of joy was full.

"For the joy set before him Jesus endured the cross, despising the shame." He exposed himself to the relentless storm of the Divine Justice in our behalf. "A man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest." (Isa. 32:2.)

Dear reader, have you found a hiding place under the shadow of the cross? Whosoever will may come!

"Jesus, lover of my soul,

Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the nearer waters roll,
While the tempest still is high,
Hide me, O, my Savior, hide,
Till the storm of life is past,
Safe into the haven guide,
Oh, receive my soul at last."

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

On the evening of June 30th a reception was tendered the newly-installed pastor of the Swissvale Church, Rev. W. O. Yates, and a large gathering enjoyed the greetings, addresses and refreshments.

At its last communion service the East Liberty Church received twelve on profession and seventeen by certificate. Its membership is now 1,290.

The Shady Side Church has arranged for pulpit supplies until Sept. 1st: Rev. A. J. MacCartney, D.D., Rev. M. M. McPhail, D.D., Rev. J. F. Patterson, D.D., Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, D.D., Rev. W. O. Thompson, D.D., and Prof. S. F. Vance, D.D.

The various evangelical churches in the East End, excepting East Liberty, unite as formerly in an open-air service at the corner of Walnut Street and Shady Avenue, for the summer evenings.

The churches in Wilkesburg also pursue the same course as in recent years, and hold an open-air service each Sabbath evening. President J. Ross Stevenson, D.D., of Princeton Seminary, will preach Aug. 14th.

The First Church, Rochester, Pa., has called W. A. Atkinson, D.D., of Amherst, Mass.

The Oakland Church, Rev. George L. Glunt, pastor, received on June 26th twenty-one on profession and seven by letter.

The Fourth Church, Rev. Leon Stewart, pastor, received on June 26th eighteen new members.

The pastor of the Sixth Church, Rev. B. F. Farber, at the last Commencement of Washington and Jefferson College, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. This is one of the cases where the appropriateness is manifest and the fitness of things recognized. It is regrettable that this is not always perceived by Boards of Trustees. When a New York university this summer bestowed the degree of Doctor of Letters on a lady of no pretension to literary merit, a modest lady of quiet life, whose publicity arises from her husband's great wealth, one is tempted to ask, "Can these things be and overcome us like a summer cloud without our special wonder?" Perhaps these trustees were moved by the aristocratic frenzy of Lord Melbourne, Queen Victoria's first Prime Minister, who used to remark with a special emphasis that what he liked about the Order of the Garter was that it was never bestowed for merit.

Some of our institutions in this region have been disappointed by the recent decision of our State Supreme Court ruling against the legality of all appropriations to institutions more or less sectarian. This operates against two or three hospitals, an R. C. college and others, which claim that, while their governing boards are responsible to their churches, the recipients of their care and attention are indiscriminately aided—and without proselytism. It will lessen the resources of church hospitals. Nevertheless it is a wise decision. The separation of Church and State is essential to our national life, and we Protestants should be steadfast in our opposition to all such state aid. In New York City, Romanism has beguiled much financial aid from municipal authorities. Maryland, to which the Romanist at times likes to refer as a colony with a Roman Catholic Governor which first adopted a non-sectarian policy, forgetful of the fact that the Council was Protestant, and the grant from a Protestant king, is most stringent in its prohibition of all such assistance. It guards against ecclesiastical finance by prohibiting a clergyman from purchasing a piece of property in any way connected with the church, except by special act of the Legislature. Forcible as is the argument that when a hospital treats the public without regard to creed, or attempt to proselyte, it should be assisted by the state, it is best not to possibly open the door to religious bodies to draw from the public treasury. "Resist beginnings" is an old but wise maxim.

Our Jewish advocates of the Zionist movement find foes of their own household. The late Ambassador to Turkey, Henry Morgenthau, regards this movement as unwise, unnecessary, and hostile to the future of the Jew. The Jew, he says, has no need of Palestine as a national center. He should be identified with the nation where he lives, and all this expenditure of money to restore Palestine is contrary to the mission and happiness of the Jew.

In the last Harper's Magazine, Mr. E. C. Martin discusses the question of popular indifference to preaching, and suggests that it is explained by a lack of positive conviction and sincere assertion. He quotes the remark of "the ablest agnostic of the time, that if he believed that Jesus Christ had died and risen from the dead for the salvation of men, he should never cease to talk of the fact, never fail to declare it everywhere." "The ablest agnostic" is right in his estimate of that great doctrine of Christ and him crucified, that tremendous act of atonement which enables God to be just and yet justify the ungodly.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

The World's Christian Endeavor Convention has come and gone, and a real impression has been made upon New York City. The New York papers gave good reports in the news columns and spoke well of the Christian Endeavor movement in their editorials. There were fully 20,000 in attendance, 5,000 more than could get into the Armory at one time. Dr. Dan Poling, who may be called the vice-commander of the hosts, was kept away by an automobile accident in New England just a few days before the convention. Dr. Clark was at the front with old-time vigor and enthusiasm. He has been heartily contratulated upon his great success, one editorial saying that he would have been a captain of industry had he not chosen to organize the youth of the land for Christ and the Church. The greatest good of the convention in all probability, was the parade on Saturday afternoon, July 9th. Up Fifth Avenue they came, 15,000 strong, singing the songs so dear to the hearts of Christian Endeavorers. The procession was led by mounted police, with the famous police band playing. Dr. and Mrs. Clark, with William Jennings Bryan rode in front, and then the state delegations followed, every State in the Union, and indeed almost every country on the globe, being represented. The pageant illustrating Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress, was well presented and must have been very informing to the thousands crowding the curbs, many of them Jews or foreigners of some kind. When Mr. Bryan passed, we heard a young man say, "There goes Pussy Foot Bryan." Another informed your correspondent that this was the Prohibition procession of those who have ruined America by taking away the drink. How densely ignorant and dull the multitude of "boozers" are! Why, in the procession of the "Wets," Saturday a week, four men with the map of Southern Europe on their faces, carried a banner inscribed, "Our Forefathers Whom Made the Constitution of the United States, They Were Not Prohibitionists." That procession was a fizzle in every respect. Just before the Christian Endeavor parade Saturday, the Boy Scouts, many hundreds in number, marched down Fifth Avenue on their way to camp joys. Sabbath most of the churches in New York and Brooklyn were supplied by visitors to the convention. Mr. Bryan had a large crowd to hear him speak on "Evolution."

We ask Christian people generally to continue to remember in their prayers the wounded and gassed soldiers of the late war who are confined in the public health hospitals throughout the land. There are many others who are shell shocked and who cannot regain their equilibrium. To encourage and help all who are suffering the effects of the war is the particular business of the chaplains, Presbyterian and otherwise, and your correspondent, who is chaplain at the Fox Hills Hospital, Staten Island, where there are at present 900 patients and more coming in daily, asks the readers of the Herald and Presbyter to pray that he may be given wisdom and strength to do all that possibly can be done for the physical and spiritual comfort of these boys. Remember the nurses and doctors also, many of whom are too modest to call attention to the fact that they have suffered hardship and wounds "Over There." The other day, upon inquiry from another than herself, we learned that a nurse, faithfully serving the tuberculosis patients, was limping because of a bad shrapnel wound, the ill effects of which sorely troubled her at times. She "carries on" uncomplainingly.

COLUMBUS LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM ANDREW FERRINS, D.D.

Dr. John Kelman has anticipated as he has interpreted our vacation period in the following statement: "Much has been heard of late of the healing qualities of the open air, and medical science has entered into a new alliance with nature. Discarding, or at least laying smaller stress on the more complicated methods of the past, the secret of the new surgery is cleanness, that of the new medicine fresh air. . . . Why should we not go one step farther and institute an open-air treatment for souls?" Many of the Columbus ministers are about to seek an escape from the overcrowded city life, and in the open-air treatment hope to obtain "the healing qualities," which will bring them back to their work in a "strength from the hills." The following are places to which the Columbus ministers go for rest and recuperation this summer:

Rev. C. E. Lamale, of the Crestview Church, will spend the first part of his vacation at the Auburn Seminary School of Theology, and the closing part in Grand Rapids, Mich. This church recently made a survey of the locality in which the church is situated, and made some very interesting and helpful disclosures.

The pastor of the Hoge Memorial Church, Rev. R. E. Shields, will spend his rest period in Columbus. He may, at the close of the month, make a brief visit to relatives in Indiana.

Rev. W. M. Hindman, D.D., pastor of the Northminster Church, will take a trip West, visiting the states of Colorado and Idaho. His church will be supplied, during his absence, by different noted preachers.

The minister of the Central Church, Rev. J. T. Britan, D.D., will spend a portion of his vacation with his mother in Hanover, Ind., and the rest of the time he will be at Mrs. Britan's home in Ancola, Ill. The doctor will, no doubt, run in on the Winona Assembly, Winona Lake.

Rev. R. E. Pugh, D.D., the superintendent of the Synodical Home Missions, will spend the earlier part of his rest period, which he deserves, in May View, Mich., and the closing part will be at the Wooster Bible School, where he is on the program.

Dr. Moses Breeze, the secretary of the Men's Forward Movement, will remain in Columbus during the whole of his vacation. He will leave the city a few times to fill engagements. He is a busy man and will remain so through the summer.

Rev. C. W. Maus, pastor of Calvary Church, will spend the greater part of the summer taking care of the Daily Vacation Bible School, which he is conducting in his church. This will mean strenuous work, but it will bring large results to the Presbyterian enterprise in that section of the city.

The pastors of the Oakland Park and St. Clair Avenue churches, Rev. F. Kirker and Rev. R. E. Offield, will take a camping trip through the East. We are not certain that this may not be a "search and seizure" trip, as both gentlemen are yet unmarried.

The minister of the Indianola Church, Rev. A. W. Blackwood, D.D., has not definitely decided, though he may spend the greater portion of his rest in the Northwest of this great country. The doctor is one of the teachers in the Summer School for Rural Pastors at the Ohio State University, and his topic will be "The Teachings of Jesus."

Rev. W. M. Jennings, D.D., pastor of Nelson Memorial Church, will spend the first part of his rest at the Wooster Bible School. The rest of the time he and his family will be in Indiana.

The University pastor, Rev. William Houston, D.D., is kept busy with the School at the Ohio State University, but he will leave the city for a brief time to fill engagements in Cleveland and elsewhere.

Rev. S. S. Palmer, D.D., pastor of the Broad Street Church, has been so very busy with the moderatorship, that he has not had the time to decide positively, though he will be out of the city a part of his rest period.

The associate pastor of the Broad Street Church, Rev. Eugene W. Pocock, will spend a part of his time at the Young People's Conference in Wooster; the rest of the time he will be with his father, Dr. Pocock, pastor of the church in Wayne, Ohio.

Rev. B. F. Brundage, D.D., pastor of the First Church, will spend the major portion of his rest out in the country; the latter part he will spend with Mrs. Brundage, who will be at her home in Tipton, Ind. The doctor hopes to get himself in shape for a very strenuous service in the fall and winter.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Rev. John Timothy Stone, D.D., pastor of the Fourth Church, engaged in an extended program during the month of June. Besides doing much in his own church, he gave the Memorial Day address on the Winnetka Green; delivered the Baccalaureate sermon for the Armour Institute; at Miss Spaid's School for Girls; for Wheaton College, Arlington Heights and Palatine Heights High Schools. He gave addresses at student conferences at Estes Park, Col., and at Lake Geneva. On June 14th he attended the meeting of the trustees of Wooster College, of which he is president. On the 20th he attended and took part in the one hundredth anniversary of Amherst, his Alma Mater. On June 19th he occupied the pulpit of the Fifth Avenue Church of New York City. Dr. Ezra Allen Van Nuys, D.D., the associate pastor, will have the pulpit services most of the time during Dr. Stone's vacation.

The trustees of the Fourth Church have sold their beautiful summer camp, with all of its fine equipment at Lake Geneva, Wis. to the Y. M. C. A., whose extensive grounds adjoins the Fourth Church camp. When the Church Extension Board took over beautiful Camp Gray at Saugatuck, Mich., with its more than 400 acres, it was found that the boys and girls and mothers and others of the Fourth Church could use the Camp Gray accommodations, and so the usual outing of the Fourth Church will be held there and the disposal of the Lake Geneva Camp is not considered a backward step, but rather an economical one.

Rev. R. Keene Ryan has just closed the twenty-first year of his pastorate with the Garfield Boulevard Church. Dr. Willis Green Craig, Dr. Edward H. Custis, and Rev. James Frothingham, a committee of presbytery, organized the Garfield Boulevard Church and installed the newly-ordained graduate of McCormick Seminary. This is the only pastorate which Mr. Ryan has had and he is the only pastor the church has had. In the twenty-one years of this pastorate the pastor has conducted eighty-five communion services and has been personally present at every one. He has one elder, Dr. J. L. Hall, who was present at the first communion. He has officiated at 3,000 weddings and as many funerals. He is pastor of the whole community. Some day Garfield Boulevard will have a worthy church home.

Chicago Presbytery will meet Monday Aug. 1st, in the chapel of the Fourth Church.

The Committee on Christian Stewardship, together with Dr. A. F. McGarran, has already formulated its program of action for the fall months authorized by presbytery, to begin with September.

NEW MISSIONARIES.

The dangers and privations, rewards and joys of mission life were discussed by furloughed Presbyterian missionaries and secretaries of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions before 111 newly appointed missionaries at board headquarters, New York City. Chosen (Korea): Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Lucas, Ossining, N. Y.; Dr. M. A. Thompson, Ottawa, Can.

Chile: Miss Elizabeth Schaaf, Washington, D. C.

Persia: Irene W. Vanneman, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; Miss Jane Doolittle, Yonkers, N. Y.

Syria: Miss Edith M. Hazlett, Redondo Beach, Cal.

CLEVELAND LETTER.

BY REV. GEORGE A. MACKINTOSH, D.D.

The First Church of East Cleveland, Rev. Frank A. Ferris, pastor, will soon break ground for an addition to their Sabbath-school building, to cost $20,000. The Presbyterian Union will lend the church $10,000 without interest. This church is the oldest on the Western Reserve, having been organized in 1807. The present building of stone was erected in 1895.

The Presbyterian camp at Harkness Farm opened June 30 with a staff of workers numbering seventeen, headed by Mr. W. I. Newstetter as director. There will be five periods of ten days each, for children, with a capacity of 130 at each period. Beginning August 20 there will be a camp for pastors and church members, food to be furnished at cost.

There are sixteen Daily Vacation Bible Schools in the churches of Cleveland Presbytery this summer in the following churches: North, Woodland Avenue, Old Stone, Glenville, Linndale, Forrestdale, Italian Chapel of the Redeemer, Phillips Avenue, St. Marks (colored), Akron Firestone Park, Akron Italian, Akron Central, Ahstabula First, Ashtabula Harbor, Rome and Rillman. There are ninety-nine teachers in these schools and there is an enrollment of nearly 3,000 children.

The Akron First Church has had an accession of thirty-two members since April 1. A new feature in this church is a Brides' Luncheon, given once a year to all brides of the year. Last Thursday evening sixty brides were entertained.

Rev. Dr. James B. Ely, pastor of the Central Church of Akron, has held a series of four Sabbath-night evangelistic meetings in the Grand Theater with an attendance of from 800 to 1,500 each night.

A Sabbath-school attendance reaching 200, a flourishing Christian Endeavor Society and forty-three new members received already in 1921, cheer the hearts of Rev. Robert I. Platter and his people at Rittman.

The preachers for the First Church (Old Stone) for the summer are as follows: July 10 and August 28, Prof. Howell M. Haydn; July 17, Rev. Theophilus Gaebr, Ph.D.; July 24, Rev. N. M. Pratt, D.D.; August 7, Rev. David R. Moore, D.D.; August 14 and 21, Rev. Paul R. Hickok, D.D. Dr. Meldrum welcomed seven new members at the communion service July 3. He will spend the summer at Gloucester, Mass., and Goderich, Canada.

The Boulevard Church heard Rev. F. L. Hall, of Newark, N. J., and Rev. C. D. Darling, Ph.D., of Fort Collins, Col., on the first two Sabbaths of July.

It has been announced by the Federated Churches organization that the additions to Cleveland churches were 17,000 for the year ending April 30.

Rev. C. H. Candor, of Columbia, S. C., was the preacher last Sabbath at Westminster Church, Rev. B. R. King, pastor.

Rev. Stuart M. Robinson, who has been assistant minister at the Church of the Covenant, has left for his new field, the First Church of Lockport, N. Y.

IDAHO LETTER.

BY REV. J. H. BARTON, D.D.

Rev. George P. Keeling, of Emmett, has accepted a call to Rolla, Mo., and has been dismissed from the Presbytery of Boise to the Presbytery of St. Louis. Mr. Keeling was pastor of the Rolla Church several years ago.

Rev. T. J. Hedges has accepted an invitation to supply the Wendell and Malad Canyon churches. He took charge of the work the first of June.

Mr. Philip J. May, a student of Princeton Seminary, is in charge of the work on the Pingree field this summer. This church has been without a pastor for three years. The writer on a recent visit to the community baptized eight children of young parents. To maintain the church and Sabbath school and other religious influences and build up Christian homes in such a community is real home mission work.

Mr. David J. Spratt, another Princeton student, is at Rivie this summer. He served the same field last summer. The attendance is more than three times as large as it was a year ago. A majority of the people in this community are Mormons.

Rev. W. F. Vance, for the past three years teacher of history in the College of Idaho, has accepted a call to the church of Free-water, Ore. While teaching in the college, Mr. Vance has supplied the pulpit of the Franklin Church, a country church five miles east of Caldwell. For the present this church will be supplied by Prof. F. E. Springer.

The Commencement exercises of the College of Idaho were held June 9th. The graduating class numbered twenty. The Commencement oration was delivered by Rev. Jesse H. Baird, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Boise. The college has just completed the thirtieth year of its existence. Dr. W. J. Boone, its founder, is still its president. It has grown from a very humble beginning in a pioneer village to the rank of a standard college, and is a member of the American Association of Colleges. In disseminating a high grade of Christian education in a new and growing state it is accomplishing a work of inestimable value.

BILLY SUNDAY AT WINONA LAKE.

For the last two years Billy Sunday has conducted a brief camp meeting at Winona Lake, Indiana, and great crowds have attended. The offerings to Mr. Sunday at these meetings were the generous beginnings of the fund which has provided for the magnificent tabernacle at Winona Lake. This year the camp meeting will be held July 21st to 24th, and a cordial invitation is extended hereby to all Christian workers to come to Winona Lake at this time and enjoy not only the meetings conducted by Mr. Sunday, but also such special features as Dr. G. Campbell Morgan's Bible School, or the Practical Training School for Gospel singers and workers, under the direction of Mr. Homer Rodeheaver, Mr. Sunday's chorister. Mr. and Mrs. Sunday have sent invitations to the members of the Billy Sunday Clubs in various cities and it is expected that many of them will attend. In addition, there will be hearty co-operation on the part of the Laymen's Evangelistic Conference of the Middle West, which, at its convention in Chicago last fall, made arrangements to meet for several days at Winona Lake this summer. It is expected that by this co-operation it will be possible to secure a large attendance, increased interest and more definite and far-reaching results. The plans on the part of the Mid-West Conference are in the hands of Parley E. Zartman, general secretary of the Interdenominational Evangelistic Association, Winona Lake, Ind. Pastors and church officers are urged to attend, or to send one or more delegates from the local church, and to give publicity to this announcement.

MISSOURI VALLEY COLLEGE.

At the commencement at Missouri Valley College, the annual address was by Rev. Ralph M. Davis, D.D., of St. Louis. There were twenty-three graduates. Chief Justice James T. Blair, of the Supreme Court of Missouri, received the degree of

L.L.D. The baccalaureate sermon was by Rev. M. F. Cowden, D.D., of Springfield. The address on commencement day was by President James T. Kelso, of the Western Theological Seminary. At the mid-summer commencement, Aug. 12th, Prof. William Hail, Ph.D., of Changshi, China, will deliver the commencement address and receive the degree of D.D.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Isaac Matheson Patterson, pastor emeritus of Westminster Church of Trenton, N. J., and senior member of New Brunswick Presbytery, died on July 3d, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. He was born in Pictou, Nova Scotia, Nov. 30, 1832, graduated at Dalhousie College and Princeton Seminary, and was ordained by the Presbytery of Baltimore in 1859. His charges were Deer Creek, Harmony, Md.; Franklin Street Church, Baltimore; Annapolis, Md.; Emmitsburg and Piney Creek, Md.; Milford and Holland, N. J.; Bloomsburg, Pa.; Westminster Church of Trenton, N. J. For several years he was in retirement from active service, but preaching as he was able. Rev. George H. Ingram writes: "Up until the last retaining the use of his faculties, his fellowship was a delight. Surrounded by his devoted children, his was an ideal, happy old age." He served Christ long and well.

Rev. John P. Fox, of Terre Haute, Ind., died on July 3d at the home of his daughter in Indianapolis, in the ninetieth year of his age. He was born near Vincennes, Ind., Oct. 15, 1831, graduated at Hanover College and Western Theological Seminary, and was ordained in 1862 by the Presbytery of Palestine. His charges were at Newton, Ill.; Plattsburg and Hamilton, Mo.; Carlisle, Spencer, Indiana, Smyrna, Royal Oak, Farmersburg and Poland, Ind. He was active until recent years, and was a devoted and useful minister. He is survived by one daughter and two sons. The burial was in the Upper Indiana Cemetery on July 6th. His wife died about a year ago.

Rev. Edmund Stanley Brownlee, of Appleton City, Mo., died July 4th, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. He was born in Washington, Pa., March 31, 1857, graduated at Washington and Jefferson Theological Seminary and was ordained in 1890 by the Presbytery of West Virginia. He was married to Miss Lucie Allen. His wife and the two daughters survive him. He held pastorates at Grand View Park, Kansas City, Mo., Trenton, Mo., Council Grove, Kans., Greenfield, Mo., and Appleton City. He was one of the leading ministers of the Presbytery of Sedalia, faithful and true. His funeral was conducted by Rev. C. C. McGinley, D.D., assisted by Rev. D. A. Dickey, Rev. H. A. Howard and Rev. J. E. Johnston.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The St. Bernard Church, Rev. W. D. Harrell, pastor, received thirteen members on July 3, of whom six were men. The basement of the church is being fitted up for Sabbath-school and social purposes.

At the union outdoor service at Evanston last evening the sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Lewis Earle Lee.

Almost without exception the pastors of the local churches were in their pulpits last Sabbath. There will soon be many absences as vacation comes on.

Rev. Dr. J. V. Stephens occupied the pulpit of the Colege Hill Church last Sabbath, in the absence of Rev. C. A. Austin.

The Sixth Church was supplied last Sabbath by Rev. Irving L. Tomson.

Rev. Dr. F. N. McMillin was the preacher last Sabbath evening at the union open-air service on Walnut Hills.

Dr. Frederick N. McMillin, pastor of the Walnut Hills First Church, will preach in the Westminster Church, Dayton, O., the union of the First and Third Street Churches on July 24. Dr. E. W. Clippinger, pastor of the Westminster Church, will preach in the Walnut Hills church July 31. The other summer supplies of the Walnut Hills Church are: July 24, Dr. Charles F. Goss; August 7, Dr. Jesse Herrmann; August 14 and 21, Rev. Curtis E. Shields; August 28, Rev. E. M. Martin.

Carmel Church, Rev. W. L. Brean, D.D., pastor, received ten members on July 10th and there were seven baptisms. The church has a large Vacation Daily Bible School, with an average attendance of eighty-five the first week.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D.D., preached, last Sabbath morning and evening, at the Washington and Compton Avenue Church. He remains at this church through July, and, on Wednesday evenings, at the mid-week services, he will give a series of studies in the Epistle of Peter.

Rev. Fred. C. Reiner, of Greeley Memorial Church, preached, on last Sabbath morning and evening, at the Second Church.

Rev. D. C. MacLeod, D.D., pastor of Central Church, has gone with the Second Church pastor, Dr. MacIvor, on a vacation trip to Nova Scotia. Both were lads together in Inverness County, and it is their annual custom to spend their vacation there together.

Rev. E. B. Landis, of Carbondale, Ill., will fill the pulpit of Central Church on Sabbaths in July. Rev. H. V. Carson, of Nashville, Tenn., will supply there during all of August.

Markham Church's Vacation Bible School has an enrollment of 161 children, 12 teachers and two volunteer assistants. Third Street School, of the Third Street Branch attached to this church, has 156 children and 13 teachers.

Fourteen Presbyterian churches in all are holding daily vacation Bible schools, under the superintendence of Rev. Fred. C. Reiner, and about 3,000 children are enrolled. The attendance is large, the interest great, and splendid work for the community is being rendered by competent and faithful teachers.

The Curby Memorial and Sutter Avenue Churches took part, with four other congregations, in a "Liberty Open-Air Conference," held on July 4th, in Forest Park. Rev. Henry Ostrom, of Chicago, and Mr. George C. Howes, of Boston, were the leaders.

Several visiting ministers will assist in supplying at the West Church during Rev. William B. Lampe's vacation absence at Charlevoix, Mich. Rev. John E. Wishart, D.D., of Xenia Seminary, preached last Sabbath, and will be heard next Sabbath also. On Sabbath, July 24th, the supply will be Rev. Dr. Snowden, of Philadelphia.

OHIO.

The Presbytery of Dayton has received Rev. Robert N. Coleman from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh (R. P.), to be pastor at Clifton.

The Forest Avenue Church of Dayton, Rev. Emil Baumann, pastor, has recently installed a beautiful new lighting system. At its recent communion it added its two hundredth new member since the coming of the present pastor, about three years ago. During that time it has increased the salary ninety per cent, adding six hundred dollars in June.

The Men's Bible Class of the Paulding Church, Rev. I. L. Wilkins, pastor, closed an eight weeks' contest July 3d, with seventy-four present. A special offering was taken for mission work among the lepers, amounting to $22. Mr. Frank Miller, postmaster, is president of the class. Former Congressman J. S. Snook, is teacher.

The Wooster Summer Bible Conference, from Aug. 3d to 11th, will be of great value and interest. Address Rev. W. E. Bryce, D.D.

The First Church of Canton, Rev. Alfred Lee Wilson, pastor, has a large daily vacation Bible school. In the enrollment are six Syrians, three Austrians, one Greek and one Italian. Some of the foreign children have just arrived and can neither speak nor understand English, so that classes in English form a part of the program.

Rev. A. A. Griffes, Ph.D., of Oakland City, Ind., has accepted a call to Winchester, O., and is on his new field. Mrs. Griffes has been visiting her relatives in Edinburg, Scotland, and returns soon. During Dr. Griffes' pastorate of two years at Oakland City he received twenty-six members into the church.

INDIANA.

Rev. J. L. Goheen, of India, was heard, last Sabbath, in Westminster Church, Indianapolis, Rev. H. T. Graham, pastor.

The First and Second churches of Madison have agreed to unite. Rev. W. W. Logan, D.D., and Rev. W. F. Pearce have resigned in order that the union may be readily effected.

ILLINOIS.

Rev. Gerrit Verkuy, Ph.D., of Chicago, has received the degree of D.D. from Park College.

A Union Daily Vacation Bible School has been held in Minonk, fostered largely by the Presbyterian church and its pastor, Rev. C. W. Donaldson. The Ministerial Association financed it, but the offering at Commencement met all the expenses.

Irving Park Church, Chicago, Rev. Clyde R. Wheeland, minister, received 25 new members June 26th, making 103 since the first of the year.

Waltham Church has just completed a $10,000 improvement. The rededication services took place June 19th, free from all debt. Rev. J. G. Hood, of Mendota; Rev. Angus Villars, of Troy Grove, and Rev. John F. Vonckx, of Ottawa, had charge, inasmuch as the church is without a pastor.

At White Hall, Presbyterians are holding their first Daily Vacation Bible School, and the Commencement exercises will take place Friday, July 15th. Rev. W. D. Vater will deliver the address. The school, in charge of the pastor, Rev. Lee Hanchett, formerly of Upper Alton, Ill., numbers 200.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

McKINNEY—McKINNEY—The translation by death of two Christian lives from the church militant to the church triumphant is an event of sadness and rejoicing: "Sadness" at parting with them here; "Rejoicing" at their triumph there. This is what has occurred in El Paso, Ill., in the death of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. McKinney. Mrs. Adelaide Abbott McKinney died on April 3, 1921; Abraham Smith McKinney died a few weeks later on June 18, the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding. They were married at Elmwood, Ill., June 18, 1861, and came to El Paso in 1868. Theirs was a Christian home from the beginning. The family altar was established and stood through the years. The still radiance of Christian lives illumined that home and shone out upon the world. This is their most priceless legacy to those who remain. On coming to El Paso they became members of the Presbyterian Church. The quiet faithfulness of their Christian lives made them leaders in the church. They were interested in all of its activities, especially its benevolence. Mrs. McKinney was one of the charter members of the Women's Missionary Society and for thirty-two years its treasurer. Mr. McKinney was an elder for more than fifty years, and superintendent of the Sabbath school for many years. Until the last they were prayer-meeting Christians; they trained their children to go to prayer meeting as they did to go to church. Mr. McKinney's life in the community was marked by an interest in all that was good. At his death he was El Paso's oldest, and one of its most successful, business men, admired for his unusual integrity and sterling character. He was for years a member of the school board, was one of the founders of the First National Bank of El Paso, Ill., and was its president until relieved at his own request two years before his death. He was probably the oldest retail lumberman in the state. Five daughters, three sons and ten grandchildren survive. The children are Mrs. Anna Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Margaret Husted, Mrs. Adelaide Hodgson, Mrs. Jeanette Cook, Mrs. Gertrude Jacobs, Abbott McKinney, William S. McKinney and John R. McKinney. Until the time of Mrs. McKinney's death, which occurred in her eightieth year, there had been no break in the family. Mr. McKinney died in the eighty-seventh year of his age. Truly "the righteous shall flourish as the palm tree, they shall grow like the cedars of Lebanon, they shall bring forth fruit in old age and shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

HOME CIRCLE

IN GOOD-CHILDREN STREET. BY EUGENE FIELD.

There's a dear little home in Good-Children Street,
Where my heart turneth fondly today;
Where tinkle of tongues and patter of feet
Make sweetest of music at play;
Where the sunshine of love illumines each face
And warms every heart in the old-fashioned place.

For dear little children go romping about
With dollies and tin tops and drums;
And, my! how they frolic and scamper and shout
Till bedtime too speedily comes.
O, the days they are golden and days they are fleet
With the dear little folks in Good-Children Street.

THE WEIGHT OF A FEATHER.

BY PRISCILLA LEONARD.

"You'd better come, Sade," said Eva. Eva was an energetic worker on the look-out committee of the Addams Club.

"Yes, I guess not," returned Sadie, tossing a decidedly auburn head. "I've got other things to do with myself those evenings."

"But the ladies are lovely," urged Eva. "It's nice of them to come. We had a magic-lantern show last week, and lemonade and cake."

"Maybe they're nice," said Sadie, with another toss. "But they don't understand. Say, Eva, I went once, and you know what that Miss Irving said? She told us not to get feathers for our hats, but to buy a nice picture instead to hang up and look at. Now what do you think of that?"

Eva sighed. She was of the better class of working girls with a father who did not drink, and a mother who kept the little flat trim and neat, and did no outside work.

Sadie had a drunken father, a mother who toiled at the wash-tub, and a brood of younger brothers and sisters always underfoot. She had gone to work at fourteen. She worked "like a Trojan;" and she still, at sixteen, turned her meager wages over to her mother loyally, all except a small amount for clothing.

But as to that clothing, Sadie had her own ideas. It was her only passport into the society that existed round her. She could welcome no friends or acquaintances into the sloppy, untidy rooms where her mother stood at the wash-tub all day, and where she herself helped cook and take care of the children whenever she was at home. She could spend no money for social pleasures. But she could appear on the street well dressed, and attend picnics and parties in suitable attire, if she stretched every nerve to do it—and she did.

At present, working overtime in the stuffy, clanging factory, she was paying installments of twenty-five cents a week on a feather—a feather that cost four dollars, but that would glorify her last year's hat into the style. Sadie knew her circle and her chances in the world. And Eva knew, too.

"Well, Sade, I wish you'd come and try it, just the same," she remarked. "I'll call for you next week, if you say so."

"I'm working nights now," said Sadie. "I'll be working as long as there's any night work going. It's no use stopping for me, Eva." So the committee went away vanquished—for that time.

It was a pity, for Sadie was a leader. She always had been at school. "There's nothing Sadie Evans can't do," the other girls said, and they needed her ability and "go" in the club. Indeed, the very next day Miss Irving asked Eva particularly why Sadie could not come.

"She works at night," Eva replied. Eva could not well bring up and argue the feather question; and Miss Irving, naturally, never guessed. But she mentioned the fact that Sadie ought to be a club member to a group of the other settlement workers. They were all young, serious-minded, gentle girls, and after one another undertook to call on Sadie, and try to gain her as a member.

Four of them, one after another, returned baffled. "She doesn't want to come, but none of her excuses are what she really means," was the consensus of opinion; and they were still discussing her when Henriette Janeway joined them. Why Henriette had come into settlement work lately, no one could exactly see. She was not serious-minded or sociologically inclined, to all appearance. She liked girls and girls liked her, however, and she insisted that visiting the club-girls was one of the most interesting things in life. She always wore her best to visit in, too, and the girls liked that.

To-day she had a hat all made of violets and forget-me-nots, impossible except in the exact shades used, and her bronze hair and blue forget-me-not eyes were distractingly attractive.

"Have I ever met Sadie?" she inquired. "Do let me go to see her! I wonder if she wears a big feather? She sounds like it. Why can't we start a millinery class for girls who like feathers?"

"Who'd teach it?" said Caroline Irving, hopelessly.

"I would," said Henriette. "I always trim my own hats. Really, girls, to learn to trim a hat right is a kind of lesson in culture—in color and form, you know."

The whole group hesitated, and then agreed; and Henriette thereupon took Sadie's address, and went down promptly to hunt her up. It was late Saturday afternoon, and yet the smell of soap and wet clothes streamed out from the three rooms in which the Evans family dwelt, close-packed. But it was not Mrs. Evans who was washing. She lay helpless on the couch, while Sadie soaped and wrung with fierce energy at the tubful of clothes still to be done.

"Mother's fell down and hurt one side bad. The doctor says it'll be two weeks and more before she can do any work," Sadie explained, briefly. She was wearing a ragged old waist; her shoes were beyond description; yet her manner was of such intense dignity that Henriette felt it difficult to approach her with sympathy. She went and sat by Mrs. Evans instead, and received the laments of that worthy woman, who had no dignity left after the hardships of life that did not yield at once to sympathy.

"I wouldn't mind it for myself," she said, won by Henriette's sympathetic blue eyes, "but Jim hasn't much of a job, and it all comes on Sadie, and she the best girl in the world. Not a Saturday but she brings me all her wages, and she's up in the morning before light to cook breakfast and get the children ready before she goes to work, and then when she comes home at night, back she goes to work again. Here she is, doing a washing Saturday afternoon for me, so we won't lose the customer."

"I think it is splendid of Sadie!" said Henriette, heartily.

"Yes, she's a good girl," repeated Mrs. Evans. "There's not many girls would ask so little for themselves as Sadie, and never complain. Why," in a confidential whisper, "she was buying a grand feather for herself, at a quarter a week, and its more than half bought, and now I know it hurts Sadie dreadfully to give it up, but she's turning in her whole wages to me, and not saying a word."

Henriette looked up, and over at the industrious little worker by the wash-tub. Sadie had been, in her turn, looking at the visitor's hat, and the beauty of it and the loss of the feather had been to much for even her stoic spirit. Great tears were rolling down her cheeks and dropping into the suds. Henriette felt a suspicious moisture in her own eyes.

"I come to ask Sadie," she said, loud enough for the girl to hear, "if she wouldn't come to the Addams Club and join a millinery class that I'm going to teach. I always trim my own hats, so I know how." Sadie was looking at her hard by this time. "And if Sadie and you will let me do it—why, Mrs. Evans, I'd just love to lend you the rest of the money to buy that feather right away, so that Sadie can bring it for the first lesson, with her hat. You can pay me so much a week when you get well again, just as if you were paying the store, you know, Sadie. I do so want you to come to the class, and—and the hat won't be anything at all without the feather!"

That touch of understanding finished it. The hat—without the feather—had been floating before Sadie's eyes at the wash-tub hour after hour, in all its dejected shabbiness. Here was a friend indeed—not only a friend in need, but a friend with a right point of view, to whom she could henceforth look for comprehension of really vital necessities. She took her hands out of the suds with a quick gesture of finality.

"I never left like joining the club before, I'll tell you straight," she announced, "but I do now. I'll come the minute I can. And it ain't—it ain't the feather, though I'm much obliged, and I'll be glad to do it and pay you back. It's you. Any class you have I'll join—even if it's pictures?"

And on that deepest pledge of loyalty to an unknown future of mental and moral cultivation the two girls shook hands.

DOWN AT THE CREEK.

BY MINERVA HUNTER.

We children think it's lots of fun
To stay at the creek all day.
We put our oldest dresses on,
And splash about and play.

We wiggle the sand between our toes
And slide on the slippery rocks;
And if we happen to get a fall,
We laugh at our bumps and knocks.

For, oh, the creek is a dandy place
To play on a summer's day.
It's cooler by far than the old barn loft
With its stacks of straw and hay.

POOR BABY.

A little girl was introduced to a new baby. Up to this time her interest had been chiefly in dolls. When this real, live baby was put in her arms, the five-year-old surveyed it with a critical eye. "Isn't that a nice baby?" cried the nurse. "Yes," replied the little girl, hesitatingly, "it's nice, but its head's loose."—Ex.

GOING TO BED.

BY ELIZABETH F. GUPPILL.

When I go up to bed in the evening,
And the big moon is shining so bright,
She seems to be smiling, and saying to me,

"Good night, little girlie, good night."

So I nod and smile back from my window,
And whisper a soft "Good night," too While she seems to be saying, "I hope, all the day,

You've been loving, obedient and true."

Then I kneel by my bed, to say "Thank you,"

For the things God has given to me,
And to ask him to bless the dear children afar,

Who are hungry and cold—o'er the sea.

And when I wake up in the morning,
In my box goes a penny or two,
Or more, if I have it, to help the dear
Lord

Do the things I have asked him to do.

WHAT NEXT?

George had received his grade card for the year, and was elated. He hurried home, feeling sure he would receive the praise of his parents, and his grandfather. Displaying his testimonials from teachers and superintendent he said: "What do you think of that, grandpa?"

"That is success and evidence of brains and diligence. When you get into the junior year, what next?"

"Well," said George, "if I keep up my grades as in the past, in three years I will enter the senior grade."

"I do not like that 'if' in your declaration, George. It is equal to a negative, and it is speculation upon your higher destiny. Make a simple declaration of your intention omitting that 'if,' and I will give you a dollar."

George then formulated this statement: "I shall keep my grades, as I have in the past, and be promoted to the senior grade. How does that please you, grandpa?"

"All right, George, there is decision in that expression, and I admire the man or boy who acts with decision. Here is your dollar; that is the best investment I have made for a year. When you enter the senior grade, what next?"

"If I succeed in the senior grade, as I have in my lower grades, I will graduate at nineteen."

"There again is that irrepressible 'if'! Those 'ifs' remind me of 'wayside inns' where loitering travelers sojourn when they should be making time on their journey, held by a charmer who makes them believe they need recuperation, whereas they are only marking time. Make a declaration of that statement, omitting the 'if,' and you shall have another dollar."

George applied his thinker, and said: "I shall keep my grades up during my senior year and graduate when I am nineteen. Does that meet your idea, grandpa?"

"Yes, George"—and he handed him another dollar. "What then?"

"I intend to be a doctor, like you, grandpa."

"The medical practice has its limit, just as all other callings have, and I am nearing that limit myself, my boy. When you reach that limit, what then?"

"I shall save my money, buy a nice home, have a fine auto, and enjoy myself as an old man should—as you are doing."

"What then?" said grandpa.

"Well," said George, becoming seriously thoughtful, "I suppose I will die, like other doctors," thinking this question would certainly end grandpa's catechism. In that he was mistaken, for grandpa, h-eyes moistened, interest intensified, and tones deepened, said: "What then?"

"Well," said the lad, yielding to the spirit of his grandfather, "if I am a Christian, I will go to heaven."

"But there is another 'if,' my dear boy, and in a very fatal place. It should be canceled at once. Permit me to place an 'if' at an open door, and, canceling the two 'ifs,' yours and mine, as you did the former three, you will carry away a prize beyond all material wealth in value. Here it is: 'If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.' You will be as brave now as in the former three cases," queried grandpa, "and receive the reward just as when you received the money from my hands, will you not?"

"I will—I do," said George; and the glow upon his countenance attested to his grandpa's satisfaction that his decision was real, and was attended by a transition into a strong spiritual life which has continued to glow up to the years of manhood.—Lockridge, in Exchange.

A CASE OF CONSCIENCE.

"He's paid me too much!"

Ned's fingers were rapidly turning over two or three bills.

"Yes, three dollars too much. He must have thought this five dollar bill was a two."

The boy sat in deep thought.

"I don't care. It's no more than my rightful due, only I don't get it. Twelve dollars a month for my whole time out of school. It doesn't begin to pay for all I do, and I wouldn't stand it if I could help myself. Everybody says Curtis is a real grind. Of course, I'll keep this. He gave it to me. If he has made a mistake, that's his own lookout. That matter is all settled; what shall I do with this lucky wind-fall? I'm to have a half holiday the last Saturday in the month. This would give me a run down to the shore. I never get out of the city. It seems as if this had come about just to give me a chance."

Carefully laying the money in a safe place, Ned quickly absorbed himself in study. All the week he took little time for thought. It was easy to avoid it, for between work and study few boys were so busy as he. Night found him so "dead tired" that the sound sleep which blesses labor was his rich reward. There came a night or two in which he had to fight hard against a troublesome, intrusive thought.

"Ned Harper, you're a thief."

Pausing a moment, as if to familiarize himself with the sound of his self-accusation, he resumed his indictment:

"You are, and you know it; that is, you are as long as that money is in your hands. It is not yours, and all your fine talk can't make it yours. You're on the right side now; but in one day you would have been on the wrong side. You would have been a thief, thief, thief all your life. Nothing could ever have put you back where you are now by the grace of God."

"You made a mistake in your last payment," said Ned, going with the money to his employer.

"Ah, did I? When did you find it out?"

He looked keenly at the boy's painful flush as he asked. Ned had hoped he would not ask. For a moment he thought of evading the question by half truth. Then came the thought: "Because I came next door to being a thief I needn't come next door to being a liar."

"I—I saw it soon after," he said.

"Like enough he'll discharge me," was Ned's conclusion in the matter.

He was not discharged. Little by little Mr. Curtis placed more important work in his hands, and by slow degrees led him to a position of trust and confidence.

"I have kept him," he explained to a friend, "because I like a young fellow who has a conscience."

PAUL PROCLAIMS JESUS AS THE CHRIST. (Acts 9:19b-30.)

19. Then was Saul certain days with the disciples which were at Damascus.
20. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.
21. But all that heard him were amazed, and said; Is not this he that destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for the intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests?
22. But Saul increased the more in strength, and confounded the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ.
- And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him:
24. But their laying wait was known of Saul. And they watched the gates day and night to kill him.
25. Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the walls in a basket.
26. And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples: but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple.
27. But Barnabas took him, and brought him to the apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way, and that he had spoken to him, and how he had preached boldly at Damascus in the name of Jesus.
28. And he was with them coming in and going out at Jerusalem.
29. And he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him.
30. Which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Caesarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus.

Catechism—Q. 31. What is an effectual calling?
A. Effectual calling is the work of God's Spirit, whereby, convincing us of our sin and misery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Christ, and renewing our wills, he doth persuade and enable us to embrace Jesus Christ, freely offered to us in the Gospel.

INTRODUCTION.

When Saul of Tarsus became a Christian he did not enter upon a life of ease. He was at rest in his own conscience; he was at peace with God; he was at peace with other Christians. He did not fight against Jesus Christ any more, trying to destroy his cause. He did not persecute the Christian believers any more, because he was one with them in the service of Christ. But he found out that from this time he must defend himself from the attacks of Satan and the assaults of the enemies of Christ. He was a marked man, and, without any fault of his own, he had many and bitter enemies. The whole story of his life was the story of the earnest efforts he made to win the world to Christ, and the violent attempts made by the world to prevent him from being successful. Much of this will be our own experience if we try, as Christians, in any determined way, to do the will of God. The world will be pleased if we do nothing against it, but it will hate us if we are very decided for Jesus Christ.

EXPOSITORY.

19. Saul had become a Christian, and his first acquaintances were among the Christians at Damascus. He had come to be their persecutor, but he had been changed so that he was their friend. Great as he was, he must have learned something of great value from these Damascus Christians. He learned, no doubt, many of the things that Christ had taught. He came into personal contact with the Christian spirit, and learned how Christians talked and trusted and prayed. He had opposed Christ, and had known some things against him, but now he learned the things that were in the hearts of those who loved and trusted the Savior as their Lord. They were great days for this new Christian.

20-23. But he was not destined to simply get comfort and help for himself out of the Christian life. He was to be the means for leading others to know about Christ, and trust him as their own Lord and Savior. So he went to the synagogues where the Jews worshiped, and, as a Jew, he was privileged to speak at the time and place of their public service. Perhaps some of them knew about him as a member of the Sanhedrim, and as an opponent of the cause of Christ. So they listened to him, but instead of saying anything in opposition to Christ, they heard him arguing that Jesus was the Christ whom they all should receive and believe. They did not know what to think of him. No one of them was a match for him. No one dared at first to try to stop him. He became very bold. He was probably the leading Jew in the city. It was his first experience in preaching Christ. He was full of zeal and full of power. God's Spirit was with him and worked mightily through him. One thing he insisted on, and that was the great truth of the Gospel, that Jesus was Christ, the very and the only Christ, and that all should believe in him.

23-25. As the Jews could not answer him, and as they did not want his teaching to spread, they determined to kill him. They could not meet the truth he preached, but they thought they could do as they had done to Christ himself, and as they had done to Stephen. But his work was not done. God had plans for him and he took care of him. The Jews watched the gates of the city so as to kill him when he went out, but some of the Christians let him down by the wall in a basket one night, so that he did not go out by the gates, after all. Thus God delivered him, as the spies had been delivered at Jericho.

26. He next appears at Jerusalem, not to report to the priests and bring Christians to be tried by them, but to get among the Christians themselves and tell them that he was no longer a persecutor, but a Christian himself. It was hard for them to believe. They were afraid that he was trying to be a spy, and they did not believe at first that he was a follower of Christ. It was very natural.

27. Here is a beautiful introduction to a good and great man. Barnabas found out all the facts and he became Paul's friend, who vouched for him. It was no wonder that Paul and Barnabas should be good friends and great co-workers in the days that followed. If we are able to do good to God's people and cause, as Barnabas was, let us do it, and let us not be afraid and let us not delay.

28-29. So Paul has the confidence of the Christians at Jerusalem. He was with them day by day. He was bold and powerful in his preaching of Jesus Christ. But, here as in other places, the enemies of Christ assaulted him and tried to put an end to his preaching. They determined to kill him. But the Christian people delivered him again in the good providence of God. They sent him out of Jerusalem, over to the sea-coast city of Caesarea, and, as it seemed dangerous for him to remain even in the same country, any longer, just now, they sent him over into Tarsus, his native city, where he might be in safety. And so it was, all through his life, when they sought to kill him in one city he fled into another, in obedience to the directions of Christ to his disciples. Christ knew that the malice of evil men would try to destroy his people and his cause. But his Church has been preserved even to this very day.

Hope based on careful reasoning faces even suffering with confidence and cheerfulness.

THE PIGEONS OF ST. JAMES.

BY LYON.

Beneath the eaves I saw a nest
Of mother dove and young;
A home in shelter of God's house
With ivy-vines o'er hung.

Their little mouths were open wide,
Their trembling wings outspread;
All pleading in an eager way,
For each its daily bread.

I watched the mother feed her young,
And thought of Augustine—
How his great soul had gloried in Just such a simple scene.

So lifts my heart to thee, O God,
In want of grace and light;
And thou dost fill mine emptiness,
My weakness with thy might.

Thou carest for a lowly dove,
That builds her nest on high;
And ever o'er thy church on earth
There wakes the Father's eye.

HALF INDIAN.

Thus a vindictive young man described himself. He said, "I don't forget a wrong done me; I am half Indian." Pity that, if he wished to find example in an Indian, he did not choose the better part of the Indian spirit. For if the redskin never forgot an injury done him, neither did he forget a kindness received. You could count on his long memory. Beautiful are the stories of Indian gratitude. Usually, there are many pleasant things to remember; more pleasant things than disagreeable things. But, alas, some of us are not even up to the Indian grade. We scarcely remember the kindnesses at all, while we keep dangling before our eyes the memory of our slights and hurts. Pity that we should focus so much attention upon our miseries. If we must pattern after the Indian, let us take the whole pattern; or better still, the super half.—George Clarke Peck.

IMMORAL BACTERIA.

"The Aztecs had a subtle poison which was said to wreck the mind with no visible effects upon the body. A bad book, a vicious play, a movie that moves toward vice and crime may be surely and subtly at work, wrecking the morals of youth. The germs that set the soul afire with feverishly immoral thought may not be visible to any microscope. The bacteria of badness can not be caught and counted, but the subtler fires may burn beneath while all is fair without."

PRAYER MEETING, JULY 24.

LED BY THE SPIRIT.
John 14:15-17; Romans 8:9-17.

There are two great departments or elements in our lives. We are made up of soul and body. The body is material. The soul is spiritual. The body is perishable and temporal, and, after a little time, must die and be resolved to earth. The soul is deathless and is to live forever. It is of immeasurable importance that we discern between the two and that we put the emphasis where the Lord puts it, and that we live realizing the value of the soul and the comparative unimportance of the material body.

If we live just for the comfort and satisfaction and pleasure of the body, we are living on the same plane as the brute beasts, and as though we had no souls, no accountability to God and no moral responsibility. Multitudes seem to live just in this very way. They live just on a materialistic or atheistic basis. It is apparently with them, in their views and actions, as though there were no God and as though they had no souls.

There are comparatively few people who will say that they do not believe there is a God and do not believe that they have immortal souls. Atheists and materialists say such things. They come out with expressions that classify them just as brute beasts. But if few dare, or wish to take such a position in words and theory, there are many who practically live in this way. They are practically, atheists, godless, without faith, without hope, without religion. It is a terrible way to live.

One of the most terrible things ever said, in the Bible or anywhere else, is said of those who love the world. By this is meant those who are wrapped up in the interests of the world, thinking only of it, interested only in it, devoted only to it. In all their thoughts and plans there is no place for God or religion. They do not love to read the Bible as God's Word. They do not love to go to church as to God's house. They do not love prayer as communion with God. They have no place for God and the things of God in their hearts and lives. The love of the Father is not in them. They have room for pursuits and pleasures and business, but they have no love for God and no place for God in their souls.

Awfully pitiful and dangerous is such a life. These godless ones go on unforgiven and unsaved. They have no interest in God and salvation. They have no share in the divine grace. They have no part in the covenant of God's love. They are without God and without hope in the world. They are outside the bounds of mercy. They are blind to the goodness and truth of God. They are deaf to his invitations. They are dumb so that they speak no words of answer to the many calls that would turn them from death to life and from darkness to light.

There is such a thing as being lost and hopeless, even when one is not guilty of coarse and vile and outbreking sin. One may be outside the love and salvation of God even though he be not guilty of murder or robbery. He may have lived within the bounds of respectability and decency, and yet be as dead in his soul to all saving grace as if he had habitually been guilty of the most horrible crimes. If he has no love for God in his soul, and no faith in Jesus Christ he is dead and lost and hopeless.

We need to be most carefully on guard that we do not fail in the thing that is infinitely important and vital. We need to keep in our souls, tenderly and warmly, the love of God, and guard against that worldliness that is a living death and that makes us dead even while we live.

PRAYER MEETING

JULY 20.

Endeavor Topic: The Perils of Materialism. I
John 2:15-17.

In order to be led by the Holy Spirit in the ways of true and happy spiritual life, we must first lay our hands in his. We must acknowledge his right to our lives and must be willing to submit ourselves to his guidance. There is such a thing as being controlled and conquered by God, and being compelled to go in the ways he determines, and it is a fact that God does rule our lives, and does hold us all in his control, in the exercise of his will in the kingdom of his power.

But in our lesson at this time, we are thinking and studying of God's exercise of love, in his Kingdom of Grace, and the thought is of his children being gently and quietly led in willing submission, rather than being dragged as captives in the grasp of his almighty power. If we have been made new creatures, born again from on high, because God's Holy Spirit has been welcomed into our hearts to make us his children, we shall be glad to be led by him in the safe, sure, good and happy ways in which he wishes his loved ones to walk securely.

If we are God's children, we will be glad to be led by God's Spirit. We will not be stubborn, rebellious and unwilling. It will be a pleasure to say "Yes" to God. It will not be in our hearts and minds to say "No" to him. We will be glad to accept his invitations and to be led by him in the paths of righteousness. We will not obtrude our own wills and stand for our own judgments, but we will accept the teachings and the guidance of God, and will be ready to say, as the good and obedient in all the ages have said: "I delight to do thy will." This is the spirit and the attitude of the children of God.

It is also true that if we are led by God's Spirit, this will be the sure token that we are the children of God. The children of the devil do not put their hands in God's hand in filial love and submission. The people of the world do not manifest this loving and docile spirit. They walk in their own ways. They do not love the Lord's directions. They will not be controlled. They are self-willed and disobedient. If one shows the spirit of obedience and submissiveness and is led by God's Spirit, he shows that he is not a worldling nor a child of evil, but is a son of God.

God's Spirit leads his people in ways of purity and truthfulness and goodness. He leads them so that they come often to the throne of grace in prayer, and at the mercy-seat have frequent and blessed communion with God. He leads them so that they love to read the Word of God, feasting upon it as the bread of life and drinking from it the water of life. He leads them so that they are regularly in the house of God, engaged in holy worship. He leads them so that they keep his commandments, and, at last, enter in through the gates into the City. It is a blessed experience, now and forever, to be led by the Spirit of God.

THE DAILY TASK.

BY J. BURLINGTON BIGG.

To do a deed of kindness,
To give a cheering smile,
To help a weaker brother
Along the weary mile,
I strive each day.

To lead a life unselfish,
To banish hate and greed,
To try and lead the Christ life
In thought and word and deed,
I strive each day.

For all his tender mercies,
For all his boundless love,
For all life's joys and gladness,
For blessings from above,
Thank God each day.

HOPEFUL CHRISTIANITY.

The power of God's Holy Spirit means a hopeful ministry and a joyful, peaceful life. St. Paul knew what perplexities and problems were, and when he closed that letter to the Roman Church he wrote: "Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that ye may abound in hope, in the power of the Holy Spirit." We need a hopeful ministry, a joy-filled life, a peace which means poise, an abundant and abounding life which expresses the power of the indwelling Spirit of God.—John Timothy Stone.

MACHINERY AND POWER.

Dr. J. H. Jowett says that for some time the favorite word in the Church has been "organize." He suggests that it ought to be "agonize." Organization is a good thing when properly used, but a church may be fully organized and be like a well built machine, which lacks the steam to make it go. Agonizing in prayer for God's blessing will be the means of putting the steam into the engine that will make it go.

OUR EXCHANGES

A PRESENT PERIL.

To-day, in church and state, group overrule is more and more being effected. The rights of the individual and the great mass are being invaded, everything is being run by a machine. We are returning to the old German mechanicalism, without a kaiser, but with a system of groups.—Presbyterian.

DISARMAMENT.

National disarmament can be considered only in the light of a world full of evil men. However much one nation, like America, might like to think of all nations as being actuated by holy motives, the facts will not stand the strain placed upon them. The United States can not afford to allow her own citizens to become the prey of international marauders.—Western Christian Advocate.

A SOLUTION.

"The real remedy for our foreign-trade difficulty is lower production costs. We must strip away uneconomic restrictions and methods which came as by-products of the war, we must bring labor costs in line with commodity prices, and we must relieve ourselves of the existing oppressively high railroad freight rates."—N. Y. Herald.

THE SOCIAL GOSPEL.

Regeneration is what the world needs and when this is accomplished there will be no trouble about socialization or about civilization. Much of this teaching about a social gospel is but an attempt to substitute social training for regeneration. We need to remember that Jesus said "Ye must be born again."—Baptist Banner.

A QUESTIONABLE QUESTIONNAIRE.

The Edison questionnaire has done considerable good in inducing a number of intelligent Americans to stock up on useless information.—Times Star.

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

The Christian religion is built on solid foundations. It is not the creation of the pious imagination. It is not an elaborate system of institutions, rituals and creeds invented to satisfy man's religious instincts and to keep the world from going to smash because of unrestrained passions and contending ambitions. The Christian religion is the outworking, through responsive and obedient men and women, both in individual character and in the life of the world, of the central and eternal realities of the universe as these are made known through Jesus Christ and his chosen interpreters.—Congregationalist.

DEMOCRACY AND THE PRESS.

A democratic form of government is the most dangerous government in the world without a free and untrammelled press. In a democracy the press is the molder of public sentiment. A mercenary press can be made the purveyor and disseminator of false principles and misrepresentations, and thus create a false public sentiment adverse to existing laws or constitutions; to their final and utter undoing. Such a press is the handmaid of revolutionists. It is thus that governments are overthrown. No country is safe in its form of government and no people are secure in their liberties who live under a government which harbors or tolerates a press which can be subsidized by any cause with money enough to buy its columns.—Herald of Holiness.

THE Y. M. C. A. IN THE WAR.

One of the most painful memories of the last war is connected with the shameful persecution which the Young Men's Christian Association suffered at the hands of its enemies and of many who through a propaganda of misinformation were changed from friends to enemies. It gives us, therefore, great pleasure to reproduce some words spoken by General Pershing at the late thirty-fourth annual meeting of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York. General Pershing said on this occasion: "It was in the World War that we came in closest touch with the organization. Your representatives were already in the field when our advance troops reached France. We all had our hands very full in those trying days. The army had to be organized, and a great general staff had to be built up to handle the multitude of details as to plans of operations, supply, and transportation. It was in the midst of these preparations that I called up Mr. Carter and asked the Y. M. C. A., to take charge of the army canteens to follow our troops. He responded promptly and entered upon the work as a duty. All these things (difficulties in transportation and other obstacles) were a tremendous handicap; and when its work came to be compared with that of other welfare organizations operating with far less responsibility and covering only special areas, there arose some unjust criticism of which other organizations too often took advantage. But as a matter of fact this feature of the work of the Y. M. C. A. deserves great praise, and I should like to express here in this presence my deep appreciation of the results obtained."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Blackburn 'Cannot Meet His Sore' Desire

One of the trying duties that comes to the president of Blackburn College is turning away students. If you had every room filled and a number waiting to take an odd chance of some one dropping out, then a letter like the one below came to your desk, what would you do?

"I have three boys that I would like to have educated. I am a poor Southern farmer and not able to pay their way through school. They are smart and willing to do what they are told. I have been advised that you can meet my sore desire."

Let me tell you how you can make possible the education of these fine young people. Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

Auburn Will Train Laymen

For the first time in the history of Presbyterian education men and women who desire to be trained to serve the church in specific capacities—not as preachers—can obtain instruction in seminary surroundings.

Without diminishing its work as a Theological Seminary, Auburn on September 26 will open a new Lay School designed to train men and women to become assistants to pastors and directors of religious education.

The Lay School will have its separate organization equipped in separate buildings.

Auburn Theological Seminary will open as usual September 21, with prospects for a larger enrollment than a year ago.

PASTORS: Tell the young people of your congregation.

PARENTS: Send for catalogue today of the School or Seminary.

GENERAL NEWS

BELIEVE IRISH QUESTION MAY BE SOLVED.

Premier Jan Smuts, of the Union of South Africa, made a flying trip to Dublin last week for a conference with the heads of the Sinn Fein.

According to the reports of the conference which were given out, he informed Sinn Fein leaders how far the British Government is prepared to go in granting self government to Ireland.

The Sinn Feiners in return outlined to him in detail concessions they were prepared to make, and General Smuts said he was impressed by their conciliatory attitude.

After returning to London, General Smuts speaking at a dinner of the South African Society, expressed the belief that the differences between England and Ireland were soluble.

Shortly after General Smuts returned to London, the announcement was made that an armistice between the government and the Irish had been agreed to.

LIQUOR IN TRANSIT BARRED.

Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty has affirmed the Department of Justice decision of Feb. 4th, barring from the United States liquor in transit.

This ruling puts an absolute stop to the big freight business through which Canadian distillers shipped their product across this country to South America and the West Indies and the return traffic of Jamaica and Bacardy rums.

In effect, the decision of the Department of Justice says that the presence of liquor on board a ship bound for the United States is prima-facie evidence of intent to violate the national prohibition act. It will result in the issuance of regulations prohibiting "in transit" shipments of liquor for beverage purposes touching at the ports or moving through the United States when originating in and destined to foreign countries.

The law applies to United States territory and all waters within the three-mile limit—only the Panama Canal being exempted—and obviously the Inperator, Olympic, Paris, etc., can not dock at New York without traversing the forbidden zone.

TO LAY OUT AIR ROUTES.

A system of model airways, covering the entire continent, is planned by the army air service for the use of all operators or owners of aircraft. It contemplates various chains of well-organized landing fields, supplemented by frequent emergency fields and identification markers connecting the principal cities.

Because of the lack of appropriations from the Federal Government, air service officials said, it was their purpose to appeal to the Chambers of Commerce, aerial clubs and civic organizations to assist in establishment of the airways.

The Boy Scouts' organization already has pledged its co-operation, it was stated, and will construct identification markers, guard wrecked planes, submit monthly reports on emergency landing field conditions and generally assist aviators in trouble.

OPPOSES PROPOSED BONUS MEASURE.

Secretary Andrew W. Mellon, of the Treasury Department came out flatly last week against the enactment of any soldier bonus legislation at present.

In a letter to Senator Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey, Republican, Secretary Mellon scored the pending bonus bill in particular and declared that its enactment would involve "grave danger of renewal inflation, increased commodity prices and unsettled business conditions.

The letter was in reply to one from Senator Frelinghuysen, who had asked the Secretary what effect the pending legislation would have upon the Treasury.

"Because of the five optional plans provided in the bill, it is difficult to estimate the cost," said Mr. Mellon. If a majority of the men should select immediate adjustment service pay the minimum cost would be $1,500,000,000, he estimated. If most of them should choose service certificates with payments running for twenty years, the cost would be $5,250,000,000. If the alternate plans were distributed well the cost would be more than $3,330,000,000, he believed.

READY FOR MORE TROUBLE IN MEXICO.

Two United States gunboats, the Sacramento and the Cleveland, have been ordered to Tampico as a precautionary measure in the event disorders develop.

"Upon the strength of information provided us by the State Department regarding conditions resulting from suspension of shipments of oil and consequent unemployment, the Navy Department has sent two gunboats there to be ready for possible disturbances requiring their attention," Secretary of the Navy Denby said.

"The gunboats have their orders to station themselves outside the three-mile limit at Tampico and there await developments," he added. "They have full authority to take whatever steps are necessary for protection of American property. It simply is a precautionary measure."

HOW UNCLE SAM GETS HIS MONEY.

Total tax receipts by the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30th were $4,598,933,248, of which $3,212,713,489 was derived from income and profit taxes, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has announced.

The statement was based on Collectors' telegrams of June 30th, it was said, and it was explained it might be necessary to make slight changes.

The statement showed that of the total collected, New York, with $1,124,351,706, paid more than one-fourth and led all states. Of New York's total, $804,355,604 came from income and profit tax. Pennsylvania came second, with $487,711,269, of which $351,383,599 was from income and profits tax. Illinois, with a total of $387,783,983, of which $300,300,282 was collected from incomes and profits, ranked third in the list.

Others in the order of which their payments ranked, with the total collected and the amount from income and profit taxes were Ohio, $284,532,306 and $203,208,385; Michigan, $271,997,771 and $183,862,453; Massachusetts, $258,902,844 and $214,062,847; California, $181,313,722 and $127,423,338; New Jersey, $142,806,951 and $97,380,894; Missouri, $135,451,231 and $86,121,143, and North Carolina, $124,510,451 and $38,669,057. North Carolina in addition to ranking tenth, according to the amount collected, led all Southern states.

Among remaining states were: Indiana, $49,785,173 and $77,354,934; Kentucky, $25,090,385 and $50,391,608, and West Virginia, $35,802,975 and $41,551,661.

EUROPE FALLING BEHIND IN INTEREST PAYMENTS.

Approximately $1,000,000,000 interest was owed to the United States by European debtor nations up to May 15, Treasury officials told the Senate Finance Committee in explaining his bill to give to the Secretary of the Treasury broad authority in funding allied debts. The Assistant Secretary placed the amount of interest due at $943,534,750.

Secretary Andrew J. Mellon told the committee that no suggestion has been made that the United States accept German reparation bonds as substitutes for allied obligations, and declared that the Treasury had no intention of viewing any such proposal.

Secretary Mellon said the only funding negotiations entered into were with Great Britain and that they had been of a preliminary nature.

Questioned specifically as to the provision of the bill authorizing the Treasury to accept bonds on any foreign country in lieu of those of the debtor nations, the Treasury Secretary said he thought "it necessary that the authority be made broad enough to take care of any contingency that might arise."

"There is nothing specifically contemplated along that line," he added, "but it is deemed to be advisable that the authority be given."

The Turkish National Government in Angora, according to reports from Constantinople, has demanded that Sultan Mohammed VI abdicate.

The latter has replied he was ready to abdicate in favor of any member of the imperial family, with the exception of Prince Abdul Medjid, the legal heir, who belongs to the Nationalist party, and it is Abdul Medjid whom the Nationalists wish to see on the throne.

Reports from Moscow state that Lenine and Trotzky have had a difference of opinion and that Trotzky has been imprisoned.

Five persons are known to be dead and fifty others are injured seriously when an army bombing plane crashed into a crowd of spectators at Langlin Field, Moundsville, W. Va.

The plane was circling the field preparatory to taking off for Washington, and according to the statement of Lieutenant McPherson, the controls stalled and the plane crashed head-on into a line of automobiles.

As it hit, the fuel tank burst and exploded, spraying burning gasoline in all directions, and setting fire to fifteen automobiles. Several score men, women and children, many of them with their clothing in flames, were dragged out of burning automobiles, fifteen of which were destroyed.

Successful eye grafting was described by Dr. Koppanyi in a lecture before the Vienna Biological Society last week.

He said that he had transplanted new eyes in blind fish and rats, successfully joining the optic nerves so that subjects regained sight.

Dr. Koppanyi sketched a method by which he said it would be possible to restore partial sight to blinded soldiers if others could be found willing to sacrifice an eye for the purpose.

Stromboli, the volcano situated on the island of the same name off the northern coast of Sicily, has burst into activity. The eruptions began with a violent explosion that was heard a great distance, and the people are abandoning their homes and fleeing to Sicily.

GRACE FOR GARDENS.

BY LOUISE DRISCOLL.

Lord God in Paradise,
 Look upon our sowing;
 Bless the little gardens
 And the good green growing!
 Give us sun,
 Give us rain,
 Bless the orchards
 And the grain!

Lord God in Paradise,
 Please bless the beans and peas,
 Give us corn full on the ear—
 We will praise thee, Lord, for these!
 Bless the blossom
 And the root,
 Bless the seed
 And the fruit!

Lord God in Paradise,
 Over my brown field is seen,
 Trembling and adventuring,
 A miracle of green,
 Send such grace
 As you know,
 To keep it safe
 And make it grow!

Lord God in Paradise,
 For the wonder of the seed,
 Wondering, we praise you, while
 We tell you of our need.
 Look down from Paradise,
 Look upon our sowing.
 Bless the little gardens
 And the good green growing!
 Give us sun,
 Give us rain,
 Bless the orchards
 And the grain!

CHARLOTTEES.

The charlotte russe makes an attractive dessert, and it really is very little more trouble to make than the pastry desserts. And now that the various fresh fruits are coming into the markets, an almost endless variety can be arranged.

The individual charlotte russe is always the nicest one, as it can be served quickly without any muss or fuss.

The charlotte russe, as the housewife knows them, are not the cakes with whipped cream in the little paper bandeau—the ones that are sold in the confectioners and bakeries, but rather a mixture prepared in a dish that has been lined with lady fingers, etc., and then covered with whipped cream.

Strawberry Charlottees. — First there must be a sponge cake mixture prepared and baked and I have found that the iron popover pan makes an ideal-sized cake, so use this pan for baking the individual cake. The large-size pan will make eleven cakes.

Place in a mixing bowl three-quarters cup of sugar, yolks of three eggs. Cream until light lemon color, and then add six tablespoons of cold water, one and one-quarter cups of flour, three level teaspoons of baking powder.

Beat to a smooth mix and then cut and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs, turn into a well-greased and floured popover pan and bake in a moderate oven for eighteen minutes. Let the cakes cool, then while they are cooling soak two tablespoons of gelatin in six tablespoons of cold water for fifteen minutes, in a cup, and then put the cup in a pan of warm water to heat slowly until melted. Strain into a bowl and add two-thirds cup of powdered sugar, two-thirds cup of crushed strawberries, rubbed through a sieve. Let cool and then just as it is beginning to set, whip to a stiff froth and remove the beater and fold in the meringe, made of one-third glass of apple or quince jelly, white of one egg. Beat until the mixture holds its shape with a dover-style egg beater. Now cut a slice from the small end of the little sponge cakes and carefully scoop out the centers with a teaspoon and fill with the prepared meringe; fill in high on top of the cake. Garnish with a large strawberry. Other fruits may be used in place of the strawberry when in season.

Charlotte Chantilly.—Prepare the individual cakes as for the strawberry charlotte, and while the cakes are cooling soak three tablespoons of gelatin in two-thirds cup of milk for fifteen minutes and then beat slowly to boiling point. Strain into the mixing bowl and chill just as it begins to set. Whip with a dover-style egg beater until fluffy and then fold in one cup of whipped and well-sweetened cream. Fill the cakes with this mixture and pile up quite high. Garnish with either fresh fruit or a maraschino cherry.

* * *

Orange Charlotte.—Prepare the cakes in the usual manner and then pare and dice three oranges. Soak two tablespoons of gelatin in two-thirds cup of orange juice for ten minutes and then heat slowly to melt. Strain into a bowl and add four tablespoons of sugar and let stand until just beginning to set. Add the prepared, diced oranges and fill into the prepared cakes. Garnish the top with whipped and sweetened cream and sprinkle with finely chopped nuts.

* * *

Charlotte Sandrigham.—For this style of charlotte bake the sponge cake in an oblong pan and have the mixture about one inch thick. Bake the cake early in the morning so that it is at least six hours old. Cut in four-inch squares and then split each square in three slices. Spread each slice with jelly and then cover with finely chopped nuts and then with English cream. Repeat and then spread the top slice with English cream and then pile high with sweetened whipped cream and garnish with a maraschino cherry.

Norfolk Charlotte.—Bake a sponge cake mixture in the round pan and have it one day old. Now, with a sharp knife, split the cake, making three thin layers. Spread first layer with orange marmalade, then sprinkle with finely chopped nuts, then spread with English cream. Now place a thin layer of the following mixture over the English cream: One-quarter cup of crystallized ginger, one cup of seedless raisins, one cup of finely chopped citron. Mix well—this amount is for the entire charlotte.

Then place the second layer of the cake in position and repeat the filling as for the first layer. Then repeat until the three layers are in position. Cover the top of the charlotte with one cup of sweetened whipped cream. This charlotte is cut into eight portions, just like pie.

Swedish Charlottees.—Soak one envelope of gelatin in one-half cup of cold water for fifteen minutes and then place the cup containing the gelatin in hot water bath to melt the gelatin and strain into a bowl. Add one-half cup of powdered sugar, one cup of scalded and cooled milk. Mix until the sugar is dissolved and then let stand in a cool place until just beginning to set. Fold in one cup of whipped cream and one teaspoon of vanilla extract. Turn in an oblong pan and set aside to mold.

Bake the sponge cake mixture in an oblong pan and have the cake about one inch thick. When cold, cut the cake and gelatin mixture in squares. Lift the gelatin mixture on the cake and then pile high with Saledonian cream and sprinkle with finely chopped nuts. Garnish with either fresh berries or maraschino cherries.

Flemish Charlottees.—Cut squares of sponge cake and place on individual dishes. Now place in a saucepan one and one-half cups of sugar, one-half cup of orange juice. Bring to a boil and cook for five minutes. Pour over the cakes and proportion the sirup evenly over the six squares. Cover the cakes with any fresh fruit desired and pile each piece high with whipped and sweetened cream. Garnish each piece with three sections of orange.

CHEESE STRAWS.

Six ounces of flour, two tablespoonfuls of cream, three ounces of grated cheese, two tablespoonfuls of butter, salt, pepper nutmeg.

Sift the flour upon a board, make a well in the center, into this put the cream, Parmesan or other dry cheese, butter, half a level teaspoon of salt, a quarter of a saltspoon of pepper and the same of grated nutmeg, together with as much cayenne as you can take up on a small pen-knife blade.

Mix to a firm paste, knead well, roll out an eighth of an inch thick and with a sharp knife or pastry jigger cut it in straws about eight inches long and a quarter of an inch wide. Lay the strips carefully on a buttered tin, and bake them to a light straw color in a moderate oven.

These are a good accompaniment to salad and may be served as a course at dinner with or without crackers, but always with a dressed green salad or with plain celery.

ZEAL OR TACT.

BY LILLIE RICE STAHL.

The individual who is full of tact is to be envied. Not everybody is possessed of this rare quality. I call it talent. An occasional minister has it. All do not. We recall the case of Mr. Moody, who made friends with the poor little street Arabs, and played marbles with them on the street, and gave them little peanut treats, and induced them to attend his ragged Sunday school. Here was tact of a fine quality. It is well to know how to talk religion to the careless. We once had a minister's wife who was always saying the wrong thing at the wrong time. Her husband never remained but a few years in one charge. She was burning with love and religious zeal, but she was over zealous and disgusted young people.

A man has been canvassing our community in the interest of a college endowment. He is successful, for he is the right man for the place. He is big-hearted and joyful, jolly and sympathetic, and strongly tactful. He was working a wealthy rural community, where farmers were busy with fall work. He did not sit in the house and talk, but borrowed some blue denims and husked during the day and held meetings each night. Of course the brothers all gave to the endowment, and how his tactful method advertised this college.

People who are generous-minded are usually the ones to carry around subscription papers. Our village was building a certain church, and the canvassers went out on a drive for shekels. A plain, pious woman called at our house, and my grandfather was engaged in the field. She was resourceful in plans and trudged through the plowed ground to ask him for a subscription. Of course she received it.

It is poor policy to dun a hungry person or one who is tired. There is a time and a place for doing all things. Men who are out for office are usually far-seeing in these little touches of human nature.

When a pastor wants to talk of spiritual things, he will not bother a mother whose child has the measles! He will not hinder men when threshing nor butchering. When harvest is pressing, he should not delay people when they are rushed. When conducting family worship, it is not best to select the longest chapter in the Bible if his host and his sons are in a hurry.

As a profession, I think most physicians are full of tact, for they have cranky patients to deal with. I heard an invalid say of her trained nurse, "She is full of professional hardness." A nurse said to me once, "I don't care how much I hurt you, for you can stand it." A skilled surgeon in our county seat is not liked, for his patients say of him, "Dr. Jinkins likes the knife."

WIT AND WISDOM

A MIXED BOLSHEVIK.

Our glorious republic is now clouded by a greater storm than the chain of Prussian autocracy in the form of the crouching lion of the East—Bolshevism. Now is the time for each of us to crush this poisonous serpent beneath our heel.—Quoted from a Memorial Day address at Northfield Falls, Mass.

THE DRUGGIST'S TURN.

The druggist danced and chortled till the bottles danced on the shelves.

"What's up?" asked the soda clerk.

"Have you been taking something?"

No. But do you remember when our water pipes were frozen last winter?"

"Yes, but what—"

"Well, the plumber who fixed them has just come in to have a prescription filled."

—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

"A friend," said Uncle Eben, "is a man dat laughs at yoh funny stories, even if dey ain't so good, an' sympathizes wif yoh misfortunes, even if dey ain't so bad."—Washington Star.

"Keep your ear to the ground, my boy, keep your ear to the ground."

"A fellow can't keep his ear to the ground and his nose to the grindstone at the same time."—Exchange.

Visitor—Nice dog! Have you taught him any new tricks since I was here last?
Miss Smart—Oh, yes, if you just whistle he'll fetch your hat.—Boston Transcript.

—The Facts—

During the Spring Quarter at Hanover College:

The Library Reading Room was too small to accommodate the students seeking to work there;

The Chapel could not seat all students and faculty at the daily chapel service;

Many classes were over-crowded due to lack of the proper number of teachers; several had more than 50 members each, one had 65; several teachers carried extra work;

The 1920-21 enrollment was 20 per cent larger than the enrollment of the preceding year; the 1921 summer quarter attendance is 50 per cent larger than the 1920 summer attendance.

These young men and women are well prepared for the college, they are of the best American stock, they are fired with ambition. They are coming to college, not sent. They deserve the best possible nurture.

The Presbyterian Church has in these Hanover students precisely the opportunity for the educational program to which the Church is committed. HERE is the OPPORTUNITY: NOW, not later, is the TIME.

CHURCH AND COLLEGE are depending on INDIVIDUAL PRESBYTERIANS TO SUPPLY THE FUNDS NECESSARY for doing this work at Hanover in keeping with PRESBYTERIAN STANDARDS.

The Question: Will Presbyterians complete the proper endowment of Hanover College at once, in order that she may take care of her students in Presbyterian fashion?

OUR EXCHANGES

A DOUBLE MISSION.

The two great works of the Church are evangelism and instruction, or preaching and teaching. The aim of preaching or evangelism is to persuade human souls to embrace Jesus Christ as Savior. The purpose of instruction or teaching is to prepare the way for, and to accompany preaching. The Christian college both persuades and instructs.—Presbyterian.

A CONUNDRUM.

Hard, Harder, Hardest.—“Why is history hard?”

“Well, we've had a stone age, a bronze age, and an iron age, and now we're in a hard-boiled age.”—Siren.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

There has been a notable change in educational ideals. For a time vocational training has been emphasized. Education has been held up as a financial asset, whereby the youth of the land may be fitted into the economic scheme of the state. But educators are beginning to see that the child does not exist for the state, that broader ideals of service must prevail and that education must issue in character. This is the time for the Church to stress Christian education as the realization in us of the mind of Christ.—Lutheran.

HIGH COST OF LIVING.

Notwithstanding they were comrades during the late war, Mr. Retail Price doesn't want to recognize Mr. Wholesale Price now.—Toledo Blade.

THE MARKS OF A GOOD COLLEGE.

It insists on sound training. It sets up a high standard of morals. It depends more on teachers than on laboratories. It prefers that students pay their fees, but is inflexible in requiring that they study their books. It is not anxious to graduate its students prematurely. It teaches as many valuable lessons outside the classrooms as in them. It encourages real revivals of religion. It welcomes students who must work their way through. It spends as much money on its library as on its athletic field. It prefers quality to quantity in its enrollment. It is willing to be a college instead of a sham university. It believes that knowledge, added to character will provide the ideal career.—St. Louis Advocate.

WHAT WE FOUGHT FOR.

Those who are now declaring that we went into the World War to “save democracy” or European civilization, overlook the fact that this government had no right to conscript a man to go to war for anything but the national defense * * * The doctrine that we were in the European war to fight for any mere theory of government or any non-American interest is and always has been bunk * * * Tremendous injury has been done to the American cause in this war by misstatements of American justification for participation in it.—National Republican.

FIRST THINGS FIRST.

There are many departments of life in which the Church must necessarily be interested. The important thing is to keep these matters in their proper place. They are secondary, not primary. They should claim time and thought and interest, but never to the neglect of that fundamental work of pleading with men in Christ's behalf.—United Presbyterian.

NO JOKE.

Not only has Admiral Sims been recalled, he also will be recalled long after most of his critics have been safely forgotten.—Free Press.

A SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN OPINION.

Once upon a time, to see a church and a school house side by side, was proof, almost positive, that the church was Presbyterian.

Then came a period of resting upon our oars, of living upon our past reputation. Other denominations, learning a lesson from us, gradually usurped the position in the educational world once occupied by us, while we fell to the rear.—Presbyterian Standard.

IDEALISM AND FACT.

Unless the churches can appeal to men's minds as well as to their hearts, they will sooner or later be set aside as mere temples of rhetoric or turned into secular civic welfare clubs.—Independent.

TESTIMONY OF THE SPADE.

Never before were there such archeological discoveries in almost every ancient land, many of them directly bearing upon the Old and New Testament history. A single one like the code of Hammurabi proving the law was before the prophets, blows up the foundations of destructive criticism, not one, as Prof. Sayce, probably the highest authority in archeology says, discredits a single statement of the Bible. How can authors be thought scholarly and up to date who utterly ignore all the new evidence and owlishly repeat statements these discoveries have made ridiculous and false?—Eastern Methodist.

TO AVOID CONFUSION.

There is talk of a building strike in the near future. Bricklayers would have to wear red rosettes or something to indicate that they were not working.—London Opinion.

EDUCATION AND SALVATION.

Just at present there seems to be a tendency to over-emphasize, at least by comparison, the value of secular learning. Southern Baptists are actually giving more to our schools than to preach the Gospel to all the earth. Without doubt our schools are well worthy of all they are getting, but they should not get more than our mission interests. Between the salvation of a lost soul and the higher education of a saved man the choice should be easy, provided we had to choose. No denomination has ever prospered or can long prosper that puts education above evangelism.—Western Recorder.

WORK AND PLAY.

“All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy.” What does all play and no work make him? If Jack is more than a child, a program of all play makes a fool of him. And if his father pays the bills so that the son can do nothing but play, Jack becomes a gilded fool—which is a fool at his worse.—Christian World.

ENSIGN JO AT BLACKBURN

“Bob” Allison, who played alongside of me on the football team at Blackburn, says in his great story in The American Magazine, “Everybody has his handicap in life.” “Bob” didn't realize this until he lost his arm, but I wakened up to mine a lot earlier than that when I lost my father and mother. I was so small I don't remember anything about either of them, except what the neighbors told me. I don't seem to have any grandparents, or uncles or aunts, for I was set adrift and for a good many years I was tossed about as seemed to suit the whims of a hard world.

When I got to Carlinville, Illinois, and entered Blackburn I thought I had lost part of my handicap, for it was the first place I have ever known that seemed like home. And what a good time I have had there. Work and study and play, but just to be frank with you, I've always liked the play best. Probably that's why I have been captain both of the baseball and the football teams. When I left college to enter the navy, I was able to make the first team at Great Lakes and I had a good time there at football. But in addition to that, when I came back to Blackburn I brought with me a commission as ensign in Uncle Sam's fleet. After awhile I am going to finish the course here and no matter what the future may have in store for me, I shall always think of dear old Blackburn as the place that gave me an opportunity to fit myself to do something worth while in the world.

I should be glad to have you share in this great work that is making possible the education of many young people, who otherwise would not get an education.

Address: President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois.

"A WARLESS WORLD BY 1923."

The International Christian Endeavor Convention, which held its meeting in New York City, expressed the widely developed Christian spirit of the day by choosing as its slogan, upon adjournment, the words: "A Warless World by 1923." It will be remembered that the convention of 1911 fell in with the determined Christian and moral sentiment of that day by choosing for its slogan: "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." As that hope was more than realized, so is it the expectation that in two years some plan may be agreed upon by civilized nations that will eliminate wars from their programs, and that will do away with armaments, on land and sea, save for policing the world against the lawless and uncivilized.

The proposal made to the great powers by President Harding for the calling of an international convention for the consideration of world disarmament is a move in the right direction, that has met with a wide approval, and that promises gratifying results in the near future. There should certainly be a speedy agreement among the great nations to end war, as a method of dealing with one another in case of difficulty. It is the most senseless, expensive and destructive method that could possibly be imagined. Intelligent nations can surely agree upon some form of international courts, and for the enforcing of their decrees, without resorting to the mutually destructive procedure of war.

We scarcely understand, even yet, how near we came to world bankruptcy in the late terrible struggle. The plea of President Harding before the Senate the other day revealed some of the raw edges of our own nation's financial peril. The financial danger of the Allied nations is partially revealed in the fact that at the present time they are behind with even the interest they owe our country to the amount of over one billion dollars. The matter of governmental concern in every civilized country today is how to get back to safe conditions.

How suicidal and senseless, in these circumstances, for the nations to pile up taxation and expenditures for armaments to the mountain heights of billions for the tax-burdened people to bear. Every sane and moral consideration calls for agreements for world-wide peace.

Drought conditions are prevailing and threatening in England and Holland and Belgium and France, as they have been in China and India, and if we are wise and humane, the civilized world will give their energies to the production of food and conservation of life, rather than to arming against manufactured or imaginary enemies. The high function of nations today is in feeding the starving, relieving the suffering and the oppressed, the prevention of ruin to the defenseless, and the conservation of life and peace everywhere.

The carrying of weapons by private citizens has been done away with, and dueling has been discarded as a relic of barbarism. What individuals may not do, nations should not do. There should be the settlement of difficulties, by means of courts, by all civilized nations, and a united enforcement of justice against all peoples that choose to follow criminal and barbaric courses. It can be done, and the convention that President Harding is considering with other nations can agree upon a proper plan.

So let us all unite in working and praying for "A Warless World in 1923." Within two years a basis can be found and adopted by the sorely-stricken and heavily-burdened nations, and may God guide them to the adoption of a plan that he can bless.

TRYING TIMES.

Northern Baptists looked forward to the meeting of the Des Moines Convention with considerable alarm. There was talk of division, but conservative leaders holding that the great majority of ministers and members are conservative, determined on a vigorous statement of fundamental doctrines. This was adopted at the pre-convention conference. President Massee declared that the denominational schools once stood for faith, but many of them, now wealthy and with self-perpetuating trustees, want to do as they please and they please to reject Christ for the rationalistic theories which ruined Germany.

Speaking as to the possibility of division, he feared that the Board of Promotion has become in fact a Board of Control, and that Northern Baptist officialdom refuses to commend men who are theological conservatives. He described what he called the erection of an ecclesiastical machine by the radicals, and said that the chief means used was patronage. "The liberties of no people have been lost suddenly. Gradually, by insistent, lop-sidedness, such results are accomplished, till in the end mass movements under centralized control displace liberty and democracy."

Reports from conventions of other denominations indicate a like feeling and fear of centralization of power and the tolerance of loose views of inspiration. One writer says: "It is an age of tall talk, extravagance and carelessness as to truth."

An interesting item in the reports of the Baptist Conference which we have seen in several papers, is the statement that new theology speakers occupied an undue proportion of the time and received the loudest applause. A reporter says: "As often happens in such cases, much of it voiced the group opinion which the vote later showed to be less than ten per cent of the body of brethren present."

Another says: "At least three-fourths of the Baptists in the Northern Convention are as loyal to New Testament teachings. A one-tenth minority, out of one thousand or more voting, vociferously opposed the Christ-honoring effort of the Conference to adopt a Confession. This they did with so much noise that one would have thought they were about half the gathering. It took the vote to smoke them out."

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

The Daily Vacation Bible School is a comparatively new institution, but it is growing in the favor and appreciation of the churches, the number of these schools increasing very rapidly from year to year.

The plan, in general, is that of having a school for religious instruction for about six weeks, during the summer, or vacation time, ordinarily held in the church and usually under the superintendence of the pastor, or some one equally interested and responsible, assisted by a number of interested and interesting teachers. For several hours a day the school is open. There are certain delightful, entertaining exercises, pleasing all the children, but the main thing is to teach the Bible and the Catechism, in a more thorough and substantial way than they can be taught in the brief and hurried time of the weekly Sabbath school. Being kept at it continuously, the attention is held day after day, and more is oftentimes accomplished in six weeks than is accomplished in a whole year of the Sabbath school.

Ten or twelve years ago our Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, seeing that such schools were carried on in certain neglected neighborhoods by intelligent and consecrated Christian workers, for the benefit of the children to whom the long summer was a weariness, without any pleasing recreation, conceived the idea of developing the plan and of securing literature on the subject and making out a program and a method for regular work.

The General Assembly of 1917 committed the joint oversight of a Daily Vacation Bible School movement to the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work and the Board of Home Missions. In the summer of 1919 over two hundred Presbyterian Daily Vacation Bible Schools reported an active enrollment of more than 16,000 boys and girls; 3,500 of whom were not in attendance on any church school.

Since then the schools have been increasing in number and attendance. Sometimes a community had only one such school, and that in a mission church for the poorer class of children. Now it has come to pass that many cities or towns have many such schools each, and perhaps hundreds of thousands of children are enjoying the benefits of them this summer.

If the prime object of these schools is kept before the Church, as a religious opportunity to instruct and reach the children of the church, and those outside the Church, in the things of the Gospel, there is the possibility of regaining much lost ground or getting on to new ground. Much of the work in the Sabbath schools is, asknowledgedly, lacking in thoroughness and spiritual power. A few selected teachers may do more that is fundamentally valuable and effective in a single term of the Vacation Bible School than is sometimes done in a whole year of the Sabbath school. It is to be seen if the tremendously important opportunity is taken advantage of in the name of Jesus Christ.

The long vacation of summer is a tremendously long time to many or most children. The pleasing diversion of a six weeks' daily vacation Bible school is gladly welcomed by many. The financing of the school may be a small daily contribution from each child, or by a number of persons in the church, who will be glad to further the school as a religious institution.

LANE SEMINARY.

Lane Seminary has filled two of its chairs with new men who will prove we doubt not, to be valuable and attractive in their departments. Both are alumni of the Seminary, who have approved themselves in their work in the Church in the ministry as they did while students in the Seminary. They will fill vacancies caused by the resignations of Dr. S. F. Vance and Dr. F. P. Cheek.

Rev. Frank Granstaff, D.D., of Springfield, O., will have the Chair of Homiletics and Apologetics. As an excellent sermonizer and evangelist, conservative and clear in thought and expression, he is fitted to be a successful teacher of these subjects. He is a graduate of Muskingum College. For a year he had experience as a public school superintendent. He has been the successful pastor at College Corner, O., Fifth Church of Cincinnati; Second Church of Newark, O.; Avalon, Pa., and at Springfield, O., and as an evangelist closely associated with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman.

Rev. Julian Price Love, is a more recent graduate of the Seminary, in which he had high standing in scholarship, and comes from the pastorate of the Fourth Church of Dayton, O., to the department of New Testament Greek and New Testament English. This is a very attractive and important position to which he will come with real enthusiasm and ability.

Dr. Finis K. Farr retains the Chair of Old Testament Literature and Exegesis, and Old Testament English where he always does good work.

Dr. John V. Stephens has been in the department of Church History for many years and will continue there as a helpful and attractive teacher.

Dr. William McKibbin, President of the Seminary will continue to give valuable instruction in Systematic Theology and Pastorate Theology.

The Seminary is thus adapted to furnish exactly the sort of leadership and instruction that our young men need to fit them for practical and useful life in the ministry, and the soundly conservative, evangelical and evangelistic spirit that obtains in the very atmosphere of Lane will help to give them the start they need in preaching the Gospel so as to win souls to Jesus Christ.

BOLDNESS AND RECKLESSNESS.

The Continent comments the resignation of S. Earl Taylor as secretary of the Foreign Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his retirement from active church leadership. It speaks of his leadership in the Centenary and Inter-church movement, and says: "There was one misfortunate defect in the leader's makeup—he did not know where the line is drawn between boldness and recklessness."

The Presbyterian Banner approves this; but says: "We can hardly agree, however, that the only defect was that Dr. Taylor did not know where the line is drawn between boldness and recklessness. We believe that the secret of failure was in a false conception of the source and center of real power. We do not say this by way of criticism, except in so far as that criticism can be made of all our failures. The church has been and is depending too much on human wisdom, power and enterprise and we need to appropriate the message of God to Zerubbabel, by the prophet Zechariah, when he said, 'Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.'"

It seems to us that the Continent's statement is the exact explanation and that the Banner's comment simply illustrated it.

HANOVER COLLEGE.

We hope that the advertisements of Hanover College, that are appearing weekly, may attract the attention of generous givers among our loyal Presbyterians and lead them to help this institution to secure the half-million dollars that is imperatively needed and that is almost within reach. Help given now means ten times the face of the amount that is given. It will pay these who love the cause of Christian education to give just now and here.

If one must judge colleges by college papers, the chief end of many of them is sport. In half a dozen such papers recently examined, more than two-thirds of the space is devoted to athletics. Physical culture, of course, has its place, but so have mental and spiritual culture. Moreover, there is no physical culture in watching a ball game. In many cases a few men overexercise, and hundreds look on and exercise only their lungs and tongues.

Good people need to organize when evil people conspire, and they are usually conspiring. So is it said by an American resident in Japan of the people there. The military class, a minority, are the ones making the trouble, in opposition to the wishes of the great majority of the people, who are friendly to America and who wish to treat the people of China and Korea in a kind and friendly way. Most of the Japanese people are for peace and friendship, this being the prevailing characteristic of the nation. But they are not organized to make themselves felt, while the severe and ambitious military element is organized and in temporary power.

This should be borne in mind as we think of Japan. It may be that the better element will be able to express itself and to control the situation after a time.

Rev. Dr. J. R. Mitchell, of Manistique, made a protest against a brutal prize-fight which was staged as a part of the Fourth of July celebration at the fair-ground in that city, and his protest, in noble, elegant and forceful language, was printed in the Manistique Pioneer-Tribune. But his plea for good morals and good citizenship had the same effect as that of other good men in New Jersey. The low element is doing its best to brutalize and degrade the nation and is crying "blue-laws" at any attempt to prevent the degradation.

Last year was the greatest year for evangelistic effort and success in the history of our evangelical Protestant churches of the United States. Our own Presbyterian churches received more members this last year than in any one year in its history. It is said that over two million members were received by all the evangelical churches. It was hoped by many that there would come a time of revival to the churches in our country, following the war. Occasionally someone says that there has been disappointment in this matter. But, if the facts are considered, it will be seen that there has not been disappointment, but cause for most abounding gratitude and joy.

Dr. Edgar P. Hill, General Secretary of our Presbyterian Board of Education, reported fifty-seven Presbyterian colleges in his address at the General Assembly. Many of these colleges are seeking very earnestly for enlarged endowments at the present time. A systematic campaign is on in the Church for assisting these colleges, to be continued for a number of years, a certain number having their turn each year. It is a most important duty, for the sake of the Church and the country, to provide the funds that these institutions imperatively need.

We have been hearing for some weeks of trouble in the Northern Baptist Convention over a large gift to the Baptist Home Mission Society under conditions which limited its use to the teaching of evangelical doctrine. Now comes news that it amounts to $1,750,000 and has been accepted, and that "no part of the income can be used in paying the salaries or expenses of missionaries or colporteurs who do not believe in the inspiration and supreme authority of the Holy Scriptures; the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, his incarnation, atoning death, bodily resurrection and return, and in the church on earth composed of the redeemed, who are commissioned to make their chief business the evangelization of the world." There are intimations that this is an attack of the liberty of missionaries and on Chicago University. However, such bequests with conditions are common. Men who believe in the Gospel and leave money to propagate it have a right to make sure that it will not be diverted. To use money so given to teach a rationalistic theology would be a perversion of trust.

Amid all the perils of the present day, that are threatening our modern civilization, let us not forget to put our trust in God, and make our prayers to him. Notwithstanding all the commotions God reigns, and he must reign and he will reign. Our hope is in God.

BLESSINGS DIVINE.

BY LILLIAN F. LEWIS.

Wider throw open thy windows, O soul,
See in the heavens what beauties unroll;
Fear not their glories of promise to face:
Let in the wealth of his sunshine and grace.

God would abundantly pardon and bless,
Lighten thy darkness, relieve thy distress;
Pure are the currents that come from above; Open thy windows, breathe deep of his love.

LISTENING TO GOD'S CALL.

(Gen. 12.)

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

Our next "Great Bible Chapter" introduces us to one of the towering Bible characters, Abraham, called the "Father of the Faithful." About twelve chapters of the Book of Genesis are devoted to the story of Abraham's life.

Notice, first, Abraham's call to a most commanding and conspicuous honor.

"Now the Lord had said to Abram, Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kingdom, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will shew thee: and I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing: and I will bless them that bless thee, and curse him that curseth thee; and in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12: 1-3).

Here is a message to an individual from God himself. Notice that Christ wants us before he wants anything that we have. The Master is come and calleth for thee. Our heart's love, our personal dedication of ourselves—that is the Master's first requirement.

Can I, can you say truthfully that Jesus Christ comes to us as individuals today, as he did, in the long ago, to Abraham, and calls us to be his followers and obedient servants, to execute special commissions, to do special work in his name? I believe we can truthfully say so.

The Word of God teaches it. He came with special messages to Adam, to Noah, to Abraham, to Moses, to Joshua, to David, to Jeremiah, to Ezekiel, to John the Baptist, to the Apostles Peter, James, Thomas, Paul. He spoke to them as individuals. He gave each of them work adapted to their talents and opportunities. He had a special message for each of these men.

When John Knox was sitting in a Christian congregation as one of the worshippers the preacher said, singling him out and calling him by name:

"John Knox, you are called of God to minister to this people, and to break to them the bread of everlasting life."

Then, addressing himself to the congregation, he said:

"Was not this your charge unto me? and do ye not approve this call?" They all answered, "It was; and we approve it."

Knox's evident fitness for this important position had already been shown in his able lectures on biblical themes which had been heard by many in the congregation, including the minister himself, and his marked ability had commended itself to all as an evidence that God was calling him to higher service. (See McCrie's Life of John Knox, p. 47.)

Dr. Charles Sheldon tells us that one of his classmates had firmly decided to be a merchant. Circumstances called him to take a foreign trip before entering actively upon his mercantile career. While traveling in the heart of one of the great heathen nations he heard God speaking to him to change the plan of his life. He saw the absence of many blessings which had enriched his own life and made it worth while. The ignorance, the wretchedness, the godlessness of the pagan peoples appealed to him, and he came back home to give up a money-making career for that of a foreign missionary, in which he has found success and happiness.

In George Eliot's "Adam Bede" the young woman preacher, Dinah Morris, tells of her call to the ministry. The minister who was expected to preach on a certain Sabbath morning was taken ill. She went to tell the congregation of his illness and inability to meet his appointment.

"But as I passed along by the cottages and saw the aged, trembling women at the doors and the hard looks of the men who seemed to have their eyes no more filled with the sight of the Sabbath morning than if they had been dumb oxen that never looked up to the sky, I felt a great movement in my soul, and I trembled as if I was shaken by a strong spirit entering into my weak body, and I went to where the little flock of people were gathered, and stepped upon the low wall that was built against the green hillside, and I spoke the words that were given to me abundantly. And they all came round me out of all the cottages, and many wept over their sins. This was the beginning of my preaching, sir, and I've preached ever since" (page 78).

Believe me, God has a call for every man and woman, first, to believe on his Son Jesus Christ, and, secondly, to cooperate with Christ in self-denying service. Conscience calls you, reason calls you, love calls you to give up sin and believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. The Word of God, the Holy Spirit, the church, all heavenly and holy voices unite in appealing to you to yield yourself in glad surrender and loving obedience to the Savior of mankind. Your own best interests, your own truest happiness, your safety from sin's enthralling and polluting power all urge your immediate decision to be a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. These calls, so many, so urgent, so loving, come to us through a thousand avenues, but, in whatever way it comes, the call is God's call to your soul.

Let us not be dull of hearing. We ought to live so near Christ that we will clearly hear his call.

On the coast of Maine lived a fisherman, who, one afternoon, took his little daughter out to sea with him in his boat. Wishing to go farther from shore, he left her upon a rock which rose out of the sea. She seemed safe enough, but he had not calculated on the heavy mists which fell and hid everything from view. Besides, while he was gone, the tide arose so that on his return he not only could not find the place where he had left his child, but the rising tide had covered it and washed her into the deep. Sad, indeed, was the experience of that old fisherman. His hair turned white in a night, and he kept saying over and over again:

"Oh, that I had kept near enough to hear her call!"

Let us not be led away from duty and from God. Sin dulls our ears to God's call. Our only safety is in obeying every slightest whisper of the Holy Spirit.

"God calling yet! Shall I not hear?
Earth's pleasures shall I still hold dear?
Shall life's swift passing years all fly,
And still my soul in slumbers lie?
"God calling yet! Shall I not rise?
Can I his loving voice despise,
And basely his kind care repay?
He calls me still; can I delay?
"God calling yet! and shall he knock,
And I my heart the closer lock?
He still is waiting to receive,
And shall I dare his spirit grieve?"
Colorado Springs, Col.

CHOICE AND CHARACTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM S. JEROME.

"Ask what I shall give thee." This was God's offer to Solomon, and it is also his offer to us. Perhaps we think that nobody but the famous king had such an offer and opportunity. But if so, we are very much mistaken. To every one, every day, comes that same gracious offer—what do you want of God? What do you ask of him? And by the decisions that we make, the choices that are ours, we are answering these questions.

For choice involves character, reveals character, determines character. There can be no character where there is no choice. We must have at least two alternatives, and have the power to choose between them, before we can be said to possess character. "Hobson's choice," is no choice at all, and where there is no choice, there can be no decision, and where there can be no decision there can be no character.

Choice therefore, reveals character. Decision expresses desire, and what we want shows what we are. To give a man his choice is to give him a chance to show what he is. "There is nothing so truly a man's own as his choice." Because they are free and voluntary, they reveal the real man. If we are knaves and fools, the fact may remain long hidden, but the question—what do you want? instantly reveals the truth. What we desire and enjoy is chiefly determined by what we are. That is why our amusements are the unmistakable index of our characters. A young man once said, "The truth is, I prefer what is called low company." Could any words more accurately express his actual character, his real disposition?

But not only does choice reveal character. Choice largely determines character. This is the law of "the reaction of the ideal." What we constantly seek and choose, helps to make us into the likeness of what we desire. Each foolish or wrong choice helps to make the next choice easier. Repeated decisions make further decisions more natural, "as streams their channels deeper wear." We may think and say that in the great crises of life, when the call comes to make a great decision, we will choose wisely and well. But by our repeated choices, day by day, in small matters, we are making it harder and perhaps impossible, to decide wisely in the great crisis. George Eliot reminds us of "the inexorable law of human souls, that we prepare ourselves for sudden deeds by the reiterated choice of good or evil that gradually determines character." For "character is the permanent preference." We can not constantly choose the lower, and then at a sudden demand, make the wise and righteous choice, when that hour strikes, we have lost the power to choose wisely. "He that will not when he may."

"When he will he shall have nay." The power of choice is lost, and by its misuse we gradually become incapable of choosing the right.

Great is the privilege, and great the responsibility of choice. It is a wonderful and awful thing that we can decide what we will do with Christ, whether we shall accept or reject God's offers. It is for us to decide our own future and destiny.

"On your own head, in your own hands, The sin and the saving lies."

Let Solomon's wise choice be ours. Let us seek just God's kingdom and righteousness. Let us choose above the greater gifts, the higher prize. Think what it is to be offered the choice of God's gifts! Why content ourselves with the lesser and the lower, when we might just as well choose the highest and the best.

God's gifts put man's best dreams to shame."

Why then be satisfied with less than the best? Why not use this power of choice to choose God's greatest gifts, and to make sure of eternal life?

"DON'T FIGHT, USE YOUR BRAINS."

BY REV. J. W. COUNTERMINE, D.D.

One day while riding in the street car, two men who were sitting behind me, became rather boisterous in their conversation, so much so as to attract the attention of the other passengers in the car. When they reached their destination, one arose and seizing the other by the arm said, "Come on Bill, here is where we get off." Bill objected to such treatment, and began to protest with the use of his fist, when his pal said, "Don't fight; use your brains." The remark causes a wave of mirth through the car, as Bill was decidedly under the influence of strong drink and his pal was endeavoring to get him home without attracting the police, who would immediately cause his arrest. Bill took the advice and became obedient to the will of his friend.

As I continued my journey, I thought on the remark, and concluded that I saw several applications to the counsel. Were we to use our brains more we might save ourselves of many embarrassments. Most of our quarrels and strifes would not arise if we were to make more use of our brains. "When angry count ten before you speak," is the same idea in other words. Take time to think. As Paul said to Timothy, consider, we shall ere long find ourselves give thee understanding."

"Don't fight, use your brains." If Germany had done this a few years ago, we might have been saved from the greatest carnage the world has ever experienced. And unless the nations of the world stop to "Consider what I say; for the Lord shall in the midst of a war far greater than the past great war. President Harding thrilled this nation when, upon laying a wreath on the coffin of the first American soldier to die on German soil, he said, "It must not be again." Those 5,000 caskets lying in rows at Hoboken make the words more eloquent and deeper in meaning than the language. They should cause American to think.

reveals this: (a) For past wars, $3,855,482,586; or 68 per cent. (b) For future wars, $1,434,138,677; or 25 per cent. (c) For civil departments, $181,087,225; or 3 per cent. (d) For public works, $168,203,557; or 3 per cent. (e) For education and science, $57,093,661; or 1 per cent. Think over these figures and then call to mind the $42,000,000 the Senate added to the $396,000,000 naval appropriation which had already passed the House, making a sum total of $438,000,000 for naval equipment alone! What a burden is war!

"Don't fight, use your brains." The only ray of hope that I have seen for some time was the vote in the Senate of 70 to 0 on the Borah resolution requesting President Harding to invite Great Britain and Japan to join the United States in a disarmament conference. And thanks to our General Assembly for passing a similar resolution. "Disarmament is the only means of preserving the world from bankruptcy and civilization from ruin," said Major General T. H. Tucker in a recent conference. Who would dare estimate the results of modern war equipments—submarines, airplanes, poison gases, disease germs—as life destroyers? The thought is paralyzing.

These are the days when we, as leaders of thought, must create and stimulate public sentiment against this fighting business. The last war taught us the futility of armaments. On the contrary they are preparation for, and ultimately lead to war. The friends of America are saying, "Don't fight, use your brains." Take time to consider!

CHRIST THE KEY TO UNIVERSAL NATURE.

BY REV. W. S. PRYSE, D.D.

The so-called "Riddle of the Universe" is the most stupendous problem presented to the human mind. It not only involves and includes all other problems, but it is the one of supreme vital, personal importance to all human life. Nature in every aspect of it presents innumerable riddles, which, at least on our present stage of knowledge, are insoluble. The ultimate or basic reality in every element and force of nature is beyond the reach or comprehension of the human mind. We know not what any substance or force actually is, or how they produce the amazing results. Atoms and electrons only deepen the mystery, and the grand processes of nature ever move on before our mystified view.

All this, however, is of no personal interest to us, and involves no vital requirement of our lives. It is enough for us to trace the chain of cause and effect in nature, and note the course of its operations. This is all we require as a guide for our own activities. Beyond these basic mysteries are of no personal concern to us, but not so with the great comprehensive problem, the riddle of the universe, or the world, as a whole. This comes home to us as the determining problem of the meaning, worth and destiny of human life. It is the question of the purpose or use of the universe. Considering the inconceivable vastness of the universe, it is a staggering, overwhelming problem to the imagination. It would seem to be too great for our reason. And yet the very vastness and wonder of the universe should preclude the possibility of the supposition that it is a pur-poseless, meaningless, useless system. To a sane mind such a view is impossible.

Such a system as the universe, comprising all existence, must have a grandly, worthily commensurate purpose and outcome. Can we discover that purpose? Can we know what it is? For our inquiry we may confine ourselves to this world, which is our temporary abode. As an integral part of the universe with the same forces and laws, its purpose must share in that of the universal system. And what is the purpose of this earth? What can it be but human life, that is, conscious, intelligent, personal life? Every part of the earthly system centers in and points to man, as its culmination, object, aim and end. To produce, serve, develop and discipline human personality, this is evidently the ordained purpose of all nature.

But here a possible objection intrudes. Viewing the human race as it always has been and is now, in the vast majority of its members, the question forces itself, Can we find in such a race of degraded and vicious beings a worth-while object of nature? Can humanity as a whole justify such a wondrous system for its production and continuance? This raises the farther question, what is it in human nature that constitutes it a worthy object of universal nature? In answer we may say, not so much its actuality as its possibility. The possibilities of human nature in its conscious, intellectual, affectional, volitional, moral and spiritual life, present it as the most exalted, wondrous and glorious form of existence in the universe.

The powers and possibilities of intelligent life set it apart from and above all else. Such personal life is the one and only thing in the universe that is worth while in and of itself, the one and only thing that possesses intrinsic value, that has, in fact, any value in and for itself. Wondrous as is the universe, it has no value for itself, none apart from the intelligent life which it serves. It has worth only as a means to an end, and that end is personal life, that alone. Except as a means to that life, universal nature would be worthless. Without that life it would be as if it were not, and might as well not be. It could not know its own existence, would contain nothing that could know, and so would be as if it did not exist. It could do no good and serve no purpose, and would be but an unknowing and unknown futility.

Intelligent, personal life alone can know itself and know what is not itself. Such life in its possibilities, therefore, however undeveloped and imperfect it may be, alone justifies or can justify the existence of universal nature. And it does justify, amply and gloriously, the whole mighty system. But to do so it must present the certainty of its progress to perfection, the development of its possibilities into actuality. Failure of this would stamp failure upon the entire universe. A tree that never brought its fruit to ripeness would be a failure as a fruit tree; much more the universe. Only a perfect product in a sinless human perfection can vindicate universal nature from the charge of failure and futility.

But where do we find such perfection among the children of men? When we view the great mass of mankind in every age we are tempted to exclaim, Let them be swept from the earth as by another deluge; why should they continue to cum-ber the ground? It is only when we turn to the comparatively few in all ages who have exemplified something of the possibilities of human intelligence and goodness, the best and noblest of the race from ancient times until our own, that our confidence revives and our hope brightens. Between the lowest and basest of the race and the highest and best, what a wide and almost indescribable difference we discover.

And yet in the noblest men and women of the ages there remains much that is faulty and imperfect. In no individual, however exalted in intellect or character, do we find that perfection or ideal excellence which alone can be the ripened product of universal nature. Where then shall we find that human perfection which alone can vindicate the universe, or save it from the charge of failure? If not in this life it is attained, what reason can we have to believe that it will ever be attained? This scheme of nature is so designed that it brings all its lower products to perfection; if it fails to do so with its highest product, if it never ripens its ultimate fruitage, what assurance have we that it is not an eternal failure?

It is just here that the person and life of Jesus Christ appear in the eternal scheme, in all the fullness and glory of their significance for humanity. In him the shining goal comes to view. In him the assurance of the glorious end is found. While there is perfection in no other, in him that human perfection is a reality. It is no longer a question, a dream, an ideal. It is a realized, clearly seen fact of human life on this earth. As the one sinless and perfect human being, he moves on through the ages as the inspiring exemplar and leader of all humanity.

And not only does he present sinless perfection in himself, but he also brings into human life the Divine power and promise of like sinless perfection to all who follow him. His own human perfection is the earnest and pledge of the final perfection of all who receive him.

Thus in him is the assurance given that the supreme purpose of the universe shall not fail, that its all-important product shall not perish with blight, but shall be brought to the glory of full ripeness. In him we see that redemption is the crowning work of creation. The grand object of all nature is accomplished in his person and work. In him the promise of nature is fulfilled, the aim and end of the universe is attained. In him the possibilities of human nature becomes a glorious actuality, the ideal for man becomes an eternal reality. Thus Christ is the true and only key to universal nature. He is the solution to the supreme problem, the answer to the riddle of the universe, the justification of all existence.

Without him all that is, human life most of all, would be vain and futile; with him all that is, most of all human life, is a glorious and eternal success. This central and supreme position of Christ is the positive teaching of Scripture through Paul. "The image of the invisible God, all things have been created through him and unto him, and he is before all things, and in him all things, consist." God has made known unto us the mystery of his will, to sum up all things in Christ the things in the heavens and the things upon the earth; to the end that we should be to the praise of his glory, we who have hoped in Christ." "We behold Jesus crowned with glory and honor, that by the grace of God he should taste death for every man," and "bring many sons unto glory." Here is the eternal consummation of the great purpose of all nature.

MORMONS AND POLYGAMY.

A person wrote to Heber J. Grant, the president of the Latter Day Saint, or Mormon, Church, and asked if their church had changed the tenet in regard to polygamy. President Grant's secretary answered the letter and referred the writer to the Mormon elders who were in that city. The writer saw them, and the elder in charge told the writer there had been no change in regard to the doctrine of polygamy since the Manifesto in 1890. The belief in polygamy is the same as when Utah became a state, as well as their belief in celestial marriage is the same. It is the claim that they are obeying the law, but their church belief and teaching is absolutely unchanged. H.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

The address at Waynesburg College commencement was delivered by Rev. David Lang, pastor of the Shady Avenue Church, Pittsburgh.

At the communion held June 26th, fourteen persons were received on profession at the Central Chapel, Forbes Street, Rev. Geo. W. Kaufman, pastor. Mr. Kaufman expects to spend part of his August vacation at Chautauqua.

At the July communion of the Oakdale Church, Rev. W. D. Lewis, pastor, five new members were received on profession and two by letter.

The General Secretary of the Board of Temperance, Rev. Charles Scanlon, D.D., has been appointed by the United States Government a delegate to the International Congress Against Alcoholism, which meets at Lausanne, Switzerland, Aug. 22d. Dr. Scanlon will be accompanied by two of his daughters. He should enjoy, in the intervals of business, showing through the historic cathedral of that interesting city, whence a remarkable view is obtained, and recalling the disputation held in that church in 1536 when Calvin, Farel and Viret debated the principles of the Reformation, and transferred that region to Protestantism. Then he may lead through to the garden where Gibbon wrote the concluding chapters of his momental history, and mused, as he describes in his preface, upon his great task. Then, from the ravines and heights of Lausanne, he may descend by incline plane to Ouchy, on the shore of Lake Geneva, or Lemman, and by steamer ride to Vevay, Montreux and Terretin, with the great snow-clad peak of the Dent du Midi in the distance beyond Bouveret, an ever radiant vision, one of the gigantic "teeth" of the Alps, and then he might land, and visiting the Castle of Chillon, show through in its lowest floor Bonnavard's prison, with its earth floor and cold walks, with only tiny slits of windows high up to cheer him with the sky light, as he stretched his chain from the pillar. And they shall hear him recite Byron's stirring poem, "The Prisoner of Chillon," and praise God that something of the cruel power of those old dukes and tyrants has passed. And as he looks up at the vineyards on the terraces, he may rejoice that something of a greater tyrant's mastery has been destroyed.

The manager of the Hotel Commodore asserts that it costs $18,000 per year more to employ hotel guards since Prohibition to restrain intemperance in private rooms. He does not seem to realize the reflection upon the character of his guests, for the Waldorf-Astoria, Astor and other prominent hotels declare they have had no such trouble or expense.

The committee of which President John M. Naugher, of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, is chairman, having in charge the arrangement for the tenth general council of the Alliance of the Reformed Churches, holding the Presbyterian system, have appointed Rev. R.

H. Allen, D.D., chairman of Committee on Hotels and Lodging; John A. Bell, Finance; W. J. Wishart, D.D., Music; S. L. Shank, Transportation; Alexander Dunbar, Outings; P. W. Snyder, D.D., Publicity; W. A. Jones, D.D., Pulpit Supplies; H. T. Kerr, D.D., Reception and Meals; R. J. Gibson, Registration and Information. It is thought a considerable sum of money will be needed to assist delegates from poorer churches abroad in meeting their expenses of travel, and the committee has no doubt there will be manifest on the part of Christians hereabouts a generous willingness to bear the burdens of the weak. The Council will hold its meetings in our First Church, as naturally the center and mother of Presbyterianism here.

The reporter in the New York Times of the address at the Christian Endeavor Convention in New York, on Monday, by Mr. Fred B. Smith on the cessation of war, calls attention to the fact that when Mr. Smith declared that if Mohammedanism would promise the cessation of all war, he would leave Christianity for Mohammedanism, no applause followed or approval indicated. Such assertions are very unwise, and in this case are either a slur on Christianity or evidence of a limited knowledge of what it is. It is parallel to some theories of comparative religions. Not for a moment should Mr. Smith honor Mohammedanism. There is but one true, last, worthy faith. Mohammedanism has no Savior, no sense of sin, no Gospel, no true heaven, no perfect knowledge. Those unapplauding listeners did not forget Christ as the orator dreamed.

In Commencement week at our Pennsylvania College for Women, June 10th, the alumnae dinner was held at the Schenley Hotel. The senior play, "The Knight of the Burning Pestle" (Beaumont and Fletcher), was given on the 11th. The baccalaureate sermon by President John C. Acheson was given in Shady Side Church on Sabbath, with vespers in the evening, and on the 13th, at the commencement exercises, the address was delivered by Rev. W. W. T. Duncan, D.D.

The address to the graduating class of Kiskiminetas School, near Saltsburg, Pa., was delivered recently by Rev. H. T. Kerr, D.D., pastor of Shady Side Church. The principal of this admirable boarding school for boys is a brother of Prof. R. D. Wilson, of Princeton Theological Seminary, and the grounds and buildings of this picturesquely located school have been selected for the summer school of Presbyterian young people this season.

EAST TENNESSEE NOTES.

BY REV. ROBERT I. GAMON, D.D.

The writer has just returned from a three weeks' visit in his old home in Philadelphia, Pa. He preached twice in Trinity Church, Rev. R. B. Wallace, pastor. He also had the pleasure of witnessing his son receive a degree in medicine at the University of Pennsylvania.

Rev. R. T. Brumbaugh will leave Atlanta, Ga., for a month, Aug. 1st. During his absence the pulpit of the Harris Street Church will be occupied by prominent laymen of the city. Eight members were received June 26th, making seventy-eight in the first year of his pastorate.

The Eusebia Church is one hundred and thirty-five years old. It is among the very first organizations effected in this section. During all these years it has never had an installed pastor. Rev. Fielden Pope supplied the church for forty years. Others preached for several years at a time. On June 24th Rev. E. W. Hall was installed as pastor, after eleven years as stated supply. There are more installed pastors in the Presbytery of Union now than at any previous time. It is hoped that all churches will recognize this feature of Presbyterianism, as it tends to the permanency of the pastorate and the efficiency of the churches.

Rev. R. O. Franklin began his work in the New Market-Hebron group July 1st. After an absence of seven years in Siam, Mr. Franklin returned over a year ago on furlough, and has decided to remain in this country for a time in the interest of his children's education. He will be welcomed in this presbytery, from which he went out to the foreign field.

The Harriman Church has maintained a Vacation Bible School for over a month, with an average attendance of one hundred and seventy-five. Its influence extends throughout the community. Educational films are exhibited twice a week to those who are regular in attendance. Mrs. M. L. Clemens, the wife of the pastor, is the moving spirit of the school.

There was a union picnic of the eight Presbyterian churches of Knoxville on July 4th. It bids fair to become an annual event. Knoxville, Tenn.

MORE THAN A SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

BY REV. JOHN N. ERVIN, D.D.

Rev. W. C. Condit, D.D., who has recently resigned his charge at Ashland, Ky., held the longest pastorate ever held in his state. A young boy, fresh from the recitation rooms of the seminary, he assumed charge of a little church. Now, with the full measure of years, he lays down his responsibility. Because he was a man of the library, and kept abreast of the thoughts men were thinking, he was able to bring fresh presentation of the old Gospel. Because he was the friend of man, he was not permitted to shrivel into the narrowness of his study or of his own congregation. The Ashland Church of fifty-five years ago was isolated from other Presbyterian churches. The young minister made good use of that isolation, instead of bewailing it as a misfortune, and cultivated a parish forty miles square. He preached in the school house, by the roadside, and in the sheds of the coal mines, and in the homes of the men of the mountains. He rode through solitary mountain paths to the house where sickness ruled, or where sorrow brooded. Managers of industry welcomed him, peoples of all faiths invited him and the feudists greeted him in his itineraries.

Industry soon began to push its way from Ashland up the valley of the Big Sandy and he kept pace with the procession of toilers and exploiters. For more than a hundred miles mountain hack drivers and mountain mules knew him and when other means of transportation failed his feet sufficed. In these wanderings he was impressed with the lack of opportunity which marked the life of many of the people of these vast regions. It was largely through his efforts that the people of his denomination founded a Collegiate Institute, more than one hundred miles from Ashland, in a spot where higher education had never come and where natural conditions made the public schools of too little value. This institute became the Pikeville College, which has transformed the mental life of that undeveloped country.

Ashland has become a city of 18,000 population and the Presbyterian Church has more than kept pace with the increase of population. Iron and coal are within easy reach of the place, and huge industries have made the place one of great wealth, and the valley of the Big Sandy has unestimated wealth in the lumber and minerals of the mountains. His work, in his own personal visits and his pleas in public, has kept some measure of spiritual life in the midst of a people absorbed in material gain. Because he made himself indispensable, his ministry has run from year to year in increasing power. Because his time and labor were at the command of every one, a bond of affection has been formed which is stronger with the flight of years. The aged man and the child are alike devoted to him. Because the spirit that is in him has made him a good servant of Jesus Christ his reward is found in a wealth of affection.

On the fifteenth day of June, the close of fifty-five years as pastor, the doors of the church were thrown open and a stream of his friends passed through to greet him and to show their esteem and love for him. He becomes pastor-meritus and, while free from responsibility, is free to work to the limit of his strength and to husband that strength for the many years of usefulness which may lie before him. He has been a blessing to many of us as the years have been passing, and shows what the minister can do who gives all there is of himself to his calling.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

The General Assembly directed the Moderator to appoint a committee of five members, none of whom should be officially connected with any of our theological seminaries, to inquire into the equipment and holdings of the seminaries, with a view to ascertaining whether the widest possible use of these facilities is being made. The following persons have been named on this committee:

Ministers: President W. O. Thompson, Ohio State University, Chairman; Dr. Joseph W. Cochran, pastor Woodward Avenue Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich., former Secretary Presbyterian Board of Education; Dr. Herbert Booth Smith, pastor Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, Cal.; Elders: Dr. Henry B. Ward, head Department of Zoology, Illinois State University, Champaign, Ill.; Dr. David B. Corson, Superintendent of Schools, Newark, N. J.

The Committee on Reorganization and Consolidation of the Boards and Permanent Agencies has selected, with one exception, the following persons—five as additional members of the committee and three to fill vacancies—and they have been appointed; the exception just noted was a selection by the Moderator: Rev. Leon D. Young, D.D., Dallas, Tex.; Rev. Frederick W. Hinit, D.D., Indiana, Pa.; Rev. William R. Taylor, D.D., Rochester, N. Y.; Elders: Mr. John H. DeWitt, Nashville, Tenn.; Mr. George C. Conrad, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. Bernard Steiner, Baltimore, Md.; Mr. Nelson H. Loomis, Omaha, Neb.; Mr. Ralph W. Harbison, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The committee which conferred with the officers of the Pine Street Church of Harrisburg and secured the co-operation of that church in opening the way for its pastor, Dr. Mudge, to accept the office of Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, was constituted as follows: Elder Nathan G. Moore, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. Maitland Alexander, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Dr. William Beatty Jennings, Germantown, Pa.

The class of three new members of the Committee on Christian Life and Work, as provided for by the rules of the General Assembly, has been appointed as follows: Dr. William Pierson Merrill, New York; Dr. George E. Hawes, Harrisburg, Pa.; Elder William Jennings Bryan, Miami, Fla.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

The hosts of young people attending the World's Christian Endeavor Convention, just closed in New York, accomplished something more in impressing the general public than what was accomplished by the parade. We refer to the street meetings held every evening, all the way from the Battery to far up town. In many instances the Endeavorers did the speaking, and they did it well. They not only preached the Gospel of the Son of God, but they received great spiritual blessing in their work, which was hard for some of them wholly unaccustomed to street meetings. Undoubtedly many towns and cities will be benefited by this New York experience as the young people conduct meetings in the streets at home.

The evangelistic meetings in the Wall Street section are conducted by John McKay, who himself was once a broker on Wall Street. As many as 500 listen to the speaker at each meeting. The meetings are held under the auspices of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City. An engineer in a near-by building, who was a free thinker, has been converted at these meetings, and says he hopes to study for the ministry. It is notable that many converted at these meetings are thinking of the ministry. A medical student has decided to be a medical missionary. Two men known as "gangsters" are reported to have decided to preach the Gospel. It is also reported that a "red radical" from the East Side is trying to arrange to enter a training school this fall. The superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee is the well-known Rev. Dr. Arthur J. Smith, the headquarters of the committee being at the Bible Teachers' Training School, of which Rev. Dr. W. W. White is president.

There is a proposition to refurbish the big Leviathan, which the Germans called the Vaterland. This ship has been absolutely idle at the Hoboken dock for two years, and it will take $7,000,000 to make it ready for the sea; but when it is ready it will be magnificent and useful. The United States Shipping Board has to pay the Government about half a million dollars a year to keep the Leviathan at the Hoboken dock. When reconditioned this monster ship will be under the American Line.

The North Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Mackay, pastor, has purchased part of the old Washington Heights Y. M. C. A. property, adjoining the church, and will use it for a parish house. The Y. M. C. A. is to be relocated, probably near 168th Street.

Broadway Presbyterian church, as usual, remains open all summer. This church is near Columbia University and attracts many of the summer students. Rev. Dr. Walter Buchanan is the pastor.

The Spencer Memorial Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, was supplied last Sabbath by Rev. Dr. Ford C. Ottman, formerly associated with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. Other supplies for this church during the vacation period will be as follows: Rev. Dr. E. J. Humiston, Rev. W. F. McMillen, Rev. Dr. D. S. Kennedy, Rev. William Allan, Rev. David M. Skilling and Rev. Dr. Aquilla Webb.

Rev. Frank L. Gosnell preached last Sabbath at the Lafayette Avenue Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Griffith Thomas was at the Fourth Church, New York, and Dr. Robert E. Speer in the Fifth Avenue Church.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Dr. George L. Robinson, professor in McCormick Theological Seminary, will supply the pulpit of the First Congregational Church of this city during July and August. The pastor, Dr. Wilson, is slowly recovering from a severe illness of several months.

Rev. J. N. Boyd, D.D., formerly assistant of the First Church, now of Rockledge, Fla., will supply the pulpit of the First Church during this month, when Rev. Alva V. King, assistant to Dr. Covert, will take the services during the remainder of Dr. Covert's vacation.

Rev. A. J. McCartney, pastor of the Kenwood Evangelical Church, will not return from his vacation season until the middle of September. The pulpit will be supplied by Dr. John R. Crosser, a former pastor, Dr. Andrew Brodie, of Wichita, Kans., Dr. John R. McCartney, of Waterloo, Iowa, a brother of the pastor, and Dr. Theodore Soares, of Chicago.

Though the Fullerton Avenue Church is still without a pastor since the going of Dr. Pier to Stevens Point, Wis., the pulpit is being supplied regularly. On July 10th and 17th Rev. W. S. Dando, of Decatur, Ill., occupied the pulpit. On July 24th, Rev. John R. McMahon, of Paw Paw, Ill., son-in-law of Dr. G. L. Robinson, of McCormick Seminary, will preach.

Chaplain Thomas L. Kirkpatrick has been transferred from the U. S. S. North Dakota to the U. S. S. Utah. The chaplain soon sails for a two-years' cruise in European waters.

Rev. E. N. Ware, a Red Cross Chaplain serving Unit 13 overseas, now chaplain in the Presbyterian Hospital of this city, and serving as chaplain in the U. S. Public Health Service Hospital No. 30, of this city, under the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare, gave an address before the Sojourners Club at the La Salle Hotel on July 12th, on the work and service of the chaplain in the war. The Sojourners Club is made up of officers of the army and navy who are Masons, perpetuating the fellowship and service with Uncle Sam in the atmosphere of the closer bond of Masonic fellowship.

On July 10th the Sainte Anne Church, Rev. M. W. Merrell, pastor, conducted an "In Memoriam—Father Chiniquy—born 1809, died 1899. Pastor St. Anne Presbyterian Church, 1860-1892." In the morning, Rev. Norman B. Barr, Moderator of the Presbytery, preached. At the memorial service at 2:30 p. m., Rev. Louis R. Giroux, a former pastor of the St. Anne Church, gave a review of the life and labors of Father Chiniquy, Rev. David Creighton, of Kankakee, presiding. "In early manhood Father Chiniquy was educated in the Church of Rome for the priesthood in which connection he continued fifty years. As a priest he enjoyed the confidence to an extraordinary degree of the people and received from his ecclesiastical superiors, including the Supreme Pontiff, special marks of approbation and favor. As 'The Apostle of Temperance,' he accomplished a great, beneficent and patriotic work, and gained unique distinction in his native province. In 1859, for reasons drawn from the Word of God, he withdrew from the Roman Church, publicly renouncing her distinctive dogmas and entered the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, in whose communion he served for the remainder of his long and useful life."

To Father Chiniquy fell the lot and labors and honors of founding a Protestant colony among the Roman Catholics in the Valley of the Mississippi. The records of the Chicago Presbytery show that on Jan. 29, 1860, the Second Church of Kankakee (French) was organized by Rev. Charles Chiniquy, with fifty members. And on March 21, 1861 the Second Presbyterian Church (French) of Sainte Anne was organized by Rev. Alfred Hamilton and Elders W. B. Scates and C. A. Spring. Evidently these two churches were merged and Father Chiniquy became the pastor of the united church. In addition to his pastoral duties he established a private school, which he conducted with the help of two or three teachers, whom he paid for a period of fifteen years.

Before leaving for Montreal, where he spent the later part of his life, Mr. Chiniquy donated to the St. Anne Church the beautiful, spacious and commanding site of the church and manse. He also gave the public school district a five-acre plot, and to the village the present site of its cemetery, and to the C. & E. I. R. R., forty acres lying within the village limits. Father Chiniquy was Pauline in his training, experience, message and missionary and evangelistic zeal.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

In March a home mission church wrote me saying, that, with gratitude to the Board for its help, from this on, it was the purpose of that church to support its own work. This church and the minister were of one mind upon the subject. They were able to do it, and, like conscientious people, they determined to do it. We wrote them a congratulatory letter and wished them great prosperity in the commendable undertaking. We were right in doing this and if conditions in the community had not suffered a tremendous change, that church would have been supporting, not only its own work, but giving help to other needy churches.

Now at the first of July, there is a letter saying that the pastor is doing his best to keep the people of the town from actual suffering for the necessities of life. It is a manufacturing place, and the people of the town are dependent upon the factories for employment. When they shut down the people suffer. They have shut down, and the people, who could have done much for others, now find themselves seeking help from others. Our minister writes that he must stay with his people, but his family can not live on what the people at this time can supply, and the chairman of the Home Mission Committee of the presbytery asks that we tide him over until fall, or until the factories start up again, as they hope they may not later than early fall. But the conditions that render these people helpless face the men and women who furnish our Board the means to help at a time like this.

Then here is a letter from a synodical superintendent, that comes in response to one from our office, asking if the churches will not join with the Board in an attempt to make the salaries of home missionaries in that synod what they should be. This superintendent writes back, saying that it would be utterly useless to undertake such a thing at this time, however willing or ready the people might be to do it. Last year, he says, the rain ruined the crop, and this year the drouth has done the same thing. He reports that he has never seen more discouraging conditions in his field. We must help this field and these men, and again I say that conditions which render them helpless, in a different way, perhaps, render our contributors helpless. Yet four rounds of a slugging match become the occasion of the expenditure of money enough to feed many thousand of the starving in other lands and to supply all the needs of needy people like these. Yes, the people who spent the money at the match are not the people who feed the hungry and take care of helpless communities. I know this, and here is our task to make these people the supporters of things worth while, so that the curse of God will not fall on the nation. This is where the aim of home missions gets its emphasis, "to help make and keep American Christian, for the redemption of mankind and the friendly service of the world."

This is our task. If America were Christian, New Jersey and the nation would not be humiliated at this writing. Does this spectacle which I have tried to put in contrast, with all that it means have no bearing on what the Church ought to do today, and now? We are now having the backwash of a hysteria that has cursed, not only our beloved land, but the whole world. Men have lost their idealism, and have come to look on what is here as the ultimate. We can not help it, and why worry? Are we saying this in our complacency? What about God and his Son? What do they think of us as their representatives? Here we are, as a nation, feeding the lowest part of us and starving the highest and best part of us. Is God indifferent to such behavior on the part of a nation, he has so signally blest, as he has ours? I tell you nay. God is still God and loves virtue and honesty and he will bring relief, if only we are true to him.

It does seem to me that, with millions spent on a slugging match which can do nothing less than debauch the people, and cries coming up for help from impoverished communities, that it is a time for the whole Church to enter into a concert of prayer for a right mind and a better purpose.

About a year ago the building and grounds of a hospital formerly used by the company, were donated to the Board by the Calumet and Arizona Mining Company and the Copper Queen Company, operating in and near Bisbee, Arizona. It needed some little repairs so as to make a good place, not only for hospital work among the people of Spanish speech, but at the same time house our minister, give a place for worship and rooms for the nurse. In three days seventy-seven mothers brought their babies to be treated at the clinic, forty coming in one day. Physicians and nurses are all interested in the spiritual health of those who apply for medical aid, and many a mother goes away with a lighter heart, because she has heard anew the story of the Great Physician. All of this takes time, strength and money, but it is work that opens the road to the hearts of these people, who are among us, at least for a time. I hope that while we are praying, we will not forget these men and women who are at work among our "neighbors of the Southwest."

CHURCH UNION IN CANADA.

Indications are that the union of the Presbyterian, Congregational and Methodist churches of Canada will be accomplished. The Presbyterian Assembly has acted favorably on it. The matter has been under consideration for a long time.

The Assembly of 1916, acting on the returns from presbyteries which showed a majority for union, declared in favor of uniting with the sister churches. However, because there was still considerable opposition among Presbyterians and because of the war, which demanded that no disturbing question should become acute, the Assembly also decided that no further action should be taken for carrying out the proposed union until "the first Assembly following the end of the first year after the close of the war."

The present Assembly was the first competent to act. Its action indicates a purpose to go on to consummation of union as expeditiously as possible. An amendment was to take no further steps without an unmistakable mandate from the people, but to continue cordial co-operation with other Christian communions. This was voted down.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

The First Church of Detroit is one of the few churches that is able to maintain a large congregation through the summer months, for through its pastor, Dr. Joseph A. Vance, it manages to secure some of the great preachers of the land who visit Detroit during their vacations. This year the congregation is to enjoy the privilege not only of hearing Dr. S. S. Palmer, who is always sure of an audience and a hearty welcome, but of listening to Dr. H. C. Swearingen, the present Moderator of the General Assembly. Other eminent men are scheduled for July and August.

Woodward Avenue Church is also highly favored in its supplies. On Sabbath, July 10th, the preacher was Dr. J. Ross Stevenson. It is a great favor to people generally to know that they do not have to go without the best preaching just because their pastors take a much-needed vacation.

Rev. C. E. Marvin, D.D., now a resident of Royal Oak, but for some years pastor of the Westminster Church of Bay City, has been compelled to go to a Detroit hospital for a serious operation. His many friends are hoping and praying for a steady and complete recovery.

The 130 teachers of Vacation Bible Schools in Detroit, did not think that "anything was good enough" for their scholars, but made careful preparation in a Kindergarten Institute to be able to give the children their very best. Early returns from the fifty-four schools indicate an attendance of over 2,000. Although Detroit, like the rest of the country, has been experiencing the hottest weather for many years, yet present conditions are much more comfortable for both the teachers and the scholars.

At a recent meeting of the State Executive Committee of the Michigan Sunday-School Association, with an unusually full and representative attendance, plans were made for interdenominational work that will keep us all busy. A very greatly enlarged budget, and the leadership of a new Finance Committee of business men, accustomed to doing big things, assures an efficient program. Whatever might have been true in past years as to a certain unwise conservatism as to new methods, can not be said of the present administration, which is right in line with all that is up-to-date in present teaching methods, without even a suggestion of surrender to a theology which is disloyal to evangelical Christianity. We were sorry to lose as State Secretary, Dr. Frederick S. Goodrich, Professor of English Bible at Albion College, but we are glad to have as his successor, Mr. J. H. Engle, for twenty-five years state secretary for Kansas, who is taking hold of the work in a way to command our entire confidence.

It is an interesting fact as to the agricultural conditions in Michigan that of the 196,447 farms in the state, 159,254 are occupied by their owners. Only 2,310 are worked by managers or non-resident owners. Can any other state of the Union show a better record than this? We are a little proud of it.

Your correspondent regrets most thoroughly that a severe attack of laryngitis compelled him to cancel a promise to preach at South Lyon on Sabbath evening, July 10th, at the reopening of the church after the decorators had completed a very fine piece of work. Rev. Edward P. Clark, also a former pastor at South Lyon, was to preach the morning sermon, and was quite capable of also occupying the pulpit in the evening. Rev. William G. Evans is the pastor, and Elder J. Halsey Sayre, chairman of the Committee on Decorations. This church, on account of the Walton legacy, has been able to do many things which were only hoped for in former year, and, of course, the pastor's salary was made a very important part of the advance movement.

Rev. C. E. Blanchard, D.D., chairman of the Committee on Arrangements of the boundaries of presbyteries has worked out a plan that deserves to be accepted and adopted by Synod. It makes Wayne County the territory of Detroit Presbytery, and restores Monroe Presbytery with added territory. Petoskey Presbytery would gain several counties, a necessity if that presbytery is to be more than a mere weak sister in the family. Saginaw Presbytery would only lose one county, but this one county, Gratiot, includes Alma College, which might possibly object, although with no very good reason. Just how willing Oakland County would be to be transferred from Detroit Presbytery to Flint is a question, but whatever adjustment is made must shake some traditions. If we wait until every one is perfectly satisfied we shall wait too long to accomplish anything.

PHILADELPHIA NEWS.

BY REV. W. P. FULTON, D.D.

Calls have been extended by the Richmond Church for Rev. James A. Hamilton, of South Dakota; by the Leverington Church, Roxborough, for Rev. Herbert R. Burgess, D.D., pastor of the Mutchmore Memorial Church, Philadelphia; by the Reeve Memorial Church for Rev. George F. Ellison, of Palatka, Fla.

The Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery of Philadelphia has just begun the erection of a new Sabbath-school and administration building, to be known as the Southwestern Presbyterian Church, located at Seventieth Street and Buist Avenue. Cost of the building will be $35,000. This location is in a new and promising field, and the Southwestern Church will thus continue its splendid history for, probably, a century to come.

The Summer Evangelistic Committee, consisting of thirty-eight ministers and elders, representing the Presbyterian Social Union, the Presbyteries of Philadelphia and Philadelphia North, inaugurated its open-air evangelistic campaign Sabbath evening, July 10th, with evangelistic services at twelve different locations. In addition to the evangelistic services, the committee is conducting thirty-eight Daily Vacation Bible Schools, employing one hundred and fifty-three teachers. This season promises to be the best of the twenty-three years of the committee's work.

During the fall and winter presbytery's Evangelistic Committee will conduct an evangelistic campaign in every one of the seventy-eight churches of presbytery. This work will begin in September and continue until Easter. On the first Monday of October presbytery will conduct an all-day meeting, and, after finishing the business of presbytery, will spend the remaining portion of the day in conference and prayer.

Several ministers have left the city for their annual vacation, and others will leave after the first Sabbath of July. Most of the churches arrange for supplies and keep open for Sabbath morning services, and some churches keep open for both morning and evening services. Visitors or strangers in the city in summer readily find a place to worship.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

Rev. Otis C. Epperson, pastor of the Harmony-Chidester group, in Little Rock Presbytery, is now conducting a Vacation Bible School at Chidester. Dr. F. M. Wylie is assisting him. Mr. Epperson is erecting a new church house at Chidester, having received a grant and a loan from the Board of Church Erection.

Many people in Arkansas will remember Rev. Denton R. Woods, who is now building up the church at Gay, Okla. On July 31st will occur the annual reunion of the Woods family at the Woods church, near Bentonville. The writer has accepted an invitation to be present and speak.

The church at Maysville, in Arkansas Presbytery, occupies a great and needy territory. Rev. J. M. Haley, whose home is in that community, has supplied the church with occasional preaching during the past few months. I would be very glad to correspond with any minister who might desire to locate at Maysville and serve the church.

It was my pleasure to preach for the church at Hot Springs on June 26th. The church is looking hopefully to the coming of the new minister, Rev. Dr. Eells, of South Bend, Ind., who will be here about July 10th.

Evangelist Lewis and his singer, Mr. Nixon, began their itinerary at Hindsville

July 3d. Dr. Lewis will hold meetings at the following places during the coming months: Hindsville, West Fork, Elkins, Ratcliffe, Benton, Cove, Grannis, Greenwood and Chidester. This will take the evangelist up to the middle or last of November. I would be pleased to make arrangements for him to come and hold a meeting for other churches requesting him.

Rev. W. H. Weatherby has resigned at Gravette and preached his farewell sermon June 26th. I trust the church will not long be vacant.

Rev. M. E. Morse, pastor of the Rector group of churches, has been laid up for a number of weeks but is now fully recovered and able to look after his work.

IDAHO LETTER.

BY REV. J. H. BARTON, D.D.

Rev. J. E. S. Lahman, who for the past three years has been Sabbath-school missionary for Kendall Presbytery, has accepted an appointment under the Home Board to serve the churches of Fort Sumner, Taiban and Melrose, New Mexico, beginning July 15th.

Rev. Ralph T. Case has accepted a call to the Emmett Church. Mr. Case was formerly pastor of the Burley Church, but resigned a year ago and accepted a position as teacher in the high school. Although urged to continue in that position, for which he possessed special qualifications, he felt that the work of the ministry, to which he had dedicated his life, had prior claims upon him. We commend his course to others who have turned aside from their high calling.

On June 19th, a church of seventeen members was organized at Drummond. This is a small town in the great dry-farming region on the eastern border of the state. The settlement of this region was begun about twelve years ago. Soon afterward our Sabbath school missionaries entered the field and establish schools and preaching stations in the principal community centers. The Sabbath School and Home Mission Boards have co-operated in providing for the religious needs of this section. Two churches have been organized and four chapels built. In about half the territory Mormons predominate.

Kendall Presbytery met at Rigby, June 21st. Mr. C. A. Hawley was ordained and Rev. J. E. S. Lahman was dismissed to the Presbytery of Pecos Valley. Mr. Hawley is in charge of the Felt and Drummond churches, with general supervision of the religious interests along the line of the Victor branch, a railroad running from Ashton, on the Yellowstone Branch, to Victor, in the Teton Basin, a distance of fifty-one miles. He is the only evangelical minister of any denomination in this territory.

HOME MISSIONS AND THE ASSEMBLY.

The following recommendations with reference to the work of the Home Missions Board presented to the Assembly by the Standing Committee was adopted:

That the Home Mission Board be instructed by the General Assembly to prosecute with greater aggressiveness its distinctive work of sustaining weak churches, especially in the towns and rural districts, and to devote a larger proportion of its annual budget to the development of this, which is its primary function.

That in order to co-ordinate it more closely with the other forms of Home Mission work the administration of the Indian work shall as rapidly as practicable be transferred to the synods and presbyteries within whose bounds such work may be carried on.

That in order to recruit workers for home mission fields the board be instructed to present the needs and opportunities of such fields to the students in high schools, colleges and seminaries so far as may be practicable.

(With reference to the relation of the Board of Home Missions and the Board of Church Erection.)

Recognizing the necessity of the closest co-operation between the Board of Home Missions and the Board of Church Erection, we recommend:

That the two Boards arrange for the holding of one joint meeting each year, at which time all matters pertaining to the annual budget for the Board of Church Erection so far as it has to do with Home Mission building needs, be discussed. The share of the Board of Home Missions in the Church Erection budget shall be definitely agreed upon at this meeting.

That the Home Mission Board, in co-operation with the Church Erection Board, take steps to inform the Church, by means of literature and stereopticon slides, with reference to the needs of home mission fields for adequate buildings and equipment.

That in accordance with custom, Sabbaths nearest Thanksgiving Day and Washington's Birthday be set apart by our Sabbath schools as home mission days, with appropriate exercises, and offerings to be sent to the treasurer of the Home Mission Board.

FLORIDA NOTES.

BY REV. R. W. EDWARDS.

The Sabbath school at Fort Pierce, Rev. E. P. Thomson, D.D., pastor, observed Children's Day. The offering was nearly $60. Two members were received on confession. A mission school has been started, with more than twenty-five.

Rev. B. B. Bigler, D.D., of St. Augustine, in entering upon his vacation, will preach the first Sabbath in the New York Avenue Church, Washington, D. C., and the second Sabbath in the First Church, Springfield, Ill. Both these churches are known as the worshiping places of President Lincoln.

The Crystal River Church, Rev. W. B. Witherspoon, D.D., pastor, has redecorated its manse, and installed a new piano in the Sabbath school.

Rev. W. O. Garrett, pastor of the church at Miami, will spend his vacation at the Northfield Bible Conference.

Rev. Harry S. Dunning has entered upon his vacation on Long Island.

Rev. William C. Rommel, ministering at Frostproof, Crooked Lake and Waverly, has gone to New York City, and other places, to spend his vacation.

Rev. W. W. Faris, D.D., pastor-emeritus at Miami, is now in Los Angeles, visiting his son.

GROVE CITY BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Grove City Bible School is to be held Aug. 19th to 28th. The principal preacher is Rev. F. B. Meyer, D.D. Rev. Herbert Booth Smith, D.D., of Los Angeles, will have charge of the devotional hour and will preach. Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, will lecture and preach. Prof. Henry E. Dosker, of Louisville, will lecture on early church history. Rev. James H. Snowden will deliver a course of lectures on the psychology and philosophy of religion. Dr. S. M. Zwemer will lecture on mission themes. Rev. J. A. McConnee will lecture on India; Rev. F. L. Snyder on Siam, and Rev. W. I. Swallen on Korea. The dormitories of the college will be open to receive guests. For further information address President Ketler, Grove City, Pa.

THE WORK IN KENTUCKY.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

Our church at Paducah received eight new members on a recent Sabbath.

Dr. H. M. Gilbert, of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, has made a canvass of the Presbytery of Princeton. This is a small presbytery, but he raised $3,700 in five-year payments. Mayfield Church subscribed over one-fourth of this.

Madisonville Sabbath school had a very fine Children's Day service this year.

The writer preached at Providence the first Sabbath in July and had good services. He also preached at Shiloh the second Sabbath in July.

ORGANISTS COUNCIL.

Church organists from all over the country will attend the fourteenth convention of the National Association of Organists at Philadelphia from July 26th to 29th. Among the subjects of discussion are greater co-operation between the minister and the organist, the need for all-round training, and the advantage of forming local groups of organists. Details may be obtained from the President, Henry S. Fry, St. Clement's Church, Philadelphia, Pa.

PRO AND CON

THE PASTOR AND THE CHURCH PAPER.

About three months ago, after speaking from the pulpit of the importance and the profit of having as many subscriptions as possible to a church paper in the houses in our congregation, I started a campaign to secure subscriptions for the Herald and Presbyter in the membership of the First Presbyterian Church, Walnut Hills, Cincinnati. To date seventy-two subscriptions have been secured and they are still coming.

Some very specific and blessed results are obtained in such a campaign. Information must always precede interest and action. When people read, week after week, of the wonderful work accomplished by the world-wide efforts of the Church of Jesus Christ they are sure to be led to help. The work of the local church is helped. Men and women, as they read their weekly church paper, are enthused, and aroused, and sometimes rebuked as they find what other churches are doing. They learn new plans and new methods, and they get the vision without which the people perish.

One keen young business man said, when I suggested that he become a subscriber to the Herald and Presbyter: "Sure I will. It is good business to put a church paper in our church homes. The Roman Catholics and the Christian Scientists build up their organizations and enlarge their work by means of weekly papers. Why should not we Presbyterians?"

We pastors render a much needed service to our church papers when we secure subscriptions for them. Why should we not help them? Conscious as we must be of the power of the printed as well as of the spoken word to advance the interests of the church, help the great reform movements, contribute to right living, and lead men to the Savior, we should "boost" the church papers just as we "boost" the church colleges, hospitals, seminaries, boards and all accredited agents and agencies. The life and character of the individual reader of the church paper are helped as he reads.

The pastor, if he has the influence with his people which he ought to have, and which most pastors possess, is the one one to lead the campaign to secure subscribers to the church paper. He will get far larger results than any one else can get. Nothing that he can do in his church will yield larger or more enduring results for the time and effort required.

The fair arrangement which our church papers make with those who do the work necessary to secure subscribers gives to the pastor who does the work something to give to the needs of the work in his own church and to the many who appeal to him for help. So another sort of good results from his efforts in this direction.

This campaign has been helpful in many ways. Noting the good results, I would like to say to my fellow pastors: "Go thou and do likewise."

Frederick N. McMillan.

GRANDPA RETURNS.

A few years ago, it was the rush of the church to locate a young minister, regardless of needed experience and ability. I have studied the drift as I go over the United States and Canada, and the sentiment is changing to a greater age experience.

This age needs experience and level heads. Too many ministers have retired just when we need their experience. General Grant was practically unknown in public life at the age of forty, and then became President of the United States. Julius Cæsar was little known at the age of forty. Handel had done almost nothing in composition until after he was forty-seven. Dryden and Scott both began to write after they had passed the fortieth year. Bunyan preached his first sermon at the age of forty, and was forty-seven when he wrote Pilgrim's Progress. General Booth was forty-nine before he had organized the Salvation Army.

I am sure, with the aid of the aged ministers, and the vim of the young men, we are to see a better co-ordinating of the activities.

THE BIBLE IN THE SCHOOLS OF HEREFORD, TEXAS.

Mr. G. A. F. Parker, president of the Western National Bank of Hereford, Tex., a ranch town of about 2,000 population, is a Christian who tithes his income and likes to put his money where it will do the most good. Some years ago he heard that the Bible was being taught in some Colorado public schools, and decided to try to get it into the schools of Hereford. He interested others, and they succeeded in getting a Bible course started, together with a course in music.

In 1917 Mr. Parker sent to the Moody Bible Institute for Miss Julia Tarver, then a student, to teach the Bible. She brought with her Miss Elizabeth Duff, another student, to help her. They conducted the work about two years, and were followed by Miss Mattie M. Swisher, who was graduated from the institute in April, 1919. Miss Swisher taught both Bible and music for a year, but finding the work too heavy, relinquished the Bible course the past year to Miss Mahala Williamson, an institute graduate of April, 1920.

On a recent visit to the institute, Miss Swisher gave some interesting particulars of the work. "In the high school," she said, "the Bible study is elective, but in the grammar schools all students are required to take it.

"In the high school there are two forty-five minute periods a week for Bible study, and of a total attendance of about 250, 65 are enrolled in these classes. The pupils are given examinations on the Bible every two months, as they are examined in other subjects.

"In the grammar schools there are two twenty-minute Bible classes a week. The classes are made just as interesting as possible, everything being told in story form. The children are taught the books of the Bible by divisions, memorize four or five Psalms in a year, and a great many verses, with their locations. They are given an outline on the Way of Salvation, memorizing the verses that go with each step. They are encouraged to study at home, and those who can not read are told to ask their parents to read to them and to locate memory verses, a method of getting the parents interested also in reading the Bible. The children often say, 'I wish we had Bible study every day.'

"After Mr. Parker had supported the work for a year, and the churches saw that it was a 'go,' they asked him to let them support it, and are now doing so.

"The Bible work is highly commended by the parents, and Sabbath-school teachers say they have to give more time to preparation to be able to teach the children, who already know so much of the Bible. The teachers are hardly able to ask a question that the pupils can not answer.

"The superintendent of schools said he noticed a difference in the discipline of the schools since the children began to study the Bible, adding that he would never superintend a school again where he could not get the Bible into it."

THE CHURCH'S PRESTIGE.

SHALL WE SELL IT OR USE IT?

More and more, these days, the salesman is hunting up the Church as an under-salesman for his goods. A few specialty folk, like the makers of cook-books and so forth, have always considered the Ladies' Aid as their best workman, and have paid well. And the magazine subscription agencies have also been always with us. But it seems to us that in these days there is a near-epidemic of salesmen, asking at the manse for the name of the "president of a working society." From the usual vendors of flavoring extracts to the unique proposition of a savings-bank-account campaign, they crowd upon the Church.

Why is this so? Because the Church is growing in prestige; because the Church is now a greater power in its community than before—or, rather, because the power that it wields is just being traced to its source. And these men who sell things feel that they compliment the Church when they offer it the salesmanship of their goods.

And they do compliment us, and we may accept graciously the compliment. But we should also as graciously decline the contract. And that for the very practical reason that its acceptance is waste and inefficiency.

That prestige of ours, that good-will which the chocolate man is so eager to rent for his business, is wasted by us when we rent it to him. What man of us would rent the church auditorium, or a corner of it, on a Sabbath morning, for a chocolate counter or a banking booth? And yet the good-will that we have should be in just as constant and complete use as the space of our church auditorium on Sabbath.

In spite of the attacks against the Church that seem by common consent to be necessary to every book on the problems of society, the world thinks very much of us, and what we say goes. What, then, when we are silent on questions of moral issue and of faith, and use our tongues before men in the hawking of candies and the touting of flavorings? Such contracts are the poorest way of doing church work, and they bring the least return, financial as well as spiritual.

Let us rather, then, give more liberally toward our present good name, and augment it for its spiritual work. To sell prestige is to waste it from our task. To use it is to manifold it.

Herbert C. Cornuelle.

BIBLE WORK OF THE GIDEONS.

"A Bible in each bedroom of every hotel in America" is the slogan of The Gideons, the Christian Commercial Travelers' Association of America. Headquarters of this organization are in Chicago, Ill. They issue monthly a magazine called "The Gideon." About thirty-five car loads of Bibles have been distributed to hotels all over the United States and Canada, amounting to over 450,000 copies, and the work is possibly only one-third accomplished, there remaining probably over a million hotel bedrooms yet to be supplied.

The Gideons began this work of putting Bibles in hotels about twelve years ago. The first were put in a hotel at Iron Mountain, Montana, twenty-five Bibles, on Nov. 28, 1908. The largest number ever put in one hotel was 1,800 in a hotel in Chicago. The largest single shipment was made to California from New York City, two car loads, 25,000, and placed in hotels throughout that state.

Wonderful are the results of the hotel Bible work of the Gideons. The reports speak of hundreds converted to God, a would-be suicide saved, girls preserved from the fatal wrong step, thieves made repentant, feelings of safety imparted to guests just to see the Bible on the dresser. The Bible preaches to every guest whether it is opened and read or not.

This Bible work of the Gideons is provided for financially by the donations of interested persons, and thousands who contribute are glad to have a part in this great and effective work, by paying and praying for it, for it not only means the saving of men, but the rescuing of girls.

Who are the Gideons? An organization of Christian commercial traveling men, non-denominational and non-political. They are the commercial travelers who take their religion with them when they go away from home. The object of being organized is to improve every opportunity for the betterment of the lives of fellow travelers, business men and others with whom they come in contact. The Bible work for hotels has for its object the getting of the Gospel to 600,000 commercial travelers and other transients.

Who can be a Gideon? Any traveling man, who believes in Jesus Christ as the eternal Son of God, and accepts him as his personal Savior, who is a member of a church that makes such belief a condition of membership, and agrees to wear the Gideon emblem. It is not a secret society, has no grips, or pass words, and no insurance features. It has an associate membership. Any firm, corporation or individual may become an associate member, without any of the obligations taken by the regular members. Regular members number in the United States about 3,500. The magazine comes monthly to all members.

Employers of traveling men especially have great reason to co-operate in the extension of the Gideon organization, for this work makes better, cleaner and more successful salesmen, and brings hope and joy to those who come in touch with it. Numbers of discouraged, sorely tempted commercial travelers have been saved from falling, from sorrow and death, by the Bibles placed in the hotels by the Gideons. A booklet giving historical account of the organization, with interesting details of results of the Bible work, with other information may be had free from rational headquarters. The president of the organization is J. Harry Humphreys, of Huntington, W. Va.

MISSION WORK

HOSPITAL AT POINT BARROW.

Dr. James H. Condit, Presbyterian missionary to Alaska, and Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Yukon, is now on his way to the new Presbyterian Hospital at Point Barrow. This is the largest missionary enterprise undertaken in Alaska for some years. The building will be ready of occupancy this summer. Dr. Condit took the materials last year in person to Point Barrow, with a construction force. He left again for Point Barrow on July 7th from Seattle. Dr. and Mrs. Henry F. Greist are to be transferred from Wales to Point Barrow and Miss Florence Deakin goes as nurse. This hospital, at the "Farthest North" point, will be a light-house for that great bleak region, to shed forth the light of Christ.

A MISSIONARY OF INDIA.

Mr. John L. Goheen, of Sangli, Western India, has spoken in many of our churches on his industrial mission work. He sails with his family on the S. S. Wolverine State from San Francisco direct to Calcutta. Pens of Leghorns, Plymouth Rock and Rhode Island Red chickens and mammoth bronze turkeys, and probably a pair of Toggenburg goats will accompany him. Mr. Goheen's parents were pioneer missionaries in the Southern Mahratta country, and his mother is now en route for America on furlough. His wife's father, Dr. Hunter Corbett, was a pioneer missionary in China.

Some 125 boys are given normal, industrial or agricultural training in his unique school, paying half of the annual upkeep by their labor. More than half the scholars are from the robber caste, and, if it were not for the school, would be trained in thieving as their hereditary profession. The students go back to their homes as teachers, preachers, tradesmen and farmers.

Sangli is not directly under British rule but under a native chief. Many of the nearby chiefs are interested in agricultural development and the Maharajah of Kolhopur is turning over to the Presbyterian mission a demonstration farm. To fit himself for agricultural work, Mr. Goheen, who was graduated from Wooster University in 1906, spent a year of his furlough study irrigation in the University of California. He will introduce co-operative marketing on his return, co-operative banking having already been started.

A Pittsburgh friend presented Mr. Goheen with an automobile to assist him in reaching nearby villages. Other Pittsburgh friends gave him a sereopticon for his work. Mr. Goheen is seeking funds for the purchase of forty additional acres for the mission for an orchard, small dairy and for dry farming plots. Athletics are given a prominent place in the school life, Mr. Goheen having been for three years quarterback on the Wooster football team. Persons desiring to contribute athletic equipment are asked to send supplies or gifts to 278 Post Street, San Francisco, or until Sept. 1st to 606 Beall Avenue, Wooster, Ohio.

CHINESE ON THE PHONOGRAPH.

How to pronounce Chinese is a difficult enough problem for Americans. But the Chinese themselves are having trouble in finding enough qualified Chinese teachers who can enunciate the symbols of the new phonetic script, now being taught by order of the Ministry of Education. So an enterprising book company has begun the manufacture of a set of phonograph records containing six double-sided discs for twelve lessons. "We are greatly interested in the spread of the phonetic script in China," said Dr. W. I. Haven, general secretary of the American Bible Society, "because it means an unprecedented demand for Bibles in that great country. Already the calls are more than we can respond to. The phonetic script will provide several millions of new readers for Bibles and other literature during the next five years."

THREE MEXICAN CHURCHES.

The Mexican Church of the Messiah was organized May 22d, at Monrovia, Cal. Rev. Henry A. Fisk has always been keenly interested in the work among the Mexicans, and his people are interested too. The service of organization was held in the First Church, of which he is pastor, and seventy-two persons, Mexicans and Americans, were present. The young church began its career with sixteen charter members. The Monrovia work will be under the wing of the Azusa Church, Rev. J. C. Rodriguez, pastor.

The church among the Mexicans at Brawley, Cal., and Emanuel Church at La Verne, Cal., were organized June 26th. The little Brawley church, with its twenty-nine members serving Christ in the midst of great wickedness and squalor, is a blessed sight. Mr. Romo was licensed in September, began his work in October and now sees this splendid fruit as the harvest of his toil.

It was at La Verne that the little Mexican bootblack pulled seven cents from his pocket and laid them upon the altar of the Lord the night the Mission burned. He gave all he had, and God blessed that gift just as he blessed the five loaves and two fishes of another boy by Galilee so long ago. The fund is now over two hundred dollars, and it will grow until the chapel is assured. Twenty-eight persons had already been received as members. There were sixteen others who knelt for baptism, making a charter membership of forty-four. The La Verne work began three years ago with a cottage meeting held by Rev. Jose Falcon, in the home of one of his members who had moved to La Verne.

WEEKLY REST IN JAPAN.

Weekly Rest laws are having their powerful exponents in Japan as well as in the United States, according to information received by the Board of Foreign Missions. Advices received are that the Tokio Chamber of Commerce has formally put itself on record by the adoption of a resolution favoring the closing of all shops on Sunday. Heretofore Sunday has been, as a rule, wide open. Following this action a commission began the studying, not only of the Sunday problem, but also plans for improving the hours of labor through the week. The project calls for a weekly rest day, shorter hours and more considerate treatment of employes. This commission designs to provide a weekly rest day to all employes except in hotels, eating houses and public baths, and that all shops shall be closed other days not later than 8 p. m., also that the working hours shall be restricted to nine and one-half hours per day, with eight hours only for young persons employed.

NOTES FROM SIAM.

BY REV. J. A. EAKIN, D.D.

The cremation of the abbot of one of the temples in Petchaburi is taking place these days with great ceremonies. The festivities are not unlike an Irish "wake" and continue till after midnight. There are ninety-nine temples in this town, and the priests, numbering over a thousand, are secretly hostile to our religion, though openly friendly to the missionaries personally.

South Petchaburi parish, which covers about seven thousand square miles of territory, has only one missionary in charge. It consists of one city church, two country churches, and fifty-two groups of unorganized believers and inquirers, in all over fifteen hundred souls. Dr. J. A. Eakin has been privileged to baptize forty-five adults and twenty-four children in the past three months. It is harvest time in this field. More harvest hands are greatly needed.

At last work has been begun among the Karens from Burmah, who live among the foothills in the western part of this parish. When the missionary arrived at the first village, his oxcart was carefully searched for concealed whisky. It is not allowed to bring any kind of intoxicating drink into any of their villages. Gambling is also strictly forbidden.

In the first village the Gospel was given a respectful hearing; but the missionary was told that it would not be necessary for him to come back again. In the second village the missionary met nearly all the villagers going out on a fishing excursion for the day. They all sat down under the trees and listened to preaching for an hour, and then urged the missionary to make them another visit.

When the people of the first village heard this, they changed their minds and also wanted to hear the preaching again. It is difficult to make them understand, for they know but little of the Siamese language.

Petchaburi, Siam.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.

The Foreign Missions report to the Southern Presbyterian Assembly showed that during this year about thirty new missionaries were sent out. There were 4,690 additions to the churches in the foreign fields. The number of members in the mission churches is 44,199. There are 2,874 native workers laboring under the direction of the missionaries. The native churches gave $307,285. There is a debt of nearly a quarter of a million dollars hanging over the Foreign Mission Committee, incurred in order to keep up the work under the advance cost of everything and especially the advanced rate of exchange with China and other countries.

OUR HOPE.

The editorial, "Abiding Confidence in God," is strong and to the point. David, in encouraging himself in the Lord his God, is the bedrock of Christianity. In the "continued unrest" there is little to encourage us from a human standpoint. Our hope is in God. It is a time to call upon him. If we do not fulfill the conditions on which prayer is based, we can not expect a blessing. The successors of the prophets can understand Jeremiah's lament. This is no time for weakening, but for those who have put on the whole armor—to stand. David H. King.

THE NEW SAN GABRIEL MISSION.

Five years ago one California night in San Gabriel, the heavens flared with an unwonted red.

"Fire!"

Dark figures scurried in the glow, but it was too late. The Presbyterian mission burned to the ground.

There is an old elder in that church who first heard the Gospel story at the funeral of a friend. He was ignorant, and bad and dangerous. But God put live coals from off the altar on the lips of the preacher that day, and his words scorched the heart of the man who listened.

The bad man could not read, but he had a boy in school, and now he tells how he often kept that boy up until two in the morning, reading aloud the Gospel story. Of course, he found Christ; God himself takes care of that.

It is hard to tell one story without telling another; but the fact is, the one-time bad man, who had become an elder, stood looking gloomily at the ruins the morning after the fire. A Romanist friend passed by. The two made conversation:

"You've had a fire."

"Yes."

"Will you build again?"

"Yes."

"Well, you can never build a church as beautiful as the cathedral."

"Friend, the church has not burned—only the building. The beautiful church is the heart of man. We who know Christ are the real temples of the living God."

What are you thinking of? Why, of that other one who said, "Believe me, the day cometh when neither in this mountain nor yet in Jerusalem shall men worship the Father."

Hard to tell two stories without telling a third. On June 19th, a new building is to be dedicated at San Gabriel. Thank God—and the Board of Church Erection! The new structure is cement stucco, ample and beautiful. It is the only Mexican church in the Southwest that boasts of cathedral glass.

windows, and the people who have waited so long are very proud of it.

Come: June 19th, at three in the afternoon. This is your invitation. Let's show Mr. and Mrs. Lucero and Miss Frost that the Protestants of Southern California are with them in the work of both church and settlement. They have a better equipment and they'll do a bigger work.

There'll be a new glory flaring in the heavens at San Gabriel.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

In His Steps Today. By Charles M. Sheldon. Cloth. $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Years ago Dr. Sheldon's book, "In His Steps," attracted great attention, and it is announced by his publishers that 22,000,000 copies of that book have been sold. This volume is a continuation of it in a certain way. While not presuming to know, or to state positively, what the views of Jesus Christ are, or would be, on all the practical matters considered here, it is certain that we know the general principles and spirit of the Gospel, and the author seeks to make actual application of these to the questions which arise in our life today for settlement. The presentation of the questions that are arising as to the family and family religion, the church and its work, the labor controversies, the railroad and farm difficulties, and many other matters, is in such a way as to arouse deep and earnest Christian thought. There is no way to settle any of these except in the spirit of the Gospel, and the author of this book does much to show how this spirit may be brought to bear upon these matters of today.

The Case of Korea. By Henry Chung, Ph.D. Cloth. $3.00. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

The author of this book, Korean Commissioner to America and Europe, is well prepared to present the case of his country to those who wish to know the facts. A student in several colleges and universities in the United States, he is scholarly and well-balanced. We should know the facts as to Korea and Japan's injustice and tyranny. Militarism has been doing its cruel work in Korea, contrary to the better judgment of even Japan. We may learn what is the real truth in this book.

From Genesis to Revelation. By Mildred Berry. Cloth. $1.50. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a very remarkable book on the Bible. It does not claim to be a Shorter Bible, but is a very reverent, thoughtful, evangelical condensation of the facts and teachings of the Bible, book by book, and almost chapter by chapter. There is an introduction by Dr. John Timothy Stone, who heard much of the contents in the form of lectures to a class of two hundred women, and then examined the manuscript. The book is a great help to any one who wishes devoutly to know the Bible.

The Bible We have received from the American branch of the Oxford University Press, 36 West Thirty-second Street, New York, a copy of The Bible and The New Testament. These copies, while small, are beautiful and attractive, elegantly printed and bound. In miniature they are like the finest Bibles. As with all the work of the Oxford University Press, the whole workmanship is of the best. The small copy of the Scriptures is so light and small that it can readily be carried in the pocket for daily use. Of course the print is small but it is very clear. The price of the New Testament is $3.65 and that of the Bible, $5.35.

Thinking Through the New Testament. By Rev. J. J. Ross, D.D. Cloth. $1.75. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

The author of this book has had the experience and training which have fitted him, as pastor and instructor, to lead his readers into a thoughtful study of the Word of God. In this volume he takes up each book of the New Testament in order, and gives such statements and explanations as help careful and thoughtful readers to understand its real meaning and main contents. With this in hand one is prepared, intelligently, to read the book and get from it what it was intended to teach. It is a valuable volume.

The Gospel and the Plow. By Sam Higginbottom. Cloth. $1.25. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This volume contains the substance of several lectures delivered in Princeton Theological Seminary, and will serve a useful purpose in giving foreign missionary information and impulse. The author is one of our very distinguished and successful Presbyterian missionaries in India and is teaching agriculture there with the same purpose that some other missionaries have who conduct hospitals or teach schools. He is trying to open up the way for Christ into the hearts and homes of people in India, and is doing incomputable good. This volume tells of the work he is doing and the success with which he is meeting.

Heaven: A Place—A City—A Home. By Edward M. Bounds. Cloth. $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

This is a book of great spiritual satisfaction and power. The author was a man of deep consecration and lived near to God. The book is made up of papers which he had been preparing for a long time, and which have been put together and published since his death. He was for many years the editor of leading church papers, and was a master of style and was acquainted with the truths of God's Word. The book comes out of a rich spiritual experience and will be a delightful treat to those who love to partake of "fat things full of marrow."

Paul's Companions. By Rev. David James Burrell, D.D. Cloth. $1.25. American Tract Society, Park Avenue and Forty-fifth Street, New York City.

Dr. Burrell has prepared a notably good and engaging book, in presenting this group of biographies from the brief sketches and allusions found in the New Testament in the Book of Acts and the Epistles of Paul. Each of the characters named is dealt with Scripturally and reverently and affectionately. The companions are Barnabas, John Mark, Silas, Timothy, Luke, Lydia, Aquila and Priscilla, Apollos, Mnason, Epaphroditus, Onesimus, Sosthenes, Titus and Phebe. It is a heartening list, and the chapters are cheerful and full of Scriptural teaching.

Evangelism. By Rev. William E. Biedewolf, D.D. Cloth. $1.75. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Fitted by his long and successful experience to speak wisely and well on this important subject, we expect Dr. Biedewolf to present the matter of evangelism in a way to help all his readers. No one will be disappointed who reads this book in the right spirit. The author writes of the meaning and history of this great Gospel work and presents its justification, its operation and its value. It is not a mere essay or discussion. He explains why and how evangelistic work is to be undertaken and how it is to be carried on to success. It is a text-book and a call. Every chapter is full of value. It tells how to give the invitation and how to conduct the after-meeting. It tells how the results of the meeting are to be gathered and conserved. It is a book for every one who is interested in doing evangelistic work.

Timoleon, A Friend of Paul. By Mabel Ansley Murphy. Cloth. $1.25. American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia.

This is a remarkably well written book, presenting in condensed and very readable form, the main facts and incidents in the life of the great Apostle Paul. Timoleon is a young boy when he first becomes acquainted with Paul, a boy in Tarsus. The towns and various localities in the Book of Acts are well described, in a way to interest and instruct young readers. The manners and customs of the people are well portrayed. The history of the times is given with sufficient minuteness. Paul, the Apostle, is made to appear as a real man, and the effect of the story will be such as to strengthen conviction and deeper faith as to the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The book is well written. Timoleon becomes a disciple of Jesus Christ, led by the life and teachings of his great friend, the Apostle Paul.

The Tryst. By Mrs. Grace Livingston Hill (Mrs. Lutz). Cloth. $2.00. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.

Of all the attractive books that Mrs. Lutz has written, this is far and away the most interesting and powerful. It is a thoroughly winning story from start to finish, the interest centering about a charming young girl, Patty Merrill, who seems to fit in most delightfully wherever she happens to be. Almost an equally compelling interest attaches itself to a young man, John Treeves, the nephew of a multi-millionaire, who, notwithstanding material attractions, persists in being a hero and a minister. There are many incidents and much action to the story, with kaleidoscopic changes and the fulfilling of many golden dreams. For the story turns out as it should. In a most practical way the book is thoroughly evangelical and evangelistic, and shows how the saving grace of Jesus Christ can transform men and women in every condition and relationship in life.

The Big Muskeg. By Victor Rousseau. Cloth. $2.00. Stewart and Kidd Company, Cincinnati.

A story of the North, located in Manitoba, with plenty of ice and snow and cold. The description of external conditions is vivid. But in it all and through it all runs a story that chills the heart more than the cold chills the body. There is tragedy and trouble and strife. There is long continued effort to change the heart-breaking conditions. There is a vital current that runs through the story and holds the attention until the end comes. The author is a master in the portrayal of passion. Human nature is the same in all latitudes, and under all degrees of temperature, and the chapters of this story prove that in all surroundings the human heart is essentially the same, susceptible to suffering and awake to the calls of joy.

Three One-Act Plays: Madretta; At The Shrine; Addio. By Stark Young. $1.35. Stewart and Kidd Company, Cincinnati.

These short plays, from the same writer, are adapted for use by small companies, or for simple reading. They all have one general theme, of love and tragic self-sacrifice. They are well conceived and delicately presented.

The Book of Revelation. By James H. McConkey. Paper. Published by Silver Publishing Company, 1013 Bessemer Building, Pittsburgh.

This is a devout study of the Book of the Revelation, which is given free to any one who writes for it. The study proceeds chapter by chapter on to the triumphant conclusion.

The Power of Jesus' Blood and Its Relation to Sin. By C. E. Putnam. Paper. 35 cents. The Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 North La Salle Street, Chicago.

A careful, evangelical, earnest presentation of the Scripture teaching as to the power of Jesus blood for our salvation. Worthy of being carefully read and studied.

Why We Fought. By Capt. Thomas G. Chamberlain. With a Foreword by Hon. William H. Taft. Paper. 25 cents. The Macmillan Company, New York.

A thrilling statement, in a number of forceful addresses, of the principles underlying the great world war, as fought by true Americans.

The World's Student Christian Federation, by Dr. John R. Mott, tells of the origin and achievements of the Federation in the first quarter century of its history, and of the work that it laid out for it to take up in the future. The volume is made up of two parts, the first taking up the history and the second concerned with the future work and prospects of the great organization.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Germain H. Chatterton, of Greenville, N. Y., died on July 3d, in the eighty-ninth year of his age. He was born at Rutland, Vt., July 15, 1832; graduated at Middlebury College and Auburn Seminary, and was ordained in 1866 by the Presbytery of Dubuque. His charges were at Janesville, Ackley, Dubuque, Northwood, Charles City and Des Moines, in Iowa; and in West Milton, Jefferson, Peru, Middlefield, Plessis, Augusta and Greenville. He has been retired from active service for a time. He was a useful and earnest minister.

Rev. David W. Cassat, of Corning, Ia., died on July 7th, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was born May 21, 1844, at Hunters-town, Pa.; graduated at Gettysburg College and Princeton Seminary, and was ordained in 1874 by the Presbytery of Clarion. His charges were at Reynoldsville, Perryville, Pa.; Emerson, Woodbine, Sac City, Vail, Independence, Hazelton, Platte Center, Prairie Star, Mediapolis and Corning, Ia. For a time he was financial secretary of Corning Academy. He married Miss Lillian Berryhill, who survives him, with four children: Rev. Paul C. Cassat, of China; Lisle M., David B. and Lillian; with three grandchildren. The funeral was in the Corning Church, conducted by Rev. W. C. Miles and Rev. S. R. Overholser. He was a good and useful minister.

Rev. Francis S. Blayney, Ph.D., D.D., pastor of the church of Abilene, Kan., for the last thirty years, died on July 9th, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was born at Iberia, O., July 31, 1852; graduated at Wooster College and Princeton Seminary, and was ordained in 1881 by the Presbytery of Omaha. His early charges were Second Church of Omaha, and Hebron, Neb., before going to Abilene in 1891. Throughout his ministry he did much teaching at Bellevue and Emporia Colleges and was largely influential throughout the presbytery and city where he lived. The funeral service on July 12th was largely attended.

Rev. Peter J. Marsilje, a member of the Presbytery of Springfield, died at a hospital in Grand Rapids, Mich., June 10th, following a surgical operation, in the forty-fifth year of his age. He was born at Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1876, graduated from Hope College and from the Western Theological Seminary, R. C. A., and served two and a half years in the Indian work of the Reformed Church in Oklahoma. Transferring to the Presbyterian Church, he continued to serve in Oklahoma until 1907, when he came to Springfield, Ill., and took charge of two missions. During his service there one of these was organized into the Fifth Church, and the other more recently into the Clementine Memorial. He served North Sangamon Church, Athens, Ill., three years, 1909 to 1912, when owing to failing health he retired, residing at Holland, Mich., where he had attended college and seminary, and where his remains rest. Surviving are his wife, who was Miss Minnie Vander Ploeg, their daughter, Lois May, and his aged mother. He was an earnest, devoted minister.

Rev. Charles E. Marvin, D.D., of Royal Oak, Mich., a member of the Presbytery of Detroit, died in a Detroit hospital, July 12th, in the fifty-second year of his age. He was born in Adrian, Mich., Sept. 19, 1869, and married Nellie May Dewey, of Raisin Valley, Mich., in March, 1893. He was for some years in the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He then entered the Presbyterian Church, and spent a year at McCormick Seminary, Chicago. He was afterwards pastor at Buchanan, Niles and Bay City, Mich. Two years ago he engaged in business in Royal Oak. He was active in church work, and served also as one of the village commissioners. His wife and one daughter survive him.

Rev. Charles M. Fisher, D.D., of Los Angeles, Calif., died on June 2d, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. He was born in Peoria, Ill., Oct. 4, 1855; graduated at Monmouth College and Princeton Seminary, and was ordained in 1882 by the Presbytery of Peoria. He then spent seven years as a foreign missionary in Japan. After this he had charge of West Adams Church of Los Angeles, Misphah of Philadelphia, Tustin, Monrovia, South Pasadena and Lomita, of California. His wife survives him, and his daughter, Mrs. Muriel D. Wise, and a granddaughter, Marjorie M. Wise.

Rev. John Gourley senior member of Waterloo Presbytery, died July 3 at the home of his daughter in Hansell, Iowa, in the ninetieth year of his age. A native of Ireland, he served fifteen years as a lay missionary in England and New York before his ordination in 1876 by the Presbytery of Waterloo. His pastorates were at Butler Center and Pisgah, and other points in this presbytery. He has been honorably retired for many years and is survived by his four married daughters.

Rev. Frank Elmer Armstrong, of Marlette, Mich., died on May 15, in the fifty-ninth year of his age. He was born in Washington County Dec. 24, 1862, graduated from Washington and Jefferson College and Union Seminary and was ordained by the Presbytery of St. Louis in 1888. He was married to Miss Nannie Blayney, who survives him. Mr. Armstrong's early pastorates were in Missouri and Wyoming. He also had pastorates at Sherrard, W. Va., and at Vienna, O. His four pastorates in Michigan were at New Baltimore, Plainfield and Unadilla, Concord, and Flynn and Marlette Second. Mr. Armstrong was a useful and good pastor.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The Loveland Church recently received ten new members, the parents of five families. Seven infants were recently baptized. The pastor, Rev. E. A. Walker, will take his vacation in August.

We have received a very attractive souvenir of the Hartwell Church, commemorating the thirty-fifth year of its life and of Dr. C. E. Walker's pastorate there, containing excellent pictures of Dr. and Mrs. Walker.

Rev. Arthur M. Campbell, of Cleveland, was heard in the Sixth Church of this city last Sabbath.

Rev. D. G. Smith, of Wyoming, has started on his summer vacation, to be absent some weeks.

Dr. Charles Frederic Goss preached for Dr. F. N. McMillin in the Walnut Hills First Church last Sabbath morning.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Rev. N. L. Euwer, assistant at the Second Church, has been spending several weeks' vacation at Philadelphia. Rev. F. C. Reiner, of Greeley Memorial Church, has supplied at the Second Church for the last two Sabbaths.

The Presbytery's Evangelistic Committee stated in a recent report that $8,478 has been paid on the indebtedness made by last winter's campaign, and that very little of the debt remains to be paid.

An early Sabbath service, at 8:30 a. m., instead of 11, has been arranged at the Southampton Church, under Rev. W. A. Murdoch, who is supplying the pulpit. Mr. Murdoch was a missionary in India for several years, and he has suggested that the church adopt an Indian custom, of early service while the hot season lasts. The 8:30 service is followed by the Sabbath school at 9:30.

Tyler Place Church is uniting with the neighboring Compton Heights Baptist Church in Sabbath evening services, alternating from church to church. Dr. Williamson preached on the evening of July 10th, at the Baptist church.

Rev. S. C. Palmer, D.D., emergency pastor of the St. Louis Presbytery, has had charge of the prayer meetings on Wednesday evenings, at the Central Church, all through July, continuing for the next two such services. He preached as supply at this church last Sabbath morning and evening, and will preach next Sabbath morning.

Two hundred and twenty boys and girls are reported enrolled in the daily vacation Bible school of Greeley Memorial Church. These are enlisted as "regulars," as the school strives to have no mere transients in its summer classes.

The St. Louis Presbytery last week fixed the second Monday evening in September as the date for ordaining Mr. Alex Asher, at the Rutger Street Church, provided the way be clear.

Southampton Church requested presbytery last week that Rev. W. A. Murdoch be appointed their stated supply for one year. Mr. Murdoch is connected with a presbytery in India, where he was a missionary, and he may return, at some time in the future, to that country, but for the present he takes work here. A request was also received for the sum of $4,500 to build a manse at Southampton.

OHIO.

Rev. W. H. Tilford was installed as pastor at Xenia on July 13th, Rev. Dr. Marston, of Cincinnati, preaching, and Dr. J. King Gibson, Rev. D. Earl McKinney, Rev. D. L. Myers and Rev. Julian P. Love taking part.

The 147th Infantry, Ohio National Guard, will leave for summer camp, at Camp Perry, O., Aug. 7th. Rev. Charles F. Irwin, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Eaton, chaplain of the regiment, desires contributions of magazines and books, and athletic equipment of any sort. Box any supplies and mark it: For Chaplain Charles F. Irwin, Chaplain 147th Infantry, O. N. G., Camp Perry, O., and deliver it to your local armory prior to Aug. 5th, care of the local company, and it will be carried to camp. Any stereopticon slides of songs or pictures which men will enjoy can be used to advantage.

The Shreve Church, Rev. G. D. Adamson, pastor, received six members on June 29. In the evening of the same day all notes of indebtedness were burned, leaving the church entirely free of all encumbrance, and with one of the most beautiful churches, as to exterior and interior both, in the region. The beautiful Gothic blue limestone church was dedicated in 1916. The church was organized in 1865 with eleven members, one of whom, Mrs. Mary J. Robison, now of Mansfield, O., was present for the occasion at Shreve. The church has now nearly two hundred members and is in fine condition.

INDIANA.

Twenty-four adults, including eleven new families, were received into the Third Church, Fort Wayne, Rev. H. B. Hostetter, pastor, at the June communion, making eighty-seven in the last four months.

At the Bethany Church, Fort Wayne, Dr. C. O. Shirey, pastor, eight infants were presented for baptism last Sabbath. The new Sabbath-school building is nearing completion. The building has three floors for departmental work, each capable of seating between 300 and 400 people.

Rev. Louis R. Giroux, of Westfield, Wis., has accepted the call to Walkerton, Ind.

Rev. D. S. Perry, pastor of Chalmers and Meadow Lake churches, has resigned, to take effect at the completion of his five years' pastorate this fall. His has been a fruitful pastorate.

The LaPorte Church, Dr. S. A. Stewart, pastor, celebrated, July 10th, the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of their house of worship. This building was dedicated as a New School church, the union at LaPorte not taking place until some months later. At the time of its dedication it was considered the finest church north of Indianapolis. The sermon of half a century ago was preached by Dr. R. W. Patterson, of Chicago. Of the strong membership in 1871, but thirteen are known to be alive today.

Rev. H. E. Bicksler, of Geetingsville, has accepted a call to Lingle, Wyo., and has gone to his new work.

The Church Extension Board of the Pres-bytery of Denver, under its executive secre-tary, Rev. Howard I. Kerr, is reorganizing its forces.

A fine demonstration of co-operative work was given on July 10th, when twenty men from the other churches of Denver joined with an equal number of men from the Hyde Park Church and made a neighborhood canvass for subscriptions for funds to replace the church building which was recently burned.

Fifteen Daily Vacation Bible Schools are now open in Denver Presbytery, under the supervision of Miss Elsa von Reucau, with a membership of nearly 1,400, as against four such schools last year.

The cornerstone of the proposed million-dollar Presbyterian Hospital of Colorado was laid by the Governor of the state, in the pres-ence of a great company of people, on July 3d. Contracts are being let and the work is to go forward at once. The site includes fifteen acres of ground in the very heart of the city of Denver, and is said to be the most advan-tageous site held by any hospital in the entire country.

The church at Lamar has a Daily Vacation Bible School of two hundred pupils. The pastor, Rev. D. G. MacLennan, says that the interest is far above anything he has ever experienced.

Rev. Jesse Willis Hamblin, of Santa Fe, N. M., will take up the work as pastor at Canon City on Aug. 1st.

The Colorado Springs First Church reports a Daily Vacation Bible School enrollment of 118.

Rev. H. J. Baldwin writes: "In our two years at Emmanuel Church, Colorado Springs, the membership has doubled, the congrega-tions quadrupled and the budget tripled. The Sabbath school has increased from an average attendance of 55 to an average attendance of 225. The efficiency of the physical plant has been doubled by excavating the basement and making room for our growth."

Rev. C. K. Powell, pastor of Ivywild Church, Colorado Springs, welcomed 24 new members at the Easter service. About a dozen of the young people have joined the Daily Vacation Bible School held in the First Church.

Good ministers are needed for vacant fields. Write Miss M. A. White, Romeo, Col.; Judge W. H. Cofield, Cortez, Col., Thomas Jenkins, Chivington, Col., or Mrs. Rupp, Brandon, Col.

Four members were received and there were five baptisms on July 3d in Monte Vista, Rev. A. C. V. Skinner, pastor.

Rev. J. Willis Hamblin, of Santa Fe, N. M., has accepted a call to First Church, Canon City, Col.

The Presbytery of Boulder met at Berthoud on June 30th. The pastoral re-lation between Rev. James L. Cameron and the Brush Church was dissolved. The Berthoud Church presented a call for Mr. Cameron and he was installed the same evening by Rev. Merchant S. Bush, Rev. H. B. Hummel, D.D., Rev. Charles D. Darling, Ph.D. and Rev. H. S. McCutcheon taking part.

Rev. and Mrs. H. P. Dunlop, evangelists, are enjoying the beauties of Colorado, motoring through from Carlisle, Pa. In sup-ply work at Superior twenty-five came out for Christ. A similar interest was mani-fested one Sabbath at Boulder. Mrs. Dunlop most acceptably supplied Fossil Creek and Nederland churches one Sabbath, while Mr. Dunlop preached at Brush. They are open for some Western dates and may be addressed at 604 Marine Street, Boulder, Col.

Seventy-two members were received by the Central Church of Denver on July 10th, Dr. Boyle, pastor.

THE MISSES AT SCHOOL.

There was once a school,
Where the mistress, Miss Rule,
Taught a number of misses that vexed
her;
Miss Chief was the lass
At the head of the class,
And young Miss Demeanor was next her.

Poor little Miss Hap
Spilled the ink in her lap,
And Miss Fortune fell on the table;
Miss Conduct they all
Did a Miss Creant call,
But Miss State declared this a fable.

Miss Lay lost her book,
And Miss Lead undertook
To show her the place where to find it;
But upon the wrong rail
Miss Place hung her veil,
And Miss Deed hung the book safe behind it.

Then all went very well,
As I have heard tell,
Till Miss Take brought in Miss Understanding;
Miss Conjecture then guessed
Evil things of the rest,
And Miss Counsel advised their disbanding. —New Zealand Outlook.

THE DAY UNCLE TOM CAME.

BY CONSTANCE PRINCE.

Three times the twins had whispered that day!

Jimmy White had only whispered once —and Jimmy was the worse whisperer in Miss Blake's room.

Miss Blake had looked real surprised and sorrowful when she saw the twins whispering. It was not like Puss and Phil to whisper—or have poor lessons, and they had done both that afternoon.

Of course, you can not have good lessons unless you 'tend strictly to business, and how can you think of arithmetic and reading and spelling when you know that Uncle Tom is coming that very day.

It did seem too much to expect of a seven-year-old boy and girl.

As they were getting ready to go to school that afternoon mother had said,
"Now, have good lessons and come home as soon as you can, dears, for some one will be here when you get home."

"Uncle Tom, Uncle Tom!" they had shouted eagerly.

Mother laughed. "Yes, Uncle Tom," she answered.

Uncle Tom was a great favorite with the twins. Next to father, he was the nicest man in the world. He always had candy or nuts in his pocket, and he could tell the nicest stories you ever heard.

Puss and Phil skipped and danced all the way to school, their eyes shining with joy.

But their lessons! Dear, dear! It seemed as if they could not think of anything except that Uncle Tom was coming and all they had to tell him.

When Phil thought of their party he leaned over and whispered to Puss, "We must not forget to tell him about our party."

Puss whispered back, "No, we must not, be sure."

Miss Blake looked at them so sorrowful that they determined not to whisper again; but soon Puss thought of something and in her eagerness to tell Phil she forgot her determination. And during the spelling they whispered again.

They were not naughty—just whispering—and in such a hurry to see Uncle Tom.

After the papers were passed for spelling, Miss Blake gave out the words very slowly and carefully; twice Puss had to raise her hand to have a word repeated.

When the words were all written the papers were passed across the aisle to the one beside you, so every one corrected a paper not his own. If a word was right you put a — before it, but if it was mis-spelt you put an X before it.

"House," Miss Blake said; "h-o-u-s-e."

"Oh, my," breathed Phil; he remem-

"Penny—p-e-n-n-y," spelt Miss Blake.

"Goodness!" murmured Puss. How could she have spent it penie? She really knew how to spell it correctly when she paid attention.

And so it went. Out of the ten words.
Phil had four and Puss three right. Then Miss Blake said—right before them all she said, "Catherine and Philip have paid so little attention this afternoon I think they had better stay after school and learn their spelling lesson."

"Oh, how bad the twins felt! They knew they deserved it, but it did seem hard, though, on the very day that Uncle
Tom was coming.

At four o'clock the other scholars filed out, looking back at Puss and Phil sitting soberly at their desks. Miss Blake went out in the hall, watching the scholars file out doors.

"I think it's just dreadful," Phil declared to Puss, drumming his heels.

"Yes, it's dreadful," Puss agreed. Puss always said what Phil did. Probably that was why they were twins.

When Miss Blake came back she asked cheerfully, "Well, children, are you ready to spell now?"

"No'm," they answered in unison; then took their books. But Uncle Tom was waiting for them, so how could they study?

Probably Miss Blake wanted to stay or she would not keep them. Probably if some one was waiting for her she would not keep them.

Puss looked at Phil and he looked back at her—they just couldn't study.

It was fifteen minutes past four when there came a knock at the door, and Miss Blake opened it. The twins heard some one ask her if she was ready and heard her answer, "I do not believe that I can go because two of the children had to stay to learn their spelling lesson, and they just will not study. I must stay until they are ready to recite."

"Well, we might come back in a little while."

The twins heard that just as plain.
They looked at each other in dismay.
Miss Blake had been wanting to go somewhere and they—Puss and Phil—had kept her in, and she had not done a thing to be kept in for; and she did not get angry about it, either.

Miss Blake was a lovely teacher, and how selfish they were!

When Miss Blake came back to her seat she saw two sorry, ashamed little faces bending eagerly over spelling books and in just four minutes the twins jumped up and came to her and spelled every word correctly. When they had finished each slipped an arm around her: "We're awfully sorry we made you stay," Phil said manfully.

"Yes, awfully," Puss affirmed.

Miss Blake kissed them both. "We will try and pay better attention tomorrow; then we shall not have to stay," she answered.

Then the twins took hold of hands and ran our doors, and when they got to the gate Uncle Tom was there waiting for them. When they told him why they were late he squeezed the little hands clinging to his, and said, "We must learn, Twinnes, that we can not be naughty without hurting ourselves, and to take gracefully the punishment we deserve; and, besides, we must not make others suffer for our naughtiness."

Then they all hurried home to mother.

After that Miss Blake never had to worry about the twins; they did not whisper any more.—Ex.

OUR BOYS' AND GIRLS' CLUB.

BY ALLIENE S. DE CHANT.

We like to cheer up lonesome folks
Whose days are Oh! so long!
We tell them stories and new jokes,
Sometimes we sing a song

It's not much fun to be shut in,
These happy summer days;
That's why we try to make 'em grin
And drive their "blues" away.

They like to hear the latest news
'Bout town, church and next door;
We tell them all the news that's new,
And how they ask for more!

So, during our vacation months
We'll not forget at all
That tired, sick and lonesome folks
Want us to come and call!

HOW THE OLD CLOCK HELPED CHARLIE.

BY ALICE MONTGOMERY BARR.

Charlie Cain was visiting his best beloved Auntie Anne—just how long the visit was to last was something Charlie didn't know—he only knew that he was to stay where he was until his parents came from foreign service.

To begin with: Auntie Anne lived with Grandmother Cain in the same old house that all the Cains for generations back had lived in.

Charlie never had seen such quaint furniture. From room to room he wondered, looking at the old-fashioned pictures and over-stuffed chairs, but the thing that gave him more pleasure than all the rest of the old place put together was an old grandfather's clock.

This clock stood in one corner of the big living room where everybody sat around the table and read and talked in the evenings, and while the folks talked, Charlie usually lay stretched out on a bright rag rug in front of the fire and kept time to the loud click-click of the old clock.

Soon after Charlie came to live in the old home Auntie Anne started him to a neighboring school, and after that he had very little time for play. But Charlie found it hard to study alone, and one night made his complaints known to his aunt.

"Well, now," Auntie Anne answered immediately, "when I went to school, I found a wonderful helper in the old clock."

"In the old clock?" Charlie hepeated.
"Yes," Auntie answered. "Just try reading or spelling or writing by the tick of the old clock, and see how fast you get along, but don't look at the clock till you've finished."

Charlie wasn't at all convinced, so he drew out the dreaded reader and began to read a word in unison with the clock's tick. How it fascinated him! He finished his reading lesson, his writing and his spelling, then turned his eyes towards the old clock.

"Why, Auntie," he exclaimed, "I never dreamed an old clock could help a fellow so!"

"But it can," Auntie Anne responded, "and you might suggest to your friends to try it when you go home."

A QUEER LITTLE BOY.

A queer little boy has been to school,
And was up to all sorts of tricks;
He discovered that 9, when upside down,
Would pass for the figure 6.
So, when asked his age by a good old dame,

The comical youngster said:
"I'm 9 when I stand on my feet like this,
But 6 when I stand on my head!"

VICTORY IN DEFEAT.

Betty Haskins lived on a farm ten miles from the academy. Her three years' course of study had been bought by many sacrifices and by much patient work. Betty had not counted her own toils—boarding herself, walking home on Friday nights, making one gown do for Sabbaths and week-days, ignoring worn shoes and a hat of a forgotten fashion—and now the end was in sight, and Betty was valedictorian of her class.

It was the Saturday before graduation. Betty's essay was finished and committed to memory. Her white gown was freshly ironed. As she stood on the chapel steps after her last rehearsal she was glad to be alive, and conscious only of that joy—save for one pin-prick of anxiety as to why she had not had her usual note from her mother during the week. But that was lost in the happy surmise that the parents meant to surprise her by a visit to-morrow.

Suddenly she caught sight of her father in a buggy, driving rapidly down the street. She sprang to meet him, quick to see that his face was grave.

"Betty, child, you'll have to come home with me. Three of the children are down with the measles. Mother is ailing herself. The neighbors have been good, but they are worn out, I can see. Mother wants you. Seems as if nobody else would do. The baby—my dear, I'm afraid he's going to die!"

"O, father, he mustn't! I'll be ready in five minutes.

Not a word was said of the relation of this hasty summons to the coming Wednesday and its valedictory.

When Wednesday came Betty was too busy to think much about the academy. She was grateful that she had had a course of emergency lessons there, and that the doctor said she was as good as a trained nurse. She was fighting for the baby's life.

Three weeks later the baby was getting rosy and plump again. Mother was back at her post, but Betty was tired and restless, and could not sleep very well. She found herself dreaming herself back at the academy and wondering how the chapel looked on commencement day, and finding it hard to see how her disappointment had been right.

One afternoon, however, the principal of the academy knocked at the door of the farmhouse. He had in his hand a blue-tied roll.

"I've come to bring you your diploma, Betty," he said. "I thought you would be glad to hear that Kate Fisher read your essay at commencement, and it had more applause than any of the others. The folks seemed to like your being at home with the baby. And, by the way, the trustees want to know if you will come over to the academy to teach English next year. They seem to think that a girl who could write that essay could teach other girls and boys to write. The salary would be ten dollars a week and 'found!'"

Betty's face was worth seeing just then. It was a curious coincidence, too, that her subject of that same essay had been "Victory in Defeat."

NATURE'S ARMAMENT.

There is hardly a modern weapon of which a counterpart is not to be found in Dame Nature's armory.

The tuck of the bear is a fine dagger and that of the elephant a wonderful bayonet.

In animals of the deer and gazelle types one gets every variety of sword, lance and bayonet, short, long, thick and thin; the rapier, the broad-sword, the great two-handed weapon of Goliath and the tiny blade of the French fencing master.

Poison gas has its prototype in nature. The skunk can keep off most of its enemies by the terrible effluvia it is able to create at will and the poison fangs of many serpents come under a similar category. Long before man thought of the idea, the rhinoceros was armor plated and the porcupine and hedgehog provided with barbed-wire defenses.

Electrified wire defenses are an old device in the animal world, as the jellyfish, the ray and the electric eel can prove. Even the device of sending up a smoke screen is as old as the hills, for more than one fish does this to escape from its swifter enemies.

A NEW GAME.

It was Maida's turn to invent a new game, an exchange tells us. She looked at Mother Floss and smiled at the three darling kittens.

"I know," she cried, and ran out to the kitchen. "Father," she asked, eagerly, "may I take one of your woolen mittens?"

The mitten was a blue one. Maida slipped it on Walter's hand and tied a silk handkerchief over his eyes.

"You must stand in the middle of the ring," she said, "and turn about three times. The children may change places while you twirl, but when you stop, no one must move."

Walter whirled about like a top. The children quickly changed placed with each other, until Maida raised her hand.

"Now," she prompted, "hold up the mitten and walk toward somebody and say, 'What naughty kitten has lost his mitten?' Then slip it on his hand and say, 'Was it you, sir?'" And the child must answer, "Not I, sir." If you can guess who it is, he must take your place in the middle of the ring, but if not, you must take the mitten back and try again."

Walter laughed and said that was easy, but he put the mitten on three times before he guessed the right child. Can you do better than that?

THE SOUL OF "OLD GLORY."

Its body came forth from that fair Quaker town
Where the Delaware flows in its deathless renown,
Past the Hall of the Heroes who never would yield,
Where the Liberty Bell o'er the patriots pealed,
There its stars were all set, its stripes laid across,
By the swift-flying fingers of sweet Betsy Ross,
On the plan that she got from Virginia's great son.
How the whole nation cheered when her labor was done!
And fearless Paul Jones flung it out from the mast:
Of all this world's banners, the best and the last—
But whence came the soul of "Old Glory"?

O! that radiant ensign that rides in the sky,
Which lifts up the heart when it lights on the eye,
Is the blossom of ages, of blood and of tears,
As the aloe brings forth, through a long hundred years,
On the stern, cruel cactus the crown of its flowers,
With the warp of the sun and the waft of the showers;
So the grim, thorny tree of the dark, bitter past Broke forth into beauty in our land at last;
And each martyr who went up the high gallows stairs,
Or died in the prison for man, put it there—
And thus came the soul of "Old Glory."

How far back it goes, this dear flag of the free,
Which now ripples proudly o'er land and o'er sea!
For he whom the woman its wonder first gave Found the stars and the stripes on his ancestor's grave.
'Twas the sign of their Lord, and for them he had died—
The stars of his crown, who is now glorified,
And the stripes of his suffering here upon earth;
So deep in the faith of our race it had birth,
And that wonderful faith hath this garment put on—
Faith in man, faith in God, and in God's Holy Son—
And this is the soul of "Old Glory."
—Bishop Robert McIntyre.

THE CHOOSING.

BY VIOLET MORGAN.

The little school teacher in "Pancake Holler" turned the key resolutely and firmly in its shabby, rusty lock and turned her back on the tiny district school.

There lay the hills before her, towering, tree-covered, and if one got close enough you could smell the pine, and the wind-blown leaves, and hear the ringing gush of a stream as it swept on its course below the natural bridge.

Over those hills, and down, down into "Pancake Holler," the district-school teacher seemed to hear the steps of the little hill-top folks trudging down along the rocky, winding paths at the call of the little bell. And shadow forms seemed to flit past her quietly into the room, little freckle-faced girls and boys, and last of all the form of a tiny slip of a girl named Specs, who stopped and laid her hands on the school teacher's work-stained ones, and looking up through her big spectacles, whispered ever and ever so softly, "I love you, school teacher. I love you better'n anybody else in the world."

Then, deliberately, the teacher tore away her memories even as she had seemed to close the door on the stream of little hill-top folk, and looked away from the hills just faintly kissed by a purpling, sun-stormed sky, away from the tiny huts with their curling, snakelike smoke drifting lazily upwards toward the sky.

It had been a hard day, and she was tired, tired of her patient toiling, just eager now for the girlhood that somehow she had left behind when, five years ago, teaching had seemed alluring and wonderful. Just tired of working!

"Oh, it can't be this forever and forever," she cried softly. "There must be something else besides the hills, and the school, and the same miserable day after day. I must go on beyond the hills; I must be great. To be just a school teacher, always and always—oh!"

But the little school teacher caught her breath and said in a strangling sob: "I'll do it. I want to be free! I want to be away from the hills, with no responsibility. I want to live my life."

And from the top of the same great hill, the voice of a shadow form said wistfully, "I jes love you, school teacher!"

The great hill opposite seemed to echo back, "School teacher, if we're real good, will you tell us a story this afternoon? Say, won't you come out and play with us?"

Then from out of the shadows a gaunt form stalked, and a man said huskily, "Mis' Conrad, askin' pardon, Tim Shivers' little gal was took last eve with the fever and she been callin' out fer ye."

Duty fell again, like a cloak, on her trembling shoulders. Her breath came hard and fast. Tim Shivers' little girl was the littlest girl in the school, the last of the line, and who always stopped to whisper, "I love you, school teacher. I love you better'n anybody."

So it was duty and the hour and a half passing found her with Shivers' child in her arms.

"She's got to go, I guess," said Shivers, the tears drenching his heavy face. "I can't tell her, and she's so afeerd. She ain't got no mother. I never told her about heaven and all that stuff, and so she's scared, and now I can't tell her—you tell her. Make it easy. I ain't never been no father to her; I can't tell her now."

So the little school teacher smiled sweetly and bravely, and with set lips, painted in words a beautiful picture of "little girl heaven." And then, holding her close in her arms, the little hill-top girl slipped happily away to the promised land.

The school teacher had chosen. Although the little voice would never again say, "I love you, school teacher; I love better'n anybody else," yet there were the other hill-top folk, and duty, and the happiness and joy of choosing something right and good.

Morning found the little school teacher in "Pancake Holler," turning the key in the shaky, rusty lock.

There lay the hills before her, towering, tree-covered, and if one got close you could smell the pines and the wind-blown leaves, and hear the ringing gush of a stream as it swept on its course below the natural bridge.

But instead of the quiet sunset she flung open the door to greet the protecting hills bathed in the golden rays of a morning's glory. And the smoke and the noise and the call of the world beyond died away forever as the little hill-top folk slipped in quietly and took their places.—W. C. Advocate.

READING.

BY J. MARION NICHOLS.

When you don't feel like reading, that is very likely the time to read a light but wholesome book. When you really want to read, that's the very time to read some volume that deals with great realities and the profounder truths of life. The one dread we have is that when we reach our winter days we shall bemoan the wasted hours of life's springtime. These moments are rich and golden. In nature there is a hibernating animal. It feeds on its stores laid up against the winter days. Youth time is the day of preparation against life's long winter evening. In the aftermath of our pilgrimage but few thoughts are born. The mind, weary with the toils of years, turns within for rest. At the sunset we feed on the unforgotten treasures of the past. That person who refuses to cultivate the habit of reading good books, yields to mental disintegration. It is not how many, but what kinds of books you read. The character of books we love is prophetic. In a large sense literature is the undergirding of character. It is either the foundation of shifting sand or the impregnable rock on which manhood rests. Just as the physical nature betrays the character of the nutriment it receives, so does the mind reveal the pabulum on which it is forced to subsist.

A LAY OF ANCIENT ROME.

BY MALCOM R. EISELEN.

All Rome was wrapped in silence,
Its once glad ways were still;
Exams were on the program at
The college on the hill.
No more was sound of laughter,
All joys were laid away;
With fear they felt approaching
The scholastic judgment day.

From forum to the campus,
From gate to city gate,
No Roman student trod the streets,
No Roman had a date.
But each was in his chamber,
By flickering candle light;
A thumb-worn text-book at his left,
A grammar at his right.

For student customs change not,
Though countless years have passed,
And then as now each scholar
Had left all for the last.
And then as now each student
Through midnight hours of toil
Was burning up his substance
In fumes of Standard Oil.

As now, each student fain wouldst drink
The fount of knowledge dry,
In four and twenty hours to gain
All that he's let slip by.
With envious eyes they gazed upon Minerva's learned fowl.
Ah, would that they too might attain
The wisdom of the owl!

While those who put their faith in
The potency of prayer
Besought with sacrificial rites
For marks beyond compare.
But here and there's a mocker
Who at such fancies scoffs;
They waste no prayers upon the gods,
But use them on the profs.

But now had tempus fugit
The blue books were come back,
And where had gleamed a spotless white
Returned red, green, and black.
Then by the rolling Tiber
Was sorrow and dismay,
For "F's" there were a plenty,
Alas, but scarce an "A."

For Cæsar in his history
Had merely come and seen,
While Virgil flunked in Latin,
And Hercules, hygiene.
In vain 'tis said Diogenes
An honest mark was seeking,
And as for Marcus Cicero,
He flunked in public speaking.

But there was ont T. Livy
Whose history fell flat,
But not a bit disheartened,
He thus disposed of that
In words which have englanded
So many flunkers' eyes:
"Where ignorance is blissful,
'Tis folly to be wise."

—Northwestern.

HIS MOTTO.

A boy walked into a merchant's office the other day in search of a situation. After being put through a catechism by the merchant, he was asked: "Well, my lad, what is your motto?"

"Same as yours, sir," he replied; "same as you have on your door—'Push!'"
He was engaged.—Selected.

SOME GOOD RULES.

We have the wisest teacher, and she has given this rule,
That helps us in our lessons—you can use it in your school.
Always add a smile or two when things are going wrong,
Subtract the frowns that try to come when lessons seem too long,
Then multiply your efforts when the figures won't come right,
Divide your pleasures day by day with everyone in sight.
Now if you always use this rule you'll have a happy day,
For lessons then are easy, and the hours fly away.

—The Christian Intelligencer.

WHY I LIKE TEACHING.

From a prize essay by Superintendent John Dixon, Columbus, Wis.

I like teaching because I like boys and girls, because I delight in having them about me, in talking with them, working with them, playing with them, and in possessing their confidence and affection.

I like teaching because the teacher works in an atmosphere of idealism, dealing with mind and heart, with ideas and ideals.

I like teaching because of the large freedom it gives. There is abundance of room for original planning and initiative in the conduct of the work itself.

I like teaching because the relation of teacher to learner in whatever capacity is one of the most interesting and delightful in the world.

Teaching invites to constant growth and improvement. The teacher is in daily contact with books, magazines, libraries, and all of the most vital forces of thought and leadership, social and educational. It is work that stimulates ambition, and enhances personal worth. There is no greater developer of character to be found.

Also, teaching includes a wide range of positions and interests, extending from kindergarten to university, covering every section where schools are maintained, and embracing every variety of effort whether academic, artistic, industrial, commercial, agricultural or professional.

There is no work in which men and women engage which more directly and fundamentally serves society and the State. Teaching is the biggest and best profession in the nation because it creates and moulds the nation's citizenship. It is the very foundation and mainstay of the national life.

TWO SIDES OF THE CASE.

Employers and employes are just now in stern contention throughout our country. Both sides appeal to the Church, and both criticise the Church when it shows sympathy for the opposite side. In one of our great industrial centers, some ministers were outspoken in behalf of the employes. In rejoinder, the secretary of the Employers' Association issued communications with the purpose of dissuading men from furnishing financial support to these organizations.

We hold that the secretary overstepped his privilege when he thus undertook to limit and direct the message of the pulpit. On the other hand, was it not in part provoked by the pulpit assuming to settle matters which can not come under its province. The ventures have done more harm than the recent venture of the former committee of the Interchurch Movement and the later committee of the Federal Council to attempt to act as arbitrators and pass specific judgments without authority or appointment. Such disorder and rashness never did bring peace, but confusion and contention.—Presbyterian.

THOSE NEW COUNTERFEITS.

The average man is not nearly as much concerned over his chances of having one of those $20 counterfeits passed on him as he is that he won't connect up with a sufficient number of the one dollar denominations to pay the rent.—Commercial Tribune.

OUR THEOLOGICAL STUDENTS.

There is an alarming scarcity of young men offering for the ministry. Seven hundred and ninety churches without pastors stare us in the face, and worry Home Mission chairmen to a state of nervous prostration. Is there any remedy for this state of affairs?

Are we dealing squarely with our young men in the matter of money? Education costs. Even to the candidate for the ministry a good collegiate education will cost from $400 to $600 a year. The Seminary not much less.

Now, where is the young man to get this sum? He must earn it, which is often impossible, or wasteful to the Church. We know one man who turned aside and spent three choice years in making money to go to the Seminary on. The Church lost three good years of this man's ministry. It was wasteful.

His parents must supply it. This is frequently impossible too; as most of our candidates come from families poor in this world's goods, but rich in faith. It will always be so.

Then the Church must supply it, either by a common fund, from which all get money, or by special donations of churches for particular young men.

We have not noticed that the men who are trained at West Point and Annapolis lose there manhood by being supported by the United States. Our candidates ought to be furnished with a moderate amount of money, so that they may be as "free from worldly cares and avocations," as the Church promises the minister to be. It ought to be in the nature of an investment, not a loan.—Presbyterian of the South.

EMPHASIS WHERE IT BELONGS.

Men like Carnegie preached and pressed everywhere that in education pre-eminence should be given to natural science; history, languages, philosophy, and kindred discipline should be retired. Under pressure of the desire for big money and large popularity, educational institutions yielded to this demand. This led to the magnifying of things and the neglect of the personal factor. Men were regarded as machines and efficiency was the exclusive measure. The storm shattered all this. Science, in the surface motor, the aeroplane, and the submarine, only increased the power of nations for mutual destruction and of men to grapple each other by the throat. All this meant the power of death unto death, and not the power of life unto death. We have learned that we must put the emphasis upon persons, not upon things, upon character, not upon possessions.

Man's speculations must be subordinated to God's revelation.—Presbyterian.

International Lessons for 1921.

THIRD QUARTER.

Lesson V—July 31.

SAUL, TEACHING IN ANTIOCH.

(Acts 11:19-30; 12:25.)

Ch. 11:19. Now they which were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen traveled as far as Phenice, and Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to none but unto the Jews only.

20. And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus.

21. And the hand of the Lord was with them: and a great number believed, and turned unto the Lord.

22. Then tidings of these things came unto the ears of the church which was in Jerusalem: and they sent forth Barnabas, that he should go as far as Antioch.

23. Who, when he came, and had seen the grace of God, was glad, and exhorted them all, that with purpose of heart they would cleave unto the Lord.

24. For he was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith: and much people was added unto the Lord.

25. Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul:

26. And when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass, that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

27. And in these days came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch.

28. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar.

29. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea:

30. Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul.

Ch. 12:25. And Barnabas and Saul returned from Jerusalem, when they had fulfilled their ministry, and took with them John, whose surname was Mark.

Golden Text: "A whole year they assembled themselves with the church, and taught much people" (Acts 11:26).

Catechism—Q. 32. What benefits do they that are effectually called partake of in this life? A. They that are effectually called do in this life partake of justification, adoption, sanctification, and the several benefits which, in this life, do either accompany or flow from them.

INTRODUCTORY.

We find Paul starting out in his early evangelistic work in this lesson, and in a most effective campaign, in a large and needy city. While he was a persecutor at Jerusalem he had done all he could to destroy the Cause and Church of Jesus Christ. He had so harshly and severely treated the Christian converts at Jerusalem that they had been widely scattered. Some had fled for safety into Phoenicia; some to the island of Cyprus, and some to Antioch in Syria, on the Mediterranean coast, north of Cesarea and Tyre. The Gospel had been scattered as sparks are thrown off from a heated iron, struck by heavy hammer blows upon an anvil. Saul's persecution had been cruel, but God had overruled it. He made foreign missionaries out of the harried refugees, and thus made many a nucleus of Christians, to which the apostles and evangelists went, to encourage and build them up, and start the work of many a Church of Jesus Christ.

EXPOSITORY.

19. The early Christians were willing to tell about the Savior wherever they went, and they did so, but they had no idea that the Gospel was for any but the Jewish people. Christ himself had belonged to this nation, as did all the apostles, and it was natural for them to think that the Gospel was just for Jewish people. But they were to find out the truth, after a time, and thus open up the way for us, and others, in foreign lands and among Gentile peoples, to know the way of salvation through Christ. Our lesson finds the work going on among the Jews only.

20, 21. Some Christian teachers coming from Cyprus and Cyrene to Antioch, began to preach the Gospel to Grecian or Gentile peoples, outside the Jewish lines, and God set the seal of his approbation upon their work. These Gentile people had souls and they needed the salvation of Jesus Christ. A great number of them believed. They showed their faith by turning to the Lord. They were clear in their conversion and were outspoken in their testimony, and there was no doubt about their having been accepted by the Lord as his saved people. Why should they not be accepted by their Jewish brethren? God had settled the matter.

22-24. The church at Jerusalem, through such of the apostles as were there, kept a supervision over the work in other places, and, learning of the rising interest and work of grace at Antioch, sent Barnabas thither to assist and direct. He was well fitted for this task. He was a good man, personally, in his spirit and influence. But it was not merely natural goodness of which he was possessed: He was a real Christian man, full of faith in Jesus Christ, and he was full of the Holy Spirit. He came to Antioch, and, instead of having a spirit of jealousy or suspicion, was glad over what he saw and learned of the people being converted. So he joined in with the Christian evangelists, and exhorted the new Christians that they should cleave to the Lord with steadfastness and decided purpose. This was necessary. It is important that all new converts apprehend that religion is not for a little while but that it is to be an experience for the whole of life.

25, 26. Needing more help, Barnabas goes over to Tarsus, finds Paul there, brings him to Antioch, and gives him the opportunity to preach Christ. For a whole year these two great and good men work together with the other Christians at Antioch. There were many conversions that year. There was much strengthening of the faith of God's people. And here we find the beginning of the new name "Christian" to designate the followers of Christ. They had been called by many names. But now they are openly identified, by name, with their Lord. It is a good and great name. It includes all who love Christ.

27-30. The great work of grace at Antioch attracts many other Christian teachers from Jerusalem, some of them being prophets, in the sense of being able to know the future. One of them, Agabus, tells of a great famine which is to come upon the world in the near future. The account is that this great famine did come very slowly, in the days of Claudius Caesar. These Christians at Antioch show that they are Christians in more than name. They remember the poor brethren at Jerusalem, who had been stripped of all their worldly possessions by persecution, and who would be sure to suffer severely in such a time unless cared for by those in better circumstances. So these followers of Christ at Antioch resolved themselves into a board of relief, made up a fund, to which they all contributed. All of them gave, and they gave according to their ability, thus working in accordance with the well-established rules of Christian beneficence. It is a striking and interesting incident. It shows that these early Christians were persons not only of faith but of works, and that they had the spirit of brotherly love and active charity. They sent it to the elders, as those who would be sure to distribute it wisely and honestly and well, and they sent it by the hands of Paul and Barnabas. Thus was emphasized the fact, at that early day, that the best preachers are to be relied on as capable and trustworthy men of business.

25. When Barnabas and Paul had concluded this errand of practical beneficence, they came back to Antioch from Jerusalem, and they brought with them a helper, by name John Mark, of whom we shall read more as the narrative proceeds. And thus the work goes on at Antioch, and we see how closely Paul is associated with it, and how useful and strong he is in the service of Jesus Christ.

"HOLD STEADY, FRIEND, HOLD STEADY."

BY W. CLYDE HOWARD.

When tribulations come apace and all seems drear to you,
And friends don't seem to act just right,
And confidants are few,
When earth has taken on a shade of deepest violet blue,
Hold steady, friend, hold steady.

When trouble by the bushel seems to take a sheer delight,
In piling up before your door until you want to fight,
When foes are more than bitter and you can not see the light,
Hold steady, friend, hold steady.

You have never seen a darkest hour without its brilliant dawn,
The ways of God are varied, but they lead us smoothly on
To the blessed land of peace and rest, all trouble passed and gone,
Hold steady, friend, hold steady.
Independence, Kan.

MAKING ONESELF UNNECESSARY.

To make oneself unnecessary is a high form of service. A teacher has a class in Sabbath school. It seems there is no one else available to take the place. That teacher seems necessary to the class. Perhaps the greatest service that teacher can render is to put some one in training for the place, so that he may not be necessary to it. The wise workman will see to it that some one is being prepared for the place he may at any time leave vacant.—Central Methodist.

HOME TRAINING.

Seventy per cent of the students in the San Francisco Theological Seminary of the Presbyterians entered college with the expectations of preparing for the ministry. That looks as if the responsibility for recruiting rests mainly on the pastors of churches and parents.—Congregationalist.

HATS OFF TO THE CHURCH.

A secular paper says it would be only right for working men who use Sunday as a day of recreation to lift their hats off as a mark of gratitude to the churches as they pass them, for the reason that if there were no churches, there would be no Sunday.

Who gave this country its Sunday for rest, culture, uplook, emancipation? The church folks did it. "The churches are keeping Sunday alive." A good way to break up Sunday is to try to break up the churches because the foundation of Sunday is its religious origin, and when falls the church, Sunday will fall—and with it Sunday rest, Sunday idealism, Sunday kinship with eternity, worth of a human life, dignity of manhood, justice and a judgment day to come.

Take off your hat to the church when you pass it even if you never enter it. The church is your best friend.

"HOW TO MEET THE ATTACK."

A leaflet by Dr. W. A. McKeever, published by the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare, suggests methods of dealing with the common evils which vex society. It gives a list of the seven evils which are sapping the vitality of the young in our churches. It is free and may be had by writing to Dr. McKeever, Lawrence, Kansas.

As little child on mother's breast,
O rest, my heart, have rest!
Who rests on him is surely blest.
So rest, my heart, have rest.

As warrior bold his foes among,
Be strong, my heart, be strong!
Who rests in him shall ne'er go wrong.
Be strong, my heart, be strong!

—John Oxenham.

PLAIN WHITE.

BY SUSAN HUBBARD MARTIN.

Mary Jane caught sight of the tired little figure by the big range as soon as she reached the kitchen door. "I'll dish up the potatoes, mother," she called out, cheerily.

Mother turned. She was a little frail woman, with soft brown eyes.

"That you, dear?" she said, with a relieved sigh. "Run in, please, and see if the table is all right. Mrs. Jackson is bringing a friend to dinner today and I do want everything to be nice."

"Poor little mother!" she whispered. "She's forgotten to give Mr. Snodgrass a napkin and Mrs. Willets hasn't any fork. It's just a shame she has to work so hard. Boarders are no fun and she has had them so long. If father had just lived," and then Mary Jane, supplying the missing napkin, sighed a little.

Father had not lived and mother had been obliged to work, and work very hard, to keep food in their mouths and a roof over their heads and Mary Jane in school.

After seeing that the table lacked nothing Mary Jane went back to the kitchen, and for the next few minutes both were so busy that neither spoke. It was just after dinner that the opportunity came.

"Marjory Mills has invited me to her party," said Mary Jane, suddenly.

"She has?" answered mother, and then just a little shadow crept over the sweet tired face, for Mary Jane would have to have a new dress if she went to the party, and with the high cost of living, how was she to give it to her?

When her bills were met there was scarcely anything left. For boarders, to be permanent, must be well fed, and Mary Jane's mother could not economize at their expense.

Mary Jane saw the look, and when she came back from the pantry she put both arms about her. "Now, mother," she said, fondly, "if that party is going to worry you, I won't go."

"But your dress," protested mother, faintly.

"Well," replied Mary June, with a practical air, "I've about figured out the dress. What the other girls wear must not influence me. Wasn't it grandma who used to say that we must not 'measure our oats in other people's half bushels'? In other words, what the rest of the world has need not concern us."

"And I thought," added Mary June, in her sweet young voice, "that if you could get me a few yards of plain white goods I could make it myself after school."

Mother looked at Mary June. "Plain white!" she repeated.

Mary June nodded. "Plain white and nothing else. The goods won't cost much and the making nothing. And I can go to the party after all."

"You remember the little rhyme of the 'Birds' Ball' you used to tell me about, and what Jenny Wren said? The other birds were all going to dress up, but Jenny Wren said:

"I must wear my brown gown,
And never look too fine."

"I'm Jenny Wren and my mother keeps boarders, but when I get to teaching after I have my diploma, she's going to rest. We can both have better clothes then, but just now it has to be plain white. Why, mother, I don't care a bit, really. That Alice will wear pink chiffon and Edith blue messaline and Mildred lace does not matter to me. If my mother is willing I will be happy to go in the plain white."

For a moment mother did not reply. She could not. Mary June was such a help, and so unselfish, asking for so little always.

And then she saw Mary June in the plain white, with her sweet, glowing young face and her brown curls, and she knew that even in a plain white dress Mary June would still be Mary June—the sweetest little daughter in the world. It was worth all her struggles to feel that. A tear ran down the pale cheek, but there was joy in her heart.

"We will get the plain white, dear," she said, huskily.—Boys and Girls.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, JULY 31.

Endeavor Topic: Christian Progress Among the Indians. Isaiah 61:1-9.

There are about three hundred thousand Indians in the United States. There are probably more now than there were when America was discovered. In recent years some have ceased to call themselves Indians because they have some white blood in them and have become citizens. A few years ago every one with a drop of Indian blood in him called himself an Indian, and thus was in line for a share in the Indian possessions. But the race is by no means dying out. It is as strong and sturdy now as it ever was.

It appears from Commissioner Sell's report that 61,000 out of 84,000 eligible Indian children in the United States are in school; that 43,000 out of 54,000 families live in houses; that there are only 236 polygamous marriages; that 113,000 Indians are church-going; that 120,000 speak English; that 81,000 are literate in English; that 191,000 wear citizen's clothing; that 79,000 are citizens and that 26,000 are voters.

Our Presbyterian mission or church work among the Indians during the past year has been in twenty states, among fifty tribes. Over 225 churches and mission points have been cared for by sixty-six ordained ministers and sixty-one unordained ministers and helpers, about equally divided between white and Indian. Four medical mission stations have been maintained and three Bible training schools, for preparing native ministers and lay workers for, as a rule, our Indian students do not attend our regular theological seminaries.

Our Presbyterian Church does a large work among the Dakota or Sioux Indians, there being a special presbytery made up of the ministers and churches among these people in South Dakota. There are thirty-eight organized churches among the Dakotas, with a large number of native ministers. Among the Choctaws in Oklahoma we have twenty-seven congregations, with large membership and many noble, good native ministers and helpers. Among these people there are many good schools, and the arts of Christian cultured life are apparent. Several Y. M. C. A. organizations have been formed, and a good many churches have social rooms. There are farms around the churches and a spirit of ambition prevails for spreading the truth and power of the Gospel.

Faithful work has been done among the Navajos and the Pimas. Mr. Cook labored among them for many years and saw great results. Dr. Dirk A. Lay has been at work among them more recently with great zeal and consecration and large numbers of them have been converted. Among them rapid advance has been made in Arizona and New Mexico, and attention is now being given to securing medical missions and hospital buildings.

The training of native workers is an outstanding need. Bible training schools have been conducted at Phoenix, Ariz.; Tolchaco, Ariz.; Santee, Neb.; Lapwai, Idaho, and scholarships provided at the Roe Indian Institute, Wichita, Kansas Summer institutes and camp meetings have been held among the Pimas, Papagos, Choctaws, Creeks and Nez Perces, and annual conventions or conferences have been maintained for various communities or tribes.

There are hopeful conditions and converted men and women in all these fifty tribes. There is progress among the Indians toward civilization and good citizenship, but, best of all, in the growth of Christian life and service.

BOYS WANTED!

Wanted, a boy. How often we
These very common words may see!
Wanted, a boy to errands run.
Wanted, for everything under the sun.
All that men today can do,
Tomorrow the boys will be doing too;
For the time is coming when
The boys must stand in place of men.

Wanted—the world wants boys to-day,
And she offers them all she has to pay—
Honor, wealth, position, fame,
A useful life and a deathless name;
Boys to shape the paths for men,
Boys to guide the plow and pen,
Boys to forward the tasks begun:
For the world's great task is never done.

The world is anxious to employ
Not just one, but every boy
Whose heart and brains will e'er be true
To work his hands shall find to do.
Honest, faithful, earnest, kind,
To good awake, to evil blind.
Heart of gold without alloy,
Wanted—the world wants such a boy.—Ex.

MANNERS.

Be thou ever one of those whose manners are Christian, whose conduct and conversation are so redolent of heaven that all who see you may know that you are the Savior's, recognizing in you his features of love and his countenance of holiness.—Spurgeon.

"NOBLESSE OBLIGE"

One of the saving factors in our civilizations is a wholesome family pride. "Blood is thicker than water." It is not a thing to be talked about or paraded in social registers or emblazoned on notepaper; but it "bewrayeth itself" like ointment in the hand.

Let us rejoice that in our country we have no titled orders. Some of our people are of a different mind: "they dearly love a lord." These are the "tuft-hunters." Get your crest at any heraldry office, buy your heirlooms of an antiquarian, then a suit of old armor and family portraits; and you are duly equipped for American opera bouffe. But you can not buy blue blood at a bric-a-brac shop!

"A prince can mak' a belted knight,
A marquis, duke and a' that;
But an honest man's aboon his might—
Guid faith, he canna' fa' that!
For a' that, an a' that,
The pith o' sense and pride o' worth,
Are higher ranks than a' that!"

The blood of the village blacksmith may be of purer strain than that of Tudors and Plantagenets. But not every man can meet the responsibility of such a birthright. These are times that call for American pride.

One of the sovereigns of France when approached by an ambassador with the request that he sign a dishonorable treaty answered, "The blood of Charlemagne runs through my veins. How dare you thus affront me?"—Intelligencer.

PRAYER MEETING

JULY 27.

SPECIAL TEMPTATIONS OF SUMMER.
Ephesians 5:15-21.

Each particular season of the year, and each passing day, has its special temptations. But God does not permit us to have any temptation or trial which we can not successfully withstand, but, with every temptation, provides a way of escape that we may be able to come through it safely by his divine grace. So it becomes important for us to consider not so much the various forms of temptation, as the one course of all-sufficient grace, and be sure that we find safety in Christ.

The summer is a time of peculiar temptations though. The heat makes us careful that we shall not overdo ourselves, and endanger our physical health. Along with this, as a sort of consequence or concomitant, comes a tendency to relax all effort, and so, in a sort of physical laziness or self-indulgence, neglect our duty in many directions. It is well to be prudent, but it is not well to neglect our duty, especially our Christian duty of being in the house of God at the stated time on the Sabbath. In this case, for gratifying our bodies, we neglect our souls, and fail to bear our testimony to those around us. It is generally the case that those who are led by the heat of summer to swerve from their duty, are also the surest to be led to similar neglect by the cold of winter.

As this is a general time for vacation, and children and teachers are loosed from their regular places, it has become a sort of foolish fancy, or habit, for many to free themselves from a sense of responsibility, and talk of the whole, fine, magnificent time of summer as though it were a period for vacation from all sorts of serious life or work for Christ. Let us be sure to watch against this temptation.

There is danger too of disorganizing the home life, and by late hours, or absence in the evenings, or by similar interruptions, have the arrangements so broken up that there is not room for the regular Christian life at home, or for family worship. Let this be guarded against.

There is especially the temptation to Sabbath desecration in the summer. Multitudes habitually desecrate the day by loud and noisy games, picnics, excursions, automobile riding throughout the day, and similar out-door sports. The same persons would desecrate the day in other seasons of the year by theater attendance, card playing and other worldly amusements. Let Christians be careful, summer and winter, to abstain from that which violates God's law, and brings reproach on the cause of Christ.

There is danger, with all of these influences, that the services of the church may be neglected. Many do so and excuse themselves by saying that it is too hot. There is nearly always an excuse that can be found by the self-indulgent. It may be too hot or too cold or too wet; or one can imagine that he is not well. Let those who would honor Christ be careful that they are not caught in any such net by the enemy of their souls.

It is said that there are about nine hundred diseases or forms of sickness. The ordinary person may not be able to defect all of these, nor remember the remedy to be applied. But the one safeguard against them all is good health. Let that be maintained and all diseases may be withstood. So the one source of safety in every temptation is the grace of Christ. Let us have Christ in our souls, and then we shall not be overcome and destroyed by any, or by all, of the temptations that may assail us.

I SAID TO MY HEART.

BY ALBERT D. KNAPP.

I said to my heart, "Be still!
If the waters are deep today,
It is God's will;
And he who ruleth the wind and the tide
Will bear thee safe to the other side."

I said to my heart, "Be still!
If the furnace is hot today,
It is God's will;
And ever his way from the years of old,
In the heart of the furnace to try his gold."

I said to my heart, "Be still!
If the road seems long today,
It is God's will
That every patient, enduring soul
Shall reach some day the utmost goal."

And my heart was still—as a babe at rest
In the velvet folds of the mother's breast,
And hears no sound, and has no choice,
But the sweet love-song of the mother's voice.

HELP FROM ABOVE.

"Mary, what do you do when you feel cross and naughty?" asked a lady of a little girl five years old.

"I just shut my lips and eyes tight and think a prayer to Jesus to come and make me feel right," answered Mary.

Mary is a wise little girl. She knows that when she is tempted, she needs help from above to keep her from falling into sin.

Let us remember that in every time of temptation we need the help of the Lord Jesus Christ to keep us from doing wrong. So, when we feel our tempers rising, let us lift up a little prayer to Jesus, and he will surely hear and answer it.

GRADUAL OVERTHROW.

There are sins which blast life as with a lightning flash. But they are not the common sins. There are some trees which are overblown in one great blast of the winter's gale. But the cause of their overthrow is dry rot that has been going on for a long time. The storm only makes visible that which has been going on destructively without any announcement.

We backslide gradually, so gradually as to attract no attention; and then some crisis comes, that shakes life to its foundations. An then the destructive process of the past are all unveiled and discovered in the overthrow.—J. Stuart Holden.

TENDERNESS.

When the Apostle Paul enumerated the adornments of the Christian life, he gave the first place to the grace of pity. "Put ye on first a heart of pity." The grace needed today among Christians is tenderness toward failures. We should cultivate a disposition that seeks to heal those that are bruised and to help the fainthearted. One of the joys of Jesus was to restore those who, when a demand was made upon their own resources, failed and collapsed before the strain.

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

Almost at the top of Mt. Marcy, the highest peak of the Adirondacks, is a little pool of water, called "the tear of the clouds." This is the highest and most northern source of the majestic Hudson. The stream flows down the mountain side hurrying on among the hills and valleys. But its constant flow is toward the ocean.

In like manner human life, with its sources hid in God, flows on like a river,—losing here and gaining there, with many tides and turnings of its current,—but inevitably going forward to its destined end. There is the constant contest between the old man and the new,—between the forces of evil that would divert the current from its true channel and the forces of good that would send the soul sailing forward on the river of God.—Ex.

Auburn Will Train Laymen

For the first time in the history of Presbyterian education men and women who desire to be trained to serve the church in specific capacities—not as preachers—can obtain instruction in seminary surroundings.

Without diminishing its work as a Theological Seminary, Auburn on September 26 will open a new Lay School designed to train men and women to become assistants to pastors and directors of religious education.

The Lay School will have its separate organization equipped in separate buildings.

Auburn Theological Seminary will open as usual September 21, with prospects for a larger enrollment than a year ago.

PASTORS: Tell the young people of your congregation.
PARENTS: Send for catalogue today of the School or Seminary.

SELECT READINGS

No matter what you try to do
At home or at your school,
Always do your very best,
There is no better rule.

Pennsylvania has more higher institutions of learning than any other state in the Union, sixty-seven being located in the Keystone State. In order follow, Illinois, fifty-nine; New York, fifty-four; Ohio, fifty-three, and Missouri, forty-one.

In Japan only one person in 6,700 ever attends a school of college or university grade.

One-seventh of the students in the universities of France before the war were from other countries.

Forgive and forget! Why, the world would be lonely,

The garden a wilderness left to deform,
If the flowers but remembered the killing breezes only,
And the fields gave no verdure for fear of the storm. —Browning.

The school room was rather chilly and the school teacher from Boston sent this written complaint to the principle: "There is hardly caloric enough in this room to altitudinize the mercury above the freezing quotation."

You can lead a student to lectures but you can't make him think."

In the United States there are more than 25,000,000 school children. About 5,000,000 boys and girls of school age are not attending school. Only about seventy-five out of every one hundred enrolled in school attend daily. The average pupil loses two months of school annually, or about one-fourth the school term.

Efforts to be permanently useful must be uniformly joyous, a spirt all sunshine, graceful from very gladness, beautiful because bright.—Carlyle.

There are more than 1,650,000 high-school boys and girls between the ages of fifteen and nineteen years. Of these Dr. John R. Mott says: "This enormous field is most plastic and promising as well as critically needy and relatively neglected."

There are almost 600,000 school teachers in the United States. There should be no less than 750,000 for efficiency. Within a year 145,000 resigned, the places of the majority being taken by novices or inferior teachers.

There are in the colleges and universities of this land about 263,000 students, who will soon go out as the leaders of thought and action. Almost half of these are in the state universities.

PATRIOTISM AND AMERICANIZATION.

The meaning of "patriotism" is "that which has come down from the fathers," and American patriotism must therefore be measured by the standards which the fathers of American independence and American institutions have set up. We can no more have true American patriotism and ignore the ideals and aims of the

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be fairly described as "a carbonated, flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffeine contained in each:

Black tea —1 cupful.....	1.54 gr.
(hot) (5 fl. oz.)
Green tea —1 glassful.....	2.02 gr.
(cold) (8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)
Coca-Cola —1 drink, 8 fl. oz.....	.61 gr.

American Revolution and set up arbitrary and transient standards, than we can ignore the religious ideals set up by Jesus Christ and the apostles and still have real Christianity. We may call certain things "American," just as we can call certain things "Christian," but whether or not they are actually American or truly Christian must always depend on whether or not they agree with the principles and ideals originally established. As we see it there are three great dangers which seem to threaten American patriotism and to corrupt the ideals of Americanization today: foreign propoganda, and domestic autocracy and intolerance, and it is hard to say which one of them is most un-American—Evangelical Herald.

A TRANSACTION.

BY WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

With God I have had a transaction,
A matter of moment today;
A source of supreme satisfaction,
That sent me relieved on my way.

I rose in such trouble this morning,
So heavy of heart and distressed,
So full of misgivings and warning;
But hearts learn their secrets of rest!

I crept to God's Footstool, and kneeling,
Committed it all to his care;
And prayer is a definite dealing,
As real as one's business is prayer!

GENERAL NEWS

PRESIDENT ADVOCATES REDUCTION IN EXPENDITURES.

In a message to Congress last week, the President stated that the financial stability of the country would be "imperiled" greatly by enactment of soldier bonus legislation at present.

The three vital needs for restoration to "normalcy," the President declared, were reduction of internal taxation, refunding of the war debt and adjustment of foreign loans.

President Harding made it clear that, although he could not see the way clear to favor adjusted compensation for all former service men, the obligation of extending every aid to disabled veterans had to be met.

DISARMAMENT.

"Informal, but definite" approaches had been made by the United States to the leading powers of the world looking toward a limitation of armaments agreement, it has been announced officially by the State Department.

The approaches, the announcement said, had been made to Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, who have been asked whether or not it would be agreeable to them to participate in a limitation of armaments conference to be conducted in Washington in the near future.

"If the proposal is found to be acceptable, formal invitations for such conference will be issued," the State Department's statement read.

The statement also declares that, inasmuch as the armament question is related so closely to the situation in the Pacific, the United States has also proposed to take up the Far Eastern problems at the same time, and has invited China to participate.

* * *

Great Britain, France and Italy have replied, accepting the proposal in its entirety. Japan has replied, but excepting to an unrestricted discussion of the Far Eastern question, which the United States regards as vital to any reduction of armaments agreement.

American officials, however, are optimistic that a way will be found for a satisfactory conference to which Japan will be a party and for a program of armament reduction acceptable to all.

After the receipt of these replies, it was understood that Japan must participate in the proposed conference of world Powers on armament limitation and on Far Eastern affairs, or she will outlaw herself and, by implication, give confirmation of whispered charges that her enemies perennially circulate. This, reports state, is the view at the White House, and is said to be the attitude accepted by the Cabinet in discussions of Tokyo's reply to an invitation to "sit in."

China, it is further stated, would not have been invited if the Far Eastern situation had not been a main element of the President's plan, for China is not a great maritime nation, is not a first-class Power and certainly has no powerful navy to disarm, nor a building plan to abandon.

* * *

Japan seems to be an empire divided on the great issues caused by the invitation of President Harding to attend a conference on limitation of armaments and Far Eastern problems.

On one side, largely in the ranks of the bureaucrats, there is fear that the proposed conference will be dominated by the Anglo-Saxons and may result in strangling Japan's political and economic development in Asia.

On the other side is a powerful liberal group, which demands that Japan enter into the deliberations fearlessly, submitting her desires resolutely, combatting for them with confidence and not opposing just claims. Hagglng and bickering, they insist, will ruin the cause of Japan.

RHINE STILL TO BE OCCUPIED.

France has informed Germany she will continue the occupation of the Rhine region until Germany has complied with the conditions of the treaty of Versailles, relative to the punishment of those who violated the rules of civilized warfare in the World War, Premier Briand told the French Senate last week.

Replying to a question, he characterized the findings of the Leipsic Court as "scandalous."

M. Briand said the Government had decided to show Germany that France still had strength, and expressed the hope that the other allied countries would join in the French viewpoint.

PROHIBITION COMMISSIONER TO REDUCE NUMBER OF PERMITS.

Reduction of the number of outstanding permits to individuals authorized to withdraw and sell whisky and other intoxicants is sought in regulations being prepared by Roy A. Haines, National Prohibition Commissioner. This, he said, would clamp the prohibition lid tighter.

It will effect a decrease in the number of wholesale druggists, and other restrictions will be added to other classes of permit holders.

Vigorous measures against bootleggers were contemplated, the Commissioner announced. If permitted to retain the $6,500,000 appropriation, which Budget Commissioner Charles G. Dawes had threatened to cut, much of the money would be used to destroy the illicit traffic, he said.

Enforcement will proceed much more smoothly after the patronage snarls are untangled within the next week or two, the Commissioner says. A number of state directors are to be appointed, and conflicting indorsements of dry organizations, Senators and Republican committees is causing difficulty.

TO GO AFTER THE BREWERS.

Brewers who evade conviction for manufacturing real beer by explaining that employes do so without their knowledge in the future will be held to be accountable.

This became known at the office of Prohibition Commissioner Roy A. Haynes, where it was said that new regulations under preparation will reverse rulings of former Commissioner John F. Kramer and of the former Internal Revenue Commissioner.

Many brewers throughout the country deliberately are violating the law and escaping punishment by blaming their employes, said Commissioner Haynes.

"Their permits will be withdrawn," he said. "The rules of this law will be made to apply to brewers to stop this promiscuous selling of beer that falls within the class of alcoholic liquors. Brewers, under rules soon to be issued, will be held to be responsible for acts of their agents."

The Railroad Labor Board has ordered wages of employes of the American Railway Express Company to be reduced six cents an hour, beginning August 1st.

No reduction of express rates is contemplated at this time as a result of the wage cut, company officials say.

It is estimated that approximately $8,000,000 will be sliced from the annual labor bill of the company by the reduction.

The company employes between 70,000 and 75,000 workers.

Premier Lloyd George and Mr. DeValera, the leader of the Irish rebellionists, held a conference on Thursday and Friday of last week, and there is hope for peace in Ireland.

At the close of the conference it was announced "that there had been a free exchange of views, in which their relative positions were defined."

The United States Shipping Board, through its chairman, A. D. Lasker, has announced the formation of a "partnership" with the private ship owners and operators of America for the upbuilding of the American merchant marine. The private owners provide the "best minds" of the Shipping Board to establish the fleet on the seven seas.

As a starter, the private shipping business canvassed their own ranks and selected three men to act as operators of the Government-owned fleet at a total salary of $95,000 a year.

Although it was stated last fall that there had been no proposals from foreign governments for a cancellation of their debts to this country, a letter from Premier Lloyd George to President Wilson, dated August, 8, 1920, and dealing with a proposal for cancellation of inter-allied war debts, was placed in the record of the Senate Finance Committee by Treasury officials during hearings on the Administration's allied loan refunding bill.

A cablegram on the same subject from the British Chancellor of Exchequer to R. C. Lindsay, representing the British Treasury in this country, which was transmitted to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Department, also was presented.

Two arguments were concentrated upon in the Senate during discussion of the Willis-Campbell anti-beer and supplemental prohibition enforcement bill.

The first was that it is unconstitutional and the second that the bill is an implied and actual insult to the medical profession.

Weather reports showed that Chicago had sweltered through the first half of the hottest July on record, with an average temperature of nearly ten degrees higher than normal. The average thus far this month was 89 degrees, five degrees higher than the hottest July recorded by the bureau in 1872.

* * *

In St. Louis the average temperature from June 1st to July 14th was 89 degrees, compared with 85.1 for the same period last year and 85.83 for ten years.

In an attempt to produce rain, to end an eighty-day drought at London, Eng., sixteen six-inch bombs were projected against the leaden sky above Hampstead Heath, while tens of thousands of watchers prepared to hoist their umbrellas.

Not a drop of rain fell, however.

The glaciers on the Swiss Alps are said to be receding, owing to the hot weather. This change is making ascent of the mountains dangerous.

The prolonged drought has affected seriously the water supply of several parts of Belgium. Many villages are without water, which is brought a considerable distance in buckets from a French point of supply.

* * *

In France the Archbishop of Paris has called upon the pastors of all Catholic churches to pray daily for rain.

* * *

Twenty million persons are on the verge of starvation in drought-stricken sections of Russia, subsisting mainly on moss, grass and the bark of trees, according to the Berlin Vossische Zeitung.

The parched earth, it is asserted, is opening up great crevices and wells and rivers are drying up. Foliage has withered on the trees and a number of villages are reported to be on fire.

Prices, as paid by an early farmers' cooperative organization in Licking County, Ohio, in 1821, were:

Wheat, 25 cents a bushel; oats, 12½; corn, 12, potatoes 12½, flour $1 per hundred, chickens 37 cents a dozen, eggs 3½ cents, and maple sirup 6 cents a gallon.

However, these values were only allowed when articles were taken in exchange for products. The figures were taken from old records secured by the Ohio Experiment Station.

James Rowland Angell was inaugurated as fourteenth President of Yale University last Wednesday. The gathering in Woolsey Hall, which witnessed his induction into office, was one of great distinction, including official representatives of sister universities in the United States, Canada, Great Britain and Continental Europe, of learned societies and education societies at home and abroad, of the state and municipality and of civic bodies.

The inauguration ceremony itself was made part of the two hundred and twentieth commencement exercises.

Continuing the tests of bombing from the air against naval vessels, the former German Destroyer, G-102, was sunk by army aeroplanes eighty miles off the Virginia capes. The attacking force comprised thirty-five aeroplanes and three dirigibles.

Two other former German destroyers were used as targets for shell fire.

The S-132, hit six times by four-inch shells from the destroyer Herbert, was finished by the six-inch secondary battery of the Delaware, at a range of 7,500 yards.

The V-43, after being hit twice by the destroyer Leary, was accounted for by the Florida, which scored time after time with shells from her star-board battery of seven five-inch destroyer defense rifles in twenty-nine minutes.

Lieutenant Kirsch, French aviator, is declared to have reached an altitude of 10,600 meters (about 34,768 feet) in an unofficial attempt to break the worlds altitude record.

Although the official record, made by Captain R. W. Schroeder, of the United States Army, is only 33,000 feet, it is thought probable that the Aero Club will not certify Lieutenant Kirsch's record.

Lieutenant Kirsch, during his flight, noted a temperature of 69 degrees below zero, while thermometers registered 97 degrees above on the streets of Paris.

State employes must work eight full hours a day, otherwise they won't have any jobs, is the gist of an order issued by Finance Director Floyd E. Waite to the eight major departments of the state of Ohio.

The eight-hour warning, coupled with the notice of removal, Waite said, was prompted "by the discovery, upon reorganization of the state government, that employes had been working less than eight hours."

The letter concludes:

"Directors are requested to notify all divisions that any employe working a shorter day will be dismissed, and any division or subdivision head who permits employes in his department to work less than eight hours a day will be removed from service."

A return to the American plan by a majority of hotels was predicted by members of the American Hotel Association in convention at Chicago. That plan supplied the guests with a better balanced menu, they said, and enabled him to know in advance the amount of his bill, as well as to have his meals in the hotel where he lodged.

The United States army post of embarkation in Hoboken passed out of existence June 30. The six historic piers from which practically the entire American army embarked for France during the World War will resume pre-war activities tomorrow.

The army post was established officially July 7, 1917, when the Government took over the combined piers of the Hamburg-American Line and the North German Lloyd Line.

Between that date and the date of the signing of the armistice a grand total of 1,777,109 American soldiers in uniform passed through the port on their way to France.

Coinage of silver dollars has been resumed by the mint after a lapse of seven years and the work of replacing 279,000,000 standard silver dollars taken from the Treasury during the World War to sell to Great Britain has been begun.

THE PASSING OF EDUCATION.

"I'm neither pedant nor pedagogue," she said, "I'm merely a pessimist. But when an exclusive summer hotel, demanding the highest rates, sends a letter containing several misspelled words, words of primitive orthography like 'adviseable' and 'beleave'; when a letter from a girls' camp making every pretension thinks it unnecessary to capitalize 'english' while it transposes the final letters of my daughter Mabel's name; when never yet have I received a note from the private school my small son attends that does not contain a misused adverb or an awkward preposition and often words misspelled as well; when the English teacher in the private school my daughter attends says 'acrost' and 'heighth,' and when the principal to whom I mentioned the fact says she is sorry, but it is hard to get good teachers of English nowadays, and Miss Blank is well grounded in the rules of grammar—does it all mean the Passing of Education?"

"Not wholly," replied the optimist. "It indicates a lapsing. For a while—a long time, perhaps—the grade will be downhill. But, like Truth, Education is mighty and in the end it will prevail."—J. B., in New York Evening Post.

THE COUNTRY SCHOOL PLAYGROUND.

BY J. W. WRIGHT.

A Kansas woman, who for twenty years has operated her own farm, passed one of Topeka's model schools at recess time. In the well-equipped playground she saw in a flash one of the attractions that draw farm folk to the cities.

Returning home, she invited the big boys of the school to a doughnut-and-lemonade feast at her house, described the Topeka playground, and proposed that if they would build the necessary apparatus she would supply the lumber and fittings. Those boys didn't need any urging.

They mapped out the ground, drew plans for the swings, seesaws, horizontal bars, vaulting horses, slides, ladders, bar stalls, sand boxes, and everything that boy ingenuity could improvise from lumber and poles. These materials she donated. It was at first proposed that the local blacksmith's services be enlisted, but the boys insisted on doing all the work themselves. The outfit of apparatus they produced with these cheap, simple materials and their own labor was surprising.

They even supplemented the original plans by fitting up two basketball courts, one for the girls and one for the boys. The result was beyond the expectations of the woman who originated the plan. Truancy stopped. By a system of merits restricting use of the playground to diligent pupils, school work was given an impetus that has been steadily maintained.

The boys and girls were so interested and excited over their new school attraction that parents drove from all parts of the school district to inspect the playground. Many of them had never visited the school before. The interest thus awakened has already resulted in unexpected benefit to the school in the way of co-operation from parents and increase of equipment for teaching. And the movement has only begun.

The women of any country school district, anywhere, can get together and do as much for their boys and girls as this Kansas woman, single-handed, has accomplished for hers.—Ex.

KEEPING CHILDREN IN SCHOOL.

Every State now has a compulsory day school attendance law, according to information recently furnished by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. The Bureau has just completed an analysis of education laws affecting child labor, the results of which are published in a chart entitled "State Compulsory School Standards Affecting the Employment of Minors."

In five States attendance is required until 18 years of age, in two of these in certain districts only; in 3 until 17; and in 32 until 16. One State requires attendance until 15, six others and the District of Columbia until 14, and one State requires attendance until the age of 12 years, but applies this to illiterates only.

Unfortunately, the exemptions in the majority of States are so numerous that they greatly limit the application of the law. The most common exemptions are for employment, or upon completion of a specified school grade. Four States specifically exempt for work in agricultural pursuits, 3 with no age provision. The laws of 14 other States contain loosely worded provisions exempting a child at any age, which might be used to cover absence for farm work as well as for many other purposes. Several States exempt a child whose services are necessary for the support of himself or others, without any age or educational provision.

The amount of attendance required is still unsatisfactory in many States, several demanding only 12, 16, or 20 weeks in a year. Even in States where city children must attend for 8 or 9 months, the amount of attendance required in rural school districts is sometimes considerably less.

WHERE SHOULD TEACHING STOP?

The University of Wisconsin is undertaking a great deal; some think altogether too much in the way of running the state. Among other things, it sends out a man to teach "salesmanship," which is really teaching the trade of inducing people to buy for the profit of the salesman. Now, the theory of a university, especially if supported by the state or by private contributions, is to teach men for the good of the world. To teach engineering, for instance, is to enable men to build better bridges and buildings, and do work for the world better than it would otherwise be done. So there are some things about commerce for the good of the nation rather than the individual. If a merchant buys goods where they are plenty and cheap, and carries them to a place where they are scarce, as where he buys tea in India and transports it to the United States, he is conferring a benefit on society. Even in buying goods in a retail store it is a pleasure to deal with a clerk who knows the goods, and who may be able to give the purchaser valuable information about them. But the salesmanship taught is based on the idea of increasing trade by creating demand, and inducing one to buy what the seller has. If a family has a certain income, the struggle is to get as large a part of it for yourself as possible. A favorite maxim with these instructors is to emphasize the good points of your article. That is, if you are selling a blind horse, it is best not to direct attention to his eyes, but to his sound feet, and emphasize the importance of good feet to a horse until it overshadows everything else. But this sort of thing does not benefit society as a whole. There is really no more business, because what trade one salesman gets, another can not get, since the ability to purchase is limited to one's income. Whether a great university should tax the people to send men around teaching this sort of salesmanship is open to question.—Ex.

CHILD LABOR LAW ENFORCEMENT REVEALS BAD CONDITIONS.

The processes of federal law administration have brought automatically into view the vicious circle of child labor, illiteracy, bodily feebleness and poverty. This statement is made in a report on the "Administration of the First Federal Child Labor Law," issued by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. As a necessary aid in the intelligent enforcement of this law, a body of important material was collected showing the conditions under which children go to work.

In five states it was necessary for the Children's Bureau to handle directly the inspection of certificates and the issuing of certificates. During the nine months in which the first federal law was in force over 25,000 children in these five states applied for certificates of age; 19,696 certificates were granted to children between fourteen and sixteen years of age, almost as many to girls as to boys. Less than one per cent of these children could furnish birth certificates as evidence of their age, and only two per cent offered baptismal certificates. Two-fifths submitted Bible records and over one-fourth life insurance policies. About one-fourth of the children, however, could furnish no documentary evidence, and had to secure a physician's certificate to show that they were over fourteen years old.

Many of the children who were found underweight when examined by a physician had been working in the mills for several years. Some gained quickly when taken out of the mill and put on a better diet. With others it was difficult to reach even the low standard which the physical requirement required. Many of the parents to whom physical defects in their children were reported were unable to pay for medical attention, and in most cases no public clinics were available to lend assistance.

One-fifth of the children in the five states left school when they were in the fourth grade; almost a tenth of them had never attended school or had not gone beyond the first grade, and only one twenty-fifth had attended the eighth or a higher grade. Their educational equipment was even more limited than the grade which they last attended would indicate. While 1,803 children expecting to go to work had not advanced further than the first grade even when they had gone to school at all, 3,379 could not sign their names legibly and 1,915 could not sign their names at all. Over one-fourth of the children would have been refused certificates if ability to write their names legibly had been a requirement.

CHILD ACTIVITY.

BY MARY F. WILCOX.

Teacher of Manual Training, Westboro, Massachusetts.

Children like to be active. Of course there are things that the child must do whether he likes to or not, but there is much of entertainment and development that he can gain through the activities which he craves.

Training comes through activity. The use of tools may furnish endless opportunities for helpful, happy activity. The remark of one little girl who used to visit me is significant, "I like to come up here, because I can do things."

Because the child does enjoy creating and doing, he learns unconsciously; and how much there is to be learned through the ends of the fingers! Skillful hands, concentration, observation, forethought, judgment, are all developed, and best of all, respect rather than scorn for manual labor is implanted in the child when he is young and impressionable.

In making gifts to children, give them toys or tools with which they can create. Most children can not have a complete work bench nor join a class in manual training, but any normal child can get hours of helpful, happy activity from the use of such aids as can come within his reach. A hammer, saw, some nails and a few small pieces of wood; paper, scissors, paste, colored crayons or water color paints are all splendid mediums for self-expression. Let the child's work be supervised sufficiently to guide his activity into doing whatever he does well, and for some definite object. Method in activity is of the greatest importance, whereas aimless activity neither entertains the child for any length of time nor does it help him to develop skill and concentration. Let whatever the child makes be something which, from his viewpoint, is worth while.

Not long ago I bought a playtime circus for a boy; it consisted of several sheets with the outlines of different animals. I gave him a box of the best colored crayons, a pair of scissors and some paste. With a little supervision, he cut, put together and colored one animal at a time and then we began a frieze for his room by pasting them on a strip of neutral tinted paper about ten inches wide. He was delighted with the occupation. It called for careful execution with scissors, appreciation for shades of color, imagination, and best of all, he felt that he was creating something worth while.

Of course there are children who are not interested in making toys or household objects, but any child should learn to use his hands by having certain regular home duties and responsibilities. Even a small child feels the pleasure of self-reliance and self-respect that come from responsibility for some regular duties. A child of three or four can put away and care for his own toys even when it might be easier for his mother to do so. Ownership entails responsibility and it may also develop generosity; for without possessions, how can we share? As soon as a child has a little responsibility placed upon him, he begins to develop self-confidence and self-respect; he becomes an intelligent individual who thinks for himself and feels for other people, who senses and respects the rights of others.

Only as our children are taught to appreciate the feelings and regard the rights of others can the citizens of the future become more humane and lawless consideration be relegated to the past.—Ex.

HOW THE PATRON HAMPERS HIS ARCHITECT.

American schools of architecture may be said to have passed their nonage, according to the recent report of a committee appointed by the American Institute of Architects to investigate American architectural education. This report, declares The New York Tribune, "will convince the most skeptical that, in spite of much loose talk about the marvels of European architecture and the skill of foreign architects, our own country takes the lead in an all-round comparison." Most flattering of all is the assertion of the committee that "on the whole, architecture is being taught in America with a broader view and in certain respects more effectively than in any other country," and that "in a few years the education offered in this country might be looked upon as final, except for the absolutely necessary element of study and cultivation through travel and research." As this conclusion has been independently reached by at least five of America's leading architects, comments The Tribune, "it may safely be accepted as a provable fact that American schools are no longer mere feeders for the schools of fine arts in Paris." However, as there is often a fly in the sweetest ointment, The Tribune is forced to confess that its joy is still alloyed by the reflection that the American patron is one whose education has not gone forward commensurately with that of the American architect, and who, consequently, has it in his power to defeat all that the most highly trained products of the schools can devise. The following shows how:

"Without depreciating in the least the great achievements and even greater ambitions of our architects, it is probably true that America is forging to the front largely because opportunity makes the man. Nowhere in Europe has there ever been such an enormous volume of building going on for a long period as in the United States. The unique feature about American construction is its diversity; everything, from the smallest, cheapest cottages and tenement houses up to Newport palaces and fifty-story office buildings, has been called for and delivered. If practice makes perfect, the American architect of the next generation ought to be the peer of his most distinguished foreign predecessors. Only one small cloud in the sky warns against our uttering this statement in the form of a positive prophecy; the cloud has the form of a man who has just made up his mind to build. European architects are far less hampered than their American colleagues by clients who insist upon putting fireplaces in the butler's pantry and running a three-story veranda around their city house. Before the American can outstrip his trans-Atlantic brethren in every respect, he must first educate a large, crude, money-spending part of the population to respect his professional judgment more than their own in matters architectural. Be it said to the country's credit, a great many persons have already learned this lesson, as hundreds of beautiful town and country houses erected during the past decade prove.

"The public will best be taught to respect the architect as an expert by having before its eyes constant reminders of the artistic and practical genius of high-grade architects. To increase the number of such designers is the first ambition of the committee. This is to be accomplished, according to the report, by the establishment of a post-graduate school where gifted students may work in close personal touch with able masters. Let us hope, though, that long before such a school shall have been established, the ordinary man will at least have learned to abhor the gingerbread monstrosities and the brick boxes which still pass for houses and flats in many quarters."—Ex.

YOUR KITCHEN UNIFORM.

BY CAROLINE FRENCH.

One needs a special sort of dress for kitchen work. It makes a woman feel far more business like if she has a sort of uniform to wear when she is in the kitchen. A dark gingham, just touching in the back, with rolled-up sleeves and the neck turned in may be easy to put on, but it is not an inspiring gown, and one does not work happily in it. A good model is this: A wash material, not too dark, but a pretty, bright color, but ankle length, with half-length sleeves, and that most-becoming thing, a square neck edged with white. A gown like that makes one love to work. A set of aprons should go with such a gown; not all of them the usual thing, either. One may be of rubberized cloth, to wear when there is washing to be done; one of dark gingham to wear when the range must be cleaned, and a number of white ones to wear when one is cooking. A pair or two of gloves are advisable also, to wear in doing heavy work, such as cleaning or blackening the range or handling oil in any way.

A great deal of time goes to waste in cleaning up. A set of utensils is brought out and used, washed and put away, and later on brought back for some other dish, washed and put away, and so on. It is far better to use as few utensils as possible in cooking, washing each when it is used, and using it over again in a few moments before it is put away finally. When anything has been prepared and put in the oven or on the stove, everything can be cleaned at once, not merely set aside till there is a great pile of pots and pans and spoons in the sink. And while a meal is cooking all the utensils should be washed up, so that after it is over only the actual dishes used on the table must be washed up.

Almost the most important thing a housekeeper can learn is system. That is the solution for her difficulties. It makes all the difference between the easy work of the trained woman and the dull, unending routine of the untrained.—Ex.

Grace, Grit and Greenbacks

There are three things which make it possible for Utah's Westminster College to prosper at the heart of Mormonism. These three are Grace, Grit and Greenbacks.

The Lord provides Grace. The college workers provide the Grit. Friends over America must provide the Greenbacks.

Just now we sorely need the Greenbacks. The College needs $30,000 before August 31st to square all current expense accounts. Toward that sum a $6,000 conditional pledge has been made. We need your help to secure the rest. Checks may be sent to President H. W. Reherd, D.D., Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah.

WIT AND WISDOM

IN A MINOR KEY.
Old Poem.

A little spring had lost its way
Amid the grass and fern;
A passing stranger (using a sterilized spade) scooped a well,
Where weary men might turn.

He walled it in (with enameled tile) and hung with care
A bundle of sanitary cups at its brink;
He thought not of the deed he did,
But judged that toil (without fear of germs and bacteria) might drink.

THE CORRECTOR CORRECTED

A college professor, who prided himself on his correct English, heard his wife remark. "I intended to tell Jane to bring a fresh bucket of water."

"You doubtless mean a bucket of fresh water," corrected the professor. "I wish you would pay some little attention to your rhetoric. Your mistakes are curious."

A few moments later the professor said,
"My dear, that picture would show to better advantage if you were to hang it over the clock."

"Ah," she replied quietly, "you doubtless mean if I were to hang it above the clock.
If I were to hang it over the clock, we could not tell the time. I wish you would be more careful with your rhetoric, my dear; your mistakes are curious."

And the professor all at once became much interested in his book.—Philadelphia Record.

The Grass Was Hot.—The eye of a little city girl was attracted by the sparkle of dew at early morning in a park.

"Mamma," she exclaimed, "it's hotter'n
I thought it was."

"What do you mean, darling?"

"Look, the grass is all covered with perspiration."

Mother's Art.—It was the drawing-class at the school.

"Sargent was a great artist," said the teacher. "With one stroke he could change a smiling face into a sorrowful one."

"That ain't nothing," piped up Johnny.
"Me mother does that to me lots of times."—Chicago News.

Police Activities.—"Where can I find a policeman?"

"What for?"

"To make an arrest, of course."

"I don't know where you will find one for that purpose. There are two on the next block censoring moving pictures and one in a hall lecturing on law."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"Second thoughts are best," said the sage. "But you can't do much thinking in a second," maintained the utter dolt.

Sometimes.—A teacher was telling her class little stories in natural history, and she asked if any one could tell her what a groundhog was. Up went a little hand waving frantically.

"Well, Tommy, you may tell us what a groundhog is."

"Please, ma'am, it's a sausage."—Ottawa
Evening Citizen.

Jack's Answer.—The schoolmistress was giving a practical lesson on fractions.

"Children," she said, "here is a piece of meat. If I cut it in two what should I have?"

"Halves," said the class in chorus.

"And if I cut it again?"

"Quarters," came the reply at once.

"And if I cut it again?"

"Eights," said half the class, the other half maintaining a dignified silence.

"Good! And if I cut the pieces again?"
Dead silence in the class, but one hand was raised in solitary state at the back of the room.

"Well, Jack, what is the answer.

"Please, ma'am, mincemeat."

Religious Life In Hanover College

Hanover endeavors to make the religious appeal primary in class-room and on the campus.

Every employee of the institution is of positive Christian character and influence. The President and four professors are ministers in the Presbyterian Church. Two others are Ruling Elders; all others are church workers.

All students attend divine worship at least once each Sabbath.
Hanover holds a daily chapel service at which attendance of all teachers and students is required. The service is purely devotional, and has been voted by the students one of the largest factors in Hanover life.

A minimum of 12 "hours" of Bible Study is required for graduation, one-half of which must be taken in the Freshman Year.

Annual reports of the Christian Associations to the Trustees of the College show that

The Y. W. C. A. had a 100 per cent membership last year;

The Y. M. C. A. had a 90 per cent membership;

The mid-week student prayer meetings are largely attended;

It is the purpose of the Associations to dominate the social life of the College;

All all-college social functions are given under the auspices of the Associations;

They own and operate the only movie-show in Hanover;

Evangelistic services are held one week each year.

Hanover is a Christian college in the dynamic sense of the term.

OUR EXCHANGES

GOOD NEIGHBORS.

Good neighbors, besides manifesting their good will in many ways, are sparing of criticism, refrain from unkind and sharp comments and try to add to the community's store of cheerfulness rather than to its fund of spiteful gossip.—Youth's Companion.

THE ALL-KNOWING PROFESSOR.

Every day, almost, some professor, who may be well-versed in some particular subject that he teaches and unblissfully ignorant about the Bible, sets himself up as interpreter of some phase of Scripture. He is about as reliable in his utterances on the subject of religion as a preacher ignorant of some particular science would be were he to dogmatize on that subject.—Lutheran.

A METHODIST PROTEST.

Unloading upon the Church a course of study, anti-Biblical and un-Methodistic, as the bishops have done, and then making a great ado about premillennialism looks very much like throwing dust into the air to blind the Church to their revolutionary doings.—Eastern Methodist.

A FROST ON A HOT DAY.

The Fourth of July was admittedly a pretty warm day, but those who saw the "Wet" parade in New York declare that it was one of the biggest frosts on record. The New York correspondent of a Philadelphia paper says that the whole show of the "Wets" seemed pathetic, and that it was "the best boost prohibition has had since the Volstead Act went into effect." Including the bands and policemen, there were 14,922 marchers instead of the several hundred thousands which the committee boasted would be in line.—Reformed Church Messenger.

SYMPTOM OF NATIONAL DECAY.

Analyze the big slugging match pulled off at Jersey City, N. J., in contrast with the doings in the Colosseum of ancient Rome and bull fights in Spain and Mexico and will not some cheerful optimist please tell us just when the man-made millennium will arrive?—Eastern Methodist.

EXPENSIVE BUSINESS.

The expense of the war game, even in times of peace, becomes apparent when you consider that our Navy Department spends millions on air-craft, to destroy a target, that originally cost millions to build.—Times-Star.

MORAL ASSETS.

If anything in connection with the great war is established beyond a doubt it is the predominance of moral forces. Our Empire came into the conflict in the first instance on a moral issue; and the struggle, so unequal at the beginning, could not have been maintained against overwhelming odds but for the conviction that we were fighting for the things that alone make life worth while. It was this conviction that won for us the sympathy of our powerful neighbor on this continent and of practically the whole world outside of the Powers which so wantonly attacked the liberties of the other nations. And while armies and fleets were the instruments by which the ruthless invader was flung back and cut off from the outside world, an unseen force more powerful than all the armies and navies of the world was operating for the triumph of right and the salvation of humanity.—Presbyterian Witness, Canada.

PART OF THE CHURCH.

It must be remembered that the Christian Endeavor Society is not an independent organization. It is subject to the churches and denominations to which the societies belong, and must admit to its programs only those subjects on which the evangelical churches are substantially agreed.—Endeavor World.

WHY IS THIS THUS?

A wandering infidel can come to a city and get off a harangue against the doctrine of hell, or the deity of Christ and the daily papers will give columns of space to the irresponsible stranger. In the same city are a score of earnest, able ministers representing the great denominations of the world about whose utterances from Sunday to Sunday these papers have not given as much space in twelve months as they give to one harangue made by one of these peripatetic infidels.—Herald of Holiness.

THE BLUE LAW.

The blue laws which they now debate In me arouse no fear.

A blue law has controlled my fate

For many a pleasant year.

It is no statute in a book

Where scholars delve anew—

A lady rules me with a look—

The lady's eyes are blue.

—Washington Star.

BY WAY OF PROPHECY.

The center of gravity in international affairs is passing from Europe. The Pacific Ocean washes the shores of the great nations of the future. Compared with the Pacific the Atlantic is little more than a Mediterranean Sea. Along the shores of the Pacific lie the peoples and lands that are in process of development —Western Canada, the Pacific states of America, Japan, China, Australia, South America. Capacious in resources, inhabited by people of capacity, ample in extent, these lands are capable of wonderful development. Armaments throttle prosperity in Europe and America and they foster the discord that exists. But if the growing peoples that border the Pacific arm themselves to the teeth, the world's future indeed is handicapped, if not doomed.

The thing is the conversion of Pacific peoples to a religion that will transform the spirit of national as well as of individual life. Foreign missions call for the wisest statesmanship. We must have applied Christianity in the political, economic and social life of China and Japan. We must make religion mean something in Latin America. And Canada and California, Australia and New Zealand must give religion a larger place.—Congregationalist.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

A husband has been a long time from home and his messages to his lonely little wife merely state that he is going to return soon, but that he can not, because of trip exigencies, say exactly when—"the day nor the hour." She begins to "look for him," not by sitting on the piazza and gazing all day long down the road, but by placing the house in order and by making special provision for his comfort and entertainment when he arrives.—Baptist and Reflector.

"HE KNOWS, HE CARES."

A young woman was going to entertain her friends in rather cramped quarters in the city, and had not all the conveniences. She went to a kind friend up the street, to borrow one or two necessary things.

"Is that all you want?" asked the friend.

"Yes, I think, everything," said the inexperienced one.

"But you will need this, and that, and the other," said the experienced woman, naming the articles.

"I was so thankful, afterward," said the young hostess, "that I went to some one who knew just exactly what I needed better than I did myself, and was willing to supply it."

It is almost an illustration of prayer. We go to God, asking certain things. We need not be afraid that we shall not get all we need. Our needs are usually much more numerous than we ourselves are conscious of.

In his experienced wisdom, he knows that wherefor we ought to ask even better than we do ourselves, and in the richness of his fatherly love, he supplies the known and the unknown lack.—Onward.

BLACKBURN SOLVES HER PROBLEM

A young woman writes: "As far back as I can remember I have had the idea of going to college and during the past few years this idea has been an absorbing passion with me. But I have so little money that college seemed out of the question. Then I heard about Blackburn and that has solved my problem.

"I was born and reared on a farm. I am not afraid of hard work, in fact, rather enjoy it, and, if you accept me, I shall do my best to make good in the self-help community."

Blackburn is solving this problem for a lot of very choice young people and will help many more as new friends share in the work. May I add your name to that list? Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

Utah's Westminster College

is the only chance for young people to get a college education in Utah in an institution neither owned nor controlled by the Mormon church.

To provide such Christian college education in a strategic field, Westminster needs $2,300 for current expenses before Sept. 1st.

This is America's problem. Won't you as an American help to solve it? Send checks to President H. W. Reherd, D.D., Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah.

KENTUCKY COLLEGE FOR WOMEN

This is now a four-year A.B. College. Located in the Bluegrass of Kentucky. Founded by the same men, inspired by the same spirit and located in the same town as Center College. A school of Christian living as well as learning. Academic courses with degree. Junior College with A.A. degree. Preparatory courses for entrance to this or other colleges. Music, Expression, Home Economics in courses for graduation. Gymnasium, swimming pool, with Resident Physical Director. For catalog and view book address PRESIDENT M. M. ALLEN, Danville, Ky.

SUMMER-TIME RELIGION.

The summer-time is a period of great activity in the physical world, where God and men are working together for the production and conservation of the food supply and general welfare of the world. They are insignificant and inefficient persons who imagine that nothing of importance is being done during these warm and glowing days, and that the summer-time may be wasted in idleness and inactivity.

It may be that for some good and worthwhile reasons these mid-summer weeks are seized upon by many persons for vacation time, but if there is a real need for vacation, and the time is legitimately employed for genuine recreation, the use of it in this way may be more than justified as a duty. But vacation should be so purposeful that it shall not be construed as a time of idleness and the losing of responsibility. Thankful may those be who having earned, and deserving a vacation, are permitted to enjoy it at this fervent period of the year, when it is so really opportune for the enjoyment of quiet and rest. But let no one imagine that because he is privileged to rest, all the world thinks of the summer as a time for idleness.

The physical workers of the world are in the very busiest time of the year. The work of building construction, in all departments, is in the period of greatest activity. All out-door labor takes advantage of the opportunity afforded by freedom from storm and cold, and the summer is welcome as the time when men can work in the open air and save their money and other proceeds of toil against the cold and short and stormy days of winter, when many can do no work, or but little. Let the impression then be avoided that it is not necessary to be much in earnest in the summer-time. Let those who rest remember that most of the people are hard at work.

But if there be vacation enjoyment for some, the religion of the summer-time should preserve them from dissipation and worldliness. It is so easy to leave one's religion at home when one goes away among comparative strangers, and especially to summer resorts, where multitudes of strangers are found. Physical resting may be had at too great a price if one suffers worldliness to take hold upon his soul. A Christian's influence should always and everywhere be for Christ. Many a pastor has had cause for sorrow because strangers who came among his people in vacation time seemed to have left their religion at home. Questionable conduct has helped the cause of evil, and failure to manifest religious interest has weakened the cause of Christ. If one is a Christian let him show it, even in the summer-time, where he visits and rests, and in the homes and in the little churches let him help to strengthen the holy influences that may be at work there under discouraging conditions.

Especially let professional Christians remember the sacredness of the Sabbath, even in summer-time, and even when away on vacation. The world seems mad, with the madness of the devil on the subject of amusements, and the Sabbath is treated with the greatest disrespect, as a time for reckless sport, commercial amusement, social merriment and outbreaching worldliness. Let the professed followers of Christ, at least, remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, even in the summer-time, and even though a multitude seems wildly and recklessly determined to do evil.

While God is so manifestly declaring his faithfulness and goodness in keeping his covenant with us, in the Natural World especially, pouring out the warmth that ripens our harvests and gives us fruitful seasons, "filling our hearts with food and gladness," we should be most reverent and grateful before him. Our faith should be most ardent and our reverent gratitude most outspoken. Let there be no hardening of our hearts. Let us be loving and prayerful before him, in the outgoing of praise and devotion. "Unto thy Name be all the praise for thy mercy and for thy truth's sake."

GOD DOES ANSWER PRAYER.

If there were more prayers there would be more answers to prayer. The one who, in living faith, has prayed much and often has many reasons for believing and knowing that God does hear and answer prayer. There may be many philosophical objections to prayer, and many rationalistic and materialistic arguments against it, but those who make it the practice of their lives to pray, come to know that Christ means what he says when he tells us: "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you."

A story comes to us of a mother who was one evening pleading with her son to remain at home and not go out to spend the night in dissipation. He answered, "I'm of age and too old to be tied to your apron strings." She said, "My dear boy, I can't force you to stay, but please remember that your mother will be all night on her knees praying God to save your soul." The young man went out and spent the night carelessly, forgetting all about his mother. About four o'clock in the morning he returned home, partially intoxicated. Seeing a light in his mother's room, made him think of her last words. He crept up to the window and looked in. There on her knees beside the bed was his mother, with upturned face, crying, "O God, save my poor lost boy!" Quickly he turned away and went up stairs to bed, but not to sleep. He tossed and turned until he was forced to get up and throw himself upon his knees before God and call for mercy. He rose from his knees a saved man. The news of his conversion went like wild-fire around the country and upward of five hundred young people were converted shortly afterward in that little village of Summerville, N. J. This young man was married and had children born to him. They all grew to manhood and became ministers of the gospel. One of them attained world-wide recognition as one of America's best-known preachers and religious writers of his day. His name was Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage.

Some may say that such experiences may come to some persons, but that they can not be common experiences. In this they are certainly mistaken. If there were more Hannahs, there would be more Samuels. If there were more Monicas there would be more Augustines. And if there were more women like T. DeWitt Talmage's mother, there would be more ministers to fill the pulpits of our evangelical churches, and call men and women to the great salvation of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

WHAT IS IT TO FORGIVE?

A great deal is said in the Word of God as to the duty of Christians to forgive those who have done them wrong. The possession of a forgiving spirit is laid down as one of the essentials in Christian character. It is made one of the conditions of the divine forgiveness. We are told that if we do not forgive, from our hearts, every one our brother his trespasses, we are subjects of God's displeasure rather than of his forgiveness. We must have forgiving hearts. While the possession of a forgiving heart does not, of itself, secure God's forgiveness, it is one of the necessary results of divine grace, and where it is lacking we show that we ourselves have not been saved.

But what does this mean? What does forgiveness mean? Is it necessary, in the case of every one who has injured us, that we shall go to that person, assure him that we regard the injury as trivial, and insist that it is all right? This is what some persons think should be done! But what if it is not all right? What if the person is still ready to injure us, and has no regard or compunction or penitence for what he has done, and is ready to repeat or increase the injury? What if his offense was a criminal injury that we have no right to pass over, so that ignoring it, or hushing it up, would be equivalent to compounding a felony? Does a Christian have no duty in having a crime punished, simply because the crime was committed against himself personally? It seems that back of all this matter of forgiveness lies the matter of righteousness, or justice, or holiness, than which nothing is more sacred or compulsory, even including forgiveness.

It would seem that we are not called on to go further in the matter of impossibilities than God does himself. God is ready to forgive every sinner on earth. He does this in his heart. He tells us that he is ready to forgive and he wishes all to come to him in repentance and be forgiven. But many do not come. Many do not repent. As a consequence many are not forgiven, actually. The attitude of God's heart and mind is that of forgiveness, but he does not do the impossible thing of forgiving the impenitent. Should he do this it would break down all moral distinctions in the universe; it would destroy justice and holiness; it would obliterate righteousness. Even where God does actually forgive, it is on the basis of Christ's atonement or substitution, so that he has borne the penalty of the penitent and believing sinner. God is forgiving, and yet all are not forgiven, and none are forgiven on the mere basis of amiability or Universalism, but on the sole basis of a penitent and believing acceptance of the atoning mercy of Jesus Christ.

It is this spirit to which God calls his people. They are to have the same ready, tender spirit that God himself possesses. They are to be ready from the heart to forgive any one who comes, in acknowledgment of wrong, even seventy times seven times. But it is not possible to say in regard to all sorts of crimes and misdemeanors that it is all disregarded and forgotten, even where there is no repentance on the part of the evil-doer. Let us be forgiving in heart, but let us not claim to be more tender-hearted than God, and let us not demand of other Christians that they be more forgiving than God is himself.

A father was left with his motherless infant. In the home were a couple who agreed to care for the child. One morning the child was sick and the father called a physician, who said that the child was seriously ill and left medicine for it with exact directions for giving it. The father and physician went away, the father being a railroad man who was compelled to go on a round trip on his road. When he returned, the next day, the child was dead. Those in whose care he had left it said that they were "Christian Scientists" and did not believe in the use of medicine. The father was desolate, heart-broken and indignant over the criminal duplicity and murderous neglect. He was told by some that he must be "forgiving."

What would forgiveness be in such a case? They have sinned against him most grievously and criminally. Instead of acknowledging the evil, and expressing penitence, and asking forgiveness, they persist in their error, and wish him to realize that he is all wrong because he can not and will not regard them with amiable complacency. He has no right to so regard them. They are criminally guilty. They should confess their sin, show repentance and beg for forgiveness for a crime. He may be and is forgiving in heart. He forgives them as God does, in his heart. On condition of repentance and prayer for forgiveness, he can and will forgive them in fact. God will do no more. Let us not be too severe on the demands of righteousness, and too lenient with unrepented and unacknowledged sins.

THE FAITH OF A GOOD PASTOR.

A minister who has been pastor of one church for forty years, Rev. Dr. W. C. Campbell, of Roanoke, Va., told his people on his recent anniversary what he is still believing; and his faith was so evangelical, so simple and so sturdy, that one does not wonder that his church membership is 808, that he received 51 members last year, and that all departments of his work are prospering. God honors those who honor him. Faithful service in a church is usually rewarded with worth-while results. If all ministers "stuck to God's testimonies" as David did, and stuck to one pastorate as Dr. Campbell has, we might see our world more rapidly moving toward Christ. In reaffirming his faith, Dr. Campbell said: "I believe in God, the one only living and true God. I believe in the triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit. I believe in the deity of Jesus Christ. I believe that he took upon himself human form and lived and suffered and died that men might live. I believe that we can be saved in no other way than by faith in him as a personal Savior. I believe in the Bible as the Word of God. I believe in its plenary and verbal inspiration. I believe in the existence of a heaven and a hell. I believe in the sanctity of the Holy Sabbath Day. I believe that only the religion of Jesus Christ can save this lost world."

THE INTERCHURCH MOVEMENT.

In answer to an inquiry as to the purposes and accomplishments and failure of the Interchurch World Movement, we quote the statement of the Cleveland Conference, that it was "a co-operative effort of the missionary, educational and other benevolent agencies of Evangelical churches to survey unitedly their common present tasks and secure the necessary resources of men, money and power for these tasks." It was very thoroughly organized, with departments and officers in all parts of the land. Many denominations endorsed it. It was liberal in expenditures and eventually failed, leaving a deficit of about eight millions of dollars, of which our Church paid or must pay one million. The statement also declares that it is not an organic union movement or an attempt to disturb the autonomy of the churches, but this was called in question, notably in our Assembly of 1919. It is very probable that different leaders in the movement had different ideas as to its purpose and conduct.

However, there is now a general agreement that the movement was visionary; its conduct extravagant and its failure complete.

This summer is a period of great and distressing drought, that is, prevailing not only in our own country, but largely throughout Europe and the countries of Asia. There will be a great shortage in the food supply in many lands, and we will, doubtless, be called on, with a shortened supply ourselves, to help relieve the suffering in other countries. This, and not war, is the proper field for activity among civilized nations. If it were not for war, any distress in the world could be easily remedied on its occurrence.

If it is true, as reported, that Admiral Sims said in a recent address in England, that he "was not a teetotaler, that he hoped to be able to come to England thirty years from now, that he believed he would be able to get drunk then, and that he would if he could," he deserves to be reprimanded. But Admiral Sims declares that he never said anything of the sort. The report is obviously a slander, intended for liquor propaganda, or to discredit Admiral Sims for what he said against Sinn Fein. Such slanders are abominable.

Recently Ambassador Harvey said publicly in England that "as his country is a prohibition country he is, himself, a prohibitionist at home and abroad," and showed that he understood the proprieties and obligations resting on him at least in this department. Law is a sacred thing, and public men should show that they are in accord with the law of the land in which they live. Failure here is a departure from patriotism and good citizenship.

Dr. Albert W. Palmer, of Honolulu, has a review in the Congregationalist, of Professor Pitkin's book, "The Rising Tide of Color." One statement is true and forceful, not only touching race prejudice, but as to discussions of many other problems of the day. He says: "One of the most dangerous men in our modern world is the man who uses the terminology of science without its fair, balanced, truth-seeking spirit, and so produces something that looks like science but is really only prejudice and propaganda."

Our nation attaches a great deal of importance to secular education, and there are a great many institutions for higher training and instruction as well as the public schools which are found all over the land. This is excellent, of course, but it is not sufficient. Men may be well educated, and yet only be educated scoundrels. The character needs to be affected, and this is the province of religion. If we leave the Bible and religion and Christ out of the lives of the young, we shall be in dire straits in the future.

When Dr. Billy Sunday was invited to take a ride in an aeroplane he refused, saying: "I have a wife and four children." A man who has responsibilities is not called on to take wholly unnecessary risks. It may sometimes be necessary to rush into danger and then a brave man will take the risk even when others are dependent on him. If a man is really courageous and manly, he will take care of himself for the sake of the persons and the causes for which he is responsible.

The sane and conscientious demand an answer to the inquiry, Why, if the Christian religion can not be taught in our national schools and colleges, is there any right or reason for teaching materialistic evolutionary irreligion? If the Bible may not be read in every school and college, what right is there for teaching the old Greek and Latin myths and mythologies, and for studying the books of the old heathen writers of those lands? There is no reason that can, for a moment, stand any reasonable test.

The Western Christian Advocate wisely suggests that "the great body of Christians are quite willing to allow individuals to hold personal views on premillennialism." It adds that "the concerted attempt now being made to brand as heretics every dissenter from that doctrine simply invites controversy and division." We are curious to know who is making such an attempt. We have not been able to find a premillennialist who does it. The fact seems to be that if there is such an attempt it is made by liberal new theology people in order to divide conservatives, by giving the impression that the old line between liberals and conservatives is gone and that the present line is between liberals and premillennialists.

There is no assurance that the soul of any departed person ever communicates with friends who are left on earth. Spiritualism is dangerous and demoralizing to mind and morals. The strong probability is that if there are communications from the unseen world they come from evil spirits, or demons, not from the departed. Modern spiritualism is hostile to God, and to Jesus Christ, and its purpose and effect is to interfere with the work of Christ in saving men. It is dangerous. Better let it entirely alone, and follow Jesus Christ in simple faith.

We have received advance sheets of the General Assembly Minutes, extending as far as the latter half of the Statistical Reports, seeming to give assurance that, if there be no unexpected delays, the Minutes may be put out at a comparatively early date.

SOLDIERS OF THE KING.

Soldiers of the King,
Ever ready stand,
Armor girded on,
Waiting God's command;
Enemies' assail,
A host on ev'ry hand,
Stand then for the King of kings.

Soldiers of the King,
Will we halt or flee,
When the hosts of sin
Strive for mastery?
May we never fail,
Never fearful be,
Trusting in the King of kings!

Soldiers of the King,
Ever onward go,
Christ will lead us on,
Fear not then the foe;
For the cause of right
Strike a mighty blow,
Fighting for the King of kings!

Soldiers of the King,
Victory comes at last,
When the warring days
Are forever past,
Then we'll join to sing,
'Neath heaven's arches vast,
Praises to the King of kings!

GREAT BIBLE CHAPTERS.

(THE PILGRIMAGE OF ABRAHAM.)

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

Abraham's pilgrimage, which occupies more than twelve chapters of the Book of Genesis, beginning with chapter twelve, is very instructive to the Bible reader. For one thing, it suggests that every one of us is a traveler and a wanderer through this world, and that "here have we no continuing city" (Heb. 13: 14).

This fact has been brought tragically to our attention recently by the fate of our neighboring city of Pueblo, Col. Flood and fire have been the agents of terrible destruction. Thousands have been made homeless. Great buildings have been undermined and extensive stocks of valuable goods destroyed. Many lives have been lost. As if the great God had been saying to us: "Move on, this earth is no place for immortal souls to build on permanently. Like the "Father of the faithful," "look for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11: 10).

"I'm but a stranger here,
Heaven is my home;
Earth is a desert drear—
Heaven is my home;
Danger and sorrow stand
Round me on every hand,
Heaven is my Fatherland,
Heaven is my home."

But as Abraham journeyed on, he had repeated assurances that he was going in the right direction. Again and again God appeared to him and he recognized the divine presence and comradeship by building altars unto the Lord. (Gen. 12: 7, 8.)

"Away went Abraham from Ur of the Chaldees and on his way he received a renewal of the promise. Very beautiful was this. He showed that he was on the right road, and that God's faithfulness followed him like an angel of defence. It is so with ourselves on the journey to the better Canaan, where the upper springs never dry, and the summer lies like an infinite blessing over the whole land."

"And as we move to it, step by step, what words of love and hope are spoken to us by the Lord of the fair land! How he helps us up the steps that are long and hard; how he cheers us along the road that is flat and tedious; how he throws a robe around us when the fierce winds blow upon us in bitter cold!" (From Dr. Joseph Parker on "Genesis," p. 190.)

On account of the famine in the land of Canaan, Abraham moved to Egypt temporarily. And this came near being his undoing. For he instructed his wife to represent herself as his sister. He wished them to be deceived as to his real relationship to Sarai, for he feared for his own life. This was a foolish fear. Should not his trust be in God under all circumstances? The rebuke he received from Pharaoh when the facts were known was deserved. What a humiliation to be rebuked by the heathen for telling lies!

Notice here the forbearance of God with human infirmity. "God forbid," pertinently remarks Dr. Joseph Parker, "that I should make any excuse for sin; yet there are sins that come out of weakness rather than out of love of sin for its own sake. Abram's sin arose rather from weakness than depravity. A great fear seized him. A sudden squall from the hills struck his little boat sharply, and for the time being he foolishly took his affairs into his own hands."

Please note, dear friend, in this history, that mention is made again and again of Abram's habits of religious worship. It is mentioned after his first arrival in the land of Canaan, as follows:

"There build he an altar unto the Lord who appeared unto him" (Gen. 12: 8).

Again, after his return from Egypt:

"Unto the place of the altar which he had made there at the first: and there Abram called upon the name of the Lord" (Gen. 13: 4).

There is danger in these days of intense business and social activity that the home altar and the home worship will be neglected. We must save from the wreck, at any cost, the hallowing influence of the family gathering for Bible reading and prayer.

Finely writes Dr. Edgar W. Work:

"What a wonderful place is the home, more wonderful even than the church in its way. It antedates the church. The better we can make our homes, the deeper and fuller will be the hidden life of the soul. Also there will be invisible ideals in such a place that will elevate conversation and produce domestic usefulness and mutual helpfulness, and the growth of manly and woman respect. An atmosphere of reverence will be there and the sound of prayer will be heard. The Bible also will have its place. When a man at the end of his day's toil has gone back to his appointed dwelling, no matter how humble, he has come to the place where his soul should grow."

No wonder Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman said:

"The greatest need of the American nation today is homes—not platial buildings, of necessity, but homes where Christ is honored, where God is loved, and where the Bible is studied."

To have true religion in the home is to have true love, true peace, true faith and true joy there. These are eternal realities and they come from above. They are not the products of habit, important though good habits are. They are not polish or venerer that are put on from the outside. They do not come from the observance of a set ritual of worship, although a set ritual has its place. These great realities to which we pray that men's eyes may more and more be opened, are inwrought by the Divine Spirit in the penitent and prayerful heart. They come from God. They descend from the everlasting hills. They are refreshing, life-giving breezes to wearied bodies and jaded spirits.

May God send down from heaven the fire, the light, the life into the thousands of fathers and mothers throughout the whole Church whose home fires are not burning with true love, joy, peace because Christ is not loved as he deserves to be loved and honored as he deserves to be honored by them in their home life.

SATISFACTION AND VISION.

BY REV. CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD, D.D.

The ninety-first Psalm closes with a promise that is doubly precious; after reciting many blessings as the belongings of the man who sets his love upon God, the Most High is pleased to say concerning him, "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation." There shall be such satisfaction and vision as came to Moses, the man of God, who, in old age, at the command of his Maker, went up upon a mountain and died there a high death, surrendering his spirit as a sigh, but not without a song, a blessing pronounced upon the people, and a vision of the promised land.

There is such a thing as getting enough of this life. Goodliness inherits the earth in a very real and large sense. It enjoys the manifold goodness of God through many years, and it sanctifies the many afflictions that are allotted to it, by the power of a superior peace and joy. But even godliness grows old. Accumulating years weigh more and more heavily. Energy that sprang up declines into weakness that falters before things too high for it. The desire for the good of life fails. The interests that once seemed so important are transferred to others. The friends of the past are gone. The pride of life is humbled. The world grows empty and lonely. There comes a longing to look upon the landscape of the land that has seemed very far off, but that now draws nearer. We have been filled with all that this world can give. We think of nothing more to be added to our earthly experience of God's providential goodness. We want something that this life can not offer.

We can not see the whole of salvation in the world. Salvation is too large for so small a sphere. Salvation has eternity for its scope. We see it as a far star and receive but a beam of its full glory here. Our foretastes of salvation are limited by earthly imperfection. We are alienated from the fullness of righteousness and an abundant knowledge of God by clouds that shut out heaven and fogs of haunting doubt. Our eyes are too dim to see, our ears too dull to hear, our hearts too hard, to receive the things that God hath prepared for us in the fullness of the Savior. We know salvation in its shortage. We shall know it in its length, and depth, and height. We have worked salvation out, we have thought it out, we have expressed it in part, but we feel the attraction of a greater world, the call of an unlimited and empowered sphere. God has shown us a part of his salvation; we want to see the rest of it.

There is such a thing as seeing all that God has to show us. Now in outline, then in detail. Heavenly things mean more to us now as we think of them in general rather than in particular terms, but all the heavenly plains will be starred with worlds of light and beauty. It shall be our delight to seek out and find all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge that now lie hidden in Christ. Thank God for this world, but thank him more for the world to come. Praise God for the earnest of salvation, for the elements of perfection, for the bud of eternal life, but praise him in advance for the promised fullness of vision. The old father who has charge of the Garden of Gethsemane will hand you a rose, to remind you what loveliness of life can come out of the Savior's sorrows; God will show us the glorious beauty of that world and that life which rise from the grave of his only begotten Son. We grow impatient for the realization, not of any "great adventure," but of the divine promise to show us his salvation.

FELLOWSHIP; WITH WHOM?

BY REV. W. H. ILSLEY.

"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship, one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin." John is here dwelling upon "the message which we have received from him" and which he, as an apostle, was commanded to "announce to you, that God is in the light and in him is no darkness at all." Light, in its figurative sense, is a symbol of truth and righteousness to such an extent that when John would summarize what God is in his infinite, divine nature he affirmed "God is light"; he is the embodiment of all that is absolute in truth and perfect in righteousness. Then, desiring to inspire in those to whom he wrote a desire to become like God, he used the words with which this article opens.

As usually applied, so far as the writer has observed, one of the prime consequences of believers walking in the light is that they have fellowship, one with another. This is true, on account of the resultant state into which each is sure to come because of the common "light" which is theirs. Of the many sermons to which I have listened, based on this text, that has been the universal application. But is that what John is trying to teach? True though the statement is, I am sure it falls far short of what John intended to say.

Bear in mind the central truth here is "God is light" (v. 7). A second truth in the context is, "If we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness we lie." Here first appears the idea of fellowship with God. Then follow the words we are considering, "We (God and ourselves) have fellowship one with another" if, and only if, "we walk in the light as he is in the light." The real fellowship is with God, not among believers only.

That this is John's meaning appears if viewed from another angle. We, professing Christians, have fellowship "one with another" regardless of the question of walking in the light. We have true Christian fellowship "if we walk in the light as he is in the light." But that, by no means small, body of professing Christians who do not so walk also have "fellowship one with another"; fellowship in self-deception, in sin and in a common destiny if such a walk persists till the end, even as they who are bold in sin, making no Christian profession, have also a common fellowship.

Further, there is no logical connection between fellowship and the fact that "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth from all sin," except the fact that all who are thus cleansed are truly Christian. They have fellowship because they are cleansed; they are not cleansed because of their fellowship.

But, and here again we come to John's meaning, "if we walk in the light as he is in the light we (God and ourselves) have fellowship one with another," and because of that divine fellowship, fellowship in truth as to faith, and righteousness as to character, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." But the order must be reversed even here; it is because the blood has cleansed from all sin that we are permitted to come into that blessed fellowship. The fellowship is the result, not the cause.

With this view of John's meaning we catch a glimpse of the immense and glorious results which accrue to the believer who walks "in the light" as he is in the light; fellowship with God and with believers in all ages, and, because of such acquired fitness, ultimate fellowship with the host which no man can number, redeemed, like ourselves, by the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth from all sin.

"SHARING THE SACRAMENT."

BY REV. J. GIBSON LOWRIE, D.D.

Under the above caption the story is told, in a religious paper, of a young boy who, apparently with the approval of his pastor, carried a portion of the bread offered him at the Lord's table home to his invalid mother, and the comment is made: "Taking the sacrament at the hands of her own young son brought Christ very near, and truly he was made known in the breaking of bread."

This is an instance of uninstructed piety. Had the mother, not to say the pastor, been sufficiently intelligent, the young boy would have been told that the Lord's Supper can not thus properly be shared by one who is not present where the ordinance is observed by a number of Christians who are assembled in Christ's name for this special purpose. Yet the writer of these lines some time ago heard a prominent minister relate with approval how a Chicago pastor sent by mail a portion of the bread and wine that had been consecrated at the communion table to a soldier boy in one of our army cantonments, that he might partake alone of the elements that his fiance had shared in her home church. Here were undoubtedly both zeal and love, "but not according to knowledge."

The sacraments of the Church are to be observed according to Christ's appointment, and in no other way. Our Presbyterian Confession of Faith teaches (Chapter 29, Section 4) . . . "Receiving this sacrament (the Lord's Supper) by a priest, or any other, alone . . . another reserving the elements for any pretended religious use are contrary to the nature of this sacrament and to the institution of Christ." Upon which Dr. A. A. Hodge comments: "Our standards, in common with the general judgment of the Reformed Churches, teach that the Lord's Supper is essentially a communion, in which the fellowship of the believer with Christ and with his fellow believers is set forth by their eating and drinking of the same bread and the same cup. It follows that it should not be sent to persons not present at the administration, nor administered by the officiating priest to himself alone." It may, however, he says, be properly administered in the sick chamber provided that the officers and a sufficient number of the members of the church be present to preserve the true character of the ordinance as a communion."

This is sane and sound instruction: Partaking of the sacramental elements apart from a company of believers gives color to the Romish theory that they convey both regenerating and sanctifying grace by their own nature and efficacy—an error that can not be too carefully guarded against.

Dr. R. L. Dabney, in his Systematic and Polemic Theology, p. 818, says: "Protestants deny the propriety of private communions, because they deny that the Supper is a sacrifice. It is a commemoration of Christ's death, and shows forth his death. There should therefore be fellow communicants to whom it shows it forth, or at least spectators. It is a communion, representing our membership in the common body of Christ. Hence to celebrate it when no members are present to participate is an abuse. The motive for desiring private communion is usually superstitious, and therefore our Church does wisely in refusing it."

"FOLLOW THE TRAIL."

BY REV. J. W. COUNTERMINE, D.D.

Two of us started out early in the morning to climb a small mountain to witness the sunrise, which was said to be beyond description when seen from this mountain top. We started up the trail together, and the climb was easy and gradual. But for me it was a little too slow, and, as I was stronger than my friend, I struck out to cut corners and to make a dash for the top. For a time I made progress and left my friend behind, and concluded that there should be two ways up that mountain. But after an hour or so, I found myself in what the mountain hiker calls a "pocket." To advance farther was impossible, and there was a high wall on either side. I sat down and "thought on my ways," and while meditating, I heard a voice, and as I looked up I saw my friend several hundred feet above me, who saw that I was in a pocket, and heard him say with a gentle, clear voice, "Follow the trail."

His advice was well taken. I went back down the mountain, regretting all the way the loss of time and elevation, till I reached the trail. For the rest of the way up I followed the trail. Having climbed up the mountain, reaching the top nearly one hour too late to see the sunrise, I sat down and began to soliloquize as to how true my experience that morning had been to climbing the mountain of life. For the most part we enjoy being on the mountain top of Christian experience. With Peter we can say, "It is good for us to be here." But the question is, which way shall we take to ascend the mountain? In short, I might say, "Follow the trail." And for these reasons:

(a) The trail is a narrow path, shall I say, from the bottom to the top. Not a beaten road or paved street for an automobile to speed over, but a footpath beyond the road. Many are traveling the highways of life, but we travel the trail alone. "Narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

(b) The trail represents sacrifice. Some one has had to blaze the way through the woods; some one has had to make the "uneven level and the rough places a plane" for others to follow. As I climbed up the trail I felt truly grateful to those who had paid the price of sacrifice to find a way up the mountain side for me to follow, and this appreciation was enhanced by the fact that my way of short-cuts brought me face to face with the impossible. What joy and pleasure to the faithful follower of the trail! Hear the Master say, "I am the way." He built a trail. Will we find it and follow it?

(c) The trail is not always visible or well marked. Where it crosses the hard, smooth rock, it becomes necessary to set up stones along the way to mark the trail which the hiker calls "ducks." Will we remove the "ducks," or will we add a few stones to them to make the way clearer to those who follow? "Remove not the ancient landmarks which thy fathers have set." Will we follow in the path of righteousness that Christ has made, and set up some marks along the way of that path so that others may more easily follow "in his steps"? Follow the trail in your Christian service and help to mark it for others to climb to heights of glory

A GREAT COURSE OF STUDY.

BY REV. W. H. JORDAN.

We do not know how long it took Paul, but he says, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." It was a fine course of study, well learned. Contentment and Godliness, he declared, is great gain. The source of his contentment was in having found Christ in his fullness.

Contentment is a wonderful word. It is interesting to study both in the Bible and in the dictionary. But it is far more interesting when once it becomes a part of one's daily life. It then sits in kingly power upon the throne of the heart, invincible, peaceful, serene.

Contentment is not stoicism, not mere indifference. There is a vast difference between stoicism and contentment, a great gulf fixed. There is a difference in the feeling and the atmosphere. It is habitual satisfaction, mental ease, freedom from anxiety and agitation.

Contentment does not include thriftlessness or idleness. Discontent can know no peace. The world's unrest is caused by sin. Greed and covetousness compel famine and pestilence to dig the graves of millions of despairing, broken-hearted people. But the world is desperate because it has ignored God. God alone is the stabilizing power. He alone can preserve and keep. Christ alone is the Desire of all nations. He only can meet the cravings of the soul.

Put yourself on the witness stand and take the oath to "tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth" as you answer these questions:

Have you found your bearings? These are most important both in navigation and in surveying. Do you know your weight? You have been weighed. Have you been found wanting? Have you taken your measurements? Do you know your worth? Do you know your own heart? God says it is deceitful and desperately wicked, who can know it? Do you know you are too valuable to grumble and complain; to waste your time and strength, your money and your opportunity?

Do you know that you are God's workman, created in Christ Jesus unto good works; created for a specific purpose, just as truly as a typewriter is made for a specific purpose? Do you grow daily? You are so commanded. Beware of the day you cease to grow. It will soon be time to put crape on the door and to engage the undertaker. When a man dies, a funeral is held and a decent interment made, but many a soul dies long before the body and no funeral is held. There are any number of disensouled bodies.

Are you contented or discontented, pessimistic or optimistic, melancholy or cheerful? Do you brighten the corner where you are, or has the sun of your life been darkened? Do you live today or are you always getting ready to live? Are you giving yourself and your home and your environment your best?

Giving up accomplishes nothing. Difficulties are not to be stumbling blocks but stepping stones on the stairway of holiness. Do you cultivate the habit of contentment or discontentment? Does the tale of woe another pours into your ear pull you down? Can others talk you into discouragement and discontent? Do you endure as seeing him who is invisible? Can you see things eternal?

Contentment is a wonderful blessing. But beware of a contentment whose ingredients are ignorance, blindness, arrogance, stoicism, prejudice, neglect of the things that are above, the great spiritual truths and righteous principles.

Some find happiness only in spending, in living outside their income; in getting when the secret of happiness is in giving. Some find pleasure only in going; some in satisfying their appetites and passions. Some mistake their wants for their needs. Some lose faith because their selfish prayers are not answered. Some expect big crops from shallow plowing. Some sheep think the pastures over the fence are greener and better. Some folk seem happiest when they make other people miserable. Some folk seek happiness only within the high walls of their own selfishness, not knowing that heavenly joys will follow when they pull down those walls, and live for others. God did not make the world too large, but you have made your life too small.

"I have learned to be content." What a wonderful lesson. The lesson is far more valuable in that it is learned in the school of experience. The precious promises are all for us. He satisfieth the longing soul. Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled. He satisfieth them with the bread of heaven. The Lord shall satisfy thy soul in drouth. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life. I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness.

INDIAN MISSIONS—SYNOD OF OKLAHOMA.

BY REV. DUNCAN MCRUER.

They tell us that Choctaw Presbytery has gone far over the top in the New Era Movement. So it has. It has done wonders and will continue to do great things. It is a really home-mission presbytery. It carries out the idea of home missions better than any other presbytery in the whole Assembly. All of its churches are supplied. All of its ministers must come from its own tribe. The Church has never spent a dollar educating any of the Choctaw ministers. Yet we have a ministry that is carrying on the work equal to any other presbytery. I thought when I heard Mr. Bryan make that wonderful suggestion of having the five wise counsellors to visit the Church at large, what a wonderful thing it would have been if these men had appeared in this country seventy years ago and had planned with men like Wright and Lilley, to establish educational centers to train leaders in the Indian work; men from their own tribe to do the work.

The Moderator of Choctaw Presbytery is an elder in the Buffalo Church. This Moderator, Thomas Watson, is a born leader. He is straight as an arrow in the make-up of his physical form, and in his character noble and true. He can preach to his people. He has just completed a new building of worship. It is a beautiful little church. It was built without any aid from the Board of Church erection.

It was a good time at Dixon Chapel a few Sabbaths ago. A young Choctaw soldier was there who had been over in France and gone on over the top. He praised the work of the Y. M. C. A. and all other good American institutions, and said he would not live in France. He thought they were far behind the Choctaws. He told the Choctaws that they should be thankful for their homes, their schools and their nice little church. Dixon's Chapel has twenty acres of land. He said many French families would be glad to live on such land. He said the foreigners needed help. He took up an offering for missions and got $44 for foreign missions and $6 for home missions. The quota of Dixon Chapel in the New Era is $100 and they raised half of that the first collection and have another $25 ready to send. He said it was a noble thing to help free a people from tyrants, but in sending their offerings to foreign missions they were helping to free the world from all sin. He spoke of "our brothers and sisters across the sea." I have heard many talks on foreign missions, but this was one of the best I ever heard. Fifteen at Dixon Chapel signed the Tither's Union Card.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

For the development of a phase of the institutional work, at the First Church, among the large number of boys congregating there, the pastor, Rev. Maitland Alexander, D.D., recently asked for $3,000 to put in bowling alleys, and not only received more than that amount, but a request from one lady to be permitted to bear the entire expense. This healthy recreation will be advantageous to these lads, who are very limited in such opportunities. This form of amusement is very popular in this city, and the bowling alleys are crowded and engaged in advance. In the old days when like the billiard table, they were always in connection with the saloon, the Church rightly interdicted them, among the sordid pleasures. But the Church forced a purification, and made them available. Oftener than we realize, the Church has lifted amusements by its criticism to a higher plane. It is pleasant to hear of such a response to such a request.

Our Freedmen's Board is listening with both ears for some generous man or woman to ask the privilege of bearing the expense of the needed Theological Dormitory at Biddle, and the completion of the Dormitory at Albion Academy.

Rev. T. C. Pears, Jr., assistant to pastor W. L. McEwan, of the Third Church, has gone to Maine for his vacation.

Rev. Dr. S. N. Hutchison, of the East Liberty Church, has gone to Mendham, N. J., for his vacation, and Prof. D. R. Breed will supply the pulpit until Sept 1st. On the front page of each Sabbath Bulletin of this church, Dr. Hutchison has a message for the week, which is pointed, suggestive, and often unique. It is partly a distillation of his sermons. Some of these messages are exceedingly pointed. On Sabbath, July 10th, answering the question: "Is it wrong for me to play a quiet game of golf or tennis on Sunday, as I am so busy?" he says: "There are very few who can not find time during the week for recreation if they are so minded. But to the man who says he can not find the time we unhesitatingly say that it is wrong to use the Lord's day for amusements." Then he argues the need and purpose of the Sabbath, and later says: "If you have no life beyond that of the sheep, it does not matter what you do with your Sabbath—but if you are more than a beast; if the grave for you does not end all; if your life reaches across the gulf and takes hold on eternity; then it does make a difference what you do with the Sabbath. This trumpet gives no uncertain sound. And there is here a clear call to the spiritual side of life, and the care and culture of the soul, something we are overlooking in our materialism and perhaps, in our social emphasis.

As we approach another mayoralty election an effort is being made to introduce better nominations, and a large number of the Bible Classes are being urged to direct attention to this responsibility.

President M'Crory, of Biddle University, Charlotte, N. C., reports an attendance of 207 colored teachers at the Summer School conducted at the University for six weeks this summer, the largest number ever enrolled. After the school closes, Aug., 22, a school of Method will be conducted for eight days under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church, and an attendance of 200 from North Carolina and Virginia is expected. The Daily Bible Vacation Schools held by a number of the colored churches in the South, are proving a great success.

The fearful riot at our Western Penitentiary, North Side, may have different explanations, but it is probable that the lack of sufficient work, or physical occupation, may be an efficient cause. Confine a thousand or more men and women without moral principles in idleness and listlessness, and something is going to break. I shall not argue the case, but it is certain that when labor unions forbid prisoners to manufacture or produce goods, and there is not enough farmland to offer an outlet for muscular power, Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do.

Rev. J. D. Campbell, of the Morningside Church, will spend his vacation in Canada. This Church, on July 10th, received seven new members.

At its recent communion the First Church, Crafton, Rev. W. J. Dempster, D.D., pastor, received twenty-eight new members.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

Dr. King writes from the meeting of the Synod of Washington, saying that Synod is asking for a campaign on the subject of home missions. He goes from that Synod to Great Falls for the Synod of Montana; then to Cheyenne, Wyoming, for that Synod, and from there he comes home for a day or two, and then he and I go on to Ovoca, Tenn.; then on to Hollister, Missouri, for the Summer Assembly there. Dr. Montgomery has been with the Synod of North Dakota at Jamestown and returned about July 16th, hoping to get a few days of rest here at home. Those of us who have so much traveling to do feel that it is real rest to be at home.

This is the period of the year when Daily Vacation Bible Schools are in session, and from all sources there come most enthusiastic reports of the attendance and interest in them. Dr. McLean, who has charge of our Spanish-speaking work, writes: "We enrolled a school of one hundred and twenty in Phoenix. In San Bernardino Miss Lindsmith is limited only by the capacity of her equipment. We have schools also at Laverne, San Gabriel, Los Angeles, Azusa, San Diego and Coachella." He says this last place is a new station which he is anxious to open up, as there are two hundred Mexicans there and he has a summer student there now and at work, but he says: "I know we have not enough money in the budget, but I want to see the work go on." Here we are, facing a great opportunity to do a great service and the door is wide open, and this man, capable of doing splendid work among these Spanish neighbors of ours, can not enter it, because he does not have the means to sustain it.

Almost every day letters come to us asking for men who are willing to do a hard job, but we are not able to point the writers to them. One of our field men writes, in a letter just received: "I wonder if we are praying as we ought to the given of men, for the men we need." Then he suggests that this is a good time to call the attention of the Church to this need of men, and ask all our people to go to their knees in behalf of vacant churches.

The Summer Assembly for Texas is on now at Waxahachie, and they are taking hold of it with spirit and hopefulness. Ovoca, Tennessee, comes on July 26th, and runs until August 2d. Then Hollister, Missouri, begins August 2d and runs to the 10th. I am hoping to attend both of these, and am expecting helpful sessions of both.

A superintendent of home missions in a self-supporting synod was in my office a few days ago and reports that in his long service in this capacity he has never known a time when men were as ready to turn to God and to hear what he will say to them at a time like this. I am wondering if men have not despaired at getting help from men, and, in their helplessness, they are turning to God. It is time, it seems to me, that we should all come to this conclusion and turn in penitence to him and ask his guidance. If this seems to be general, and I am disposed to think that it is, then should not the Church wake up and capitalize this feeling and bring men to see what the power of the truths taught in the Bible will do for a wandering world, and a world, that is tired and disappointed in whatever it has tried? With such a situation as this facing us, why should we spend time on trifles and not get down to the supreme business for which we have been called into being by our loving and faithful Head?

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Rev. Dr. William C. Covert, pastor of the First Church, Chicago, was the preacher last Sabbath at the Lafayette Avenue Church, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. W. H. Griffith Thomas preached again in the Fourth Church, New York; Rev. Albert Parker Fitch, of Amherst, Mass., preached at the Brick Church; Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell was at the West End Church, and Dr. Robert E. Speer preached at the Fifth Avenue Church.

At the Tent Evangel Rev. Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, spoke, striking another blow at prize fights. Dr. John K. Sterritt, former surgeon, of Pittsburgh, Pa., spoke in the evening. During most of this week Mr. Frank Goodman, a converted gambler, spoke from night to night on "Are Gamblers Bred in Hellholes?"; "Crime and the Remedy"; "The Modern Judas." Mr. Goodman says positively that gamblers are trained in the homes of respectable people, many of them known to him as members of the churches. The start is made with the social game, just for fun, and soon the playing is for money. Mr. Goodman was converted at the Billy Sunday meetings in New York several years ago, and he cries aloud and spares not at every opportunity, sometimes rather harshly it may be, but with great accuracy for he knows whereof he speaks, having been the leading gambler of New York City for years.

The Christian Endeavorers of Leverich Memorial Church, Corona, Rev. J. E. Carlin, pastor, opened a tent last Sabbath, to be conducted entirely by the young people of the church. They have had a tent for four seasons. The tent of the Abyssinian Church in Harlem was opened last Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. J. Stuart Holden, of London, is in New York City again this summer. Last Sabbath he preached in St. James Episcopal Church, and in the afternoon in the chapel of Columbia University. Dr. Holden is rector of St. Paul's Church, London. He is of the low church party and his sermons and addresses heard in this country are always simple and stimulating. Dr. Holden is editor of "The Christian."

Rev. Kenneth D. Miller, of the Home Mission Board, will go this fall to Czecho-Slovakia, that he may, by a study of the people, be ready for larger and more efficient work among them as they arrive as immigrants in New York City from time to time.

The immigration of undesirables continues at Ellis Island up to the limit of the law. There is nothing in Europe for these people, and just now, if they find work in this country, it will be at the expense of the hundreds of unemployed citizens who surely should have the first opportunity.

Rev. William H. Foulkes, General Secretary of the New Era Movement, is among the Western Synods, as are also Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie and Rev. Dr. Jesse C. Bruce, of the Board of Church Election.

In the Vacation Bible School of the Church of the Covenant, Rev. Graham C. Hunter, pastor, the Bible stories are read to the boys and girls. The streets of New York City, particularly on the East Side, are so thronged with children at play-time that one can scarcely get along. There is room for many more Vacation Bible Schools.

STONY BROOK ASSEMBLY.

Stony Brook Assembly, that remarkable Presbyterian enterprise on Long Island, New York, is more than ever demonstrating its spiritual worth and practical Christian achievements, this season. There has just been concluded there a great Victorious Life Conference, attended by hundreds of people from many states. This is being followed by a Bible and Missionary Conference, a Presbyterian Young People's Conference, a Messianic Conference, and a General Conference, each extending a week, all to be succeeded by a Missionary Institute.

Stony Brook has grown considerably since last season. The large new dining-hall in L'Amoreaux Park, near the Homestead, the Bungalows and the bathing beach, will be ready for business about August 1st. Already there is need for its accommodations. Stony Brook is this year crowded to capacity. Johnston Hall, munificent gift of Mr. Robert Johnston, of St. Louis; Hopkins Hall, the gift of the family of Mr. Ferdinand T. Hopkins; and all the other buildings belonging to the Assembly, are overflowing with those to whom the conferences are spiritual food, and to whom the clean country air and wholesome living appeal. The villagers have thrown open their homes with their usual hospitality, and so impressed are these Long Islanders by the Christian character of the summer visitors that the Golden Rule applies and there is no profiteering.

Stony Brook is a place of glad news. The Gospel is the fundamental of all the doings of the famous Auditorium, facing the J. Wilbur Chapman Memorial Parkway. Especially glad news this season is the announcement that the Stony Brook School for Boys will be opened next year, and at last Christian parents will have a place where their boys may study the Bible for four years as faithfully as their other books, and where there will be no danger of the youth having their minds poisoned by the modernism which is today the curse of many colleges. Scholarships will be provided so that no poor need be without a Christian education. The fees are to be fixed at the lowest possible rate. Stony Brook School for Boys promises to be the solution of a serious problem. It is enlisting the support of some of the most devout Christians throughout the country.

Not all Presbyterians know that Stony Brook Assembly is distinctly a Presbyterian institution. In case it should ever cease business, which no one who knows its record can for a moment consider possible, its property would revert to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. Yet its appeal is to Christians of all evangelical denominations, and each year thousands flock there representing various church affiliations.

The platform of principles of Stony Brook has for its planks the divine inspiration, integrity and authority of the Bible, the Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ, the need and efficacy of the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ for the redemption of the world, the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in the work of redemption, the divine institution and mission of the church, the broad and binding obligation resting upon the church for the evangelization of the world, and the consummation of the kingdom in the appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ.

Stony Brook is ideally situated among the beauties and bounties of Nature, just sufficiently remote from the distractions of the world. It is officered by that splendid veteran Presbyterian minister, Dr.

John F. Carson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., as president; Dr. David G. Wylie, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Church Erection, as vice-president; Mr. Roy M. Hart, of 32 Court Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., treasurer, and Rev. Edward Humeston, Presbyterian pastor of Huntington, Long Island, New York, as executive secretary. There is a long list of Presbyterians and others of national prominence on its directorate.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Rev. Louis P. Cain, D.D., is supplying the pulpit of Logan Square Church. This is a piece of real missionary service on Dr. Cain's part, as the church is making a struggle for its existence, and a strong man such as Dr. Cain will put courage and hope into the band of the faithful.

Olivet Institute Church is conducting a neighborhood pleasant evening under a great cotton wood tree near the church. A program for the week evenings, in addition to refreshments, is provided. When the weather permits, the Sabbath evening service is held in the same place.

Albany Park Church, Rev. A. S. Nickless, pastor, made merry on the national holiday, by the men of the church and congregation entertaining about 500 at a picnic in Glen View of the forest preserves. Forty girls and boys from Olivet Institute were among the guests of the Fellowship Club.

Subscribers to the Semi-annual Book List of McCormick Seminary Library have received their July issue. It may be had of the librarian, Rev. John F. Lyons, at the Library.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

At a special meeting of Detroit Presbytery, held at Fort Street Church July 18th, Rev. Hugh Jack, D.D., was released from his pastorate at Central Church, and dismissed to the Presbytery of Newark, to accept a call to the Central Church of that city. Resolutions of appreciation and good wishes were unanimously adopted.

The open-air evangelistic meetings now being carried on in Detroit under the direction of the Federal Council of Churches is proving a great success, the attendance and response far exceeding our highest expectancy.

The Vacation Bible School attendance has passed all previous records, in spite of the exceptionally hot weather. We figured on a possible 5,000 in the fifty-eight schools, but that number has been passed long ago. The weekly drill of the teachers has shown the thoroughness of their work, and their enthusiasm in this consecration of talents to the Lords service.

WASHINGTON CITY LETTER.

BY REV. W. F. EAGLESON, D.D.

Many events of national significance have stirred the Capitol City recently. It is gratifying to have two Ex-Presidents in the city. The matter of outstanding interest just now is the intense debate in the House, on the tariff.

Many of the ministers have already gone for vacations, and others are about to go. Rev. J. H. Dunham, of the Western church, will take an auto trip to Niagara, Thousand Islands and New York. Rev. H. K. Fulton, of the Northminster church, will try mountain climbing in New Hampshire, and will challenge Mt. Goram, 6200 feet high. Rev. H. R. Johnson, of Chevy Chase Church, who has just come through a great campaign for funds for a new church building, will rest with his sister in her villa near Boston. Dr. A. E. Barrows, of the Eastern Church, has been attending Bible conferences, lecturing and teaching. He will visit his brother in Hastings, Neb., then, with Mrs. Barrows, will return to Chautauqua, N. Y. Dr. H. E. Brundage, of Eckington Church is at cool River Springs, Md. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, of New York Avenue Church, has joined the Huron Mt. Club, at Bay City Mich. The ministers are required to tell their vacation experiences when they return. Doctors Clark, of the First Church, Brascamp of Gunton Temple and Rohrer of Metropolitan, are doubtless already in some pleasant spot to "rest a while." Dr. J. C. Palmer, is entertaining friends and will go later.

The commissioners to the Assembly, made their report to the last meeting of presbytery, and by vote were commended not only for fidelity in attendance, but for success in advancing the Memorial sent by the presbytery.

A Presbyterial Exposition will be conducted for a week in September. Nineteen churches will represent nineteen countries. A splendid event is assured.

The "Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1920," is now bound with 874 pages of the most compact reports on education, population, manufacture, money, religion etc. Your congressman can assign one to you from his free quota, while it lasts. It is worth seeking.

MONTANA MUSINGS.

BY J. F. SHEPHERD, PH.D., D.D.

The meetings of synod and summer conference held at Great Falls, July 12-17, were well attended and of exceptional interest. There were present, to represent the Boards and Agencies, by addresses or daily teaching, the following: Drs. Foulkes and Jenness, of the New Era; Dr. King, of the Home Board; Dr. Bradt, of the Foreign Board; Dr. Holt, of the Relief and Sustentation Board; Dr. Wylie, of the Church Erection Board, and Dr. McDonald, of the Committee of Men's Work.

The reports showed additions last year of 23 per cent of the membership a year ago and a net gain of 12 per cent, said by some present to be the largest gain in any synod. Seven new church organizations were added during the year, one of which is already self-supporting and another also for half time. Dunkirk and Lothair Churches are the last to be organized by the superintendent, both on July 10.

The synod appointed a committee to arrange a plan for recognition in our presbyteries and synod of a "Great Unrecognized Force," the Ladies' Aids of the state. A synodical young people's organization was effected, and the movement for a Union Christian College at Great Falls was approved and a committee consisting of Dr. E. J. Groeneveld, of Butte; Dr. J. F. Shepherd and Rev. L. L. Totten was appointed to make overtures to the Baptist and other denominations. Synod will meet in Missoula next year. A strong invitation to meet in Helena, the state capital, was presented in order that we might there celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of that great church and of the churches of Bozeman and Deer Lodge, but July was not suited to the meeting there, so the choice went to Missoula.

The Home Missions Council of Montana held an all-day meeting July 21 in the Presbyterian church of Helena, considering and acting upon many vexing problems. This is a movement peculiar to our great state, being an honest endeavor on the part of the twelve co-operating denominations to prevent overlapping in our work and to give the Gospel to the many portions of the state not yet entered by any church. Commendable progress is making in the experiment and, if those interested in Home Missions in the East, and fearing the overlapping so common there, could know how little of it is found here, they would know that their money is not being expended in keeping up useless competing churches. Rev. N. H. Burdick, of Helena First Church, is the honored president of the council.

Bozeman First Church should have been included in the list of churches conducting successful Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

Rev. William Mason will close his work with the Pony-Harrison group Sept. 1. Rev. Albert Pfafs, of the Glengarry-Kolin group, retires from the work Aug. 1 to accept a government position in the Hawaiian Islands. Rev. Vernon Martin has resigned at Cut Bank that he may become superintendent of schools at Shelby. Rev. Mr. Milne is superintendent of the city schools of Havre.

It seems to the writer that too many men in the ministry are quitting the work for other employments. However, ministers may have a tremendous influence for good in educational work. Religious education is vital, and Mr. Milne is supporting the movement not only for high-school credits for standard work done in our Bible schools, but also for the hours from three to four on Tuesdays and Thursdays to be spent in the several churches of the pupils receiving religious instruction by the several pastors or other competent teachers. We need more such school men in these days, when the high-school dance is rampant and the majority of the youth know nothing of the Ten Commandments.

The writer, with his wife, will spend his vacation on Orcas Island, near Bellingham, Wash., enjoying the breezes from the Pacific Ocean.

Great Falls.

IDAHO LETTER.

BY REV. J. H. BARTON, D.D.

Rev. Mortimer M. Stocker, of Montpelier, is supplying the pulpit of Boise First Church for a month while the pastor, Rev. J. H. Baird, is away for a vacation.

The Jerome Church, Rev. R. Lloyd Roberts, pastor, has just completed the foundation of a $20,000 church.

The third annual Synodical Training Conference for Young People and Christian Workers was held at Bellevue, July 12-19. There was an attendance of 150, and a profitable time. The leader of the conference was Rev. Calvin W. Laufer, who conducted courses of study in "Teacher Training" and "Sabbath-School Organization and Management." Other courses were: "Foreign Missions," by Dr. E. T. Allen, of Urumia, Persia; "Home Missions," by Rev. Harris Pillsbury, of Logan, Utah; "Young People's Society Work and Methods," by Rev. J. H. Baird; "Junior Society Organization and Methods," by Mrs. A. H. Brand; "Men's Work," by Dr. W. F. Weir; "Bible Study," by Prof. H. H. Hayman, of the College of Idaho. Prof. Edwin J. Spence, of the Boise High School, had charge of the music and athletics. All the vesper services were conducted by Rev. R. Lloyd Roberts with "The Supremacy of Christ" as a theme. A popular address was delivered each evening as follows: A stereopticon lecture on "New Era Work," by Rev. G. William Barnum; "The Supremacy of the Church," by Dr. W. F. Weir; "Home Missions," by Rev. Harris Pillsbury; "Foreign Missions," by Dr. E. T. Allen. On Sabbath Dr. Weir preached on "The Judgment of Christians" and in the evening Dr. Allen spoke on "War in the Garden of Eden," giving a vivid account of his experiences during the world war. On the final evening communion services were held and Rev. J. H. Baird spoke on "Life Decisions."

The conference has grown in attendance and interest each year. Nearly all who attend live in tents in a cottonwood grove by the river, and eat in a common dining hall. Streams of water flow through the grounds, a dam furnishes a good swimming pond and a clear, cold spring supplies excellent drinking water. The city school building is used for class work and the evening meetings are held in the grove, which is electrically lighted. The enthusiasm and good feeling with which the conference closed give promise of a larger attendance next year.

In the absence of Rev. A. H. Brand, chairman of synod's Committee on Religious Education, the general management this year was in the hands of Rev. E. W. Hollowell, who discharged the duties efficiently.

SYNOD OF WASHINGTON.

BY REV. E. A. WALKER, S. C.

The Synod of Washington met in Bellingham, Wash., July 5, Vice-Moderator Rev. Richard A. Van der Las, D.D., presiding, and was opened with a sermon by Dr. William R. King, secretary of the Board of Home Missions. Rev. T. Davis Acheson was elected moderator. Ruling Elder Edward T. Mathes, mayor of Bellingham, gave an address of welcome.

The synod had a great meeting. There were present eleven board secretaries and representatives, no doubt due to the fact of the synod meeting in the summertime as do the Pacific Coast synods of Washington, Oregon and California. Rev. Lewis Sperry Chafer gave four lectures on "What Is the Gospel," and "Preaching in the Power of the Spirit," and "Satan and the Cults of the Day." Dr. William P. Shriver, Rev. William P. Schell, Dr. Harold McAfee Robinson, Dr. William J. Johnson, Dr. William R. King, Dr. Charles H. McDonald, Dr. Walter M. Irwin, Dr. W. Willard Lampe and Dr. Mark A. Matthews gave impressive addresses.

The Board of Trustees of Whitworth College presented a report showing fine financial progress and providential guidance in obtaining a man for president, of scholarly fitness and executive ability, ready to make it his life work, in Dr. Willard Haskell Robinson.

Ruling Elder Robert L. Edmiston, chairman of a special committee on "The Bible in the Public Schools," presented a painstaking report, going back to the Declaration of Independence for its basis.

The report of the Permanent Committee on Freedmen, presented by Dr. James H. Shields, chairman, was unique and valuable.

Rev. Alexander Hood, missionary to the Spokane Indians, offered a resolution, which was adopted, and should have wide circulation: "Whereas, the work of the missionaries among the Indians is greatly hindered and embarrassed by the commercializing of the old heathen Indian customs, such as war dances, snake dances, medicine dances and native gambling games, by promoters of county, state and interstate fairs, 'round-ups' so called, Fourth of July celebrations, 'Indian villages' and other public gatherings, and Whereas, such customs are demoralizing to the Indians themselves, leading them into immorality, encouraging idleness, and playing havoc with the spiritual and moral development of the Indian race, and Whereas, such customs would soon die a natural death if not encouraged by white people who do not know the significance of said customs, therefore, be it resolved, that the synod of Washington does most earnestly protest against the public exploiting of these old heathen customs, and the exhibiting the Indians themselves, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the officers of the fair associations."

By the efforts of Ruling Elder John Bushell, of Seattle, $2,160 was raised and pledged on the floor of synod in twenty minutes, to complete the amount needed to erect a memorial at the grave of Rev. Henry Harmon Spalding, pioneer missionary among the Nez Perce Indians.

Saturday, July 7, is memorable for a trip in Puget Sound among the islands of San Juan County, and the lunch at Friday Harbor.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

Jesus and Paul. By Benjamin W. Bacon, of Yale Divinity School. Cloth. $2.50. The Macmillan Company, New York.

The writer discusses the changes from "the Gospel preached by Jesus in Galilee to the Gospel about Jesus preached by Paul." Of course such a discussion involves a depreciating view of the inspiration of the New Testament Scriptures. He says: "Revelation and Inspiration will take on for us an altered meaning. Conservative brethren may even deny our right to apply the ancient terms to the new doctrine." Yet the daring experiment is made and a propaganda for human notions goes on under the form of ancient words, perverted. It would be well for critics to pause a moment and remember that, where all the books of the New Testament have been given by inspiration of the one Holy Spirit, there will not be found conflict, except where human presumption forces it in. In such cases, he who is determined to know or teach what is not the revealed truth, "knows nothing as yet as he ought to know it."

The Old Testament, of The Shorter Bible. Cloth. $2.00. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

This arrangement of the Bible, by Professor Kent, of Yale University, assisted by four other persons, is a condensation of the original matter, by leaving out what is deemed unimportant or redundant. If this were called by some other name it would not be so objectionable. But it is not called by some other name. It is called the Bible, and the parts that are left out, as unimportant, are unimportant only in the opinion of the editor. This editor, then, has the opportunity to expunge some important matters at his own free will. It is a dangerous privilege, for some may accept the expurgation as the very inspired Word of God. If the work is accepted as the editor's notion this difficulty is largely done away with, but it is not sure, in any case that it will be so accepted. As a fact too much liberty is taken, and too much human liberty is allowed in dealing with the sacred language.

Stories for Worship and How To Follow Them Up. Cloth. $1.50. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

This is a very beautiful and attractive book, helpful to all who have anything to do in the addressing of children. The book has many talks and stories, and many suggestions as to the making of more of the same sort. It is a very suggestive book to all whose interests run in this direction.

Sex: For Parents and Teachers. By William Leland Stowell, M.D. Cloth. $3. The Macmillan Company, New York.

It is of exceeding importance that children and young people shall be preserved from the evils that come from ignorance or perversion of the sex nature. A true and pure knowledge of the facts is an important safeguard. Parents and teachers may do much in protecting them by imparting a knowledge of the facts before they are learned from the impure and conscienceless. This book contains much that is valuable in the way of instruction and suggestion. Those who should be the teachers of these vital, but delicate, mysteries are here taught how to do the teaching. The book is of great interest to those who would have light on this very great and helpful duty.

The City Sleeps. By Charles Mulford Robinson. Cloth. $1.50. The Cornhill Company, Boston.

In loving memory of the writer, these charming selections from his writings have been made by his wife and printed in very simple but pleasing form as a memorial. They display a fine and pure poetic taste and ability, and the prose selections are on the same high plane.

Sweet and Twenty. By Floyd Dell. Paper. 50 cents. A short Modern Play. Stewart and Kidd Company, Cincinnati.

A humorous and yet rather serious consideration of marriage, by two young people who meet and become engaged almost immediately.

Ballads of a Bohemian. By Robert W. Service. Cloth. $1.60. Barse and Hopkins, Newark, N. J.

The writer of these verses has done some remarkable work in the gold fever days of Alaska and from the war fields of France. The verses here are descriptive of life among the boulevardiers of Paris, the cafe frequenters, the artists, models, grisettes, sewing girls of the Quarter, Philistines and all the busy frequenters of the jostling life of a reckless, whirling city. One feels that he is in a strange and teeming life of careless thoughtless ones as he reads these ballads. There is talent, and much dirt.

PAMPHLETS.

In Memoriam. A beautiful message of comfort and consolation. Paper. 35 cents. Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. Scripture passages and beautiful Christian poems, with a memorial and presentation page.

Christ or Class. A sermon by Rev. Charles E. McCartney, Philadelphia, pastor of Arch Street Presbyterian Church. 25 cents. A strong and helpful utterance.

Apostolic Baptism, a Consecration to our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. W. A. Cutler, 1326 Frederica Place, Milwaukee, Wis. Sound and excellent.

The Christ of Science. Paper. By J. G. Rodger, Ph.D., Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Published by the "Religio-Scientific Institute." The lecture is devoted to the truth that Material Evolution is not scientific, but that God is the source of every higher species generating in the Virgin potentiality of the next lower species. The virgin birth of Jesus Christ is in line with all true science, as well as Revelation.

MISSION WORK

SCHOOLS IN PEKING, CHINA.

Peking is the educational center of China. There are 30,000 pupils enrolled in the lower grade schools, and this enrollment is possible only because of many private schools.

Peking now has a population of nearly a million, 63 per cent of which is male; and a large proportion of them are between eighteen and thirty years of age. It is truly a young man's city! Nearly one-half of the returned students from America and Europe are in Peking. The city described by Marco Polo in 1290 A. D. as "a great and noble city" is being recognized as such by tourists, who now crowd its hotels and shops, and the people of China as never before.

About half of the higher schools now supported by the Chinese Government are in Peking. The equipment of the American Indemnity College would be a credit to any American university, with its tennis courts, baseball fields, beautiful gymnasium, and a swimming pool fed by a splendid artesian well. The new site of Peking University is within a mile of this college, and the government just secured a site for the National University in the same neighborhood; they expect to have it thoroughly equipped in ten years.

There are about 1,500 young men and women in the Government Normal Schools preparing to go out as teachers, but their training lacks the one thing needful. They are not opposed to Christianity, and all that is needed to win them and multitudes from the student body is a group of outstanding Christian men and women in the capital city, whose scholarship and piety are alike unquestioned.

UNSUSPECTED DANGERS.

Charles G. Trumbull, of Philadelphia, Pa., editor of the Sunday School Times, in an address at Stony Brook, warned against an un-Christian tendency in the colleges of our country. One of the awful results, he said, was the fact that the number of Chinese youth of Christian parents who come to this country to be educated and lose their faith in "Christian" colleges is greater than the number of Chinese students who are won to Christ in this Christian land.

"Chinese boys and girls are having their newfound Christian faith utterly undermined in American colleges, through pernicious teachings. Children of Christian parents, trained in mission schools, are losing their faith, in so-called Christian colleges in the United States."

Mr. Trumbull recently returned from a survey of Japan, China and Korea. He found that the native converts there believed the Bible implicitly, but that many of them are taught not to believe by "highest critics."

He found in Japan a "gulf stream of sin flowing through the land, sin rampant, terrible, unrestrained, overflowing." The people were painfully polite, but their politeness was superficial; their manners emphasized the emptiness of Christian good manners. Among the missionaries in Japan he found an over-emphasis sadly apparent on education as against evangelism. Japan was sorely in need of a great Bible union, like the one now in China. Rationalism and modernism had a worse hold on the people and missionaries in Japan than in the other countries of the Orient. He protested emphatically against the dancing, card-playing missionaries he found in some places, but was glad to say that there were in the minority, though there was a dangerous number of them. Modernism in conduct and wrong beliefs were a real peril in Japan. There were missionaries in practically every denomination in Japan, he said, who had lost their faith in the Bible.

Mr. Trumbull reported less modernism in Korea than in Japan and China, and the missionaries there were higher spiritually. The whole of Korea had been lifted up by Christianity and there was a minimum of unbelief and modernism. He felt that a real, great revival was outbreathing in Korea, so great, indeed, that the missionaries needed to be greatly reinforced to be prepared to handle it. Korean Bible women were a great help to the missionaries; these were native converts. A sad feature of the world war was that some of these Bible women, because of reverses and the high cost of living, had been led away, though formerly living consecrated lives, had lost their faith; but happily some of them had been restored.

A FOREIGN MISSION DAY.

The Foreign Missions Committee of the Presbytery of Pittsburgh is co-operating with the Pan Presbyterian Alliance in making its Foreign Missions Day a memorable missionary occasion. Sessions will be held morning, afternoon and evening in the First Church of Pittsburgh, and the entire program of Friday, Sept. 23d will be devoted to foreign missions. Seven great fields will be discussed at the morning session, Rev. S. H. Chester speaking on Latin America, Rev. J. H. McClure on Africa, and Rev. J. S. Jaffray on the Island World. Rev. W. I. Chamberlain will speak on India, and Rev. S. M. Zwemer, of Cairo, will speak on the Moslem World. China and Japan and Jewish evangelization will also be discussed. Four speakers will be heard at the afternoon session, Dr. Ogilvie bringing in the report on Foreign Missions for the Eastern section and Dr. R. P. Mackay for Western section. Sec. Arthur J. Brown will speak on "The Home Base," and Dr. Barclay, of Formosa, on "The Development of Leadership and Autonomy in the Native Churches." At the evening mass meeting Dr. Irwin will treat the topic "Foreign Missions and the Spirit of Nationalism." Women are invited to attend the meetings. The Foreign Missions Committee is endeavoring to secure delegations of men from every one of the 137 congregations of the presbytery, and for this purpose is asking that one in every church try to bring by automobile a small group.

A DAY IN COACHELLA VALLEY.

The Coachella Valley lies northwest of Salt Lake, and like the Imperial valley, of which it is a continuation, is below the level of the ocean. There are date palms and cotton ranches, vineyards and melon patches; and some two thousand Mexicans do the work in the fields.

May I tell you the story of one day in the valley?

I hopped off the train at four eight in the morning, and watched the gnarled finger tips of the desert mountains reach out for the coming glory of the morning. Then suddenly the sun blazed out over the valley, and the cool dawn had changed into heat of the desert.

Mr. Welliver has put on a successful Daily Vacation Bible School in Coachella, and has two flourishing Sabbath schools in Thermal. And after he had coaxed a decrepit mulish Ford into action, we set out over the desert roads to visit Mexicans who had "learned the Gospel."

One old lady arose from her knees with tears in her eyes, "for" as she said, "we dont hear people pray much around here." At three in the afternoon, with the thermometer hovering around one hundred and fifteen in the shade, that same old woman hitched her horse to her little buggy, and drove five miles through the desert to tell another woman and her daughter that a Protestant minister who could speak Spanish had come to the valley, and that they could be baptized.

In all there are nineteen Protestant Mexicans in Thermal—some the results of the summer work, but mostly men and women who have "learned the gospel" from each other.

It's a sad thing to record that unless our appropriation can be increased in September these people who "would see Jesus" must wait until more funds are available.

But while the day lasted we sang with them and talked and prayed. Then the sun dropped from sight, and the fierce heat was forgotten in the vesper beauty of the desert. Mellow amber melted into red, and red into purple—for there was a prophetic glow in the heavens ere the coming of the night.

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Rev. William S. P. Bryan, D.D., from Chicago, Ill., to Harbor Springs, Mich., for the summer.

Rev. Edwin S. Secrest, from Miltonvale, Kan., to Seattle, Wash., Gen Del.

Rev. David Garrett Smith, from Wyoming, O., to Westminster Park, 1000 Islands, N. Y., for the summer.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. G. W. C. Self of Rusk, Texas, died suddenly on June 14, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was born in DeKalb County, Tenn., Nov. 18, 1852. His early ministry was in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, from which he entered the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. He was pastor of the Church of Friendship and other churches grouped with it for thirty-five years. He was a good and useful minister.

Rev. Joseph Milton Greene, D.D., was born at Smithtown, Long Island, New York, on August 11, 1842, and died at Oconomowoc, Wis., on July 10, 1921, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. He graduated from Princeton College and Union Seminary, and was ordained in 1868 by the Presbytery of Brooklyn. After pastorates in Brooklyn and on Staten Island, he was sent by the Board of Foreign Missions as one of its missionaries to Mexico and remained there from 1881 to 1893. After his return from Mexico, he was pastor at Fort Dodge, Iowa, from 1893 to 1899. He was then invited by the Board of Home Missions, to go to Porto Rico, and then take charge of its work in Cuba which he did, from 1901 to 1918. Dr. Greene was one of the strong men of the Presbyterian Church, identified with the important missionary work among the Latin-speaking people in Mexico and in the Caribbean. He commanded and received the profound respect and affection of all who were brought into contact with him. He gave himself without reserve to the great work committed to his care, and after making an enviable record, during fifty active years, retired to spend the remainder of his days in Wisconsin. He was a true friend, a faithful counsellor and a devoted servant of the Church.

Rev. Alexander F. Davis, Ph.D., pastor of the church at Liberty, Ind., until about a year ago, when he suffered a breakdown from which he was unable to rally, died at his wife's old home in Piqua, O., July 13, in the forty-eighth year of his age. His pastorates were Vevay, Lawrenceburg, Mitchell, Fowler and Liberty, all in Indiana. He is survived by his wife, one daughter and five brothers, two of whom, Elmer E., of Hartford City, Ind., and Francis M., of Flora, Ind., are in the Presbyterian ministry. The funeral service was held in the Piqua Presbyterian Church, in charge of Rev. E. H. Montgomery, D.D. Two of his successors in pastorates were present, and spoke of the high esteem in which he had been held as a minister and a man among men.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The church of Williamsburg, since the going of Rev. R. F. Edwards, is still vacant.

Rev. and Mrs. Victor L. Raphael, of Greencastle, Ind., are spending part of their vacation in this city.

The Norwood Church, Rev. W. T. Paterson, pastor, is pressing the matter of its new building, and subscriptions in encouraging amounts have been made. A drive will commence about the middle of September, for the necessary funds.

Poplar Street Church, Rev. D. A. Greene, pastor, received four members last Sabbath, representing two families. Two adults and three infants were baptized.

Rev. Dr. S. C. Bates, of McArthur, will spend part of his vacation in this city and may be secured as pulpit supply the last three Sabbaths in August.

Rev. Paul R. Hoppe, of Atlantic City, N. J., occupied the pulpit of Westminster Church, Price Hill, last Sabbath.

Dr. McKibbin, of Lane Seminary, conducted the services in the Sixth Church last Sabbath.

Dr. Lewis Earle Lee preached at the union-open-air service last Sabbath evening in Evanston.

At the union open-air service last Sabbath evening in Norwood, Rev. W. T. Paterson was the preacher.

Dr. C. F. Goss preached in the Walnut Hills Church last Sabbath morning in the absence of Dr. F. N. McMillin.

Wyoming Presbyterians worship with the Baptists during the vacation of their pastor, Rev. D. G. Smith.

Dr. W. L. Whallon and family, of Zanesville, O., spent a few days in this city last week visiting at the home of his parents, Dr. and Mrs. E. P. Whallon.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Miss Lexie Denyven, of Boyle Memorial Center, led the vesper service of the Y. W. C. A. last Sabbath evening. Mrs. Sue Owens, so long the city missionary of the Center, has been seriously ill in St. Luke's Hospital.

Rev. N. L. Euwer, assistant at the Second Church, has returned from his vacation, spent at Pittsburgh, and has preached at the Second Church on the last two Sabbaths.

At the annual meeting of Brookes' Bible Institute, officers were re-elected as follows: President, W. O. Andrews; vice-president, O. B. Bottorff; secretary, George B. Cummings; assistant secretary, Dr. J. H. Gauss; treasurer, B. F. Edwards. The faculty for the coming year will include the following city ministers: Rev. R. L. Evans, Rev. A. F. Wells, Rev. W. F. McMillin and Dr. J. H. Gauss. The institute is now entering on its tenth year.

An evangelistic service, to continue one hour, from 7:30 to 8:30, is now being held each Sabbath evening at the Gibson Heights United Presbyterian Church. The first half hour is given over to the young people. The pastor, Rev. Lawrence Ferguson, preaching a half-hour sermon afterward.

Rev. Karl Frederick Wettstone, pastor of Sidney Street Church, has received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Centennial State University of Denver, Colorado.

On Tuesday evening of this week, notable exercises by the children of the Westminster Daily Vacation Bible School was presented, closing their school for the season. Central Church has united efforts in carrying on this school, which is now completing its second annual session.

A service commemorating Markham Church's forty-sixth anniversary was held on Sabbath, July 17th. The offering taken was given for the support of this church's missionary in North Siam, Mrs. Ray Bachtell.

Summer assemblies of the Baptists and Methodists, on separate hills in Arcadia, Mo., are being well attended from St. Louis. A considerable Presbyterian delegation is expected, a little later, to go to Hollister.

OHIO.

Columbus Presbytery met in Central Church July 24, and dissolved the pastoral relation between Rev. Carl H. White and London Church. He accepts work with the General Assembly's Committee on Evangelism and will labor in Mahoning Presbytery. This brings to a close a successful pastorate of over six years, including the erecting of a new building. Presbytery is called to meet July 25th in Central Church to dissolve the pastoral relation between Rev. Wm. Wilson and Mt. Sterling that he may accept work with the same committee among smaller churches in Philadelphia. Mr. Wilson has been successful in building up this church. Rev. Walter H. Houston, D.D., 80½ N. High Street, Columbus, is chairman of Presbytery's Committee on Vacancy and Supply.—Gibson Wilson, S. C.

Madison Church in Steubenville Presbytery is vacant. A good minister is desired at once. The location of church and manse is ideal, on the Lincoln Highway, and on the Youngstown and Ohio River Interurban. There is a fine opportunity for work among excellent people. Address Mr. W. L. Eells, Clerk of Session, Libson, Ohio, R. No. 2.

The Victorious Life Conference of Linwood Park, on Lake Erie, Aug. 2d to 7th, has a fine program. For information address Miss Ottilie Ruetenik, 44 Elm Street, Willoughby, O.

The First Church of Canton received 31 members on July 10th, making 174 since the beginning of the pastorate of Rev. Alfred Lee Wilson, the first of February. Of these, 30 have been boys, 36 girls, 48 women and 60 men.

The completed program of the Wooster Bible Conference, Aug. 3d to 11th, is now ready, and may be obtained of Rev. William E. Bryce, secretary. Among the speakers are Dr. Campbell Morgan, Dr. John McNaugher, Dr. G. W. Richards, Dr. Henry E. Dosker, Dr. A. E. Thomson, Dr. E. A. Van Nuys, Dr. W. I. Swallen and others. Mrs. J. C. Talbot, in charge of the dormitories, says that from the large number of room reservations already asked for there will be a banner attendance.

The Presbytery of Marion met in Marion, July 21st, and dismissed Rev. E. J. Peacock to the Presbytery of Grand Rapids; placed a call from Trenton in the hands of Rev. J. M. Huston and arranged for his installation Sept. 8th; dissolved the pastoral relationship between Rev. H. I. Evans and Marysville, to take effect Aug. 28th. Mr. Evans has accepted a call to the Second Church of Portsmouth. Rev. H. W. Barr was elected to succeed Mr. Evans as moderator, and Rev. T. F. Watkins as chairman of the Vacancy and Supply Committee.—R. F. Smith, S. C.

INDIANA.

The Church of Greencastle will be supplied during the pastor's vacation, on July 24th, by Dr. J. P. Moffat; July 31st, Rev. T. V. D. Dillon; August 7th, Rev. T. N. Hunt; August 14th, Rev. H. L. Todd.

The First Church, Sullivan, is in good condition and new members are being added. The manse has been put in fine condition. This is the eighth year for Rev. W. E. Gray as pastor. The congregation has presented the pastor $250 for himself and wife to spend August at Winona Lake. The mid-summer communion service was largely attended. Hon. Will H. Hays, Postmaster-General, came from Washington to assist as a ruling elder in the service.

The church of Matthews, near Hartford City, celebrated its eightieth anniversary last Sabbath, the sermon being preached by Rev. Edgar L. Williams, D.D.

The largest church, numerically, in the Synod of Indiana is the First Church of Gary, Rev. Fred E. Walton, D.D., pastor, with a membership of 1,204, receiving 194 members last year. The next is the Tabernacle Church of Indianapolis, Rev. J. Ambrose Dunkel, D.D., pastor, with 1,117, receiving 305 members last year. The Indianapolis Second Church, Rev. Jean Milner, pastor-elect, has 963 members and the Indianapolis First, Rev. M. L. Haines, D.D., pastor-emeritus, has 905. The church at Muncie, Rev. J. W. Nicely, D.D., pastor, has 878 members, and the South Bend First Church, Rev. Archibald McClure, pastor, has 866. No other church is reported as having as many as eight hundred. Frankfort Church, Rev. H. L. Crain, pastor, has 758; Olivet of Evansville, Rev. W. F. Padgett, D.D., pastor, has 743; Memorial of Indianapolis, Rev. J. M. Eakins, pastor, has 754; Lafayette Central, vacant, has 725; Fort Wayne Third, Rev. H. B. Hostetter, pastor, has 747; and Logansport Calvary, Rev. J. S.

Corkey, D.D., pastor, has 764. No other church reports as many as 700 members. Six have 600 and over and seven have 500 and over.

ILLINOIS.

The success of the White Hall Daily Vacation Bible School, which closed July 15th, having had fourteen teachers and 222 pupils, shows the possibilities of such work in a town of not over 3,000 inhabitants. This school, under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Lee A. Hanchett, has become a community asset, and has created a desire for a permanent craft school. Rev. W. D. Vater spoke at the closing.

The Rossville Church, Rev. G. M. Jordan, pastor, received six members at the July communion. The church will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary in September.

Children's Day was observed in the Bethlehem and Madison churches the first of June with large attendance and offerings of more than forty dollars. A Vacation Bible School closed July 8th with forty children enrolled. Rev. W. S. Neely is pastor.

The Church of Argenta, Ill., is prospering under the pastoral care of Rev. H. D. Trickey, who came to them from Lucerne, Ind., after good service at Manchester, and Cisco, and Pawnee, Ill. The spirit of the church is full of heartiness and life. Rev. Marion Humphreys, pastor-at-large of Springfield Presbytery, speaks in the warmest terms of Mr. Trickey's consecrated enterprise and devotion to his work, and to the high character of the spiritual and social life of the people of the church. A picture of their attractive church building appeared a few weeks ago on our first page.

MICHIGAN.

The Grosse Pointe Church of Detroit, Rev. George Brewer, D.D., pastor, welcomed thirty-six new members on July 17th.

NEW YORK.

Rev. D. B. McCurdy, of Sodus, N. Y., has received the degree of D.D., from the College of Emporia, Kansas.

NEW JERSEY.

The church of Stirling received fourteen members on July 17th.

Rev. W. J. B. Edgar resigns at Jamesburg to enter evangelistic work, and Monmouth Presbytery will meet at Jamesburg, Aug. 5th, at 2 p. m., to release him.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rev. J. Thompson Baker, Ph.D., recently of Macomb, Ill., was installed as pastor of the French Creek Church, W. Va., Presbytery of Grafton, by Rev. J. V. Koontz, Rev. E. M. Rittenhouse and Rev. James Ferguson. This is a historic church, which has been a stronghold of Presbyterianism. It has sent out seventeen ministers and missionaries and a large number of teachers and professional men. The church is full of life and promise today.

TENNESSEE.

A Daily Vacation Bible School has been successfully conducted in the First Church, Milan, with an attendance of eighty-two, by the pastor, Rev. G. Frank Burns.

Rev. H. B. Phillips, pastor of the Cleveland Street Church of Nashville, has just returned from Milldale, where he conducted a ten-day Boy Scout Camp. Eighteen of the boys of his church were in attendance, and a well balanced program was carried out. This is the third year for the camp and lasting results are being secured through this work with the boys.

GEORGIA.

Harris Street Church, Atlanta, Rev. Roy Talmage Brambaugh, pastor, received six members recently. This is the only U. S. A. Presbyterian church in Atlanta.

MISSOURI.

The church of Louisiana, Rev. C. P. Foreman, D.D., pastor, received four members on July 10th on profession. The pastor and wife leave today for their vacation, to be in Wisconsin until the first of September.

Since coming to Bethany and New Hampton, Mo., last January, Rev. L. A. Thompson has received twelve members into Bethany and eight into New Hampton. These churches presented the pastor a fund to attend the Young People's Conference and Summer Assembly at Hollister.

The Cameron Church recently received seventeen members. Rev. A. E. Arnfield, S.T.D., is pastor.

KANSAS.

Emporia First Church, Rev. J. M. Todd, D.D., pastor, received twenty-six members on July 17th.

UTAH.

The church at Brigham, Rev. C. E. Fowler, pastor, has recently painted and redecorated the interior of the church.

Rev. J. E. Carver, of the First Church, Ogden, in a recent financial crisis in one of the mission churches, came to the rescue with one hundred dollars of his own money, to prevent the sale of church property in connection with a paving tax.

The manse of the Davis County Church, at Kaysville, has recently been papered and painted inside and outside. Rev. A. G. Frank, the minister, is writing a sketch of how the mission work has been done in the past.

At Logan, Rev. Harris Pillsbury, minister, the new $5,000 manse is already well under way.

WISCONSIN.

Rev. Engrald Iverson, our Sabbath-School Missionary for twenty years in Northwestern Wisconsin, has become greatly worn with the work, and has been considering a change to the pastorate. Synod and the Presbyterian Board came to realize what a valuable worker they had, and resolved to lessen his work and give him a helper.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Ganfield, the newly elected president of Carroll College, has told the trustees that he accepts the position and will devote his life to the great work. He met the officers and friends of the college and assured them of his purpose.

The Chetek Young Peoples' Conference at the new camp on the shores of Lake Chetek, June 25th, was an important religious meeting. Rev. E. A. Finn had charge of the program, and Rev. Carl E. Franz, Rev. P. L. Leahy and Rev. E. Iverson had charge of the entertainment. The speakers from abroad were President Bess of Macalester College and Rev. Roy Brown of the Philippines.

The neat and comfortable Riverview Chapel, Manitowoc, was dedicated June 27th with interesting services. Rev. M. S. Axtell, pastor of the First Church, presided and Rev. W. W. Perry, Milwaukee, preached the sermon.

The commencement exercises of Carroll College were largely attended. Dr. W. O. Carrier, a former president, preached the annual sermon. Dr. Carrier and his wife will sail for Japan in August and will visit the mission stations of the Far East, expecting to be absent one year.

Dr. Leonard Calvert, of Des Plaines, Ill., expects to go to Ireland July 1st, to visit relatives and take a vacation.

Dr. C. S. Nickerson has nearly recovered his usual health.

Pastor Young, of the First Church, Beaver Dam, exchanged with Rev. E. B. King, of Horicon, on July 10. The Lord's Supper was administered and Fred Bird and Edward Matthews were installed as ruling elders at Horicon.

Rev. E. A. Finn and Dr. C. E. Bovard, of Waukesha, are on the program for the summer conference at Green Lake, July 20-27.

Rev. M. B. Allison, of the University of Madison, Wis., preached in Calvary Church, Milwaukee, on July 10.

Rev. J. O. Buswell, of Perseverance Church, Milwaukee, is away on a vacation, and his assistant, Rev. M. Philippi, is supplying the pulpit.

Rev. Mr. Rubv is the new pastor of the Assembly Church at Beaver Dam. There was a large accession of members at the summer conference.

Dr. P. B. Jenkins, of Immanuel Church, Milwaukee, and his elders, deacons and Men's Club took an auto ride to Lake Ge-news recently taking the whole day for an outing, visited Yerkes Observatory and took dinner together.

MINNESOTA.

Dr. C. E. Clarke, of Seoul, Korea, while in Minneapolis, addressed the young people of Stewart Memorial Church. Dr. James O. Buswell, pastor, Dr. Clarke stated Korea's greatest need today was missionaries who believe and teach the fundamentals of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and told of immediate need of doctors, nurses, evangelistic workers and home economic teachers. Miss Olga Johnson recently went out from the church of Korea.

The Winnebago Church received five members July 10th, Dr. Arthur G. Bailey, pastor.

Rev. I. I. Gorby, Ph.D., of Winona, Minn., is taking a prolonged rest, after an operation at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn. His recovery has been rapid and permanent. He expects soon to be able to assume pastoral and pulpit responsibilities.

Rev. Paul Voris, of Mankato, was recently appointed Superintendent of Missions for the presbyteries of Mankato and Winona, and is doing good work.

The churches of La Crescent, Hokah and Houston, long vacant, are supplied by a student from McCormick Seminary for the summer, and good reports are made of his work. Fifty-one years ago this summer these churches were supplied by Mr. Samuel H. Murphy, a midler of McCormick Seminary.

Rev. Dr. W. B. Jones, D.D., for the last two years the successful pastor at Rochester, has been bereaved by the recent death of his wife. At a congregational meeting on July 14th, moderated by Dr. I. I. Gorby, he resigned, and his resignation was reluctantly accepted.

The church at Belle Plaine, Minn., celebrated the sixty-third anniversary of its organization on June 26th, by rededicating its remodeled and refurnished building. The building was erected fifty-one years ago. The solid stone walls have stood but the steeple, floors, windows and furniture needed replacement. They used about three thousand dollars on the building. A former pastor, Rev. T. S. Thompson, of Carlton, Minn., Prof. H. D. Funck, of Macalester College, and Rev. John H. Sellie, D.D., of LeSueur, Minn., assisted in the exercises. The program included the reception of three members. The only unfortunate thing is that the church has no pastor.

The church at Wrenshall received two young men as members on July 3d.

The Carlton group of churches, Rev. T. S. Thompson, pastor, is having an attendance contest between its four congregations during June, July and August.

Rev. S. H. Roberts, son of Dr. Stanley B. Roberts, pastor of Bethlehem Church, Minneapolis, has accepted a call to the Open Door Congregational Church of that city.

Oliver Church, Minneapolis, at a recent communion service received ten new members. Eight infants and three adults were baptized. Rev. Raymond J. Rutt is the pastor. A committee has been appointed to find an assistant for the pastor, of which the pastor is chairman. His address is 2814 Fourteenth Avenue, South Minneapolis. The assistant need not be an ordained man, but must be a good personal worker, and have community-work experience.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Rev. V. A. Weir, of Whitewood, has resigned as Stated Clerk of Black Hills Presbytery, as he is going to Oregon.

Immanuel Church of Los Angeles, Dr. Herbert Booth Smith, pastor, received 105 new members on July 10th. Four infants and four adults were baptized. Eleven were received on confession and 94 by letter. The assistant pastor, Rev. John A. Leusinger, has returned from vacation, and will have charge of the pastoral work in the absence of the pastor, who left on July 25th for the East. Dr. Smith will speak in Denver, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Grove City Bible Conference, and at other points. Among the ministers who will fill the pulpit during his vacation are Dr. Josiah Sibley, of Chicago; Dr. Boyle, of Denver, Col.; Dr. James K. Thompson, of Fort Worth, Tex.; Dr. Ervin Chapman, of Los Angeles, and Rev. John A. Leusinger.

Immanuel Church has gone over the top in its quota for benevolences for the ensuing year, having pledged already $34,000 for the same, the quota being $32,000. The session has recently decided to assume the support of Metet Station, in Africa, paying the salary of Dr. Silas Johnson, the missionary there, who is a member of Immanuel Church. A new Director of Religious Education is shortly to be employed also. Plans are proceeding for the erection of a new church, an architect having been selected, and plans are now being drawn.

Rev. A. H. Kelso, who recently left Vincennes, Ind., and went to California for the benefit of his health, has been installed pastor of the La Crescent Church, by Rev. W. D. Edmonds, Rev. Paul W. Stephens, Rev. Dr. W. D. Landis and Rev. E. R. McMillin. Seven members have recently been received. This is a beautiful spot among the mountains.

NEW MEXICO.

Mr. Henry Floud, of the Johnson Mesa, near Folsom, New Mexico, reports a great meeting, the pastor, Rev. Trevor Orton, being assisted by Evangelist F. A. Geisenheiner, of Chicago. Mr. Geisenheiner has been helping the pastor at Des Moines, New Mexico, in a meeting, resulting in thirty-one accessions to the membership. Rev. Mr. Van Gundy, the pastor, is a recent comer from Ohio.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Westminster Memorial Church of Washington City recently received ten members, making sixty since the present pastorate of Rev. J. D. Keith began Dec. 17, 1920. At a meeting held July 18, addressed by Hon. W. D. Upshaw, M. C., a Men's Club was organized. The pastor will spend his August vacation at Charlottesville and Orkney Springs, and will hold an evangelistic service at Proffit. During his absence the pulpit will be supplied by Rev. J. M. Anderson, D.D., and Rev. Conrad Bluhm.

WASHINGTON.

In the absence of Dr. George T. Gunter, pastor of Westminster Church of Seattle, Dr. John H. Elliott, world-wide evangelist, has been supplying his pulpit with great acceptability to the people during June and July, with large attendance for these months. Dr. Elliott will continue his evangelistic work during the coming season and will be glad to answer any inquiries for help. He may be addressed at Alderwood Manor, Wash., P. O. Box 53, or 14 East Jackson Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

Rev. H. M. Course, of Westport, has removed to Everson, where he has charge of Everson and Clearbrook Churches.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

THE DISCIPLE ASSEMBLY.

The Disciples of Christ held an assembly at Springfield, Ill. The principal discussions were over church unity, the contributions of the Disciples to Christianity, the mediatorship of the church in social conflict, and the relative value of denominational and state universities. The conclusion of The Christian Century is that the discussions had more light and less heat than in former years.

The evangelistic and missionary spirit and purpose of Dwight L. Moody is still alive. At the annual members' meeting of the Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, founded by Mr. Moody in 1894, the secretary's report on the work of the past year showed that 43,846 copies of Gospel literature were distributed in the prisons and jails of the United States and Canada; 22,938 copies among the spiritually destitute in the mountain districts of the South, and 20,961 copies of Spanish books were placed through missionaries in the Latin Americas; nearly one-half million gospels tracts were printed, and the issue of the Gospel of St. John totaled 208,250 copies. Of Mr. Moody's books alone there has been a total of 22,560,548 copies published on the Association's order.

A SUGGESTION.

Enclosed please find my check for renewal subscription. I wish you would use your influence more to counteract the German and Irish propoganda for Irish republic and war with England. J. B. R.

A FALSE CLAIM.

What per cent of the pastors in Presbyterian pulpits are reasonably honest? A representative of a church paper said quite recently: "Half or more than half of the preachers in Presbyterian pulpits are out of harmony with the confession."

What is their brand of honor?

Geo. N. Crichton.

We do not believe the statement. It is quite common for advocates of modernism to claim they have the majority.

UNFORTUNATE, IF TRUE.

The old-fashioned American home is passing, along with the horse, and in due time will be exhibited along with the stuffed dodo bird and the egg of the great auk.

Future generations will be housed in apartment houses and hotels and Americans will become a nation of cliff dwellers. This is the earnest prediction made by delegates attending the National Hotel Men's annual convention at Chicago last week.

"The renaissance of cliff dwellers is coming," said F. G. Bothwell, National Secretary of the International Stewards' Association. "There will be cities of hotels. Already the mass exodus from the costly, burdensome houses has gained impetus by the present high rent era."

"Automobiles have helped to put cobwebs in home life," said Herman Mack, President of the Chicago Hotel Men's Association. "People flee from their homes for the country clubs, the cabarets and the movies. Many persons migrating to the hotels are elderly couples whose sons and daughters have married and moved away. Their big, fine homes are empty and desolate, so they move into a hotel where they can be free of worry and have companionship."

FROM OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

I like the paper very much and do not want to be without it. I can't speak for others, but I know I am a better Christian, and also a better Presbyterian, when I read such a splendid religious weekly as the Herald and Presbyter regularly.

W. E. M.

Find enclosed check for $2.50 in payment for the Herald and Presbyter for the ensuing year. We have taken the Herald and Presbyter for over fifty years, in the family, which shows we appreciate it.

T. S. K.

Yes the Herald and Presbyter will always be a welcome visitor in my home as it has been for over fifty years. It was a great help to me in training my children. May I ask a request of you? There are so many young parents who are not teaching their children to obey, just letting them have their own way, hoping they will come out all right, which they never will. Those are the kind of children who are filling the reform schools and the houses of correction and later the jails and penitentiary. Can't you write articles in the Herald and Presbyter that will help those young parents to see the danger their babies are in? Obedience was one of God's first commands. Mrs. M. J. B.

SAWYER—Mrs. Mary Woolfolk Sawyer died at her home, Chatham, Ill., July 17, 1921. Mrs. "Mollie" Woolfolk Sawyer, daughter of Mr. Richard H. and Amanda E. Woolfolk, was born in Paducah, Ky., and spent her life, until the time of her marriage, in Louisville. She gave her heart to Christ early and united with the Chestnut Street Presbyterian Church, now the Warren Memorial Church. She was married, Nov. 23, 1862, to Mr. Joseph L. Sawyer, who attended the theological seminary at Danville, Ky., and has been active in the Presbyterian ministry. Mrs. Sawyer was a devoted servant of Christ and a true helpmeet to her husband in his pastoral duties. For some three years she has been in failing health, but, with all patient, cheerful and resigned. The funeral services, held July 19 at Louisville, were conducted by Rev. Edward L. Warren, D.D., and the burial took place at Cave Hill Cemetery. She is survived by four brothers, Lee, Henry, Julius and Louis Woolfolk. Write, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

IT IS BETTER

It is better to lose with a conscience clean
Than win by a trick unfair;
It's better to fall and to know you've been,

Whatever the prize was, square,
Than to claim the joy of a far-off goal
And the cheer of the standers-by,
And to know down deep in your inmost soul

A cheat you must live and die.

Who wins by trick may take the prize,
And at first he may think it sweet,
But many a day in the future lies
When he'll wish he had met defeat.
For the one who lost shall be glad at heart

And walk with his head up high,
While his conqueror knows he must play the part
Of a cheat and a living lie.

The prize seems fair when the fight is on,
But save it is truly won
You will hate the thing when the crowds are gone,

For it stands for a false deed done.
And it's better you never should reach your goal

Than ever success to buy
At the price of knowing down in your soul

That your glory is all a lie.

THE BOY WHO WAS READY.

The boys' line was perfect. With heads erect, chins tucked in, and backs as stiff and straight as broom-sticks, they turned a splendid square corner and filed triumphantly into Room Five. Sunshiny Miss Fay did not smile at her faithful little pupils, however. Her dimples were all ironed out, the twinkle in her eyes had vanished, and worst signs of all there was a genuine criss-cross frown between her eyes!

"How many boys are ready for something hard?" she demanded.

Twenty-four hands flew up. (There were just twenty-four in the school.)

"Good!" exclaimed Miss Fay. "We can't play in Mr. Foster's field any more, boys. The principal got a letter from him last night. Now I want you boys to remind the little fellows to stay in the school-yard. I haven't forgotten how you stopped the snowballing last winter, and I shall count on you to help me."

The boys of Room Five tried to smile back loyally, but it was hard work. There wasn't any playground near the school, but for years the boys had spent their recesses in Mr. Foster's field, which was big enough for two baseball diamonds, with room to spare for other games.

Everybody was unhappy the first recess. The children were crowded in their own yard, and all they could do was to sit or stand around. Phil Rice, Bob Lowe, Tom Whitney and several other boys sat on the steps and looked longingly at the woods in the distance.

"Let's go to the cave tonight right after school," proposed Phil.

"Let's," agreed everybody in the group.

Phil, Bob, Tom and Jamie were the first boys out that night. They waited a moment for Chester, who always mixed the "e" and "i" in receive. As soon as he had written it ten times he joined them and the little troop started off.

They followed Parker's Brook for half a mile. Phil gathered specimens of any flower he didn't know, and Bob picked an armful of black alder berries for the painting lesson the next day. Tom tried to catch a fish with his hands and tumbled in head first. He was used to duckings and laughed the loudest of all.

Suddenly Phil stood still. His head was thrown back and he sniffed the air like a hound. "I smell smoke," he announced. The others shook their heads. But Phil stood his ground. "It's up in Mr. Foster's woods. Let's run up and see."

"Don't bother," argued Chester, "if we go up there we won't have time to go through the cave."

"Mr. Foster is as mean as dirt," sputtered Tom, "and I'm not going on his land for one."

Phil didn't say a word, but sniffed the air again and started to make his way through the tangle of vines and bushes. The other boys looked after him a moment and then followed on. It was hard climbing. The bank was steep and the way was obstructed by a growth of briars and brambles.

Phil kept on doggedly and the others pressed on after him. They stopped a minute at the summit to get their breath, but Phil's eyes shone like lamps. "There it is," he shouted, "come on, boys."

It was only a little fire, but it was burning brightly. In a few minutes it would have been beyond the boys' control. Now they ground it under their heels, and soon the bright flames were conquered and only a heap of black ashes remained.

"Good for you," said a gruff old voice, and Mr. Foster came in sight. "I smelled that fire a mile away, but my legs aren't as good as my nose. I thought the woods would be gone when I came."

He looked at the boys keenly. "I didn't know boys were so useful." He fumbled in his pocket and drew out a shabby purse.

"We don't want any money," Phil said promptly, "but we'd like the right to play in your lot again."

"You've earned it," said the old man. He scribbled a few words on his pad and gave it to Phil. "Give this to your teacher tomorrow." So at the next recess all the boys of the school got together. "Hurrah for the boys of Room Five!" they shouted.

Every boy cheered until he was obliged to stop for breath, and then Chester climbed the fence and waved his hands. "Three cheers for the boy who was ready and saw his chance," he shouted.

So the boys started cheering all over again until Phil sensibly reminded them that recess would be over and the new football untried.—Ex.

WHY SHE LOST HER FRIENDS.

She was not loyal to them.

She measured them by their ability to advance her.

She did not know the value of thoughtfulness in little things.

She was cold and reserved in her manner—cranky, gloomy, pessimistic.

She never thought it worth while to spend time in keeping up her friendships.

She never learned that implicit, generous trust is the very foundation stone of friendship.

She never threw the doors of her heart wide open to people, or took them into her confidence.

She was always wounding their feelings, making sarcastic or funny remarks at their expense.

She was always ready to receive assistance from her friends, but always too busy or too stingy to assist them in their time of need.—Exchange.

MOTHER'S VACATION.

BY JOHN THOMAS CORLEY.

Give Mother a rest, she's earned it full well,
Though the story's too long in these verses to tell,
Of duties and cares, both early and late,
For Mary and Johnny, Susie and Kate.

She's up with the dawn with a heart full of love,
And a prayer on her lips to the Father above,
To lead her and guide her, and point the good way,
That leads from earth's sorrows to heaven's bright day.

When evening has come and prayers have been said
And Mother so sweetly has tucked you in bed,
She goes to the closet, and there all alone
She lays her sweet charges before the White-Throne.

So send her away with promises sweet,
That things will be kept just as tidy and neat,
No use for to worry with anxious care,
For things will be right though Mother's not there.

I've a two-fold reason in asking this favor,
Although of presumption it may seem to savour,
Through respite from labor, her life may last longer
And your love for each other increase and be stronger.

ONLY A PUMPKIN.

BY HILDA RICHMOND.

"And I will bring a pumpkin," said little Johnny Travis, soberly. "My mamma said I could give a pumpkin."

"Only a pumpkin!" said Fred Nelson, out on the edge of the group. "I wonder what he thinks Mrs. Lucas can do with a pumpkin?" Of course Johnny did not hear this, but the others did. "I'm going to take a basket of potatoes."

The children at the school—the little red school-house at the turn in the road—were planning a shower of nice things for poor Mrs. Lucas. The old lady lived near the school-house, and they were very kind to her. The big boys carried in wood and water for her, and the big girls helped her with her housework, while the little ones did what chores they could. The week before somebody had stolen all her hens, and the poor lady felt very much discouraged.

"My mamma said I could take a basket of apples," said Susie Flint. "I guess I can take some bread, too."

"And I am to have two hens to give her," said another. "My papa said he would go down and mend the lock on her hen-house door, so no thief could get in again."

"That is a good idea," said a big boy. "I'll get my father to let me bring some hens, too."

When the teacher had the list ready it certainly looked very long and nice, and they hoped Mrs. Lucas would like the things. "And all the things good and useful," said Nellie Frost, looking over the list. "All but that pumpkin John Travis promised. Poor Mrs. Lucas hasn't a drop of milk to make a pumpkin pie. And Johnny's folks are about the richest in the district. That's the way it always goes, though."

Late that night the little procession went down the road, and very soon the good things were silently placed in the little sitting-room. Mrs. Lucas could not hear very well, so they were not afraid of being caught. The chickens squawked a little at having to find new beds in a strange place, but even their noise did not disturb the owner of the little brown cottage.

"Children! Come in! I want to show you something!" called Mrs. Lucas next morning as they went to sweep her paths and do her chores.

"I do believe the fairies were here last night. Somebody left a lot of good things for me."

Of course the young people all trooped into the little house, and there were the—things just as they left them the night before. The pumpkin was on the table where Johnny had put it, and the chairs and tables and floor were crowded with baskets and boxes and bundles.

"Dear me! I upset something," said the poor old lady, as her arm struck the pumpkin and it rolled down on the floor. "There goes my pumpkin! Well, it doesn't matter, as I have no milk and eggs to make pumpkin pies with."

The pumpkin broke all to pieces as it smashed on the floor, but instead of seeds and yellow pulp out rolled dozens of little bundles. The wondering old lady picked them up and opened them one at a time, to find stockings, money, handkerchiefs, and a little can of fragrant tea, and so many good things that she had a lap full.

"What a nice way to give things," cried the children. "We thought it was only a pumpkin and didn't amount to anything."

"It is the best pumpkin I ever say," said the old lady. "I wish it had some seeds, so I could raise a whole crop of this kind of pumpkins."

And little Johnny Travis, out at the edge of the group, this time laughed happily to think that his little pumpkin joke had brought such happiness to Mrs. Lucas and his schoolmates, for he had heard the whisperings, and he knew that they thought "only a pumpkin," was a very tiny gift, even though the yellow globe was as big as a pumpkin could grow in a long summer.—Ex.

JUST DO IT YOURSELF.

When Dan Boone's old buckskins gave out, hind and fore,
Did he call in a tailor to make him some more?
He made 'em himself.
When he carved up a redskin who threatened his life,
Did he call in a grinder to sharpen his knife?
He did it himself.
When he knew of the haunt of a sockin' big bear,
Did he send for a jitney to carry him there?
He hiked it himself.
We're all mighty proud of our honest old Dan—
A fearless, resourceful, strong wilderness man:
When he needed supplies and provisions, I guess
He knew he'd go barefoot and hungry unless
He got 'em himself.
When you put on your socks, and your toe punches through,
Don't leave all the mending for others to do;
Darn 'em yourself!
The next time your trousers are due to be pressed,
Just say to your mother: "Please sit down and rest."
I'll do it myself.
If your basement is littered with rubbish and trash,
Don't send for the ashman—save your dad's cash
And do it yourself.
Far removed are you now from that pioneer life
When daily existence meant unceasing strife,
But though you don't live on the frontier, like Dan,
You'll find—if you try—many things that you can Do for yourself. —Boy's Life.

AN INDIAN'S HONESTY.

An old Indian once asked a white man to give him tobacco for his pipe. The white man gave him a loose handful from his pocket. The next day he came back and asked for the white man. "For," said he, "I found a quarter of a dollar among the tobacco."

"Why don't you keep it?" asked a bystander.

"I've got a good man and a bad man here," said the Indian, pointing to his breast, "and the good man say, 'It is not mine; give it back to the owner.' The bad man say, 'Never mind, you got it, and it's your own now.' The good man say, 'No, no! you mustn't keep it.'"

"So I don't know what to do, and I think to go to sleep, but the good man and the bad man kept talking all night, and trouble me; and now I bring the money back, I feel good."

Like the old Indian, we have all a good and a bad man within. The bad man is Temptation, the good man is Conscience, and they keep talking for and against many things that we do every day. Who wins?—Selected.

THE GIRL IN SILK.

BY J. L. CLOVER.

"Mother, I just can't stand that new girl!" And with these words Kitty threw her books on the table and herself into the Morris chair with a founce, which emphasized her sharp statement.

"What new girl? And what harm has she done my little daughter?" asked Mrs. Preston, with a reproving shake of her head at her vehement little girl.

"It's those people who have just come to that old brown house at the foot of the hill," explained Kitty, taking breath. "There's a girl about my age—Madge, her name is. She came to school today, and she's just as proud as can be, mamma. You ought to see the clothes she wears to school; the prettiest dark blue silk, trimmed with plaid, and silk stockings, and such a lovely coat—grey, trimmed with fur. She's real stuck-up about her fine clothes."

"But how did you know she was stuck-up?" asked mother, with interest.

"Oh, she wouldn't speak to Leila and me at recess—just walked by with her head in the air."

"And did you and Leila speak to her, and ask her to join in your play? Remember she is a stranger, and you ought to make the first advances."

"But mother, we couldn't go with young ladies dressed in silk."

"Perhaps she would rather have had on gingham, too, and had a good time," suggested mother. "It is never safe to judge too hastily, little daughter, unless you know all."

Kitty looked unconvinced, but she said no more. The next day, however, she came in from school triumphantly.

"Now, mother, she is proud, and I'll prove it to you. Lou Allen asked her to go blackberrying with us on Saturday and she said Madge just looked down at her silk dress, and said, 'I can't go in this, it would be ruined.' So now, don't you see?"

"I see," returned Mrs. Preston, "but now I have a story to tell you in my turn, little daughter. I went today to call on Mrs. Lindsey, Madge's mother. She is a sweet-faced woman, very gentle and refined. While she talked to me, she was working on a beautiful dress. She seemed to think that I would be surprised that Madge should have such a handsome dress, for after a while she said very quietly that Madge's aunt in the city sent her daughter Ruth's outgrown dresses to Madge. 'And it is a great help,' she added frankly, 'because otherwise I could hardly afford to dress her suitably for school. I know these dresses are too handsome for our circumstances; and it's a real cross to Madge to have to wear silk and velvet, when her little sisters and I wear calico, and everyone knows we are poor. She would rather have gingham for school wear, but there are shoes and stockings and so many other things to be bought that she will just have to keep on wearing Ruth's outgrown things.' I guess it isn't a very heavy cross." Mrs. Preston ended, smiling, "but I knew, from what you had told me, that it is a cross, and not a light one, sometimes, to a girl to be misjudged by her schoolmates. And you girls haven't helped to make it easy for her, have you?"

Kitty looked ashamed. "I'm sorry, mamma; but how could we have guessed such a thing? I wonder if we could fix it up in some way, without hurting her feelings. I know, mother. You remember that blue gingham of mine that was too short, and I've never worn it. Do you think—"

"I think you might suggest in some nice way to lend it to her to wear blackberrying. Do it in a friendly way, and I don't believe she will take offence."

"I'll try it," promised Kitty.

The next day she sought out Madge at recess, and made friends; and soon they were thoroughly "chummy." Madge proved a congenial spirit, and before long a group of girls were eagerly discussing the blackberrying party they had planned for Saturday.

"You'll come with us, won't you, Madge?" asked Kitty, as the two girls walked homeward together, after school. "Do come, we'll have such fun."

And this time Madge answered very frankly:

"I'd like to, Kitty, really, but—I know it sounds funny, but I haven't anything to wear but this," looking down at her handsome suit, "and it would be spoiled with the briars. I'll explain to you about it, some time."

"Oh, but what a pity," said Kitty, impulsively. "Of course you couldn't wear that lovely dress, you want a gingham—something that won't tear, and will wash."

"I know—but I haven't one good enough," said Madge.

"Well, but listen, Madge. I have a pretty little blue gingham I've never worn. It doesn't fit me, but you are just a shade smaller and it would fit you exactly. Please let me lend it to you, and come, Madge. You won't be mad, will you?"

"But suppose it got torn," demurred Madge.

"It wouldn't matter. Come, it's all settled. I'll bring it over this afternoon, shall I?"

Thank you, said Madge, simply, "I'll be glad to go blackberrying, then, Kitty. It was just this stupid old dress that stopped me."

So the next day a merry party of girls went to the blackberry fields, and, getting their pails and baskets full of great, juicy berries, they took the girl in the blue gingham dress into their innermost circle of comradeship.

"We had the best time, mother," said Kitty, that night. "Madge is so nice; and she helped everybody pick, and didn't mind whether she had her own basket full or not, and she told funny stories to amuse little Janey when she got tired and began to cry on the way home; and she told us how to play some new games. We wouldn't have had half as much fun without her; to think we called her proud and stuck-up!"

"Judge not, that ye be not judged," quoted mother, softly.

"Well, I'll never judge anybody hastily again—that's positive!" said Kitty.

Madge came to school on Monday in a beautiful brown plaid silk, but nobody thought of calling her proud again. She had won her own place in the little world of school.—Ex.

KIND WORDS.

Kind words do not cost much. They never blister the tongue or lips. We never heard of any mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They make other people goodnatured. They also produce their own image on men's souls, and a beautiful image it is.—Pascal.

AFRAID OF THE TRAIN.

A wee little boy was afraid of the train
When he went to see Grandma Malone;
For the big choo-choo train had to go up a hill
Just alongside of grandmother's home.

And the wee little boy crawled under the bed
When the big engine choked and said, "Chir-r-r."
For the train it was heavy and ever so long,
So it couldn't help making a "stir-r-r."

Though the engine man poured streams of sand on the rails.

Still the wheels spun and almost stopped still;
And the engine it puffed and jiggled and jerked
When it tried to go over the hill.

And the wee little boy, under grandmother's bed,
Held his breath when the engine went "Chir-r-r."
And he wouldn't come out till the train had gone by
With its terrible, terrible roar.

Now why did the wee little, dear little boy Feel afraid of the train that went by,
And cry to crawl under grandmother's bed?
Don't you know? Well, then, neither do I.

ANGELS IN THE KITCHEN.

A painting by one of the old masters depicts a kitchen in which is an angel attending to homely household duties.

Kitchen work has not often been considered the highest form of service, yet if we consider those who have performed it may well consider it among the highest.

Gideon made ready cakes and a kid for the angel who visited him; and an angel baked cakes for the prophet Elijah when he was too weary to do it himself; and from those cakes he derived such strength as to go forty days into the wilderness unto Horeb, the mount of God.

Then, when Jesus had fasted forty days and "was afterward an hungerer," angels came and ministered unto him." And he at another time deemed it fitting that he should get breakfast for hungry fishermen.

The following is a story of a woman who felt the dignity of service in the kitchen.

Mrs. Potter had spent a week at the mountains, and naturally her neighbors plied her with questions as to what she had seen and how she had enjoyed her visit. "We all know you're fond of your house and home," said one of the neighbors, "but wasn't it a kind of a relief not to have to think of washing and ironing and baking and sweeping for a good long week and just feast your eyes on views and sights?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Potter, with an absent-minded expression, "of course the mountain views are grand. I took a good look at 'em morning and night, and sometimes between."

"What did you do the rest part o' the day?"

"Well," said Mrs. Potter, looking as if she had been detected in a crime, "that woman we boarded with, she'd been using some kind of powder that had eaten holes in her clothes and table linen, and she didn't know how to make her own yeast, nor she didn't understand the ins an' outs of a boiled dinner. So I said to Anna, my duty lay clear before me.

"You take in the mountain views," I said, 'an' I'll see what I can do at the kitchen end o' the house.'

"To tell the truth," and little Mrs. Potter looked as nearly defiant as was possible to a woman of her size and with her features, "those mountains kind of overbore me, but that kitchen made me feel as if I was of some account after all!"

There is only one fear a brave man should have—the fear of doing wrong.

WAS HE WORTH IT?

A little boy having hurt his foot, came to his mother and, as all mothers would, she washed it carefully and then wrapped it up. When this was done and the blood was all out of sight and the pain allayed, the little fellow looked up into her face and said: "Mother, it seems to me that you would find me more trouble to you than I'm worth." What did she do but gather the child up close to her heart and try to tell him how much he really was worth. She was wise enough to know that there was a greater value hidden in the boy than he realized, and told him how much he was worth to her and to the world and to God. What an enhanced appreciation of motherhood that reveals! She was nourishing the child that was dearer than life to her, but in so doing she was preparing a man for the world and her God.

THE OPEN HAND.

A child put its hand into a rare and valuable vase, and could not withdraw it. The father said, "You must open your hand and straighten out the fingers; then you will be free." But the child said, "O papa, I couldn't straighten out my fingers, for then I should drop my marble." It is only when we insist upon holding on to the things of clay that we find trouble in doing as Jesus would like to have us do.—Selected.

THE CAPITAL OF THE KINGDOM.

The capital of the United States has been in a number of places besides its present location. It was in Baltimore, in Lancaster and York, Pennsylvania, in Trenton, Annapolis, Princeton and New York City and Philadelphia. It is conceivable that it may some day be removed from Washington to a place nearer the center of the country. What a contrast to these removals is the capital of the Kingdom of God! It is anywhere, and it is everywhere. Its Ruler dwells not in temples made with hands, and yet he is to be found in every such temple built for him.

INFECTED.

"Look out for the scratches," said a physician to a friend as they entered his car and drove away from the hospital. "Gage is a pretty sick man, and it all comes from a splinter that lodged under his thumb nail. It brought about blood poisoning. If the system happens to be in a certain condition—weak or run down—a little infection is apt to prove a serious thing."

"Look out for the scratches" is good advice for all of us. Many sins leave but little scars upon the soul; mere pin scratches, so we think. But a little sin may do a lot of damage if left unmolested; the smallest, most insignificant sin in the world can do that. It was not a big sin that wrecked Saul, Israel's first king, nor Gehazi, the prophet's servant. When the virus of sin once gets into the blood it spreads through the whole life, and suffering and tragedy are apt to result.—Ex.

PAUL IN CYPRUS AND IN ANTIOCH OF PISIDIA.

(Acts 13:1-12.)

Acts 13:1. Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers; as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul.

2. As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Ghost said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.

3. And when they had fasted and prayed, and laid their hands on them, they sent them away.

4. So they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed unto Seleucia; and from thence sailed to Cyprus.

5. And when they were at Salamis, they preached the word of God in the synagogues of the Jews; and they had also John to their minister.

6. And when they had gone through the isle unto Paphos, they found a certain sorcerer, a false prophet, a Jew, whose name was Barjesus:

7. Which was with the deputy of the country, Sergius Paulus, a prudent man; who called for Barnabas and Saul, and desired to hear the word of God.

8. But Elymas the sorcerer (for so is his name by interpretation) withstood them, seeking to turn away the deputy from the faith.

9. Then Saul (who also is called Paul), filled with the Holy Ghost, set his eyes on him,

10. And said, O full of all subtilty and all mischief, thou child of the devil, thou enemy of all righteousness, wilt thou not cease to pervert the right ways of the Lord?

11. And now, behold, the hand of the Lord is upon thee, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness; and he went about seeking some to lead him by the hand.

12. Then the deputy, when he saw what was done, believed, being astonished at the doctrine of the Lord.

INTRODUCTORY.

Christ had a world-wide program for his people as he left his apostles with the commission to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. We find the early church taking up this task. The golden text for today is taken from Jesus' words to his disciples just before he left them: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." This was their work and we are now studying how they took this up and carried it on. Our lesson today starts at Antioch in Syria, where there had been a great revival. In this church there had been gathered a large number of good Christian men, some of whom were prophets and teachers. Barnabas was one of them and Saul of Tarsus was another. Both had distinguished themselves already by their great faithfulness and their aptness to speak for Jesus Christ and turn souls to the Lord for salvation. Happy is the church that has good men in it to do the Lord's work.

EXPOSITORY.

1-3. The church at Antioch was a revived church and the members and leaders were busily engaged in the work and service of the Lord. Among them are named Simeon and Lucius and Manaen, besides Barnabas and Saul. As they talked of the work of preaching the Gospel, and giving it to the world, there came borne in upon their souls by God's Holy Spirit, that they themselves should send out some of their own number to foreign lands. The message pointed out to them Barnabas and Saul as being called by God to this work. There was nothing to do but to be obedient to this holy call. These two must go, and the rest of the church must send them. So there was fasting and prayer. It was a solemn occasion, as it always is and should be when men and women are sent away to this work of foreign missions. It was a great ordination service. The hands of these ministers were laid upon the heads of the missionaries and they were sent away with the commission to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the souls to whom he was directing them.

4, 5. Saul and Barnabas went under the guidance of the Holy Spirit to their work. This is the beginning of the first great missionary journeys of Paul. He made three of them. This first one lasted about two years and is described in the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters of Acts. They first went to Selencia, the seaport of Antioch. Then they started for the Island of Cyprus, and landed at Salamis, its nearest seaport. They immediately attended the synagogue services, where the Jews assembled for worship, that they might preach Christ to them. They had with them a young Christian man named John Mark. He was a cousin of Barnabas. He lived at Jerusalem. His mother's name was Mary. He wrote the Gospel of Mark. Cyprus had been the home of Barnabas and he had property and friends there. So it was natural that he should feel like beginning his work there.

6-11. They preached at Salamis and then started on a tour of the whole island, going from city to city. Their first noteworthy experience was at a place called Paphos, where they encountered a certain false teacher, a sort of sorcerer, a Jew, named Bar-Jesus, or Elymas. He took it upon himself to oppose Paul and Barnabas, and their Gospel teaching. The Roman pro-consul, Sergius Paulus, was a man of intelligence, and hearing about the work of these Christian newcomers to Cyprus, sent for them that he might hear from them the message they had to bring. They came to him at his request, and no doubt taught the truth clearly and forcefully. Like many another Roman officer, this pro-consul weighed the matter carefully. This wicked sorcerer was afraid that he might accept the Gospel. He did not wish him to do so. All wicked men hated Jesus and his Gospel. The sorcerer did what he could to interfere with the work of Paul. Perhaps he burst in with some expostulations or arguments, and tried to attract the pro-consul and keep him from believing. But Paul was Christ's servant and advocate and was more than a match for this wicked Jew. Filled with God's Holy Spirit, he looked at him directly, and denounced him as a son of the devil, full of all guile and villany, and as an enemy of all righteousness, and demanded that he should cease his wicked work of perverting the right ways of the Lord.

It is a good thing to speak with force and with righteous anger sometimes. Christ did, and John the Baptist did, and the prophets and apostles did. Wickedness is to be rebuked, in a way that the rebuke may be understood.

Here this false prophet was told that God's hand was to be on him, like that of an arresting sheriff, and that he was to be blind for a season. Immediately it was fulfilled. The man was in a mist of darkness. He had to be led. It was a miracle that was most noteworthy. The people saw the bold opponent arrested, blinded, and stopped in his wicked life. Whether he was converted we do not know. It would probably be recorded if he had been. Paul must have thought of his own temporary blindness, and of his own coming into the light of a new life in Jesus Christ. He wished, of course, that it might be so with this wicked man.

12. But the pro-consul believed. He was astonished and convinced by the teaching of the Lord's Gospel, as it came from Paul and Barnabas, and when he saw this miracle he could no longer hold back. So here was the result of God's blessing upon the work of his servants at Paphos.

The whole of this chapter should be carefully read. It is really a part of the lesson, although too long to be treated here. We should follow these missionary journeys step by step, and the rest of this chapter is a very important part of the first journey, as we see Paul going from Antioch in Syria to Antioch in Pisidia.

THE TEMPLE OFFERINGS.

"The last shall be first, and the first last." The rich man took from the purple fold Of his robe a piece of shining gold, Cast in the gift, a treasure rare, And then passed on with a lordly air, As he thought of merit justly won, By his noble deed so nobly done. The widow followed, with lowly mien— A respectful space was placed between— Cast in two mites, and her thought seemed bold,

When she wished their worth as the shining gold.

The rich man rolled in his state away, Drawn by chargers, sleek and gray. The widow her lonely pathway trod, And her heart was filled with the thought of God,

Of the loving-kindness that gave her all She had ever prized, and her gift seemed small.

Long years have passed, and the rich man's name

Were lost, were it not for the widow's fame.

His deed without love, so cold and dead, Had sunk in the wave of time as lead.

Her humble gift was a seed with wings, And rich the harvest that from it springs.

Her wish that the baser coin were gold, Has been fulfilled a thousandfold.

So the promise comes, we know not how, And the widow's mites are millions now.

The rich man's deed is but seen afar, The shadow that follows the widow's star,

Which adown the ages still shall shine, To show the wisdom and grace divine,

Of him who reckons each deed apart, Not by worth of metal, but warmth of heart.

—Watchman and Reflector.

WHAT SHALL WE TEACH THE CHILDREN?

Teach them to know Jesus by means of Bible stories, Bible reading and Bible history.

Teach them to pray.

Teach them to worship in the regular church services.

Teach them to sing; to sing the hymns of the church and to understand what they sing.

Teach them to love their church by learning her history.

Teach them to know what it means to be a Christian; and help them to practice that Christianity each day in their home, at their work and at their play.

Teach them how men and women have served others in the largest life by telling them the great missionary stories.

Teach them to read their Bible and thus know for themselves what the Bible teaches.

Teach them Bible verses, storing up God's promises which shall sustain them during temptations.

Teach them to be church workers.

Teach them to love their parents and home because they have become intelligent Christians.—Ex.

SABBATH SCHOOLS IN SYRIA AND PALESTINE.

Sabbath-school work in Syria and Palestine during the war almost ceased. It is now reported that decided progress is being made, the interest shown by both missionaries and natives is most unusual. There was an increase of more than fifty per cent enrollment in those countries during the past year.

PLAYING THE GAME.

Let's play, for this is the play season of the year. Let's play leap-frog over the next two months, thereby arriving at Rally Sabbath, the last Sabbath in September.

We must put the enthusiasm of a well-played game into the business of the Sabbath school and church, or we shall have little success in it. "Dis worl," says Uncle Eben, "Dis worl is a-gwinter be all right jes' as soon as de crowd cheers a kind word or a gin'rous action de same as it does a home run."

We may build our program about the idea that Rally Day is a parade. when we are all present, in holiday attire, banners flying, band or orchestra playing, a speaker or two to shoot off oratorical skyrockets, something doing every minute! At least part of the two months would have to be used even for this lowest type of Rally Day success.

But Rally Day is more than a parade. What we need in connection with Rally Day is not so much the program for a day as for a campaign. We must look ahead and plan for things that are big enough to enlist our undivided energies. We are oftener too unambitious than too ambitious.

The Sabbath school and church are seeking to capture folks and ever more folks, so that by acquaintance with the Bible they may come to know the Savior as their own Savior.

Who are the folks we want to see won to Christ and his Church? Do we know who is in the parish or community for whom our presence makes us responsible? Who lives on these surrounding farms or in these surrounding homes? Do they go to church? Are they members anywhere? Do they attend a Sabbath school? How many children are in these homes? There are answers for such questions. Preparation for Rally Day means obtaining this information long enough ahead to make use of it.

And who are the workers to win them for Christ and his church? The workers already in harness must be rallied long before Rally Day. From these interested ones interest must spread like a blessed contagion to the uninterested. Get them together. "The laborers are few." Who are the possible helpers you might find for this task? The church must be surveyed as well as the community. Some of the "inactives" can be converted into "live wires."

We shall have a fruitful and happy Rally Day only if we bestir ourselves betimes!—Christian World.

WHAT LOVE DOES.

Love is its greatest element, including, as it does, "Long-suffering, gentleness and goodness." In a famous chapter in the Bible love seems to fill the whole life. Elsewhere it bears the burdens of others; it pleases all men for their good; it forgives injuries; it is compassionate toward the worst and helpful of the weakest. Everywhere it is the supreme victory over self, ready for every sacrifice and every service, and won, by our effort, but as the outflow of the divine love in our hearts.—Exchange.

JOSEPH, AN AVERAGE BOY.

In many homes there comes a day when the question, "Shall Joseph go to Sabbath school?" is raised by the parents. Perhaps they themselves are members of a church, perhaps they are not even church attendants. There is, however, a desire to secure for their children not only the best education, but whatever blessing the church may have to bestow. They often express this as did one mother when she brought her Joseph, "I want my boy to be a good boy," she said.

While going to Sabbath school is not synonymous with being "a good boy" any more than going to church insures honesty in business, yet the church is a fundamental agency in creating the ideals, the aspirations, the attitudes that serve as the motive power for right action. The Bible story is a potent factor to this end. Theodore, who had listened eagerly to the story of David, told by a teacher, remarked, "Do you s'pose I could ever be like him?"

Not alone the creating of ideas of service, but the carrying out of such ideas is a prominent feature of Sabbath school work today. A class of ten-year-olds had heard with deep concern an account of the starving children of Armenia. They longed to help, and decided to solicit doughnuts, cookies and canned fruit from their mothers. They held a sale with the aid of the Sabbath-school teacher and realized sixty dollars with which to support starving children.

The teaching of the Sabbath school is not restricted to establishing a right relation to one's fellows, but it includes acquainting the child with God as the Creator of all things, thus answering the eternal question of Genesis satisfactorily. It includes the presentation of God as the Father, and friend, protector and guide of every child. "Thank you, God," said a tiny child, "for keeping care of me." The atmosphere of reverence and devotion makes a deep impression upon the child. John's father, a man who never attended any church, consented to his boy's attending at Sabbath school. One morning a few weeks after John had entered the Sabbath school, the father became irritated at a refractory collar button, and "took the name of the Lord in vain." John, who apparently had been asleep, sat up, and in a tone of grieved reproof, said, "Daddy, if you went to our Sabbath school you wouldn't speak of God like that."

"Shall Joseph go to Sabbath school?" Well, let us at least try the experiment and watch the result. It may do for Joseph what it has done for many another lad.—Returned Church Messenger.

THE GOOD SEED.

That there is no other place where the good seed can be sown with more lasting results than in the heart of a child, is beautifully expressed in the words of the poet:

"An Angel paused in his upward flight
With a seed of love, and truth and light,
And said: 'Oh where shall this seed be sown,
That it yield most fruit when it is grown?'
The Master heard and said as he smiled:
'Place it for me in the heart of a child!'"

WOOSTER

SAY IT WITH MONEY
Many people love the College of Wooster. They recognize its strategic importance in the Kingdom of God. They wish it well. But good wishes will not meet the conditions of the Rockefeller offer of $250,000. A subscription payable in four annual installments will. Help us now.
PRESIDENT CHARLES F. WISHART, Wooster, Ohio.

PREPARE FOR BEST SERVICE

There is large room in the church for trained leadership, in addition to those who are called to be ambassadors of God. Men and women, not ordained, find particular opportunity as leaders of the religious education activities of local churches and as assistants to pastors of large congregations.

Auburn Seminary opens September 26, the Auburn Lay School to train men and women for full-time positions in church work. Auburn Theological Seminary, established more than 100 years ago, will continue to educate young men who desire to become ministers.

This seminary thus unites on one campus, but in separate buildings, two important functions of Christian education. It is the first of our seminaries to open its doors for the training of laymen and laywomen.

If you feel the impulse to join that body of self-sacrificing men and women who are carrying on the work of the church, come to Auburn. If you plan to become a minister enroll in the seminary. If you desire to enter church work in an unordained capacity register for the Lay School.

Send for catalogue today.

PRAYER MEETING, AUG. 7.

Endeavor Topic: Thy Will Be Done. II. With My Pleasures. Matt. 6:7-15.

It is in connection with what are known as our pleasures that a great many lives are wrecked, and a great many professed Christians lose their power and influence for good. It seems strange that in what seems to be so unimportant a department of life as its pleasures, there should be so much of possibility for evil or for good.

It is therefore of very great importance that we bring this part of our life into complete subjection to the will of God, and try to make our pleasures just such as are pleasing to him. If our pleasures do not do us good, they are certain to do us much harm. If they are not such as God can bless, they are sure to bring to us bitterness and blighting at the last.

Whatever we do we must learn to do all to the glory of God. That is, we must do all in such a way that God will be seen to have our high regard and reverence and love, and others will be led to serve him as a consequence of seeing what we are and do. If our influence is such as to promote the power of true religion in the world, and lead others to love and serve God, we are living to the glory of God. If it is otherwise we are not living to God's glory, but in such a way as to injure his cause.

It is for us then to choose whether we will live as the friends or the enemies of God. If we are his friends, and love him, we will try to do all in our power to please him and to lead others to be believing and religious. If we are not his friends we will not care whether we help or hurt his cause. Many live as the enemies of Jesus Christ. Some are trying, with earnestness and devotion to live as his real friends.

All our pleasures should make us better prepared for our real work in life. The word recreation is a good word. It means, and is, re-creation. Thus sleep re-creates, or strengthens us for the work of the new day. So does good food re-create our strength and energy. So does healthful rest give our powers the opportunity to gain their normal tone. So should all our pleasures, diverting our attention from the strains and stress of life, give us rest and re-creation. After the pleasures we should be all the better fitted for our regular work and duty. If the pleasure does this then even the pleasure becomes a duty.

The true Christian is the happiest person in the world. He takes God into all his work as well as into his pleasures. He tries to do all things as God would have him do them. He asks God's blessing on all he does. Whether he eats or drinks, or works or plays, he does it heartily, as in respect to God. The simple life of faith, the godly life, the obedient and prayerful life, is filled with serene satisfaction and gladness far exceeding the pleasure there is in any whirling, noisy life that leaves God out of the account.

It seems oftentimes that this is an age that has gone mad over amusement. To read the daily papers leaves one with the impression that amusement is the supreme interest with great multitudes, for seven days of the week. For many there seems to be no Sabbath, and no time for thinking of God or the soul, or eternity. This is veritable madness.

Let us have simple, healthful recreations and pleasures, and our lives will be lightened, our Christian influence heightened, and God will be glorified.

MY BOOKS.

BY WALTER D. GLADWIN.

Upon the shelves in stately rows they stand,
My quiet friends. They murmur not, nor fret.
Because I am too weak to reach a hand
To draw them near me. Quiet, I say, and yet

They speak in clearer tones than those who talk
In louder voice: and dearer tales they tell
Than any told me in my daily walk
By friends and neighbors who around me dwell.

This one recalls a golden autumn day,
When dark the heather glowed 'neath the clear sky,
And in a hollow, book in hand, I lay,
Heedless how swift the moments glided by.

And that, with plain red covers, calls to mind
A friend who borrowed it, and gave it praise,
Saying that in its pages one might find
Both truth and tenderness. Since then the days

Have grown to months, and lengthened into years, Since that dear friend I saw. But when I take
This book within my hand, a face appears,
And, as I turn the leaves, fond memories wake.

As one far inland, longing for the sea,
Close to his ear should hold a tiny shell,
And for one blissful moment dreams that he Can hear the roar of waves that break and swell,

So, yearning for the scenes of long ago,
And far removed from friends supremely dear,
I turn my eyes toward my books; and lo!
The vanished scenes and faces reappear.
Albany, Pa.

THE COLORS.

Independence Day has again reminded us of the beauty and significance of our national flag. Flags have been the symbol of national life and honor, of patriotism and love of country, for more than 3,000 years. The Chinese had flags as early as the twelfth century B. C. Ensigns, standards, banners were in constant use among the Assyrians, Egyptians, Hebrews, and other oriental peoples from the earliest times. Much is said in Roman history of the Roman standards. Among these the most famous was the Labarum of Constantine, which consisted of a long gilded spear, on the top of which was a cross bar, from which hung a purple cloth beautifully decorated with a monogram of Christ and the Greek letters "alpha" and "omega." It commemorated the emperor's conversion to Christianity.

Our "Red, White, and Blue," is the most beautiful flag in the world. When the Chinese first saw it they called it the "flower flag." The thought of it was not born in the heart of any of our great statesmen, but in the heart of a loving, loyal, gifted woman, and the mere designing of the "Stars and Stripes" is enough to give the name of Betsy Ross, of Philadelphia, a place of permanent fame in our nation's history.

THEY WERE WELCOMED.

We hear a great deal about the failure of churches to welcome strangers. We learn from a Kansas City paper that some reporters in that city tested the matter. They dressed themselves up as indigent, out-of-work specimens and went to several churches to see what would be their reception. They expected the marble hand. Instead, they were welcomed most cordially. They were welcomed by the people already in the pews. They expected a stone and instead they got bread, the hearty welcome of well-wishers. That is the Church today. It is a venomous slander to speak of the Church as a class possession. There may be snobs who draw aside at the poor, but they are not the Church; they are its barnacles.

PUBLISHERS' NOTES.

Many subscribers pay their subscriptions at this season, and some are interested in securing new subscribers, and make inquiry as to terms, commissions, etc.

We do not give the paper for less than the price to subscribers, new or old, but we do give to any old subscriber a commission for securing new subscribers. We give this commission in money, $1 for each new subscriber, or in books or other articles at what is practically the wholesale price, being about half the regular retail price.

Among the books which have proved popular with our readers are a number of practical discussions of Christian doctrine and stories. Some of them have appeared in the paper and afterwards been issued in book form.

We will send to any subscriber who sends a new subscription at the price, $2.50, any two of the following books:

Victorious Manhood. By Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston.

A Seed Thought. By Leigh Younge. An interesting and useful story.

Golden Grain. Another good story by Leigh Younge.

The Story of the Four Gospels, for Boys and Girls. By Martha A. Hunter.

Pastoral Memories. By Dr. E. P. Whallon.

The Girl in Jeopardy. By Glenroe MacQueen.

A Prodigal Daughter. A story by Mary McCrea Culter.

At the Foot of No-Man. By Mrs. Droke. A thrilling and useful story.

The Rose Parlor. An Endeavor story, By Mrs. Emma C. Campbell.

The Heir of Barachah. By Jean K. Baird.

Or any subscriber when paying for the paper, can add 50 cents and receive any one of those books postpaid.

Any subscriber sending a new name with the cash, $2.50, can have any two of these books postpaid as a commission.

The Famine and the Bread. By Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston.

Applied Theology. By Rev. F. C. Monfort, D.D.

C. E. B.

These initials will be recognized by our older readers. Dr. C. E. Babb, for many years one of our editors, was a popular and instructive writer. A volume of his writings with the title C. E. B., price $1.50, had a wide sale. We still have calls for it. We have secured a few copies, handsomely bound and only slightly shopworn, which we will send postpaid to any subscriber for $1, or give it as a commission to any subscriber who secures a new subscriber at $2.50.

Address Herald and Presbyter, Cincinnati, O.

USEFUL PRESENTS.

For $5.00 you can give the following presents: To yourself, the Herald and Presbyter for one year; to your father, Dr. F. C. Monfort's "Applied Theology," a book in which the doctrines of the Church are discussed in simple language; to your mother, Dr. Whallon's, book "Pastoral Memories;" to your brother or son, Mrs. Droke's book, "At the Foot of No-Man;" to your sister or daughter, Leigh Younge's "Seed Thought;" to your pastor or some elder, or to the church or Sabbath-school library, the latest edition of the "Constitution of the Presbyterian Church." This book contains the Standards of the Church, with all revisions up to date. The price of these books alone if bought in the stores, would be over $6.00. ## PRAYER MEETING

CONCERT OF PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

Shantung and North China missions are specified as the parts of China for special consideration at this time, the other missions, in Central and South China, having been before us earlier in the year. It is proper to make some such division as this, for this great country is too large to be gone over at one meeting. About one-fourth of the whole population of the world is to be found in China. So it is that about one-fourth of all our Presbyterian missionaries, and, in fact, one-fourth of the missionaries of all the evangelical churches, are found in this country, China, which is its rightful share.

It is in North China, in five of its provinces, that the great famine has been so serious during the past year and more. From lack of rain the people were reduced to terrible straits, and many thousands perished from hunger, and cold, and exposure. But our missionaries did heroic work, and with much labor and sacrifice, ministered to the people. The larger part of the distribution of food, secured largely by means of funds raised in the United States and other lands, was through our missionaries. The United States sent nearly eight million dollars for famine relief. The Chinese know what the missions and missionaries have done, and the hearts of many are made ready for receiving Christ and his Gospel.

Rev. W. A. P. and Mrs. Martin began work in Peking in 1863. Dr. Martin had entered the work in China in 1850. Within a few years he established at Peking, "Truth Hall," a boarding school for boys. Later the girls' boarding school, which has since removed to Paotingfu, was established, and in 1880 the medical work was begun by Dr. Atterbury. The siege of Peking, from January 19 to August 19, 1900, was one of the most stirring events in modern history. The members of Peking Station shared in it and nearly all of the mission property was destroyed. Very few of the church members survived, excepting those who had found refuge in the British Legation. The losses have been more than recovered, both materially and in the Chinese Church. Paotingfu was one of the scenes of missionary martyrdom in the Boxer outbreak in 1900. Dr. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Simcox with their three little children, and Dr. and Mrs. Hodge gave up their lives in martyrdom. On the next day six missionaries of the American Board met the same fate. The work has been reestablished both in the city and in the extensive outfield. In 1898 plans were made to establish a station at Shuntufu. The Boxer outbreak caused delay and the station was not opened until 1903. There is a large and effective force of missionaries at the various missions of North China.

The Shantung Mission is in a province about the size of Missouri, with a population of about thirty millions. Among the founders of this mission are three names of outstanding prominence among missionaries: Rev. J. L. Nevius, D.D., Rev. Hunter Corbett, D.D., and Rev. C. W. Mateer, D.D. Dr. Nevius first visited the province in 1861, continuing in the work until his death in 1893. Dr. Mateer came in 1864 and died in 1908. Dr. Corbett began work in 1865 and died in 1919. Events to be remembered are the famine of 1867, when about $200,000 in relief was distributed to 150,000 starving people; the floods of 1899, with the following pestilence and famine; the German occupation of Tsingtau; the Boxer outbreak of 1900; and the taking of Tsingtau in 1915 by the Japanese. During the Boxer troubles the mission property was nearly all destroyed and the missionaries had to leave the field, but no lives were lost among the missionaries, though the native Christians numbered many martyrs among their membership. The oldest station is Tengchou. In 1866 Dr. Mateer opened the Boys' School, and in 1881 Tengchou College, which since 1904 has become a part of Shantung University. The Girls' Boarding School was established by Mrs. Nevius in 1862. Chefoo, which is a station field of about 3,500,000, is one of the great evangelistic stations. It was founded by Dr. Corbett. Educational institutions have grown up, among others a school for the deaf. Tsinanfu has become the educational center of the mission. Ichoufu was formerly a center of anti-foreign feeling. At Tsiningchou an attempt to establish a station in 1890 was frustrated by mob violence. This station escaped property loss in the Boxer outbreak. Tsingtau was the center of German influence and was rebuilt by the Germans on modern lines. Yih sien is a center of considerable Mohammedan population. A number of the stations are made more accessible by the railroad systems. Shantung is remarkable for the union work of the different missions both along evangelistic lines and in the Shantung University, which is the center of highest education.

A devoted band of missionaries are to be found here, worthy successors of the earlier laborers who laid the foundations here in the name of Christ.

THE BOND OF UNION.

BY DONALD A. FRASER.

One Sabbath, as my Presbyterian feet
Conveyed me to our simple House of Prayer,
I passed the Home whose kind protecting roof
Shelters old women, friendless and alone.

Here the Salvation Army held the street,
Giving an early service of glad hymns,
And music sweet from trumpets silver-toned:
Their offering of cheer to dreary lives,
Waking soft memories in burdened hearts,
And lighting faded eyes with misty smiles,
Like evening sunshine kissing ancient trees.

As I drew near, they ceased; the Army turned,
And to the drum's low tap they marched away,
Up the ascending street. Unconsciously
My step fell in with theirs. Then on the air,
From the Cathedral's tower Episcopal,
Pealed out the chimes, in tones sublimely clear,
Aurelia's tone majestic, singing plain,
"The Church's One Foundation—Christ, the Lord!"

The Army, band, and I took up the strain,
And with the bells in unison we went,
To Barracks they, and I to my own Church,
One Song, one Purpose pulsing in our hearts.

THE LOST PRAYER BOOK.

We were reading of a pastor the other day who after thirty years of service in a certain congregation resigned his pulpit. When pressed by the membership of the church for his reason in declining to serve them longer he replied: "I have lost my prayerbook and I can not preach for you any longer." Instantly they asked what he meant. "When I became your pastor each one of you was a page in my prayerbook; you prayed for me. As the years have gone on, this page and that page has been torn out of my prayerbook, until today I have nothing left but the covers. How can I preach without my prayerbook?"

The poor dying rate at which many a church lives is not always due to the pastor. It maybe due to the worldly-mindedness of the membership and the lack of vital Godliness. A half dozen earnest souls who would covenant together in a real prayer league would transform the entire church life and make it glow with Divine power.

Dr. Elwin L. House has aptly put the truth in the following language: "It is not a new minister that is needed; not a new church; not a new choir; not more organizations, but a Holy Spirit-filled laity, working with the pastor, upholding his hands, commending his preaching, inviting the people to the church, and being there at each service to greet and uphold all with their interest and prayers."—Evangelical Messenger.

THE DIVINE PRESENCE.

Should you ask, "How can I have such an experience for my own?" the answer is, Only by seeking for it with all your heart. The Father of all has given his word: "Ask, and it shall be given you." Any one can find God, and enter in, and live with him, who will really give his soul to the search. Do not forget that the God you seek is seeking you, too. It takes time and a resolute determination to come to a natural realization of the friendship of God. But there is nothing to which you can devote your life that will so richly reward you with gifts that never fade nor fail.

A woman of my acquaintance, thoughtful by nature, but living a thoughtless life, came under the influence of a man of spiritual power. As she listened to his words, and watched his life, and yielded to his influence, her better self awakened, and she began to live a life far more worth living. Within a short time he moved to another city. She hung his picture where she would see it from time to time; and she wrote to a friend, "It is like having my conscience photographed and hung on the wall." To be conscious of the presence of God, to "set the Lord always before you," is just such an influence toward the best living and speaking. It makes for self-restraint in the presence of evil, and for eager response to all that is good. You are constrained to live in a way that shall make you worthy of such a friendship.—Ex.

THE SPIRIT OF RECEIVING.

This is important. It is more important than the spirit of giving, about which we make so much ado. The man who is not in such an attitude of heart toward God that he can receive of him joy, peace, power and other riches will not have a very genuine spirit of giving. He will never have much of real value to give, and what generosity he does practice must have an artificial motive. The giving of money for the support of Christ's cause is not the first requisite of faithfulness. The relating of ourselves to God in such a way that he can reveal and impart himself to us, that is a privilege of first importance. A Christian of real worth must be a reservoir before he is a fountain. He must receive and appropriate before he can give or transmit.—James A. Maxwell.

My Father knows, my Father hears,
My Father sees, my Father cares,
My Father loves because he knows,
And, knowing all, his love o'erflows:

He sees, he hears, he cares, he knows;
With love for all his heart o'erflows!

GENERAL NEWS

NOW SETTING A DATE FOR THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

Negotiations for the disarmament conference among representatives of the leading world Powers have reached a stage where a demand as to the time for opening the sessions may be expected soon.

This was the information given out at the White House following the Cabinet meeting, at which Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State, told Cabinet members of the progress of the negotiations.

Numerous inquiries have been sent informally to the President concerning certain details of the conference, but the Chief Executive has made it clear that he does not intend to attempt to dictate the rules of procedure.

He has his opinions, and is not expected to hesitate to express them in the form of suggestions, but final decision on all matters is to rest with representatives of the nations participating acting in concert.

As previously indicated, President Harding is not to be a participant in the proceedings, his efforts having been directed toward bringing the Powers together for the purpose of reaching an amicable adjustment of the controversial problems that have resulted from the World War, and the universal desire for world peace.

The United States will be represented at the conference by a commission that will be selected by the President, which is certain to include Secretary Hughes and one or two members of the United States Senate. Beyond that nothing is known of the personnel of the American commission.

ARMY-NAVY BOMBING TESTS COMPLETED.

The tests of the ability to sink ships by means of bombs dropped from aeroplanes ended last week with the sinking of the former German light cruiser Frankfurt and the former German battleship, Ostfriesland.

The Frankfurt successfully resisted all bombs landing on her decks, but was finally sunk by one which just missed the ship and exploded in the water under her bows.

The result with the Ostfriesland was the same. After a day of bombing the vessel was still afloat, with only her upper works slightly damaged. On the second day the attack was by seven bombing planes, each dropping one one-ton bomb of T. N. T. The bomb which finally sunk the ship missed, but exploded in the water alongside and just below the armor belt.

The tests have shown that capital ships have little to fear from direct hits, but have shown that there are matters of construction to be worked out. Also they have shown that in dropping bombs, to make a hit, the aeroplanes must fly so low as to expose themselves dangerously to the enemy.

IRISH NEGOTIATIONS FAIL.

Negotiations between Premier Lloyd-George and DeValera, "president" of Ireland, for the purpose of finding a solution to the Irish problem, have come to naught.

DeValera insists upon the six northern (Protestant) colonies, which are operating under the Home Rule Act, being incorporated under the Dublin parliament. Also that the Dublin government be permitted to establish naval bases, build a navy and raise an army separate from that of the Empire.

PESSIMISTIC AS TO GERMAN-POLE SITUATION.

"War between Germany and Poland may be expected within a fortnight," declared Andre Lefevre, former Minister of War, in an address at Paris last week.

"France would be foolish to send additional forces into Upper Silesia because she would be bound to be caught between the two fires," he added.

"Furthermore, I have inside information that the Soviet Russian is preparing to march upon Warsaw as soon as the German-Polish war is begun.

"Thus Europe again is on the eve of a terrific conflict which the allies are powerless to prevent by any except the most strenuous measures.

"The end of the whole dreadful business is lost in the mists and dread of uncertainty."

GOVERNOR OF ILLINOIS INDICTED.

Governor Len O. Small, Lieutenant Governor Fred E. Sterling and Vernon E. Curtis, banker, of Grant Park, Ill., were indicted by the Sangamon County Grand Jury for alleged conspiracy and embezzlement in connection with the interest earnings of the State Treasurer's office during the terms of Small and Sterling.

Warrants were issued for the three men indicted.

The investigation hinges on the $10,000,000 loan of state funds to Armour and Company and Swift and Company. This loan, it was said, was made through the Grant Park Bank, an institution operated by the late Senator E. C. Curtis, close friend and political colleague of Governor Small for many years.

* * *

Following the issuing of the warrants, Governor Small claimed constitutional exemption to arrest during his term of office, and intimations were given the court that in case attempt was made to serve the warrants, the Governor might resist arrest, even to the extent of calling out the National Guard to protect himself.

SOVIET COLLAPSE PREDICTED.

The possible downfall of the Russian Soviet Government, unless means are found to prevent the starvation of large numbers of persons because of the crop failure in Russia, is suggested by the Rote Fahne, Soviet organ, which asserts that 25,000,000 Russians are in immediate danger of dying. An official dispatch from Moscow, the newspaper says, verifies reports that the situation is most serious and that death is threatening a majority of the population of the Volga region.

"During the last year the Russian cities have suffered hunger and complete economic disorganization and the destruction of traffic between cities makes the task of feeding now exceedingly difficult," the Rote Fahne declares. The newspaper expresses the fear that the "capitalistic countries will take advantage of the confused conditions to cause new military action against Russia."

An estimated saving of $112,512,628 could be effected in the appropriations of approximately $4,000,000,000 available for Government expenditures during the current fiscal year, President Harding was informed by Charles G. Dawes, Director of the Budget.

Included in the estimate of possible saving, General Dawes said, was the sum of $22,822,113 pertaining to continuous appropriations for building and construction, which would be postponed for expenditure in future years.

Mr. A. D. Lasker, the new head of the Shipping Board, in his first public interview, scored his predecessors as incompetent to the point of criminality.

With authority from President Harding to "yank the lid off the entire shipping situation," Mr. Lasker summoned newspaper correspondents to his office. There he threw on to his desk for the American public figures purporting to show that the Shipping Board, despite its estimate of expenditures totaling $99,518,000, actually "went through" $680,000,000 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

That the Germans have no sympathy with a reign of terror is evident from their lack of response to Maxim Gorky's appeal on behalf of famine stricken Russia. The general attitude appears to be that Germans are in no condition to help anybody, and, if they were, they would not support Bolshevism, which is charged with responsibility for the bad harvest through failure to furnish seeds with materials and discouraging the willing by confiscations.

The Vossische Zeitung only hopes "the Germans will not confuse the Russian people with Bolshevism."

The Lokal Angeiger says:

"We have nothing to give; if we had we would not dare to give it. Perhaps it is better so. The fearful suffering through which the Russians are passing brought on by Bolshevism, must run its course. We must look on from a distance while the orgy plays itself out."

Two hundred Philadelphia policemen, last week, were organized as a mob staging an attack on a jail. The object was to test a new Lachrymatory gas as a means of breaking up a mob. As the mob came on the gas grenades were hurled among them, and in two minutes it had dissolved, while each member hunted for his handkerchief.

The attack was repeated three times, each time with the same result.

The United States has paid $32,688,352 to Great Britain, in full settlement of all transportation claims arising from the war.

The city of Cincinnati last week inaugurated the plan of having city firemen at every engine house, play the hose on children who want a shower bath, each afternoon during the hot spell.

Two hundred convicts in the Western Pennsylvania Penitentiary made a break for liberty after setting fire to several buildings. Eight of the prisoners were wounded before they were forced back to their cells, and buildings valued at $50,000 were destroyed.

Five of the largest and finest steamships in the United States merchant marine, which had been chartered to the United States Mail Steamship Company, were seized by representatives of the United States Shipping Board because of an alleged violation of contract.

The seized vessels, all former German liners, are the George Washington, America, Susquehanna, President Grant and Agamemnon.

Failure of the steamship company to pay rentals which, in the aggregate, up to the time of the seizures, would amount to about $400,000, was given as the principal reason for the board's action by Elmer Schlesinger, its general counsel.

Four other vessels also under charter to the United States Mail Steamship Company, which now are on the high seas, will be taken over by the Shipping Board as soon as they return to American port.

ARTIC EXPEDITION STARTS.

Donald MacMillan, Artic explorer and former chief lieutenant to Peary, has started with a party of six scientists to attempt to map Baffin Land.

His vessel, the Bowdoin, is of the Gloucester fisherman knockabout type, sheathed with ironwood, 87 feet long, with a draft of nine and one-half feet and 115 tons burden. Crude oil engines capable of developing 60-horse power, are included in her equipment, as well as 2,000 fallons of fuel oil and 500 gallons of kerosene. The Bowdoin also carries stores and provisions sufficient to last two years.

According to MacMillan's plans, he intends to reach Baffinland August 25th, and establish a camp south of the entrance to the dangerous Fury and Hecla Strait, where the ships of Captains Parry and Lyon, seekers of the northwest passage, were blocked a century ago.

The location is 160 miles north of the Artic Circle and 700 miles south of Etah, Greenland. It is not far from the point where MacMillan's Circum Arctic Expedition passed the four winters of 1913-14-15 and 16.

During the winter of 1921-22 attempts will be made to explore the coast of Baffinland, and the following summer an effort will be made to penetrate the interior where, according to Eskimo tales, there exists one of the richest and most alluring fields of research in the frozen North.

HOMES AND FARM

GREEN TOMATOES.

After a light frost lift the vines and hang in an out-building or in a cellar, or place large green tomatoes on a shelf in a cellar, and they will ripen in a month or more. Green tomatoes should be gathered after a heavy frost, before the sun strikes the vines.

* * *

Soy.—To four quarts of sliced tomatoes add ten medium-sized peeled and sliced onions, four teaspoonfuls of sugar, a tablespoonful each of ground cloves and cinnamon, a heaped teaspoonful of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of salt and a tablespoonful of mustard powder. Boil slowly until the compound can be easily rubbed through a colander. Reheat, bottle and seal.

* * *

Whole Pickles.—Prick the skin of small tomatoes of even size and put into weak brine for twelve hours. Cook in half and half vinegar and water until a broom splint will pierce them. Drain, pack in cans and cover with a syrup of four teaspoonfuls of sugar, a quart of vinegar, a teaspoonful each of cinnamon, cloves, ginger and pepper, tied loosely in a cheese cloth bag. Boil the syrup until moderately thick and pour over the tomatoes, first turning off the liquor in the bottom of the can. Fill to the brim and seal.

* * *

French Pickles.—Cut a piece from either end of a peck of tomatoes; slice and mix with six sliced onions and a teaspoonful of salt. Drain in twelve hours, and cook about half tender in one-third vinegar and two-thirds water. Now drain through a colander with light pressure. Into three quarts of vinegar put two pounds of brown sugar, half a pound of mustard seed, two tablespoonfuls each of ground allspice and cinnamon, and a scant tablespoonful of pepper. Add the onions and tomatoes; cook fifteen minutes, lifting several times that they may cook evenly and can hot.

* * *

Piccalilli.—Take eight pounds of finely-chopped tomatoes, a large head of cabbage and four onions, chopped. Press and strain through cheese cloth; add three pounds of brown sugar, a quart or more of vinegar, a tablespoonful each of ground cinnamon and cloves, two level tablespoonfuls of salt and pepper if liked. Cool tender, and can when cold.

* * *

Preserves.—Weigh sliced tomatoes, cook in water until quite tender, drain; allow three-quarters of a pound of sugar to a pound of tomatoes. Make a rich syrup with the sugar and a very little water, the juice of two or three lemons and a few slices of peel. Cook the tomatoes in this syrup five minutes, remove the lemon peel, and can.

* * *

To Fry Tomatoes.—Cover the bottom of an iron spider with pickled-pork fat or lard (butter will make them black), dip the slices in flour, and fry brown on both sides, seasoning with salt and pepper, and turning with a pancake shovel. When done, which will take about twenty minutes, place carefully on a platter, dot with bits of butter and sprinkle with sugar.

Mixed Pickle.—For a good mixed white pickle try this receipt: Chop a dozen large green cucumbers, a dozen large onions and a dozen ripe tomatoes. Salt the cucumbers and onions and let them stand one hour. Strain off the juice, add the meaty part of the tomatoes and cover with vinegar. Season with two tablespoonfuls of sugar, two teaspoonfuls of celery seed, one teaspoonful of red pepper. Mix all the ingredients in the preserving kettle, bring to a boil and can and seal hot.

Fried Green Corn.—Cut the tips of the pearls of the ears of corn, then take blunt knife and scrape the rest off the ear. Put three tablespoonfuls of butter and one teaspoonful of good cooking oil in a large skillet and when melted, add the corn and one-half cup of water to six ears of corn, some pepper and some salt. Cook slowly for twenty minutes. Do not thicken, as the corn thickens itself. This is a simple recipe and once tried, it will be found to be delicious.

THE CHURCH AT PINEVILLE.

BY DOLLY GOODWILL.

It was an out-of-the-way place and the people had lost their grip on spiritual things. Some one said they had no "pep." They had all grown luke warm and were content to lounge at home or go visiting on the Sabbath. When they attended divine service they went from a sense of duty and sat glum in the hard seats with a "don't care" look on their faces. Some parents even allowed the children to go fishing on the Sabbath. A new pastor came who was full of "ginger." He made things move. Some declared they had almost forgotten how to sing. He quoted the old saying, "The bird that can sing and won't sing can be made to sing." They realized the trying situation and began to "tune their lyres." Two violins were put in order, also a base viola; then two clarinets and a generous woman gave her dead daughter's piano. It was standing in the parlor unused and the sorrowing mother had only dusted it and cried over it.

The friendliest members canvassed the neighborhood and advertised the good times coming to the parish at Pineville. How it pays to advertise! Careless people forsook their rocking chairs and went to the rural "meetinghouse" to see what was "doing." Bustling women had been active with brooms and mops and made the temple shine with cleanliness. Men took hoes, rakes and scythes and made the lawn and cemetery attractive. The parson brought to them the good old message of "Behold the Lamb of God Who Taketh Away the Sins of the World." Old ardor was revived and old-time religion tasted good! People did not put all the burdens on the pastor, but each did something.

Each talent was exercised. Friendly people on the social committee were busy during the week. Printed slips were in men's pockets, to be distributed at sales, at the mill or raisings. These invitations were welcoming greetings from the church at Pineville to interested neighbors. This rural church became a social center. It became alive because everybody "boosted," aroused the "natives" from that Sabbath apathy that had settled over them like a London fog.

Some author said: "When you lift a man socially, you lift him morally and spiritually." Poor people in shabby clothes were welcomed. Timid strangers were introduced and made to feel at home. The babies were not considered an intrusion.

There was much hand shaking. The minister told them how he liked "folks," for he was like the disciple John—"a man sent from God." The automobiles were consecrated on the Sabbath, for they brought in loads of aged, infirm, and people from a distance. Young people met and cupid often did his work for the Johnnies and Jennies are the same in heart at retired Pineville parish as elsewhere.

In the month of matchless June they celebrated Children's Day. Little tots in white coats recited and sang sweetly. Lads with gentle tones helped the clear voices of young boys are as sweet as meadow larks.

They were alive to patriotism, for on Independence Day they had Fourth of July doings at Pineville parish. Yes, they had speeches, songs and fireworks, and a balloon and dinner. After the busy summer was past they celebrated Old Peoples' Day. The grandfathers and grandmothers wore ye old-time clothes and sang ye old-time way in the once popular fa-sal-la style. I believe our grandsires called that ancient style the "Buckwheat" notes.

The Sabbath school took on new life. Two captains were appointed and secured scholars and it was all like a hive of industry. This transformation may take place in other rural communities if people have a mind to work. It can not be done by the few and the shepherd must be willing to lead the flock. The old Jubilee Camp Meeting hymn says: "Old sheep know how to follow, to follow, But young lambs must learn the way."

BOOKKEEPING OF BABIES SHOWS LARGE WASTE OF INFANT LIFE.

Since 1915 the Federal Government has been able to keep a ledger for the birth-registration area showing profit and loss in terms of infant life and death. The figures for a five-year period are given for eighteen large cities in a brief report, entitled "Infant Mortality in Pittsburgh," which has just been issued by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau.

Of the nine large cities in the birth-registration area since it was established in 1915, Washington, Philadelphia and New York show the most satisfactory progress toward a reduction of rates, though Minneapolis has consistently maintained the lowest rate of any of the nine. In each year of the five-year period, 1916-1920, Pittsburgh lost more babies in proportion to its births than any other of the nine cities.

In Pittsburgh as a whole, in 1920, there was a loss during infancy of one life out of every nine. The rate varied greatly in different parts of the city, the rate in the most unfavorable ward being 157 deaths of every 1,000 births, while in the most favorable ward the rate was only 64 per 1,000.

Nearly one-half the babies who failed to survive died before they were a month old, when deaths are largely due to natal and prenatal causes. It has been clearly demonstrated that such deaths are largely preventable through care and instruction for the mother before the baby is born, and skilled care at and shortly after birth. Nearly one-fourth of the deaths were caused by gastrointestinal diseases. Deaths from these causes occur for the most part in the heat of summer. They can be reduced through instructions to mothers in the proper care and feeding of babies and through civic supervision to insure purity and proper handling of milk supplies.

Milk stations, maternity and baby clinics, and public health nursing service have been established in Pittsburgh. An extension of such services is necessary if the city is to deal effectively with the problem of infant mortality, and if the ledger for the next five years is to show saving in infant life.

CHILD LABOR LAW.

The legal standards adopted by the various states to protect children from the hazards of too early employment are shown by a chart recently issued by the United States Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau.

In all except four states the minimum age for work at least in factories and often in many other employments is placed as high as fourteen years, and seven states have an age minimum of fifteen or sixteen years. Exemptions exist in most of these states, but they apply in many cases to children employed outside school hours or during vacations.

Twenty-nine states have recognized the eight-hour day standard for children under sixteen by prohibiting them from working longer hours in certain occupations, or by extending this prohibition to all gainful employments, usually, however, exempting housework and work on farms. Of the other states, nearly half limit the working hours in the regulated occupations to fifty-four or less a week. The eleven-hour day still exists in two states, with a weekly maximum of sixty hours. Forty-one states have some prohibition of night work applying to children under sixteen, and of these seventeen prohibit such work without exemptions, except in some cases for agricultural pursuits and domestic service.

Eighteen states, including some of the principal industrial states, require a child under sixteen to have a physician's certificate of physical fitness before he can obtain an employment certificate, and ten

THE STATELY PINES.

All boys and girls who have tied suet on the bough of an evergreen tree and watched the birds come and peck off bits of it have noticed that these trees keep their needles throughout the year. These needles are their leaves. No matter how young your children may be, it is possible for them to learn something about the interesting family of pines.

There are three families of pines; those having three needles, the leaves growing in a little bunch; those having two needles and those having five. One way that we know our pines is from this fact, the leaves grow in bunches and these bunches always have a definite number of needles in them, five, three or two. The most common pine of the five-needled family is the White Pine, which is found in many sections of our country. These trees, which grow with straight trunks, are sometimes one hundred and fifty feet high and their branches are covered with bunches of five fine needles, the softest and most delicate of all the species. The Pitch Pine is a well-known member of the three-needled family. It is a rugged-looking tree of from thirty to eighty feet high with coarse and rigid needles. The graceful Red Pine is generally from fifty to ninety feet high and its long straight needles grow in pairs. There are many pine children in the three and two-needled families, but not many in the five-needled one.

Have a little more fun with the pines! Ask Father to buy a blue-print frame, not a large one, but a little one, perhaps 4" x 5". Get some blue-print paper cut to the size of the frame and spread a bundle of needles on the glass, being careful not to break them apart. Place over them a sheet of the blue-print paper, clean side next to the needles, then put on the back of the frame and set it in the direct sunlight so that the sun shines upon the glass side. Leave it there for two or three minutes if the sunshine is very bright, but if it is a partly cloudy day, you may have to leave your frame in the light for ten minutes. Then take the blue-print paper out of the frame and put it, picture side down, in water and leave it there for fifteen or twenty minutes. Now as you look at it, you will see that the impression of the pine needles shows a clear white picture, while the background is blue. If the water in which you wash your picture is green in color, that will show you that you did not leave the picture in the sunlight long enough. A little experience will soon teach you how to get the best results. After taking the picture from the water, place it face down on a clean white blotter and let it dry. Any child can have great fun mounting these pictures on a piece of paper and can use them for gifts or keep them as examples of the different families of pines.

WIT AND WISDOM

WHAT WERE THEY?

Small Girl (entertaining her mother's caller)—"How is your little girl?"

Caller—"I am sorry to say, my dear, that I haven't any little girl."

Small Girl (after a painful pause in conversation)—"How is your little boy?"

Caller—"My dear, I haven't any little boy, either."

Smaller Girl—"Then what are yours?"—
The People's Home Journal.

NOT A SERIOUS ILLNESS.

Father was giving the fair young daughter a lecture about her beau. He exclaimed, "Does he know who pays the light bills? Doesn't he know enough to go home at the right time?"

The daughter replied, "Yes, he knows enough to go, but he was sick last night."

With that the father started in again. "Don't tell me that a big husky fellow like him was sick. What on earth was the matter with him?"

As the fair young daughter started for the door, she sang back, "He has heart trouble."

Johnny—"What was your sister angry with you about?"

Willie—"She sent me to the drugstore to get some cold cream, and I got ice cream. That was the coldest I could get."

AS IT IS DONE IN WASHINGTON.

When J. K. Paulding was Secretary of the navy he wrote to the postmaster of a small village in the South, as follows. "Sir: This department wishes to know how far the Tombigbee river runs up." The answer came back: "It don't. It runs down." The Postmaster General was informed of the affair and failed to see the humor of it. He wrote a letter to the postmaster that said: "Sir: Your appointment as postmaster is hereby revoked. You will turn over the funds, etc., pertaining to your office to your successor." In no wise put out, the postmaster once more took up his pen and the Postmaster General received this: "The revenue for this office for the quarter ending September 30 has been 65 cents; its expenditures, same period, for candles and twine, 85 cents. Please instruct my successor to adjust balance."

Leary: "Still waiting for your ship to come in, eh?"

Weary: "Oh, they've come. Whole fleet of 'em. All hardships."—Tit-Bits.

Alma College

Alma, Michigan

The strongest graduates from American colleges have quite generally been educated in the days when the institution was growing and working out its destinies.

Alma College has always been a College of high standards and achievements. It is now in a period of rapid development. Students are living in an atmosphere of optimism and progress. Climatic conditions are exceptionally attractive, and student life most wholesome.

AN INDISPENSABLE COMMODITY

"Education is the scarcest, and at the same time the most indispensable commodity in the world today."

THERE IS A SHORTAGE OF TEACHERS.

THERE IS A SHORTAGE OF MINISTERS.

THERE IS A SHORTAGE OF PHYSICIANS.

THERE IS A SHORTAGE OF SOCIAL WORKERS.

THERE IS A SHORTAGE OF MANY THOUSANDS OF WORKERS OF EVERY TYPE demanded by the MISSIONARY PROGRAMS of the Christian churches of America.

This shortage is most economically and most expeditiously made up in the Denominational College.

Hanover College now needs but a few thousand dollars to complete the new endowment required to meet her share of this responsibility.

The Presbyterian Church asks individual givers to provide the few thousands which remain to be secured.

A GREAT AND GLORIOUS CALLING.

There must be more ministers to man the churches. Our own Presbyterian Church is one of the few bodies that has more ministers on its roll than it has churches, but this does not change the fact that we have hundreds of churches that are vacant, because so many of our ministers are in educational, or evangelistic work, or in some form of business, or are aged and infirm. More than a hundred ministers are dying every year, and all the rest are growing older, and unless the ministry is being recruited more rapidly than at present, we shall soon be suffering acutely from lack of men for the pulpits.

This shortage has been developed since the breaking out of the war. Young men were called away from college and seminary life. Business of many sorts, with great financial inducements, has been calling young men into worldly activities, away from the ministry. It is not strange that many do not hear the call to the ministry.

But the call is being made, and Christ is making it, and ministers and other Christian friends must help these young men to hear it. Boys and young students must be appealed to, that they may make choice of this sacred office, and may commence, even this fall, to make preparation for it as their life work. It would seem that one such young man might be found in each church, by the combined interest of minister, elders, parents and Sabbath-school teachers. Let there be a determined effort, throughout the Church, to recruit for this great work, the best and brightest and most promising young men who may possibly be found. Christ deserves the best.

It is not claimed that the financial returns in this work are as great as in some other lines of life. But they are sufficient. Ample are the rewards, even from a temporal standpoint. The men who are giving their manhood's very best today are having returns that satisfy them. They are sustained and nourished as they serve the King. As they honor him with their best, he is honoring them. Happier, more contented, better satisfied men are not to be found than are the men who are doing God's work today in the Gospel ministry.

A life outside the ministry is not sure to be a success, by any means. Thousands of men are unsettled, dissatisfied and unsuccessful. Let young men give their hearts and lives to Jesus Christ and his service without reserve, and he will see to it that they are led in safe and sure paths. Let them be willing to be industrious, enterprising and persistent in securing the necessary education, and in making the necessary preparation, and the life of service that will open up before them will be full of golden satisfactions.

There is nothing in all the world that is so great and important as the work of leading souls to Jesus Christ, that they may be saved with his everlasting salvation. Let it be chosen and pursued, and the life will be in the way of accomplishing the greatest achievements that fall within the range of human possibilities.

THE GROWTH OF THE CHURCH.

The total membership of our Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., is 1,692,558, a net increase of 55,443 over last year. At least the figures of the published table as reproduced on the first page, show this net increase. But if we take last year's total, add to it the additions by confession and certificate and restoration, and deduct the losses by death and suspension and dismissal, we find that the total for this year should be 1,712,938, with a net increase of 75,833. It is to be hoped that the new Stated Clerk will be able to inaugurate a system of more accurate statistical book-keeping.

There were added last year by examination 122,231, by certificate 84,858, and by restoration from the suspended roll 19,058, or a total of 219,434. But there were lost by dismissal 63,386, by suspension 61,157 and by death 19,058, a total of 143,601, there being thus shown a net gain of 75,833. But the printed report says the gain is 55,453, and thus it will be officially counted.

There were 43,015 adult baptisms and 46,296 infant baptisms. The Sabbath-school membership is 1,433,292, a gain over last year of 82,032.

There are 9,842 churches, with 9,997 ministers, 45,581 elders, 17,714 deacons, and with 4,650 manses.

For all purposes the sum of $47,036,442 is reported as having been received. For Home Missions, $3,701,369, and for Foreign Missions, $4,200,144 were raised. For congregational and local church expenses the sum of $30,996,123 was expended, the rest of the amount, $16,040,319, being devoted to the various departments of missionary beneficence.

The figures show that it has been, in many ways, a great and encouraging year. Of course much more work might have been done and more money might have been raised and given. But we thank God and take courage, and pray that this coming year may, under God's good blessing, be productive of still greater results.

THE CONGREGATIONALIST COUNCIL.

The Congregationalist, in reviewing the work of the Los Angeles Council, notes first that the editor, having attended most of the meetings of the Council since 1889, is impressed with the importance of changes in its methods and scope.

Prior to 1913 the Councils were held every three years. Since that date every two years. The new constitution adopted in 1913 has unified the missionary and benevolent work of the Church. It has "brought the societies within the jurisdiction of the Council and made its voting membership the predominant voting membership of all the societies."

A result is that the Council has become "self-conscious without becoming conceited, strong but not domineering, compact but still elastic, forward-looking but not radical."

Special attention was given to the subject of education. Formerly the colleges and seminaries, as well as the societies, were practically outside the circle of the Council's interests. It could resolve about them, but it had no official relation to them. Triennium after triennium, it and they went their respective ways, their orbits seldom intersecting.

One result of unification is that whereas formerly delegates attended the meeting of the society in which they were especially interested and then left, now they stay through.

The policy of holding meetings in all parts of the land is approved. There were predictions that a meeting as far west as Los Angeles would be ill balanced and a failure, but the editor's judgment is that "though the delegations from the states between the Hudson and the Mississippi were comparatively small and from the states east of the Hudson still smaller, the Council was not stampeded by any one section of the country or in the interests of any one candidate or cause."

Touching the Congregational World Movement, which is like our New Era Movement, we read that the Council remedied whatever maladjustments had come to exist in the relations of the Congregational World Movement to other agencies by incorporating it into the Commission on Missions.

As in our Assembly, deep interest was felt in the election of a moderator and of a clerk to take the place of Dr. Herring, who had a place in the work and heart of the Church like that long held in our Church by Dr. Roberts. The editor recorded that there was no politics in the elections; that Dr. William E. Barton was a fine moderator, and that "the election of Dr. Charles E. Burton to the secretaryship of the Council, its highest gift and its most important office, revealed as much the guiding of God as the hand of man."

ZIONISM.

A comparatively small proportion of Jews, at least in this country, believe in the re-establishment of the Jewish nation in Palestine as hoped for by Zionists. Many leading rabbis and Jewish laymen of high standing oppose it. Henry Morgenthau, former U. S. ambassador to Turkey, says: "Zionism is a surrender, not a solution. It is the most stupendous fallacy in human history. I assert that it is wrong in principle, and impossible of realization; that it is unsound in its economics, fantastic in its policies, and sterile in its spiritual ideals." This is the statement of a Jew.

Others point out that Great Britain, which has a mandate for Palestine, will not allow an independent state. The Zionists cherish the hope of an autonomous state, but England never promised this. It views with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people. This is like saying, "The government views with favor the establishment of national headquarters of your religious sect." Great Britain did not intend and does not now plan ever to relinquish Palestine to the Jews. The Suez Canal is too near, that jugular vein of the empire.

Others, however, who are not classed as Zionists would be glad to see a Jewish state established as a refuge for Jews in Turkey and other lands where they are persecuted.

Zionism bases its hope on the literal interpretation of Old Testament prophecies. The sufferings of large numbers of Jews in Russia and Poland gave it impetus. Palestine seemed to offer a promised land of safety and peace. But Mr Morgenthau is sure that such hopes are vain and disillusionment certain.

Palestine is too small and too poor to support a large population. Arabs already there are not willing to yield the land to others. Moslems will make persecution life even in Palestine. If a Zionist state were established independent of all other governments, it would lead to great anti-Semitic troubles in other countries. Where Jews are already unwelcome, pressure would be brought to bear upon them through persecution to force them to migrate to Palestine.

SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIANS.

We have received a copy of the Minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South, from the Stated Clerk, Rev. Thomas H. Law, D.D., of Spartanburg, S. C. It has been a good year with the Southern Church, which received 24,369 members on examination and 21,889 on certificate, with a total of 397,058, the largest number yet, in all three points. There were 11,892 adult and 7,210 infant baptisms, with 370,840 in the Sabbath schools. For all purposes, $12,124,891 was raised, of which $2,557,002 was for pastors' salaries and $3,673,657 was for congregational expenses, the rest being for missions and other benevolences. There are 2,026 ministers and 3,475 churches.

KEEPING UP THE ASSAULT.

In the "fifty years ago" department of the Commercial-Tribune of this city it comes to light that, at that date the "liberal" element was as zealously determined to destroy the Sunday laws and permit unrestricted Sabbath desecration as they are today. In order to the general welfare and public peace and quiet, this element must simply be held in check. It seems unfortunate that in today's daily paper a Jewish gentleman of this city is advertised as prominently connected with a movement to compel the gates of Mt. Vernon, near Washington City, to be opened to the public on Sunday. This would compel the running of the pleasure steamer on the Sabbath, and the labor of care-takers at the home for seven days of the week. The Jewish people, and others, would be held in higher esteem if they were content to fall in with wholesome restrictions, and not be so determined in their assaults on the Christian Sabbath, and the good laws of the land for a weekly rest-day.

HERESY HUNTING.

Dr. T. T. Martin, president of the Southern Baptist Convention, paid his respects in the opening sermon to various fads and phrases of liberal religions. One of his points was: "We are living in a time when he who contends for the faith is jeered at as a heresy hunter, but no one ever sneers at a heresy hunter except him who holds heresy that needs to be hunted, or who, for advantage, desires to cover up and protect the heresy of another. Only those object to contending for the faith who have no faith worth contending for."

He also said: "The modernists are trying to get rid of the supernatural everywhere. The Bible is pre-eminently a book of God. It declares that God made the heavens and the earth. The battle for vital Christianity is between those who believe in the spiritual creation of the world and the spiritual government of it and those who believe in materialistic forces.

"Suppose all the world came out of a handful of protoplasm, who made the protoplasm and who put all the potentialities into the protoplasm that made the world? The materialistic philosopher gets God so far back that the ordinary man does not see him, and that is what they are after.

"The sanest philosophy is that there is one great Creator who made the heavens and the earth, who made the minds and souls of people, and that the same spiritual Creator is the spiritual governor."

KEEPING GOD'S COMMANDMENTS.

The testimony and the admissions in the Stillman case, which has been served up as a poison in the courts and papers for this season, have been so morally hideous that every one could see the necessity for this man to retire from the presidency of the great New York bank of which he had been the head. People do not feel that an institution, however great its capital, is safe under such a person. Mr. Roger Babson, in commenting on this case recently, warned his clients against doing business with institutions directed by men whose want of religion is so marked as to allow them to trifle with the great trusts of life. He who will not respect his marriage vows can not be trusted in a financial transaction. We are bound to feel instinctively that he who is a breaker of the Seventh Commandment would break the eighth, or even the sixth, if he felt it to be to his temporary advantage. Unclean men are not safe men.

Religion is the most practical and forceful thing in all the world. The grace of God in the hearts of men brings about changes for good that nothing else can accomplish. The only solution of world problems today lies in the general adoption and application of Christian principles.

From various quarters come complaints of the shortage of ministers and candidates for the ministry. Papers of several denominations comment on "the calling of pastors from active church work to secretarial offices." One editor, after visiting his denominational headquarters, says: "I count by the dozen, strong, efficient preachers at desks all over the establishment filling secretarial positions. They have robbed the pastorate of hundreds of our ablest preachers, to fill these positions which ought to be filled by laymen. They are engaged in raising, or administering money for church purposes. We could better afford to do without the money than to lose these men from the pastoral work."

We have received many expressions of indignation, protests and warnings, in reference to the "Centennial University of Denver, Col.," only two of which, as being in a sense official, we have printed. Those to whom the degrees were offered need not be troubled. One minister to whom a degree was offered says, "Do not mention my name, to bring me further shame." We will not as he had no notion of accepting. A degree from a reputable college, in recognition of one's worth and standing, is to be appreciated. Received otherwise it is no help nor honor.

Every few days some group of Irish-Catholic malcontents in the United States issues an appeal to the Senate to recognize the "Irish Republic," which has no existence, or sends word to Great Britain that "the people of America" insist on the absolute independence of Ireland. Then some money is raised for the "starving children" of Kilkenny or Kerry, and it helps carry on the rebellion in South Ireland. Of course it may not be easy to stop such antics, but it is to be hoped they may not be carried far enough to threaten the friendship between this country and Great Britain. We are almost as wearied of these hyphenated Irish as of the same sort of Germans. It is to be presumed that Great Britain knows, from its own experiences, that the performances of the Catholic Irish in this country are not to be taken too seriously, however unpleasant they may be.

When the devil is particularly anxious to succeed, as for instance in fighting prohibition or Sabbath observance, he thinks he is much surer to succeed if he can get some one to help him who is supposed to be good and respectable. If he can get some one, for instance, who has been at some time a minister, even if he is now a renegade, to advocate liquor drinking or favor Sabbath desecration, he is filled with delight, and introduces this renegade as if he were the holiest and best man in the profession. It is in reality a great compliment the devil thus pays to good ministers, when he does so much honor to even the unworthy specimens whom he can draft into his service, and transforms them into angels of light.

There is one thing about these so-called "blue laws," which is simply another name for the Christian conception or observance of the Sabbath, and that is, you never hear a Christian man opposing them, or speaking in favor of Sabbath desecration. If a man talks in favor of Sabbath desecration you know he is not a Christian, just as if one speaks against the Seventh Commandment, condoning the sin of adultery, you are compelled to assume that he is not a good man.

It seems strange that the United States Senate does not speedily pass the House bill preventing the manufacture and sale of beer on physicians' prescriptions, thus opening up the way for the return of the beer saloon. It could be effective in only nine states at the worst, but the worst should not be permitted even in those unprotected states. Reputable physicians are utterly opposed to such a provision.

The Western Recorder says that "the crux of the discussions in the Northern Baptist Convention was an effort to sidestep committal to the fundamentals of Christian faith. It was the effort of the small minority, though it is a potent group."

A contemporary thinks many ministers fail because they have to do too many things. It says: "The present-day preacher is a multifarious person whose curse is scatteration. There was a day, and there were circumstances when the minister was allowed to concentrate on the most important duty (preaching), but no longer may we call the minister the preacher, for this is reckoned among the least of his tasks. He is the organizer, the executive, the parish visitor, the debt-raiser, the church builder, the committee chairman, the marrier, the buyer, the baptizer, the lecturer, the talker, the speech maker, the janitor perhaps, but there is no assumption that he is far excellence the preacher." There is truth in this, but it should be added that with all these duties, the majority of preachers do find time to study and do preach sermons that are worth hearing and accomplish good.

Christ is the only hope of our nation and of our world. Christ must be believed in or the soul is lost. It is Christ or death for the individual. It is Christ or destruction for a nation or the world.

THE LIFE BROKEN.

BY REV. ARTHUR C. LUDLOW, D.D.

Man lives by loving, not by being loved;
By losing life true character is proved.
To bear a cross, with its attending sting,
May wholesome be to those who, bearing, sing.

Cathedral windows, beautiful and bright,
Resplendent glow, with day's increasing
light,

Because mosaics, of artistic skill,
Are bits of broken glass, arranged at will.

So God in wisdom glorifies the broken,
Each thrust into the heart, of love a token,
Instead of anger, or of wrath divine;
Perfection, not destruction, his design.

AN OLD TESTAMENT WONDER.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

We will never cease to wonder at the wonderful works of God. One of his names is "Wonderful" (Isa. 9:6).

This miracle recorded in the sixth chapter of second Kings is one of the Old Testament wonders.

The King of Syria was bent on capturing Elisha, for he held the key to the situation in Israel. Through his wireless communications with high heaven he was able to give Israel's King the latest information so that he repeatedly saved himself from the traps set for him.

"Therefore, the heart of the King of Syria was sore troubled over this thing; and he called his servants together, and said unto them, Will ye not show me which of us is for the King of Israel?
And one of his servants said, None, my Lord, O King, but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel, telleth the King of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber."

Immediately a large Syrian army was ordered to go and capture Elisha. It was learned that he was in Dotham. The army surrounded Dotham by night.

"And when the servant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city both with horses and chariots. And his servant said unto him, "Alas, my master, how shall we do?"

There it is, cringing fear in the presence of danger! How like poor, human nature!
Elisha's servant was alarmed, terrified at the sight of the immense Syrian army. He was defenseless, like all the other inhabitants of the town and was at his wits' end,

Now watch Elisha!

"Fear not," he said, "for they that be with us are more than they that be with them."

Heroic Elisha! Faith-filled Elisha!
Calm, strong soldier-prophet! For Elisha was in league with Omnipotence and knew it. Elisha was on good terms with God.
He had access to all the resources of heaven and earth. Elisha felt like Jesus when, under arrest in the Garden of Gethsemane, he said to Peter: "Thinkest thou that I can not pray to my Father, and he shall presently give me more than twelve legions of angels?" (Matt. 26: 53.)

Elisha, like our Savior, was fortified with impregnable bulwarks of divine power and ready for any emergency.

And why can not God's people always feel equally confident because equally fortified? We can just as truly say today:
"Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Then let us be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. It may be just as truly said of us as of the victors led by Deborah: "They fought from heaven; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera" (Judges 5: 20.).

The trouble is the Devil cuts the sinews of many a Christian's strength. Over-much devotion to the world! Too little prayer! Many a Christian's spiritual garden is over-run with weeds. "The cares of the world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the Word and it becomes un-fruitful" (Matt 13: 22).

But the discouraged servant, the weakened church, the barren spiritual garden can be prayed for, thank God. That was Elisha's plan: "And Elisha prayed, and said, Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see. And the Lord opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire, round about Elisha."
(II Kings 6: 17).

What a wonder and yet not a wonder!
Strictly in accord with God's regular habit of dealing with men. He answers prayer.
He listens to the cry of the needy, the weak, the penitent. He answers the prayer of the prophet that his servant's eyes may be illumined. Strange that we do not count on him more! Strange that we do not draw more liberally on his illimitable stores of spiritual power! Listen to an illustration of the weakness and unbelief of men and women which is, alas, duplicated in the church of today: "Then came the disciples to Jesus apart and said, Why could not we cast him out? And Jesus said unto them, Because of your unbelief:
for verily I say unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. Howbeit this kind goeth not out but by prayer and by fastings." (Matt. 17: 19-21.)

"The mountains were full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha!" Omnipotent help ever ready to answer the faith-filled prayer! Why should any church be spiritually dead? Why any lack of workers in the world-wide vineyard?
Let the following facts answer which have been sent out by the Great Commission
Prayer League:

"A Sabbath-school teacher, because no conversions had occurred in her class of sixteen young men, resigned, thinking herself to blame or unfitted for the great work. Seeing the unflagging interest of her pupils, neither superintendent nor pastor would consent to it. In her anxiety she prayed more earnestly for the Holy Spirit's help.

"One day while thus pleading, she was so strongly moved to go and see a certain one at his home, that she at once yielded, and in that home parlor she so told her anxiety that when prayer was suggested the pupil kneeled with her and soon yielded to Christ and was most happily converted. Thus encouraged she visited another, and another in turn, as opportunity opened, till she saw the whole sixteen won to Christ and added to the Church.

"As vacancies occurred in her class others joined, who were often converted.
These pupils passing out into the business world were urged by her to write annually a letter as to their Christian life, till finally she was receiving, as years rolled on, over two hundred letters from missionaries, lawyers, mechanics, farmers, physicians and others from various parts of the world, still busy in pulpit, or Sabbath school, or other church work.

"More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of,

Therefore let thy voice rise, like a fountain, for me night and day;

For what are men better than sheep and goats

That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer

Both for themselves and those that call them friend?

For so is the whole round world bound
By golden chains around the throne of God."

Colorado Springs, Col.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

There are some things fundamental in the kingdom of God. I do not mean in doctrine so much as in what it takes to make one a real missionary. I have found that the early missionaries, whether they went to the foreign field or the home, were men who had a passion that I do not find in many of our missionaries today. We have been putting emphasis upon plans and methods, and surveys, and schools, and maybe we have forgotten that it is the Spirit that quickeneth after all. I do not decry methods, plans or schools; rather do I advocate them; but I would deplore the day when these should be substituted for the real spirit of the work.

Some are proposing new plans, and changes in present plans, and, in many cases, it is evident we must make some changes, because what was useful a few years ago will not be so, maybe, today. One thing we must not forget is, that the same Truth must be given, no matter what method we may employ.
That is essential, and I have about reached the conclusion that almost any method will do if we have the proper spirit. Life will organize itself, but we can not create life by organization, and here seems to be one seat of our trouble.

We are not making the progress that we desire, and we begin to examine our plans and methods, rather than to examine the spirit with which we go to our work. We may need a new furnace to heat the plant, but nine times out of the ten we need more coal in the fire box.

I know there is truth in the statement that improved methods will improve the spirit, and yet, at the same time, it is much more true that the right spirit will improve the method, and put life into our dead systems.
I have re-read the story of Brainerd lately, and this one passage in his story stirred me greatly and is, in part, responsible for these thoughts. He said: "I care not how or where I live or what hardships I go through, so that I but gain souls to Christ." John Mason Pock said: "It is my desire to live, to labor, to die as a kind of pioneer in advancing the Gospel. I feel a most heavenly joy when my heart is engaged in this work." J. L. Dyer said: "My constant prayer was that God would make me useful to every house." We are their spiritual children, but how far we have departed from the spirit that made them martyrs and heroes of the cross? They counted their lives not dear unto themselves if by any means they might win some men and women to Christ. They were of the apostolic school, and they moved men and antions by their work and their words.

Now if we will couple our plans on to their spirit, what mighty things will be done. It seems to me that we have the greatest opportunity now to make the world see Christ that we have had in years, and it will be a great misfortune if we do not take advantage of it.

We have a great piece of machinery. I have never seen better. Now let us oil it up and see that the bands are on and all bolts and taps are in their places, and then pull the throttle wide open and see what will come to pass.

The harvest is ripe, and the grain is ready for the garner. Let us see that the summer does not pass with men and women not saved because we failed to do our part.

This is the dry season of all our Boards.
Churches should keep in mind the exhortation which I saw in a church calendar a few weeks ago: "Let our people remember that bills must be paid and salaries met in summer just as in winter, and if you are going away for the summer, pay your subscription before you leave." Of course it was put in somewhat more courteous language than this, but the meaning was the same. The Boards of the Church could well urge people to pay up their subscription or their pledge before they go away for the summer, as our bills must be met in summer as well as in winter.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

The Children's Church, which the Fourth Church has been conducting in the chapel at the same hour with the service in the auditorium, with Dr. Van Nuys, the associate pastor, in charge, is to have a pipe organ. Dr. Paul Marquis has presented the church with an organ in memory of his wife. It is now being installed in the chapel and will be ready for use at the resumption of the special services for the children in the fall. The two services have been consolidated during the vacation season, with Dr. Van Nuys preaching.

Rev. Emory W. Luccock, a graduate of McCormick Theological Seminary of this year, will sail from Vancouver on Aug. 18th for China. Mr. Luccock is the son of Dr. George N. Luccock, student-pastor at Wooster College and former pastor of the Oak Park First Church. During his seminary course Mr. Luccock acted as assistant to Dr. Van Der Meulen, then pastor of the Oak Park First Church, and under Dr. Vale, the present pastor. Mr. Luccock was ordained in the Oak Park Church immediately upon his graduation at McCormick. He will go to Nanking, China, for a year's schooling in the Chinese language, and then to Hunan, where he will take up the work as a missionary. He still maintains his membership in Chicago Presbytery.

Dr. William Evans, formerly a teacher in the Moody Bible Institute, was the preacher at Buena Memorial Church on July 24th. Dr. W. Irving Carroll, of Marshall, Tex., at one time pastor of the Washington-Compton Church of St. Louis, occupied the pulpit on the 31st. Dr. Hepburn, the pastor, is visiting his parents in Hopkins, Mo., and will go on from there to Association Camp, in Colorado.

Rev. J. W. Findley, brother of Rev. S. W. Findley, pastor of Morgan Park, and field secretary for Lafayette College, preached for the Hyde Park Church July 24th.

Rev. Prof. Stanley M. Hunter and Dr. Henry S. Brown have been recent preachers at the Edgewater Church.

The following ministers are present patients in the Presbyterial Hospital: Willis Weaver, of Houston, Tex.; E. R. Clark, of Schoolcraft, Mich.; A. E. Boyd, of Storm Lake, Ia.; Lorin H. King, of Jalapa, Mexico; also, Mrs. Dr. Parley Zartman, of Winona Lake, Ind.

CLEVELAND LETTER.

BY REV. GEORGE A. MACKINTOSH, D.D.

Sabbath, July 24, was observed as Anniversary Day by most of our churches, in celebration of 125 years of Cleveland's life. Most of the pastors either preached special sermons or referred in some way to the event. Dr. Adelbert P. Higley, pastor of Calvary Church, returned from the East, where he is spending his vacation, to preach a special commemorative sermon. The churches of Cleveland are regarded by the leaders as in a prosperous condition. During the past ten years the population of Cleveland increased 51 per cent, but the Protestant church membership increased during the same period 64½ per cent and contributions increased 112 per cent. Two hundred and ninety-two Protestant churches contributed for all purposes last year $2,204,785. During the past 125 years, the emphasis in church work has been along lines of strengthening the denominational spirit and organization, but the emphasis has changed, and in the future will be along lines of building up the spirit of unity and co-operation.

The Federated Churches organization, that is each year growing more influential in the church life of the city, has this week issued a ringing challenge to its constituent churches. The following goals are given: Trained workers in every church enlisted and prepared for the purpose of winning men and women to Christ and twenty thousand new members added to our churches by next Easter. The slogan of the campaign will be: "Every pastor his own evangelist; every church a recruiting station for Christian discipleship; every church member a personal worker; every church service an effort and opportunity to win others to Christ." To accomplish this a great many plans are proposed, to be worked out this fall and winter.

The death of a prominent member of the Old Stone Church, Mr. James H. Cogswell, brought Dr. Meldrum back to the city from Gloucester, Mass., where he was the guest of one of his members. Mr. Cogswell had been a member of the Old Stone for over half a century. Dr. Meldrum went from here to Mansfield, O., to visit his daughter. He will spend part of August at his old home at Goderich, Canada, where his mother died several years ago.

The National Convention of the Young People's Union of the U. P. Church was in session at the Old Stone Church last week. Many prominent leaders of the Church have been on the program. Rev. J. Knox Montgomery, D.D., president of Muskingum College, filled the pulpit of the Old Stone Church last Sabbath morning.

Dr. Alexander McGaffin, one of the pastors of the Church of the Covenant, has been sick in the East for several months while his wife has had a serious operation. They have recently been able to go to their summer home at Lakeside, N. J. Dr. Stephen has been preaching during the summer, but will, after the August communion, take a prolonged vacation.

Rev. L. L. Strock, D.D., of Marion, O., was the supply at the vacant Boulevard Church last Sabbath.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

The Pilgrim Tercentenary is attracting a multitude from New York and vicinity, many being descendants of the men and women who made Plymouth Rock the cornerstone of this great country of ours. President Harding and Vice-President Coolidge with other notables joined in the great festival procession and witnessed the pageant on Aug. 1. It is refreshing to note the expressions of approval of the Pilgrims and Puritans by people and press so ready to sneer, at times, at the rock-ribbed religion and alleged "blue laws" of the sturdy folk who breasted wind and wave for the sake of conscience and the honor of God.

It is indeed disheartening to observe how little attention is paid to the Sabbath by the people of New York. To see the crowds hurrying to the excursion boats and trains Sabbath morning, hundreds and thousands, young and old, one almost wonders whether there are any people left to attend the churches. But while so many are on pleasure bent, there are many others who are not only in church on the Sabbath, but in the tents erected for evangelistic work and on the streets preaching and hearing the everlasting Gospel of the Son of God.

It is gratifying to note that those who are converted in these tent and street meetings are quickly trained in many instances to "carry on" the Good News. The National Bible Institute has at work in the Bronx Charles Horn, Jr., converted at an outdoor meeting several seasons ago. Monday mornings at the Bible Teachers' Training School, conferences are held with reports of the evangelistic meetings and prayers for their increasing success. Another tent of the New York Evangelistic Committee was erected at 186th Street and St. Nicholas Avenue on ground owned by the Fort George Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Lyman R. Hartley is pastor. The tent will be known as the Gospel Tent Emmanuel. Rev. Charles H. Winter, a widely-known evangelist, will be in charge.

Dr. Robert E. Speer continues to be the summer preacher at the Fifth Avenue Church. Dr. Speer, who is one of the secretaries of the Board of Foreign Missions, together with Mr. Russell Carter, assistant treasurer of the Board, and Mr. Henry H. Wells, 2nd, of the class of 1921, Princeton University, will, before long, spend three months in India, and then go on to Persia to consider the re-establishment of the work in Urumia, Resht and other stations. Dr. Speer visited Persia in 1896-7. This expedition will in part pay its own expenses. On June 9, Mr. J. M. Patterson, Southern District secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, and Rev. W. H. Hudnut, D.D., and wife, of Youngstown, O., started for a visit to the missions in West Africa and Syria.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

The First Church of Pontiac had an interesting summer communion service, receiving twenty-two persons, seven of them being on confession. The ages of those received on confession ranged from six to seventy-two years. One entire family, father, mother and two boys, were received. This church is still waiting until the business outlook is more promising, to complete the fine building that has been planned. At present the large congregation is worshipping in the basement, which is intended for the institutional work of the church.

The pastor of our Italian Church in Detroit, Rev. G. Buggelli, has been honored by King Victor Emmanuel III by being created a "Knight of the Order of the Crown of Italy." "He is the first Italian evangelical minister to receive this honor." He is still a citizen of the Kingdom of Italy.

The Presbytery of Detroit recently passed some deservedly high resolutions of praise for Dr. William T. Jaquess, who has resigned the office of executive secretary of Church Extension. He will probably remain in Detroit, where several offers of important positions have been extended. The committee on securing his successor have some good men in view, but no decision has been reached so far. It will need a man with an unusual combination of talents.

Michigan is exceptionally fortunate in having comparatively few vacant pulpits. This is due partly to the desirability of residence in Michigan and partly to the energetic work of presbyterial committees. The only important vacancy in Detroit Presbytery is that of Central Church, from which Dr. Hugh Jack has just been dismissed. That is a difficult field, a down-town church, with a congregation gathered from every part of the city, and even from Windsor, Canada. It was long known as the Scotch Church, and it retains many of the traditions of that history. It has a good building and is partially endowed.

As we read the church notices in the Saturday papers, it is quite evident that the majority of pastors are away on their vacations, but, as a rule, the pulpits are supplied for the morning service at least, and many of them for both services. Fortunately we have plenty of good supply material in the ranks of the presbytery.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

In this region we are greatly concerned in the death of President S. C. Black, D.D., of Washington and Jefferson College. There is a special sadness in this event, since only a few weeks ago he had married, and was on his wedding tour when fatally stricken.

The Fourth Church, Trenton, N. J., is much beyond our neighborhood, but since its last pastor, Rev. Dr. Curry, now called to Philadelphia, came from Parnassus, our neighbor, we note with interest that this church has called as his successor Rev. Gill R. Wilson, assistant pastor of the First Church, Parkersburg, W. Va.

So the wise men no longer always come from the East, for Philadelphia appreciates Western Pennsylvania in Drs. Curry, McKelvey and McConkey; but now Grove City, which recently gave up Dr. McConkey, has called from the Pottsville First Church, Rev. C. H. Williamson.

As a sometime neighbor, being pastor of the Avalon Church, one of our delightful suburbs, we follow Rev. Frank Graustaff, D.D., in his call to the Lane Seminary Chair of Homiletics and Apologetics. We know he has the gifts and graces to be of large usefulness in such a chair.

In these torrid days there is little attraction in profound reading. But there is a great attraction even now in the words of writers who are concerned with the great vital principles and solutions of great problems. So let us carry out on the front porch the last issue of Harper's Monthly, and read and talk over the views of Edward S. Martin in "The Easy Chair." Stop for a moment, and some of my older readers will recall their delight in youth in the charm with which George William Curtis conducted that section of the magazine. Mr. Howells tried to give it interest by lucubrations on novelists and minor topics, but Mr. Howells lacked a certain energy of moral thought, a breadth of vision which Mr. Curtis had. If there is a library near, obtain some of the old copies and read again those monthly sketches, those gentle discourses of the scholar and statesman, whose style could range from "Prue and I" to the editorials of Harper's Weekly, criticisms of life, poetry, literature, society, marked by a culture and richness which made those articles fine examples of composition. They ranged from grave to gay, and though refined and often dainty in touch, you believed there was an iron hand beneath the velvet glove. Of his remarkable work and influence as editor of the Weekly I shall not speak. He believed morality and politics should never be divorced. To him statesmanship rested on truth and divine laws, and it was his refusal to support the candidacy of Mr. Blaine, after the publication of certain letters, that led the Harpers, who feared a loss of subscribers, to ask his resignation. And now Edward S. Martin follows where he so interestingly led. He, too, seems to see the ray of moral light in the prism of literature and government. Commenting upon a letter signed by seventeen English persons of considerable religious, social and political importance, headed by Canon Barnes of Westminster, Lady Balfour, Principal L. P. Jacks, of Oxford, and others, and which discusses somewhat sadly the declining force of our civilization, Mr. Martin, while agreeing in a measure with their premises, takes exception to their suggested remedy. He says: "The new structure of international relations must provide for the world as a whole. The watchword of it must be, 'Live and let live,' but its basis can only be religion." And then he calls attention, approvingly, to a comment by a periodical called The Villager, evidently a British magazine, which says: "We have here this letter signed by the Canon of Westminster, and by Dr. Jacks, the editor of The Hibbert Journal. In the whole course of that letter God finds no place. In every line of that letter man's duty to man is stressed, but there is no line that suggests man has a duty to God. We do not speak as a pious person would, merely missing the name of God from a sober document intending reform. It is the sense of God we think of; you may call it by any name you please, but we mean that part of man's relation on which he must concentrate his best endeavors before he can expect his relation to his fellow men to be anything but ugly." Then showing how Ghandi and Bolshevism can offer no progress. Mr. Martin says: "The sense of God is religion, and at the bottom it is religion that must save our civilization and keep it going." How surely the deeper thinker swings round to the first and great commandment of the law to reach the second, and how surely the answer to the first question of the Shorter Catechism is not only religious, but philosophical, as Carlyle realized. After all, regeneration precedes both life and morality. We must be born again to see the kingdom of God, and it is only the new-born and restored heart that is led to the highest service for his fellow men. You may get Burtons and Franklins and Pearys, by sheer love of adventure, but you do not create Livingstones and Patons and Moffatts and Corbets except by regeneration.

Then turn over the pages of the same magazine, and glance at some thoughts expressed by the late John Burroughs, who was not content to be an observer of birds and insects, and decried a reputation as philosopher and metaphysician, without the proper ability. Poor John Burroughs, at times misled by science falsely so-called, he had not the logical ability to see that Design implies a Designer; that law in Nature is significant of a Mind as great as our own; and so he talks of God as It, and discarding Darwin's evolution, and Professor Osborne's theories, and realizing that M. Fabre saw deeper into the natural existence, must yield to the idea that chance governs all. Speaking of the difference between men and horses, Burroughs says: "This difference we owe to some Power, or, shall I say, to the chance working of a multitude of powers that are beyond our ken? That some Being willed it—no; yet it was in some way provided for in the constitution of the world." Either Burroughs was ignorant of the meaning and implication of words, or he was sophistical, and, like Tallevrand, used language to conceal thought. May we not ask, What is a power, or how can a multitude of powers explain the mental and moral difference so that a man is of more value than a sheep? To say it is "beyond our ken" is not in point. Why, if he claims there is a constitution of the world, in which remarkable differences are provided (mark that word "provided"), must we say no Being willed it? Poor Burroughs is hoist with his own petard. If he claims It provided such a constitution and such a working, shall we not use a term more logical, more satisfying to our intelligence, and say that a Being, a Mind, provided and arranged? Theism is more satisfactory to a trained mind than atheism. It is only the fool who says in his heart, "there is no God." And you need not wonder that while Christianity in many of its truths swims far out beyond our knowledge, further than Einstein's theories of time and space, and that now, as in Job's time, man must realize that we can not by searching find out God, the Christian scheme, take it by and large, is the clearest theory, the most satisfactory statement of the universe, and of man, nature and spiritual relationships, the world has ever gained. Bacon was right in avowing a preference to accept all mysteries, rather than believe that Nature had not behind it a Creator and Governor and Mind, and was the product of chance. So on the front porch we muse, and believe that yonder fruit tree is designed by a wise and loving God; those rose-tinted clouds obey a divine will, and, nearer by, the intelligent friend is made in the image of God. And there, also, it is cheering to learn, from one who sits in the Easy Chair, that the old laws of progress still are unshaken, that God is over all, and there is a balm in Gilead, and even our torn and scarred and tottering civilization can be healed and take up its bed and walk. Locksley Hall is poor poetry, unless God is in Christ saving the world.

THE CHINA BIBLE UNION.

As one connected with the earliest origin of the Bible Union of China, I can affirm that neither Dr. Thomas nor Mr. Trumbull had any part in, or direct influence upon, the organization of the Union. It would undoubtedly have come into being had neither of them visited China. Responsibility for it rests solely upon China missionaries, the Presbyterian share being at least as large as that of any other denomination.

A secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has sent to the field copies of his correspondence with and regarding Dr. Thomas, in which either the names of missionaries concerned or retraction of the statement by Dr. Thomas is demanded. The same course was used some years since in the case of Dr. Wilbur Chapman, after his visit to China, the result of the pressure being a statement by him that his reference was not to Presbyterian missionaries.

However, it is now a fact as true as it is unfortunate, that there are missionaries of our own Presbyterian Board who can not, or at least do not, stand for what the Bible Union statement regards as essential, and which is in accord with the Standards of our Church. This is quite distinct from saying that there are those unwilling to join the Union. Varied reasons may prevent a missionary from taking this step, and non-membership in the Union does not necessarily mean disapproval of its statements.

The members of the Union are not "heresy hunters," but are convinced that the churches in the home lands must frankly face the issue whether radical, or liberal, theology is to have free course in the Chinese Christian Church, or whether the conservative forces are to make a united stand for the Word as bequeathed by the apostolic Church. This is the whole issue and the Chinese Church is the strategic point. If the matter is pressed and it appears to conform to the Lord's interests to do so, names such as were demanded of Dr. Thomas can and will be given.

The membership of the Union some time since exceeded one thousand, and is still increasing, nearly all being Protestant missionaries of China.

* * *

1. It had a spontaneous origin. Its originators, though previously alive to the need, had not, a fortnight before its organization, any idea of such a thing taking place. Some emerging later as leaders had no part in its start.

2. The source of the idea was not outside the China missionary body. It was not evolved by or in the interests of any special religious theory or type of theology.

3. Its purpose is to erect a banner about which those who stand for the Word of God as bequeathed by the apostolic church may rally and find a medium of expression and action.

4. It leaves to those who do not join, the responsibility of the reasons for their position.

5. It has no motives other than those clearly stated in its official literature.

6. It exists chiefly for the sake of the Chinese Church: (1) To testify to the confidence, within the missionary body, in the Bible as the trustworthy Word of God; (2) to confirm the faith of Chinese Christians in the Scriptures and warn them of errors whose import may not yet be realized; (3) to assist them to believe, to study, to love, to understand and to obey the Bible.

7. It is not a creator of division; it simply refrains from refusing to recognize existing division. The verdict that Smith died by violence does not mean that the coroner killed him. The situation in the China missionary body is just one with that in the church in the home lands. In both cases, causes and effects are identical.

8. It knows that true outward union is impossible without inward unity, and that union of believers is not the last word in Christ's religion. Jesus said: "That they may be one, even as we are one." Getting closer to men ceases to be a duty when it means getting further from God. It all hinges on what is God's will.

9. It is not an attempt to "steady the ark," but it knows that a discredited ark is powerless. We can not alter the sun's power, but we can prevent men from receiving much of the sun's benefits. To try to buttress the Bible is one thing; to seek to maintain the influence of the Bible in men's lives is another. The Bible's attitude toward men is constant; our concern is for men's attitude toward the Bible.

10. Its members feel that they stand with one who said at Worms, "I can not do otherwise; God help me," and desire, however painful the duty may be to themselves or to others, or at whatever personal cost, "to serve God rather than play safe," to quote one who denounces the Bible Union of China.

CHRISTIAN LIFE AND WORK.

The rules of the General Assembly provide that the Moderator shall be chairman of the Committee on Christian Life and Work. The present official has appointed Elder Nathan G. Moore, of Chicago, Vice-Moderator of the last General Assembly, as acting chairman of this committee. Mr. Moore has signified his acceptance of the position.

Henry Chapman Swearingen.

A WORD OF WARNING.

Readers of the Herald and Presbyter—ministers and lawyers—are hereby warned against an institution calling itself the "Centennial State University of Denver." Ministers who have already sent a fee to this institution should communicate the fact to me at once, inclosing receipt or canceled check, in order that steps may be taken to secure restitution.—J. Mont Travis, Stated Clerk, 651 High Street, Denver, Col.

WORTHLESS DEGREES.

I have received numerous inquiries from ministers in the Central West asking about the "Centennial University of Colorado." Letters from this institution, signed by "Edward E. Altman, Registrar," have been sent to many ministers, offering to confer the "honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity" upon certain conditions, chief of which is the payment of "at least $25 for the engraving of the diploma." The institution has no existence except that the articles of incorporation have been filed. It owns no property, has no students or faculty, and has not even issued a prospectus. In other words, it is regarded as a fraud, and is now being investigated by the postal authorities. Criminal prosecution will probably follow.

Denver, Col.

P. V. Jenness.

Enclosed please find check for $2.50 to pay for the Herald and Presbyter for the ensuing year. This is the 54th year since I first subscribed for the paper. It grows more precious each year. I am now in the 82d year of my age. S. H. D.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Samuel Charles Black, D.D., LL.D., President of Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa., died on July 25, in the hospital at Denver, Col., after an illness of two weeks, in the fifty-second year of his age. On June 29, less than four weeks before, he had been married to Miss Mary Leal Harkness, and they were on a wedding trip when he was taken ill at Denver, resulting from an attack of influenza last spring. Dr. Black was born Sept. 6, 1869, at Monticello, Iowa, graduated at Parsons College and McCormick Seminary, and was ordained in 1897 by the Presbytery of Chicago. His charges were at New London, Iowa; Kewanee, Ill.; South Chicago, Ill.; Clinton, Ill.; Boulder, Col., and Collingwood Avenue Church of Toledo, O., from which, after chaplaincy service in the war overseas, he went to the presidency of the institution in which he was leading with great and signal success. The sudden termination of his useful and forceful life seems like a great calamity.

Rev. Dr. Stanton B. Olinger, associate secretary of the General Board of Education, New York, died after a brief illness in St. Bartholomew's Hospital, New York City, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, July 24. Dr. Olinger had gone to the hospital for a slight operation and was recovering apparently when complications set in. He was born at Huron, Kan., Dec. 27, 1867, graduated at Kansas University and Omaha Seminary, and was ordained by Council Bluffs Presbytery in 1898. His charges were at Carson, Iowa; St. Paul, Neb.; Great Bend, Kan., and Coffeyville, Kan. Previous to coming to the Board of Education, two years ago, Dr. Olinger was president of Buena Vista College, Storm Lake, Iowa, for three years, following a term of service as student-pastor at Kansas State University, Lawrence, Kan. As student-pastor and pastor, Dr. Olinger endeared himself to hundreds to whom word of his death will be received with a deep sense of loss. His passing is keenly felt at headquarters of the Board of Education. Dr. Olinger's wife and children accompanied the remains from New York, July 26, to the old home place at Topeka, Kan.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Dr. McKibbin of Lane Seminary preached in Carmel Church last Sabbath, assisting the pastor, Dr. W. L. Brean, in the ordination of four elders, and the installation of six, instituting the rotary system.

Rev. Dr. Calvin D. Wilson, of Glendale, will spend part of August in Hartford County, Md., and part on Long Island. The Glendale pulpit supplies will be Dr.

McKibbin, Aug. 7th, Dr. McCulloch, Aug. 14th, Dr. Marshall, Aug. 21st, and Dr. Walker, Aug. 28th.

Evanston Church building will be closed for repairs during the four weeks vacation of Dr. Lewis Earle Lee, which he will spend, partly, at Winona Lake Bible Conference. The Church has received 23 members since the Billy Sunday meetings.

Rev. E. W. Clippinger, D.D., of Dayton, preached last Sabbath in the Walnut Hills First Church.

Rev. Dr. C. F. Gossel preached in the Avondale Church last Sabbath.

West Chester and Sharonville Churches has called Rev. H. Arndt of Sunman, Ind., and he has already taken up his new work.

Mt. Auburn Church will be supplied during the vacation of its pastor, Rev. J. W. Christie, as follows: July 31 Rev. C. A. Reagan of Hanover College; Aug. 7, Rev. Dr. Lewis Earle Lee; Aug. 14, Rev. Dr. Jesse Hermann; Aug. 21, and 28, Rev. Dr. G. D. McCulloch; Sept. 4, President Millis of Hanover College.

Rev. Lewis Earle Lee, D.D., of Evanston preached in the Seventh Church last Sabbath morning, for Rev. Jesse Halsey.

Dr. J. V. Stephens of Lane Seminary preached last Sabbath in the College Hill Church, Rev. C. A. Austin, pastor.

In the vacation absence of Dr. Frank Stevenson, Rev. Lester E. Kemper, preached in the Church of the Covenant during August, as he did last Sabbath.

Prof. Brokenshire occupied the pulpit of the Sixth Church last Sabbath.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Closing exercises of Boyle Memorial Center daily vacation Bible school, held last Friday evening were participated in by 176 children. The average attendance was 88 per cent of the enrollment. Six nationalities made up the school, as follows: 33 Americans, 5 Germans 15 Poles, 6 Greeks, 13 Jews and 104 Italians.

The annual Sabbath-school picnic of the Oak Hill Church was held last Saturday, at Forest Park, in charge of the Sabbath-school superintendent, W. L. Clucas.

The Church Federation is holding open-air services at Fifteenth and Market Streets, with large congregations. In the last week there have been eleven conversions.

Commencement exercises for all the Presbyterian daily vacation schools, thirteen in number, were held in the last week, with finished work exhibits of what has been done by nearly 2,500 boys and girls enrolled in the last five weeks. The Presbyterian Daily Vacation Bible School has Rev. N. L. Euwer of the Second Church as its chairman, and Rev. F. C. Reiner as superintendent.

Dedication of the new Roemer Hall of Lindenwald College is now planned for early in October. The building will be furnished complete by the opening of the school year, in September. Sidney Hall is being renovated and made more modern, and Jubilee Hall is being remodeled, so that living rooms for students will take the place of the old art department and of other spaces.

OHIO.

On July 29, the Presbytery of Dayton released Rev. Julian P. Love from the Dayton Fourth Church and dismissed him to the Presbytery of Cincinnati, to accept a Chair in Lane Seminary.—J. K. Gibson, S.C.

The Sabbath school of the Frist Church of Middleton, Rev. B. J. Brinkema, D.D., pastor, has undertaken the support of Rev. F. E. Johnson, a recent graduate of McCormick Seminary, who starts Aug. 1, as a foreign missionary to Brazil. Mr. Johnson spent July 1 at Middleton This church and Sabbath school now support both a home and a foreign missionary.

The Summer Bible Conference is from Aug. 3 to 11 at Wooster, and Young People's Summer Conference Aug 15 to 21.

The church at Mt. Sterling will be vacant after Aug. 28th. The pastor, Rev. W. Wilson has accepted the call of the Assembly's Committee on Evangelism. He came from Canada a little over two years ago and in that time the membership of the church has doubled. The congregation while concurring in his request for dismission, did so with reluctance. This will leave a vacancy to be filled by some minister ready to do faithful service. C. D. Finley, Mt. Sterling, is Clerk of Session.

The Muskingum College Bible Conference, Aug. 6 to 14 has a fine program and arrangements for a great meeting.

The Brotherhood of First Church, Greenville, organized themselves into a Gospel team and accepted invitations during the summer months, from neighboring churches throughout the county to conduct an evening service in each place. More than fifty men were included in the team and they have sat together on the platforms, presided at the services, led the singing, furnished the special music and had charge of the devotions wherever a service has been conducted. The sermons have been delivered by their pastor, Rev. C. L. Plymate. More churches asked for an engagement than could be supplied and the churches were packed and people turned away nearly every place the men have gone. The services have been a distinct encouragement to the churches visited, as well as giving the men religious work during the summer months while the home church had no evening service.

INDIANA.

Dr. Edgar L. Williams, pastor of the church of Matthews, Muncie Presbytery, will preach for the First Church of Indianapolis one Sabbath of his August vacation and one Sabbath for the Tabernacle Church. At the reopening and homecoming of the Matthews Church on July 24 four members were welcomed and nine infants were baptized.

Delaney Church, Presbytery of New Albany, Rev. H. B. Gebhart, pastor, received twenty-seven members on July 24, of whom nineteen were on confession.

The Pine Street Church of Hammond closed a successful Daily Vacation Bible School July 22. It lasted for five weeks, six teachers being employed, the pastor, Rev. E. LeRoy Steffey, superintending the school.

A successful Vacation School has been carried on in the Jonesboro Church by Rev. John Welsh, D.D., and twelve workers. There were 114 enrolled and an average attendance of fifty-one, with a total expense of $45.02.

Dr. Billy Sunday, after leaving Cincinnati the first of May, conducted two meetings at Bluefields, W. Va., and Big Stone Gap, Va., with great results. Returning to Winona Lake, he held a four days' meeting. At least 15,000 persons heard him on Sabbath, July 24. An offering of $3,000 for the benefit of Winona Assembly was taken, and Dr. Sunday raised this to $6,000. He had already given nearly $20,000 for improvements at Winona this year. He has now gone to Hood River, Ore., for a vacation of two months.

ILLINOIS.

Revival tent meetings are being conducted in Wheaton, Ill., by Rev. B. M. Brown, of Chicago Presbytery. All Christian people of the community are asked to join in the meeting, and all Christian people everywhere are asked to pray for the success of the work.

Rev. D. L. McNary, D.D., Freeport, has suffered a great loss in the death of his eleven-year-old daughter Josephine.

Middle Creek Church has purchased a stereopticon and the people have been enjoying several of the illustrated lectures prepared by our Boards of Home and Foreign Missions.

Mrs. Charles R. Murray, wife of the pastor at Winnebago, is spending some of the summer months at Winona Lake as a teacher in the Bethany Girls' Camp.

The church at Clarence, Bloomington, has just purchased and fully paid for a new manse.

Edwardsville, Rev. Arnold Simth, pastor, has had a successful daily vacation Bible school, which enrolled 162.

Rev. W. D. Vater, field representative of the Sabbath-school Board, has made a tour of Cairo Presbytery. At Equality, since Rev. J. G. West became pastor, less than a year ago, the Sabbath school attendance has increased from sixty-five to over 150, with an enrollment of 236, and a Boy Scout troop of 31 has been organized. At Galatia, also served by the same pastor, over $800 has recently been spent in improvements.

Five hundred Presbyterians in ninety-five automobiles recently attended the annual church picnic at Danvers, Ill.

Rev. Edgar V. Headen has resigned the pastorate at Rankin, Ill., to take up work in North Dakota.

The First Church of Piper City has called Rev. S. A. Johnson, of Chicago and he accepts.

Rev. Morton C. Long, D.D., becomes, for the second time, the pastor of the church of Monticello, Ill.

The Young People's Conference of Rock River, Freeport and Ottawa Presbyteries was held at Dixon, Ill., July 11-17, with about 150 delegates present. Mr. Walter D. Howell and Dr. Gerrit Verkuyll represented the Board on the faculty. Mrs. Louise M. Oglevee had charge of the Children's Work. Rev. Lloyd S. Rutland represented the Boards of Home and Foreign Missions. Other members of the faculty were Rev. J. T. Mordy, of Rock Island; E. P. Westphal, of Fulton; Miss Ruth Hughes, of Freeport; Rev. E. W. Smith, of Argyle; Rev. H. A. Drake, of Freeport; Rev. John F. Vonkx, of Ottawa; Rev. M. M. Walters, of Joy; Rev. Jesse M. Tidball, of Dixon, and Dr. J. M. Stevenson, of Rock Island. At the consecration service more than twenty young men and women came forward to signify that if the Lord opened the way they were ready to go into his work wherever he should call.

MICHIGAN.

The Alma Summer Conference reports an attendance of two hundred from sixty churches; last year thirty-six churches sent about half the number. Director William Ralph Hall, Associate Director W. B. Shirey and synod's committeeman, W. C. McKnight, made a valuable team. The addresses, lectures and books read covered the most practical phases of church work. There were forty-three life recruits listed, mostly new names. Thanks are due to the faculty members.

Rev. Harry E. Porter and his people of the First Church of Ionia, are joining in union open-air Sabbath evening services at the Court House grounds.

Rev. W. H. Belfry, Ishpeming, is now Stated Clerk of Lake Superior Presbytery, succeeding Rev. F. A. Kuder of Menominee.

NEW YORK.

Rev. Joel C. Glover, S.T.D., was installed at Trumansburg, July 26th. Dr. Glover came from the pastorate of Grace Church, Rochester. Rev. George Orvis, Dr. Alexander Thompson, Rev. H. A. Porter and Rev. A. H. MacMillan conducted the services. This church celebrated its one hundredth anniversary several years ago. Its plant is unique and beautiful and the congregation has an enviable history. Trumansburg is eleven miles from Cornell University.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The fifth annual Ministerial Institute at Montrose, Pa., July 18th to 28th, was conducted by the Moody Bible Institute. It was attended by about one hundred and fifty ministers from Pennsylvania and adjoining states. Dr. James M. Gray was the leader. Among his assistants were Dr. Henry Ostrom, Dr. Otis G. Dale and Dr. A. L. Latham.

Rev. R. B. A. McBride, D.D., now of Swissvale, has preached several Sabbaths at San Diego and Long Beach, Calif., since leaving Emporia, Kan.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. F. McKee, of Monongahela, was celebrated by the people of the congregation with a reception and many presents. The church received eight members on July 10th.

During the vacation of Dr. W. F. McKee, of Monongahela, his pulpit will be filled by Rev. S. F. Marks, Rev. L. B. Llewellyn and others.

MARYLAND.

Westminster Church, at Georgetown, Rev. Bergen B. Staats, pastor, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its organization on Sabbath, July 24th. In the morning was the "Historical Address" by the pastor. Four members were received. Four others were received last April. Rev. Eber W. Gaylord, first pastor of the church, spoke in the afternoon. Westminster is the logical successor to the "Old Brick Church," organized previous to 1740, and is fairly entitled to be considered more than one hundred and eighty years old, instead of fifty.

WASHINGTON.

Each year there is held at Pullman, Wash., a summer school for rural pastors, in connection with the regular summer school of the State College. The churches, through their Boards of Home Missions, co-operate in preparing a course of instruction that will be of special value. This year the session was from July 4th to 14th. There were about twenty ministers from Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington, and about evenly divided between Methodists and Presbyterians. Rev. Nathan M. Fiske, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, State College, Davis, Calif., represented the Country Life Department of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. The forenoons were taken up with lectures, the afternoons with demonstrations on the college farm, and the evenings with lantern lectures. It was a ten days' vacation full of profit and enjoyment.

MISSOURI.

Rev. Chester Birch has been holding a successful evangelistic meeting at Deepwater, Mo.

NEBRASKA.

The First Church of Aurora, Rev. J. A. Currie, pastor, received five members on July 17.

Creston.—The basement has been decorated and new song books purchased for the Sabbath school. By the uniting of the M. E. Church with the Presbyterian, and the reception of as many others, the church membership has doubled in the last three months. Rev. George A. Wickwire is pastor.

WISCONSIN.

The First Church of Manitowoc has received 511 members during the eight and one-half years' pastorate of Rev. M. S. Axtell, and the total membership has advanced from 271 to 545. The total money raised during the last year was $13,446, of which $11,428 was for local self-support and the rest for benevolences.

MONTANA.

Montana Synod met at Great Falls and had a meeting of five days. Great Falls Church celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary. Rev. Eliot Porter, of Harlowton, was moderator. The meeting next summer will be at Missoula. It will be the fiftieth anniversary of Montana Presbyterianism. The Boards were all represented and it was a great meeting.

OREGON.

Rev. W. H. Amos, assistant synodical missionary, preached at Cottage Grove and received twenty-five new members. The church is supplied by Ralph Spearow, a State University student.

Rev. A. M. McClain, of Vancouver, Wash., has accepted a call and begun work at Brownsville, Ore.

Rev. Donald A. MacKenzie, of Dallas, Ore., has accepted a call and begun work at White River Church, Auburn, Wash., leaving Dallas vacant.

Rev. Ward W. Long was installed pastor of First Church, Salem, Ore., by Dr. W. H. Lee, Rev. H. L. Bowman, Rev. W. H. Nugent, Rev. W. M. Case and Rev. R. W. Achor.

The Synod of Oregon had a fine meeting at Corvallis, July 12-19. Several Boards were represented by secretaries. Dr. Wicher, of San Francisco Theological Seminary, gave a series of great Bible addresses.

UTAH.

Mount Pleasant, the seat of our Presbyterian Wasatch Academy, is the exclusive field of our Presbyterian Church, which is doing excellent work there under the pastoral care of Rev. Arthur V. Board.

MINNESOTA.

The field known as Crosby and Ironton has been divided. The Ironton people have retained the services of Rev. E. L. Kelly, who had been pastor of both churches, and the Crosby Church is looking for a pastor. Crosby is a mining town of about 4,000 and offers a good opportunity. It should reach self support in a couple of years under the right leadership. Rev. E. L. Kelly, is chairman of the committee on Vacancy and Supply.

Plans for a new $60,000 church at Brainerd, Minn., have been secured and the trustees are taking subscriptions. The plans are for a building 60 by 90 feet, equipped for Sabbath school work, and social service, as well as for preaching services. Almost $20,000 has already been secured in subscriptions.

OKLAHOMA.

Rev. L. W. Scudder, of Watonga, has resigned as Stated Clerk of Cimarron Presbytery, having removed to Iroquois, N. Y.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

McKINNEY—Whereas, our heavenly Father has in his infinite wisdom removed from among us our worthy and esteemed fellow-laborers, Mr. and Mrs. A. Smith McKinney; and, whereas, the long and intimate relationship held with them in the faithful discharge of their duties as members of the Presbyterian Church makes it eminently befitting that we record our appreciation of them; therefore,

Resolved, That the wisdom and ability which they have exercised in the aid of our congregation by service, contribution and council will be held in grateful remembrance;

Resolved, That the sudden removal of such lives from our midst leaves a vacancy that will be deeply realized by all the members of the congregation, and will prove a serious loss to the community.

Resolved, That with deep sympathy with the bereaved relatives of the deceased, we express our hope that even so great a loss to us all may be overruled for good by him who doeth all things well;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of the congregation, a copy printed in the church paper, and a copy forwarded to the bereaved family.

AN IDYL IN THE KITCHEN.

BY WASHINGTON VAN DUZEN.

A woman plied her tasks the live long day—
The table spread, the dishes cleared away;
Then sewed and cooked, and spread the cloth once more—
The same dull round completed o'er and o'er.

And yet she did not sigh, but sang instead,
Blithe as the bird that swung above her head,
For whom no bars could cage the spirit bright
Nor mar the glory of the flooding light.
She washed and scoured, yet life was fair to view;
For love was hers, and happy children, too;
And though winged fancies led her forth to roam,
Her thoughts returned and centered in her home.

Lost in a book when household tasks were o'er,
Or in the garden at her kitchen door,
She looked beyond her treadmill rounds to see
Life's beauty over all its drudgery.

GOD'S PROTECTING CARE.

A True Story.

BY JESSIE AIKEN.

"It will not be necessary for me to ask if you will take fresh air children this summer Miss Margaret?—you always do," said the young lady sent by the Fresh Air Association to secure places to send little children for a two weeks outing. "No" laughed Miss Margaret, "You need not ask, of course I will take two."

Miss Margaret was a plump little woman of middle age. She and a married brother and sister, were the last of a large family. All her younger years had been spent in caring for an invalid mother. Now she was all alone. She had her own little home, and a small income, but she was very lonely. She dearly loved little children, and was never happy as when she was doing something for them.

A few weeks later, she was seated on her front porch, waiting the arrival of the farmer, who had volunteered to meet the fresh air children, when they arrived at the little station, which was some miles from the village. Everything was in readiness for her little guests, and she was anxious to see, "what she would draw," as she laughingly told her neighbor, who was also watching for the arrival of the children. Presently they saw the farmer's big, old-fashioned carriage coming down the quiet street, fairly overflowing with children of all description, big and little; wild with joy to be out in the country. As they drove up, Miss Margaret especially noticed a little black-eyed girl of about five years of age. She looked so bright and so happy and so clean. "Oh, if I could only have her." She thought, and her heart fairly jumped, when the farmer scanning the card, tied around each child's wrist said, "Miss Margaret, you are in luck sure, this little girl goes to you."

"I know I shall love her dearly," said Margaret, "but where is the other one; I was to take two." Together they again went over the tags, but found no other assigned to her. She carried the dear little tired child into the house, and after giving her a warm bath, and bountiful supper, she sat on the porch, watching her, with loving eyes, play on the smooth lawn, with the children next door.

Before the two weeks were up Miss Margaret, learned from her little guest, that her mother was dead, that her father and brother two years older, were the family. The father was a cobbler by trade, and could not speak English, but was bravely trying to keep a home and make a living for his children.

"Perhaps God has sent her to me," thought Miss Margaret, "Oh if I could only keep her. It would break my heart to give her up now."

That night a letter was written, to the cobbler shop in the great city. A few days later, the answer written by the little brother was received. "Papa says kind lady may keep sister till she be eighteen years old, but he beg kind lady let her come home once in a year to see us."

"God has been good to me," said Margaret with tears in her eyes.

The next summer found her trying to plan a way to send little Betty to her father for the promised visit. Very unexpectedly a way opened. A young lady was going as delegate to a convention, and gladly offered to take little Betty. A letter was sent at once telling her father to meet the train on Thursday, and hurriedly the preparations were made for the long journey of nearly 175 miles. In no way could they reach the city earlier than eleven o'clock at night, but feeling sure of a warm welcome for little Betty, they did not worry about that part of it. She was anxious to see her father and brother, but was heart-broken, when she found Miss Margaret was not going too. "You will come back in a few weeks," said Miss Margaret, and I will pray every day, that God will take care of my dear little girl."

It was almost eleven o'clock at night, when the long train pulled into the big city. Miss Alice was excited and nervous. She had never traveled much, and everything seemed strange and unreal. As she alighted from the train, leading little Betty by the hand, two girls approached her, and asked if she was Miss B. They told her she was to be entertained at their home, and their father was outside with the car, they looked in surprise at the little child clinging to her hand. She told them about little Betty and how her father was to meet her. Together they scanned the crowd, lifting the little child up, bidding her try to see her father, but in vain.

The father of the girls felt sure that her father had gone to the East Station. "What shall I do," said distressed Miss Alice. "There is no way but to send her with a cab-man was the answer. Hurriedly they interviewed the cab-men. Some bluntly refused to go at all, others asked a fee that was prohibitive, but which Miss Alice almost decided to give, when one negro asked again for the address and said, "I will take her."

"Oh, what would Miss Margaret do" thought Miss Alice as she put the frightened child into the cab, and gave her the money Miss Margaret had given her for safe keeping. Poor little frightened child, she sat on the very edge of the seat, clasping tightly the money, the tears rolling down her cheeks, but not uttering a sound: On, on, they went. At last the cab stopped and little Betty found herself lifted out, and there was her father's little shop, all lighted up, and she could see inside her father and brother looking very anxious and sad. The driver led her in, and great was the joy and relief when they saw her.

As she clung around her father's neck, with one arm, she extended the other little hot, trembling hand, still clasping the money to the driver.

"No, no, little Missie," he said, "I don't want no money, I one of de cab men at your mother's funeral, it all right little Missie."

AND JUST FROW STONE.

BY DONALD F. R. MAC GREGOR.

The firstest day when I am grown,
That I can go out all alone,
I'm going out—away—way out,
And just frow stone.

'Cause ev'ry time I frow a stone,
Some one will say, "Let that alone!
Don't frow that stone! I'll tell your Ma!
You're the worstest boy I ever saw!
Stop that at once! Now do look out—
There you go! What are you 'bout?
Now, boy, you will crack your head!"
A boy might just as well be dead.

So the firstest day when I am grown,
That I can go out all alone,
I'm going out—away—way out,
Where there's not a one about,
And just frow stone.

DO IT WELL.

A group of children were happily playing on the broad stone walk under protecting shade trees. They were going to play "Mother."

"I'm the mother," cried the largest little girl. "There always has to be a mother, and I'm it."

Black-eyed Ned sat next.

"I'm the father," he asserted, sturdily. "Nellie and Rob can be children, but I'll be the father, and, of course, I'll see to things and make everybody do what I say."

A little blue-eyed tot of a girl saw a very good chance of being left out in this family game.

"What am I?" she asked, a little pitifully. Very little girls are so apt to be left out, anyway.

"There has to be servants," said the self-elected father and mother. "That's all that's left that we can see."

"Well," remarked the little girl, very sweetly, "I'll be a real nice one, then. Somebody has to do something for the rest, and it's just as good as anything if you do it well."

"IT WILL DO."

Nothing is good enough that is not as good as it can be made. The verdict, "good enough," which in boyhood passes the defective task, will become "bad enough," when the habit of inaccuracy has spread itself over the life.

"You have planed that board well, have you, Frank?" asked a carpenter of an apprentice.

"Oh, it will do!" replied the boy. "It don't need to be very well planed for the use to be made of it. Nobody will see it."

"It will not do if it is not planed as smoothly as possible," replied the carpenter, who had the reputation of being the best and most conscientious workman in the city.

"I suppose I could make it smother," said the boy.

"Then do it. 'Good Enough,' has but one meaning in my shop and that is 'perfect.' If a thing is not perfect, it is not good enough for me."

"You haven't made things look very neat and orderly here in the back part of the store," said a merchant to a young clerk.

"Well, I thought it was good enough for back there where things can not be seen very plainly, and where customers seldom go."

"That won't do," said the merchant sharply, and then added in a kinder tone:—

"You must get ideas of that kind out of your head, my boy, if you hope to succeed in life. That kind of 'good enough' isn't much better than 'bad enough.'"

The girls who don't sweep in the corners or dust under things, and the boys who dispose of tasks as speedily as possible, declaring that things will "do" if they are not well done, are the boys and girls who are very likely to make failures in life, because the habit of inaccuracy has become part of their characters.

The old adage, "What is worth doing at all is worth doing well," is as true now as when it was first spoken, and it will always be true.—Monitor.

A VACATION PRAYER.

BY MABEL EARLE.

Our lesson books are laid aside;
O Master of us all!
Take thou thy children to the wide,
Sweet school rooms of the fields an tide,
Where summer voices call.

Let thy dear hills and forests be
Our teachers for today,
Until their pure simplicity
Shall train our hearts to trust in thee,
Unflinching as they.

The fields that look to thee for rain,
The trees that strike their root
Deeper for every storm and strain,
Through patient years, until they gain
Their crown of flower and fruit.

The tides that follow at thy will,
In rhythmic ebb and flow,
The waves that yet thy word fulfil,
As when thou bad'st them, "Peace, be still!"

So many years ago.

Thy myriad hosts of living things
In sea and field, and air;
Thy birds that soar with sunlit wings,
Glad in the joy each morning brings,
Untouched by sin or care.

Lord, let them teach us in thy book
Of simple happiness!
Until we learn from tree and brook,
And storn-beat crest, and sheltered nook
Thy power to heal and bless.

LINCOLN AT A DEATH BED.

We made a pilgrimage to see an old retired army officer who had been a journeyman printer in an office in Springfield, Ill., and one of Lincoln's intimate acquaintances and asked him to tell us a story that the magazines and books had not found. He told this:

"One day Lincoln asked me to ride fifteen miles out in the country with him and become a witness to a will he was to write for a woman on her deathbed. When the will had been signed and witnessed, the woman asked him if he would read a few verses out of the Bible to her. They offered him the book, but he did not take it, but began reciting from memory the twenty-third Psalm, laying especial emphasis upon 'Tho I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.' Without the book he took up the first part of the fourteenth of John, 'In my Father's house are many mansions.' After he had given these and other quotations from the scriptures he recited several hymns, closing with 'Rock of Ages Cleft for Me.'

"I thought at the time I had never heard any elocutionist speak with such ease or power as he did. I am an old man now, but my heart melts; as it did then in that death chamber, as I remember how, with a pathos truly divine, he spoke the last stanza, beginning, 'While I draw this fleeting breath.' The woman died while we were there.

"Riding home, I expressed surprise that he should have acted as pastor as well as attorney so perfectly, and he replied, 'God and eternity and heaven were very near to me today.'"

A ROMANCE OF THE BLUEBIRD BUS.

A lady from the old country joined the membership of Knox Church in Hamilton, Canada, by certificate from a church in Scotland, and immediately began to teach in the Sabbath school. She was a refined and bright woman, and was soon an active member of the church.

A year later she called on the pastor, Dr. Nelson, accompanied by a stalwart, happy-looking Scotchman, who intimated that they would like to arrange for their marriage. The doctor asked him how long he had known her. She told the doctor that she had heard of folks in Toronto she used to know in Scotland, and wanted to visit them, and went on the motor 'bus, the Bluebird.

A gentleman seated across from her, pointed out of the window and asked her if she knew what a certain place was, but she had to reply that she was only a year in Canada, and had never been over the road before. "Well," said he, "I have just been demobilized. I was in the United States army, at the front."

"In the United States army?" said she; "you have the tongue of a Scotchman."

"Ay," said he, "but I was fifteen years in the United States, and was there when Uncle Sam went into the war, and that explains it. Ay," said he, "It is a good while now since I left my native place."

"What part of Scotland did you come from?" said she. "I came from the town of —," said he. Noticing a strange look in her eyes, he asked her, "You didn't come from there, did you?" "I did," said she with a catch in her breath. "Did you happen to know a family named—?" said he. Quick as lightning she exclaimed, "Ay, and I'm Jean—myself; and you, oh, you're Donald—". "I am! Jean," he cried.

Now, said the couple to the doctor, we kept company in Scotland as lad and lass, and some one of our relatives interfered, and we had words. Donald left for America "And that's all, till we met, by God's will, in the Bluebird." They were married. "And when we meet," said Dr. Nelson, "we have a happy laugh, when I say to them that the Bluebird mated them, and the Presbyterian Blackbird married them."—Hamilton Spectator.

You can not turn the mill
With the water that has passed
Nor can you make it go
With the water that won't flow;
And so it is with power;
You must use it—every hour,
And replenish the supply
As the hours hurry by!

What is life for but to walk in harmony with God, to secure that disposition and character which will fit us for the companionships of heaven—and to spend and be spent for the temporal and eternal weal of this suffering world.—William Booth.

Let judgment begin at home; it will probably not have any desire to go further.

Could we but draw back the curtain,
That surrounds each other's lives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives
Often we should find it better,
Purer than we judge we should;
We should love each other better,
If we only understood.

The elixer of life is not a physical compound; it is a spiritual possession. There was an old apostle who said something about the power of an endless life. That, through Jesus Christ, every man has.—Exchange.

The petition is not, "Help us to suffer thy will," but, "Help us to do it." This is not a prayer simply for the invalid and the mourner and the bereaved; it is a prayer also for those that are happy and well and strong.

HASTE AND SPEED.

The speed of a train is much compromised by the number of stops it makes. The speed if some Christians is much modified by the tendency to rest too much betimes. They travel fast, but they do not get far, because they stop so often.—Methodist Protestant.

THREE SIEVES.

One good Quaker woman, notable for her Christ-like conversation, explained that she always used "three sieves" for all utterances struggling to pass her lips. She first sieved. "Is it true?" and that left much unsaid! Then she strained it, "Is it kind?" and much more was never uttered; lastly, "Is it necessary?" and that disposed of more. Let us all get these good sieves set up and working.

SPIRITUAL VISION.

A certain artist used to keep near at hand a group of precious stones in all their various colors. His reason for it was that, in plying his colors on the canvas, his eyes became wearied and confused and he lost his fine power of discrimination. By turning to his group of precious stones he refreshed his eyes and corrected whatever false sense of color his weariness might have produced. In a similar way we need often to refresh our spiritual vision by turning to the great simplicities of God's requirements. There is no mystery about them. "He hath showed thee, O Man, what is good. And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God?"

PAUL, IN ICONIUM AND LYSTRA.

(Acts 14:8-20.)

Acts 14:8. And there sat a certain man at Lystra, impotent in his feet, being a cripple from his mother's womb, who never had walked:

9. The same heard Paul speak: who steadfastly beholding him, and perceiving that he had faith to be healed,

10. Said with a loud voice, Stand upright on thy feet. And he leaped and walked.

11. And when the people saw what Paul had done, they lifted up their voices, saying in the speech of Lycaonia, The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.

12. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, because he was the chief speaker.

13. Then the priest of Jupiter, which was before their city, brought oxen and garlands unto the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people.

14. Which when the apostles, Barnabas and Paul, heard of, they rent their clothes, and ran in among the people, crying out,

15. And saying, Sirs, why do ye these things? We also are men of like passions with you, and preach unto you that ye should turn from these vanities unto the living God, which made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all things that are therein:

16. Who in times past suffered all nations to walk in their own ways.

17. Nevertheless he left not himself without witness, in that he did good, and gave us rain from heaven, and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.

18. And with these sayings scarce restrained they the people, that they had not done sacrifice unto them.

19. And there came certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people, and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead.

20. Howbeit, as the disciples stood round about him, he rose up, and came into the city: and the next day he departed with Barnabas to Derbe.

INTRODUCTORY.

In our last lesson we found Paul starting out on the first of his three great missionary journeys. In that lesson Barnabas and Paul left Antioch for Cyprus. They set sail from Seleucia, the seaport of Antioch, and landed at Salamis, the seaport of Cyprus. They then passed overland to Paphos. From there they sailed to Perga in Pamphylia, on the southern shore of Asia Minor, and from there traveled inland to Antioch in Pisidia, from which place they were driven by the persecution which had been stirred up against them. Next we find Paul and Barnabas passing on to Iconium and then to Lystra, and Derbe, where they preached the Gospel. From Derbe they returned to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch in Pisidia, and passing again through Pisidia and Pamphylia, they again visited Perga, and sailed from Attalia to Antioch, whence they had started. This missionary journey probably lasted about two years and was full of stirring events. We should be very familiar with all of its steps.

EXPOSITORY.

1-7. In the first eight verses of this chapter we find Paul and Barnabas at Iconium, preaching so that many Jews and Greeks believed. It was a blessed work. But immediately the unbelieving Jews started a persecution. Notwithstanding the conversions, their enemies united in a conspiracy to assault and stone them. It was the only answer they could make to the Gospel. Brute force is no argument, but it is the only answer that brutal men can make. But Paul and Barnabas learned of their design and fled from them to Lystra and Derbe. Lystra was about twenty miles away, in the province of Lycaonia. They did not, however, give up preaching, or say that they had had enough of that work among such people. They were called of God to this holy work. They had no desire to do anything else. They engaged heartily in telling of Jesus Christ and his power to save, in this new region, and God gave them success. We shall read of some of their experiences in this chapter at this time.

8-10. They had a notable experience in Lystra. A striking miracle was here wrought by God through the Apostle Paul, which led to a great demonstration on the part of the startled people. It seems that the preaching of Paul was in public places. We do not read of any work done in synagogues and probably there was none at Lystra. But people were there and people were being sought and found. One day a cripple was met with. It was with him as with the man whom Peter and John met at the beautiful gate of the temple at Jerusalem. He had never been able to walk, having been born a cripple. He heard Paul's preaching and deeply affected by it Paul looking on him, perceived that he had faith to be healed. There must be faith in order to be saved. We read of some who were not profited by the preached word of truth because it was not mixed with faith in those who heard it. But there was faith in this man, and when Paul said with a loud voice: "Stand upright on thy feet," we read that he leaped and walked. Thus ought every human soul to do when he hears the invitation to believe in Jesus Christ as his Savior. He should believe at once, accept Christ and receive eternal salvation.

11-13. Such a miracle could not go unnoticed. The people had never seen anything so wonderful. They knew that mere human power could not do anything so great. Being heathen in their ideas they cried out: "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men." They said that Paul must be Mercury, because he spoke so eloquently, and they said that Barnabas must be Jupiter. In accordance with this the heathen priest of Jupiter prepared oxen and garlands of flowers and came to the gates of Lystra and prepared to offer up sacrifices to Paul and Barnabas, supposing them to be gods. It is right to worship God, but it is not right to worship gods. They do not exist and of course we should not go through the form of worship to them. We should be as ready to worship the only true God as these ignorant heathen priests and people were to worship their false gods.

14-18. Paul could not permit this. He stopped the proceedings at once. He and Barnabas ran in among the people, tearing their garments to show their earnestness and cried out that this must not go any farther. They said that they were not gods, but that they were just men like the others. But it was not enough for them to stop this attempted worship. They had the opportunity, which they embraced, to preach about the true God, who was the Creator and the God of Providence, and who had the right to the love and obedience of every human being. Paul urged them to turn from these vanities to serve the living God. From which we learn that it is not enough to prevent wrongdoing, but that we should always be ready to do positive good, and that, especially, we should take advantage of every opportunity to tell about the Lord and urge men to accept and serve him.

19-20. A deep impression had been made. The people might have been led to accept Christ. But Satan is ever ready to break up any possible good. The Jews at Iconium and Antioch heard of the success that Paul was having at Lystra. They determined to break it up. And so coming there they talked to the people, slandering and misrepresenting Paul, and so stirred them up that an excitement was aroused and Paul was stoned and dragged out of the city. He was supposed to be dead. Paul speaks of this later in his life. Thought by his enemies to be dead, he was left lying in his helplessness. But he was not dead. He was stunned, breathless and unconscious, but his life had not departed. His disciples and friends gathered around him, and no doubt they were greatly grieved and discouraged. But Paul recovered consciousness, and was able to rise up and go into the city, and the next day he was able to journey to Derbe with Barnabas. Christ came to Jerusalem and they crucified him. Paul came to Lystra and they stoned him.

PATIENCE.

Paul, in his Epistle to the Thessalonians, prays that God would direct their hearts "into the patience of Christ." This prayer implies the duty of Christians to practice the patience that Christ manifested. He faced suffering and sorrow with a song in his heart and a smile upon his soul. We are called to manifest the same kind of joyous hope, the same reverential faith and the same kind of divine patience.

HUMILITY.

Think of a great king saying: "I am poor and needy." David's greatness before God consisted not in his exalted human position, but in his lowliness of heart. The eloquence that gets the farthest with God is not that of the lips but of a "broken spirit." No confession is genuine before God which involves the attempt to minimize or cover up sin, or involves unwillingness to take the lowest place because of having sinned.

WE CAN ONLY GIVE HIM BACK WHAT HE HAS GIVEN US.

The other day a little girl told me she was going to give her father a pair of slippers on his birthday. "Where will you get the money?" I asked. She opened her eyes like saucers, and she said, "Why, father will give me the money." And just for half a minute I was silent as I thought the dear man would buy his own birthday present. I was not in the house when she gave him the slippers. But I suppose when the father came down in the morning there was the parcel between his knife and fork. And the father loved his little girl for her gift, although he had had to pay for it. She had not anything in the world that he had not given her.

That is just what I want to tell you. You have not anything of your own to give to Jesus Christ. You can only give him back what belongs to him. When Christ says, "Give me something," and you say, "I have nothing to give," he further says: "I will put back into your own care and keeping—into your own proprietorship, and if you really love me for love's sake, you may give yourself back to me." —W. K. Greenland.

PRAYER MEETING, AUGUST 14.

Endeavor Topic: True Temperance in Heart and Life. I Thess. 5:4-11.

We have ordinarily defined temperance as moderation in the use of such material things as are good, and as absolute abstinence from everything that is harmful or injurious. Thus one may moderately use good food and drink, not overindulging or overloading the system; but if he is temperate he will leave the poisonous material entirely untasted and the poisonous drink will never be taken into the system.

A very good translation for the Greek word which is often translated "temperance" is "inward strength." The one who is indwelt by it, or characterized by it, is strong in his inner life, so that he will not permit himself to indulge in what would work harm to him. Why should one be so foolish as to drink poisonous alcoholic liquor, whereby his brain will be confused, his judgment darkened, his whole normal nature debased, so that he may easily be led to the perpetration of vicious or even criminal conduct? It is not for his good but for his damage. One should not demand "personal liberty" for inflicting injury upon himself, but rather should seek to have that "inward strength" that will seek enjoyment and gratification in doing what is good for his best nature and for the best elevation of those who are around him.

Our character is very largely revealed in the choices we make when we are seeking our own pleasure or gratification. We can not do anything very hurtful when we are doing our daily work, seeking to serve others for wages, or doing our business so as to secure returns from those with whom we deal. But when we seek our own gratification and pleasure or amusement we sometimes lose our poise, and forget our responsibility, and do what we may afterwards regret. In our recreations as we sometimes call our pleasures, we are prone to make mistakes, and overlook the duty to do all things to the glory of God. The great thing we should have in mind is the call to make our pleasures of such a kind that they shall be really recreations, reenergizing our whole being and reinvigorating ourselves for doing our whole, full duty, to God, our neighbors and ourselves.

We are living in a time when it almost seems as if the world has gone mad on the subject of amusements. Whole pages are given up in the daily newspapers to the subject of the popular sports of the day. Many people are perfectly posted in reference to these amusements and can talk and read for hours on the subject. Many of these people know little about the Church, the Bible, the cause of missions or the progress of religion. We often wish that the mind and attention of the people could be won to the matters of greatest importance.

To be really temperate, or full of inward strength, is to have the life of God in the soul, and to be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might.

The rewards of duty are not rest from labor, but greater tasks.

PRAYER MEETING

AUGUST 10.

RECREATION AND RELIGION.
I Thessalonians 5:1-3.

At this time when many persons are taking vacations we naturally think of the relation of recreation to religion, and ask whether there is any such relation. Is it right for a Christian to take a rest? Is it proper for him to seek any form of pleasure or recreation? Is it right for him to lay aside his pressing duties and seek to have a good time in relaxation or rest? Is it not too much like self-gratification and idleness? How can a Christian justify himself in laying down his tools of labor, and taking several weeks, or longer, in the quiet and ease of a vacation? If he can not give a good reason for it to God he ought not to take it.

We might ask whether it is right for one to quit work in the evening and lie down for sleep during the hours of the night. Is it not a great waste of time to take all these hours in unconsciousness, doing absolutely nothing in any active way? Is it not a great waste of time, too, to sit down at the table three times a day, and deliberately take the time in eating and drinking, instead of engaging in active labor every minute of the time? To ask the questions is to answer them. We would live but a short time, and to very poor advantage, if we did not find reinvigoration and recreation through sleep and food and drink. God has ordained these laws and we are wise to observe them.

So we are wise if we fall in line with the invitation of our Lord to his disciples when, after a time of strenuous labor he called them to take a rest, saying: "Come ye yourselves apart unto a desert place and rest awhile." The rest was to be for only a time. It was to be in a place where they might renew their strength in solitude and quiet. It was to be for the sake of regaining their vigor and being better prepared for their duties.

It must be the purpose of our lives to do the will of God and to accomplish the work he has given us to do. We are to use our strength and abilities as long as life lasts, in doing what God wishes us to do. But we must utilize our powers in the way to make them last the longest and be the most effective. So, as we have even our beasts of labor to rest at stated times, and as our machinery is allowed to stop in its movements, to be oiled and to become cool, so must our bodies be treated. And if we treat them thus in order to get the most out of them for the Lord's service, our recreation is as religious and as reasonable as is our most arduous labor.

Only let us in our recreations show that we are God's children, by choosing pleasures that are not evil, and at times and in places that are right. We shall avoid the appearance of evil. We will seek in all that we do to glorify God in our bodies and our spirits which are God's. In all our ways, our pleasure as our work, we will acknowledge God.

A church with no creed is a city without squares or streets.

How Coca-Cola Resembles Tea

If you could take about one-third of a glass of tea, add two-thirds glass of carbonated water, then remove the tea flavor and add a little lemon juice, phosphoric acid, sugar, caramel and certain flavors in the correct proportion, you would have an almost perfect glass of Coca-Cola.

In fact, Coca-Cola may be fairly described as "a carbonated, flavored counterpart of tea, of approximately one-third the stimulating strength of the average cup of tea."

The following analyses, made and confirmed by the leading chemists throughout America, show the comparative stimulating strength of tea and Coca-Cola stated in terms of the quantity of caffeine contained in each:

Black tea—1 cupful	1.54 gr.
<small>(hot)</small>	<small>(5 fl. oz.)</small>
Green tea—1 glassful	2.02 gr.
<small>(cold)</small>	<small>(8 fl. oz., exclusive of ice)</small>
Coca-Cola—1 drink, 8 fl. oz.	.61 gr.
	<small>(prepared with 1 fl. oz. of syrup)</small>

Of all the plants which Nature has provided for man's use and enjoyment, none surpasses tea in its refreshing, wholesome and helpful qualities. This explains its almost universal popularity.

The Coca-Cola Company has issued a booklet giving detailed analysis of its recipe. A copy will be mailed free on request to anyone who is interested. Address:

GENERAL NEWS

ARRANGING FOR THE LIMITATION OF ARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

Informal negotiations over the date for the disarmament conference were begun last week with the American Government suggesting selection of a time not later than Armistice Day, November 11.

Definite replies have not been received, but unofficial information seems to indicate that certain of the other powers will prefer a later date, and that several diplomatic exchanges may be necessary before a unanimous agreement is reached.

The question of a meeting time, now the next immediate concern in the conference preliminaries, was discussed by Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes with the British and Japanese Ambassadors and the Italian Charge.

China and France are to be consulted in the near future, though it is emphasized that there will be no disposition to press for a decision until each of the parties to the conference has had time to study the situation thoroughly.

STATE DEPARTMENT DEMANDS RELEASE OF AMERICANS HELD IN RUSSIA.

Formal demand for the release of American prisoners in Russia has been made to Soviet authorities by Secretary Charles E. Hughes. The State Department has been advised that the communication had been handed to the Soviet representative at Reval by Consul Albrecht.

The demand of Secretary Hughes reads: "In the name of humanity the American Government demands of the Soviet authorities that American prisoners be released at once. It manifestly is impossible for the American authorities to countenance measures of relief of the distress in Russia while our citizens are detained."

What course will be taken by the United States if Soviet authorities ignore or refuse to accede to the demand was not indicated.

The communication was sent to Consul Albrecht July 25. The curt demand is the first official representation made upon the subject, although Lenine and Trotzky and their associates have been advised informally of the determination of the United States not to consider closer relations with Russia until this was done.

The Russian Soviet Government has agreed to the release of all Americans who have been held in prison.

UNITED STATES DECLINES TO BE THE SILESIAN "GOAT."

The United States will not arbitrate the Upper Silesian question.

Myron T. Herrick, United States Ambassador, Paris reports state, last week had a long private interview with Premier Aristide Briand, after which, although nothing was given out officially, it was admitted in diplomatic circles that Mr. Herrick had informed the French Premier that the United States could not be expected to act as referee in the Upper Silesian "free-for-all," owing to the delicate nature of her economic and political lines on both sides.

It is said that George Harvey, United States Ambassador at London, despite his seat in the Supreme Council, is not authorized by Washington to engage in the present European game revolving around Silesia in any way.

At the same time it is intimated that the United States is strongly desirous of an early solution of the Silesian tangle.

REDUCTION IN EXPENSES NECESSARY.

Republican leaders of the House, according to Washington reports, virtually have decided to try to prevent the Government spending so much money by not providing for so much for it to spend.

Although great progress has been made in reducing governmental expenditures,

House leaders say, they believe that the cuts thus far made are not adequate to allow taxes to be reduced to somewhere near the level the public has expected.

As a result, what amounts to an agreement has been reached by House leaders to frame the new revenue bill, so that the yield to the Treasury will be $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 less than the Treasury Department estimates to be necessary.

The hope of the House leaders then is that most stringent economy will be established in order that the Government may keep within its income. Unless this is done, another revision of the revenue laws probably would be necessary next year.

It is apparent that, for the present, taxes can not be reduced as much as the public and business interests are demanding and that the pressure for lower taxes, therefore, will be continued until the fiscal program of the Government is nearer the pre-war level.

TURKS LOSING TO THE GREEKS.

Announcement by the Greek Official Agency last week, said the Turkish losses in killed, wounded, prisoners and missing amount to 75 per cent of their entire fighting strength in Asia Minor.

The statement says the Greeks have driven such a wedge into the Turkish Nationalist lines, that the Kemalists forces at Angora, the capital of the northern branch of the Bagdad Railway, have been cut off at a point near Konieh, on the main line of the railway, 150 miles to the south.

"It is confirmed," says the statement, "that the Turks lost heavily in the last ten days of fighting, which resulted in the occupation of Eski-Shehr and the retreat of the Turkish forces. It now can be stated that the enemy lost more than three-quarters of his forces in guns and in men killed and wounded, prisoners and deserters."

The ocean liner Mauretania, of the Cunard fleet, was burned at the dock at Southampton, England, last week. Although the company is taking extraordinary precautions to prevent any reports regarding the fire from getting out, it is the general understanding that the fire which broke out in all parts of the ship at once was sabotage.

Dr. W. E. Stone, President of Purdue University, lost his life when he fell over a precipice, in an attempt to climb Mt. Eanon, Canada, and his wife lay on a four-foot ledge on the same chasm for eight days before being rescued. A detail of Canadian Northwest police with mountain guides are still searching the mountains for Dr. Stone's body.

Renewal of pogroms against the Jewish population of Ukraina, the scene of a series of massacres a year ago, was reported in cables received at the headquarters of the provisional American Jewish Congress and other Jewish organizations.

It is estimated that approximately 50 Jews have been slain in recent attacks on about a dozen towns.

According to press reports, when it was reported that the President intended to spend a week in a New England village hotel, where he had engaged rooms, the hotel was flooded with telegrams for prices on rooms and baths for the week. According to the report, the hotel quoted only prices on rooms, with the statement that the bathroom was engaged.

Decision to use the transport Great Northern, until last week in the service of the army as the administrative flagship of the Atlantic fleet, was announced by Secretary Edwin Denby. Naval officials said it would be the first time in the history of the modern American navy that an admiral of a fleet was provided with any type of vessel other than a battleship as his flagship.

The battleship Pennsylvania, the present flagship of Admiral Hilarly P. Jones, commander-in-chief of the Atlantic fleet, will be transferred soon to the Pacific fleet. The Great Northern, it was said, will leave San Francisco within a short time for a navy yard on the Atlantic Coast for minor repairs and such alterations as will fit her to be a flagship.

HOME AND FARM

CANNING HINTS.

The canning question for the busy housewife can easily be solved if she will arrange to do this work before the hot part of the day. Early in the morning is the best time. Now, before any thought of canning comes to you, you must decide that unless you can obtain both the fruits and vegetables in an absolutely fresh condition, it is useless to can, and that time and money alike are wasted.

Secure nearby products fresh from the garden and arrange all needed utensils the night before and be sure that all the jars are fitted with perfect lids. For unless this important feature is watched closely, it will not matter how fresh the product is nor how long you sterilize it. Faulty jars will permit the product to spoil.

Use the very best grade of rubbers and use new ones each season. Do not think because old ones seem all right that they will do—the heat necessary for sterilizing the product destroys the rubber and, while they still may hold their shape, if you attempt to use them again the second heat will cause them to split and shrink and then the product will spoil.

A recent visit to the grange meeting in the Midwest States, brought very clearly to my mind that home canning is the best paid profession I have found to date. To be sure, last year the failure of the fruit crop increased the cost of the product, as well as limiting the supply. But every housewife should can some of the following foods, the actual amount depending upon the size of the family and its requirements:

Strawberries, blackberries, peaches, tomatoes, raspberries, huckleberries, pears. The canning of asparagus, peas, beans and corn, unless you have them fresh and directly from the garden into your own hands, had best to be left alone. Ninety-five per cent of the failure of these products to keep is due to the fact that the dreaded bacteria thermophyle has had an opportunity to develop, and no amount of sterilizing will check it; so the products will have a sour, flat taste and are dangerous as foods.

Peas, string beans and corn may be salted or dried with success, if desired, but unless grown in your own garden, I hardly think it pays; for example, I made an exhaustive study of the winter vegetable situation last winter in twelve Eastern and seventeen Western States, and I have come to the conclusion that canning the peas, beans and corn, unless home-grown, hardly pays the housewife. The early Southern product brings 25c per quart berry box in January, so that unless the product is straight from your own or some neighbor's garden, it hardly pays you to can the very delicious and delicate succulent vegetables.

String beans sell during the canning season from $1.50 to $2.25 per one-half basket, and will fill about 14 pint jars; this season they are quite apt to reach more. Buying in small lots is considerably higher in price, averaging from 25c to 35c quarter peck.

The time required to prepare a basket of beans and process them averages about six hours, with a cost of 15c to 18c for gas. This makes these jars average from 12c to 20c, so that if any part of them spoil, it increases the cost in proportion for the balance.

Also, I have found that the green string beans can be had in market until after Thanksgiving, and that the new Southern crop is in the markets early in January. The average approximate cost of the late fall beans runs about 35c per quarter peck.—Ex.

Bordeaux Sauce.—This calls for one gallon of chopped cabbage, two quarts of green tomatoes, one quarter pound of mustard seed, one-half pound of sugar, one-half gill of salt, one-half ounce of tumeric, one-half ounce of celery seed, one-half ounce of black pepper and two quarts of vinegar. Mix thoroughly and boil for twenty or thirty minutes and bottle and seal in the usual way.

Chili Sauce.—For chili sauce, which is very good with corned beef, hot or cold, peel and chop a peck of ripe, red tomatoes and boil them until they are thick, stirring frequently to keep from burning. Add half a dozen large sweet red peppers, chopped fine, two cupfuls of onion chopped fine; let boil half an hour, then add one-half cup of salt, one pint of vinegar, one tablespoonful cinnamon, two tablespoonfuls whole mustard seeds.

Old-Time Spiced Pickles.—To make spiced pickles, soak little cucumbers for twenty-four hours in salt water, drain and rinse. Then heat in this mixture: Three quarts water, one pint vinegar, piece of alum size of a hickory nut; drain thoroughly; put in glass jars and on top add mustard seed, cloves (whole), cinnamon bark; then fill the jar with boiling vinegar, dissolving one tablespoonful of sugar to each quart of vinegar.

Potatoes Mindostande.—Select new potatoes and then scrape off the skins. Cut in paper-thin slices and then rub a baking dish well with bacon or ham drippings. Arrange the potatoes in orderly layers and then season lightly and baste each layer with a tablespoon of the drippings. Sprinkle over the top layer two tablespoons of fine bread crumbs and two tablespoons of grated cheese. Bake in a hot oven for twenty-five minutes and then serve from the dish.

THE LITTLE CITIZEN IN THE HOME.

BY WILLIAM A. BLAIR, LL.D.

Our orators, editors and self-appointed patriots dwell at length upon the wonderful opportunities, privileges and benefits which we enjoy in our great Democracy. Rights and privileges are on every tongue; but far too little is said about duties and responsibilities which must always be commensurate with rights. The old Spartan idea that the child belongs to the State and that the State was entitled to something from him, might well have some consideration today.

A father recently told me that he was educating his two boys, one to become a lawyer and the other a preacher. In other words, he was training his boys for good citizenship. One boy was to be a good citizen practicing law, the other was to be a good citizen, preaching.

The home is a little democracy, the school a larger one, the world a still greater. The small child should be taught to be a good citizen in the home, later in the school and when he is graduated out into the world he will naturally continue right activity.

"Men are but children of a larger growth." In the home the child should have certain regular tasks to perform and should be taught that he must attend to them conscientiously. The care of pets, plants, flowers and of younger children, the responsibility of performing certain household duties, develops strength of character.

Possession teaches generosity, for without possessions of his own, how can the child learn to share and appreciate the difference between "mine and thine?" If his property, his rights, his little treasures are respected he will soon see why he should regard and respect the rights of others.

Possession entails responsibility for the care and use of property. The small boy who leaves his picture book outdoors over-night and discovers in the morning that it has been stolen or rain-soaked realizes that the misfortune is his own fault. If he is rough with his toys and breaks them, he must learn to be more careful. If he doesn't feed his pet rabbit, it dies; if he fails to care for his garden, the flowers are soon choked with weeds.

In training the child, his opinions should be respected, and parents should take time and have patience to show him wherein he is right or wrong. He certainly can not always have his own way, now nor in the future; therefore he must learn to obey before he is fit to command, and careful, constant training is needed to produce the result. Children should be chums with their parents, and should also have the companionship of other children and learn to "get along" without difficulties or quarrels; adaptability is essential to happiness.

We must begin with our children and teach them personal, home, school, community and national responsibility at a very early age, and show by object lessons that every violation of rules or laws, every case of malicious destruction of property, every manifestation of vandalism, all exhibitions of temper, impudence and insolence, all forms of disrespect for persons, places, property, positions, or sacred things bring trouble and punishment.

From the training of the home, good citizens should be graduated into the schools, from the schools to the colleges, and from the colleges to citizenship and service of our country.—Ex.

Smoking compartments for women are to be included on Canadian Pacific Railroad trains. In making the announcement, a company statement said the equality of the sexes should be recognized in traveling.

Blackburn Selects the Best

A selected class of young people attend Blackburn College, for no one is admitted who has not answered very definite questions concerning grades, willingness to work for an education, and reasons for attending a self-help college. In addition, two references are required.

In response to our queries, a teacher writes: "Character—excellent. A brave, honest, loyal, likable, hard-working lad."

This is the type of student that comes to Blackburn and surely it is not fair to turn such young people away from an education. But that is what Blackburn is doing because you have not shared in this work. I should like to tell you how you may make possible the education of a lad like the above. Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

YOU WIN!

Talking about echoes, Ananias Munchausen of Boston, Mass., claims that he had a shack in the foothills about 500 miles from a high mountain in the Rockies. He was working a mining claim and used to get up at 4 a. m., and he needed no alarm clock. Before he retired at night, he would yell out of the window: "Wake up! Wake up! Wake up!" And at 4 o'clock every morning the echo on its way back from the mountain would cry: "Wake up! Wake up! Wake up!" so loudly that it got him up.—Enquirer.

WHY HE RESIGNED.

"Why did you resign from the Don't Worry Club?"

"I discovered that the way the rest of them got out of worrying was by telling all their troubles to me."—Boston Transcript.

"Why was the period between A. D. 500 and A. D. 1200 known as the Dark Ages?" asked the Teacher.

"Because those were the days of knights," replied the Sleepy Student.

"Sarah," said her mistress during the dinner hour, "will you go down to the basement and get the catsup?" Sarah departed, and a few minutes later the family heard a great shooing and scampering of feet. Shortly after Sarah came breathless into the dining room and said to her astonished mistress, "They're up, mum." "What are up?" "The cats, mum."

AN ALARMING SHORTAGE.

The world is suffering a great shortage of food and clothing materials: the ugly menace of famine still threatens much of the Orient.

But, there is a more serious shortage—a shortage of educated men and women to do the necessary work of the world, which only educated men and women can do.

In America the supply is 25% below normal.

For Europe and America together it is 60% below normal.

This additional supply must be provided by the colleges of America or the life of the world will fall below the present levels.

To increase the American college output 30%—barely enough to maintain the normal supply for our own needs—will require largely increased endowments.

"THEY SHALL NOT PASS."

It thrills the heart to remember the words of that French hero, who, in the darkest days of the great world war, gave his pledge, to his nation and to civilization, that the invading Huns should not pass the point where his enfeebled, harassed but magnificent army had entrenched itself for the preservation of all that was precious against the assaults of their foe. Again and again that enemy massed its forces and hurled them in deadly and murderous attack, but the lines held firm. Cut to pieces, hurled to the ground, broken and battered, they held the awful front against all the crushing surges of the foe, and beat them back, step by step, position after position, until they drove them back and out and away, and France was free from its invaders and civilization was saved from death and destruction. Having done all, those French and Allied forces stood, and then beat back the enemy and gained the sweeping victory.

Persistent and bitter have been the attacks on evangelical religion by the united forces of the world, the flesh and the devil, in all lands and ages. Steadily are the attacks being made today upon the most precious and fundamental truths of the Gospel of Christ. It is a time for outbreathing attacks upon the faith that was once committed to the saints, and for determined and outrageous disobedience to the laws of God governing the individual and social life of the people of the world. While there are most encouraging indications as to the success of the Gospel in evangelistic and missionary fields, and the conversion of multitudes, it is nevertheless true that immorality and infidelity of every form are making desperate efforts to obliterate everything that is sacred in the faith and practice prescribed by the Word of God.

Here we must take our stand. Here we stand. We can not do otherwise. God help us, we shall stand for the truth of God. The personality of God; the deity of Christ, and the atonement he wrought by his death on the Cross, his resurrection and ascension and intercessions; the person and work of the Holy Spirit; the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures; the divine plan for the Christian life and experience, and the outcome of the future as conditioned on the acceptance or rejection of Christ, are, all of them, fundamental to the Gospel of the grace of God. Stand for them we must and shall. These truths are not to be denied or ignored. They are to be believed, preached, defended, emphasized and insisted upon as essential and fundamental to Christian faith and life.

No matter, either, how God's commandments may be disobeyed by a sinful world, there is no power on earth that can set aside the sacred obligations of these divine requirements. Men may indignantly hiss out their objections to good laws, but, after they have said all and done all, there stand in rugged and sublime majesty the pure and holy laws which can not be moved. The laws from Sinai stand like Gibraltar, and if men call them "blue," still they are blue like the depths of heaven, as they are white like the throne of God. They who trifle with them trifle with the holiness and glory of God.

It is for those who are loyal to Jesus Christ, and who are the sworn defenders of his truth and cross, to devote themselves anew, in these hazardous days, to the sacred cause of their King and Savior. The forces of sin and unbelief shall not rule in sacred places, and shall not control in the councils of the professed followers of Christ. They shall not pass. Anew let there be sacred devotion to the supreme cause of Jesus Christ, high resolves for holy success, and unremitting prayer to the God of our salvation.

KEEPING THE SABBATH DAY HOLY.

The Sabbath is a divine institution which is rooted in the deepest needs of our whole human family, and provided for in the Ten Commandments, where we find nine other enactments which are concerned with the world-wide and age-long welfare of the race. It is very crude and shallow for any one to speak of the Sabbath as a merely Jewish institution, and those who do so brand themselves as very ignorant, for, if it is, then it is Jewish to forbid murder and theft and call for pure speech and cleanliness of life, since they are all included in the Decalogue. If any one of them is not binding, then none of them are binding. While they are not conditions of salvation, they are, all of them, imperative obligations of moral life.

The Sabbath is well defined in our Presbyterian Standards with exact regard to the teachings of the Holy Scriptures, and no one who holds a place as a minister or teacher in the Church has any right to teach otherwise. It is there stated that "from the beginning of the world to the resurrection of Christ, God appointed the seventh day of the week to be the weekly Sabbath; and the first day of the week, ever since, to continue to the end of the world, which is the Christian Sabbath." And we are to remember that God has directed us to keep the Sabbath holy.

The Sabbath is not a day for work. We are told expressly to abstain from work on this day. Six days are for work, and we are told that during these six days we are to labor and to do all our work. If these six days are filled with honest labor, all that is necessary, and all that we can do to advantage, will be done. God's rule is supremely wise. All human history and experience prove it to be so. There are some things in the way of works of necessity and of mercy that must be done, and Christ plainly, in words and by example, provided for these. But all unnecessary work is to be avoided, and we are to remember that God has directed us to keep the Sabbath holy.

The Sabbath is not a day for play. The world seems mad on the subject of amusement today, and multitudes are turning the Sabbath into a day of riotous revelry. Millions of people are racing up and down the public thoroughfares in their automobiles for the mere sake of amusement, and other millions are crowding the theaters and baseball fields for the same purpose, while they neglect the Church of God, and all public worship, and all culture of their spiritual life. This way lies destruction. Whether commercialized or uncommercialized, the affect on the soul and on the cause of religion is the same. There is time during the week for play. If not, a half a day should be set apart for it if necessary, for we are to remember that God has directed us to keep the Sabbath day holy.

The midsummer is a time of special opportunity and temptation for Sabbath desecration. The fine outdoor weather gives the possibility for physical recreation, and too many, without regard to the fact that their spiritual welfare should have a place on their life program, throw such concern to the winds, and make the midsummer Sabbath a time for mere temporal enjoyment. Not so will those who have a throne in their hearts for God. Not so will those who remember that they are looking out and up into eternity. The Sabbath provides for some of our highest; holiest and most abiding needs. It is not a day for work nor for play, but for the holy purposes for which God has provided it. It is not a day for bondage, but for high and holy and joyful life in the Lord and the realms of the Spirit. And we are to rejoice as we remember that God has directed us to keep the Sabbath holy.

STEADY FOR PROHIBITION.

Almost every day some new organization for fighting prohibition, and breaking down prohibition laws, is announced. It is always the same old crowd of liquor drinkers and sellers, and whiskey lawyers and papers, conspiring against the welfare of society. They seem obsessed with the thought that they can deceive and overawe the people, and reinstate the old days of saloon debauchery. Many are their schemes, multiplied are their organizations, legion is their name.

They want the prohibition amendment nullified; they want the Volstead law and all other such laws repealed; they want beer back, and whiskey easy to be had, and the saloon once more enthroned; and, failing in all this, they want boot-legging, and poison home-brewing, and exemption from arrest and punishment, and especially they want prohibition to bear the odium of all the crimes of robbery and burglary and murder and theft in the whole country, including their own. In this they are not to be ignored, any more than any other unreasonable and criminal element, for they are dangerous and apt to make trouble.

We do not believe they will be able to succeed in their designs, but they must be guarded against most vigorously, and all good people need to be steady and united and determined to safeguard what they have been so long in securing.

We must keep up law enforcement, and prohibition education and interest, and, through our church and school and prohibition organizations, we must be sure to maintain our position for the welfare of the people, and the advancement of morality and religion.

These liquor fanatics would give anything in the world they could command if they could have a great and decent and commanding organization like the Anti-Saloon League; if they could get an appealing word each Sabbath from the 250,000 pulpits from the ministers who urge their people to stand firm for good morals; and if they could have in every school-room of the country every week some lesson showing the value and salubrity of the saloon and of intoxicating liquor. But they have none of these things and they must get up disreputable organizations and give them as good names as their depraved imaginations can provide.

Good people must not forget the tremendous advantages they possess in church and school education; in their temperance organizations; in laws already rooted in National and state constitutions, in state statutes and city ordinances, against which these liquor elements are viciously fighting. Let us take great satisfaction in our strength, but let us not forget for one minute that the enemy is working in every possible way to get back the old degradation.

Their only advantages are in the brutal and criminal instincts and passions of the evil elements, and in the secular papers which they are able to buy up, in their regular columns, in their editorials, and in many of their cartoons. These papers should cease to lend their influence to this evil cause and should stand for the real welfare of men. But, to counteract even such influences as these, good people have the religious papers and the prohibition papers, and there should be no flinching and no discouragement for a single moment.

A FORTUNATE LOSS?

Dr. Duff, the pioneer missionary of the Church of Scotland, on his first journey to India, took with him his library, 800 volumes of scientific and philosophical books. The vessel was wrecked and the people escaped, but his library was lost. Only a few damaged volumes were picked up on the beach. The only book which escaped without damage was a copy of Bagster's Comprehensive Bible and Psalm Book, the gift of friends just before he left his native shores.

He afterward declared this loss a blessing. It forced him to depend more on the Bible. He seemed to hear God saying: "Go and prayerfully consult that unerring chart, that infallible directory! trust your God; and never will you have cause to regret that you have been severed from your idols, as thereby you become more firmly linked by the golden chain of grace to the throne of the Eternal."

All this sounds old-fashioned enough; but is it possible that Dr. Duff was right in thinking that "God had graciously wrested from him his books and manuscripts" because, as he says, "he had fixed his affections too strongly upon them?" If so, is there perhaps a suggestion here for our theological seminaries as well as for preachers in their preparatory work?

ANTI-SEMITISM.

Persecution of the Jews has been and is common in Slavic and Turkish lands. This is not a result of the war, though the changes following the war have intensified race prejudice and encouraged its violent manifestations.

We in America have little sympathy with anti-Semitism. The Jews here are not persecuted. They have the same rights that others have of citizenship and business activity and the exercise of religious belief.

If there is any line of race prejudice, they themselves draw it, and we have been impressed with the fact in recent Jewish writing that they do, perhaps unintentionally, draw it.

For instance, The American Israelite, usually a safe, wise journal, has the following note:

Anti-Semitism, hatred of Jews, will never die out as long as there is preached from Christian pulpits the accepted story of the crucifixion of Jesus to harrow the souls of the listeners. Greatest is the harm done in the Sabbath schools where there is instilled into the receptive minds of the children an insidious poison which becomes very virulent with their growth and which in the fewest instances they succeed in entirely eliminating from their hearts and souls.

There are some in our land who cherish race antagonism and make a specialty of anti-Semitism, but the mass of Christians, who believe in the accepted story of the crucifixion, have no sympathy with them.

We have seen also an article by a rabbi in the Scribe, claiming that the New Testament story of the Gospel is a mosaic work of disconnected and unrelated parts of the Old Testament taken from their context and made into a figure which when complete is called the birth, life and death of Jesus, and that there is no question but that this was done consciously, or, in other words, that the writers of the Gospels perpetrated a fraud.

Our friends of these two papers may not intend it, but such writing is calculated to stimulate race prejudice. They object to anti-Semitism, but this is anti-Christianity.

Christian believers see nothing in the story of the crucifixion to excite anti-Semitic prejudice. On the contrary, they feel that God honored his chosen people in the giving of his Son for all races. Neither do they charge Moses or Isaiah or other Old Testament writers with conscious misrepresentation.

Race prejudice is an evil whether expressed in Semitic or anti-Semitic terms.

INCOMPETENT CRITICS.

The fact that a man can make a good grindstone does not prove him an authority on education. No more does the fact that he can teach mathematics make him an authority on morals or religion. That he is an authority on electricity does not justify him in judging the Church.

We need to realize the truth that scientific study and intellectual culture do not make one competent to judge of spiritual things. We may not question the ability of the scientist in his own field; but we may confine his authority to the scope which he has chosen for his specialty. His application to material things is likely to bias him in his judgment of spiritual things. In later life, Darwin bewailed the fact that he had lost his appreciation of poetry, music and the plastic arts. He declared that he had become a machine for classifying the facts of nature for the accommodation of men. Devotion to a specialty had unfitted him for other duties. Commenting on this, a writer asks: "Would we call a man who had chosen to live in his bachelor's hall for fifty years to become arbiter in questions of love and matrimony? Then why should we allow a man who has devoted his whole life to biology or chemistry to tell us what is true in religion?"

AGED MINISTERS.

Rev. W. W. Ratchford, of the Presbyterian Church South, is spoken of in the Christian Observer as being over ninety years of age and still pastor of two churches, Tirzah and Waxhaw, in North Carolina. His name is on the roll, with 156 and 39 members in his churches. Eleven members received last year and eleven baptisms, so that he is not one who simply has a name to live. His name is recorded, merely, in its alphabetical place on the roll, so that there is nothing to denote his honorable seniority. It is to be hoped that our own Presbyterian Church will never adopt this plan. Men have a right to such honor as our system gives, of having the names on the roll according to the time of ordination. The Christian Observer gives the names of thirty Methodist ministers who are ninety years of age and over, and asks for the names of Southern Presbyterian ministers who have reached that age. We wonder how many ministers in our own Church have reached the age of ninety. We should be glad to print the names of our patriarchs if sent to us. There must be a number of them. We can see who are the oldest, from the presbyterial rolls, but do not know their ages.

In many places the work of the Young Men's Christian Association is again becoming more distinctly religious, coming back to the normal purpose of its inauguration. The tendency, for a time, to make it a merely social institution, having, to be sure, high regard for the better welfare of young men, was away from its original intention. It was intended to be strictly religious and Christian, in winning young men and the world to Christ.

It is announced with much apparent satisfaction by the Catholic Telegraph that "Justice Powell, a Catholic magistrate, has given authority to serve a writ on the Protestant Truth Society, of London, and the Connellan Mission of Dublin, to prevent the publication of a booklet entitled, Rome Behind Sinn Fein." Thus is given a concrete example of how "Home Rule" would operate in Ireland to suppress the "freedom of the Press" and other obnoxious features of Protestantism. Nothing is more essential to Romanism, in Ireland and elsewhere, than the suppression of the truth, and this item shows how it is to be accomplished, if possible.

Reports in various American papers that missionaries in the Philippines were agitating for independence or against it are denied by the Philippine Presbyterian. It says: "We came here for a distinct purpose. We are the representatives of the churches of America to teach those great principles necessary in the establishment of any true republic. We have come to help bring Christ and his principles to bear on the life of the people. Our schools, our preaching, our churches, all hold to this purpose. To turn aside from this to the discussion of a purely political question would be a betrayal of our trust and brand us as unworthy of continuation in the service."

Rev. Meigs V. Crouse, after a service of forty years as Superintendent of the Children's Home of this city, has resigned, but will make his home in this city, residing in Clifton, at 531 Terrace Avenue. Previous to his service here he had been pastor at Franklin, O., for six years, graduating from Lane Seminary, and being ordained by Dayton Presbytery, in 1875. Assisted most efficiently by Mrs. Crouse, he has done a most useful and beautiful work at the Home, where many thousands of children have been befriended and rescued and given a new and good start in life. Such a life and work as this is noble and helpful beyond the power of words to describe. No minister in this region is more respected and beloved than is this brother, and all who know him join in wishing him and his wife and daughters long-continued health and satisfaction.

One of our older poets wrote some lines on the need for taking care of himself, for the sake of those who would be grieved or injured if he were taken away by death, and he said that he was called on to be prudent "If I be dear to some one else." This is not cowardice or weakness. It is simply the proper expression of tenderness and affection for those who should be kept from pain.

The Southern Baptists believe in sustaining their church papers. Dr. E. Y. Mullins says that "if the Church would put our Baptist papers into every home in the Convention, the denomination would have solved all of its problems."

WAYWARDNESS.

BY E. HOPE FINFROCK.

I missed the blessing of my Lord
Because I did not seek his way;
He pled with me, he called to me,
And yet I willfully went astray.

But still his love yearned for my soul,
And so at last my joys grew dim;
I followed him, and lo! my heart
Has found its peace and joy in Him!

THE MISTAKES OF ABRAHAM.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

The Bible is a book of life. Among books it is truth to say it is the perfect Book, the Infallible Book. And yet it records the deeds of imperfect men, for only One perfect man ever appeared on earth, the Lord Jesus Christ. Apart from him "there is none righteous, no, not one" (Rom. 3:10).

In the passages cited above, the record of two of Abraham's mistakes is given.

"Abraham," says Dr. Joseph Parker, "the great man and prophet of the Lord, once more shows his littleness by giving way to a cowardly fear that strangely divided his heart with the noblest faith found in the ancient world. His fear in one direction was simply ridiculous and pitiful; when he came amongst a powerful people he was always afraid that they would kill him in order to get possession of his wife: on the face of it the thing would seem to be incredible; here is a man who left his kindred and his father's house, who braved the hardships of the wilderness, who arose and pursued kings and slew them, and delivered the prey from the hands of the mighty, tottering like a weak old coward when he thinks that he may be killed. He made a mean figure before Pharaoh, and he makes a meaner still before Abimelech."

Since the world began and so long as the world stands, men and women are destined to be more or less imperfect. This instruction came from the lips of the Son of God:

"The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which sowed good seed in his field. But while men slept his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was sprung up and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares also. So the servants of the householder came and said unto him, Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? From whence then hath it tares? He said unto them, An enemy hath done this. The servants said unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he said, Nay, lest while ye gather up the tares, ye root up also the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harvest: and in the time of harvest I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them: but gather the wheat only into my barn" (Matt. 13:24-30).

Not in this life of sin, care and sorrow can any soul be perfectly pure and holy. St. Paul admitted he could not be. Hear him:

"Not as though I had already attained or were already perfect" (Phil. 3:12).

That was written, too, not by a youthful convert but by a veteran Christian. When the apostle acknowledged his failure to reach a perfectly sinless condition he had twenty years of successful missionary service behind him, and was looking forward to martyrdom for Christ's sake. If that was Paul's attitude of mind on this subject, surely we can afford to make it ours. But look at other scriptures:

"If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (I John 1:8).

"The flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye can not do the things that ye would" (Gal. 5:17).

Listen to Job:

"If I justify myself my own mouth shall condemn me: if I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse" (Job 9:20).

St. Paul's words, in Col. 2:10, "Ye are complete in him," do not warrant us in the belief that we can become entirely sanctified in this life, for by examining the context we discover that the apostle is warning his converts against the danger of dabbling in false philosophy, and is assuring them that in Christ's finished work on Calvary and his matchless teaching they will find all that they need for the salvation and culture of their souls.

It is true that in the New Testament we are exhorted to strive after perfection. St. Paul made it his great object in life, he tells us, by warning and teaching every man, "to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus" (Col. 1:28). But the idea of the word teleios, perfect, is that of a goal to be aimed at, rather than of a condition actually reached in this life.

The fact is that God has two different kinds of men in every regenerated soul. "The first man is of the earth earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven" (I Cor. 15:47), and these two antagonistic forces will wage perpetual war in us as long as life lasts.

Christian experience the world over is against the belief that we can become sinlessly perfect in this life. The poet Cowper has voiced the universal Christian consciousness on this point in the lines:

"My God, how perfect are thy ways!
But mine polluted are;
Sin twines itself about my praise
And slides into my prayer."

What, then, should be the Christian's attitude toward indwelling sin? Surrender? Never! Tolerate it? By no means.

"Oh, watch and fight and pray;
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore."

Mr. Hicks, the painter, kept on his table always within sight, while he was at work upon his canvas, some highly-colored stones. He told Henry Ward Beecher, who was in his studio one day, that when he was working in pigments, insensibly his sense of color was weakened, and by having a pure color near him he brought it up again, just as the musician, by his tuning fork, brings himself up to the right pitch. So needs every man of us, on account of our daily contact with sin and imperfection in ourselves and others, to keep before the eyes of our faith constantly the perfect model of character and conduct, Jesus Christ, in order that, looking unto him, we may be brought up to the proper moral tone, to the right moral and spiritual pitch. No one becomes so perfect in this life as not to need every day to be tuned, chorded, borne up to the ideal of the purest and loftiest life.

The sainted Samuel Rutherford expresses the longing of every healthy Christian:

"I wish for no other heaven on this side of the last sea that I must cross than that Christ shall make my blackness beauty, my deadness life, my guiltiness, sanctification. I long much for that day when I shall be holy. Oh, what spots are yet unwashed? Oh, that I could put off the skin of the leopard and the Moor and exchange it for some of Christ's fairness! Were my blackness and Christ's beauty mixed together, his beauty and holiness would eat up my filthiness. But, oh, I have not cast off old Adam's hue and color yet. Happy are they forevermore who can employ Christ and set his blood and death at work to make clean work of foul souls" (Rutherford's Letters, p. 337).

GRADUAL OVERTHROW.

BY REV. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

Some one has said, "The Christian life is like riding a bicycle; if you do not go on, you go off." Gipsy Smith tells a story of a young couple with whom he once stayed. They had an only child, to whom they were devoted. One night at suppertime a thud was heard on the floor of the room above. Both parents realized their little son had tumbled out of bed, and hurried to the rescue. No harm, however, was done, and the next morning Mr. Smith chaffingly questioned the little fellow about the noise he had heard, who, when asked why he tumbled out of bed, replied, "'Cos I stayed too near where I got in." It was because he went to sleep too near where he got in. There is an old word we used to hear more often than we do now. It is the word "backslide," or "backslider." People backslide because they go to sleep so near where they get into church. To prevent this it is best to get right into the middle of the church and work so hard you don't go to sleep. If you do not go on, you go off. If you don't keep moving, you are down.

When a beggar once asked General Clinton B. Fisk for charity on the ground that he was a Methodist, the General looked at his rags before and behind, and, giving him some money, said: "I see you have told the truth, for you have worn-out your trousers in front by praying and behind by backsliding."

Some one has well said that the way to keep from backsliding is to keep sliding forward.

A minister's little girl and her playmate were talking about serious things. "Do you know what a backslider is?" she questioned. "Yes; it's a person that used to be a Christian and isn't," said the playmate promptly. "But what do you s'pose makes them call them backsliders?" "Oh, that's easy. You see, when people are good, they go to church and sit up in front. When they get a little tired of being good, they slide back a seat, and keep on sliding till they get clear back to the door. After a while they slide clear out and never come to church at all."

Going back is sometimes a dangerous business. It may prove disastrous to others as well as to ourselves. In certain mountain passes of Austria are found sign boards bearing, in German, the words, "Return forbidden." These roads are so narrow and precipitous that there is not room for two carriages abreast; therefore, to attempt to retrace one's path might bring disaster upon one's self and upon those coming after. Once having started there, you must keep straight on until you have reached your destination. Today's pressing duties call us forward, not backward. There are others coming after; we must push ahead for their sakes and for our own. Austria is not the only place where there is need for the warning, "Return forbidden."

An Arctic explorer who thought himself traveling poleward at the rate of ten miles a day found that the ice-floe on which he was sledging was drifting equatorward twelve miles a day; but he would not have known he was being carried backward had he not looked up into the sky. So the professed Christian who plods along with his gaze on the ground may be losing instead of making progress. No one can be certain of advancing without looking up. He who would win in the race for life eternal must look to Jesus, the Author and Perfecter of our faith.

Overthrow may seem sudden, but if you find the cause, it is usually gradual. Rev. J. Stuart Holden well says: "I know quite well that there are some people who grow gray in a night, but one does not meet them often. There are some sins which wither, and blight, and blast life with a lightning flash. But they are not the common sins. That is not the commonest experience. There are some trees which are overblown in one great blast of the winter's gale. But the real cause of their overthrow is found if you examine the trunk, in which the process known as dry rot has been going on for a long time. The storm only makes visible that which has been going on destructively without any announcement. And in the same manner we go on backsliding gradually, so gradually as to attract no attention; and then some crisis of demand comes, some crisis of duty, some great crisis of sorrow or loss, something that shakes life to its very foundations. And then the destructive processes of the past are all unveiled and discovered in the overthrow."

Demas has forsaken me, having loved this present world. There is the secret of this lamentable desertion by a man who won a good name as a soldier of Jesus Christ. What was true of Demas is true of every one who has backslidden and brought reproach on his Christian profession. There is always a secret reason. If we could get at the inside history of every backslider, or of every open apostate, we might find such indictments as these written beside their names: "Deserted from inordinate greed for money"; or, "Deserted from love of the winecup or some other sensual lust"; or, "Deserted through neglect of his Bible and his closet"; or, "Deserted through the enticements of godless associates"; or, "Deserted from tampering with skeptical books or kindred poisons of faith." We are not left to conjecture as to the reason of poor Demas's desertion; he forsook his post of duty from "love of this present world."

Rochester, N. Y.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

It was our privilege to attend the Pilgrim Tercentenary celebration. Plymouth Rock itself, in so far as size is concerned, is a disappointment, but how mighty its magnetism! It is the Mecca of American patriotism. Monday, Aug. 1, was the red-letter day. The President and the pageant were at their best. The crowd from all New England, and almost every state in the Union, stood reverently as the scenes of long ago moved by in panoramic procession. A direct descendant of Massasoit marched with stately dignity, and the children of the Pilgrims were a host. Thousands listened with growing seriousness to President Harding's statesmanlike address. It is not possible to give a summary. It was not only what the President said but the way he said it that impressed and moved the great throng. We felt that we were listening to one of our own whose message came from God. "Plymouth Rock belongs to all America and all true Americans," said the President. Warning was coupled with congratulation. There was no boasting. Read the address again, and then again. The pageant on the shore in the evening was a religious poem, a sermon preached by the hundreds taking part. The leading voices were the voices of the Plymouth pastors.

We found our night's rest in Boston, and the next day visited the historic points, even taking a look at the place where Mary Baker Eddy, who denied the fact of death, is buried. The monument of her folly is the big edifice wherein the "Christian Scientists" of Boston assemble. Not far away is Trinity church, with the statue of Phillips Brooks, with Christ at his shoulder bidding him to preach the Word and fear not.

From Boston we went to Washington, and as we looked in upon the Senate and the House we wished that the whole Congress could have been at Plymouth on that memorable Monday when the President spoke. Maybe the Congress would be able to get the country upon its business feet more quickly. At Arlington Cemetery it was our privilege, as a hospital chaplain, to stand between the chief chaplains of the army and navy, respectively, and with them and two other ministers have part in the burial of one hundred and twenty-four soldiers who died in France. It was a solemn spectacle. Mothers and fathers, wives, brothers and sisters and other relatives were weeping as the last words were spoken, the salute fired and "taps" sounded. Hundreds have been buried in Arlington within the last few months, and there were scores of open graves awaiting succeeding consignments of the heroic dead. It would almost seem best to let the boys rest where they fell, but maybe not.

We also visited Walter Reed Hospital, just outside Washington, and paid a particular visit to a young lieutenant who has been making a desperate effort to live ever since his leg was amputated at the very hip. If you are not in favor of disarmament, go to the Government Hospitals, see the victims of war and hear what they say. You will be convinced. If not yet convinced, look upon the new-made graves at Arlington.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

On the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding, July 21st, the many friends of Rev. Dr. and Mrs. W. F. McKee, outside of Monongahela, and its First Church, will extend hearty congratulations. As a silver wedding our speech is appropriately silver, and our unspoken thoughts are golden, though they are not as usable as coffee set and tray, and knives and spoons, presented by the congregation at the reception on the church lawn, or the handsome sterling spoon expressive of the good will of the local ministers and wives.

Rev. Drs. John M. Gaston and J. Kinsey Smith are spending a part of their vacation at Chautauqua Lake. The Call of the Wild, in a measure, lures others to Canada, though it is no longer a wilderness. So Rev. Drs. W. O. Campbell and J. T. Gibson and Robert Christie are sojourning at Muskoka Lake, while Rev. P. W. Snyder, D.D., enjoys the isolation of Woshoda, Ontario, and the consequent opportunity to prepare a fish score. Prof. D. S. Schaff, D.D., having emerged from Alaska, has gone to his summer home in Northern Michigan.

I lingered for awhile to watch the impressive Red Cross and military funeral at the First Church, last week, of Miss Katherine M. Joyce, a member of that church, who died in France of pneumonia in November, 1918, where she had been serving in an evacuation hospital along the Chateau Thierry lines. Her associates, and members of the Legion, united to do honor to one who truly laid down her life for the preservation of liberty.

The First Church, Wilkinsburg, have decided to rebuild the Ardmore Chapel at a cost of $25,000. The pastor of this church, Rev. George Taylor, Jr., Ph.D., has been invited by the Home Mission Board to address the evangelistic conference at Sacaton, Arizona, beginning Oct. 12th.

In the death of Mrs. John H. McKelvey, at an advanced age, not only the East Liberty Church, but the mission societies of the presbytery, have lost a generous and devoted worker.

The pulpit of the First Church of this city will be supplied, Aug. 7th, 21st and 28th, by Rev. Mark A. Matthews, D.D.; Aug. 14th by Rev. Burleigh Cruikshank;

Sept. 4th, by Rev. Dr. W. A. Jones; Sept. 11th and 25th, by Prof. J. Ritckie Smith, and Sept. 18th by Rev. John A. Hutton, D.D., of Glasgow, Scotland.

The funeral of the late President S. C. Black, D.D., of Washington and Jefferson College, at Clarinda, Iowa, was attended by a representative of the Faculty and of the Board of Trustees. No formal memorial service will be held at the college until the opening of the college.

Mr. James R. Mellon, a prominent and generous member of the East Liberty Church, is preparing to build a stone church, eleven miles from Ligonier, Pa., and in the vicinity of his summer home, for the use of any and all Christian churches.

The Gazette Times of this city, which is outspoken in its support of Prohibition, editorially criticizes the action of Lord Northcliffe in ordering, and boasting that he had been served with, wine in the hotels of New York City, as showing a discourteous disregard of the law, and a spirit of defiance for the law which does not indicate a high character. If an American were to publicly violate, and tempt others to violate an English law in London, Lord Northcliffe would be apt to use his newspapers to comment severely on such violations. That he is doubtless encouraged by a number of his American associates, who are unmindful of their responsibility, and their encouragement of lawlessness, does not lessen his fault. Lord Northcliffe and his hosts are probably severe in their animadversions upon lynch law in the South, but they will find hard work to explain why a defiance of and determined violation of law in the North is more venial than lawlessness elsewhere. In fact lynch law is the passionate action of the ignorant, but a defiance of Prohibition is calculated and cool.

I am again reminded how limited is the mental operation of many, by a letter quoted in the Atlantic Monthly by Rev. Dr. J. F. Newton, recently preaching in London, from a young soldier on the front during the war. It probably expresses the sentiments of many others, for reckless thought and speech are easy; but when this young soldier declares he hates God, because God is Omnipotent, and Omniscient, and did not prevent the war, I wonder if Dr. Newton as his pastor reminded him of his childishness. He seems to have never read the Bible, or realized that this is a fallen world. Almost every child at some time wonders why God did not kill the Devil, and this young soldier's use of the terms omnipotence and omniscience is just as unjustifiable as in the boy of six. I say that he appears unfamiliar with both the Bible and Christianity, for the whole scheme of redemption through Christ implies that God does not regard a compulsory peace and morality as desirable. Doubt is easily stirred by such difficulties. The earthquake at Lisbon more than a century ago was followed by outcries against God. I am not opposed to a certain kind of evolution, but any theory which ignores the Fall of Man, and the whole creation groaning and travailing in pain and this world as related to the universe, may lead to misunderstanding or hating God. Read the magnificent fortieth chapter of Isaiah, and see how men have long ago complained, because they ignored God's attributes, plans and love. It is so easy to take snap judgment in divine questions. Well did Ruskin say: "In the present day it is not easy to find a well-meaning man among our earnest thinkers who will not take upon himself to dispute the whole system of redemption, because he can not unravel the mystery of the punishment of sin. But can he unravel the punishment of no sin? Can he fairly account for all that happens to a cart horse? Has he ever looked fairly at the fate of one of those beasts as it is dying, measured the work it has done and the reward it has got, put his hand upon the bloody wounds through which the bones are piercing, and so looked up to heaven with an entire understanding of heaven's way about the horse?"

I do not claim that mystery in one case is always an answer in another. But in this case it does bid us pause, and walk softly, and not trust narrow logic too easily, especially, yes, especially, because God has reminded us of our limited intelligence, but still more taught us by his profound interest, and his awful sacrifice, that this is not a subject for physical power, but a task related to man's spiritual nature and life, to the government of a universe we never have measured, to a result not to be obtained by a swift command, but by moral agencies and atonements and development in which a thousand years are but as one day. A man, looking on, may possibly hate God if he has no Bible, and no vision of Calvary. But when he knows of God's patience and plan reaching across centuries, and love so amazing as to spare not his own Son to remedy and heal, he will wait silently and hopefully, knowing God is our all, blessed forever.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

The mid-summer stated meeting of Chicago Presbytery was held in the chapel of the Fourth Church on Monday August 1. The following were dismissed: Rev. Frank A. Miller an evangelist, to the Los Angeles Presbytery; Rev. Max G. Cook to Coeur d'Alene; Rev. Jacob Peltz, to Winnebago; Rev. Charles A. Becker to Peoria, and Rev. George B. Dutton, to Chile.

Rev. M. W. Merrell, pastor at St. Anne, gave an account to Presbytery of the memorial service which the St. Anne Presbyterian Church held recently, recounting the memorable life and labors of Father Chiniquy, founder and pastor of St. Anne Presbyterian Church. A committee, composed of Dr. W. C. Covert, Dr. Howard A. Johnston, David Creighton and the St. Anne pastor, was appointed to co-operate with the St. Anne Church in their plans for a permanent bronze memorial statue of the famous pioneer of the Mississippi Valley for Protestantism.

The request of Eugenio De Luca to be dropped from the roll of Presbytery was granted.

Rev. Fred A. Geisenheiner, evangelist, returned recently from a very successful campaign in Des Moines, Iowa, and Folsom, New Mexico, in which scores were converted.

Rev. Frederick E. Johnston, of the McCormick Class of 1921, and wife sailed July 27, for Brazil to take up their life work as missionaries in South America.

Rev. Harold Wilson, of Monticello, Ill., will occupy the pulpit of Buena Memorial Church during August.

Rev. W. J. Du Bourdieu, pastor of the Jefferson Park Church, is holding three open air meetings per week with very encouraging attendance, as many as 600 being present. There is an open park across the street from the church.

Camp Gray under the care of the Church Extension Board is very popular. The full capacity has been reserved for the summer.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HYES, D.D.

The assembly on Presbyterian Hill, Hollister, Mo., opened on Aug. 3. The Young People's Conference closed Aug. 2. The attendance at this conference was the largest in its history, 352 being enrolled. Delegations for the assembly are coming in each day now and the attendance promises to surpass any in past years. A fine program has been provided. We regret that more of our people from Arkansas are not in attendance. It appears Clarksville has fifteen here, the pastor, Dr. Hefron, and his wife chaperoning.

Our vacation of twenty days has been very pleasant, and we are now glad to get back into the work. All correspondence should be addressed to 1114 A. O. U. W., Little Rock. My wife and I drove our car from Little Rock, Ark., to Louisiana, Mo., where we spent ten days with home folks, then to Hollister, and from here into Northwest Arkansas, and back to Little Rock.

Evangelist Lewis and his singer, Mr. Nixon, have had successful meetings at Hindsville and West Fork. They are at this time at Elkins, where a fine meeting is being held. The meeting at Hindsville continued fifteen days, with forty-two professions and twenty-six who gave their names for membership in our church, Rev. W. H. McCarroll, pastor.

Rev. E. E. Morris is now holding evangelistic services in the Concord Church in the Jonesboro Presbytery.

It is with sadness we report the death of Mr. B. J. Galloway, clerk of the Cabot session. The church as well as the community suffer a great loss in his death.

Just before starting on our vacation we held services in the Atkins Church, at which time Mr. Elijah Cheek was ordained and installed as elder. We trust a minister will soon be secured for this church.

Rev. W. T. Thurman, pastor at Piggott, is taking his month's vacation in Texas.

Rev. Denton R. Woods assisted Rev. A. E. Carnahan in a series of meetings at Pea Ridge recently.

Rev. E. W. McCracken assisted Rev. W. T. Nicholson in a meeting during July at Capps.

Rev. S. E. Marrs, pastor at Cane Hill, is now the possessor of an automobile, which he is putting to good service in his large field.

Rev. E. T. Preston, of California, is visiting the Tillar group, and we trust that he will receive a call and accept.

FLORIDA NOTES.

BY REV. R. W. EDWARDS.

Rev. G. V. Albertson, Sabbath-school missionary, and Rev. M. E. Gabard, D.D., minister at Osceola, held a Vacation Bible School, at Osceola, with gradifying results. There were nine additions to the Church. One elder was selected and installed. One trustee was elected. One infant was baptized. A resident of the town has given a large corner lot for the church building.

Dr. Gabard held communion service at Aurantia, another of his appointments, and received one upon profession and one by letter. One infant was baptized.

Rev. E. P. Thomson, D.D. of Fort Pierce is taking his vacation at Springfield, O., and will preach there during August. On his way he tarried at the Ovoca Bible Conference to take part in a council of the Chairmen of the Committee on Foreign Missions of the Southeast. A family reunion will take place before his return. One daughter and her husband, having returned from Japan, where they have been engaged in foreign mission work. Rev. H. W. McCombs, a former minister at Ft. Pierce, will supply Dr. Thomson's pulpit during his absence.

Rev. A. W. Pierce, of Green Cove Springs, has entered on his vacation at Canton, N. C.

Friends of Rev. W. J. Zuck, D.D., acting pastor of the church at Lake Worth, will be sorry to learn that he has passed through a second operation in a hospital in Columbus, O., reports indicate improvement, and a probable early recovery.

Rev. W. O. Garrett, of Miami, has entered on his vacation by attendance upon the Bible Conference at Northfield, Mass.

Rev. S. H. Moore, D.D., of Eustis, left last week to spend his vacation in and around Pittsburgh.

Rev. G. W. Benn, D.D., of Fort Myers, is ministering to a large and interested congregation, every Sabbath evening, as he preaches from the pier extending into the Caloosahatchie River. Jacksonville, Fla.

OREGON NOTES.

BY REV. J. EDWARD BLAIR.

The Government Indian School at Chemawa, a few miles from Salem, the state capital, is a really great school, with a large attendance. Miss Gertrude Eakin, a daughter of the late Robert Eakin, of the Oregon State Supreme Court, and an honored elder of our church, has been the Director of Religious Education here for some years, very successfully.

On Easter Sabbath a Protestant church was organized here with 260 members. Rev. Boudinot Seeley, Presbyterian minister, was here from Portland and received the new members, conducted the communion service and helped in the organization. The church is interdenominational and is called the Protestant Church at Chemawa. Of those who were received, 87 came from Presbyterian churches, 48 from Greek Catholic, 26 from Methodist, and 21 from all other denominations, including Christian, Baptist, Episcopalian, Pentecostal, Swedish Evangelical and Salvation Army. Sixteen who had been baptized in infancy were received upon profession of faith, and 62 were baptized as new members. The Greek Catholics are all from Alaska, and are much like the Episcopalians in their belief and forms, and their archbishop has forbidden them to attend Roman Catholic service, so they are all classed as Protestants here. This was the first communion service that has ever been held in Chemawa for the Protestant students. The new organization is meeting a very great need, for the students were beginning to think that the Roman Church had a monopoly on church organization and the sacraments of the Church. The ministers in Salem are in hearty co-operation with the movement and will give regular preaching service once a month.

Miss Eakin says: "As for the rest of the Protestant work here, we have a Sabbath school of 400 members, at which the attendance is made compulsory by the Government. The three older classes are taught by two employes and myself, and the rest of the classes (11) are taught by the older students, the Indian boys and girls. These student teachers I have once a week in a teacher-training class, where we study the lesson for the next Sabbath and do practice teaching. The superintendent, Mr. Harwood Hall, is very considerate and fair, and gives every opportunity for religious work with the children, and of course the attitude of the superintendent and his wife has a great deal to do with the response the children give to the religious work. And both Mr. and Mrs. Hall are anxious to see the highest type of religious life developed among the children."

BIBLE WORK IN PHILADELPHIA.

BY REV. W. P. FULTON, D.D.

The Presbyterian Evangelistic Committee has just closed the most successful summer campaign in its history. One hundred and ninety evangelists, teachers and leaders of music participated in the campaign.

For twenty-three summer seasons the committee has conducted evangelistic services. This year no tents were used but open-air meetings were held on vacant lots, church lawns, plazas, parks, squares and street corners. The aggregate attendance at all these services approximated 80,000. Many heard the Gospel message of salvation for the first time. A number of conversions were reported and many others were helped and blessed by the earnest, faithful preaching of the evangelists. The work of the Church was thus supplemented at a time when many activities cease.

This year the committee laid special emphasis on daily vacation Bible-school work. Thirty-nine schools were conducted with an enrollment of about 6,000. Greater interest was manifest this year in Bible stories, memory work and Bible drill than ever before. The "Bible Drill" was one of the chief features of interest. A list of two hundred Bible questions has been prepared covering the whole Bible and every day, for fifteen minutes, a Bible "quiz" was conducted.

"Know your Bible," is the slogan that was sounded in every school. "Know your Bible," should be the next forward movement in the whole Church. Formerly parents taught the Bible to their children in the home. This good, old custom has fallen greatly into disuse. Parents have shifted the responsibility for the religious training of their children upon the Sabbath school and, with its half-hour of teaching one day a week, the Sabbath school fails to acquaint the children with the Bible. Hence the necessity of additional Bible instruction. The Church has just discovered the opportunity. During the summer thousands of children are released from school and they have nothing to do, and no place to go, except to play in the streets. Then, too, many churches are idle, with doors locked and windows barred. Why not unlock the doors and unbar the windows and let the children come in? What better use can be made of these buildings? "Know your Bible." This is what the Vacation Bible Schools are saying to thousands of children. If the Church, during the next quarter of a century, succeeds in getting the Word of God deeply planted and rooted in the minds and hearts of the coming generation it will yield a harvest of strong, vigorous, robust Christians and the Kingdom of God will move forward a pace.

NORTH DAKOTA.

BY REV. R. T. FULTON, S. C.

The most successful meeting ever held by the Synod of North Dakota closed July 18th. It was the second of the Summer Conference Synods. It is believed that an adjustment satisfactory to all was reached by the change of date to the Tuesday after the third Thursday of June, the date for next year being June 20th.

Rev. Stuart M. Campbell, D.D., of Galesburg, Ill., was present throughout the conference, leading in the morning Bible hour and in the vesper services.

Four men were present to represent the Boards: Rev. Ernest F. Hall, D.D., Rev. John Bailey Kelly, Mr. J. M. Somerndike and Rev. Robert E. Pugh, D.D.

Rev. P. W. Erickson, D.D., of Minot, spoke on "The Religious Education of the Child"; Rev. C. H. Grube, of Towner, on "The Church of the Living God, and Living Problems"; Rev. P. H. Case, of Devils Lake, on "The Mechanics of Church Work."

The ministers of North Dakota are among the best paid in the Presbyterian Church, the average salary being but slightly under $2,000 and manse, and practically every field which can support a man is filled. This is largely due to Rev. L. C. McEwen, D.D., the Superintendent of Home Missions. There are still some fields where salaries can not be large. Efficient and consecrated men are needed for these places.

OVOCA BIBLE CONFERENCE.

BY REV. JAMES F. RPICE, D.D.

The Conferences at Ovoca have closed. The Young People's Conference was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed. There was an enrollment of 211. The study classes were full of interest and led by competent instructors.

The Bible Conference followed immediately and was a great success. There were about 150 enrolled. All the States in the Southern District was represented. The program gave great satisfaction. Dr. Snowden, Dr. Evans, Dr. Fullerton, Dr. King, Mr. Howell, Mr. Bailey, Mrs. Lindsay, Mr. White and Dr. Cleveland all did excellent work.

At both conferences the recreation was highly enjoyed. The bathing and swimming were fine. The fellowship was as delightful as the writer has ever seen. Too much credit can not be given to Dr. Geo. H. Mack for the success of these conferences.

MINUTES AND REPORTS.

The office of the Stated Clerk announced on Aug. 6 that the Minutes of the General Assembly would be out in about a week. The price of cloth-bound copies is 50 cents and of cloth-bound copies of the Reports, 60 cents, to ministers belonging to presbyteries that have paid their full apportionment. The regular price of the Minutes is $1.50 in paper cover and $2 in cloth cover; and of the Reports 75 cents in paper cover and $1 in cloth cover. The price of the Minutes to clerks of sessions is 75 cents in paper cover and $1 in cloth cover. They may be ordered from the Stated Clerk, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, and remittance must accompany order.

GOD'S WORD.

Am glad that Herald and Presbyter is stressing loyalty to the incarnate Word, who by the Holy Spirit is made known to those who believe in the inspired word.

"Holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Our Authorized Version has stood the test of centuries, speaks to the saved soul the language of the Spirit and does not show the fingerprints of man as do other versions. We are not left to opinions of "scholars" (?). God knows what the Bible says to us. G. B. C.

Enclosed find money order for $2.50, which is for renewal of my subscription to your good paper. We can not do without it. I have read it all my life, and am now 63 years old. My parents and grandparents took the paper. It is the best church paper we know anything about. I always say something like this each year. Often see what others say, but never what I say. Why? Mrs. J. C. R.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The Hartwell Church celebrated the thirty-fourth anniversary of Dr. C. E. Walker's pastorate on July 3d, by filling the church at the morning service to overflowing. Dr. Walker is the first and only minister the church has ever had. At the close of the service Mr. Ignatius addressed Dr. and Mrs. Walker most appreciatively on behalf of the congregation, and then presented Dr. Walker with a gold watch, and gave them both two fine upholstered chairs, an electric reading lamp and some generous bank checks. An attractive leaflet containing the pictures of Dr. and Mrs. Walker was sent to every present and former member of the church, and a great book of bound autograph letters, from all the members and friends, was made up as a souvenir of the happy occasion. We are glad to have the picture of this pastor on our front page.

The new Fairfax Chapel, Wooster Pike, south of Madisonville, was opened with interesting services and an enthusiastic congregation Sabbath afternoon, July 31. The Linwood Daughters of America presented a flag, and donations of chairs for the primary room and of pulpit furniture were announced. This is the third mission work inaugurated by the Madisonville Church, Rev. C. W. Blake, pastor.

J. H. Kiger, Lane Seminary student, who has been in the South in home missionary work, has returned to Lane and is available for pulpit supplying.

Rev. Dr. H. G. Wilkinson preached in North Church last Sabbath for Rev. W. A. Motter.

Rev. Jesse Herrmann preached last Sabbath in the Walnut Hills First Church, and Dr. C. F. Goss preached in the Avondale Church.

Rev. Irvin Thomson is to preach at Loveland next Sabbath in the absence of the pastor, Rev. E. A. Walker.

Dr. Frank Marston preached at Madisonville last Sabbath and on next Sabbath will preach for Rev. J. V. Stephens, Jr., in his former charge at Clifford Church.

For the first four weeks of Dr. Frank Stevenson's vacation the Church of the Covenant is being supplied by Rev. Lester Kemper, his assistant. During the last four weeks Dr. Frank Marston, of the Bible Society, will do the preaching.

Rev. C. W. Blake, of Madisonville, is to be addressed during his vacation at 191 King Avenue, Columbus, O., until Aug. 18, and later at Box 129, Lakeside, O.

Rev. Dr. E. M. Wherry, of India, is to spend the fall and winter in the city and will make his home with his son. Dr. W. B. Wherry, 759 Ridgeway Avenue, Avondale.

Rev. G. W. Shields preached in the Clifton Church last Sabbath in the absence of the pastor, Dr. J. Shane Nicholls.

Dr. G. P. McCulloch preached in the St. Bernard Church last Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. W. D. Malcolm preached in the Sixth Church last Sabbath.

Rev. C. S. Williams preached in the Norwood Church last Sabbath.

Dr. J. V. Stephens preached in the College Hill Church last Sabbath in the absence of Rev. C. A. Austin.

Dr. Lewis Earle Lee preached in the Mt. Auburn Church last Sabbath for Rev. J. W. Christie.

OHIO

At the Men's Club July meeting of the Mt. Gilead Church more than 125 men were present. The meeting was held in the country. Rev. W. F. Watkins, of Delaware gave a fine address.

Rev. W. F. Dickens Lewis, D.D., pastor of the Cleveland Heights Church, has been invited to supply the pulpit of the Merchiston Church of Scotland, at Edinburgh, for the months of August and September, in the absence of the minister, Rev. Graham Park. During the war Dr. Lewis had his headquarters in Edinburgh for fourteen months as American army chaplain.

Rev. Lester I. Evans, of Cambridge, O., and Rev. John O. Paisley, of Melrose Highlands, Mass., supply the pulpit of Central Church, Zanesville, O., in August, during the vacation of Dr. W. L. Whallon, at Altoona, Pa., last Sabbath and in Moweauqua, Ill., the rest of the month.

Rev. I. L. Wilkins, of Paulding, supplies the First Church of Columbus the first two Sabbaths in August, he and his family taking their vacation here at their old home.

INDIANA.

Thirteen additional members were received on July 21 into the Delaney Church, Washington County, Ind., making forty during two weeks. Nearly all are young people, and their union with the church is some of the fruits of a series of evangelistic meetings just closed. Rev. H. B. Gebhardt is pastor.

The tenth annual homecoming of the Sugar Creek Presbyterian Church occurs on Aug. 14. An all-day meeting will begin at 10:30 a. m. Everybody welcome. Mary J. Stern is corresponding secretary and T. A. Brookie, president.

Wabash Avenue Church, Crawfordsville, Rev. W. E. Hunter, pastor, unveiled and dedicated a memorial tablet on Sabbath, July 24, containing the names of sixty-four of their young men and one young woman, who were in the service of the country during the late World War, of whom six were killed in action. This is a union of the First and Central Churches, consummated recently, with 752 members.

The Bible Conference at Winona Lake is scheduled for Aug. 19-26, with Rev. Mel Trotter as Director. There will be no charge for reserved seats this year, as the money to pay the expenses has already been raised by Dr. W. A. Sunday. During his recent evangelistic work at Winona, July 21-24, the sum of $8,115 was raised for the conference, Dr. and Mrs. Sunday contributing $3,900 of this, after giving nearly $20,000 to Winona earlier in the year.

The Winona Lake Presbyterian Church, Dr. James A. Gordon, pastor, has completed plans for a new building. Four large building lots have been purchased. A building fund which has been growing for the past five years was the recent recipient of two one-thousand-dollar gifts and several of five hundred. Shortly there will be an adequate church building.

A splendid bronze tablet marking the new tabernacle at Winona Lake as the "Billy Sunday Tabernacle" was put in place recently. Dr. J. C. Breckenridge is the general secretary of Winona.

ILLINOIS.

At the communion service at Walshville, July 31, five members were received on confession and one was baptized. The church being vacant, Rev. James R. Sager, of Hillsboro, conducted the services.

Rev. R. E. Craighead, of Oswego, will preach at Clinton, Wis., Church of the Covenant of Chicago, and at Earlville, Ill., during his vacation.

The First Church of Fulton, Rev. E. P. Westphal, pastor, sent twenty-two representatives to the Young Peoples Conference at Dixon, Ill. At the conference consecration service, five young people stood beside their pastor and his wife pledging themselves to full-time service for God. A young man enters Coe College this fall as a candidate for the ministry.

Rev. Lloyd S. Ruland, who returns to Shantung this fall, spoke five times at the Fulton Church on July 31. The cause of Foreign Missions was presented in a masterful way. Mr. Ruland was the teacher of Home and Foreign Missions at the Young People's Conference at Dixon.

PENNSYLVANIA.

An Italian church of forty members was organized on July 17th in Easton, Pa., by a commission of Lehigh Presbytery. Mr. Francesco Caravetto has been the missionary. The presbytery has also organized a Slovak church at St. Clair recently.

Rev. C. H. Williamson, of the First Church of Pottsville, has been released by the Presbytery of Lehigh, that he may accept a call to the First Church of Grove City.

TEXAS

Central Church, Denton, Rev. A. R. Copeland, pastor, has a system of distributing tracts and religious literature, from boxes in many prominent places in the community, which is very effective. Any one desiring information may secure it from Mr. Copeland.

IOWA.

Rev. C. A. Montanus, of Des Moines, 521 Securities Building, after two years of field work for Near East Relief Work in Iowa, has been appointed state director of the New York office.

Rev. W. H. Ensign, D.D., after a pastorate of eight years at Hopkinton, the seat of Lenox College, has accepted the Bible chair in Westminster College, Salt Lake City. During his pastorate over 200 members have been welcomed.

KANSAS.

The new church building at Junction City was used for the first time last Sabbath, with largely-attended sacramental services. Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Claggett started for their vacation on the following Monday, to Yellowstone Park, in their automobile. Dr. Harshaw will supply the pulpit during August.

Rev. Norman S. Johnson, formerly of Spring, Kan., has taken up the work in the Rantoul and Bethel Churches, Neosho Presbytery.

MISSOURI.

Rev. W. T. Walker and family, of Green City, are taking their vacation at Hollister Assembly and at other points. In October this church will engage in a union evangelistic series of meetings.

Rev. Paul Helligman, of Dayton, O., has accepted an invitation to Lamar, Mo., and begins his work there at once.

MINNESOTA.

Rev. S. F. Sharpless, D.D., for many years Pastor-Evangelist and Sabbath-school missionary of the Presbytery of Red River, has retired from active service of the ministry after a total service of forty-three years in the Church. Dr. Sharpless held pastorates in Monroe, O.; Fairbury, Ill.; and Second Church, Duluth, Minn., totaling nineteen years. He was pastor-at-large for ten years in the Red River Presbytery. The Synod of Minnesota, in recognition of his services elected him moderator last October. The Presbytery of Red River unanimously passed a resolution expressing its appreciation of his service, placing his name on the honorably retired roll.

The Presbytery of Winona will meet at Rochester Aug. 5 to consider the dissolution of the pastoral relation between Dr. Jones and the Rochester Church. Rev. I. I. Gorby, Ph.D. filled the pulpit of the Rochester Church last Sabbath for Dr. Jones.

NEW YORK.

A successful Presbyterian young people's conference has just been held at Stoney Brook, Long Island, New York, in the spacious buildings of Stony Brook Assembly, whose objects are the extension of the fundamental truths of Christianity and the establishment of a Christian school for boys, where the Bible will be given its rightful place in the curriculum, in connection with the highest order of intellectual training, a distinctively Christian school where boys will be trained and developed in Christian truth and life. The delegates to the young people's conference took regular courses in Bible study, home missions, teacher training and other branches of Christian work. The leader of the conference was Rev. William Ralph Hall, of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work of Philadelphia.

Rev. S. H. Beshgetour, Ph.D., after a pastorate of nine years at Cohocton, has been called to Gorham.

Rev. John L. Minemore has been called to Stevensville, Pa.

Rev. Alexander Thompson has been successfully conducting a school of religious education at the North Church, Geneva. Three ladies, teachers, are engaged with him in the work. The young people of the church and some outside are much interested.

MICHIGAN.

Rev. H. L. Latham, pastor at Jonesville, Mich., will spend August at the University of Michigan Library, doing work on a series of lectures.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Rev. George S. McCune, D.D., of Pittsburgh, Pa., who has been a foreign missionary at Syen Chyun, Korea, has accepted the presidency of Huron College, and takes charge at once. The trustees and other friends of the college are greatly delighted.

UTAH.

The Synod of Utah will meet in Emory Memorial House, Salt Lake City, Sept. 1, 8 p. m., just off the campus of the University of Utah.—Wildman Murphy, S. C.

OREGON.

Rev. Aaron Wolfe, D.D., of Merrill, has accepted a call to Rogue River, Oregon, and was installed on July 28th.

Rev. J. Edward Blair, of Albany, has been in very poor health for the past year, contracting a severe cold while at the General Assembly at Atlantic City, but is now regaining his strength, and hopes to be in the full work before long.

WISCONSIN.

Rev. C. H. Phipps and family, of Galesville, are taking an auto trip to Tennessee. A successful Daily Vacation Bible School was held in his church.

Mauston Church had a successful Daily Vacation Bible School. The average attendance was forty-nine. Rev. S. B. Pinney is the pastor.

Dr. W. A. Ganfield, President of Centre College, Danville, Ky., has accepted the presidency of Carroll College, Waukesha, Wis., and will take charge of the opening of the college year.

Forest County is one of the newer counties of the state, much of its area being still covered with forest, but rapid development is in progress. There are three Presbyterian churches in the county. The one at Crandon was first organized and at one time was a self-supporting church, under the ministry of Rev. C. S. Adams, the Stated Clerk of the Synod of Wisconsin. Its building was burned and has not yet been rebuilt. The next organized church is at Laona, where a church building has been erected, and the pastor, Rev. Mr. Garland, is housed in a beautiful and modern manse. This church is self-supporting. Laona is a lumber town. There is a fine high school here. The third church is at Wabeno, another lumber town. Here also an excellent church building and manse have been built. Rev. L. Sherwin is pastor and is greatly beloved. Rev. J. S. Wilson, of Hudson, who organized all three of these churches, is spending his holidays at Metonga Lake, and while in this region visited all three of these places.

COLORADO.

Evangelist Chester Birch is carrying on a tent meeting at Aurora, near Denver, which is largely attended. The tent is near the Army Hospital and many of the convalescent soldiers attend his meetings. Rev. Dr. Francis E. Smiley is pastor at Aurora.

Dr. P. V. Jenness, secretary of the Western District of the Presbyterian New Era Movement, has, much to the regret of the New Era staff, offered his resignation to take effect Oct. 1, to accept the pastorate of two consolidated churches in Denver. Dr. W. M. Irwin, formerly secretary of the North Pacific District, with office at Portland, will be located at Denver, Colo., as his successor.

GEORGIA.

Harris Street Church of Atlanta will be supplied by Rev. M. M. Hall, D.D., and Rev. R. I. Gamon, D.D., in August during the vacation of the pastor, Rev. Roy T. Brumbaugh.

CALIFORNIA.

Rev. Henry Clifton Thomson, D.D., was married on July 27, 1921, to Miss Amy Hatch, at Los Angeles, and their home will be at 1408 Armadale Avenue.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

The revival in progress in the eastern counties of England is of more than local interest. It is a demonstration of all the Churches of the power as well as of the mysterious working of the Divine Spirit in a genuine religious movement.

Rev. Dr. C. I. Scofield, editor of the Scofield Reference Bible, a minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church, died on July 24th, at his home on Long Island, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. For a long time he was connected with the Moody Church and work at Northfield and was a great religious leader, evangelical and earnest. He died as the result of a general breakdown.

I write this as a word of appreciation of the Herald and Presbyter. I am of a different denominational faith, have never had an opportunity to study Presbyterianism, but I have a friend who is of that Church. For ten years she has regularly passed her papers on to me, and we in turn have passed them on again. One year, no less than six families read her copy. Some of them not Christians at all, and some not able to take any sort of a paper. The good it has done can not be measured. I like it because it is so clean, and wholesome. It never waivers, but seems to be always filled and led by the Holy Spirit. Many times it has been a comfort and an encouragement to me. My two little girls often neglected their tasks to read the paper, and now my two young ladies read it. Through many "dangers, toils and woes," I have come, and days that were dark with doubts and despair, but the paper always had some message for just my needs. I thank you and pray God's richest blessings upon you. I hope that its wonderful work may continue and grow until Jesus comes again.

HOME CIRCLE

MY VACATION.

BY KATHERINE MCINTYRE STRAIN.

Did you ever go from the city's din,
Its rush and swirl and smoke and sin,
Out in the country, in God's fresh air,
Where all is sweet and pure and fair?
I did, on my vacation.

Did you sleep in a tent night after night
And hear the "skeeters" and feel them bite,
And the "hoot" owl hooting over your head,
While the cricket "cricked" in your fresh straw bed?
I did, on my vacation.

Did you wake at morn with the break of dawn

And old Jim Crow was up a-cawin',
And you saw the sun rise over the hill,
And your whole being was all a-thrill?
I did, on my vacation.

Did you go with him in a little boat
Out to where pond lilies float
On placid waters, and as you pull
The waxen beauties, your joy is full
I did, on my vacation.

Did you ever take your hook and line
And bait your hook for the very first time
Do you know the joy of a very first catch?
A feast at Delmonico's never could match.
I did, on my vacation.

Did you gather wild grapes and blackberries, too,

Sweet and wet with the summer's dew?
Did you fry frog legs that spatter and spit
And act as though they were having a fit?
I did, on my vacation.

Did you ever try to learn to swim
With a life preserver under your chin—
Or float on your back—look up at the sky
And watch the clouds as they're flitting by?
I did, on my vacation.

And did you return to the city's din,
Its rush and swirl, and smoke and sin,
With heart renewed and purpose true,
Glad, just glad you had work to do?
I did, from my vacation.

JANIE'S CROWN.

Janie stood by the window watching a little girl and her governess pass up the street.

"I wish," said Janie, with a sigh, "that I could have a pretty hat like that little girl has."

"Wouldn't you like a better one?" asked her mother cheerily.

"Oh, mother! You know how poor we are, and that father could buy me a golden crown almost as easily as a new hat even as good as that one."

"I was thinking of a crown when you wished for that hat," said her mother, "and you have the promise of one, if you are ready to receive it."

Janie turned and dubiously looked at her mother. Surely it was only a joke! But no, there was nothing but sweet earnestness in the mother's kind face.

"A crown, mother, really? Do tell me how I can get it." And Janie almost jumped as her childish fancy brought visions of golden crowns sparkling with precious stones.

Mother smiled. "Has my little girl forgotten the golden text of last Sabbath?" she said.

Janie's spirits dropped, and the eager smile left her face. She knew that text was a long one, and she had to study a few minutes before she could recall it.

"I know it now," she said. "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."

"Very well done," said the mother, placing her care-worn hand upon the curly head of her little daughter.

"But, mother, teacher said God promises to give us a crown only after we are dead. I'd like to have one now."

"God gives crowns to his children even in this life," said the mother reverently—"crowns of contentment with what we have, and joy in doing what is right."

"Oh, is that all?" said Janie disappointedly.

At that instant a lady came in with a bundle of sewing for her mother to do, and baby Charles, waking up from his nap, began to cry.

"Janie, dear, take the baby out on the sidewalk, and wheel him up and down in the shade," said the mother, anxious to give all attention to the lady.

It was delightfully cool under the great branching maples, and Janie enjoyed it very much. But she could not keep the desire for a new hat out of her mind. She wished her father were rich, so he could buy her all the pretty things other little girls have. Or if only she herself could get money enough to buy a hat, how happy she would be!

Suddenly her eye was caught by something glittering in the grass by the sidewalk. She picked it up and examined it.

"Oh, good!" she said breathlessly, looking up and down the street; "now I can buy a new hat!"

She turned the coin over and over, to make sure that she was not dreaming, for it seemed too good to be true.

"My very own, to use as I want to," she said to herself, "for it was lost, and I found it."

But the smile was leaving her face. The coin did not seem to be quite as bright as when she picked it up, and she hastily dropped it into her pocket when she heard the lady opening the gate and her mother standing on the doorstep intently watching her.

At the supper-table Janie's father said: "I feel sorry for poor John Marsden. His landlord means to turn him out into the street tomorrow because he hasn't paid his rent."

"Yesterday was payday," said the mother; "what did he do with his money?"

"He had paid his other bills, and saved a five-dollar gold piece for the rent, and then lost the coin going to the landlord's office."

"Why, Janie, child, are you sick?" exclaimed the mother, as the little girl turned white, then red, and, almost choking, left the table.

"No," she called back, "but I can't eat any more."

"I wonder what ails the child!" said the father anxiously. "I thought she seemed nervous when I saw her in the yard as I came in. And she did not come to meet me as she usually does."

"Oh, I do not think it is anything serious," said the mother, and then added, as the conversation and incident of the afternoon came to her mind, "possibly she is trying to decide between a new hat and a crown."

The father, hearing something about new hat, and knowing that his purse contained no money to buy, did not catch the meaning of his wife's remarks about a crown. He understood it a few minutes later, however, when little Janie, with tear-stained face, came to him as he was passing out the gate.

"Here, father, give this to John Marsden," she said, as she held up the shining gold piece. "I found it in the grass, and wanted to keep it to buy a new hat. But the money isn't mine, and I'd rather have the crown mother talked about anyway."

"The dear child!" exclaimed the father, but Janie was gone in a twinkling.

"How about that golden text?" said mother, when Janie came in humming a tune.

"Oh, mother, I understand it now. I feel so much better since I sent poor John Marsden his money. No new hat I could have gotten with it would be half as good as my crown of contentment and joy in well-doing.—Lutheran Observer.

QUAINT AND CURIOUS.

This epitaph may be seen in Lydford churchyard, on the borders of Dartmoor, England:

Here lies, in horizontal position, the outside case of George Routleigh, watchmaker, whose abilities in that line were an honor to his profession.
Integrity was the Majorspring, and Prudence
the Regulator of all the Actions of his life.
Humane, generous, and liberal, his Hand never stopped
till he had relieved distress.
So nicely regulated were all his motions that he never went wrong, except when set going by people who did not know his key;
even then he was easily set right again.
He had the art of disposing his time—so well that his hours glided away in one continual round of pleasure and delight, till an unlucky minute put a period to his existence.
He departed this life
Nov. 14, 1802,
aged 57,
wound up in hopes of being taken in hand
by his Maker,
and of being thoroughly cleaned, repaired, and set a-going in the world to come.

HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL

Not cream from a jar, paint from a pot, or powder from a box; the tools for effective face building can not be found on the toilet table. The secret of good looks lies deeper,—in the spirit of the man or woman.

A Japanese mother asked the head of one of our mission schools if only beautiful girls were admitted. Oh, no," the missionary answered, "we take any who desire to come." "But," protested the mother, "all your girls are very beautiful." The teacher answered, "We tell them of Christ, and seek to have them take him into their hearts, and this makes their faces lovely." Said the mother, "Well, I do not want my daughter to become a Christian, but I am glad to send her to your school to get that look on her face."

A COUNTRY GIRL.

Once at boarding school the girls were talking of a new scholar whose hands were red and who looked as if she had worked hard.

"Why," said one of them, "I never did a stroke of work in my life."

"You didn't?" said the country girl. "Don't you know how to wash dishes?"

"Oh, no, indeed!"

"Can't you cook?"

"No." Digitized by Google

"Wash, iron, bake or scrub?"

"No! No!" said the girls. "We have servants to do those things."

"Can't you sew?" asked the country girl.

"Well," said one of them, "I made an apron once, but it was so poorly done that my mother had to rip it all out."

"Well," said the country girl, "I would be ashamed to be as helpless as you are—to be like a baby and have some one wait on me. You may talk about your fathers being worth money, but I'm worth something in myself. I can cook, wash, sew, scrub, bake and iron and milk and make butter. I am proud of what I can do, and never would think of boasting about what I can't do."—Ex.

TOMORROW NEVER COMES.

BY NELLIE HURST.

I can not think when I am told Tomorrow, "so and so."
Why I can never see that time
It always seems to go.

For when I think tomorrow's here
And I'm to have my way
I hear folks talking, and I find
That it is then "Today."

The only thing I can suppose
Is when I'm fast asleep
Tomorrow rushes quickly by Just when I can not peep.

And mother says that she has heard
How all the wise folks say
Never put off till that strange time
What you can do today.

VACATION.

BY MARGARET SKINNER.

Parents often dread the school vacation period. Regular hours of study and play broken up. Discipline relaxed. Children turned loose like young colts. The children in the country fare best, as they are pressed at once into the active work of the farm, no time for mischief, idleness, or loafing—but the children of the small villages are a pathetic sight. No study, often no work, no elevating amusement, often no good books to read. No wonder they often drift into idle, dissolute ways during vacation time.

A wise mother of my acquaintance was too poor in purse to take her large brood of children away from home for a much-needed change of surroundings, and yet was very anxious they should not fall into idle habits and undesirable ways. She realized the fact that a change of work was really a rest, and that all play was no rest. So she laid her plans, before school was out. She commented by insisting on an early and regular "getting up" time in the morning. She also, by skillful management, found work for the four older children that would take only a part of the day, and, if possible, leave the afternoon free. For instance, the twelve-year-old boy secured a place as janitor for the village bank. After scrubbing, dusting and opening the bank for the day, he worked for a grocer until noon. The ten-year-old peddled the morning paper, and took care of two of the village cows. Fourteen-year-old Betty she enlisted as her own helper, trying to so plan the work that she could have the afternoon and also a half hour in the forenoon for music practice. Sixteen-year-old Joan was apprenticed to a dressmaker for four hours each morning during the summer. Even seven-year-old Robert carried the washing to and from the washerwoman's for a neighbor and also did her errands. The mother insisted, and demanded, faithful and punctual performance of all their duties, and soon the villagers came to know the Fuller children could be depended upon, and gladly gave them all the work they could.

The afternoons were given to rest and recreation. Several times the boys' earnings were pooled, an auto hired, and the whole family took an outing, the girls and mother furnishing an extra treat for supper. Once they rented a tent and all camped near the river, only a short distance from their home, for a week. This was an experience they talked of for years after. Several times the older children went to the city to a good concert, or to visit the library and secure books, to be returned by mail.

The summer passed all too rapidly. Indeed, the children declared they had never had so much fun in their lives before, and their mother, looking into their happy faces, and knowing with a true mother's intuition that they were better fitted, morally and physically, for their winter's work, said: "If we all live to see another summer, we will try it again."

BETTY'S NEW DOLL.

Betty frowned with all her might the moment Gladys Kaley had gone home. She stood at the nursery window looking after her little friend until a passing wagon hid the stiffly-starched white dress from sight. Then Betty sighed and turned a wistful little face toward her mother, putting a clean dress on Baby Ruth.

"I wish I had a doll like that one of Gladys'," she said slowly. "It's a beautiful doll, mamma. I guess her papa paid a lot of money for it. She says her mamma made the loveliest blue silk coat for it that anybody ever saw, and when I go over to her house she is going to show it to me. I wish Gladys had brought her doll this afternoon. I want to see it."

"Why didn't she bring it?" asked mamma.

"She said her mamma wouldn't let her play with it very often 'cause she might break it or muss its clothes," explained Betty. "Her mamma keeps it for her in a big box in the company room. Oh, dear! I wish I had a doll like hers. Don't you think I might have one, mamma? Mr. Cash has a dear little wax doll in his store window. It's not as big as the one Gladys has, but it is just lovely. Oh, mamma, please let me have that one!" begged Betty.

"How much does Mr. Cash ask for it, dear?" questioned mamma, putting down Baby Ruth and opening her purse. "I can spare only a dollar."

"That's it, mamma, that's 'actly it!" cried Betty.

"Very well, then," said mamma, handing the money to her. "Put on your hat and coat and run down to the store and get it."

"O-oo!" cooed Baby Ruth a short while later when Betty was proudly unwrapping the new doll. "Pitty dolly! Please let Baby Ruth play with it, Betty. Baby Ruth ain't got any dolly, never. Please, Betty!"

Betty snatched the pink-clad doll in her arms and pushed Ruth away. "Don't you dare touch my doll, Ruth Graham!" she cried in such a sharp tone that Baby Ruth's dimpled chin began to quiver. "This is too nice for you to muss, and you're not to play with it ever!" And then she ran from the room, leaving Baby Ruth wailing behind her.

Mamma looked very sober as she took Baby Ruth in her lap and stilled her cries.

Betty stayed playing with her doll until mamma called her to supper. Then she came down looking half-defiant and half-ashamed. Mamma said nothing about her conduct, though, so Betty presently recovered her spirits. When bedtime came, Betty did not feel so well. "Oh, dear!" she sighed softly. Then she sighed a little louder. Mamma looked at her and asked her if she felt ill.

"—just my throat," she quavered, moving restlessly under mamma's gentle eyes. "There's a b-big lump in it."

"I'm sorry, dear," said mamma gravely. "What do you think caused the lump?"

Betty gulped hard. "I—I guess my conscience did, mamma," she said softly. "D-do you s'pose Mr. Cash would take back my new doll and give me two cheaper ones, so Baby Ruth and I could have one each and play all we wanted to with them? Do you s'pose he would, mamma?"

"I think he would, dear," said mamma, with a loving smile. "I will write him a note about it and you may take it to him with the doll tomorrow."

"I feel lots better now," declared Betty. "It isn't a bit of fun being a pig, is it, mamma?"

"Not a bit," answered mamma, as she gave Betty a good-night kiss.

SOMETHING STILL LEFT.

It is an old saying that a penny held close to the eye will shut out the sunshine, and certainly it often happens that little losses blind us to great blessings. A merchant who failed in business a few years ago went home in great agitation, a look of despair on his white face.

"What is the matter?" asked his wife.

"I am ruined; I have lost my all!" he exclaimed, pressing his hand upon his forehead.

"All!" said his wife, "No I am left."

"All! papa?" said the eldest boy. "Here am I!"

"And I too," said his little girl, running up and putting her arms around his neck. "I'm not lost," repeated Eddie.

"And you have your health left," said his wife.

"And your hands to work with," said his wife.

"And your two feet to carry you about, and your two eyes to see with," said little Eddie.

"And you have God's promises," said the grandmother.

"And a good God," said his wife.

"God forgive me!" said the merchant, "I have not lost my all. What have I lost to what I have left!"

He took comfort and began the world afresh.—Ex.

BIBLE TERMS.

Bible words are cups of truth runnig over. God, salvation, heaven, hell, faith, love, Christ, the Holy Spirit, regeneration, sanctification, fellowship, all are rich and overflowing. Let us permit no man to empty them of meaning. For once some of them come to mean little or nothing, all of them will gradually empty. The destructive or Unitarianized doctrinaire first empties these cups, then asks whether they are worth retaining. Our safety is in doctrinally and experimentally keeping them full and running over.

PAUL PREPARES FOR WORLD CONQUEST.

Acts 15:36 to 16:5.

Acts 15:36. And some days after Paul said unto Barnabas, Let us go again and visit our brethren in every city where we have preached the word of the Lord, and see how they do.

37. And Barnabas determined to take with them John, whose surname was Mark.

35. But Paul thought not good to take him with them, who departed from them from Pamphylia, and went not with them to the work.

39. And the contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;

40. And Paul chose Silas, and departed, being recommended by the brethren unto the grace of God.

41. And he went through Syria and Cilicia, confirming the churches.

16:1. Then came he to Derbe and Lystra: and, behold, a certain disciple was there, named Timothy, the son of a certain woman, which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek:

2. Which was well reported of by the brethren that were at Lystra and Iconium.

3. Him would Paul have to go forth with him; and took and circumcised him because of the Jews which were in those quarters: for they knew all that his father was a Greek.

4. And as they went through the cities, they delivered them the decrees for to keep, that were ordained of the apostles and elders which were at Jerusalem.

5. And so were the churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily.

Golden Text: "But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved."

Catechism—Q. 35. What is sanctification? A. Sanctification is the work of God's free grace, whereby we are renewed in the whole man after the image of God, and are enabled more and more to die unto sin, and live unto righteousness.

INTRODUCTORY.

The Gospel was first preached among the Jews, and Jesus was a Jew, according to the flesh, as were the apostles and most of the early disciples. It was a natural thing for the early Christian Church to think that Christianity was a development or a department of the Jewish Church, and that all the converts or disciples must become Jews first in order to become Christians. They did think so, and insisted that the Christian converts should receive the Jewish life and ordinances, as circumcision, as absolutely indispensable in order to salvation. But there were others who said that Christ had not taught them so. They remembered that Christ told them that faith in him as the Savior and baptism were all that was required. They said that as they were sent out to bring the Gospel to the world, and the world to Jesus Christ, their commission was to preach Christ and him crucified, and to baptize in his name, but that they had not been told one word about circumcision or the necessity for becoming Jews.

EXPOSITORY.

36. The whole of the fifteenth chapter up to this verse tells of the settlement of the controversy that had arisen as to whether Christian converts must all accept circumcision and become Jews in order to become Christians. At a Council at Jerusalem, presided over by James, and which had been attended by Peter and Paul and Barnabas and others, it was decided that all that would or could be asked of Gentile converts was that they should believe, be baptized, and live clean and good lives in the service of Jesus Christ. After this Council, Paul and Barnabas returned to Antioch and for a long time engaged there in preaching the Gospel.

This was the great work for that time, and for this time, and for all time. Then it came into the minds and heart of Paul and Barnabas to visit the churches where they had been at work during the two years of the first great missionary journey. It was a loving thing to do, and they would by it accomplish much good.

37. We have here a difference of opinion between two good men, and such differences do occur, and have to be met in the very best way possible. Barnabas wished to take John, surnamed Mark. His home was at Jerusalem. He was chosen afterwards to write the Gospel of Mark. He became after a time, the traveling companion of Peter, so that we may almost think of the book of Mark as being the Gospel according to Peter.

38. Paul remembered that, at an earlier day, John Mark had seen fit to follow his own impulse and leave him, and so he did not care to choose him again as companion.

39. Neither one would change his opinion. They agreed on the great matter of Christian doctrine. They were alike in their devotion to Jesus Christ. They were both ready to die for the truth. But on this point they would not change. So Barnabas took Mark, and started out on his journey, and sailed for Cyprus, his early home. It was just as well. Paul could not have been satisfied. It was a matter of personal relationship. He had a right to consult his personal comfort in some things. So he let Mark go with the one to whom he was congenial.

40. Paul chose Silas. There were thus two companies instead of one. Silas was to prove, and he did prove, to be faithful and devoted, and we find these names closely associated in the work, as, for instance, when they were in the prison at Philippi, their feet in the stocks and their voices raised to God in hymns of praise.

41. They set out from Antioch in this great missionary journey, going through Syria and then through Cilicia.

16: 1, 2. They came to Derbe and Lystra, cities where Paul had been before. He met and strengthened the early converts and preached Jesus to them. But this time he met a young man who was destined to be of usefulness in the Church. The grandmother of Timothy had become a Christian, Lois by name. Her daughter Eunice was a Christian too. It was a good home for Timothy to be trained in as a Christian. Even though his father was a Greek, he does not seem to have opposed Timothy, and he grew up and became a minister of Jesus Christ and of great use in the Church. The young man was known to the Christians at his home and was held in high esteem. It speaks well for one when those who know him best, know him to be reliable and sincere and good.

3. Paul chose him to go out to the work with him. As he was a Jew, Paul thought it well for him to conform to the Jewish custom, and had him circumcised, so that there could be no debate or criticism about him among the Jews. It is well to study up conditions and in our Christian work be wise as serpents, while harmless as doves.

4. They went through the cities preaching the one Gospel of Jesus Christ and mindful of the fact that the Church was one compact, united body, all under the same rules. The apostles and elders had met in Jerusalem for the control and governing of the whole Church, and their decrees were made known to all Christian people. It is well for us to remember that the Church has united life and orderly life, ordained of God, through the Bible by the Spirit, and through its ordained authorities. Let us abide by the rules and orders of God and let us do everything in the Church decently and in order.

5. Under this faithful, apostolic work the churches were established in the faith. More than this came also. Souls were converted and added to the Church. Every Christian should seek for both of these things. We should seek to be strong and unwaveringly true in the faith, and should do all we can to lead others to Christ and to a place in his Church.

CHILD'S MORNING PRAYER.

BY DR. ANSON R. GRAVES.

I thank thee, Lord, for sleep and rest,
For all the things that I love best,
Now guide me through another day
And bless my work and bless my play,
Lord, make me strong for noble ends,
Protect and bless my loving friends,
Of all mankind good Christians make,
All this I ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

THE STOPPED SUNDAY SCHOOL.

"Our Sunday school had to stop when the summer missionary left."

Only a sentence of a dozen words from a western letter, but what pathos it contains, and yet it is only an illustration of what happens every year in hundreds of places.

The tragedy of the stopped Sunday school! What a period of starvation is involved for the child-life of a community, what a blank in their lives, and what ground is lost to both country and Church that can never be regained.

Think of the stopped school; stopped just when interest is being aroused, foundations laid and teachers and pupils becoming attached to each other. How the children must feel lost without the companionship and comradeship created in the school.

May the day soon come when every Sunday school is an evergreen school.—Presbyterian Witness.

VACATION.

Vacation time is trying on a Christian's religious life. Any marked change in life is apt to affect his spirituality. When he leaves his business, his home, his church and his community, he is apt to feel that change is the natural order. Obligations and responsibilities are largely laid aside for the time being. This results in his failing to keep up his religious duties, such as reading God's word, prayer and church attendance. The restraints of home and home friends being removed, he is far more apt to yield to the temptation to do things that he would not do at home. The result is that he is likely to return home with a lowered spirituality. When we take our vacations, let us not give our religious life a vacation. It does not need it. Let us not forget that Satan takes no vacations.—Presbyterian of the South.

IDOLATORS.

Who are they? Of course that name belongs to the heathen. But alas, many professing Christians belong to that class. Unconsciously perhaps; and how strongly they would protest being called by that name. But this scheme and that possession, come first in their minds to such an extent at times as to make them forget their Christian duties.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, AUGUST 21.

Endeavor Topic: Lessons From the Book of Ruth. Ruth 1:14-22.

The Book of Ruth is a very beautiful story of a young woman who was led in the divine providence to choose the people of God as her people, and to become associated with them in her life, so that she became a member of one of their families and a member of the nation, and an ancestress, according to the flesh, of the Lord Jesus Christ.

This was a great change in the life of a little Moabitish maiden. Brought up outside of Israel's homes and families, a member of the Moabitish people, a descendant of Lot, instead of Abraham, she came into the very heart and life of the chosen race and into a place of the greatest honor.

While not exactly a heathen she was not a descendant of Abraham. God paid special honor to several women when he permitted them to come in from the outside and come into the line from which Christ should be born. Some might have objected to Tamar and some to Bathsheba, but they were personally as good as some men in the line, and, after all, it is not so much a matter of where a person has come from or what the person has been, as what he or she has become by the grace of God.

The Book of Ruth then is a lesson in divine providence. The father and mother and their two sons go into the land of Moab because of a famine. The two sons marry two young women there, and the father and the two sons die, leaving Naomi a widow, with her two widowed daughters. When Naomi comes back to Bethlehem, Ruth, her widowed daughter-in-law, comes back with her. She may have learned to love this religion from her husband who had died. At any rate she commits herself to the God of her mother-in-law, and goes back with her, to be identified with her, and her home and her people and her God for life. She made her choice and never deviated from it, and in this she is an example to all in a steadfast and unchanging choice of the service of Christ.

This is a deeply religious book. One has the sense of God all through its pages. God is chosen. God takes care of his loved ones who choose him as their God.

This is a book of tender domestic life. The family of Naomi is broken up by death, and she sets an example of piety before God, and pure devotion to the dead. She deals affectionately and tenderly with Ruth, and, afterwards, with her little babe.

Ruth herself is an example of tender affection. She is not full of selfish concern for herself or for worldly pleasure or gain, but is filial toward the aged mother. In this she is shown to be wise, because through this very course, she became a happy and honored wife and mother, and comes into one of the highest places ever filled by a woman, having a book of the Bible named for her, and becoming an ancestress of the Lord.

Then there is an example of true chivalry in Boaz, the relative who pays such honor to these good women, provides for their welfare, and makes Ruth his wife. He is a true religious gentleman, and not to be lost sight of in the study of this beautiful book.

PRAYER MEETING

AUGUST 17.

THE POWER OF FAITH.
Mark 9:14-29.

There is a great need for faith in the life we are living in this world. There is much trouble and difficulty and sorrow. We meet with troubles of many sorts, and we need to take many things to God in prayer every day. We have great cause for joy in the fact that we have a great Savior to whom we may come in our times of need. The father of whom we read in our lesson at this time had a very great sorrow in the affliction of his son.

When our loved ones are afflicted we have our deepest sorrows. We can more easily suffer ourselves than to witness the sufferings of those who are dependent upon us and whom we would relieve if possible. It is sad when they are physically afflicted. It is worse when they go astray spiritually and morally. The father of the prodigal son had a greater grief over his erring child than that son had over his own poverty-stricken condition. The father of this afflicted son had a sad heart. He did well to bring his son to Jesus, for there he found relief and healing. It was not enough to bring him to the disciples. They could not take the place nor do the work of Jesus.

Christ and three of his apostles had been on the Mount of Transfiguration and there they had wonderful experiences. They had come in contact with the heavenly world in a marvelous way, and had seen Moses and Elijah, who had been for many years in the glories and delights of the heavenly life. But it was not for them to tarry long in these ecstatic surroundings. There was trouble on earth, and Christ hastened down to the foot of the mountain where he found the son and his father, and the nine bewildered disciples who had been appealed to for help which they were unable to give. Christ was needed there very sorely, and he came.

The father had faith in Jesus Christ and his faith only needed encouragement and quickening. He had known about the Lord and was convinced that he could heal his child. Christ could have done this with a word, but he wished to increase and spiritualize the father's faith, and so he held a conversation with him that resulted in the father's making an expression of faith in Jesus which has been a blessing to many wherever the Gospel has been preached. He has been an example for many who have been in trouble and anxiety, and who have been led to bring their burdens to Christ. Such simple faith, and so unquestioning and strong, is sure to meet with a great blessing. The great need of all the world is to have such faith in the Savior. Those who are sinful and weary need to turn to the Lord in faith. Those who would have their loved ones blessed and saved need to come as did this father, whose son was saved by Jesus, the great healer and Savior.

The disciples had come short in faith and met with words of rebuke and instruction from the Lord. He told them that he could not always be with them and that they should rise to a more believing and efficient attitude; and that they should cultivate their faith in the exercise of prayer and fasting. It is a lesson for God's people of today. The Church, in its ministry and membership should be full of faith and power. The call is to meet the sins of the world and cast them out by the grace of Jesus Christ. There should be unflinching faith on the part of God's people. There should be much earnest and humble and flesh-mortifying faith, in order that souls may be saved and that God may be glorified.

OUR EXCHANGES

A LOST CAUSE.

The "wet" parade July 4th, dwindled from the promised 200,000 marchers to 15,000. The more efforts made by the liquor interests to arouse sympathy for their lost cause, the more certain does it appear that their cause is lost forever.—N. Y. Evening Mail.

THE DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

Japan has quite as good reason to distrust American motives as we have to distrust Japanese motives. The United States is far richer than Japan, far more populous, and far more powerful. Of all the nations invited to the conference, Japan is the weakest in resources and in the most difficult position economically. What the situation requires is something in the way of assurances to Japan that the United States is not unmindful of her position and regards her problems at least sympathetically.—N. Y. World.

PEACE AND COMPETITION.

It appears that nations are not so much interested in beating swords into plowshares as they are in beating competitors into oil-fields.—Harrisburg Patriot-News.

DON'T SAY IT.

It is bad enough to think of evil, but it is worse to speak it. Unkind words wound more feelings, start more misunderstandings, wreck more friendships, and break up more homes than almost any other cause that can be thought of. Unfortunately, too, they are easy to speak. The inspired writer was not beating the air when he commended the virtue of bridling the tongue.—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

THE HOUR OF PRAYER.

What better indication can be afforded of a man's good intentions than his willingness to meet God for an hour once a week?—Methodist Recorder.

THE ONLY REMEDY.

The cure for unrest and lawlessness is a new spirit, which the churches, publicists and statesmen are trying to invoke. "You must be born again," is the cry of even the secular papers—meaning that force is futile to cure the wounds of society, and that only the sense of man's relations to the unseen powers of the universe can restore the equilibrium, which has been lost through the trampling of law and order under foot by those in whom the after-effects of the war set up the spirit of anarchy and wholesale destruction.—Montreal Gazette.

THE PRICE RUSSIA HAS PAID.

Russia's loss of 12,000,000 population seems to be a big price to pay for a fantastic economic dream.—Chicago News.

THE IRISH QUESTION.

No one in England or Scotland will ever dream of forbidding the banns of a just and self-determined union between the two parts of Ireland. Instead, every one in Great Britain will welcome such a union if it can be obtained without force or fraud. What we can not do without shame and dishonor is to be parties to the coercion of the Six County Area. Apart from that dishonor, coercion would bring not peace but a sword.—London Spectator.

IN GOLD WE TRUST.

In the early fifties a most unusual thing happened in San Francisco. A large issue of gold coins came from the United States mint with the legend, "In gold we trust," instead the conventional, "In God we Trust." The introduction of the letter "L" raised such consternation that the issue had to be remelted and restamped. The cause of religion would break up into small fragments if we did not have the name of God on our coins, whereas in the present state of the world it is more of an insult to God. Some coins used to honor God, but the man who was responsible for the typographical error on the gold coins was nearer the truth than the man who put the conventional inscription on them. As a nation we are spending our money for that which is not bread.—Pacific Advocate.

THE FOLLOWING

TEST OF AN EFFICIENT COLLEGE

WAS NOT

PREPARED BY MR. EDISON:

1. Does it have a strong faculty?
2. Has it a worthy history?
3. Is it strong financially?
4. Have its graduates been successful?
5. Has it a high educational standing?
6. Has it a stimulating environment?
7. Does it deal with its students individually?
8. Does it offer a sufficient variety of student activities?
9. Has it a progressive policy and well-founded prospects of increasing future usefulness?
10. Is it a Christian college, placing emphasis upon the fundamentals?

A BANKER WRITES CONCERNING BLACKBURN STUDENT:

"I have known this young man for the last six years. He is not financially able to go elsewhere for a higher education, but is very bright, learns rapidly, and in addition is an energetic worker at everything he undertakes. In fact, I know of no other boy that I could commend so highly."

This is the type of student that is given a place in the Blackburn College self-help community. It surely is a crime to turn them away and many more could be helped if you and your neighbors shared in this wonderful work.

I should like to tell you how you may help. Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

GENERAL NEWS

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE SET FOR ARMISTICE DAY.

Unless unexpected opposition develops, the international conference on limitation of armament and Far Eastern subjects, proposed by President Harding, will begin November 11, the third anniversary of the signing of the armistice which marked the close of the World War.

Great Britain's formally expressed willingness to accept any date that would be agreeable to the United States, led to the extension of the definite suggestion to all the invited Powers that they convene on that date. It was unofficially stated that Japan will offer no objection to the suggestion, although the Government at Tokyo would prefer a slight delay merely for the purpose of facilitating the complication of material that will be required by its representatives at the conference. France and Italy, it is understood, will join the British Government in prompt acquiescence.

TREASURY SUGGESTIONS FOR ADDITIONAL TAXES.

A tax of two cents on bank checks, a flat license tax of $10 on all automobiles, irrespective of cost or horse power; an increase of first-class postage rates to three cents and an added levy on cigars, tobacco and cigarettes are said to have been among tax revision suggestions presented by Secretary Andrew W. Mellon, of Treasury Department, to the House Ways and Means Committee, meeting in executive session.

Other suggestions included a reduction of 50 per cent in transportation taxes, both passenger and freight, next year, and their elimination the year following; repeal of the taxes on soda fountain drinks and ice cream; repeal of the excess profits tax and elimination of the $2,000 exemption of corporation incomes; increase of the normal income tax on corporations from the present 10 per cent to 15 per cent, and elimination of the income surtax brackets above 40 per cent, with the surtax rates on incomes ranging from $6,000 to $50,000 increased.

The revenue bill, as revised in accord with these suggestions, would be designed to yield approximately four billions of dollars next year, it was said.

RUSSIAN FAMINE RELIEF BEGUN.

Preparation for the relief of starving Russian children upon release of American prisoners held by the Soviet Government, was ordered to be begun last week by Secretary of Commerce, Herbert C. Hoover, as Chairman of the American Relief Administration, on receipt of a cable from Maxim Gorky, transmitting the Soviet authorities unconditional acceptance of his offer of aid.

Mr. Hoover instructed W. L. Brown, at London, European Director for the Relief Administration, to proceed immediately to Riga, to negotiate with the Soviet representatives concerning the details of supplying food.

Mr. Brown was cautioned, however, that negotiations should be begun only after the American prisoners have been delivered out of Russia as demanded by the State Department.

Freight passing through the American and Canadian canals at Sault Ste Marie, the busiest water way in the world, during July totaled approximately 4,000,000 tons less than for the same month last year, according to the monthly tonnage report. The traffic, east and west bound, amounted to 8,138,583 tons.

Passenger traffic showed little change from a year ago, 10,600 persons being carried east and 11,540 westward.

The greatest decrease in freight tonnage was in ore shipments, less than half the amount carried eastward in July, 1920, being hauled last month. The total was 4,356,760 tons. This, however, was an increase of 1,000,000 tons over June of this year.

Only 2,062 vessels locked through, compared to 2,959 for the month last year, 3,020 in 1919 and 3,246 in 1918.

Coffee drinking has increased 21 per cent, or 100 cups a year for each person in the United States, since the advent of prohibition, according to figures made public by the National Coffee Roasters' Association.

American coffee consumption for the year ending June 30th was 1,281,596 pounds or enough to make 484 cups for every man woman and child in the United States.

Total world production for the year was approximately 2,500,000,000 pounds.

Union labor scored a victory on the Long Island Railroad in a decision by the United States Railroad Labor Board, ruling that negotiations of rules should be held with System Federation No. 90, affiliated with the railway employees' department of the American Federation of Labor.

The officers of the system federation are all employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the company declined to negotiate with them. Long Island officials declared they would deal only with their own employes, and the union took the case to the Labor Board.

Enrico Caruso, the greatest tenor of the last generation, died at Naples, Italy, last Tuesday, after an operation. His funeral, on Thursday was held at the Royal Church of San Francisco di Paola, by special permission of the King of Italy, who was represented by an aid de camp. The ceremonies took on a national character as eulogies of the great singer were pronounced in the name of the King and by the governor of the City.

Another notorious feudist of the West Virginia-Kentucky border was killed last week, when Sid Hatfield was shot as he was entering the courthouse at Welch, W. Va.

The Governor of Illinois, last week, announced his intentions of surrendering to the court, after a warrant for his arrest had been given to the Sheriff to serve. The indictment under which he was arrested charges that, as State Treasurer, he embezzled certain State funds.

A cinematographic achievement has just been demonstrated in Berlin's charity hospital in the presence of physicians and newspapermen.

The films showed every stage of a half dozen operations performed by prominent surgeons.

The process is the invention of Dr. Alexander Rothe, chief physician of the Wilhelmsdorf Hospital, who long has been working with the assistance of the Ministry of Education and the cinematographic-technical association to find a method of filming operations which should show every motion without disturbing the surgeon or employing counteractive illumination.

The films, it is stated, show the operation exactly as the operating surgeon sees it.

The Board of Trustees of the Johns Hopkins Hospital has issued the following dictum:

The maximum fee that any surgeon ought to charge for any operation, no matter how wealthy the patient may be, is $1,000.

The maximum charge that any physician ought to make for attending patients in a hospital is $35 a week.

The effect of the ruling will be felt not only in the hospital, but, because of the standing of Johns Hopkins, in Baltimore City and every corner of the United States, physicians and surgeons assert.

The ruling was issued after thorough consideration of all the conditions surrounding physicians and surgeons.

Formation of the Loyal Labor Legion of New York City, designed "to change entirely the traditional concept of the American Federation of Labor attitude toward employers, the general public and organized wage earners," was announced last week by F. P. A.

Vacarelli, formerly vice-president of the International Longshoremen's Association and new head of the Legion.

Mr. Vacarelli said the constitution adopted by the new organization recognized the following points

"The right of men and women to work, regardless of membership in unions.

"The rights of the public as a party at interest in labor controversies.

"The necessity for laws establishing courts of arbitration, with power to enforce obedience.

"The settling of differences between employers and wage earners without intervention by persons not personally affected."

The coast guard cutter Bear, which rescued Ronald Amundsen's exploration ship Maud from a precarious position in the ice near Cape Serdze, Siberia, has arrived at Nome, Alaska with the news that the Maud had been towed to within one hundred miles of St. Lawrence Island, in Bering Sea, and is proceeding under sail toward Dutch Harbor, Alaska.

Forty-eight persons were killed when the steamer Alaska, from Portland, Ore., to San Francisco, struck a reef near Eureka, Calif., last Saturday night.

HOME AND FARM

GRAPES.

Grape Jelly.—Select the grapes just before they are fully ripe. Remove from the stems and then to every seven pounds of grapes add two pounds or four cups of cold water. Heat the grapes slowly to the boiling point and then mash well. Use the wire potato masher. Cook until the grapes are very soft and then turn in a jelly bag and let drip. Do not press or squeeze. Now line a colander with two thicknesses of paper napkins and set the colander over a small bowl inside of a bowl sufficiently large to hold the grape juice as it filters through. Now measure this filtered juice, return to a clean preserving kettle and boil for ten minutes. Add three-quarters cup of sugar for every cup of juice and stir to dissolve the sugar in the grape juice and bring to a boiling point. Boil rapidly for twelve minutes and then pour into sterilized glasses. When cool cover with parawax and seal securely. Store in a cool, dry place.

When selecting grapes do not make the mistake of purchasing wine grapes. These grapes are over-ripe and will not jell. The double filtering removes the excess tartaric acid crystals in the grapes.

Spiced Grape Conserves.—Wash and steam five pounds of grapes and then remove the pulp and place the pulp in a preserving kettle and add one cup of water to the kettle and cook until soft. Rub pulp of the grapes through fine sieve to remove the seeds. Now add the skins and cook slowly for forty-five minutes. Measure and add, two-thirds cup of sugar for each cup of mixture, one package of seedless raisins, one-half cup of finely chopped preserved ginger, one cup of finely chopped nuts.

Cook slowly and stir frequently until thick like jam. Then store like blackberry jelly.

Apple and Grape Jam.—Wash five pounds of grapes and remove the skins. Place the pulp in a preserving kettle and add one cup of cold water. Cook until soft and then rub through fine sieve. Return the pulp to the kettle add the skins and two pounds of apples, cut in slices, one package of seeded raisins.

Then add three and one-half pounds of sugar. Stir to dissolve the sugar and cook very slowly until thick like jam. Then store in the usual jam or jelly manner.—Ex.

HOW TO CAN HUCKLEBERRIES.

Look the berries over carefully and use none but the fully ripe berries. Now place in a saucepan, one cup of boiling water, four cups of sugar.

Bring to a boil and cook for five minutes, then add five quarts of berries and stir all the time until they begin to boil. Just as berries begin to cook, use a skimmer and skim out the berries, filling into sterilized jars. Fill the jars as full as possible and then add one-half cup of the syrup to fill the jar. Adjust the rubber and lid and partially seal. Place in a hot-water bath and process for thirty-five minutes. Remove and seal securely and then store in a dry, cool place.

This method of shrinking the fruit permits placing more berries in a jar.

Rice Purlo.—Small piece of salt pork, one-quarter pound, chopped fine. One onion, medium-sized can of tomatoes, one cup of rice. Render the salt pork in the skillet and cook it very slowly. Add the chopped onion and fry to a golden brown. Add the can of tomatoes and bring to a boil in a saucepan, then add one cup of uncooked rice. Cook until the rice is done and then stir frequently while cooking. Very tasty dish.

HARD TO PLEASE.

BY A COUNTRY CONTRIBUTOR.

There are some friends so hard to cook for, they are not offered generous hospitality.

Their invitations are "few and far between." An old neighbor comes to our village occasionally to "visit around." Just as sure as the hostess has chicken, she will say, "No, thank you." If it is country ham, she will sometimes say, "It's a little too salty." She tastes and nibbles. I wonder what she eats at home.

A blunt old man says: "The people who are hard to cook for are the kind who have the least at home."

A certain minister used to serve a congregation, and the women folks were so glad when he accepted "another field." He could not eat pork. Now, in rural places, far from a butcher shop, we must necessarily eat poultry and ham. Nobody has an ice house to keep "ram, lamb, sheep or mutton"! We are far from a stream where ice "grows." When this congregation called another pastor, the women put in a voice. One old "mother in Israel" arose at congregational meeting and said: "I wish to express the sentiments of the feminine part of the church. If the men want the preacher entertained, then call a man who is not hard to cook for." Some funny girls on a back seat said, solemnly: "Amen."

A peculiar stranger assisted a home pastor one winter, and worried us so much we "divided him," as they said. When he tarried at the carpenter's house he said: "What! canned fruit for breakfast?" "Yes," said the mother; "my children's appetites are poor in the morning, I have to devise something." He hooted us because we arose rather early. He said: "Why, you'd better not go to bed at all; sleep in rocking-chairs; it would save dressing." Another place he "could not endure hash for breakfast, 'cause it seemed 'chewed up.'" He preferred to do his own chewing! One place they had fresh cows and the cream was over-rich. He said he just couldn't take it in his coffee; it reminded him of sucking calves!

Here at Willowbrook the women are considered good cooks. Nothing quite suited the new man. Grandma Brown was a master hand on potpies, so she made one for Sunday dinner. The brother glanced at it and said: "I am not particularly fond of boiled dough." When grandpa served the plates he then omitted the potpie on the guest's plate. He put on potatoes and the "visitor's second joint of chicken." The guest remarked: "Why can not I have some potpie, too? I'll have to eat something or I'll be weak and sick!"

An occasional guest will be troublesome and hint for certain dishes. A young girl said to her aunt: "Do you always have fowl and ham? Oh, I'd get so tired and crave fresh beef." Aunt said: "We are eight miles from the butcher. It is now August and right in 'dog days.'" That was all she said.

A cousin made a farewell visit among her relatives, as she was going to Australia. She was full of sweet courtesy. If her relatives arose early, she arose early; if they lay late, she did the same. She liked pancakes. She could eat "greens" or kraut. She had no dyspepsia; all things tasted good to Jenny. She was blind to what she heard and saw. That is the ideal guest.

Once we entertained an old aunty who almost made trouble in her innocent way. When she tarried with Brother Robert she unfortunately "told things" the next place. She said "his house was so cold she just couldn't stand it." "Cousin Jane's cooking was so greasy she knew she's got dyspepsia." "Harriet was too stingy to put on the wool blankets, and she shivered and shivered till morning." "Augustus was so cross to his wife and wouldn't allow the women any of the butter an' egg an' calf money." "Simon kept a queer black bottle in the pantry 'cubby hole,' and he drank of it often." A drunkard in the Jones family! Oh, the disgrace! (It was boneset, for I helped brew it.) She went home just in the "nick of time" before we all had a family fuss.

To live in a house by the side of the road,
As the poet said in his song,

Not a Bigger—

Hanover proposes to remain a "small" college—small in numbers but BIG in the conception of life taught in the principles of living exemplified.

There is a general reaction among educational leaders in favor of the "small" college, located in a rural community, for undergraduate work—that is, a decided reaction toward the Hanover type.

The new endowment of Hanover is not for the extension of the scope of instruction, not for new departments, but for maintaining

THE WORK OF THE MINISTER.

The minister has a very definite work and each one should determine to do it to the best of his ability, and as long as he has strength and opportunity to do it. He is to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He is to do the work for the establishment and growth of the Kingdom of God on earth. He is to work for the salvation of souls. He is to strengthen the Church. He is to be a man of God wherever he may be.

He is not to go out simply to be a good influence among the people, trying to bring about better conditions, to keep the social life and environments, to add to the comfort and satisfaction of the people, to promote patriotism and morality, and to help people to be better and happier. All of this will be promoted, as results, if he does the work to which he is sent, and preaches the preaching which God bids him. God has his plans. Let the minister do the work of God and leave it to God to work out the results. For the Gospel was never preached in God's way, without the results being secured that are for the best welfare of the people.

The Gospel to be preached is the Gospel that is in the Word of God. It is the declaration of God as to how human souls are to be saved. They are to be taught the duty of repentance and of faith, as they turn away from sin to an acceptance of Jesus Christ, and become new creatures by the new birth wrought in them by the Holy Spirit. As they become God's children they are to serve him, and they find what is God's will as they become acquainted with God's Word. That preacher is a good preacher who makes the people know the Holy Scriptures, and brings them close to Jesus Christ. No human affection and tenderness, no scholarship or philosophic ability, no social effort or philanthropy or promotion of reform, however good and essential they may be, can take the place of absolute loyalty to the Word of God, and to Jesus Christ, the only Savior of men.

When the minister goes to his charge he owes a duty to his Church and people. Primarily he is to strengthen, shepherd, comfort and help all who constitute the church. Let every member of every family and every child who make up the church be sought out, and ministered to, and trained. Let the minister remember that he is to strengthen them in the faith, and see that they are all developed in the graces of Christian life and service. In so doing he will justify the name of Shepherd, or pastor, as he cares for and feeds every sheep and every lamb of the flock.

But his further work, in which he is to be engaged, and in which he is to enlist the passionate interest and faithful efforts of his people, is that of bringing others to salvation in Christ and to a place in the Church by profession of their faith in the Savior. This is the large work which is to engage his constant and his increasing efforts. The minister is to long for an evangelistic ministry. He is to pray and work and seek that he may see souls saved, added to the Lord and added to the Church.

Absolute faithfulness and steadfastness in doing his work is sure to bring results by the blessings of God. It is in order to the accomplishing of spiritual results that God calls his servants into the ministry. Let them work, in preaching the Gospel and in being good pastors, to strengthen the Church and to bring souls to salvation.

THEOLOGY AT PRINCETON.

Princeton Theological Seminary has a new professor of theology, in the place of the late Dr. B. B. Warfield. For about twenty years Dr. Caspar Wistar Hodge has been Dr. Warfield's assistant and has been now elected as his successor. After having this Chair filled for nearly half a century by Dr. Charles Hodge, and then by Dr. A. A. Hodge, it seems fitting that one of the same family and name should take up the same work.

That there is to be no deviation from the old evangelical lines is evident from a recent address made by Dr. Hodge. After pointing out that the old theology, which he teaches accepts the principle of external authority in religious knowledge and finds it in the Bible as the Word of God, he showed that the "new" theology rests upon the subjective basis of the Christian consciousness, and that this difference in principle results in all the other differences in regard to the doctrines of the Christian religion with which we are familiar.

He then pointed out that another still deeper difference between the old and the new theology, or modernism, lies in the acceptance of supernaturalism on the one hand, and of mere naturalism on the other. If we are to maintain a real evangelical faith, we can do so only on the basis of a pure theism, and theism finds its proper exposition and recognition in the Reformed Faith.

He then said: "Like my honored predecessor, Dr. Warfield, I shall teach and endeavor to expound the Reformed Faith, or Augustinianism or Calvinism. For, as Dr. Warfield has well said, what is the Reformed Faith but just the belief first, that all events in the world, whether in the sphere of physical nature or of human choice, are to be construed under the category of the Divine purpose, and this is just pure theism; secondly, in the sphere of religion, the belief that religion consists, not in the Pelagian principle of dependence upon self, but in the Augustinian principle of dependence upon God; and thirdly in the belief that, in the sphere of soteriology, sinful man is dependent for his salvation solely upon the grace and power of God. Whoever acknowledges these three great truths takes the standpoint of the Reformed Faith in which pure theism, pure religion and pure grace come to their rights."

It is a matter for great gladness that pure evangelical faith is to have so believing and so clear an expositor in the Chair of Theology at Princeton. Evangelical faith is not narrow, nor out-of-date, but is in agreement with the dateless and deathless divine decrees, and is as high and as wide as the eternal and infinite truth that was revealed to us from the throne of God, as holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.

FOUR MINISTERIAL BROTHERS.

We have the privilege of showing a distinguished group of ministerial brothers on our first page this week. It is a happy and blessed thing when God puts into any man's heart his own grace and calls him into the work of preaching the Gospel, but when four brothers are thus called, and prove to be useful and successful ministers, it is cause for sincere and abounding joy.

Rev. Herman A. Goff, D.D., the eldest, is pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Marion, Ill.

Rev. Francis Lee Goff, D.D., is pastor of Rock Hill Presbyterian Church, St. Louis, Mo.

Rev. Warren F. Goff, D.D., is pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Fort Madison, Iowa.

Rev. Edward N. Goff, is pastor of Covenant Church of St. Louis, Mo.

All four of these brothers are happy and useful and successful ministers of our Presbyterian Church. We congratulate them most heartily on their past successes and their present usefulness, and pray that the rich blessing of God may be theirs forever.

SIMPLE ACCURACY.

We noticed the other day in the Statistical Reports of the Assembly Minutes, a church whose membership was set down as 1,500. We wondered at once if the figures were put at this round number just as an easy guess or approximation. So we found last year's report of its membership, added to this the numbers of those received by profession, certificate and restoration, and subtracted the numbers of those lost by death, dismissal and suspension, and the resultant was 1,500 exactly. Here is one Clerk of Session who is as conscientious and exact in his work as a banker, and so every one of the 9,482 ought to be. But many are not so. Presbyterial Stated Clerks complain that Sessional reports are, so many of them, so defective that they are greatly hindered in making out their own reports for the General Assembly. If the trouble all stopped at this point it would be not so bad, but from the General Assembly Stated Clerk's office comes the word, from one of the hard-working subordinates: "The Assembly figures are correct as far as possible, and that is not very far, because there are between 30 to 40 per cent of errors in the addition of the columns in the reports of the Presbyterial Stated Clerks. Taken as a whole their reports are very defective and we have to do the best we can with them. One can have no idea how much editing they need. In some presbyteries every total is wrong."

It would be well for every Sessional Clerk to be absolutely sure that his report is correct before sending it away, and for every Presbyterial Clerk to add and subtract, and verify, and supply deficiencies, and get off his report promptly and accurately. But in some cases a prominent church is put down, for instance, as having no Sabbath school, no figures appearing in the column for this department. Of course there is a Sabbath school, but the figures are left out, and no one supplies them, and it is made to appear that the church is falling short here. Or it may be not a dollar is reported in the "Congregational" column.

It would be too much to hope that no Clerk of Session or presbytery shall make a mistake next year, but it is certain that, if accuracy is striven for conscientiously, we shall be spared some of the mistakes that are annually found in the printed Minutes. Thus the itemized account this year shows a gain of 75,833 and a total membership of 1,712,938, while the printed report made up from presbyterial totals make a net gain of only 55,453 and a total of only 1,692,558. It would be gratifying if there could, would, might or should be simple accuracy.

A RIGHTEOUS JUDGE.

Judge W. A. Kittinger of Anderson, Ind. is familiar with the Ten Commandments, and believes that they are the foundation of all true civilization. Recently two couples appeared before him seeking divorces, their intention being to "swap wives," and husbands too, if possible. But Judge Kittinger refused to further any such iniquity. He said: "There is no need of looking into Blackstone to decide this case. All we need to do is go back to the fundamental laws—The Ten Commandments. 'Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife,' is the only law I need to refer to in refusing to give divorce to these people." Of course those who believe in free and easy divorce will be ready to denounce his as a "blue-law" advocate, because he stands for fundamental morality and the divine legislation, but it would be well if there were more of the same sort, of the same stalwart judgment, in order to rid our country of the crying evil of divorce.

MODERNISM AND TRADITIONALISM.

The Christian Century says: "Men of the modern mind subscribe to the same words as do men of the traditional mind, but the two types of mind invest the words with meanings that are so far apart as to be almost incommensurable."

This seems to be a confession of fraud. Men of "traditional mind" vow that they accept the Bible as the inspired Word of God and our standard of authority. Men of the "modern mind" take the same vow, but say that it is neither inspired nor an authority. This damaging testimony as to modernism by a modernist has drawn protests from various papers, one of which says:

"That is true, and is so much the worse for the 'modern-mind' men. Those the Century designates as 'traditional minds' are men who still believe the Bible is the Word of God. The modern minds have only one honorable course. It is to get out of the churches whose basal beliefs they betray. That they put sinister, hidden means into the phraseology of faith, to suck the life out of it, merely shows they are not honest men, according to commonly accepted standards of honesty. Let them get out and form organizations with which they may be in fellowship. The sooner the better."

The word "traditionalist," as applied to one who believes in inspiration, is a deception. The Bible is not a book of traditions but of facts.

The word "modernist," as applied to destructive theology, is also a deception. This theology is not modern, but ancient. There have always been rationalists who made their consciousness an authority higher than the Word of God. Most of the arguments of those who deny inspiration are simply rehashes of infidel books, which have come down to us through the centuries. They re-appear from time to time, only to be disproved and forgotten. The Word of the Lord endureth forever.

"MIGRATORY FAITH."

We have had a number of letters echoing recent criticisms of Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick's sermon on "Progressive Christianity." We have also letters expressing surprise, and some doubting the accuracy of quotations from the sermon.

One brother gives an extract from a book by Dr. Fosdick which seems to ring true to evangelical doctrine, and asks: "Is it true that the man who wrote this could have written these contradictory paragraphs?"

It certainly is true. Moreover it is not the first time that Dr. Fosdick has lined himself up definitely in opposition to the evangelical faith. The Presbyterian quotes from his correspondence with Dr. W. W. Mead, published some time ago, a positive repudiation of it. Dr. Mead wrote, questioning certain utterances in his book on the meaning of faith, and said:

Faith is believing God—taking his word for a thing, because he said it; absolute confidence in everything he does, because he does it. When God states a fact, I know it, and it is as true and real to me as anything that I can see, or feel, or weigh, or count. The name of "Faith" is also given to the whole body of truth which God has given to men by direct supernatural revelation.

Dr. Fosdick replied:

Of course, you are quite well aware, as I am, that there is a deep and radical difference between your point of view with reference to Christian faith and my own. Under the circumstances, therefore, I do not understand why you should have expected me to write a book that would present your point of view and not my own. I am well aware of the deep aversion with which you regard my interpretation of Christianity, but I assure you it does not in the least surpass the profound aversion with which I regard your interpretation of Christianity. The sort of theology which your letter presents seems to me not only thoroughly false in fact, but pernicious in practical result, and while I understand it perfectly, having lived in it and read its major works, I quite definitely and thoroughly reject it all.

You will see, therefore, that whenever I write a book it will be written, not from your point of view, but from a point of view at the opposite end of the Christian theological line from your own.

Critics who have found Dr. Fosdick's sermon a plea for rationalism have taken him at his own estimate. This letter is an open confession, as the Presbyterian puts it, of "his aversion to the whole evangelical position," and should "put an end to all quibbling over the present discussion, as though it were a quarrel about Shibboleths, difference of interpretations, or splitting hairs. It is a contest between two mutually destructive forces. Evangelism and Modernism can not abide together. The systems and faiths are antagonists."

Justice is a quality so noble and essential that we could part with every other element, in the regulation of human affairs, rather than with this. In fact, if one acts with strict justice toward all those about him, it would seem that he is doing all that could be asked, and that he is, after all, acting with kindness and truthfulness and consideration and even with love. If nothing unjust were being done on earth, it would be a world so transformed as to be almost like heaven.

The United States Attorney General says he is worried over what to do with great stores of liquor of various kinds that the Government has confiscated. We suggest that he ask the advice of Judge K. M. Landis, who has just ordered that $500,000 worth of such stuff be poured into the Chicago River. The sooner it is all destroyed the better.

Each pastor or session is asked to feel at perfect liberty to send us any item of interest that will encourage and stimulate others in the work of the Church. We are sometimes asked who our correspondent is for some particular city or region. We have no exclusive correspondents. Each manse or church is on a direct line to our office, and we shall be glad to learn the facts at any time.

Every preacher should be a doctrinal preacher. He should be a teacher of the truth of Jesus Christ. If he makes known the truths and facts and teachings of the Gospel he is getting the doctrines into the minds of the people.

Christ opened blind eyes when he was upon earth, and still there are blind eyes that need to be opened. It is worse to be spiritually blind than to be physically blind, but it is a disability that may be healed if one will only allow Jesus to do his work in his soul.

The Daily Vacation Bible Schools that have been carried on this summer in hundreds of churches have been the means of more real Bible teaching than some Sabbath schools are able to furnish in a year. But both are good in their way. Both together in the same church are better.

While the vacation time is on, and some are getting a rest, let them rest so wisely and so well that they will be able to work all the better for the rest they have been privileged to have.

The former Kaiser shows up his selfish and insignificant personality by trying to dodge the payment of his taxes over in Holland. Gradually the world comes to see him as a petty and disgusting old criminal outcast.

The Anti-prohibitionists all talk alike, whether they are in the gutter or in some governor's office, tramp or judge, bartender or United States Senator. No slave of liquor likes to be hindered in getting his drinks. The debates in Congress bring out from the whisky and beer Congressmen the same sort of weak complaints and false charges that are made by the whisky paper and the colored roustabout. Their arguments are all on the same moral and intellectual and physical basis. They are all entitled to the same degree of respect, and must all be patiently and persistently overcome.

A very comforting and satisfactory thing was said the other day by a very wise and good man in an address, in which he was urging young people to do their very best and make the most of themselves in the service of God. He said: "It is not at all necessary to be rich." After all the ideas on the subject, this is good to think about.

THE HOPE SET BEFORE US.

BY RUTH G. ROBINSON.

O many mansions, home of hearts that long!
 O place prepared!
 O glory waiting to be shared
 When stands complete the blest, unnumbered throng!

O gates of pearl where watching angels stand
 With welcome sweet,
 And friends much loved and longed-for meet,
 And join in anthems jubilant and grand!

O day that needs no sun and fears no night!
 O cloudless day,
 Without the heat of burning ray,
 But fair in radiance from the Lamb thy light!

O crystal river flowing from the throne!
 O tree of life,
 That healeth wounds of earth's fierce strife
 And maketh end of pain and sigh and moan!

O golden streets that white redeemed ones tread!
 O harps that sound!
 O bright, victorious army, crowned
 With everlasting joy upon each head!

O gladness that our endless song shall sing,
 When we arise,
 Caught up together through the skies,
 And in his beauty see the King! the King!

THE ALL-CONQUERING WORD.

BY REV. J. Y. EWART, D.D.

In these days of stress and strain, of doubt and trial, Christians need a special amount of grace to keep them true and loyal to God, his Word and his work. And here is a Bible text which I commend to any one of my readers who is tempted to be despondent and feels that the world is not being converted to Christ fast enough.

Please read it:

"For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:10, 11).

Here we have a statement of great significance because it is the Word of the Everlasting God, and is his assurance to every worker in the vineyard of the Church that as the rain fructifies the soil, so his Word fructifies the souls of men in the accomplishment of the divine purposes.

Here speaks the infinite and eternal God, who never faileth nor is weary, who "hangeeth the earth upon nothing" (Job. 26:7), who maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning and maketh the day dark with night: that calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: the Lord is his name" (Amos 5:6), who asks, "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" (Gen. 18:14), whose divine Son, our Savior, said while upon earth:

"The things that are impossible with men are possible with God" (Luke 18:27).

"Here, then," says Rev. Dr. W. G. T. Shedd in a most luminous and convincing sermon, "is a ground of certainty that the work of the Christian evangelist will succeed. In lodging the truths of the Bible in any human soul, you are placing something there which is literally eternal, which will have the same value millions and billions of ages from now. No lapse of time can destroy its truthfulness or its importance. The work which you do when you put the few pages of a tract in the hands of an unrenewed man, and by your prayerful earnestness are instrumental in its being wrought into the texture of his mind and heart, will endure forever."

A Gospel leaflet was given to a young man, who threw the pages into the fire; but as they curled up in the flame his eye caught the words:

"Heaven and earth shall pass away but my words shall not pass away" (Matt. 24:35). That young man's mind was set on fire. He found no rest until he found it in the blood of atonement. This was an actual occurrence.

There is a vitality in Bible truth that makes it eternal.

"For the Word of God is vital and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart" (Heb. 4:12).

Believe, too, that God feels a special interest in his own Word. He will give it success. He will prepare the way for its entrance into the hearts of men. It shall not return to him fruitless; it shall accomplish all he plans for it. This can not be said of any other kind of knowledge. Secular knowledge has its place in the divine economy, but biblical truth, revealed doctrines, have omnipotence behind them in a very special sense.

A powerful writer whose words carry weight wherever the English language is spoken, has said: "The words of Jesus are spirit and life" (John 6:63); they bear in them the regenerating force of the divine Spirit to quicken the human spirit. The Gospel is no dead letter; it is a living organism, for Christ Jesus is in it, in it all, and in every part of it, and the energy of the divine Spirit pervades it, so that its words are endowed with the omnipotence of divine love and the irresistibility of divine grace. These brief, terse, mysterious yet simple texts, spread all over the Bible, the inexhaustible supply for the ministers of the Word, those little Bibles that contain the quintessence of the whole—like the mountain lakes, clear yet reaching to vast depths, like the blue of the sky, charming yet leading to infinite heights—they lay hold of the sinner with the irresistible conviction of his sin; they persuade the penitent of the divine forgiveness; they assure the repenting of the adoption of the heavenly Father. The grace of God appropriates, molds and energizes the forms of human speech with creative, regenerative power."

Missionary literature abounds in instances numberless of the living Word's quickening and regenerating power. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis is so confident that so soon as the saving truths of the Book are applied to the consciences and hearts of men, they will work a blessed revolution in the thinking, the habits, the lives of men everywhere that he counsels young men and women in this high and earnest strain:

"With the years lying before you consider well your plans. Build your life into the great things of Christ and his Church. All things else whatsoever will go. Only eternal truth and character abide. What if you do grow tired on Sunday teaching in your classes? It is not at all necessary that you be an athlete. One thing is necessary, that while you do live you fulfill your duty and your divinely-appointed task. It is not of the slightest importance whether you are poor or rich. One thing is important, that while you live you live as a patrician gentleman, filling your life with service for man's sake and God's sake. Whether your gifts be many or few, give them to God! Work, here! There will be time to study there. Here and now, do you serve! Fall into the ranks of Christ's advancing army and his world-movement. Give your wisdom, give your money, here and now. Give your intellect, give your beauty, give your all to your Savior, for man's sake and for God's sake."

RELIGION AND A GOOD TIME.

REV. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

It is not religion but the lack of it that makes people unhappy. Yet how strangely and how widely the opposite view prevails. The apostles were joy-bringers, not joy-dampers. Religion, true religion, is a joy-bringer, not a joy-damper.

A recent writer has well said: "Not a few people are with us who labor under the mistaken notion that to be religious it is necessary to part company with a good time. Spiritual cadavers, mummies or petrified saints have lost their credentials as church members. Red blood, sanity, wholeness, excess of life expressed in service are the passport to Christian character today. To sail your craft on the high seas of Joy you heave overboard only meanness, grouches, disease of the will, fears, gloom, and a faulty compass. "No man ever had, or will have, a really good time until he squares himself with the standard of the world's Commoner, the Christ of Nazareth, God's man. To think evil, plot injury to others and do iniquity is to be lonesome. To hate is to be in hell. The wicked man is always unsuccessful. He may over-reach others, he cheats himself more. Many wear stripes and have on them a brand of Cain, who never get into jail. To sow the wind is to reap the whirlwind. It is difficult to conceal even with adipose the enemic soul and the corpse heart. No, Christianity is a singing religion, the mother of the arts, and was, from the beginning, called the 'way beautiful.' It levies on wit and humor and all the good things of life. It believes that mirth is medicine and that laughter lengthens life, indorsing Josh Billings' remark: "If a man kant laff, there is sum mistake made in putting him together; and if he won't laff he wants as much keeping away from as a bear-trap when it is sot." Our religion is the one recipe for optimism. The jolliest, happiest, longest lived men are preachers. There's a reason. It is not a plethoric bank account. They have found, in experience, that it is great fun to do good, and that religion and a good time are practically one and the same thing."

There are many who think of religion not only as a galling drudgery, but as the surest source of moroseness, melancholy and unhappiness of life. Their idea is that religion is a system of suffering to which many people are willing to submit here in order that they may not suffer hereafter, and that religion's only happiness is in the future, its rewards after death. Instead, the real fact is that religion as Jesus taught it is a thing of present joy and of ever continuing blessedness. It is the gladdest, sweetest, happiest thing in all this world. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." It is religion that gives us the brightest things in life and sin—the dark things, not vice versa. Religion goes down to the deepest springs of our mental, moral and spiritual well-being. It brings untold measures of peace and joy. It takes the sting out of the past. It takes the worry out of the present. It takes the fear out of the future.

It was the sneer of an early skeptic that Christianity is the religion of the sorrowful. No, he was an enemy of Christianity, and most deeply mistaken. Instead, Christianity is the religion of the joyful. No one who makes even a little study of the teachings of Jesus can fail of being impressed with the frequency of his references to and the emphasis he laid upon the fact of the blessedness of the Christian life. The first utterances of his wonderful Sermon on the Mount were a series of "Blesseds," whose depth of meaning no one can over-state. Over and over again he said to his disciples, "Be of good cheer." He told how he gives to his followers the water of life, which not only quenches soul-thirst for the time, but also becomes "in" them "a well of water springing up into eternal life," a constant source of life and strength and satisfaction and joy.

"TAKE HEED."

BY REV. W. H. JORDAN.

Blessed is the man who is willing to be taught and to be warned. I am reading today in the wonderful letter to the Hebrew Christians, written evidently in a great crisis in their history, when the old established order was to give way soon to a new.

In those dark times came this special message to them showing that old things were to pass away, and a new covenant, long prophesied, was to be made with them.

And the special message contained many an admonition. Most of all are they warned against the self-destroying sin of unbelief. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily while it is called today, lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin."

A whole generation perished in the wilderness because of unbelief, which is only another term for disobedience. Tame olive branches were broken off because of unbelief. Unbelief is an open gate to all manner of evil, an unguarded line through which the devastating hordes of evil rush; a leaking dyke which soon gives way to floods of destruction.

Take heed! Beware! Think! Consider! Look at the warning! "An evil heart of unbelief." "Departing from the living God." "Deceitfulness of sin." God's word is a warning. Our own tendencies, as well as the multitude of moral and spiritual wrecks of humanity all about us, are warnings to which we dare not turn a deaf ear.

Look at the catalogue of words used to describe the "evil heart of unbelief": deceitful, hard, stony, impenitent, double, forward, perverse, obstinate, rebellious, deceived, foolish, wicked, backslidden, stout, fearful, carnal, reprobate, proud, covetous, envious. It is a soul's calamity to lack faith in the living God. The carnal heart is enmity against God, is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Proud, self-deceived Nebuchadnezzar is given a beast's heart. The Word fails to profit when it is not mixed with faith. The unsaved man is in "the gall of bitterness," and does not know his own miserable, desperate condition.

But there is also a catalogue of words describing the life of faith, the heart of men who believe unto salvation: "A new heart will I give them"; "I will take away the stony heart of unbelief, and give them a heart of flesh"; "A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Other words, beautiful and dear to the believer, are: wise, sound, humble, childlike, good, pure, single, established, receptive (like Lydia, whose heart the Lord opened); wholehearted (for "With my whole heart have I sought thee," and "I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart"); upright, willing, compassionate.

We can never forget what we are saved from, nor must we forget what we are saved to and what we are saved for. Think of believers delivered from bondage, who were before always subject to fear and superstition, and a fearful looking for of judgment, now made partakers of the heavenly calling, partakers of Christ, members of the body of Christ, built up a holy temple in the Lord—think of us living carelessly, allowing unbelief to gain the mastery, until "an evil heart of unbelief" is produced through "departing from the living God."

Can prophet, apostle or preacher say it too earnestly or too often? "Take heed? Take heed?" Take heed and harken. Take diligent heed to do the commandments. Take heed that no man deceive you. Take heed what and how ye hear. Take heed and beware of covetousness. We do well to take heed unto that more sure word of prophecy, which holy men of old spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Take heed, for we are made partakers of Christ if we hold fast our confidence steadfast unto the end. Take heed lest a promise being left of us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. Take heed, for there is a world of knowledge, a peace, a rest, a joy, an experience, a service, a sacrifice and a reward which only those can know who believe that God is, and is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

"Exhort one another daily. Admonish one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. Exhort one another so much the more as ye see the day approaching. Comfort or exhort one another with the deeper truths of the Word. Exhort and edify, or build up one another. Exhort one another with all long-suffering and doctrine, and convince the gainsayers.

Exhort one another while it is called today. "Now" is one of the most precious words we have in human speech. God's "Now is the accepted time." Now, help one another; exhort one another, Now. Each can help another. Each needs the help of others

Exhort one another lest the barriers of faith be broken down, lest the weak places be left unguarded; lest any of the members of our church, any members of the body of Christ, be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

WINONA BIBLE CONFERENCE.

The Winona Lake Bible Conference, which runs Aug. 18 to 28 under the directorship of Rev. Mel Trotter, the famous rescue-mission man, has adopted an entirely new program. For the first time in the twenty-seven years' history of this great conference, both the gates and the seats will be free. The conference will be supported entirely by the free-will offerings. Days of high privilege are promised under the leadership of great Bible teachers, expositors and preachers, and among the speakers are Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, Dr. John McNeill, Dr. A. C. Dixon, Dr. J. S. Ladd Thomas, Dr. Charles F.

Myers, Dr. Frank Palmer, Dr. A. B. Winchester, Dr. J. C. Masee, Dr. George R. Stuart Holden, Dr. F. G. Coffin, Dr. J. C. McClurkin, Rev. Paul Rader, Rev. Bob Jones, evangelists and mission superintendents. The great number of people already at the assembly grounds and the widespread interest throughout the whole Middle West promise the largest conference in the history of Winona. The new rule of but one speaker at a time, so that a better hearing is given each man and a better opportunity is given the congregations, is a great attraction in this year's program.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

The Second Church, Wilkesburg, has issued a call to Rev. Hugh Leith, D.D., of the First Church, Covington, Ky. If Dr. Leith accepts, he will become the pastor of an unusually well-organized church, active in many agencies and directions, and ready for the direct preaching of the Gospel.

The pastor of the Sewickley Church, Rev. O. D. Odell, D.D., will spend three weeks visiting in New Jersey. The annual report of this congregation is, as heretofore, admirably printed, and full of interesting statistics and facts. It contains a portrait of Dr. Odell, and of the late John D. Carson, for twenty-one years an active and devoted elder. In the resolution adopted by the session of the church, they could say of him: "Mr. Carson's early religious training was along the lines of conservatism and orthodoxy, and throughout his life he clung firmly to the underlying principles which he then acquired. To his mind the fundamental doctrines of Christianity were never matters of doubt or question. With these positive convictions he had, however, a wise and gentle tolerance for those who did not agree with him, so long as he felt these differences did not affect the extension of the kingdom, or the life and character of the individual." That is the right kind of hand of iron in the glove of velvet. "Tender and true," but true first! The financial report is encouraging, the total for congregational and benevolence being $79,060, an increase of $6,542 over last year. Their giving is varied, but they avoid Paul's criticism, for they provide first for their own household, that is, for the General Assembly Boards. While laboring under the shadow of a pastorless pulpit, fifteen new members have been received on confession. Doubtless this church is in its methods like many others today, but the reports of the many and differing societies and the committees of elders are interesting and suggestive.

Rev. Stanley A. Hunter, of the North Church, having supplied the Bryn Mawr Church pulpit for three Sabbaths, has gone to Canada for further recreation.

Rev. George McK. Ryall, D.D., supplied the pulpit of the East Liberty Church on Aug. 14.

The Council of the Reformed Churches, to be held in the First Church of this city, beginning Sept. 16, bids fair to be of large interest and possible usefulness. The last council was held in Aberdeen, Scotland, in 1913, and the next was postponed from 1917 because of the great war. What awful clouds have hung above Europe since those bright days when in the beautiful granite city so many were welcomed by Professor Stalker and President Adam Smith in church and home and university. Since then both of these, with so many others, have seen their noble sons fall in the great fight, and have been forced to repeat the old pathetic and hopeful sigh: "He shall not return to me, but I shall go to him." The range of addresses is alluring. The President's address by Rev. William Park, D.D., of Belfast; the Lord's Supper address by our Moderator, H. C. Swearingen, D.D.; that by Rev. Norman McLean, D.D., of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh; Prof. Nairne's "Explorations in Bible Lands"; "The Unity of the Church," by D. J. Burrell, D.D.; Prof. P. Carnegie Simpson's discussion of "The Conception of the Ministry in Relation to the Problems Raised by the Lambeth and Other Conferences"; "Calvinism and the Spirit of the Age," by Rev. William Crowe, D.D.; "The Principles of Christ as Applied to Industrial and Social Problems," by R. J. Drummond, D.D.; two temperance views, "The Progress of Temperance in the Old World," by Rev. Norman McLean, D.D., and "World-Wide Prohibition," by Hon. W. J. Bryan; then "Christian Education in the Public Schools," by Prof. John H. Finley; and "Christian Education in Colleges and Universities," by President W. O. Thompson, D.D.; these, and others, like "The Negro Problem," by President H. L. McCrorey, D.D., promise a feast of reason and stimulating thought. The Committee on Entertainment has arranged for automobile excursions on the two Saturday afternoons, to show the delegates that this is "no mean city," and that in picturesqueness of site and beauty of rivers and residences it is unsurpassed. The International Women's Missionary Society will hold its sessions in Grace Reformed Church, not far from our Bellefield Church and the university.

Again the summer day calls us out onto the front porch to chat over lighter subjects. Here is "Barber Echoes," the admirably-printed little paper of Barber Memorial Seminary at Anniston, Ala., an institution founded by a noble Presbyterian of wealth, who became deeply interested in the Christian education of the negro, and whose large-hearted, sympathetic wife has followed his example. The valedictory address of this year is worthy of any student, male or female. It tells us that four of the eight enter upon teaching, one takes up domestic science, two enter on trained nursing, and one enters on missionary work in Africa. Is not that worth while? We are also told that the seminary catalogue, as well as this paper, is produced by the work of the students. These girls merit our compliments and our regard. And here is a gleam of humor, which the Freedmen's Board passes on: I hold in my hand a little snapshot photograph of a fine-looking negro mother and five children, and note that those at each end are twins and named "Cain" and "Abel." Let us hope that these brothers dwell in amity since Christ has come. Other twins are named Alpha and Omega, and in one of our schools are the twins Sapolio and Castoria! Here, surely, are promises of health and cleanliness. But when your hilarity subsides, are you sure that in the Puritan days there were not equal solecisms, sons and daughters burdened with names scriptural but trying? And is your modern mother who spells her daughter's name Alyse, rather than Alice, or calls her child "Morning Glory," so far off in kinship!

And here is the account of the participation of the Harvard Glee Club in the service in St. Pierre in Geneva, Calvin's church, where his chair is treasured and his memory revered. They took part in singing the Latin chorals, and while the present religious indifference of Harvard University may be associated with them, I should like to imagine they were wiser and cherished a deep admiration for this great servant of the truth of God, this man of profound thought and intense faith, who hoped to create republicanism, to form democracy, and by the individual's sense of value and nearness to God has made heroes and saints of humble men and women, and shaken tyranny, and shall utterly destroy despotism. There where Calvin preached and prayed, those Harvard lads might well see visions and dream dreams, and read history anew, and study the foundation of this wonderful faith and influence. There, I hope, they went out to the little quiet burying ground, and tried to find where the great reformer is buried, for he forbade a monument, so simple, modest, unassuming, hid with Christ, a radiant soul. Then looking across the pastures of Switzerland, they can see the snowy dome of Mt. Blanc, and believe Calvin's worth and truth and influence are as unshaken as the Alps, and shall outlast them all.

GOLDEN WEDDING.

Rev. Thomas A. Wickes and his wife, Lizzie D. Woodbridge, of Somers, Mont., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage on July 27 at their home. They were born, were married, and lived in Marietta, O., until going West. Mr. Wickes is the moderator and senior member of Kalispell Presbytery, where he is held in deservedly high honor. This day was also the silver wedding, or twenty fifth anniversary, of the marriage of their son, William W. Wickes, and his wife, Helen C. Stimson, of Missoula; the twenty-third anniversary of their daughter, Elizabeth D. Wickes, and her husband, Frank M. Hope, of Whitefish, and the eighteenth anniversary of their daughter, Mary W. Wickes, and her husband, William W. Taylor, of Whitefish. The twelve grandchildren, the six parents and the two grandparents, twenty in all, an unbroken band, met and thanked God for his loving-kindness. It was a most rare and beautiful occasion.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Rev. James M. Wishart, pastor of the United Presbyterian Church of Washington, Iowa, has been called to the pastorate of the Crerar Memorial Church, to succeed Dr. John W. Nicely. This is the first time Crerar has experienced the search for a pastor. Dr. Nicely was in charge as preacher of the Crerar Memorial Mission when it was organized into Crerar Memorial Church, and continued as pastor. Dr. Wishart is a cousin of President Frederick Charles Wishart of Wooster College, formerly pastor of the Second Church. It is very gratifying to have these splendid men come over to our Presbyterian body, for it makes us believe that the denomination is not very far off when such men as the two Wisharts, and others who have come over in recent years, can find us all that is necessary for heart and conscience. Dr. Wishart will begin his work with Crerar in September.

Rev. Edward C. Raue, who, a short time ago, came from Wisconsin to the assistance of Dr. Josiah Sibley, pastor of the Second Church, as Director of Religious Education, has yielded to the entreaties of the Wisconsin pastor seekers, and has manifested his willingness to accept the call of the Eau Claire Church. Chicago Presbytery will be loath to let him go.

On the 1st of July Rev. David Bronstein arrived from Newark, N. J., to assume the superintendency of the Christian Mission to Israel, which is under the care of the Church Extension Board. This mission was begun as an interdenominational enterprise, but was turned over to the Church Extension Board this spring. Mr. Bronstein is a graduate of McCormick Theological Seminary of 1919. Since his graduation he has been serving under the Home Missions Board as a missionary in Newark. He was converted under the ministry of Dr. J. Ross Stevenson when he was pastor of Brown Memorial Church in Baltimore, Md. His wife and two children were, later, baptized by Dr. John Timothy Stone, of the Fourth Church of this city. The Board of Home Missions, through its Department of Jewish Evangelization, is cooperating with our Board of Church Extension in this work.

The Berkley Church is rejoicing over the prospect of having a new and more commodious house to worship in. This young church of presbytery has been doing its work in a small building which the men of the community erected in a day some four years ago. The church organization is the outgrowth of a Sabbath school held in the home of one of the families of the community. Rev. Herbert H. Lohr has been most zealous as supply of this young church, and the growth has been very encouraging. Now with what the congregation can raise and aid from the Church Extension Board and $2,000 from other sources, evidently in answer to a plea of the minister, the new building will soon be a reality.

Rev. Burton P. Holt, pastor of the Roseland Church, is proclaimed the recipient of the first prize in a local daily newspaper contest for new subscribers, the prize being a $5,000 automobile. In addition he also received another prize of a $500 piano player for holding the first place from week to week in the contest. Mr. Holt was a chaplain overseas, where he suffered from severe gassing, but not so as to incapacitate him from taking up the pastorate of the Roseland Church on his return. It is rumored that Mr. Holt will not take the expensive automobile, but will ask that he be allowed to purchase a more modest machine and donate the difference to one of the hospitals which cares for the World War veterans. It is stated that he received some 71,999,500 votes, while his nearest competitor received only 42,939,000.

SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

The tenth annual session of the Interdenominational School of Missions will be held in Oklahoma City, Okla., Sept. 12-16. An interesting program has been arranged and excellent instructors secured. Night sessions of the School of Missions and of the Interdenominational Sabbath School Institute will be held in joint sessions. For further information address Mrs. O. M. Galbreath, Secretary, 720 West 5th St., or Mrs. J. B.

Thoburn, President, 1632 West 14th St., Oklahoma City, Okla.

COMMUNITY WORK IN KANSAS.

BY REV. D. C. SMITH.

All the churches of Larned Presbytery are now supplied, except a few of the smallest. Nearly all the churches have increased their pastors' salaries and a number of churches have recently become self-supporting.

Consolidated public schools are rapidly coming into favor in Western Kansas, and this naturally suggests the community church.

At Holcomb, the community church, the only church in the community, is under the auspices of Larned Presbytery. Some time ago I spent a Sabbath there and the attendance was 246 at Sabbath school, though the village has a population of scarcely one hundred. The school plant here cost about $235,000, and the fine auditorium and classrooms of the high-school building are freely used by the church and Sabbath school.

At Kingsdown, another small village in this presbytery, five school districts have consolidated and an $80,000 school building is being erected, and here also the Presbyterians have the community church.

Early in July our presbytery received an urgent request from the town of Chase to organize from Methodist, Congregational and Christian Churches a Presbyterian community church. This starts out as a large self-supporting church. These community churches demand the best talent and a special type of progressive pastors.

At the spring meeting of presbytery a new church was enrolled, called Immanuel, organized in the open country, midway between the two county seats, Leoti and Lakin. A new church building is to be erected and July 26 the work was begun by the people of the community.

Religious education has engaged the attention of presbytery. Last winter the chairman of the Sabbath-school Committee and the Sabbath-school missionary, Rev. D. C. Smith, of Hutchinson, arranged for religious-education institutes in nearly every church of presbytery. Three or four churches were grouped together and the pastors and the Sabbath-school missionary, and sometimes others, were utilized as speakers. Two sessions were held daily, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. One of the visible results of these institutes has been the holding of Daily Vacation Bible Schools. These have been very satisfactory and the number of them will undoubtedly be largely increased next year.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

The Presbyterian Assembly at Hollister, Mo., closed on Aug. 9, after one week's duration. The Boards of Home Missions and Foreign Missions through their representatives, Rev. W. R. King, D.D., and Dr. J. M. Patterson, both of St. Louis, were responsible for building the program. Dr. King presided during the Home Mission program, which occupied the first half of the week, and Dr. Cleveland presided over the last half. Among those on the program were Rev. B. P. Fullerton, D.D., our Western secretary; Dr. Evans, of California; Dr. Snowden, of Pittsburg; Dr. Haymaker, of Africa; Dr. Cleveland, of St. Louis, and Dr. King, of New York. Dr. C. L. Overstreet, district secretary of the New Era for the Southwest, and Dr. Foulkes, of New York, brought messages concerning the New Era. Dr. Overstreet's office has now been transferred from Dallas, Tex., to the Arcade Building, St. Louis, Mo. There were a number of foreign missionaries this year and several of them gave splendid addresses. Dr. Baity was re-elected president; Dr. Bacon, vice-president; Dr. Stringfield, secretary, and Mr. Moore, treasurer, with the unanimous approval of the entire assembly.

During the past year a number of cottages have been erected on the grounds. Improvements were also made upon the grounds by the directors which cost several thousand dollars. The sanitary condition of the grounds is first class. Wholesome water is provided in abundance from a deep well. The patrons enjoy swimming arrangements made for them in Lake Taneycomo. A tennis court has been provided at a cost of about $400. There has also been provided a garage. Mr. Fullbright, who has charge of the cafeteria, provided an abundance of wholesome food. A stone water tower was erected during the past year which insures plenty of water for all purposes. The grounds and buildings have an abundance of electric light and power. The Assembly has 166 acres of ground. Any one desiring a lot can secure one at a very reasonable cost. By next year a hotel will be erected at a cost of $15,000; also a home for the ministers at a cost of $10,000. A number of new cottages will also be erected.

The Presbyterian Assembly at Hollister is now a permanent institution backed up and supported by Missouri, Oklahoma, Kansas and Arkansas Synods. There were large delegations from each of these. Texas Synod had thirty delegates, but this synod has an assembly of its own. We welcome always delegates from all the synods. The Home and Foreign Boards will arrange the program for next year.

Rev. A. L. Carter conducted the music. The vesper services were conducted by Dr. Young, pastor of City Temple, Dallas, Tex. The superintendents of the grounds, Mr. and Mrs. Shockley, deserve much praise for their efforts in caring for the needs of every patron. The Assembly has no indebtedness and it is the purpose of the management to keep clear of debts.

The writer is now busily engaged in his synodical work and all communications should be sent to him at Little Rock.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

In the Bronx, under the leadership of an ex-soldier, the boys are being persuaded to give up the gambling that has become their habit. Already sixty-seven boys have joined the anti-gambling organization. The Evangelistic Committee of the City of New York is conducting 122 tent and other meetings each week, and meetings for children are held in the streets. Bible stories are told, and the Gospel is preached to the boys and girls. At the Tent Evangel last Saturday, Aug. 14th, Rev. Dr. James M. Gray, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, preached morning, afternoon and evening. Rev. Dr. Mark A. Matthews, of Seattle, former Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, will speak Thursday and Friday evenings, his topics being respectively, "The Signs of the Times," and "The Signs of the Devil." Whenever Dr. Matthews speaks he stirs his congregation.

Rev. Dr. Albert Parker Fitch, of Amherst, Mass., continues to be the supply at the Brick Presbyterian Church. At the Fifth Avenue Church the preacher last Sabbath was Rev. Dr. R. W. Thompson, of the Congregational Church, Bolton, England. Rev. Dr. Joseph D. Burrell, district secretary of the New Era Movement, preached last Sabbath in the West Park Presbyterian Church, of which Rev. Dr. Anthony W. Evans is pastor.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., with representatives of the Rockefeller Foundation, has gone to China to open the Peking Union Medical College.

At the First Presbyterian Church of Hillburn, Aug. 28th, and the first two Sabbaths in September, at Cornwall-on-the-Hudson, Rev. A. R. Russum, pastor, Rev. Carl Miller, of the New York Port Society will be the supply.

The colored people of New York City are very prosperous as a class and very ambitious to get up town among the white folks. They have made Harlem a "little Africa." Saint Mark's Methodist church is one of the leading colored churches in New York. The congregation is about to sell the old site and build a magnificent new church at the corner of Edgecombe and St. Nicholas Avenue. The beautiful edifice formerly owned by the New York Presbyterian Church was sold several years ago to a colored congregation that entered the building with a brass band. The New York Church united with the Harlem Presbyterian Church, which is located in the heart of the "black belt." Nevertheless, the New York-Harlem Presbyterians are doing a good work, Rev. Dr. Evans, pastor. The Presbyterian Church of the Puritans, also surrounded by colored people, is making progress under the leadership of Rev. Dr. George Russell. The colored people are apt to occupy territory en masse, while the Jews scatter everywhere they can get a foothold. The effort to evangelize the Jews is not very successful in New York City, but the effort is being made bravely and in faith. We find great numbers of the Jews in New York to be without any particular religion, many of them not believing in a future life, and many being agnostics, and in some cases atheists.

The Stony Brook Bible Conference will undoubtedly be a greater success than ever this year. In most instances the speakers are Presbyterian pastors.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Edwin H. Dickinson, D.D., of Ligonier, Pa., died on Aug. 1st, at his home, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He was born at Amherst, Mass., Sept. 10, 1843, graduated at Amherst College and Western Theological Seminary and was ordained by the Presbytery of Blairsville in 1882, and installed as pastor of the Church of Pleasant Grove, near Ligonier, where he continued through life, for nearly forty years. He was engaged in educational work for many years in his life, especially as founder and president of Ligonier Classical Institute. The funeral was conducted by Rev. W. F. Fleming, of Ligonier and the burial was at Amherst, Mass. He was a good and useful minister. He is survived by his wife, two sons and two daughters.

Rev. E. Willis Souders, of Niagara, N. C., died on May 31st, in the seventy-ninth year of his age. He was born at Logan, O., and began his ministry in the Lutheran Church. He closed his ministry in the Presbyterian Church South. From the year 1888 on for a number of years he was a minister in the Presbyterian Church, serving with usefulness at Clinton, Ill., Greenfield, Ind., Clinton, Ind., and in other churches. He was a good and sincere Christian minister. He is survived by his wife and two sons.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Rev. Dr. Yount, of Sayler Park, has gone to Mt. Holly, N. J., where he will visit a married daughter and supply the Mt. Holly Church for two Sabbaths.

Rev. Hugh Leith, D.D., of Covington, Ky., has been called to the pastorate of the Second Church of Wilkinsburg, Pa.

Cincinnati Presbytery is urgently invited to come to the Mohawk Church for its September meeting, where Dr. Peter Robertson has been in charge for about thirty-five years. Luncheon will be served without charge by the ladies of the church. As the meeting was appointed for the First Church it will be necessary to proceed in some orderly method if the place of meeting is to be changed.

Many of the pastors of the city are away on vacation, and many others are taking vacation at home, and preaching in other pulpits than their own. Very few pastors were in their own pulpits last Sabbath.

Dr. McKibbin, of Lane Seminary, preached in the Sixth Church; Dr. J. V.

Stephens preached at Clifton in the morning and in the Church of the Covenant in the evening.

Dr. Herrmann, of Avondale, preached at Mt. Auburn and Dr. C. F. Goss filled the Avondale pulpit.

Rev. E. M. Martin, of Westwood, supplied Westminster Church of Price Hill last Sabbath, and Mr. Clinger, of the Y. M. C. A., filled the Poplar Street pulpit.

Rev. Earl McKinney, of Franklin, O., preached in North Church last Sabbath, and Rev. G. W. Shields preached for Dr. Nicholls at Clifton.

Prof. Brokenshire preached at St. Bernard for Rev. W. D. Harrell last Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. L. E. Lee preached in the Hyde Park Church last Sabbath.

Dr. E. P. Whallon preached for Rev. C. W. Blake at Madisonville and Dr. G. H. Wilkinson will fill the pulpit next Sabbath.

The Kennedy Heights Church has contracted for the building of their new manse for $7,900 and already they have secured pledges of over $7,000 for it. It is needed greatly and will be of much help.

Rev. Curtis E. Shields, of Bucyrus, O., filled the pulpit of the Walnut Hills First Church last Sabbath.

Rev. John Glenn, of Lockland, is taking his vacation and his pulpit was occupied last Sabbath by Rev. W. S. Acomb.

Dr. Swiggett preached in West Liberty Church last Sabbath morning and then held services in the Italian Church, baptizing an infant.

OHIO.

Rev. Mayson H. Sewell has resigned at New Philadelphia to accept a call to Marietta.

In the Synod of Ohio there are 663 ministers and 651 churches. This is a loss of three ministers since last year. The number of churches is exactly the same. There are 141,118 communicant members, a gain of 4,756 since last year. There were 9,226 additions by confession, 6,484 by letter and 949 by restoration, but there were 5,425 losses by dismission, 4,305 by suspension and 1,714 by death. There were 3,073 adult baptisms and 3,256 infant baptisms, and 109,197 were reported as members of the Sabbath schools. The total amount raised for congregational purposes is not $42,408,863, but $2,408,868, or forty millions less than the printed figures would make it appear. In nearly every particular there are advances over last year.

The largest church in the Synod of Ohio is Broad Street Church of Columbus, Dr. S. S. Palmer, pastor, with 1,809 members; the next is the Church of the Covenant of Cleveland, Dr. Paul E. Sutphen, 1,557; and, in order, Collingwood Avenue of Toledo, Dr. R. Lincoln Long, 1,535; Northminster of Columbus, Dr. W. M. Hindman, 1,531; Westminster of Dayton, Dr. E. W. Clippinger, 1,417; Covenant of Springfield, Dr. C. R. Adams, 1,286; Westminster of Steubenville, 1,253; Second of Portsmouth, Dr. H. I. Evans, 1,232; First of Youngstown, Dr. W. H. Hudnut, 1,195; Piqua, Dr. E. H. Montgomery, 1,150; Central of Zanesville, Dr. W. L. Whallon, 1,127; First of Akron, W. H. Huber, 1,108; First of East Liverpool, Dr. D. W. McLeod, 1,099; Lakewood of Cleveland, A. J. Wright, 1,096; Mansfield, Dr. E. M. McMillin, 1,071; Westminster of Youngstown, Henry White, 1,067; First of Canton, A. L. Wilson, 1,066; First of Marion, Dr. L. L. Strock, 1,002. No other church in the Synod has a thousand members.

Rev. Frederic A. Dean, who has been supplying the Senecaville and Lore City churches for the past four and one-third years, has resigned and accepted a call to the Second Church of East Liverpool, O., and expects to commence work Sept. 4th. During the past four years a good manse has been purchased and fully paid for in Senecaville, and both churches have increased in membership, pastoral support and several hundred per cent in benevolences. Both churches have been redecorated inside this summer, and the Lore City Church has practically gone over the entire building, having put in a new carpet, pearl glass windows, painted outside and will complete the work with a new furnace this fall. This field is looking for a good man. It is one of the good fields of St. Clairsville Presbytery.

In the Daily Vacation Bible School in Maurice Wilson Chapel, Dayton, over 300 pupils were enrolled, with an average attendance of 180, and 57 never missed a day. The school had nine regular teachers. The work was financed by the Westminster Church and part of the workers came from Westminster school. Rev. Homer K. Miller is in charge of the chapel.

INDIANA.

By the will of Mrs. John Dougan, of Richmond, recently deceased, the First Presbyterian Church of Richmond receives $10,000; Western College of Oxford, O., $5,000; Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board, $10,000; Presbyterian Home Missions Board, $10,000; the Margaret Smith Home, $10,000; Earlham College, $5,000; the rest of the estate going to relatives and friends.

Rev. Dr. W. O. Carrier, of Chicago, preached in the First Church, Indianapolis, last Sabbath; Rev. Herrick L. Todd preached in the Second Church; Rev. R. P. Lippincott of Cadez, O., in Tabernacle Church; Dr. D. D. Tullis in Memorial Church, and Rev. Peter McEwan in Meridian Heights Church. No preaching service was held in the Fourth Church.

The First Church of Indianapolis has called Rev. Matthew F. Smith, D.D., of Beaver Falls, Pa. He has not yet signified his acceptance of the call.

ILLINOIS.

Rev. L. W. Madden, of Stanford, is supplying the Eckington Church, Washington City, during July and August, and is taking an active part in the Daily Vacation Bible School carried on by the church.

Rev. H. J. Bray, a senior at McCormick Seminary, is doing good work at Cooksville and Towanda, ten miles apart, where twenty-three members have been received since Mr. Bray took charge.

Rev. Amos J. Niebruegge was received from the Presbytery of Waukon by Alton Presbytery, and installed at Alton Twelfth Street; the pastorate of Rev. L. L. Meeker and Trenton and Sugar Creek was dissolved.—James R. Sager, S. C.

KENTUCKY.

The Synod of Kentucky, U. S. A., having adjourned to meet in the First Presbyterian Church, Frankfort, on the third Tuesday in October, 1921, at 7:30 p. m.; and the Joint Commission on Education of the two Synods of Kentucky, having requested the Synod to hold an educational meeting on Wednesday, the second day of the sessions of synod, with the expectation of having Drs. Hill and Marquis present, and the Stated Clerks of all the presbyteries, under the provision of the Form of Government, Chapter XI, Section II and Sub-Section 12; and also the Executive Commission of synod, having approved the requested change of time, therefore, the time of the meeting of the Synod of Kentucky is hereby changed from the third Tuesday in October to the second Tuesday in October (i. e., Oct. 11), 1921, at 7:30 p. m., the meeting to be held, as heretofore announced, in the First Presbyterian Church, Frankfort, Ky.—Edward L. Warren, S. C.

MICHIGAN

During the summer the First Church of Sandusky has been holding services every Sabbath afternoon at some point in the country. These services have been well attended and at the meeting on Aug. 7th, the pastor, Rev. Edmund C. Lindsay, baptized four children and two adults and received two into the church. The work here is going well, thirty-nine having been added to the church since the coming of Mr. Lindsay last March. Plans are under way for the erection of a new church and Sabbath school building in the near future.

MISSOURI.

Rev. and Mrs. C. W. Halsey, of Tarkio, Mo., on their way to New York by automobile, met with a great sorrow, at Danville, Ill., their little son, Eldred, three years of age, becoming so ill that he was taken to the hospital, where he died Aug. 7. The First Presbyterian Church minister and people showed them all the kindness and promptly started the parents and their remaining child on the railroad to New York, where funeral services were held at the home of friends.

IOWA.

The funeral of Dr. S. C. Black, president of Washington and Jefferson College, was held by his own request, at Clarinda, Iowa, at the home of his sister, Mrs. Oliver M. Cook, the services taking place in the same room from which his parents had been buried. The address was delivered by Rev. Dr. R. Lincoln Long, successor to Dr. Black as pastor of the Collingwood Avenue Church, Toledo, O. There were addresses by Judge James I. Brownson, of Washington, Pa., president of the college Board of Trustees, and Dean Robert B. English, of the college. The prayer was offered by Rev. A. B. Marshall, pastor of the Clarinda Church. The service at the grave was conducted by Rev. Dr. R. A. Montgomery, president of Parsons College, Fairfield, Iowa, who less than a month ago had performed the wedding ceremony for Miss Harkness and Dr. Black.

NEW YORK.

Brick Church, Rochester, Drs. W. R. Taylor and G. B. F. Hallock, pastors, received twenty-six members at the summer communion, of whom nine were on confession. Dr. Taylor made a visit to England in July to the home of a daughter, Mrs. Hay, and then back to Keene Valley for the rest of the summer. He has been pastor of Brick Church for more than thirty-three years.

Throop Avenue Church, Brooklyn, Dr. William Carter, pastor, was supplied in July during the pastor's absence, by Dr. John Deans of Islip; Dr. E. W. Abbey of Smith wn. Long Island, and Rev. Murd Allyn Drake, of Elgin, Ill. In August it is being supplied by Rev. F. T. Jones, of Wales. Rev. O. M. Jones of Philadelphia, Rev. F. B. Cowan and Rev. J. Milton Thompson. The pastor will conduct services on Sept. 11th.

WISCONSIN.

The work of the churches in Milwaukee is moving regularly along. Rev. Roy H. Brown, our missionary to the Philippines, is supplying Immanuel Church while Rev. Paul B. Jenkins takes his rest at Lake Geneva. Dr. Jenkins and his people are closing the fiftieth anniversary celebration of their church with a splendid thank offering of nearly $100,000 for the Boards of the Church, the erection of a fine churchhouse, and an addition to the endowment fund.

Rev. William Ruby and family, of Beaver Dam, are having their vacation at Fox Lake.

Prof. R. S. Parry, the Welsh singer, who led the service of song in the Assembly Church a few years ago, and had charge of the music at the summer conferences at Waukesha, returns to Harmony, Minn. He is a sweet singer.

WYOMING.

Rev. C. A. Marshall, Ph.D., recently of Lingle, Wyo., has taken charge of the newly-organized church of North Casper. On July 31 two elders, O. F. Sellers and L. M. Peterson, were ordained and installed; five members were received on profession, two of these and six infants being baptized. The work is growing.

OREGON.

Rev. J. W. Angell, of Phoenix, Oregon, becomes Stated Clerk of Southern Oregon Presbytery, succeeding Rev. J. W. Hoyt, of Ashland, who removes to Walla Walla, Wash., 347 Grove Street, to become Sabbath School Missionary for Walla Walla Presbytery. Rev. C. C. Hulet becomes Sabbath School Missionary for Southern Oregon.

COLORADO.

Rev. W. H. Hyatt has resigned at La Jara. Mrs. Abbie B. Neff, La Jara, may be addressed by those interested in the church.

MINNESOTA.

Rev. Dr. J. O. Buswell, for eight years pastor of Stewart Memorial Church, Minneapolis, has resigned to accept a call to Spencer Memorial Church of Brooklyn, N. Y. Rev. W. L. Porter, associate pastor, will serve the Stewart Memorial Church until a pastor is chosen.

Rev. Dr. Swearingen, of the House of Hope Church, St. Paul, Moderator of the General Assembly, is taking his vacation at Alexandria, Minn. There will be no meeting of the Executive Commission until in November.

CALIFORNIA.

The Second Church of Long Beach, Rev. H. C. Buell, pastor, has received 415 members during the last five years, making a net gain of 262, with 422 now on the roll.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

Rev. Dr. George Trumbull Ladd, for many years professor of moral philosophy and metaphysics at Yale University, and the author of numerous works, died at his home in New Haven, Conn., on Aug. 8th, in the eightieth year of his age.

A GROUNDLESS CHARGE.

I thank you for your defense of pre-millennialists against the charge of desiring to divide the Church.

For many years I have been a believer in the pre-millennial coming of our Lord and his personal reign on earth during the millennium. In all my association with brethren of this belief, and in pre-millennial literature, so far as I have read it, I do not remember having seen or heard a hint of Church division. Such a hint may have been given, but, if so, it has escaped my notice.

I think your suggestion as to the motive for such a charge hits the nail on the head.

Ballston Spa, N. Y. D. A. Newell.

FROM OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

With pleasure am I sending you the enclosed check for 1921-22 subscription for the Herald and Presbyter. I am sorry I can not get over all the good things contained in the paper, but am getting enough personally to pay me well, beside my wife and daughter are making good use of it.

I am sorry that the price is $2.50, not for my part, as I would rather pay $5 than to do without it, but there are many members who might subscribe were the price less.

I know the profit can not be great, as the advertising is not taking two thirds of the space, hence according to my figures you surely are giving more value than any secular paper does. May God bless your work.

J. C. F.

I feel that through the news items of your paper I have become acquainted with a larger number of ministers and churches than I otherwise would.

D. J. B.

I enclose M. O. for $2.50 to renew my subscription to the H. & P. I do not feel I am willing to do without it, as it has been such a comfort to me since I began taking it since 1862. I am 85 years old now and enjoy it as much as ever. Mrs. H.M. B.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

SNIDER—Jacob Snider, son of Jacob and Jane Bodine Snider, was born near Sixteen Mile Stand, O., July 30, 1841, and departed this life at his residence near the place where he was born, July 28, 1921, aged 79 years, 11 months, 28 days. He united with the Somerset Presbyterian Church March 21, 1863, and continued an active member there until 1884, when he transferred his membership to the Montgomery Presbyterian Church, where he continued his membership until his death. He was always ready to visit and to minister to the sick or helpless, or to any one who was in distress. As friend and neighbor he had the respect and affection of all who knew him. At every meal he gave thanks to God; morning and evening he read God's Word and prayed. "He was always ready to speak a word for Christ."

WENGER—The infant son of Rev. and Mrs. S. F. Wenger, of the Grandview Presbyterian Church, Dudley, Ill., died July 19, and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Nevada, O.

HOME CIRCLE

A PRAYER.

Let me be a little kinder,
Let me be a little blinder
To the faults of those about me.
Let me praise a little more,
Let me be, when I am weary,
Just a little bit more cheery;
Let me serve a little better
Those that I am striving for.

Let me be a little braver
When temptation bids me waver,
Let me strive a little harder
To be all that I should be;
Let me be a little meeker
With the brother who is weaker,
Let me think more of my neighbor
And a little less to me.

Let me be a little sweeter—
Make my life a bit completer,
By doing what I should do
Every minute of the day.
Let me toil without complaining,
Not a humble task disdain;
Let me face the summons calmly
When death beckons me away.

FLOSSIE'S "BEST WISH."

It seemed to Flossie that she had longed for it for years and years. Every birthday and every Christmas she hoped that somebody would think of it. She never watched one go fluttering by in the hands of a happy little maid, that she did not give a sigh of ecstasy and longing. Aunt Marion had no less than three herself, to match her different dresses.

And yet, with three big brothers, mother, father, grandmother, Uncle Jack and Aunt Marion to give her things, Flossie had grown almost to the age of six years without owning one. She was quite sure that few little girls had so large or so delightful a family, yet none of them had ever guessed this wish hidden away in the heart of the little girl with the thistledown hair, which had won for her the pet name of Flossie. It was strange that she did not tell some of them about it, but she did not. "For you just can't hint to folks about presents," she reasoned to herself. "That wouldn't be a mite nice. But if ever I do grow up and be a young lady with my hair done up high, and have a watch and a hopra glass, like Aunt Marion, the very first thing I'm going to do is to buy myself a pink silk pawryswal with a white handle!"

It was almost Flossie's birthday, only one more day left. There was a birthday cake with pink candies on top and six tiny pink candles, all ready in the pantry; and there were three queer shaped packages in mother's top drawer, where the little girl had been sent for a paper of needles. But her quick eyes took in at a glance that not one of them was shaped in the least like a "pawryswal."

At last the birthday came, and at breakfast Flossie found these and other mysterious packages piled about her plate. She would have been a very strange little girl indeed not to have been pleased at the new doll with "truly" eyelashes, and the tiny brush, comb and handglass just for herself, and the white slippers she had wished for. But underneath it all, deep down in a corner of her heart, the place reserved for a pink silk "pawryswal" was still empty, and she sighed just a little even while she enjoyed her gifts.

That afternoon she was dressed in a white frock and the new slippers and allowed to go with mother down town, as a part of the birthday treat. "For I would be so lonely some if you go away, Muver," she had said. "That's why I have always and always wished I was a twin. I would be more company for myself if I was a twin."

And as this was quite true, Flossie did not care in the least if Uncle Jack did laugh and call her a "funny little kid."

They went to several stores, and finally to a very large one where there was a great crowd of people. Then Mrs. Andrews, a friend of Flossie's mother, invited them to drive home with her in her carriage.

"Keep close by me, dear," said her mother, "or we shall get separated in this crowd."

The next moment the little girl saw before her the most beautiful sight,—row upon row of parasols of every tint of the rainbow!

Flossie gasped with delight. She had never seen so many in all her life. Her golden head was only a little above the counter, and her wide, admiring eyes were upon the pink, blue, yellow, rose and white parasols before her.

A gentleman close by her side watched with amused eyes the eager, delighted face of the little girl, and a quick smile of sympathy overspread his own face as she whispered under her breath, "I choose that pawryswal. No, I choose this pink silk pawryswal."

"Better take one, dear," he said, "tell your mother they are only half price today." And he passed on smiling.

He was the floorwalker, only Flossie did not know it. She was too happy to speak, and it seemed too good to be really true. He must be the man who owned the big store, or he would not have told her to "take one." She was sorry she had not gained her voice to thank him, but he was quite lost in the crowd now.

She lifted one of the lovely pink ones very carefully from the box close to the edge of the counter, and speechless with happiness, followed the crowd that was going out of the big doors. Close by one of the doors stood the gentleman with the kind eyes. Flossie paused by his side, and gained courage to say shyly:

"Thank you ever so much. I've been wishing all my life for a pink silk pawryswal."

"Oh," said the gentleman. "Oh, little Goldy Locks, did you get one? I'm glad." And he smiled down at her again as the crowd swept her on out to the street.

Then for the first time she thought of mother, and began to be just a little frightened, when among all the strange faces appeared the dear, familiar face of Uncle Jack. She wiggled between the jostling people and in a moment was safe in Uncle Jack's arms, and had told him the whole exciting story, without stopping to take a breath.

"And I never in the world heard of so kind a man," she finished. "Did you, Uncle Jack? Just to tell a little strange girl, 'You better take a pawryswal.' And he couldn't have known about my birthday, Uncle Jack!"

"Come on, kiddie," said Uncle Jack, "we must find mother. She'll be worried to death."

But they went first to the parasol counter, where Uncle Jack bought another beautiful blue one.

"There!" he said, "you shall have two. You need them to match dresses as much as Marion does. And to think that you've 'a-wished and a-wished for a pawryswal for years, and I never even guessed it!"

Then they found mother and told her all about it. And as Flossie, sitting up very straight in Mrs. Andrews' carriage, rode home, she left that no little girl in all the world was so rich and so happy as herself.

But she did not guess for a good many years that Uncle Jack paid for two parasols instead of one.—Ex.

A BOY'S VACATION.

Little Tommy Doodle and his mother spent a week at Gran'pa Doodle's farm, where Tommy tumbled in the creek and got his lungs so full of wet he couldn't get his breath. Till poor old Gran'ma Doodle had been frightened most to death. He ate some poison berries that he found along the lane; it took a doctor half the night to soothe away the pain. He tried to ride a "kicky" colt—a risky thing to do—'Twas quite a little while before they really brought him to. He stuck a stick into a hive of bees—oh, sorry day! He couldn't see a thing until the swelling went away. He teased the goat to see if it was cross as he had heard; they had to work with him a while before he spoke a word. And then he climbed a cherry tree—just like a boy—and fell and broke his arm, and—sakes alive! you ought 'a heard him yell. His mother took him back to town to get a little rest, but Tommy says of all his life that week was far the best. —Selected.

THE BAD BASKET.

Little Ruth and Merriam were visiting at grandma's a few weeks and were having the loveliest kind of a time. One morning, however, they had a quarrel over nothing at all really, but it was three long hours before the quarrel was patched up. In the meantime both little girls had cried, and both of them had been very miserable. And although both of her little visitors had been rather naughty, grandma did not scold at all. When sunshine appeared again in the house and the tears were wiped away and they had kissed one another and decided to "forget all about it," Ruth said: "I guess you think we've behaved dreadfully this morning, grandma. Mother would think so if she were here."

But grandma only laughed. "I wasn't thinking that at all," she said. "I was remembering the quarrels my little sister and I used to have when we were about as old as you and Merriam, and what my mother used to do."

"Did you use to quarrel, too?" asked Merriam in surprise.

"Not very often, but as often as you and Ruth do and in very much the same way," smilingly said grandma.

"Well, what did your mother do?" questioned Ruth.

"As soon as we quarreled," answered grandma, "we had to get into the 'bad basket' and stay there till we made up."

"The bad basket?" exclaimed both little girls. "What was that?"

"The bad basket was an old clothes basket," said grandma, laughing. "At one end was a broomstick, and fastened on the broom was an old apron for a sail; and into that basket we had to stay till our 'boat' reached the 'Land of Good Little Children.' Then we could come back again. We couldn't take any toys with us. All our toys must stay outside the basket." Grandma smiled into two pairs of dancing eyes fixed on hers. "And, of course, very soon we began to laugh.

There we were facing one another, with nothing to play with, trying to keep on being cross; but we couldn't. One or the other would soon laugh; and when you laugh, away goes the quarrel. Then out we would tumble and run to mother and say, 'Here we are back again'; and mother would pretend to be very much surprised, and she would say, 'So soon?' and then we'd all laugh and forget there ever had been any quarrel."

"That was lots of fun," said Ruth, while write to mother and ask her to have a 'bad basket' for us when we go home."

"Have one here," said grandma. "I can find an old basket and an old apron and a broom, I'm sure." The children were delighted. The basket was rigged up; but, do you know? grandma never sent them there during the whole visit, though they played in it time after time of their own accord.

When they started to quarrel, the very thought of the "bad basket" made them laugh; and they couldn't be bad long enough to be put into the basket.

MASTER KITTEN.

When Master Kitten mews good night,
And sidles off to bed,
He does not take a candle bright
To light his way ahead.
Like balls of fire his eyes will glow,
And flash electric sparks.
If my eyes did exactly so,
I should not dread the dark.

When Master Kitten jumps around,
So frisky, free and gay,
He doesn't make a dreadful sound,
As I do when I play,
'Cause velvet shoes grow on his feet
How could he make a noise?
Small wonder that he runs so fleet,
Ahead of dogs and boys.

When Master Kitten sips his milk,
He doesn't spill at all,
Or spoil his pretty vest of silk,
Or let his saucer fall.
Upon his cunning tongue so pink
Is many a tiny cup,
So when he wants to take a drink,
He merely fills them up.

THE RACE.

When Clinton stepped from the train at the little country station, the first face he saw was that of his cousin Raymond, a straight, manly-looking boy of twelve, with clear, gray eyes that lighted joyfully as he looked into Clinton's merry brown eyes.

"Hello, Raymond! How are you? Better use your lorgnette if you don't know me," laughed Clinton, noting the slightly puzzled look that had come into Raymond's eager face.

"Hello yourself, Clinton Concord! Of course, I know you, though you have changed, but what's the matter? Have you been sick?"

"What's the matter?" repeated Clinton, looking straight ahead. "Why, nothing. What makes you ask such a question?"

"Two years ago you looked so strong and could race and row and climb anything!"

"Well," interrupted Clinton, confidently, "I'll show you that I can race and row and climb some things yet!"

"All right, you'll have chances," Raymond replied in a relieved tone. "Don and Fred Duval are coming over this afternoon, and we're going to the cove, fishing."

"I suppose I can if I have to," said Clinton, with a grave face and well-assumed reluctance.

"I have to get some things from the store," said Raymond, as he reined Joc up to the big maple near the grocery.

There were so many customers that Raymond had to wait some time. When, package laden, he stepped up just in time to see Clinton toss off a partly-burned cigarette far into the street.

"Oh," thought Raymond, with sudden understanding, "so it's cigarettes! I thought Clinton had more sense."

Raymond was a wide-awake boy, and neither Clinton's droll stories nor funny remarks could make him forget. As they neared home, he asked abruptly:

"Clinton, do you smoke cigarettes?"

"Certainly, my boy. Would you like one?" was the flippant reply.

"What makes you?" questioned Raymond gravely.

"Just a habit of mine. Doesn't hurt me a bit. All the boys do it," Clinton answered lightly.

Clinton received a hearty welcome from Aunt Margaret, Uncle Robert and his seven-year-old cousin Maxwell.

"You are just in time, boys. Dinner is ready," announced Aunt Margaret. "I hope you brought a good appetite with you, Clinton. I remember your fondness of an old-fashioned boiled Indian pudding."

"Think you can keep up with Raymond?" asked Uncle Robert, smiling genially as he handed Clinton a plate heaped as only a father of growing boys knows how to heap it.

"Wait and see," chuckled his nephew.

After dinner Clinton was taken to see the Jersey calves, Raymond's pet colt, a handsome little bay named Venus—and Maxwell's rabbits and white leghorn chickens—some of them fluffy little balls of down.

Before any of them realized it, three o'clock had come, and Don and Fred were on hand with their fishing tackle.

"This beats the parks," the city boy exulted when they reached the dense green woods that bordered the west side of the road for nearly a mile. "I say, boys, let's race to the big oak."

At first Clinton led, but soon his breath began to grow short, and Don and Raymond forged ahead. Soon Fred passed him. For a little while Don and Raymond ran side by side. Then inch by inch Raymond gained. Raymond reached the big oak with Don at his heels, and Fred not far behind. Looking back, they saw Clinton struggling to keep up with his cousin.

"What is the matter with Clinton?" asked Don.

"Cigarettes," said Raymond shortly.

"Why, two years ago he could beat us both," Don continued.

"He didn't smoke then," said Raymond.

"Two years ago he was taller and stronger than either of you," said Fred thoughtfully.

"Clinton, if that's what cigarettes do for a fellow, I shan't want any."—Ex.

"WHEN I THINK OF MYSELF."

On a low cot by an open window lay a girl whose thin, pale face was deeply lined with pain. But there were other lines also, at the corners of her lips and her eyes—lines of persistent smiling in spite of physical sufferings. Beside the cot sat a woman who had just "dropped in to see how Nelly was."

"Oh, I'm better," said the girl, with the ready-made smile in her eyes. "It's so lovely by the window today! There is such a cunning baby across the street! I call her 'Little Miss Tumble Tot.' She falls down a hundred times a day, but she always gets up shaking her head and laughing—amused at the mishap, but determined to try again. I love to watch her. Maybe she'll come out while you are here. I want you to see her."

The visitor smiled sympathetically. "That is nice," she agreed. "Does it tire you to talk?"

"Not a bit," came quickly. "There's a woman on the second floor next door who never has a minute to get outdoors—she's so busy. But whenever she pauses for breath, she comes to the window, and we talk with our hands and laugh at each other. We carry on quite a conversation that way, only we can't do it often, she's so busy. Sometimes I see her fairly flying back and forth. I like to look up at her window and wonder what she's hurrying about now."

"Do the days seem very long to you?" asked the woman.

"No; very short," was the smiling answer. "There's so much to see, you know. The girls next door—on the third—make flowers. You can see from here; that's their window. Every time they finish a cluster they hold it up for me to see. Today they are making bleeding hearts. Yesterday it was trilliums. I used to gather trilliums when we lived in the country, back in Iowa. They work so fast, their fingers just twinkle in and out—faster than eyes can follow. It's fascinating to watch them. When they spoil a flower they send it to me. I love them anyhow, even the spoiled ones; the bad places hardly show at all. But they can't sell them unless they are perfect. See these are some they sent me!" And she proudly displayed her treasures.

"Does it make you sad because you can't get out to work yourself?"

For an instant Nelly hesitated; then she said, "Oh, well, sometimes they have to work to hard! At night they are very weary. And the woman in the basement—she is so tired that when I call 'Good-night!' to her she just mumbles, 'G'ni.' Poor little woman! Washing is hard, you know!"

The visiting woman leaned forward.

"Nelly," she said, "how can you keep thinking of these women and girls and babies, and talking to them and being interested in all they do when you have lain here for oh, so many months? How can you think of anything outside this little room?"

A flash of something like fear crossed the girl's face, and she said: "Mrs. Arnold, that is why! When I think of them and what they are doing, I forget my troubles; but when I just think of myself—oh, I hurt all over!" The girl's voice broke. "When I think of myself, I'm sicker than ever."

And then, suddenly, the smile struggled out again. "Oh, there's Tumble Tot!" She waved a welcoming hand. "That's it, fall down, you blessed! Good for you, Tumbler, that's the system! Jump right up and go at it again!" Then she said to her visitor, "She can't hear a word I say, but when I tell her to jump up and go at it again it helps me to do it myself! That's my system too."

FROM ASIA TO EUROPE.

(Acts 16:6-18.)

Acts 16:6. Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were forbidden of the Holy Ghost to preach the word in Asia,

7. After they were come to Mysia, they assayed to go into Bithynia: but the Spirit suffered them not.

8. And they passing by Mysia came down to Troas.

9. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; There stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, Come over into Macedonia, and help us.

10. And after he had seen the vision, immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us for to preach the gospel unto them.

11. Therefore loosing from Troas, we came with a straight course to Samothracia, and the next day to Neapolis;

12. And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia, and a colony: and we were in that city abiding certain days.

13. And on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither.

14. And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshipped God, heard us: whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul.

15. And when she was baptized, and her household, she besought us, saying, If ye have judged me to be faithful to the Lord, come into my house, and abide there. And she constrained us.

16. And it came to pass, as we went to prayer, a certain damsel possessed with a spirit of divination met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying:

17. The same followed Paul and us, and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which shew unto us the way of salvation.

18. And this did she many days. But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out the same hour.

Golden Text: "And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."

Catechism—Q. 36. What are the benefits which in this life do accompany or flow from justification, adoption, and sanctification? A. The benefits which in this life do accompany or flow from justification, adoption, and sanctification, are, assurance of God's love, peace of conscience, joy in the Holy Ghost, increase of grace, and perseverance therein to the end.

Home Readings—(M.) Acts 16:6-10; (Tu.) Acts 16:11-18; (W.) Phil. 1:1-11; (Th.) Phil. 4:10-18; (F.) Rom. 15:15-21; (Sa.) Jonah 3:1-9; (S.) Psalm 30.

INTRODUCTORY.

In our last lesson we came to the point where Barnabas and John Mark started on a great missionary campaign as traveling companions, and Paul and Silas started on another, going through Syria and Cilicia, to Derbe and Lystra, finding Timothy and taking him into their company. They then took up a systematic visitation of the cities they had worked in during the first great missionary journey, delivering to the Christian people the decrees that had been passed by the apostles and elders at Jerusalem. The result was that the churches were strengthened and the number of Christian converts was increased day by day.

EXPOSITORY.

Paul had great plans for his tour, and had it all laid out. But he was not permitted to carry out his plan, for God had something wiser and better arranged for him. He found his way blocked for going into Asia Minor, and then when he had come to Mysia and wanted to go into Bithynia God's Providence did not permit it. And so Paul came to Troas, where he had a notable vision which gave a new direction to his life and sent him over into a new continent, to preach the Gospel in Europe.

9, 10. In the vision that appeared to him that night, Paul saw a man of Macedonia, and the man was imploring him to come over into his country and there tell them the truth that they so very greatly needed to know. The words that came to him were: "Come over into Macedonia and help us." The impression made was very deep. Paul was sure that this was a message to him from the Lord calling him to preach the Gospel in that new country and new continent. In obedience to the call of the Lord, he determined at once to go to Macedonia. The word "we," as used by the writer of the Book of Acts, indicated that Luke had now become a member of the party. He traveled with Paul a great deal, and heard a great deal from him which helped him in writing this book and also the Gospel that goes by his name, so that we can almost call the Gospel of Luke by the name of the "Gospel according to Paul." This was a great and momentous occasion. The incident of this vision has been used in many a missionary meeting and sermon. There are still many countries where the Gospel is sorely needed and where we are compelled to think of the people, in their sore need, of crying to us: "Come over and help us." As we have the missionary spirit we may have the right to think of ourselves as the real Spirit-directed successors of the Apostles.

11, 12. Their course of travel was direct, going to Samothracic, and then to Neapolis, and then to Philippi, the chief city of that region, and a Roman colony. He felt that this was the place to which the Lord had directed them, and so they established themselves, remaining there for several days, and becoming acquainted with conditions. It appeared that there was no synagogue there, and that there were few Jews.

13-15. When the Lord's day come they found a group of worshippers. They had a place by a river side where they were accustomed to come for prayer. Paul and his company came and joined in the worship and had the privilege of speaking about Christ and his Gospel. It seemed to be a small company and all of them women, but they were devout and ready to hear the truth and to welcome Christ into their hearts. One of these women was a person of some experience and leadership, named Lydia, who had come from Thyatira, and was a devout worshiper of the true God. She was a merchant, a seller of purple dye. She opened her heart and she listened spiritually to the Gospel as preached by Paul. She accepted Christ, and was baptized. We read that her household was also baptized. If she had children, they were baptized as infants are baptized today. If they were, some of them, grown, we infer that they also believed. At any rate, it was a converted and baptized Christian family that day, and she invited the evangelists to come to her home and stay there while in the city. They did so, and here we find the beginning of the Church of Christ in Europe. A good and great start had been made.

16-18. There was one special incident that occurred during the work at Philippi. One day in going to a meeting a young slave girl met them. She was possessed by an evil spirit, and acted and spoke like one insane. Her master used the poor creature for money-making, and said that her raving and babbling was evidence of a fortune-telling power, which he employed to impress the gullible. When she saw the missionaries she called out to them, repeating what she must have heard from some one, and saying that these men were the servants of the most high God which showed the way of salvation. This she continued to do, day by day, until it became unbearable. No doubt the multitude made very merry over it, and construed it as a bit of satire or ribaldry. But Paul pitied the poor girl. The desire was in him to help her, and he saw here an opportunity to remove an obstacle in the way of the progress of the Gospel, and to do a work that would be to the glory of God. So the miracle was performed. He commanded the evil spirit to come out of her, and it did so, and the suffering woman was healed. The next lesson tells how this miracle brought trouble to Paul and his co-workers, and how results followed that were for the furtherance of the Gospel.

THE SABBATH DAY.

Christian people need a new loyalty to the Sabbath day. Admiral Watson, Presbyterian elder, tells that old Admiral Farragut declared that the greatest peril of our country was the desecration of the Sabbath day, and that when he was in Rome, an American woman arranged a reception for him on Sabbath evening. This enraged the old sea fighter and he sent her word "That to invite an American to a reception on the Sabbath was an insult."—The Sabbath secured to us by the resurrection of our Lord is the foretaste of the eternal rest. What that foretaste is to them who observe the day and look joyfully forward can be testified to by hundreds and by thousands.

HOW TO FIND GOD.

Go where God is and join him in the work which he is doing. That is the way to find him. You say, "Life is an express train; find on that train some mother with her little children who is dragged, dashed, flung from side to side, and help her to care for them. You say, 'Life is a forest, wild and dark; carry into that forest the spirit of a pioneer, to clear out undergrowth, fight fierce animals, and make it a habitable home for future generations. Find some lost soul—that is, some soul which has not yet found itself, its home, or its God—and carry to him what help you can to a higher, healthier, happier life.

It is unquestionably true that if we look for God in a life of service to men, hope for men, love for men—we shall discover both our forgiving Father and our forgiven brothers.

CONSECRATION.

The motive and strength of consecration is gratitude and love to God, but its test is obedience. A consecrated person is no longer self-centered, but Christ-centered. He is ruled not by inclinations, but by convictions; seeks not personal satisfaction in service, but the advancement of God's cause; does not choose his work, but places himself unreservedly at God's disposal. Necessity and opportunity count more than special gifts. When the Spirit of consecration fills pastors and people, the Church will not lack means nor men.

KNOWING CHRIST.

When men ask us what we believe, our answer should be, "It is not what I believe, but it is in whom I believe." "I know whom I have believed." I should have a personal knowledge of the person in whom I believe. Christians have nothing to do with "its" in their belief. Our creed and our blessing are vitally connected with Christ; more than that, they are Christ himself.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, AUGUST 28.

Endeavor Topic: The Ten Commandments in the Life of Today. Exodus 20:1-17.

The Ten Commandments make up a wonderful code of laws that express the mind and will of God on the main relationships of human life. They are universal laws, defining duties that should be observed by every individual of the race.

It is one of the silliest things in the world for any one to speak of the Ten Commandments, or any one of the ten, as being meant for the Jews alone and not binding on other people. Equally foolish is it to speak of them, or of any one of them, as belonging to the Old Testament dispensation, but as being done away with by the New Testament dispensation.

They are, all of them, universal laws, for the whole human race and for all time, laying down rules for human conduct, obligatory in every age and every land, if there is to be the proper life of individuals and of society. The duties which one owes to God, to his neighbors and to himself are here defined in general terms, and they are binding upon persons of every land and race and color and age and sex. No one has a right to break any one of them.

This legislation lies at the foundation of all true civilization. Men have a right to life and property and to undisturbed family life and to reputation, and no one has a right, in any land or age, to murder, steal, commit adultery or slander. Parents have a right to the respect of their children, and children to the care of their parents. God our Creator has a right to the reverential regard of all his creatures, and they owe it to him, and to themselves, that he is worshiped spiritually and that his name shall be used reverently and that his day be set apart for holy use, in the cultivation of religion and the highest life. There is not one of these rules but should be observed by every human being.

While these are laws for life, they do not, after all, provide for or promise eternal life and salvation. The Gospel comes to us revealing the love of God to us in Jesus Christ, our Lord, telling us that he is ready to forgive and to save every one who believes, and to keep him unto the life everlasting. He tells us that he will impart to us his grace to enable us to obey him in all things, and to keep his holy commandments in spirit and in truth.

If God's grace fills our hearts and we love him, we will love to do his will, and we will not think that any of his commandments are "grievous." We, like, the Psalmist, will "delight" to do his will.

There were some Jewish laws, as to worship and sacrifice, which were peculiarly Jewish. They looked forward to the coming of Jesus Christ, the Savior or Messiah, and were done away with in the divine plan when Christ came. There is now no more call for altar or priest or sacrifice, since all of this has been fulfilled by Christ, whom they all prefigured. But let us not think that the Ten Commandments, which are the laws of human conduct and life, have been abrogated or changed, any more than that the sun has been changed, or the moon, or the rain, or the throne of God.

PRAYER MEETING

AUGUST 24.

FRIENDS OF CHRIST.

John 15:14-20.

We are all invited to become the friends of Christ, and if we are willing we may all be and live as his friends. It is infinitely desirable that we shall all come into this high and holy and happy relationship, for it is only in this gracious union with him that we come into what is really good in life.

But if we are Christ's friends we must become so, for we are not his friends by nature. We are sinners and we are not at one with him in our hearts and lives. We do too many of the things that are sinful and that grieve him; and we leave undone too many things that are right and good, and that he desires to see in our lives.

To come to him in simple repentance of sin, and in simple and loving faith as our Savior, makes us the friends of Jesus Christ. We become united to him in a new and blessed covenant. He becomes our Friend in a new sense, and will stick closer to us than any earthly friend.

This is a friendship to which we are united and urged by the Lord himself, who solicits our love, and who has done everything possible to awaken our confidence and draw us to himself. He came into our earthly life; lived with us and for us; taught us of his truth and grace; worked miracles of tenderness and power; at last died for us to save us from death; rose again, ascended on high, and lives as our advocate and intercessor, to bring us to holiness and salvation. Surely we are ungrateful if we do not respond to such love and give ourselves to him, to be his friends, and to serve him forever.

If we are his friends we will show it by living in a way that is pleasing and congenial to him; that is, in doing whatever he asks us to do; in being what he wishes us to be; and in all things living with regard to his high and holy wishes. If we are his friends we will show it by living as his friends, in a way not to grieve or distress him, but in a way that shall show we belong to his family, all of whom revere and love him.

If we are his friends we will show it by speaking a good word for him when we can, and telling others of his beauty and goodness and love. We will be glad to tell others of what he has done for us; of how he has befriended and saved us; and of what he has promised to us in the home which he has gone to prepare for us. We will try to win others to be his friends. This will be a great blessing to them. It will be an honor to Christ and will show that we esteem his friendship.

If we are Christians, and have been saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, let us remember who and what we are every day and step of our lives. We are not waifs and wanderers, but are brought near to God. We are not even servants, although it should be the joy of our hearts to serve. We are friends of Christ, and it is to be the delight of our lives to manifest our friendship.

The difference between a life without Christ and a life with Christ is the difference between ebb and flood—the one is growing emptier and the other fuller.—Dr. Hall.

OUR EXCHANGES

BUILDING A CONGREGATION.

It is one thing to get an audience; it is quite another thing to build a congregation. In the first instance there is a transient curiosity and interest; in the second, there is a co-ordinating power which holds a group of people together to put over some great worth-while task. The first is entertainment and amusement; the second is educational and spiritual culture.—Central Advocate.

THE REAL TEST.

The natural trend of the human heart is toward aristocracy and imperialism. It goes not the way of brotherhood and democracy of its own accord. It must be anchored and compelled to dwell on this great level of fraternity and equality. The test of the supremacy of democracy is found in its staying powers, not in its marvelous acclaim of idealism.—Western Christian Advocate.

NATIONAL DECAY.

Spiritual illiteracy is the forerunner of moral bankruptcy and national decay, and is the greatest peril of organized society. The Church has a tremendous responsibility to train its young people in the truths of religion and to give them, in the days of their youth, a vital knowledge of God.—Christian Observer.

PRAISE.

There is nothing better for a human being, sometimes, than a little hearty praise. Many good people conscientiously act on the directly opposite and seem to think nothing better than a little hearty blame.—Presbyterian Witness.

INSOMNIA.

Most poor sleepers are of nervous temperament and should practice self-control. They should not take the frets and annoyances of the day to bed with them. To go to bed angry is the worst of all.—Youth's Companion.

WHAT NEXT?

Now that we are done with the international fist fight, perhaps we can spare a little attention for getting together as good citizens of a world that is in danger of dying for lack of good will.—Congregationalist.

AND THE BARBER STOPPED TALKING.

The editor sat in the barber's chair. And the barber talked. "Think we're going to have those Sunday blue laws," asked the barber. "Well, I think our legislators will do nothing unreasonable," replied the editor. "I was in _____ on Sunday a few weeks ago," said the barber. "Everything shut up tight. Couldn't get a cigar or even a Coca Cola. I'll never spend another Sunday in that town." "Let's see," remarked the editor, "barber shops have to close on Sunday, do they not?" "Oh, yes," replied the barber. "Better amend the law," suggested the editor, "so that barbers can work on Sunday." "No, sir, our union would never stand for that," said the barber. "We want our Sundays." "Indeed," commented the editor. "Well, I never could see why the law should protect a barber so that he does not have to work on Sunday, and yet give no protection to the clerk at the cigar stand or soda counter." And the barber stopped talking.—Presbyterian Advance.

NATIONAL EXTRAVAGANCE.

For many years executive officers have been accustomed deliberately to ignore the limitations fixed by congress and to follow their own ideas as to expenditures, depending upon Congress to make deficiency appropriations to cover the deficit. It is a custom which President Harding is determined to stop. It is a roundabout way of evading the restrictions which the Constitution intended that the legislative branch of the Government should place upon the executive branch.—Washington Post.

CIRCUMLOCATION.

There are multitudes of men in the Government circumlocation offices whose sole task is to weave intricate patterns in red tape, to make delays, to detect minute errors, to multiply vouchers, to prolong correspondence, and by hope deferred to make the heart sick.—Commercial Tribune.

A CRITICISM

The trouble with the Protestant and especially the Lutheran Church in Europe for the last half century or more has been that her sentinels had fallen asleep, and while they were enjoying pleasant dreams the enemy crept into the camp. When they awoke the enemy was entrenched in every corner, and now to dislodge him is not an easy matter. The Lutheran Church of America may well watch and pray lest, under the guise of "modernism," to interpret the Word of God according to modern ideas in philosophy and science, often "falsely so called," her structure be honeycombed and her foundation undermined.—Lutheran.

A SENSIBLE ADDENDUM.

An economist says there should be more fact and less fiction in the railroad controversy. Also more tact and less friction.—Pasadena Post.

PERFECTION.

To accept the ideal of absolute moral perfection as the working basis of life is not to claim perfection; but to accept any lower ideal is to admit defeat from the start. St. Paul said, "I have not attained nor am already perfect; but I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus"; and he told his fellow Christians that this was the only thing to do, "till we attain unto the measure of the stature of fullness of Christ."—Western Christian Advocate.

AUTOCRACY OR DEMOCRACY.

The presbyteries are democratic. The Assembly tends to become autocratic in its commissions, committees and some of its larger agencies. The tendency of this autocracy is toward centralization and regulation. The commissions, etc., often express themselves in most imperative forms, accompanied with the shadow of threats. Just now we have the effort of the autocrats to reduce the administrative work of the Church from a number of simple and direct agencies to four great complex trusts. Each of these will have its ascending scale of big salaries and high dignitaries, with a "papa" at the top.—Presbyterian.

GENERAL NEWS

CALL ISSUED FOR LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS CONFERENCE.

Putting into definite terms its proposal for a disarmament conference, the United States last Thursday invited the great Powers to unite in "a practical effort to remove the causes of misunderstanding" and so facilitate reduction of the world's enormous outlay for the materials of war.

In formal identical notes of invitation forwarded to Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, the American Government pledged its own unstinted co-operation in such an effort, and further defined, as follows, its own conception of the principles involved:

That there can be no hope for peace or stability until the tax burden resulting from heavy armaments has been reduced.

That such a reduction is possible only if troublesome international problems are solved by common consent.

That among these problems the Pacific and Far Eastern questions occupy a position of "unquestioned importance."

That although there is no intention to dictate the scope of the conference, the discussions should touch upon matters "which have been" of international concern as well as those now admittedly controversial.

That the question of naval armaments well might be considered first, although there should be no barrier to a full consideration of armaments of every sort.

Coincidentally with the dispatch of the invitations to the four great Powers, China was asked to send a delegation to take part in those discussions of the conference which relate to the Pacific and Far East.

All of the five nations thus invited have indicated informally that they would accept, and formal responses are expected to reach Washington within a few days, opening the way for a more detailed preliminary negotiation on the scope of the conference.

SAYS CONGRESS MUST ECONOMIZE.

Both the Administration and Congress have been warned by Secretary Andrew W. Mellon that the $350,000,000 reduction estimated in departmental expenditures, agreed upon at a White House conference last Tuesday as a part of the whole tax revision program, could be accomplished only by the exercising of the most rigid economy.

"To accomplish this reduction," Mr. Mellon declared in a letter to Joseph W. Fordney, Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, "it will be necessary for the Administration, with the assistance of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to put forth its utmost efforts to insure economy in every Government activity, and for Congress, on its part, to give the most whole-hearted co-operation, not only by avoidance of new expenditures, but also by the limitation or repeal of various outstanding balances and authorizations."

TARIFF REVISION ALMOST COMPLETE.

Work on reduction of taxes was almost completed last week by the House Ways and Means Committee, which made a number of important changes, virtually completed its draft of revision and prepared to submit the recommendations to the House early this week.

As the bill stands, modeled on the plan that President Harding outlined with congressional leaders, the American public will pay $3,000,000,000 in taxes instead of the $3,650,000,000 proposed to be levied two weeks ago.

The more important changes include:

1. Increase in the exemption of normal income tax allowed a married man from $2,000 to $2,500, provided that his total income is $5,000 or less.

This is estimated to lose $30,000,000 in revenue.

2. Repeal of almost all luxury taxes, including those on garments, such as silk stockings and higher-priced materials. The committee will try to devise a tax of three per cent to be paid by manufacturers as a substitute, the only remaining difficulty being a practical method of collection. This is estimated to yield $20,000,000 in revenue.

3. Reduction from 10 to 5 per cent of the tax on furs, estimated to cost $1,500,000 in revenue.

4. Reduction from 10 to 3 per cent of the manufacturer's tax on candy.

5. Reduction from 10 to 5 per cent of the tax on works of art.

The committee discarded the plan of lowering the higher income surtaxes from 32 to 25 per cent, to be operative next year, and decided to make the maximum levy on "enormous incomes" 32 per cent.

ENTIRE SILESIAN QUESTION TO BE DEFERRED.

The disposition of the rich regions of Upper Silesia, which has disturbed the peace of mind of Europe since the signing of the Treaty of Versailles, is postponed for several months by the action of the Allied Supreme Council last Friday in requesting the Council of the League of Nations to study the subject and advise upon the fixing of a line separating Germany and Poland.

The text of the resolution asking the council of the league to aid in the settlement of the question was drawn so as to avoid the appearance of arbitration, which is not provided for in the Treaty of Versailles. The resolution follows:

"The Supreme Council, before rendering its decision upon the Upper Silesian frontier between Germany and Poland, conformable with Article 88 of the Treaty of Versailles, decides, pursuant to Article 11, Paragraph 2, of the covenant of the League of Nations, to submit to the Council of the League of Nations the difficulties attending the fixing of the frontier and to invite the recommendation of the council as to the line that the principal allied and associated Powers should lay down.

"The Council of the League of Nations is requested to regard the matter as one of great urgency, in view of the situation in Upper Silesia."

Commenting on the matter, the London Times says:

"The Supreme Council meeting ended in a fiasco, which is a confession of the bankruptcy of that highly abnormal institution.

"Convened to solve the Silesian problem, it has failed, referring the issue to the League of Nations, thereby avoiding the definite rupture which likely would result from a final affirmation of the profound divergence in the French and British Governments' views.

"The Silesian question still is open. There is no official break between the chief Powers called to proclaim a decision, but they demonstrated to the world their inability to agree; they registered the fact that within the Entente there are two sharply opposed views on the attitude toward Germany."

Soviet Russia, suffering from hunger, has set to work to put her run-down farms in a productive state.

Three workshop trains, each carrying 35 cars of machinery for the repair of agricultural implements, have left Moscow for the farming regions to the north, east and south, according to a cable message received from that city by the publication, Soviet Russia. Two more such trains will be sent this week to remote Siberian farming districts by the Agricultural Commissariat.

A policy of "merciless enforcement" of the dry laws, was announced last week by Roy A. Haynes, Prohibition Commissioner.

Particularly are brewers of "near beer" to be dealt with strictly, Major Haynes stated. Where instances of violations of the one half of 1 per cent rule are found, the breweries will be closed for one year, while forfeiture of property and heavy fines also may be imposed.

Stating that experience had shown the necessity of a change of policy with particular reference to de-alcoholized beverage manufacturers, Major Haynes declared that "offenders hereafter will not be condoned, and guilty persons will be dealt with severely."

After protesting that he would not submit to arrest, Governor Small, of Illinois, submitted to the sheriff and gave bond for his appearance in court.

The feature of all the speeches at the imperial conference in London in the discussion of the Anglo-Japanese alliance was the desire to promote cordial relations between Great Britain and the United States. There was also virtual unanimity in favor of a conference of the Powers chiefly interested in the Pacific to discuss disarmament, spheres of influence and all matters affecting their interests.

The Premiers of the overseas dominions gave their views freely and frankly.

THE COMMITTEE OF SEVEN ON SURVEY OF LESSON COURSES, appointed by the International Sunday School Lesson Committee, April 7, 1920, has REPORTED the following:

"There is a widespread demand for courses graded by age groups. This is manifest from the following facts:

(a) The degree of satisfaction given by such departmental adaptations as are offered by the Improved Uniform Lessons.

(b) The growth of circulation and the successful use of departmentally graded adaptations of the International Graded Lessons by those denominations which have used these adaptations.

(d) The wide use, as evidenced by our survey, of the three-year cycle plan of adapting the International Graded Lessons to the needs of the small schools."

THE WESTMINSTER DEPARTMENTAL GRADED LESSONS, based upon the three-year cycle, have now reached the high circulation mark of 456,336 copies monthly.

HOME AND FARM

THE FATAL OMISSION.

She measured out the butter with a very solemn air; The milk and sugar also; and she took the greatest care To count the eggs correctly, and to add a little bit Of baking powder, which, you know, beginners oft omit. Then she stirred it all together, and she baked it for an hour; But she never quite forgave herself for leaving out the flour.

GOOD SUMMER SALADS.

With Vegetables.—This vegetable combination salad is called Porto Rico salad, but might just as well be named garden salad. Romaine lettuce is called for, but any lettuce will do. Line a vegetable dish with the lettuce, and fill the middle of the bowl with sliced green peppers—in rings, of course—sliced tomatoes, sliced cucumbers and sliced onions. Onion juice or a clove of garlic rubbed on the bottom of the bowl may be substituted for the sliced onion.

* * *

A good pepper salad consists of diced green pepper and celery mixed with mayonnaise and served in tiny lettuce cups. Sweet red pepper may of course be substituted for the green, and the color of the red pepper is of course attractive.

* * *

Salad of Eggs.—Now that eggs are plentiful, egg salad forms one of the best of the substantial luncheon salads.

One good one is made of hard-boiled eggs. Remember to cook the eggs just below the boiling point for half an hour to have them digestible—cut in half and this laid on slices of tomato, then on lettuce leaves. Around each slice of tomato and half of egg lay a ring of a sweet green pepper, made simply by washing and slicing the pepper.

* * *

Another good egg salad is made of halves of egg whites from which the yolks have been removed, filled with diced beets and peas, and mixed with mayonnaise. Each egg half is propped up in lettuce leaves and the egg yolks are crumbled over the whole salad. More mayonnaise is passed.

* * *

Frozen Cheese Salad.—Moisten a cake of cream cheese with cream and season with paprika and salt. Add a little finely minced parsley and rub all thoroughly together. Pack into tiny cake tins, one for each person, put in a covered tin dish or box, and pack in salt and ice for three hours. Serve each cheese mold on a whole lettuce leaf with French dressing.

English Cream.—Place in a saucepan one cup of milk, one-half cup of sugar, seven tablespoons of flour. Dissolve the sugar and flour and then bring to a boil. Cook for three minutes and then remove from the fire and add yolks of two eggs, two tablespoons of butter. Beat to blend thoroughly and then return to the fire and cook slowly for five minutes. Let cool and then flavor with one teaspoon of vanilla.

AMERICANIZATION.

BY MRS. V. PENNYBACKER,

If I were called upon to single out the one respect in which we Americans err most in our judgment of the immigrant who comes to us, I should say this: "We assume the attitude that America has everything to give and nothing to receive from the foreign born." In reality, every immigrant comes bearing gifts in his hand if we were only wise enough to see these gifts and to make use of them. Every nation of the old world has traditions, art, skill in handicraft, love of beauty in form, music and poetry, that would enrich our national life.

I can never forget an incident that happened during the war; I was in New York inspecting work done for the foreign born. A Y. W. C. A. worker asked me one day, "Would you be willing to climb four flights of stairs to see an Armenian family?" Of course I assented. When the door to the little apartment opened, I stood in the presence of a beautiful woman, a perfect Madonna. In a broken voice, but beautifully modulated, she said, "I'm sorry you must climb so high, but we Syrians would climb up even more stairs for the air, the sunshine and the water, which we love. I was born beneath the cedars of Mt. Lebanon and it is very difficult for me to become accustomed to the squalor of the street."

There was a friend there, a gifted young woman from Minnesota. After she saw the New York harbor stretched out before her, she eagerly asked, "Can I see the Statue of Liberty? I would rather see that than anything else in New York." A truly dramatic incident then happened. The little daughter of our hostess took her by the hand to the window, flung open the casement, and said: "There she stands waiting to welcome us all." As my friend turned to me, there were tears in her eyes, and I could not help thinking, "Oh, happy daughter of Minnesota, to catch your first glimpse of Liberty through a little dark-eyed maid born on Mt. Lebanon." The child continued, "My sister and I stand here often and watch our transports loaded with our men sailing away to fight for our flag. We wave them good-bye and often they signal back to us." Perhaps these little girls waved good-bye to your boy and mine when they slipped out in the early June morning on the great gray transports. Did not this family come bearing gifts in their hands?—Ex.

HOME CARE FOR DEPENDENT CHILDREN.

Conditions occasioning the removal of children from their homes and measures by which family care may be preserved, are discussed in a report entitled "Children Deprived of Parental Care," recently issued by the U. S. Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. This report presents the experiences of 513 children taken under care by Delaware agencies and institutions during a two-year period. At least half these children had both parents living, and only 3 per cent were full orphans.

In one case out of every five, delinquency on the part of parents or guardians was the cause of the child's removal. Inability of parents or guardians longer to care for the child occasioned the removal of almost one-fourth. Delinquency on the part of the child was given as the immediate cause for somewhat more than two-fifths of the removals.

For 10 per cent of the children studied it appears that the developmental advantages of normal home life might have been preserved had financial assistance in the home been available. Nowhere in the state, at the time of the survey, was suitable care to be had for subnormal children, who constituted 11 per cent of the group. A beginning toward such provision has subsequently been made. Only 17 per cent of the children were placed in private families, the other 83 per cent being placed in institutions. This circumstance is especially surprising inasmuch as home-finding agencies of other states have placed large numbers of dependent children in Delaware.

Such measures as a state probation system, mothers' pensions, and placing out and boarding-out under proper supervision are recommended in the report as means for correcting in part the social wastage originating in child neglect. Delaware has begun a carefully considered forward movement since the inquiry was made. Fundamental improvement can come only in the slow but sure development of standards of family life based upon wise educational, economic, and civic policies.

SEVEN CHILDREN TO EDUCATE—BLACKBURN HER ONLY CHANCE

A young woman writes: "There are seven children in our family to be cared for and educated, so that you will readily understand what a problem my father has with limited means. This is why I am applying to Blackburn, for a self-help school is my one chance to get to college."

WIT AND WISDOM

DUKE OF WELLINGTON SCORES.

The Duke of Wellington, according to W. H. Mallock, in his "Memoirs of Life and Literature," was prone to epistolary encounters with women from which he sometimes came off the victor. "He had," writes Mr. Mallock, "received a letter from Lady Herbert of Lee, in which she begged him to contribute one hundred pounds toward the total required for the restoration of some Catholic church, and his answer had been as follows:

"Dear Lady Herbert—I shall be very happy to give you the sum you name, for a purpose so excellent as yours. At the same time I may say that I myself am about to restore the Protestant church at Strathfieldsaye, and I do not doubt that you will aid me by sending a similar sum. Only, in that case, I think no money need pass between us."

Mother—What are you doing Harry?
Harry—I'm countin'. You told me when I got mad to count a hundred.

Mother—Yes, so I did.

Harry—Well, I've counted 237, and I'm madder'n when I started.—Harper's

Sammy was not prone to over-exertion in the class room; therefore his mother was both surprised and delighted when he came home one noon with the announcement, "I got one hundred this morning." "That's lovely, Sammy!" exclaimed his proud mother, and she kissed him tenderly. "What was it in?" "Fifty in reading and fifty in 'rithmetic."—Onward.

An English schoolmaster promised a crown to any boy who should propound a riddle that he could not answer. After many had tried, a bright youngster said, "Why am I like the Prince of Wales?" The schoolmaster puzzled his wits in vain, and finally was compelled to admit that he did not know. "Why," said the boy, "it's because I am waiting for the crown."—Boston Transcript.

A California youngster had been permitted to visit a boy friend on the strict condition that he was to leave there at 5 o'clock. He did not arrive home till 7 and his mother was very angry. The youngster insisted, however, that he had obeyed her orders and had not lingered unnecessarily on the way.

"Do you expect me to believe," said his mother, "that it took you two hours to walk a quarter of a mile?" She reached for the whip. "Now, sir, will you tell me the truth?"

"Ye-es, mamma," sobbed the boy. "Charles Wilson gave me a mud turtle—and I was afraid—to carry it—so I led it home."—Boston Transcript.

BY RUTH G. ROBINSON.

The bairnie-birdies nestle doon
Aneath the mither's wings,
And happit there sae warm and safe;
They fear nae frichtsoms things;
Fu' cauld the wintry blast may blaw
An' nip the blooms sae fair,
The wee bit birds keek blinkin' oot
Wi' ne'er a thocht o' care.

And we hae wings whaur we can hide
And blithely sing an' trust,
The mighty wings o' Him that formed
Oor bodies frae the dust.
Oor feeble, witless, flichtering sauls,
Like breaths that come an' gae,
He shields wi' mair than mither's luve
In poortith an' in wae.

Blaw, bitter blasts o' this rough warld—
We hae a place tae hide!
Blaw, death itsel' wi' cauldribe breath—
In Him the Life we bide!
"Yea, though we walk in death's dark vae," Oor faith still blithely sings;

PAUL AND MODERNISM.

The apostle Paul, who, being divinely inspired, knew what the Gospel was, and who preached it in its purity, was greatly troubled all through his life, by persons who thought they knew more about the Gospel than he did, and who were trying to introduce their false ideas and notions into all the churches. His efforts to counteract their errors are apparent in his epistles to these Churches. He was aware that certain men were trying to introduce human philosophies and doctrines in the place of the supernatural truths and doctrines that had come through him by the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. Very plainly he spoke and wrote, controverting these heresies, and we who live in these days should make careful study of his words, for men are still adopting the godless tactics of those early days and trying to reduce to mere paganism the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

The Gospel is the divinely-conceived and divinely-provided scheme by which God secures the spiritual and eternal salvation of all who believe. The revelation of it is made in the Holy Scriptures, all of which, Paul says, is "given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." Modernism deals destructively with the Holy Scriptures, and in many cases denies their historic accuracy, their real authorship, their quality of predicted prophecy, their final doctrinal authority, and their absolute completeness. This spirit is shown by the "Revised Version" in 2 Timothy 3: 16, where, without right or reason, the direct statement of the inspiration of the Scriptures, as given by Paul, is changed from a sturdy assertion of their divine origin and authority, into a flat and self-evident truism.

The Gospel is the truth that Jesus Christ, eternal Son of God, came into this world, became incarnate, atoned for our sins by his death on the cross, rose again from the dead, ascended into heaven, and makes faith in himself, and the new birth through the Holy Spirit, the condition of receiving eternal life and of escaping from eternal death. This was not believed by all to whom it was first preached, and it is not believed now by all, even those who claim to stand for the Gospel. The Greek philosopher did not believe in any atonement, and the Jewish religionist did not believe in Christ's atonement. They were willing to concede that Christ was a good man and an impressive teacher of morals, and in all of this they were like some men in modern pulpits and modern theological seminaries, who speak effusively of Christ's lofty goodness, but deny the supernatural elements of his deity and his atonement, as the Revised Version recklessly ignores it in 1 Tim. 3: 16.

But we are not Greeks, and we are not Jews. We believe in the divine Gospel of Jesus Christ, our Lord and our God. We stand for the truths that are divinely revealed and that mark off Christianity as a system that has come to us directly from above. To cut off these supernatural elements would have made it simply a reversion to heathenism, and to do so in our day is simply to have an earthly heathenism instead of the heavenly Gospel.

Presbyterianism in England, as personated by James Martineau and others, was simply an elimination of the supernatural, and a reversion to heathenism or Unitarianism, for heathenism at its best is unassisted human philosophy, and Unitarianism, which rejects the supernatural in the Scriptures and in the Person and atonement of Christ, is simply heathenism in Christian lands. Thus did Congregationalism in New England fall from its high estate, of evangelical life and truth, in its acceptance of Modernistic ideas and notions, and thus are certain elements of other evangelical churches today dabbling with error, and being lured from the Gospel of Christ, and are taking up with essential heathenism in their departures from the Cross and the Book.

An element, centering in and represented by Union Theological Seminary, has been doing this very thing in recent years. Any departure from the atoning Blood of the Cross, and from belief in the absolute truthfulness and authority of the Word of God is a departure from essential Christianity.

Paul found heathenism calling itself wisdom, and calling the Gospel foolish, but Paul said: "For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by (its) wisdom knew not God, it pleased God, by (what the world calls) the foolishness of preaching, to save them that believe." And here is Paul's answer and God's answer to modernism.

"EVIL SUGGESTION."

There is an evil which may be noted in many cities of our land. Handsome show windows are filled with papers having pictures upon which no one should look. Theatrical advertisements with evil suggestions are posted in prominent places. These things should be prohibited by law, but inasmuch as the law fails, Christians should guard their purity by closing their eyes as far as possible against them.

Without endorsing the principle of the boycott as practiced by some organizations, people may very wisely avoid places which display such things. If one is a theater-goer, he can and ought to avoid plays in which impurity is a feature. He may have some difficulty in distinguishing between plays, and may be obliged to forego attendance often or always according to the tenderness of his conscience or the purity of his heart. Dr. Herrick Johnson, of Chicago, once published an analysis of the plays presented during a certain period in the best theaters of Chicago. In those presented, not in variety shows and low places, but in highly respectable theaters, the plays which could be called pure were to the impure as Falstaff's pennyworth of bread was to an ocean of sack.

Art is often the hand-maid of impurity. The human form is so presented in sculpture or colors as to suggest evil. This statement is heresy in the opinion of many artists and connoisseurs. "Evil be to him who evil thinks." They quote the words of a most impure man of a most impure age. Or they quote the Scriptures and tell us that "to the pure all things are pure"—a text which properly interpreted would rule out many pictures from our art galleries, and some musicians and many plays.

It does not mean that pure persons may look at or handle impurity without taint, but that a pure person will have nothing to do with impurity. To the honest all things are honest. Can an honest man therefore steal without sin? No. An honest man loves and delights in honesty. So a pure man will seek purity, and will shun impurity, either in art or literature or anything else.

He will avoid it in his conversation. He will avoid hearing or seeing or thinking of that which may lead to it. He will close his ears to and show his disapproval of stories and jokes which suggest it. He will take no pleasure in scandals. Love thinketh no evil and rejoiceth not in iniquity. It takes no pleasure in any thing dishonest or irreverent or impure.

Christians have a duty in this regard, the importance of which can hardly be over-estimated.

"FAITH AND SERVICE."

The ideal Christian life is not only a life of faith and hope but of love and service. It is a life of activity. Love and service promote faith and hope.

Satan finds ready work for idle hands. He seeks souls as some hunters shoot at sitting game, but a busy Christian, like a bird on the wing, is protected by his activity. It is not for the cause at large only, but for the Christians own good, that the Scriptures urge to good works. Still water stagnates, running water purifies itself. Spiritual fruit-bearing is healthful. Spiritual barrenness is a curse.

The members of the ideal church pictured by Paul abound "in mercy and good fruits." They help the poor, visit the sick, comfort the mourner, advise the straying, teach the ignorant, preach Christ to all who will be taught. So doing they both bless and are blessed. They have a reward in the life to come and an abundant earnest of it here in the purity and peace which God has associated with effort.

Some by age or sickness or household cares are kept from some kinds of work, but there are many ways of working and fruit-bearing. One can work in the prayer meeting, while another does most by a steady consistent life and by advice quietly given. One has time for all manner of public service, another's duty is to his own house. One woman may sew as Dorcas did for the poor or the heathen. Another puts in stitches and prayers for her own children. While one puts his shoulder to the wheel and moves forward the Ark of God, another must patiently wait. The sick and the aged have their service. They also serve who only stand and wait. Some one says that the prayers of the poor are dear to God; so are the prayers of the sick and of those who, under the burden of years, have given up the vigorous work of the Church. There are sick-beds from which as fountains streams go out to water the city of God. The words in season and the prayers of God's stricken ones, are a blessing to his Church. So are the prayers of children and their efforts in missionary or other work.

All who pray, "Thy kingdom come," should think of their own part in the kingdom, and seek grace to meet their responsibility to their own churches and to the cause at large.

ANOTHER PLEA FOR ACCURACY.

In Cincinnati Presbytery the Sabbath school membership this year is put down as 9,770, whereas last year it was 11,824. Why is this? Has there been a breakdown so that 2,054 members of the Sabbath schools here have been thrown away? Investigation shows that six churches are reported as having no schools. Among them schools that reported last year, 99, 111, 49 and 115. Who is responsible for this misrepresentation? For these schools are, actually, all running. Then 23 schools that, last year, reported such numbers as 170, 98, 154, 100, 117, 130, 401, 276, 258, and similar membership, are this year represented as having, 10, 6, 11, 9, 20, 6, 20, 18 and 14. It is worse than Balaklava. There some one blundered. Here many have blundered. The result is slaughter and disgrace. Something like this has been seen in other presbyteries. Why should it be? Why should any Clerk of Session make such reports? Why should not a Presbyterian Stated Clerk see that they are rectified before sending them on to be printed and given to the world? Surely his function is not to copy mistakes and circulate them. He is to be the helper and guard of the churches and the cause of Christ. If such mistakes everywhere had been rectified there might have been many more than 1,433,292 members reported for our Sabbath schools in the whole denomination. This is 259,266 fewer than the communicant membership of the Church and this does not seem reasonable. In Cincinnati Presbytery, for instance, if, in these 29 schools, of which we have spoken, even the number for last year had been reported this year, it would have been 2,917 more than are reported, or 12,687 instead of 9,770. One can not keep from thinking that if they are in the schools they would better be reported, instead of the impression being left that they have been allowed to be lost. There ought to be a general coaching given to all clerks before sending in these reports, for, according to statements coming from the General Assembly Stated Clerk's office, in Philadelphia, at least 35 per cent of even presbyterial Stated Clerks' reports are in deplorable condition.

1,722,361.

It is now announced, from the General Assembly Stated Clerk's office, that in a final revision of the statistical tables the total membership of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., is found to be 1,722,361, instead of 1,692,558, as given out some weeks ago. In our editorial columns several weeks ago we pointed out that on the face of the reports the total should be 1,712,938. Since then several errors have been found, raising the total now to 1,722,361, which is an encouraging report. The Stated Clerk's office has had peculiar difficulties during the last year, which we trust will soon be overcome in the interest of satisfactory and actual accuracy.

RED CROSS SABBATH.

The President of the United States has designated Nov. 13th as Red Cross Sabbath. On that day it is hoped that ministers will make some mention to their congregations of the work of the American Red Cross, and will make an appeal to them that they enroll themselves in its membership. The fifth annual Roll Call, to be held Nov. 11-24, is not a campaign; it is merely the yearly opportunity for men and women to pay their dues and renew their memberships.

THE PROTECTION OF MARRIAGE.

Roman Catholics have made trouble in Ireland and Canada and New Zealand and wherever it has been possible by insisting that where a Roman Catholic has been married to a Protestant by a Protestant minister or a magistrate, such marriage is not valid and that the children are illegitimate. Of course such a claim or insinuation is laughed at in America, but it is different in some other countries. In New Zealand the "Marriage Laws Amendment" Act, which became necessary, is as follows:

"Every person commits an offense liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for one year, or a fine of £100, who alleges expressly or by implication that any persons lawfully married are not truly and sufficiently married, or alleges the issue of any lawful marriage as illegitimate."

Mixed marriages are usually undesirable, but, when they do occur, those who enter into them have a right to protection under the laws of their land, and this is one of the very rights, the nullification of which has been suffered by many in Ireland, and is dreaded by others. Church and State are so distinctly separated in our own country, that we do not dread such sinister treatment here as prevails in all lands where Romanism has power to enforce its edicts unhindered. Ulsterites and other good citizens have concrete reasons for not wishing to be left unprotected by Great Britain.

Only last week complaint was made by a resident of this city that his marriage, made legally in good faith, had been interfered with by a priest and his home broken up. We know nothing of the real facts of the case, but if they were as stated, the priest would be liable to heavy fine if the New England law were in force here.

A GRATEFUL PEOPLE.

The President of China has sent to this country an official expression of gratitude for the great assistance rendered to his people of the five northern provinces during the famine period. He appreciates the kindness of our nation in sending "huge sums for relief and in saving enormous numbers of the famine-stricken citizens" and says that "the entire body of our fellow-citizens is moved by a spirit of profound gratitude and of respect." It is a pleasure to contemplate the bestowal of benefits upon those who were needy and who prove to be grateful.

ALCOHOL AND NARCOTICS.

It is said by those who oppose prohibition and wish to arouse sentiment against it, that the use of narcotics has increased since prohibition has gone into effect. Their idea is that a good many people want some sort of poison and if they can not get alcohol they will get opium. Their argument and plea is for the return of saloons and liquor, so that people can get all the alcohol poison they wish. The sensible and humane course is to enforce the laws so that they will get neither opium or alcoholic liquor. Trustworthy authorities assert that the use of narcotics has not increased under prohibition, the claim that it has being simply an attempted blow against prohibition. These persons who demand some kind of poison or other, should be kept from having any sort at all, if their own welfare and the general safety of the public are to be regarded. But of course they will not be pleased or satisfied.

A REMARKABLE DISCOVERY.

We see the announcement in the daily papers by "The Chairman of the Normal School Committee of Dancing Masters," made with the apparent elation of Euclid on the discovery of his celebrated proposition, that "We have found a dance that can not be done indecently." We are almost tempted to give the name of this wonderful discovery, but think it hardly worth while, for, if it is what it is described as being, it can not possibly become sufficiently popular to pay for the trouble. But the announcement is, of itself, the verdict, by those who know best, upon the morality of the dances that are in existence, and is in line with the oft-repeated warnings and expostulations of religious and moral leaders to young people as to the dangers of this popular amusement.

The Bible Conferences and Schools of Missions have been unusually good this summer, and those who have enjoyed their advantages should go back to their churches, Sabbath schools and societies to be more useful and more full of power for Christ.

There have been some raving and railing expressions in the United States Senate, during the last week, against prohibition, that have been no more elevated, intellectually or morally, than the delirious utterances of a bartender. Thus does the use or the advocacy of intoxicating liquor debase any man while under its power, no matter what his natural ability or culture may be. Civilization demands its extirpation.

"What do you think," asks an elder, "of a minister in our Presbyterian Church, who proclaimed that he is proud to belong to a church that does not compel him to believe anything," and who shows by his preaching that he does not believe much more than he thinks he is compelled to believe? In such a case it is sufficient to say that what we think would not be complimentary to the minister's intellectual ability, his religious attainments, or his moral character. Such a man would better be watched. His finish is due in the near future.

It is, in reality, not what we own, as property, that makes us rich, but what we have and use and enjoy as our own. One person owns as much of the sun and moon and stars as any one else, and of the river scenery and the mountain view, and the fresh air and the blue sky, and, especially, of the love of God in Jesus Christ, and of the Gospel, and of the hope of heaven. It is no wonder that the apostle wrote to his Christian friends: "All things are yours."

A contemporary says of certain "sappy young intellectuals of taking ways and wonderful ideals and winning speech" who persuade the churches into all manner of extravagant schemes that "they are clever workmen and keen, daring, abstract reasoners; but lack the balance-wheel of common sense."

MY MOTHER.

BY MRS. J. H. MILLER.

At even-tide when shadows fall,
And twilight gloom seems over all,
A loneliness oft comes to me,
My thoughts, my heart go out to thee—
My Mother.

In fancy clear, I see your face,
With tender smile so full of grace;
Compassion there, forgiveness too,
New strength for duty gained from you—
My Mother.

More patience in a world of care,
A greater faith in God, in prayer;
A humble spirit comes to me,
From just a twilight glimpse of thee—
My Mother.

DECIDE NOW!

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

In our study of "Great Bible Chapters" and characters we come to the story of Lot and the lamentable choice he made when he and his uncle Abraham decided to part company after their quarrel. We read in this connection (Gen. 13:7) that "the Canaanite and the Perizzite dwelled then in the land," and had an opportunity to witness the unholy strife between those who were nominally God's people. Too bad there was any strife, and too bad that the enemies of God has this opportunity to criticise. The Book discourages such unseemly jarring and wrangling: "Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you with all malice: And be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you" (Eph. 4: 31, 32).

So far as we can see, Abram acted a noble part in this controversy. "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen, for we be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? Separate thyself, I pray thee from me; if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left."

But Lot was attracted by the beautiful, fertile and well-watered valley that lay open to his view. He decided to pitch his tent toward Sodom. "But the men of Sodom were wicked and sinners before the Lord exceedingly" (Gen. 13: 13). This proved a fatal choice, as the sequel makes plain.

Lowell's great words are pertinent here: "Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light."

I distinctly remember an interesting passage in one of my college text-books in which the writer discusses the Freedom of the Will and asks:

"What reasons have we for believing that the human will is free?

"1. We have the direct evidence of consciousness. We are distinctly conscious not only of doing as we choose, but of exercising our free choice among different objects of desire, between immediate and future enjoyment, between good and evil. Consciousness is the strongest evidence that we can have. Our belief in it lies at the basis of all evidence and of all knowledge.

"2. We are clearly conscious of merit or demerit, of self-approval or self-condemnation in consequence of our actions. If our wills were acted upon by a force beyond our control, we might congratulate or pity ourselves, but we could not praise or blame ourselves, for what we had done.

"3. We praise or blame others for their good or evil actions; and in our conduct toward them we show that we believe them to have been not merely fortunate or unfortunate, but praiseworthy or blameworthy. So far as we suppose their wills to have been influenced by circumstances beyond their control, we regard them with diminished approval or censure. On the other hand, we give the highest praise to those who have chosen the good amid strong temptations to evil, and bestow the severest censure on those who have done evil with virtuous surroundings and influences. Now our judgment of others must of necessity be derived from our own consciousness, and if we regard and treat them as freely willing beings, it can only be because we know that our own wills are free. These arguments, all derived from consciousness, can be directly met only by denying the validity of consciousness as a ground of belief." (Peabody's "Moral Philosophy," Ch. I.)

The Bible makes it plain that you and I are free to choose the good and reject the evil if we will. We can ascend to mountain tops of transfiguration and glory, or descend to depths of shame and crime if we will. Hear the Catechism, which is the condensed essence of Scripture truth on this subject:

"Our first parents, being left to the freedom of their own will, fell from the estate wherein they were created, by sinning against God" (Shorter Catechism, Q. 14).

Decide, therefore, today, dear friend, to aspire after the highest in character and usefulness. You can do all things through Christ, who strengthens you. Resolve that you will "win Christ" as St. Paul did, "and be found in him," not having your own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which comes from God through faith" (Phil. 3:8, 9).

Get as far away as you can from Sodom, its worldliness, its immorality, its debauching atmosphere and associations. I believe Dr. Joseph Parker is right when he says:

"Every man should look upon himself as an instrument of possible blessing to the whole world. One family should be a blessing to all families within its influence. We should not be looking for the least but for the greatest interpretations of life—not to make our life as little and ineffective as possible, but to give it fullness, breadth, strength: to which the weary and the sorrowful may look with confidence and thankfulness." ("Genesis," p. 194.)

"What do you hope, dear brother,

To gain by a further delay?

There is no one to save you but Jesus,

There's no other way but his way?"

Do you wait for proof that the Bible is true, that Christ is able to do what he promised? The best way to get that proof is to sit down at his feet as his disciples and learn of him. "He that doeth his will shall know of the doctrine" (Jno. 7: 17).

Are you waiting for the church to become a company of absolutely perfect people? That will not be until the Savior comes the second time. The best way to become perfect is to put yourself in line as his sincere follower, for he is carrying on his perfecting processes today among such. (Read Eph. 5: 25-27.)

Do not get into the habit of being weak and wobbly in matters so vital as the salvation of your soul. That was the weak spot in Reuben's character. He was irresolute, vacillating, never settling down to any definite plan of action. So his father Jacob said of him: "Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel" (Gen. 49:4).

Do not be like the Cache River, a little stream that empties into the Ohio River near Cairo, Ill. From its source to its mouth in a straight line is thirty-six miles. But the stream is so full of crooks and bends that it is one hundred and eighty miles long! Very like undecided people this little river is, wasting precious time and energy before coming to final conclusions.

Oh, it is grand to see a man or woman deciding upon a right course of action and never swerving from that course, no matter how rough and thorny the path they are called upon to tread.

Such deep conviction is tremendously dynamic. Such heroic aggressiveness, under God, is always victorious. Such pronounced and decided loyalty sends a thrill of power and joy into every true heart. How much we need these splendid qualities today!

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Rev. Paul Dwight Moody, a member of New York Presbytery, youngest son of the late D. L. Moody, the evangelist, has been called to the presidency of Middlebury College, in Vermont. He will succeed John M. Thomas, who resigned to become president of Pennsylvania State College. Mr. Moody, for several years, has been associate pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, preaching at one service each week the year around and occupying the pulpit all of the vacation season. Mr. Moody went overseas in the Twenty-sixth Division, and was appointed later by General Pershing to succeed Bishop Brent as senior chaplain of the American Expeditionary Forces. He was decorated by the French Government. After graduating at Yale, Mr. Moody studied in Scotland and at Hartford Theological Seminary. After his ordination in 1912, he became pastor of the Congregational church at St. Johnsbury, where he remained until he went overseas.

The Northfield Conference, started by D. L. Moody, many years ago, has just closed one of its most successful sessions. The speakers occupying an hour each day were: Rev. Dr. Harris E. Kirk, of Baltimore, "Preaching for the Times;" Rev. Dr. John A. Hutton, of Glasgow, "Personality and Equipment of Ministers;" Rev. Dr. J. Stuart Holden, of London, "Aspects of Christ for the Life of Today." Rev. Dr. Charles R. Erdman, of Princeton Theological Seminary, preached the opening sermon, and was heard through the first week. Rev. Dr. John McDowell, of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board, gave a series of addresses on "Christianity and Its Relation to Our Social Condition"; Rev. Dr. Samuel Zwemer, of Arabia, gave an address on the belief that nothing is impossible with God, hence the faith in the triumph of the Cross over the Crescent; Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, of Broadway Congregational Tabernacle, New York, preached on the second and third Sabbaths, and addressed the ministers on the last Saturday evening. Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, and Rev. Charles Inglis, of the same city, spoke a number of times. Rev. Mel Trotten was an active participant in the program, as were others.

The Stony Brook, Long Island, General Conference is in session this week. Rev. Dr. John F. Carson, pastor of the General Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, is presiding. The speakers are: Rev. William M. Curry, Philadelphia; Rev. M. H. Fishburn, Frazer, Pa.; Rev. Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, New York; Dr. W. E. Geil, Doylestown; Rev. W. B. Greenway, Philadelphia; Rev. Dr. William Charles Hogg, Williamsport, Pa.; Rev. Dr. Hugh Jack, Detroit, Mich.; Rev. Dr. J. S. Kennedy, Philadelphia; Rev. A. Gordon MacLennan, Boston; Rev. John Knox McClurkin, Pittsburgh; Prof. John G. Machen, Princeton; Rev. George G. Mahy, Philadelphia; Rev. Ford C. Ottman, Stamford; Rev. David M. Skilling, Webster Groves; Captain Gipsy Pat Smith, Glasgow, Scotland; Rev. Aquilla Webb, Philadelphia; Mr. John C. Williams, Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie, New York. The subjects all emphasize the fundamentals of the faith. Friday evening there will be a memorial service for the late Charles M. Alexander and John H. Wyburn.

At the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, last Sabbath, the preacher was Rev. Dr. John Hutton, of Glasgow; Rev. Dr. Stuart Nye Hutchinson, pastor of the East Liberty Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, preached in the First Church; Rev. Dr. Thomas W. Smith was in the West End pulpit, and Rev. Dr. W. H. Wilson in the Fort George pulpit. At the Tent Evangel, Rev. Dr. McPherson, the superintendent, preached morning and evening, and in the afternoon Rev. James M. Clinton, a noted Irish preacher, conducted the service.

This has been the greatest year in evangelism which America has ever seen, according to Dr. Charles L. Goodell, the evangelistic secretary of the Federal Council of Churches. More persons have been received into the churches during the past year than were ever received in the same length of time in all their history. Additions during the year have been upward of 2,000,000. The Northern Baptists report 160,000; Southern Baptists, 200,000; Disciples of Christ, 100,000; Congregationalists, 100,000; Methodist Episcopal, 182,338; Methodist Episcopal South, 279,000; Presbyterian, 124,000; Southern body, 24,294; United Presbyterian, 19,000; Reformed, 26,709; United Brethren, 20,000; Evangelical, 50,000; Lutheran, 110,000.

WOOSTER BIBLE CONFERENCE.

BY MRS. MARY L. BLINN.

The Wooster Bible Conference and School of Missions was held in unusually happy circumstances this year. In the first place the weather was beautiful, and then, too, the program passed off more smoothly than it has in many years. There was less shifting due to sickness and other causes than in times past.

Two features alone were to be regretted: the very small number of men there; and the large number of persons who came late, or left early, and therefore could not complete any of the courses offered. The second part is easily explainable, as many of the women were mothers, with children and households, who found it difficult to arrange home matters so that they could leave even for a short time. Unless there is a far larger number of men, both ministers and laymen, in proportion, at the other conferences, it does not bode well for the Church.

What summer resort has to offer to a Christian family more than Wooster Conference has. A modern dormitory in which to live, a swimming tank, tennis courts, a gymnasium, care of your children free of charge during the day and an opportunity of attending lectures given by specialists from all over the country, and all of this for a registration fee of two dollars and board and room at two dollars a day. And, we must add to this, Christian fellowship, which some of us value more than almost any other thing which we get from the Conference.

The first study hour each day there was a lecture by Dr. Geo. W. Richards, President of Lancaster Theological Seminary, on "Men and Movement in Church History." Perhaps it was John Wesley, or George Fox, or John Knox, depending upon the day. At nine o'clock, Dr. McNaughton, of the Pittsburgh Theological Seminary, gave an expository lecture on the Book of Romans. At ten o'clock the men and women separated, the men to a lecture on Christian Ideals by Dr. Richards, and the women to the classes on the study books. This year the "Unfinished Business" was taught by Miss Marie Preston, one of the Extension secretaries of the Home Board. The two-hour normal class was conducted by Miss Gertrude Schultz, Education secretary of the Foreign Board, using as a basis for the class work the "Why and How of Foreign Missions." At eleven o'clock Dr. Dosker, professor of Church History at Louisville Theological Seminary, gave a series of lectures on the "Kingdom and the Nations."

The afternoon was spent in rest and recreation. The evenings and Sabbath were given up to addresses and sermons and to the introduction of the missionaries who are home on their furloughs, or retired and living in Wooster. This year our Saturday evening and Sabbath were made memorable by the presence of Dr. G. Campbell Morgan. Under his genius the Old and New Testament people and circumstances again live and become clothed with meaning of which we never dreamed.

The Wooster Bible Conference and School of Missions of 1921 has become a part of history, but its memory will live to delight and refresh the hearts of those who were there.

LANE SEMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.

Lane Seminary opens Thursday, September, 22, 1921, at 11 a. m., with an address by Dr. McKibbin upon "The Gospel, and the Promises and Problems of the Present Age."

The resignations of Drs. Vance and Cheek, the former to accept a chair in the Western Seminary, Pittsburgh, Pa., the latter to undertake special work looking to larger efficiency, have deprived the Seminary of men of unquestioned scholarship.

But Lane's high standard of scholarly equipment, and practical and efficient training in handling the Word of God, and in the discharge of the duties of the pastorate, will not be lowered.

An experimental and working knowledge of the English Bible will still be emphasized. Dr. Farr, of the Old Testament and Hebrew chair, will take Old Testament English Bible. Dr. Granstaff, of the Oakland Presbyterian Church, Springfield, O., has been elected to the chair of Homiletics and Apologetics; Rev. Julian P. Love, of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Dayton, O., to the chair of New Testament Greek and New Testament English Bible.

Both of these brethren, who have accepted, are graduates of Lane, and will take up their work at the opening of the Seminary. They represent the older and younger alumni of the institution.

Dr. Granstaff, a graduate of Muskingum College, Ohio, and at one time a teacher and a superintendent of schools in New Concord, O., has been a successful pastor in the churches of College Corner, O.; Fifth, Cincinnati; Second, Newark, O.; First, Logansport, Ind.; Avalon, Presbytery of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Oakland, Springfield, O. For seven years he was associated with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman in successful evangelistic work.

In 1914, Dr. Chapman, an alumnus of Lane, and a member of its Board of Trustees, wrote Lane's President: "I wish you would call Dr. Granstaff to Lane for the chair of Homiletics; he is a great and growing man, and would stand by your side for the larger Lane. I can not urge this too strongly, and I do not think there is a better man for you in the Church."

The war arrested the advent of the "larger Lane," but her sons went to battle for a God-given human freedom, and Lane is larger in spirit, nationally and internationally, and better fitted, with God's help, to bring in that "larger Lane" in numbers and in service.

Rev. Julian P. Love, an alumnus of Miami University, Oxford, O., is a B.D. of Lane and an A.M. of the University of Cincinnati, O., and his major in work required for these honors was Greek, Classic and New Testament. He has had a brilliant and successful pastorate in the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Dayton, O.

President Hughes of Miami University writes: "I am delighted to hear of the honor coming to Mr. Love. He was a student at Miami for four years and graduated with distinction. He was elected to Phi Beta Kappa in his Senior year. I feel confident that you have added to your staff a capable scholar, a man of the very highest ideals."

The physical equipment of the Seminary is being much improved. Through the aid of the alumni, electric lighting has been placed in the dormitory building and the library. Every student room will have one or more burners, according to their size.

Through the activity of Dr. Vance, sufficient funds have been gathered to extend the steam heating to all the student rooms. The Alumni Association are in an effort to aid in the renovation of the whole building, and in promoting in other ways the comfort and efficiency of the student body. May not Lane claim the continued confidence of its alumni and the Church at large (all Evangelical bodies) as an institution whose adequate scholarship, wide knowledge of, and profound loyalty to the infallible Word of God, will make it a safe place to train a ministry of the Everlasting Gospel to build up strong, well-balanced, prayerful, consecrated churches, abounding in good works?

WILLIAM MCKIBBIN,
President.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

The pulpit of the Second Church, Rev. Geo. W. Shelton, D.D., pastor, was supplied on Aug. 21st by a former pastor, Rev. S. Edward Young, D.D. During the remainder of August the church will be closed.

The First Church is being cleaned, but services are not to be interrupted. Rev. Dr. Mark Matthews will occupy the pulpit next Sabbath.

The new incumbent of the chair of New Testament Literature and Exegesis at Western Theological Seminary, Prof. Selby F. Vance, D.D., will occupy the pulpit of the Shady Side Church, Aug. 28th. President W. O. Thompson, of Columbus, Ohio, filled the same pulpit on Aug. 21st.

The pastor-elect of the Highland Avenue Church, Rev. George C. Fisher, expects to move into the manse on Aug. 24th and begin his services at the church the first of September.

The Young People's Conference, held last week at Saltsburg, is reported as very satisfactory, and the enrollment was 259. The only element which was less numerous than had been hoped, was the older class of the youth, those of high school age. But the entertainment by the Kiskiminetas school was delightful, and the conditions were most pleasing. Prof. Wilson and his associates merit great praise.

On August 10th Rev. William H. Hezlep and family began their voyage of return to India, on a steamer which carries them to Bombay. They go back to their large field, and, to the looker-on of the world, their bewildering task, with a gladness and confidence which is most cheering. I think, sometimes, God left these great problems of heathenism, these vast difficulties of superstition, to create a new faith, and expel our skepticism and prove the power of the old truths and evangelical faith. Talking with this young missionary, in whom I have a personal interest, born of a friendship which stretches from his baptism to his ordination, after I had baptized his youngest child, it was delightful to see the light in his eyes, and the high confidence, as he told of what Christianity was doing in India, how it was honeycombing the old religions, mastering the caste principle and reaching high and low. He expects great results in the next ten years. The political problems of India are bewildering, but Christianity is the only solution. As he talked, I could not fail to note how Christian experience repeat itself, for I recalled a beautiful passage in one of Dr. Thomas Chalmers' Discourses on the Epistle to the Romans, a book one may well take up to breathe a purer air, and enjoy a sweeter religious thought, so richly does he treat even those perplexing principles of the great Apostle Paul. One hour with Chalmers, as he glows with radiant thoughts, and tender faith, and fascinating visions of eternal things, is worth a year of ordinary philosophizing. He had been discussing the text, "but to be spiritually minded is peace," and he goes on to say: "I know not a finer illustration of this topic than one which may be gathered from a reported conversation between Dr. Carey, the missionary at Serampore, and a wealthy merchant at Calcutta. One of his clerks had determined to give up all the prospects and emoluments of a lucrative situation, and henceforth devote himself to the work of evangelizing the heathen. His employer, to whom this seemed an inexplicable resolution, called on Dr. Carey, and inquired of him the terms and the advantages of this new work to which a favorite servant was on the eve of betaking himself, and was very much startled to understand that it was altogether a life of labor, and that there was no earthly remuneration whatever; that beyond those things which were needful for the body, there was not an enjoyment within the power or purpose of money which any one of them aspired after; that with hearts set on their own eternity, and the eternity of their fellow creatures, they had neither time nor space for the workings of his world's ambitions. So that, however occupied about the concerns of the soul, each felt light as a bird on a thorn about the food and raiment, and the sufficiency of the coming days. But the chief interest of this dialogue between a devoted missionary and a busy, active, aspiring merchant lay in the confession of the latter, who seems to have been visited with a glimpse of true happiness, and that, after all, he was not on the way to it; that the thousand crosses and hazards of mercantile adventure had kept him perpetually on the rack, and rified his heart of all those substantial sweets by which alone it can be purely and permanently gladdened. And from him it was, indeed, an astonishing testimony when, on contrasting his own life of turmoil and vexation and checkered variety, with the simple but lofty aims and settled dependence, and unencumbered because wholly unambitious hearts of these pious missionaries, he fetched a deep sigh and said "it was indeed a most enticing cause." I love to imagine the great, yet simple-hearted Scottish preacher, so, fixed on Christ, uttering those words, and, with his face aglow with these heavenly truths, lifting his hearers to the spiritual-mindedness without which there is no peace. There is a serenity and joy here that no wealth or fame assures.

I don't wish to be censorious or unduly critical, but it seems a far cry from such a view of religion to the strange carvings in St. Thomas P. E. Church, New York, carvings over a door of the dollar mark, the money bags and initials of J. P. Morgan, the caricature of the W. C. T. U. and Prohibition, the monocled Englishman, the prostrate Kaiser and the faces of Foch, Pershing and others. We have seen the carvings in the choir stalls of Chester Cathedral, wrought by the monks, and elsewhere, but modern architecture of the House of God should, I think, be free from the comicalities which have no part in worship or praise or prayer, and the architect, to whom such an appreciation of the House of Prayer is lacking, may be employed on secular buildings, but not on a place which needs every care to keep it separate from the intruding world.

Essayists and historians condemn the violence of reformers and Puritans who swept out of the old mediaeval churches the vagaries of idolatry and temptations to superstition. Were those hindrances to a pure faith more perilous than the trivialities which harden the worshiper against the thoughts of God?

WINONA BIBLE CONFERENCE.

The Winona Bible Conference was largely attended and successful in every way. The program was good and valuable. Evangelist Mel Trotter was the director. At the annual meeting of the Board on Aug. 18, Mr. W. B. Carmichael, of St. Louis, Mo., was re-elected president of the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference; Elwood Haynes, of Kokomo, first vice-president; Dr. Ira Landrith, of Winona Lake, second vice-president, and Dr. J. C. Breckenridge, Winona Lake, secretary and general manager. Dr. Breckenridge has been acting as secretary and general manager since the death, seven months ago, of Dr. S. C. Dickey, founder of Winona. Three new directors were elected: Homer Rodeheaver, Winona Lake; Don W. Welch, Berea, Ky., and W. R. Werking, Anderson, Ind. The Executive Committee consists of Mr. Carmichael, Dr. Breckenridge, Homer Rodeheaver, W. D. Frazer, W. S. Rogers, Dr. George W. Taft and Dr. James A. Gordon. The financial report showed that the receipts this year have been $51,850, and the expenditures $49,413. The report also showed the lifting of a $21,000 debt on the new tabernacle. Rev. Billy Sunday's contributions to the conference this year totaled $20,500.

THE REFORMED ALLIANCE.

The Eleventh General Council of the "Alliance of Reformed Churches Holding the Presbyterian System" is appointed to meet at Pittsburgh from Friday, Sept. 16 to Sabbath, Sept. 25, inclusive. The headquarters and principal place of meeting will be the First Presbyterian Church, Sixth Avenue near Wood Street, and the William Penn Hotel will be the scene of the chief social functions. Delegates immediately upon their arrival in the city are requested to repair to the First Church, where the secretaries have their office, that they may obtain their lodging assignments and receive printed copies of the reports to be discussed by the Council.

Rev. William Park, D.D., LL.D., of Belfast, Ireland, will be the presiding officer. He was elected president of the council at the Aberdeen meeting in 1913 and will vacate his position at the close of this council. Chairmen for the different sittings will, however, be selected from among the various churches represented. Besides those from the Presbyterian bodies in the United States and Canada, there will be delegates from England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Lithuania, India, China, Korea, South Africa and other countries. It is expected that the representation from the continent of Europe will be larger than at any previous council. The program will include papers and discussions on several of the burning religious questions of the day, as well as a survey of what the Reformed and Presbyterian Churches of the World are doing and suffering in their widely-scattered fields. In view of the vital interest of the proceedings, the presence of so many prominent and influential church leaders from all parts, and the decisions that may be arrived at on matters of great urgency and importance, we would press for a full attendance of the delegates from the beginning to the end of the council, and we invite the sympathy and prayers of all Christian people, especially of those belonging to our particular household of faith.

J. R. Fleming, Acting General Secretary.
Henry B. Master, American Secretary

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Rev. Martin E. Anderson, D.D., of Detroit, Mich., was preacher at Buena Memorial last Sabbath. Dr. Anderson was greeted with a large congregation, many of whom were formed parishioners of his when he was pastor of the Rogers Park Church. Dr. Anderson's welcome was most cordial, as he was held in high esteem when pastor here, and his remarkable success in his Detroit parish, having received over five hundred during the year, gladdened many hearts here as well as in Detroit.

Rev. Charles S. Stevens, pastor of the Third Church, more familiarly known as "The Old Third," is making an exception of taking his vacation in August, as most of the pastors are doing, but he is staying at home and occupying his own pulpit. He broke into the first page of the leading Chicago daily last Monday morning with an account of his Sabbath evening sermon to young people on choosing a helpmate. This may seem timely instruction in view of the facts published in the same paper by the clerk of the county, stating that the city, or rather the county, would be in the neighborhood of 4,000 marriages behind its normal record for this year.

The Presbyterians have sixty-six of the two hundred Daily Vacation Bible Schools now being conducted in the city and suburbs. In these sixty-six schools there are several hundred teachers ministering to several thousand scholars. Promoters of the schools say that five weeks of Daily Vacation Bible School is equivalent to one year of ordinary Sabbath school work. It comes too at a time when all of the regular church work, including the Sabbath school, is at its lowest ebb of the year.

The Church Extension Board is paying half of the expense of giving fifty boys and girls a two-weeks' outing at Camp Gray, with its refreshing cool and its nourishing food. The boys and girls pay the other half. Nine churches will send approximately five hundred children to Camp Gray.

EAST TENNESSEE NOTES.

BY REV. E. L. GAMON, D.D.

In these days of too brief pastorates, it is refreshing to find one who has remained for thirty-one years, in the midst of many discouragements and facing continual difficulties. Rev. W. R. Dawson, D.D., of Knoxville, deserves great praise for his fidelity and achievements. One year ago the beautiful new edifice was completed. It bears the suggestive name "Graystone" and will remain the monument to Dr. Dawson's perseverance and faith. A feature of the thirty-first anniversary in July was the reception of thirty-six new members. Dr. Dawson has recently returned from a visit to Northfield, stopping at New York and Boston.

Three promising young men from the Presbytery of Union enter the Theological Seminary next month. Mr. Ralph Loyd goes to McCormick, Mr. E. E. Loft to Princeton and Mr. W. B. Holmes, Jr., to Union at Richmond, Va.

Messrs. Allan Cardwell and Charles McClellan were ordained elders in the Washington Church last Sabbath.

Evangelistic meetings have been held, or are in progress, at Eusebia, Union Hall, Centennial, Clover Hill, Shunem, Washington, and Elisabethton, and plans are made for Rockford, Tabor, Big Spring and others.

Twenty-two members were added recently to Elisabethton Church as the result of special services. Rev. A. N. Penland is pastor.

The Erwin Church has purchased a lot on which a new church will be erected in the near future. Rev. R. L. Houston has had a most successful year. About sixty members have joined during the year.

This section was well represented at the two conferences at Ovoca this year. The strong program and the general good time brought forth expressions of appreciation and promises to return next year.

We note with satisfaction that $50,000 has been appropriated for the new school at Harriman, and $150,000 for the home school at Asheville, N. C. These large amounts are from the Sage legacy.

Rev. H. C. Wilson, D.D., of the Knoxville Second Church, is at his summer home in Wisconsin for August. Rev. R. M. Ramsay, Ph.D., of the Kirkwood Church, is at Montreat.

City and rural pastors recognize the value of the suggestive program issued by the Assembly's New Era Committee. Those who have not seen it would do well to secure a copy from headquarters as they plan for the fall and winter work.

Knoxville, Tcn.

THE STEWARDSHIP PROGRAM.

Certainly no church which desires to cultivate stewardship will be at a loss for materials in view of the fine assortment which the Stewardship Department of the New Era Movement is now prepared to furnish for the coming season. Among the new materials listed on the Order Form which has just been issued, one of the most notable is a referendum, containing a questionnaire and ballot designed especially to lead members of the churches, who are reluctant to commit themselves personally to the giving of a definite proportion, to face the issues involved in stewardship without having their names appear in any way. One of the new pamphlets entitled "Farming Eden" is written in dialogue form and teaches the scriptural principles in thoroughly popular style. A new chart is also issued entitled "Why Enroll in the Fellowship of Stewardship." This will find its way to the walls of many of the churches and Programs for young people's societies and plans for women's societies, men's organizations and Sabbath schools are also included in the materials which can be obtained from any of the offices of the New Era Movement. The Board of Publication is issuing the "Thirteen Biblical Lessons on Stewardship" for use in the adult classes of the Sabbath school at $3 per dozen in quantities of not less than a half dozen to a single address; also the "Suggestions for Teachers" at $1.20 per dozen on the same condition. The latter ought to be obtained directly from the depositories of the Board.

TEMPERANCE DAY, OCTOBER 30.

The Lincoln-Lee Legion is planning to help the churches and Sabbath schools celebrate World's Temperance Day, on Sabbath, Oct. 30, by furnishing charts, pledges and all necessary literature to all who apply for them. There is no educational agency today working in behalf of law observance and temperance that will help more satisfactorily than this organization. For their attractive proposition write to Lincoln-Lee Legion, Rev. Milo G. Keyser, Westerville, O. It will be borne in mind that this is the total-abstinence department of the Anti-Saloon League.

MISSION WORK

NEW MISSIONARIES.

"I look forward with more joy to going back to my mission field than I did toward coming home on furlough," said Rev. R. B. Love, returning missionary to the Punjab, addressing new Presbyterian Board appointees preparing to sail, during the last get-together meeting in New York City, Aug. 6th. Those present included returning and new missionaries to North and West India, the Punjab, Persia and Syria, who were to sail from New York, Aug. 17th.

Miss A. M. Jefferson, returning missionary to the West India mission, told of her twenty years service on the field, and Miss Edith Lamme spoke of her work in Persia. "I'm exceedingly glad to go back," declared Rev. Leslie Leavitt of Syria.

Dr. Stanley White presided at the gathering. "The missionary's life is full of promise," he said. "I commend you to the care of the Lord." Dr. George T. Scott led in prayer. The solemn service was concluded and the missionaries were started on the first lap of their journey toward the lands in which they will spend from seven to eight years each, before returning again to America. Because Persia for so long has been deprived of adequate missionary service, the greatest number of those leaving were scheduled for that country.

The number of missionaries sent this year is the greatest in the history of the board. For the fiscal year April 1, 1920, to March 31, 1921, the number of missionaries commissioned was 158, which, because of the death or resignation of fifty-eight, left a net gain of one hundred for the year. From April 1, 1921 to Aug. 16th, there have been fifty-six missionaries commissioned for regular terms and sixteen for special terms of five years or under. Despite this increase, however, board secretaries and missionaries together declare that while "the field is white unto the harvest," the laborers are all too few. Rev. R. B. Love, of the Punjab, declared the staff there was twenty-one short and that his own station was empty and waiting for his return.

THE BIBLE AND EVANGELISM.

What a wonderful place the Bible has in evangelism! Throughout the length and breadth of America there are enthusiasts for the work of the American Bible Society because they believe, with it, that the Scriptures themselves form the most effective missionary ever known. The vitality of this belief is constantly strengthened by such testimonies as the following, related at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society by a pioneer missionary and translator of the New Testament, who says:

"Let me tell you of Giovanni Papini, a poet, a philosopher, the most brilliant writer of Italian that is living today. His story is significant; you have this most brilliant of living Italian writers confessing to the world that he has found Jesus Christ, and found him through reading the pages of the New Testament. He tells us that from his earliest youth he had a feeling of repulsion from all religion, from all churches. He grew up absolutely devoid of faith. Then came the war, and for Papini, as for thousands of others, it meant a spiritual crisis. What was the meaning of it all? He was dismayed by the horrible tragedy. He ceased to write, and plunged into a re-examination of the histories and philosophies, the wars and migrations of peoples, the rise and fall of civilizations, the laws and customs and religions of mankind. He studied them all to find a clue to the meaning of things. He found that all the endeavors made by men to install an ephemeral happiness on earth had resulted only in deluging the earth with blood and tears. Then it occurred to him that perhaps after all there might be something that would throw light upon his problem in the neglected New Testament, and he came to the New Testament with a heart full of desire, full of hope, and he tells us that he has found there certainty and peace. With all the fervor of an apostle, Giovanni Papini today is preaching, through his pen, the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ."

NEW PUBLICATIONS

The Bible and Modernism. By J. M. Townsend. Paper. 50 cents. Published and sold by the author, Cleveland, Tenn.

This is a very earnest and loyal defense of the Bible against modern unbelief. The writer humbly disclaims the possession of great scholarship, but he shows that he possesses the best and highest scholarship after all. He knows the truth when he sees it. He sends the book forth with the hope and prayer that it may help correct the evils resulting from the dissemination of the theories of the Destructive Critics and the New Theology.

Paul's Letters. By Rev. David James Burrell, D.D. Cloth. $1.25. American Tract Society, New York.

In a very plain, practical and helpful way Dr. Burrell takes up the Epistles of Paul in the order in which they occur in the New Testament, and treats them reverently and thoughtfully so that his readers get the main truths out of them, and are made sure that they are the very messages of God to our souls through his servant, the apostle. The studies are brief, but are calculated to stir one up to deeper study of the epistles.

The Week Day Church School. By Rev. Walter Albion Squires. Cloth. $1.25. Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work, Philadelphia.

There is a realization of the fact by many that the children and young people of today are not receiving sufficient instruction in religious things, and various methods are being tried for remedying this defect. The weekday church school, in connection with other plans, is being tried in some places. This volume contains a sketch and an explanation of the efforts that are being made to furnish weekday religious instruction to pupils in the graded and high schools, and is worthy of very careful reading and consideration by all religious workers.

The Star People. By Gaylord Johnson. Cloth. $1.50. The Macmillan Company, New York.

One should know the stars as he knows the flowers and the trees and the birds. Thomas Carlyle complained because no one had taught him to know the stars and their names. If one is acquainted with them he has good company as he is out under the sky in the evening. This book is a very simple and beautiful attempt to teach children, or young people, or older people, to recognize the constellations and know them by their names. An uncle teaches his little niece and two nephews how to know the star people, and any one will find it a very pleasant and attractive series of chapters. There are many maps and diagrams, and there are descriptions of the constellations, and their relations to one another, and rules for finding them. The little book is a very clever and pleasing contribution to the art of knowing and naming the stars.

PAMPHLETS.

The Times of the Gentiles and The Time of the End. Paper, 5 cents. Pp. 28. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. A study of the last times.

Synod of Oregon. Minutes of 1921. Rev. John A. Townsend, 333 Portland Boulevard, West Portland, Ore., Stated Clerk.

RELIGIOUS NEWS

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Rev. Joseph A. Barnes, from Belgrade to Livingston, Mont.

Rev. William Colby, from Chicago, Ill., to St. Louis, Mo., 3907 West Belle Place.

Rev. Howard G. Wilkinson, Ph.D., from Wellsville, O., to Aurora, Ind.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Walter T. Alan, of Greenville, Pa., Presbytery of Erie, died on Aug. 10, after a useful ministry. He was born at Hillsdale, Mich., and studied at Hillsdale College. He was ordained in 1897 and had charges at Mt. Pleasant, Transfer, Georgetown and Waterloo, Pa., and elsewhere. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. Dr. C. B. Wakefield, of Greenville, Pa., with whom he had studied privately in preparation for the ministry.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Rev. Dr. Lewis Earle Lee, of Evanston, preached in the Pleasant Ridge Church last Sabbath. This week he is attending the Winona Bible Conference.

Rev. G. D. McCulloch, D.D., of Batavia, preached in the Mt. Auburn Church last Sabbath, and Rev. A. E. Harding, of Bond Hill, in the Norwood Church.

Dr. Frank Marston preached last Sabbath morning and evening in the Church of the Covenant and will do so during the remainder of Dr. Stevenson's vacation.

Rev. Dr. A. P. Keil preached last Sabbath in the North Church for Rev. W. A. Motter, and Dr. C. F. Goss in the Avondale Church.

Dr. E. P. Whallon preached in Clifford Church last Sabbath, and Dr. J. V. Stephens preached in College Hill.

Rev. W. M. Reese, of Pleasant Run, preached last Sabbath for Rev. W. D. Harrell in St. Bernard Church, where he was formerly pastor.

Rev. G. W. Shields occupied the pulpit of Clifton Church for Dr. J. Shane Niccolls.

Rev. Curtis E. Shields, of Bucyrus, was again heard last Sabbath in the Walnut Hills First Church.

Rev. N. R. Walker is preaching in the Newport First Church during the vacation of Dr. O. S. Thornberry.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Rev. and Mrs. W. D. Vater are spending a month's vacation at Lake Geneva, Wis.

Rev. James Edgar Wilson, of Kansas, preached at the First Church last Sabbath morning.

A campaign has been started to build a parsonage for the Southampton Church. At a meeting held Aug. 4, about seventy persons present subscribed $3,010 for this purpose. It is about half the amount needed.

The marriage took place in this city, Tuesday evening of this week, of Rev. Louis Stumpf, pastor at Madison, Ill., and Miss Abby Leinen Beattie, of 5018 Cates Avenue. She is a Gospel singer of ability, and has assisted at evangelistic meetings. They will go on a wedding trip to Chicago and Winona Lake.

The Tyler Place congregation, worshipping in neighborhood meetings at the Baptist church of that district, last Sabbath evening, was addressed by Rev. J. C. Berger, pastor of the Kirkwood Presbyterian Church, who also preached at the Tyler Place home pulpit in the morning. Sabbath services of the summer are held in the Tyler Place Church in the mornings, with union meetings Sabbath night. On the preceding Sabbath, Rev. H. Magill, D.D., Stated Clerk of St. Louis Presbytery, gave the morning sermon.

Dr. William H. Clagett was the preacher at both services last Sabbath at the Sidney Street Church, having as his morning theme "The Blood of Christ in the Old Testament," and in the evening "The Blood of Christ in the New Testament."

The pulpit of the Brandt Memorial Mission, at 5023 Morganford Road, was filled last Sabbath evening, by Rev. Harry Curtis, of Altoona, Kan.

Central and Westminster Churches, met last Sabbath evening with the Union Avenue Christian Church, and a sermon was delivered by Rev. E. S. Muckley.

OHIO.

Rev. James E. Harris, of Blue Ball, is to be installed at New Paris in the near future, having accepted a call to this church.

Rev. D. Porter Williams, of Beaver, Pa., pastor-at-large of the presbyteries of Beaver and Shenango, has accepted an urgent call to the church of East Palestine, O.

The church of Eckmansville and Mount Leigh Church of Seaman had a joint congregational picnic at Cherry Fork Fair Ground, Aug. 10th. About two hundred persons participated and had a delightful time. Rev. W. S. Harold, pastor, afterward went to Winona Lake, for the Bible Conference, accompanied by his wife and daughter.

Rev. Frank Granstaff, D.D., will be released from Oakland Church, Springfield, by the Presbytery of Dayton, meeting on Aug. 26th, at 10 a. m., in Westminster Church, Dayton, and dismissed to Cincinnati Presbytery, to become a professor at Lane Seminary.

INDIANA.

The First Church was supplied last Sabbath by Rev. F. W. Backemeyer; the Sabbath-school class for young people being taught by Rev. Don D. Tullis, D.D.; the Second Church by Rev. H. L. Todd; Memorial by Rev. Jabez Hall, D.D.; Tabernacle by Rev. G. W. Allison, and Seventh by Rev. A. S. Buchanan.

ILLINOIS.

The Presbytery of Springfield has released Rev. L. D. Lasswell from Greenview, Ill., and dismissed him to the Presbytery of Alton; and dismissed Rev. J. Stanley Mitchell to the Presbytery of Mattoon, that he might accept a call to Shelbyville.—D. G. Carson, S. C.

Rev. S. B. Harry, of Petersburg, Ill., has received a call to Taylorville, Ill.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rev. Thomas G. Baxter has been released from Pine Grove Church and dismissed to Northumberland Presbytery.

NEW JERSEY.

Rev. Dr. Hugh B. MacCauley, of Paterson, has been elected executive secretary of the newly organized Council of Churches of Paterson, on a salary of $2,500. The purpose is to extend the co-operation of the denominations in all forms of reform and religious work in the city. Forty churches of seven denominations are in the Council. Dr. MacCauley is the present moderator of Jersey City Presbytery.

KANSAS.

The church of Oskaloosa, Rev. Clarence Almon, pastor, received ten members recently, of whom one was a man eighty-two years of age.

ARKANSAS.

Evangelistic meetings are to be held at Lincoln, Ark., during October. The pastor, Rev. Edwin Harris, will have the assistance of Rev. E. M. Freyschlag in the preaching, and Rev. Sam Marrs, of Cane Hill, will have charge of the singing. All Christian people are asked to pray for these meetings.

WYOMING.

Rev. C. H. Marshall, Ph.D., was installed at North Casper on Aug. 14 by Rev. H. W. Bainton, Rev. David McMartin and Rev. H. W. Rankin. Evangelistic meetings are now in progress in which the pastor is being assisted by Rev. H. W. Rankin.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. H. B. Thrasher, a candidate for the ministry of McAlester Presbytery, assisted by another member of the Potean Church, has organized a mission Sabbath school of forty members on the Southside, and will hold Sabbath school and prayer meeting there.

Rev. A. B. Johnson, of Stringtown, is being assisted in revival services by Rev. E. O. Whitwell, of Edmond.

MISSOURI.

Dr. E. A. K. Grant resigns the pastorate at Unionville. During the year there were thirty-nine adult baptisms and over forty members were added to the church. He is an able preacher and successful worker, but the climate does not agree with Mrs. Grant. Any church desiring a good minister may apply. Dr. and Mrs. Grant were foreign missionaries for a time.

MONTANA.

After three and one-half years of service, Rev. J. A. Barnes has resigned at Belgrade and Spring Hill, and the congregations voted to accept his resignation with regrets. Mr. Barnes is seventy years of age and purposes to retire from the ministry and locate on a small farm. He will continue a member of Helena Presbytery and also to act as Stated Clerk of the same and chairman of the Home Mission Committee until next April. In addition to his pastoral work, Mr. Barnes has been secretary of the Belgrade Chamber of Commerce and has been active in many public affairs. His address after Sept. 1st will be Livingston, Mont., Chimney Rock Route.

COLORADO.

Immanuel Church of Denver has recently been united with North Church, and Dr. Perry V. Jenness has accepted the pastorate of the church.

Rev. F. E. Stemme has finished his year's work at Delta with a fine record. A long-standing debt was liquidated; twenty-one members were received; church salaries increased $700; a church office built in the annex, completely furnished; repairs made on church property and the manse furnished. Any minister wishing to apply may write to Secretary C. E. Blaine. Mr. Stemme is taking a vacation at 21 So. Wahsatch Avenue, Colorado Springs, and is open for work after Sept. 1st.

MINNESOTA.

Rev. and Mrs. H. J. Colwell, of St. Paul, celebrated the fifty-eighth anniversary of their marriage on Aug. 3d. Mr. Colwell is eighty-six years of age and his wife is seventy-seven. They have six children, most of whom live in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Rev. E. R. Horton, of Raymond, Ill., has accepted the pastorate at Le Roy, Minn., where he has met with a cordial reception. His pastorate at Raymond was greatly successful, a large number of new members being received and a substantial increase made in the gifts to the boards. While pastor there his salary was raised $300, and over $1,000 was spent in improvements on the manse.

WISCONSIN.

Rev. C. H. Giesselbrecht, of North Milwaukee, took charge of the services in Westminster Church, in the absence of Rev. Bertram G. Jackson, who is taking his vacation at Chetek.—Rev. H. B. Frame, secretary of the Bayview Y. M. C. A., has been doing a fine work for the young men, and is helping our pastors to fill their pulpits when away on vacation. He spoke in Grace Church, Milwaukee, last Sabbath.—Rev. Roy Brown, our missionary in the Philippines, is preaching every Sabbath morning in Immanuel Church, Milwaukee, while the pastor is at Lake Geneva and Freeport, Ill., on his vacation.

The Christian people at Ashland had a fine demonstration and a large Sabbath-school parade recently. Over twelve hundred were in line, and, with banners and bands, marched through the streets for ten blocks, and then went to the churches for interesting services. There were songs, addresses and recitations. Among the speakers were Rev. C. L. Koons, of the First Presbyterian Church; Rev. Dr. Flagg, of Northland College; Mr. H. A. Davis, director of the parade, and others. The Ashland Daily Press says that, taken altogether, it was the most wonderful demonstration of the kind ever held in Northern Wisconsin. Outsiders, and many who never go to church, were thrilled, and every one wants Ashland to have such a parade every year.

GEORGIA.

Evangelist Arthur F. Bishop, of Portland, Ore., has assisted in five series of meetings in country and village churches in the Presbytery of Athens, Presbyterian Church South, where he was licensed to preach thirty-three years ago. Multitudes of people have attended upon his services; in some instances more than ever before in the history of the communities. There have been 153 confessions and a great many reconsecrations, and the churches have been revived and the communities profoundly impressed.

BRALY—Captain W. C. Braly was born near St. Louis in 1841; moved with his father, Rev. F. M. Braly, an able and useful minister in pioneer days in Missouri and Arkansas, to Cane Hill, Ark., in 1853; united with the church in early manhood, and was a ruling elder for many years. For the last eleven years he was Stated Clerk and home mission chairman in Arkansas Presbytery. When the Cumberland Church went into the union he went in with it, and served faithfully until his heavenly Father called him home on Christmas, 1920. He held many important positions in church and state, and was a tried and true worker to the end, especially in his home church at Lincoln, Ark.

ANDERSON—James Addison Anderson, aged 68, after a lingering illness, departed this life July 22, 1921, at his residence at Beverly, a suburb of Knoxville, Tenn. Mr. Anderson was born and reared during the years of his early manhood on his father's farm at this place. After attaining his majority he went to the city and engaged in merchandising, which business he successfully conducted until seven years ago, when failing health caused him to dispose of his mercantile business and retire to his farm at this place. He was a charter member of the Shannondale Presbyterian Church, and was a liberal supporter of that church and all its benevolences. He was also a ruling elder in that church from the time of its organization thirty-five years ago. He was a great-nephew of Dr. Isaac Anderson, the founder of Maryville College, and to this institution he made liberal contributions. He was also a liberal supporter of the various charitable institutions in and around Knoxville. Funeral services were conducted at the home by Rev. William P. Stevenson, D.D., on July 24. His widow, one brother and five sisters survive him. A good man has gone from among us, but we feel that our loss here below is his gain in our Father's house above. J. M. C.

HOME CIRCLE

A PROBLEM IN THREES.

If three little houses stood in a row,
 With never a fence to divide;
 And if each little house had three little maids
 At play in the gardens wide;
 And if each little maid had three little cats
 (Three times three times three);
 And if each little cat had three little kits,
 How many kits would there be?

And if each little maid had three little friends
 With whom she loved to play;
 And if each little friend had three little dolls
 In dresses and ribbons gay;
 And if friends and dolls and cats and kits
 Were all invited to tea,
 And none of them should send regrets,
 How many guests would there be?

MANY LIVES AT STAKE.

BY HELEN T. MONFORT.

"Mother, dear, how is the pain now?"
 "A trifle easier, Kenneth."
 "Hadn't I better go for Dr. Booth? You might have something worse than just a cold?"
 "No, dear; I'll be better soon," sighed the sick woman, as she turned over in her bed to go to sleep.

Mrs. Osborne had been sick for two days, and owing to the fact that she and her thirteen-year-old son, Kenneth, lived two miles away from the village and that for the last week there had been a continuous storm, none of their friends had yet heard of her illness. Her husband, who was an engineer, had been killed in a wreck, and the shock of his death had left her delicate in health.

The odd jobs that Kenneth did after school hours and the sewing his mother took in supported them, for they lived inexpensively and the rent of the cottage was small. But unfortunately, this winter had been unusually cold, and as fuel had been scarce the little pile of money had gone rapidly down toward the toe of the old stocking.

Mrs. Osborne had caught a hard cold, and as it grew rapidly worse Kenneth grew alarmed, for now her racking cough came from the lungs. The boy had not been able to go to school because of the poor condition of the roads during the storm, so had ample time to serve his mother. As dusk came on he lighted the lamps and walked softly into his mother's room. She being asleep, he went back to the kitchen and began reading.

Presently he was aroused by a call of "Kenneth, Kenneth!" Hastily he put down his book and went to his mother. She was lying down, breathing hard, and with great effort she gasped, "Go for Dr. Brown—quick!"

Before she could get further than "doctor" the boy was off like a flash. He hurriedly put another stick in the stove and wrapped a muffler around his throat. Then hastily he tied a long cord around the collar of his great St. Bernard dog and catching up a lantern, started off for the village.

Outside, the wind was raw and cold, and the snow blew in fitful gusts. But this night of darkness and cold held no terrors for the boy of the plains. As he went hurriedly over the snow-beaten path, his faithful dog, not understanding the master's gravity, suddenly gave a loud bark, followed by others of a sharper variety, and bounded off before the boy. But Kenneth called him back and patted the animal on the head, saying, "No Jack; no barking nor whistling till mother is well again." And the good dog seemingly comprehending walked sedately by the boy.

Soon the lone pair neared the railroad track and, with his lantern swinging along at his side, the boy started to cross it, when something glittering caught his eye. He kneeled down and was closely inspecting it when a cry of horror arose from his lips. What! Could it possibly be! Yes, it was. A rail had broken and was projecting out on the other side of the track, meaning a wreck for the 7:30 limited.

What was he to do? If he waited for the train, which would probably be late, owing to the storm, his mother's condition might grow worse. If he ran for the doctor, the lives of the passengers on the limited would be endangered to a great extent.

Duty and love! Which should he choose?

While his mind was revolving these thoughts his eyes lighted on the faithful Jack. Suddenly an idea occurred to him. He gave a cry of joy, and in a twinkling had wired the lantern to the collar of the bewildered animal. Then, allowing but a few feet of cord, he fastened one end to the rail, the other being securely tied to the dog's collar.

He patted the animal affectionately and then started off. Jack did not understand these maneuvers, and tried to follow his master, but the commanding presence of the rope compelled him to retreat, which produced a long series of barks. And Kenneth strode on, his mind filled with perplexity as to whether he had done right.

"Forty minutes late! Guess she'll stand more speed?" The engineer turned to his fireman, who grunted acquiescence.

"Chilly weather this!" The engineer leaning far out of the cab window for the limited.

Suddenly an exclamation burst from his lips, and with one bound he had drawn his head from the window and pulled furiously over the long lever with such force that the long train came to an almost abrupt standstill.

The fireman jumped to the ground as the train ceased motion. Other officials did so, and advanced to the spot where a light shone on the track. Here they found a huge St. Bernard, none other than our friend Jack, sitting in the middle of the track, trembling and shivering in the cold, with a lantern wired to his collar.

"What did any one want to tie a dog to a railroad track this cold night, and with a lighted lantern!" It was the fireman who spoke. Then suddenly his eye caught the gleam of the broken rail and with an exclamation he called to his companions to look. They did, and their faces grew grave as they thought of the danger that had been so imminent.

But who had tied the dog to the track? Here was a mystery. There were footprints in the snow. Faint tracks, which led to the village, could be seen, but that was all. As they stood wondering who their benefactor might be, the sound of an approaching horse was heard and a boy climbed down from a light business buggy. Then a crack of a whip and the hoof beats continued, this time receding in the distance.

Running up to the dog, around which the men were circled, the boy threw his arm around the neck of his beloved pet, who in his turn barked in recognition.

"What does this mean?" "Is this your dog?" "Did you tie him here?" were the various questions from the men.

"Yes, yes," cried Kenneth, for it was he. "I did."

And he told them the whole story—of his fear of his mother's condition and his perplexity as to what he should do on the discovery of the broken rail. Then suddenly he jumped up from his leaning posture over the dog, saying that he must now return and see what the doctor, who had driven him to the train, said of his mother's condition.

But he was gently detained by the crowd of excited passengers, who realized what the boy had done and how much they owed him, also the dog. Question after question was poured upon him with such rapidity that the boy's mind was bewildered.

Who was his father? What did he do? An engineer? Why, they knew him well!

A purse was collected and a gentleman passenger came forward and presented it to the boy, together with his card, saying that when the latter needed assistance to call on him. But Kenneth stoutly refused the purse, saying that they would have to see his mother about that. Two of the gentlemen accompanied him home while the others returned to the train.

Today Kenneth Osborne is one of the most trained engineers in the company in which his father had been employed and which he himself had aided when a boy.

His mother fully recovered her health and loves to tell the story of her boy and his faithful dog Jack—San Francisco Call.

SUCH VERY LITTLE THINGS.

A bright geranium in a pot,
 It cheered my spirit quite a lot.
 A scent of saltness from the sea
 Made worlds of difference to me.
 A song the wind sang through the corn,
 A thrush-psalm heard at breaking morn,
 And all my strength seemed newly born.

A wish upon a picture-card;
 A dog-barked welcome from the yard;
 A sunbeam laid athwart a stream;
 The merry-glamour of a dream;
 An old friend's hand-grip, word and smile,
 And life was just a grand "worth-while!"

THE SUNSHINE BEES.

BY NAOMI G. LEIGHT.

Some of the girls of the seventh grade, of the Riverside Public School, were in Margaret Day's room discussing everything from styles to their intended picnic.

There were only five of them, those being: Christina Evans, Louise Talbot, Belle Miller, Caroline Wright and Margaret.

Finally the talk drifted to clubs. Louise suggested that they form one. Everybody agreed with her, so the election of officers began. Belle was made secretary, while Christina was made president. Caroline asked, what shall we have for our work and our name?" This question stumped everyone until Caroline said, "I have an idea. Let's call ourselves "Sunshine Bees" and help people out by doing errands for them and cheering them up."

This was greeted with approval by every one and so it was decided upon.

The girls were so happy helping others that other girls at school noticed it and asked them what they did to make themselves so happy. Then the story came out. Of course the other girls wanted to join. Some of the boys wanted to help, too, till finally the club of "Sunshine Bees," had an enrollment of twenty.

Many were the people who had cause to bless the name of "Sunshine Bees." In honor of them lets give one resounding cheer. Long live the "Sunshine Bees!"

BEFORE I GO TO BED.

Each evening as the clock strikes seven,
Directly after tea,
My mamma gets me dressed for bed,
An' then she cuddles me;
Sits down in her own rocking chair
An' takes me on her knee.

She tells me then such lovely tales—
How all the stars and flowers
An' clouds are splendid castles grand
With shining rainbow towers,
I fink that I would like to stay
An' listen there for hours.

An' fore she kisses me "Good-night"
She softly strokes my hair,
While I kneel down beside her knee
An' say my evening prayer,
An' when she tuckes me safe in bed,
She says I'm in God's care.

So, I'm not frightened of the dark,
'Cause mamma says it's clear
That children who have trust in God
Need never have a fear;
For angels watch them as they sleep,
An' God is always near.

MARGIE'S CHARM.

"What is it that makes every one love Maggie Fitch so?" said Jennie Howard. "She isn't pretty nor stylish. Now what is it, do you suppose?"

"I think I know the charm. Perhaps you would better set yourself the task this week to discover it," answered her mother, busily putting the sitting room to rights.

The next day at school Jennie followed Margie like a detective. The first thing she noticed was Margie's kindness to Alice Ross, a shy, new scholar, who stood quite alone, looking wistfully at the others at their gay sports. Margie went over and made her acquaintance, and after a little urging, the girl joined the merry group, and was soon laughing with the rest.

When school was called, Margie laid a rose on the teacher's desk as she passed and smiled a cherry "Good morning," and received an appreciative smile in return.

About an hour later, Jennie saw the new pupil sitting with head bent forward regarding her work with a hopeless expression. Up went Margie's hand for permission to leave her seat; it was granted, as were all her requests, for the teacher knew they were never of a trifling nature. With a little help in the right place from Margie, the troublesome examples were conquered, and the girl lifted a grateful face to Margie's as she thanked her.

On their way home, a troop of girls were working off their spirits in a game of tag. Margie, in whirling suddenly, came in collision with a gentleman, knocking his cane from his hand.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, sir," said Margie, covered with confusion as she returned the cane to him. "I'm afraid I have hurt you, sir," and she looked up with frank solicitude in her eyes.

"Not at all, my dear," he responded heartily, pleased by her courteous manner. "Go on with your play and be happy. I am proud to doff my hat to so polite a young lady." Which he did with a stately bow, and passed on.

"How did you dare? I should have been too frightened to have said a thing," exclaimed one of the girls.

"So should I," chorused the others.

There was a social in the church parlors that week. Jennie still hovered near Margie, learning a sweet lesson every day from her. As they sat turning the leaves of a hymn book, finding their favorite songs, a lady paused to speak to them. Margie instantly arose and stood while talking to the lady.

The two girls started for another room where the young people were preparing for games. Just then Margie espied a solitary figure sitting in the corner. This was the deacon's wife, who was deaf. After a handshake and a sentence through the ear-trumpet, people usually left her to herself. But Margie crossed the room to her, and taking the trumpet in her hand, being careful to articulate plainly, she sat and chattered half an hour away, amusing the dear old lady by repeating the plesantries and jokes which were flying from lip to lip of those around them.

"You have been a comfort to me, my bonnie lass," said the old lady, patting the hand that held the trumpet. "Now, go and play with the rest. I thank you, my dear, for your thoughtfulness to an old woman like me." And Margie went away quite happy.

"I think I have found out Margie's charm," said Jennie to her mother the next morning. "It is because she is good to everybody."

"Yes, that is it," answered her mother. She is thoughtful, kind, polite and obliging. I think she must carry the Golden Rule very near to her heart."

THE FALL OF THE FORTS.

Robbie and Bobbie lived side by side, and only a fence with a broken paling separated their playing-yards. A new piazza was being built on Robbie's house, and the two boys gathered together all the small blocks of wood that the carpenters threw aside, and saved them to build themselves playhouses, and stores in the corner of Bobbie's yard where the big maple-tree grows.

Fourth of July morning Robbie crawled through the hole in the fence made by the broken paling, whistled for Bobbie, and the two ran down to the corner of the garden where the big maple-tree grows. Fourth of July was a play-day for the real carpenters, but a work-day for the play carpenters. All the morning they planned and built, and by noon Fort Manila Bay and Fort Bunker Hill were finished.

The two forts, which faced each other defiantly under the big maple-tree, were built of the small blocks of wood the carpenters had thrown away. Each threatened the other with six-spool cannon loaded to the muzzle with firecrackers, and each had a magazine stored with a whole bunch of firecrackers to reload the cannon.

The first of the afternoon General Robbie and General Bobbie assaulted each other's fort with thunderous torpedoes, which exploded on the board laid down between the grim fortresses. The noisiest torpedoes, wrapped in bright red paper, banged in vain; the fortifications stood firm.

"My cannon shall now speak!" cried General Bobbie.

"And mine reply!" cried brave General Robbie, undismayed.

With a long piece of punk, General Bobbie lighted the curly tails of the spool cannon in Fort Bunker Hill. With a long piece of punk, General Robbie lighted the curly tails of the spool cannon of Fort Manila Bay. Would the guns of Fort Bunker Hill destroy Fort Manila Bay, or would the guns of Fort Manila Bay destroy Fort Bunker Hill? The two generals retreated to a safe distance, and stood side by side waiting to see.

Alas! the cannon of Fort Bunker Hill exploded and set fire to the magazine, and the fort blew itself up! The cannon of Fort Manila Bay exploded and set fire to the magazine, and that fort blew itself up! So no one knows to this day which fort won the fight under the big maple-tree.—Selected.

WHY IS IT?

I just can't understand at all,
It's puzzling as can be;
Why all the things I'm fondest of
Are never good for me.

But those I do not like a bit,
Like early bed at night,
And oatmeal, naps, and brushing teeth,
And being so polite;

And "wash behind your ears, now, son,"
And "stay in your own yard,"
And taking care of little Ben—
Well, say, they're pretty hard.

While playing on the way from school,
And dandy things to eat—
Like layer cake and choc'late drops,
Or anything that's sweet;

And staying up late every night
Till sleepy as can be—
Why is it those delightful things
Are never good for me?

AT BEDTIME JUNCTION.

"Change cars for Dreamland!"
Boy roused up a little. He moved his hand and it touched the arm of the low rocker. He felt for his picture book. It was gone. He thought that it had dropped on the floor. Still he did not open his eyes.

"Passengers for Dreamland change cars!"

Boy knew the voice. He wanted to answer. He tried to lift his head, but it was so heavy that he could not move it. His lips parted and after a while he said: "What-t?"

"This is the place where we change cars," said the voice; "it is Bedtime Junction. We reach here at seven fifty-nine. The gentleman called Mr. Charles Albert has taken the Dreamland car. I came back after you, and we must go at once."

Boy felt himself lifted by strong arms. The next thing he knew he was laid in a soft bed, and a soft hand was drawing a white sheet over him, while a soft voice said, "This is the Dreamland car. You do not change again till morning. I will let you know. I look after all the passengers. I am the conductor."

Boy's eyes opened wide. "You're mamma," he said.

Mamma kissed Boy's plump, pink cheeks. His eyes closed again and the Dreamland car moved on, carrying Boy, with a through ticket in his nightcap.—Ex.

International Lessons for 1921.

THIRD QUARTER.

Lesson X—Sept. 4.

FROM PHILIPPI TO ATHENS.

(Acts 16:19-34.)

19. And when her masters saw that the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the marketplace unto the rulers.

20. And brought them to the magistrates, saying, These men, being Jews, do exceedingly trouble our city.

21. And teach customs, which are not lawful for us to receive, neither to observe, being Romans.

22. And the multitude rose up together against them: and the magistrates rent off their clothes, and commanded to beat them.

23. And when they had laid many stripes upon them, they cast them into prison, charging the jailer to keep them safely:

24. Who, having received such a charge, thrust them into the inner prison, and made their feet fast in the stocks.

25. And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed, and sang praises unto God: and the prisoners heard them.

26. And suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's hands were loosed.

27. And the keeper of the prison, awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled.

28. But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

29. Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas.

30. And brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved?

31. And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house.

32. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

33. And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway.

34. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house.

Golden Text: "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them" (Psalm 34:7).

Catechism—Q. 37. What benefits do believers receive from Christ at death? A. The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory; and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves, till the resurrection.

INTRODUCTORY.

In our last lesson we saw Paul and Silas come to Philippi, there winning the first European convert to Jesus Christ, in the person of Lydia, and establishing the first Christian church in her home, baptizing her and her household. From that as a living center he radiated, preaching the Gospel in Philippi, and winning souls to know and love Christ. There he had the experience of meeting the slave girl possessed of a devil, and used by her master as a sort of fortuneteller, making money out of her suffering and misfortune. We read of Paul delivering her from her torment, and, in the name of Jesus Christ, giving her this great deliverance.

EXPOSITORY.

19-21. This should have been a matter for great joy to all who had kind, good hearts, but it served to provoke to madness the cruel men who had made money out of her trouble. So they arose in their anger, laid hold on Paul and Silas and drew them before the officers of the city, at the market-place, or public court. It reminds us of wicked men today who think of men and women only as those out of whom they may make money. Good people secured prohibition of the liquor traffic in order to deliver those who are cursed of liquor, but the whole liquor crowd are up in arms because they are losing money. Good people try to break down white slavery, but the whole wicked world want it to continue in order to make money out of sorrowful and ruined women. So has it been ever since Paul and Silas saved this wretched girl at Philippi, and her selfish and cruel masters fought them because they had lost the hope of their gains. When they had them before the magistrates they did not tell the real facts. They tried to make a charge that would be considered by the judges. They tried to make it appear that Paul and Silas were interfering with Roman customs and laws. It was as when the charge was made against Christ to Pilate that he was opposing Roman authority and trying to be a king in rebellion against Caesar. It was not true in either case, but the Roman judges had to pay attention to them, and they did.

22-24. A mob was soon stirred up. The magistrates became excited and lost their balance. They had the clothes torn off from Paul and Silas. They ordered them to be beaten. It was an act of evil haste and poor judgment. They thought it would please the multitude and they did not stop to inquire into the facts. The stripes were laid on them unmercifully. There were many stripes. Then it was ordered that they should be cast into prison. The jailor was charged to keep them safely. Everything was done in haste and carried to extremes. It suited the mob spirit. These men, Paul and Silas, seemed to be without influence and it seemed perfectly safe to go to any extremes against them. The jailor readily fell into the same spirit. Without any regard for their suffering and weakened condition these Christian evangelists were thrust into the dismal inner prison, probably foul and dark, and to add to their discomfort and pain their feet were fastened in the stocks, and there they were left in their distress.

25. Paul and Silas had been treated brutally and unlawfully. They could not sleep. But instead of bemoaning their fate, or spending the night in cries and wailing, they prayed, which was a great and good thing to do, and they sang praises to God, which was a thing that only great-hearted men would do in whom the Spirit of God was abiding in power. They did not sing to themselves merely. They sang aloud, so that the prisoners heard them. It was bearing testimony to the goodness of God. They were making a new profession of their faith. The world heard them. It was, no doubt, a source of wonder to those who heard. God upholds and comforts those who trust in him.

26. God came to their deliverance in a remarkable way. There was a great earthquake. The prison was shaken, clear down to its foundations. The doors were opened. The stocks were torn apart. The fastenings on the hands and feet of the prisoners were loosed. Men had imprisoned them, but God released them. As the Angel of the Lord released Peter out of prison, so he came to Paul and Silas and set them free.

27. The jailor was greatly alarmed. No doubt the earthquake frightened him. But it was more than this. He was personally responsible for the security of the prisoners. If they escaped he would pay for it by his own life. He was panic-stricken. He felt that everything was at an end for him. He did not want to suffer shame and disgrace and death, and perhaps torture, if he fell into the hands of the authorities. So he thought to kill himself and drew out his sword to put an end to his life.

28. But Paul was self-possessed and thoughtful. He was not frightened. He remembered with compassion the jailor who had been so brutal to him. To quiet his fears and to save his life, Paul called out to the jailor, "Do thyself no harm: for we are all here." This is the message of the Gospel to us all. "Do thyself no harm."

29. This was most assuring. The panic passed away. He called for a light, rushed in trembling, and fell down before them. He was a grateful man, changed in heart and life.

30. Bringing them out of prison, his cry to them was in those words which have been used by so many souls since then, and which every soul should use: "What must I do to be saved?" This the apostle loved to hear. This every true minister loves to hear.

31. Their answer was full of the Gospel. It is the Gospel which we must always be preaching. If we tell this well we will tell the very heart of the Gospel. It was: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." If we are saved we shall be the means of saving others, especially in our own homes and families.

32. It was a glad and holy hour. The Gospel was preached in its fullness. The Gospel was believed and accepted as it was preached.

33. The jailor showed that he was a changed man by his treatment of Paul and Silas. He washed and treated their stripes. They had been suffering, but they had been so busy for Christ that they had forgotten about themselves. And now came the baptism of the jailor and his family. He confessed Christ, and then standing up, was baptized, and so were members of his family. It was now a Christian family, saved, outspoken and baptized believers. Children of Christian parents have a right to be baptized.

34. He brought them into his home. He set food before them. He could not do too much for those who had done so much for him. It was a time of great rejoicing. A new life was in his heart and in his home. It was a united, happy, Christian family.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, SEPTEMBER 4.
Exhortation Topic: Thy Will Be Done. III. With My Mind. Matthew 6:7-15.

If we can make use of this petition heartily and sincerely, we shall know something of the meaning of self-consecration, and so be able to enter into the real purpose and thought of a consecration meeting, such as this is, and get the real good out of the service.

On successive months, at the first meeting of each month, we are studying this petition, considering God's will as to our strength, our pleasures, our minds, our time, our money, and our plans. The one for this time is our "mind." It is well to study this well, so as to know better how to pray it. But all our studying will do us little good, unless we learn well, and are really willing, to make it our earnest prayer.

We can let God have his will in our mind as we can in any other department of our life, and it is exceedingly important that we should do so, for it is in the mind that we arrive at those conclusions that govern us in our actions. It is exceedingly important that we believe and understand the truth as God gives it to us; that we think the right thoughts; that we have the right feelings; that we love what is good and hate what is evil; and that we resolve to do the things that are pleasing to God, so that in our intellectual apprehensions, our emotional relationships, and our decisions and purposes, we are ready that the will of God shall be done within us and by us.

People sometimes say that they do not believe the doctrinal statements of the Scriptures, in other words that they do not believe the Bible, and they say that they are not accountable for this, because they can not do it. This is all false. People are to believe God with their minds. If they do not believe what God has taught us it is because they are in rebellion against God, and are setting up their wills against him and his truth. If they were willing to learn of Jesus Christ, in docility and humility, as the great believers and teachers of the Gospel have, in all the ages, they could and would believe also. If people do not believe what God has told us in his holy book of Revelation it is because they are in an attitude of opposition to him. They can believe falsehood and false doctrines, because they are willing to do it. If they were willing to study and learn and believe the truth of God they could do so. Unbelief of the Gospel does not show originality or strength of mind; it only shows stubbornness and unbelief and rebellion against God, and willingness to be led by the devil. One can deny that the Sun rises in the East, if he is ignorant enough and stubborn enough.

With the mind we love or hate. We sometimes speak of this as being the function of the heart. Of course the physical heart has nothing to do with it. What we mean by the heart is our emotional nature, and this is a part of the mind. It is a very important part of the mind too, for, as it is written, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." If we permit ourselves to love the evil we are evil. Let us be careful that we love God and what is good, for we can control this, if we will let God's will be done in our minds.

Especially should our will be subject to God, and in line with his will. Unless we are so we are stubborn, and self-willed. It is when, in a renewed will, we make ourselves over to God's control, we become new creatures and are his saved children. The will is a very important part of the mind, and we are to will, as well as believe and love, according to the good pleasure of God.

PRAYER MEETING

AUGUST 31.

INDUSTRY IN RELIGION.
 II Thess. 3:6-13.

Paul, who was a great and inspired teacher of Christian doctrine, was, at the same time, a wise and strict teacher of Christian morals, and he insisted on the practice of all homely virtues as essential to the possession of a well-rounded Christian character.

Among the virtues which he insisted upon strenuously was that of simple industry, or the personal willingness to work and provide for one's own support. It is still, today, a mark of real worth and dignity for one to be willing to make his own living. The Bible teaching on this point is plain, and one is Pauline in his life, if he is willing to mix personal industry with his personal religion.

There are some matters in life in which we can do nothing, and in which God does all. The gift of life was from God, and the providential continuance of it is from him, with the sunshine and the air. So is the gift of redemption, through the atoning death of his dear Son, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. For all these supernatural and divine gifts we render to God our sincere and hearty thanks, and acknowledge our entire dependence upon him.

But there are some things that we can do, and that we are expected to do, in the realms both of our spiritual and our physical life, and unless we do them we are left unprovided for. It is a rule of spiritual life and salvation that unless we believe and accept Christ we are left unsaved. It is also a rule of physical life that we must work in order to have the provisions of life.

God provides for the birds, but he does not throw food into their nests. So he expects us to be busy and secure our food, and our clothing, and our shelter, and it is emphasized that unless one works neither should he eat. Neither the world nor God owes a living in such a sense that we may presume on having it come to us without our putting forth adequate personal efforts to secure it.

Paul was a marvelously industrious man, as evidenced by the efforts he put forth in preaching the Gospel, in traveling over the lands of the old world, and in working to secure the attention and the faith of those whom he addressed. But he did more than this. He had a personal pride in paying his own way. He wanted to work with his own hands enough to secure that which would support him. So he had a trade and he worked at it, and he wanted to be known as one who was supporting himself just as far as possible while he was preaching.

It may well be questioned whether he was altogether wise in this. Able to preach the Gospel and win souls to Christ as no one else was, it seems that he might better have put in all his time in spiritual labor, and have left the common work of life to those who could do little else.

But perhaps, after all, he was kept in better physical condition as a result of his physical labor. Perhaps he had closer and readier access to many hearts because they knew of him as one who labored with his hands. Certainly he has been a blessing to all men in thus dignifying labor, and in teaching the lesson that we can serve God in all the ways of an industrious life, if we give to him our hearts and work for him with our hands.

ANXIOUS TO SERVE

THOUSANDS of young men and women are fired with an ambition to serve the Church in definite ways. They realize that training is needed.

Auburn Lay School, opening for its first year September 26, offers training to qualified men and women who do not desire to become preachers, so they may be fitted as directors of religious education and assistants to pastors.

Under seminary auspices, but in separate quarters, this school will have ideal surroundings and equipment. Its faculty will number some of the strongest teachers in the Presbyterian Church. The students will have the century of prestige of Auburn behind them.

The Auburn Theological Seminary will open its regular work September 21, with prospects for an opening class greatly exceeding in numbers that of a year ago.

AUBURN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

GEORGE B. STEWART, D.D., President,
 AUBURN, N. Y.

OUR EXCHANGES

A PRESENT DUTY.

Having saved the world for democracy, it is now up to the victor nations to save democracy for the world.—Virginia-Pilot.

A FAULTY FIGURE.

Said a member of the Disciple Church at their late convention, "We were fishers of men, and we got our fish out of the water and not on dry land." And we suppose he thought that he was smart. If so, he certainly has another guess coming.—Central Christian Advocate.

THEY NEVER COME BACK.

Exiled kings never return. Mr. Hohenzollern is the fourth German emperor to be dethroned in several centuries past. They were rich and powerful, but their influence ended once they left the throne. A list of scores of dethroned monarchs shows that the chances of returning to power is about one in a hundred. Once the tinsel which bedecks royalty has been torn away its power disappears.—Boy's Life.

BOLSHEVISM AS EXPRESSED IN AMERICA.

Whatever one may think about the prohibition amendment, it is hardly to be denied that bootlegging is a business to be drastically discouraged by every expression legally possible to a citizenship that has its protection in the constitution. It is inconceivable that there can be any dissent among law-abiding people with the declaration of a somewhat discouraged enforcement officer that bootlegging is but an expression of bolshevism. There was never a time in the history of the United States that law as the bulwark of society was quite so loosely regarded or so defiantly disregarded. It is becoming the popular thing to just ignore any legal limitation that makes for inconvenience or discomfort. Civilizations are not conserved in looseness of conscience and only in observance of law is there conscience void of offense.—Commercial Tribune.

A SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN VIEW.

At every meeting of the Assembly ex-moderators are largely in evidence. At the recent Assembly they were unusually so. There were five present, dating back from 1895 to the present time.

It is said that Washington has a peculiar fascination to ex-Congressmen, who love to dwell upon their past glories. Such is not the case with our ex-moderators. They attend because they are on special committees and have business with the Assembly.

No exception can be taken to this, but we seriously doubt the wisdom of the custom that is gradually becoming fixed, of giving them the privileges of the floor. The very essence of Presbyterianism is the parity of the ministry, yet this custom will soon create an aristocracy.

Let us remember that a permanent moderator in time became a Pope.—Presbyterian Standard.

A WARNING.

Unless we grasp some of the fundamentals that have to do with permanency of government, we are lost within a generation or more. It is little the average young man—especially in the cities—know of the principles of his government. Sixty years ago he was taught them, just as people were taught why they belonged to one religious denomination rather than to another. But, generally speaking, who knows now—or cares? It is something worth thinking over.—Journal of Commerce.

CREDO.

There is a considerable evangelical element in all the leading Christian denominations whose voice has been drowned by the racket which the liberalists, have made and the time has come for them to get back their speech. We rejoice that the Baptists, even though they differ on Word and Sacrament, are preparing to swing the erratic and wobbly pendulum of faith in the right direction. Much Protestantism has been up in the air. It is high time to bring it down to definiteness and certitude, and to teach it to say once again, as it did in great crises of Christian history: "I believe."—Lutheran.

AN EXPLANATION.

"I wonder," said the reader of a local paper, "why the Presbyterian General Assembly endorsed this publication but never said a word about its own church press?" That's easy. Folks with an ax to grind can usually get the Assembly to take a turn at the handle, but the people who keep at the job of serving others are just taken for granted. They don't need endorsement. Their works endorse them.—Presbyterian Advance.

THE REVOLT OF THE BUREAUS.

Signs appear in Washington of a concerted revolt of the bureaus against the plan to reorganize executive departments and independent bureaus in order to end overlapping of function, promote efficiency and reduce expenditure. The primary instinct of man as a political animal is to hold on to a job. Only second to it is the instinct to hold on to his powers and prerogatives. The unfolding struggle, another phase of the endless conflict between tradition and progress, will be worth watching.—Times-Star.

A FUNDAMENTAL DUTY.

Censorship of moving pictures is based on the broad fundamental duty of the community to protect the moral well-being of every one within its jurisdiction. The motion-picture has a breadth, directness, and effectiveness of human appeal that puts it in a class by itself. Its power for good and for evil is greater than the printed page—hence the necessity for a control over it more rigorous than is needed in the case of the book.—National Municipal Review.

GENERAL NEWS

BRITISH PARLIAMENT INFORMED OF IRISH NEGOTIATIONS.

The British Government, in its Irish peace offer, had conceded everything it was possible to concede, Premier David Lloyd George declared to the House of Commons last Friday in his statement on the Irish peace negotiations.

It embodied the largest measure of freedom offered to Ireland, he said, and he hoped the Irish leaders would not reject it, "and take the responsibility of renewing a conflict which would be robbed of all glory and all gratitude by its overshadowing horror."

Mr. Lloyd George disclaimed any menace for his words. He declared, however, that the government, in making its terms, had done everything it could to obtain peace and the good will of the people of Ireland, and that it was faced with the possibility, through things that had been said, that its terms would be rejected.

In that case, he said, the country would face a graver situation regarding Ireland than before.

Therefore, he said, provision had been made for the summoning of Parliament on forty-eight hours' notice if negotiations broke down and the prospect of peace became hopeless. He hoped, however, that reason would prevail and the government's desire for an ending of the long misunderstanding between England and Ireland would be realized.

The Prime Minister's words were paralleled in the House of Lords by Lord Curzon, Foreign Secretary, as to the government's offer having already gone to the limit. All that could be given without compromising the safety of the realm, the sovereignty of the crown and the dignity of the empire had been offered, he said.

PANAMA MUST OBSERVE BOUNDARY REWARD.

The United States has informed the Government of Panama that as friendly mediator between Panama and Costa Rica in their boundary dispute, it does not "feel compelled to suggest" that Costa Rica delay longer in taking jurisdiction over territory, now held by Panama, and which was adjudged to belong to Costa Rica by the terms of the White award.

The position of this Government was stated in a note transmitted by Secretary Charles E. Hughes to the Government of Panama Aug. 18, and made public Aug. 23 by the State Department.

Costa Rica has advised the United States, the note said, of its determination to assume immediate jurisdiction over the disputed territory.

Almost simultaneously with publication of the note, it became known that a force of marines had embarked at Philadelphia for the Canal Zone.

JAPAN TO WELCOME DISCUSSION OF PACIFIC PROBLEMS.

Japan's Foreign Minister Uchida is quoted in an interview distributed to the Japanese press by the Kokusai agency as declaring that the after-the-war complications of international relations renders it advisable and justifiable that in the hope of establishing lasting peace in the world at large an international convention should be called for discussing Pacific and far Eastern questions in connection with the limitation of armaments proposed by the United States Government.

Japan, says the Foreign Minister, is only too glad that it finds in the proposed convention an opportunity to give thorough and frank expression to its cherished aims and policies as a contribution to the promotion of the peace of humanity.

"The Government's reply, giving notice of formal acceptance," the Foreign Minister is quoted as saying, "will be issued after consideration of the draft of the text by the Diplomatic Advisory Council Aug. 23."

RHINE BARRIER TO BE LIFTED.

The lifting of the economic barrier of the Rhineland, Sept. 15th, providing Germany pays up the amounts she undertook to pay under the London ultimatum and agrees to remove the boycott against French goods, was decided upon at the final session of the Allied Supreme Council last week.

It was decided, however, to maintain the occupation of Ruhrort, Duisburg, and Duesseldorf until the next meeting of the Council, which, it is understood, will be called previous to the Washington disarmament conference. At that time Premier Aristide Briand consented that the question of the occupation of the right bank of the Rhine should be reconsidered.

RUSSIAN FAMINE RELIEF AGREED TO.

Satisfactory agreement has been reached with the Soviet authorities at Riga under which the American Relief Administration will begin immediately to fight famine among the children of Russia, Secretary Herbert C. Hoover announced last week. The agreement, he added, accepts the conditions demanded by the American organization for safeguarding the lives of relief workers and insuring American control of food supplies.

While the negotiations have come to a successful conclusion, the Secretary explained, it may be several days before a formal agreement is signed. Important details, such as means of transportation and location of serious famine areas, remain to be worked out, he said, before the final document is drafted.

The work of food relief in Russia will be begun at once, Mr. Hoover declared, adding that the New York office of the administration already was preparing vessels to rush supplies to Danzig for transshipment into Russia.

The quantity of food, however, that will be needed, it is understood, can not be determined until a survey of Russian famine conditions is made.

HOPE NEW PLAN WILL MAKE SHIPPING BOARD PAY.

Decision to substitute a "bare boat" charter for the system under which practically all Shipping Board vessels now are operated, was announced by Chairman Albert D. Lasker, after a conference with President Harding.

Instead of the boats being turned over to operators on a 5 per cent commission basis, it is the board's intention to adopt a uniform charter under which its vessels will be leased on a tonnage basis, the lessee assuming the risks of profits or loss as he would under the routine commercial charter.

Under the charter now employed, known as the managing operators' agreement, Mr. Lasker explained, both the Government and the operator profited when traffic was plentiful and rates high, but only the Government lost when there was a surplus of tonnage, causing a decline in rates below the point where they would meet operating expenses.

"Master minds," in what is said to be an international rum-running plot, are being trained, according to the Assistant United States District Attorney at Atlantic City, who said.

"Our agents are trailing the big fish in the smuggling game, and arrests of these men may be expected soon. These cases go much further than the five schooners already seized. The schooners will seem insignificant in comparison. Our evidence traces some of the smuggled liquor to cargoes of much larger vessels, which will be seized when the evidence warrants such action."

King Peter of Serbia died of pleurisy last week. He was seventy-six years old. At the beginning of the world war he personally commanded the Serbian army, which almost fought Austria to a standstill. Later, from Greek territory, he organized his army and government and was again in command at the time of Austria's collapse.

Bids of $2,100 each for 205 wooden vessels, submitted by the Ship Construction and Trading Corporation, of New York, have been accepted by the Shipping Board, it was announced officially.

These ships cost the Board from $300,000 to $800,000 each.

HOME AND FARM

KEEPING SILVER BRIGHT.

An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. But sometimes in housework it takes many pounds of prevention to make the pound of cure unnecessary. For instance, it takes constant brushing up and brooming to keep a rug perfectly clean and only a little time to clean it thoroughly every day or so with a vacuum cleaner or carpet sweeper. Then there are times when it is easier to get your kitchen quite disordered when you are doing a big baking and then set it all to rights later than to keep it in order as you go.

One respect where the ounce is really worth the pound is in the care of silver. Silver cleaning is tiresome work at best and it is always difficult to find a time in a busy schedule of housework when time can be devoted to silver cleaning. But it really is possible to wash your silver whenever it is used in such a way that it needs to be specially polished very seldom.

In the first place silver should be washed in very hot and very soapy water. It should then be rinsed in very hot water and dried at once. Never let silver drain. If the water is left on the silver there will be a tendency for the silver to blacken.

If you have a little dish containing salt or perhaps an old salt shaker kept specially for this purpose right beside your sink, it is a simple matter to clean spoons and forks that have become discolored by eggs. But do this as soon as the piece is discolored; don't wait until the discoloration has eaten deep into the fork or spoon.

Never use strong scouring powder or bricks on silver. This is sure to scratch. It is a good plan to have a little silver polish near your dishpan to use on an occasional spot on your silver.

PEACH KUCHEN.

Select a pudding pan with straight sides, then line with plain pastry which has been rolled very thin. Now pare and cut in thin slices one quart of peaches. Now place in a mixing bowl two-thirds cup of sugar, yolks of two eggs, cream until a light lemon color and then add: seven tablespoons of cold water, one and one fourth cup of flour, two level teaspoons of baking powder.

Beat hard to blend, then cut and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Now place a thin layer of the batter in the pastry filled pan, then cover with thinly-sliced peaches, using about one-third of the prepared peaches. Cover with one-third of the batter in the mixing bowl. Next a layer of peaches and then a layer of batter. Repeat until the dish is full and the top layer of batter. Bake in a moderate oven for fifty minutes. Cut cold in wedge-shaped slices and then serve with a thin vanilla custard sauce.

Peach Custard.—Place in a saucepan one and one-fourth cup of milk, five level teaspoons of cornstarch, one-half cup of sugar, one tablespoon of butter. Stir to dissolve the sugar and starch, then bring to a boil and cook for five minutes. Now add one well-beaten egg, yolk of one egg. Beat to mix thoroughly and then add one cup of peach pulp and cook slowly for five minutes. Let cool and then fill into five of the cream puff cases. Now place white of one egg, one-half glass of apple jelly in a small bowl and beat with a Dover egg-beater until the mixture forms a meringue that will hold its shape. Pile on top of the custards and sprinkle with finely chopped nuts.

Peach Puffs.—Place in a saucepan one cup of water, one-half cup of shortening. Bring to a boil and cook for three minutes and then add one cup and four tablespoons of flour. Beat to mix and as soon as the mixture begins to form a ball turn down the light and cook slowly for three minutes. Turn into a bowl and beat until cold. Now add four small eggs, one at a time, and beat until the batter is very smooth. Divide into fifteen even-sized portions on well-greased and floured baking sheet and keep the puffs three inches apart. Bake in hot oven for thirty minutes. Let cool.

Now pare and then rub through a sieve a sufficient number of peaches to measure three-quarters cup, and then add seven tablespoons of powdered sugar, one cup of stiffly whipped cream. Fold together and then cut a slice from the top of the puffs and fill with the mixture. Grate a little sweet chocolate over the top and serve at once. This amount will fill five puffs.

Peach Rice Custard.—Pare and cut eight peaches in halves, using medium size. Wash one-quarter cupful of rice well and then cook in one and one-quarter cupful of water until the rice is soft and the water absorbed. Cool and then place in a baking dish. Spread smoothly and then lay the peaches over the rice and gently pour over the peaches and rice the following custard:

One and one-half cup of milk, yolk of one egg, one whole egg, one-fourth cup of sugar, one-half teaspoon of nutmeg. Beat with an egg-beater to blend thoroughly and then pour slowly over the rice and peaches. Set the baking dish in a pan of water, then bake slowly until the custard is firm. Now use white of left-over egg, one-half cup of peach pulp, three-fourths cup of powdered sugar. Make the peach pulp by rubbing the pared peaches through a sieve. Place this mixture in a pitcher and use a wire whip to beat until the mixture is in a light fluff. It usually takes fifteen minutes of steady beating.

PART-TIME SCHOOLS FOR WORKING CHILDREN.

One of the most progressive of the recent movements in compulsory education has been the passage by many States of continuation school laws, which afford a child who has left school for employment opportunity for further education by providing part-time compulsory schooling for a specified number of hours each week. Some of these laws apply also to unemployed children or to children who are no longer subject to day school attendance requirements. A brief analysis of the continuation and evening school laws of each State, as well as those prescribing day school attendance, is shown in a chart recently issued by the U. S. Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau, entitled "State Compulsory School Attendance Standards Affecting the Employment of Minors, January 1, 1921."

This chart shows that 22 States now have compulsory provisions for continuation school attendance. In three of these States, however, the establishment of such schools is not compulsory, and in one, the school authorities are merely empowered, not compelled, to establish part-time schools and to require attendance. The age limit to which the compulsory attendance provisions apply varies, 10 States requiring attendance up to 18 years of age, one State up to 17, and 11 States up to 16. The amount of attendance is from four to eight hours weekly; the laws of each State either specify or imply that this period shall be counted as part of the child's legal working hours.

In eight States, the law permits no exemptions; in the other States the exemptions vary, three excusing a child who has completed the eighth grade.

Only 12 States now provide for evening school attendance, the progress which has been made in day and continuation school laws having obviated this need to a great extent, at least for children under 16. In most of these States, the law covers only minors over 16 who can speak, read, or write English with specified proficiency, in one State applying to aliens only. As in the continuation school laws, the attendance requirements varies, some States having only a general requirement of "regular attendance,"—others specifying an attendance of from four to eight hours weekly.

BLACKBURN HELPS HOME MISSIONS

A young woman, a daughter of the manse, teaching in a Home Mission school in Kentucky, writes: "If I get to school at all I must work my way and, while I am a girl, I shall go to college if a big determination to work hard and a small purse will admit me."

These are two of the requirements for admission to Blackburn College and this teacher will find here a wonderful opportunity to fit herself for more efficient service on the mission field.

"Not yet," said the proud father. "We thried to but after an hour's lost labor the photografter rayferred us to a movin' picture studio."

"Out after hours again, hey?" said the father. "Only ten minutes late," replied his son. "Well, go at once to your room, sir, lock yourself in, and bring me the key. This thoughtlessness must be checked."—Farm and Home.

Noise.—"Yist'day," says Uncle Zeke, "Ah drapped foah cents on the foah, an' dey made a big racket. Ef dey had er bin foah dollar bills nobody would have heard 'em drop. People is jest like money; dem dat makes the most noise ain't allus of de mos' account."

Johnny: "Mamma, will you wash my face?"

Mamma: "Why, Johnny, can't you do that?"

Johnny: "Yes, but I'll have to wet my hands, and they don't need it."

"I tell you," said Pat, "ould friends are the best after all, and, what's more, I can prove it." "How are you goin' to prove it?" "Where will you find a new friend that has shtud by ye as long as the ould ones, have?"—Answers.

"Jack," she said in dulcet tones, her fair head resting lightly on his shoulder, "you know, Jack, father has recently invested in a silver mine, and he is going there at once, and I can not leave mother alone. So I want to ask you, Jack—how long would you be willing to wait for me?"

"Wait for you, my darling?" repeated Jack with deep emotion, for his was no fleeting love. "I will wait for you until we learn how the silver mine turns out."

She—"Now that you've got a raise of sixty a month, Tom, we can afford a more expensive flat."

He—"But we're comfortable here. How would it do if I ask the landlord to raise our rent?"—Boston Globe.

Zeal for Scholarship

One of the outstanding lessons of the GREAT WAR is that A NATION'S STRENGTH IN INTERNATIONAL COMPETITION DEPENDS ULTIMATELY UPON HER AVAILABLE SCHOLARSHIP.

The amount of available scholarship depends upon zeal for learning and the facilities for acquiring learning.

The former is secured through intimate contact with teachers of fresh and vigorous scholarship; the latter through freshly equipped libraries and laboratories, as well as through sound teaching.

Hanover's new endowment will secure both conditions. Only a few thousand dollars are now lacking.

This is a challenge to all citizens who want America to be strong.

A MOTHER

BY MRS. J. M. HUNTER.

Only a mother, frail and worn,
But strength had been well spent;
Dear sons and daughters she had borne,
With rearing them content.

Only a mother; on her face
Were lines of pain and care;
But lines also of present grace,
From being oft in prayer.

Only a mother, little known
Outside her dooryard neat;
But living seed she there had sown,
The fruit was sure and sweet.

Only a mother, bent and old;
It came her time to die;
The angels touched their harps of gold
To welcome her on high.

Only a mother, serving God,
Her name shall live alway,
For many walk the path she trod
To heaven's perfect day.

THE NEW BIRTH AND NEW LIFE.

It was pointed out very distinctly by our Lord Jesus Christ that our sinful human nature is in a condition so unsatisfactory, in its power to appreciate, understand, and participate in the things of spiritual life, that it needs a general renovation, or new birth, in order to enter into or even to see the kingdom of God.

It is an actual fact that when one becomes a Christian, or a child of God, he comes into a new life or new world, with new relations and new feelings and new ideas and new life. He is a new creature. Old things have passed out of his life and new things have come in, so that he is in a new world, or in a life in which all things seem to be new. Paul said that this was the fact. The Christian comes to think and feel and act and live as to Christ in a new way.

A slight illustration is afforded in a happy marriage. It works a great change in one's relations to his wife. Their whole, actual relationship is new. His thoughts and feelings and plannings in reference to her are new. The old has passed. All seems new. It is a new and happy and joyous life.

The Christian loves God. He trusts Christ. He is glad to be obedient. God's will is willingly accepted by him. How does it come? How is it that he now loves God? It is not natural for a sinner to love God. It is not natural for a sinner to love to pray, and to do God's will, and to worship. There has come a change in some way. If one loves and believes in and personally trusts Christ, he is not living a natural, or sinful, or fleshly life. He is a new creature in some way. He has come into a new life. He has been born again, from on high, into the kingdom of God, where God rules, for no one gets into this life except by the new birth.

It does not matter to us how God brings this about, or when he has done it, or by what means, for the one essential matter is that if we love God we are now in this new life. And we are in it if we love God, for no one who is unregenerate, unconverted, unsaved and a worldling, does love God. If one is alive in the spiritual life, let him be glad; let him thank God, and let him go on living this life.

Some people remember when they were born again. Others commenced loving God so early in life that they do not remember when it was, but it was at some time. Even in those cases they were made new creatures. Only, they do not remember when they first began to love God and to be entirely submissive to his loving will.

It is for us, in earliest life, to give ourselves to God; believe in Jesus Christ as our Savior; and take him as our Lord. These are personal duties to which God calls us. If we do them gladly it is because God is aiding us by his Holy Spirit, and if we hate to do them it is because we are fighting against the Holy Spirit. Glad surrender and happy faith are absolute evidences of the new birth. The new life in Christ Jesus is then to be lived. A living child is as assuredly alive as it ever will be if it lives to be a hundred years old. But a child is only a child, and the child must grow, and strive to grow and become a man.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL WEAKNESS.

The real object of what is known as education is the forming of good character. The children of today are, in a few years, to be the men and women of the community and nation, in places of responsibility, directing the affairs of society and of the world.

It is supremely important that they shall not only be acquainted with certain facts, and certain methods of speech and business, but that they shall themselves be the right sort of persons, with correct principles and ideals and motives and purposes; that is, possessed of good and worthy and reliable character.

It is a fact that mere intellectual training will not produce this. One may have a trained intellect and still be only an accomplished scoundrel. One may be trained to be ambitious to achieve success, and to be determined to win a place in life, and yet may be selfish and immoral and lacking in integrity and honor. The influence of religion is necessary in the formation of a really true and good character, and any scheme of education which overlooks or omits it is necessarily defective.

Many teachers and friends of our public schools have felt that the work done in those schools is deficient, in that too little attention is paid to the religious education and development of the children. It is an absolute necessity, in the securing of good citizenship, even when there is no higher aim, that religious motives and principles shall be provided for; but it is too often the case, in a republic, that an unreasonable minority rules, while the intelligent majority submits, the result being disaster. At the demand of autocratic elements, which should be negligible, the Bible has been left out of the public schools, too largely, with the result that the highest element in education has been frequently eliminated.

A leading instructor in the Hamilton County Teachers' Institute, held in Cincinnati last week, Professor Cookson, said: "I believe the public schools have been contributory to criminality. The schools are cultivating 95 per cent intellect and dividing the other five per cent between emotion and will. This is an unfair distribution."

The reading of the Bible for a few minutes every day is not absolutely sure to effect a religious transformation in every child, but it is a matter of so much importance that no state or community should permit it to be neglected. That it is neglected is due to certain influences that should not rule in such a matter. Many states, as Pennsylvania, demand that it be read daily in the public schools. The Ohio Legislature last winter, in the House, passed a bill which, we believe, did not get through the Senate, directing that the Bible should be read for ten minutes every day in every school in the state.

The Bible is not a sectarian book, but the one great book of the world; God's book, and every one should be acquainted with its instructions and demands for a good life. Religion, in its main principles, is not a sectarian thing, and every teacher in every school should be a teacher of its great underlying truths.

It is intimated by the Catholic Telegraph that the public schools are necessarily defective here, and that there is no remedy. But it will be borne in mind that if it were not for the persistent and unreasonable opposition of the Roman Catholic element, aided by some other elements, all of them constituting a small per cent of the population, there would be the teaching, in all the public schools of America, of the religious teachings and requirements of God.

Some day the public schools will be free from this deleterious influence, but, in the meantime, if the public schools have been contributing to criminality, it is thoroughly well known where rests the responsibility for a main part of the criminality.

ASSEMBLY OVERTURES.

Two overtures from the General Assembly are ready for action by the presbyteries at their fall meetings. The first one is as to a change in the Form of Government making women eligible to the office of deacon. The other is as to the election of Commissioners to the General Assembly for a term of two years, so that one-half of the Assembly will hold over to the next Assembly, it being presumed that acquaintanceship with the business gained one year will be of benefit to the next Assembly. The Minutes will be out soon, in time for the overtures to be studied and acted upon this fall, if deemed desirable to do so.

MINISTERIAL LONGEVITY.

That ministers are, as a rule, long-lived has illustration again in the annual necrological report of Princeton Theological Seminary. During the year ending March 31, 1921, seventy-one former students of the seminary, including Dr. B. B. Warfield, passed away, at an average age of sixty-seven years, one month and twenty-four days, which is a high average for so large a group. Among them was Dr. Samuel Spahr Laws, who was the oldest living alumnus, and who attained nearly ninety-seven years. One other passed ninety, sixteen others passed eighty, twenty-five others passed seventy and sixteen others passed sixty. The average age at which these confessed Christ and became communicant members of the Church was sixteen years.

INSTRUCT THE YOUNG PEOPLE.

Riverside Presbytery, in California, found that its young people were without any definite knowledge of what the Presbyterian Church is doing, in missions, evangelization, or in the other departments represented by its Boards. So the Committee on Young People's Work was instructed to remedy this by means of rallies and addresses and in other ways. Perhaps a good many other presbyteries might be alarmed in the same way if all the facts were made known. Rallies and conventions might be well in every presbytery for the sake of instructing the young people. But the matter calls for treatment much nearer home. Each pastor has a call to see that his young people grow up with definite information as to the work and life of the Church, at home and abroad. Christian parents should instruct their children as to such important matters. If a church paper were taken in every Presbyterian family, and read and studied, there would be less call for rallies and conventions to overcome alarming ignorance.

KEEPING THE SABBATH HOLY.

The newspapers reported last week that one of the Presbyterian ministers of the city had said, on the preceding Sabbath, that he did not object to persons playing golf or baseball on the Sabbath. Another paper gave a prominent heading to the item, declaring that this minister favors "Sunday baseball." We can hardly see how such a thing could be possible. There must be a mistake on the part of the reporter. Surely in the face of the Bible instructions, and our Church's plain teaching, and our General Assembly's repeated protestations in regard to the Sabbath, no one who desires to see the Sabbath kept holy, and especially no loyal minister, would counsel the pursuit of the business or recreations, which may be lawful and right on other days, during the sacred hours of the Sabbath. Works of necessity and mercy must be carried on, and the worldly-minded, of course, will engage in worldly pursuits, on the Sabbath, but the Christian will be too jealous for the honor and glory of God to desecrate the holy day which is the seal of the divine regard for our spiritual welfare, and of our regard for the holiness of God.

MISTAKES CORRECTED.

In the statistical tables of the General Assembly Minutes there has always been a column designated "Sabbath-School Membership," and in the explanatory note, accompanying, it is said: "To include officers, teachers, and scholars in all Sabbath schools connected with the congregation, not including the 'Cradle Roll' nor the Home Department." This has always been plain enough. This year, however, in the absence of a General Assembly Stated Clerk, some person undertook an enterprise of his own and changed the heading of the column in the blanks sent to the churches, to "Sabbath School Teachers, etc." This led many Clerks of Sessions to report only the teachers, instead of the whole membership. Many Presbyterian Stated Clerks have written in to say that seeing the mistakes they corrected them by reporting the figures that were given last year. So it comes that the Sabbath-school membership for the whole Church, instead of falling off dreadfully as in some presbyteries, shows a net gain of 82,032 over last year, or a total of 1,433,292.

Let there be more holy boldness on the part of Christian people in asserting the truth of the Gospel and in standing up for Jesus Christ and his Church. The infidel and unbelieving are the ones who should be ashamed, allied as they are to sin and falsehood, the world, the flesh and the devil.

One of the first questions asked by a physician when he comes to see a sick person is: "What have you been eating?" When people are sick spiritually it is safe to surmise that they have been reading some skeptical or immoral books or papers. If we wish to maintain spiritual health let us feed on the Word of God, and on that which is sound and pure and good. Poison is never good for any one.

Within the last year at least two millions of persons have united with the churches. This is a larger number than were ever so received in any one year in the history of our country. This does not look as if religion were dying out. It is not dying out, and it never will die out.

It is nearing the time for schools and colleges to open for the fall. There should be many young men starting in to make preparation for the ministry. It is absolutely essential that, in selecting a college, they shall find a Christian college where their Christian faith will not be undermined.

There is much crime in this country, but criminals are holding carnival all around the world. There would be immeasurably more danger if the saloon still existed to be the headquarters and hiding place of crime, and if whisky were to be easily had to incite the vicious to evil-doing.

Many are the names which the liquor advocate organizations are taking in their agonizing efforts to get back the saloon and its various poisons. There have been the "Home Rule Association," and the "Stability League," and the "Ohio Temperance Union," and the "Business League" and the "Liberty League," and "Citizens' Liberty League," and now the "Tax Adjustment League," and still others will join the mournful and disreputable procession. They all want, or have wanted, the saloon back, and they have all been made up of the one set of low-grade and dangerous people. They must be dealt with patiently, but sturdily, and at some time they will give up their foolishness and wickedness.

Liquor propagandists do all they can, by Bolshevik law-breaking, by disreputable boot-legging, by falsehood, and misrepresentation of every sort imaginable, to bring prohibition into disrepute, and to stir up the vicious and criminal elements into trampling on the law, and then they cry out in the papers and elsewhere that sentiment for prohibition is dying out. It is false. Prohibition is no longer depending on sentiment. It is rock-founded on Constitutional enactment. The devil and his angels are trying to make the impression that sentiment is changing about sin and the Ten Commandments. But the devil is a liar from the beginning, and the father of liars.

Conditions in the United States Senate are a calamity to the country. A few headstrong and selfish men there, under the medieval rules, can hold up legislation that the country needs sorely and that would be passed by a large majority if a vote were permitted. The way in which the anti-beer bill was treated is a recent and striking case. One Senator may forbid the taking of the vote as was done one day, or may threaten to talk it to death as was done a little later on. One Senator used such language about Mr. Volstead that the House of Representatives by an almost unanimous vote, characterized his language as improper, unparliamentary and reprehensible, and called on the Senate to take action. The large majority of the Senate is on the right side of prohibition enforcement, but it is held up by a handful and prevented from doing the work the people expect it to do. The sooner a remedy is found for this the better.

Every member of the Church of Jesus Christ should feel his or her responsibility for giving the Gospel to the whole world. Those who can not go are under obligation to help sustain those who do go.

Mr. Bryan says somewhere that no man need try to conceal the fact that he is a Christian, if he really is one, for it will get out in some way just as sure as he lives. This is very true, and one of the ways it will get out is by his own confession, for no one who really loves and is loyal to Christ can keep from telling about it, as well as living it.

A copy of the General Assembly Minutes has reached this office. There has been great difficulty in carrying on the work of the Stated Clerk's office this year, owing to the death of Dr. W. H. Roberts and to the fact that the new Stated Clerk, Dr. Mudge, has not yet assumed the duties of the office. The committee in charge deserve great credit for the work they have done under the difficulties that have confronted them. The new volume conforms to the established standards, has 1,047 pages, and attains to measurable accuracy in its statistics. It will be of great value to the Church in the work of the coming year.

We think of foreign missionaries as being devoted and earnest Christians, self-sacrificing and consistent in every way. This is right. They should be all of this if they are to succeed in impressing the people to whom they go, and in winning souls to Christ. But this is just what every individual Christian should be. Those who remain at home should not think of living on a lower level, spiritually, than those who go to foreign lands. All should live for Christ.

A good many young men should start to college this fall, and prepare for the ministry and for other lines of Christian service, who may not do so unless they are urged and encouraged to do so. If one more such young man should be started in each church, or even in each presbytery, the world might receive a mighty impulse Godward.

There has never been a time when there was such a shortage of dwelling houses. The building program is behind from ten to thirty per cent in all our cities. This should not be. If we would be in good condition as a nation, family life must be cultivated and encouraged. Christian families, in separate homes, are the hope of the Church and the life of the nation.

Some of the poorest people in the world are among those who have deeds to the most houses and lands, and who have the most bonds and stocks in safe deposit boxes.

The Bible, like most of the really valuable possessions of our human race, is a gift. It is "given by inspiration of God." It is thus we have the earth that is beneath our feet, and the sun that is above us. They were made, and given to us, for we never could have bought them. Jesus Christ is the supreme gift to us, for "God so loved the world that he gave" him to us to be our Savior. Irreligion is the blackest ingratitude.

FAITH.

BY MRS. MARY E. C. VAN DEMARK.

A wondrous Presence leads me on,
 Although the path be blurred and gone;
 I do not know where I should tread,
 But by his Presence I am led,
 Just step by step, from dawn till dawn.

The worries that encompassed me,
 Because my wisdom could not see,
 Are lost in joy; for now I know
 That where he leads me, I can go;
 And what he bids me, I can be.

I do not need to see the way,
 For he will guide me, day by day.
 I do not need to understand,
 For I can clasp his mighty hand,
 And God, my God, will be my stay.

GREAT BIBLE CHAPTERS.

ABRAHAM'S PRAYER FOR THE WICKED CITIES.
(Gen. 18: 20-23.)

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART.

Abraham was the spiritual ancestor of millions. He was a prince. He was the friend of God. Despite his faults, he was mightily use of God to accomplish gracious results in the kingdom. The incident here to be reviewed is eloquent with instruction. Let us read it:

"And the Lord said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous; I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me; and if not, I will know. And the men turned their faces from thence, and went toward Sodom; and Abraham stood yet before the Lord. And Abraham drew near, and said, Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked? Peradventure there be fifty righteous within the city; wilt thou also destroy and not spare the place for the fifty righteous that are therein. That be far from thee to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked, and that the righteous should be as the wicked, that be far from thee: Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" (Gen. 18: 20-25.)

Prayer for others! How Christlike! My readers will thank me for inserting here a choice passage from Dr. Henry B. Smith:

"There arises from all parts of the world, at the morning and the evening, and through the labors of the day, a perpetual incense of adoration and of petition; it contains the sum of the deepest wants of the human race, in its fears and hopes, its anguish and thankfulness; it is laden with sighs, with tears, with penitence, with submission, the broken heart, the bruised spirit, the stifled murmur, the ardent hope, the haunting fear, the mother's darling wish, the child's simple prayer; all the burdens of the soul, all wants and desires nowhere else uttered, meet together in that sound of many voices, which ascends into the ears of the Lord God of hosts. And mingled with all these cravings and utterances is One other voice, one other prayer, their symphony, their melody, their accord—deeper than all these, tenderer than all these, mightier than all these—the tones of One who knows us better than we know ourselves, and who loves us better than we love ourselves—and who brings all these myriad fragile petitions into one prevalent intercession, purified by his own holiness, and the hallowing power of his work."

("System of Christian Theology," p. 483.)

Udell had tried to hire a printer. He had plenty of work for him to do. One day when his fiancee came into the office he said to her:

"If you have half the influence at headquarters that you profess to have, I wish you'd pray them to send me a printer. I've prayed and threatened and bribed and promised as well as the best prayer-meeting church members you've got, but I can't get the sign of an answer. Reckon the wire must be down."

The prayer wire is down, sad to say, even for many professing Christians. Communication with headquarters is interrupted. They are out of communion with God. Therefore their lives are unhappy, their Christian hope dimmed, their Christian faith weakened, their Christian service nil.

Why is this? Where does such backsliding begin? Why the absence of "the peace that passeth understanding"? Why the eclipse of faith? Why the paralysis of the spiritual life? Why the loss to the militant hosts of God of the valiant soldier of the cross?

One said to me yesterday out of a very sad heart:

"I got discouraged because of the troubles that swarmed around me. My religion didn't seem to help me. There didn't seem to be much in it."

A sad plaint surely. The wire was down for that soul. But listen! We can always depend upon God doing his part. Remember who he is, the Almighty, the All-holy, the ever faithful, covenant-keeping God. Though heaven and earth pass away, his words shall not fail of fulfillment. He will never leave nor forsake those who trust him.

But failure is often to be charged to weak humanity. We let go our hold of God's gracious hand. We let some sin come between us and God. We become disobedient to the heavenly vision of his truth and love.

God has made provision and promises to keep his end of the prayer wire up until prayer shall be lost in praise, until faith shall end in fruition. In his last confidential talk with his disciples he told them that the normal relationship between him and them would be as intimate as that between a branch of a vine and its trunk. Hear him:

"Abide in me and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in me. If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (John 15: 4, 7).

That is the secret of keeping the prayer wire up—abiding in Christ, obeying his commands, listening to the prompting of his Spirit.

"But many of us face a condition, not a theory," some one replies. "Once it was well with our souls. We lived in the sunshine. We were happy in the service of Christ. Communication between us and God was well established. Angels ascended and descended upon the Jacob's ladder of our communion and we were

"By the vision splendid On our way attended" every hour. But now the way is dark, the prayer wire is down, and what shall we do?"

Think back, dear friend, to the time when you felt that you had lost God. How was the break caused? Go back to that point and mend that break by sincere confession to your heavenly Father. If you wronged your fellow-man at that time, right that wrong, if it is now within your power. "For if we confess our sins he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (John 1: 9).

Reopen that long-closed Bible. Walk softly before God. Resume your habits of church attendance and gradually the clouds will scatter. The Father's face will be seen in love. His Spirit will be felt in your heart and the old filial relation will be re-established.

The wire will be up. Prayer will be a joy. (To be continued.)

PRACTICABILITY OF THE GOLDEN RULE.

BY REV. B. E. P. PRUGH, D.D.

We are living in more perilous times than most people imagine. More than two years have elapsed since the so-called "world-war" was practically ended by the signing of the armistice by the great nations engaged in it, and yet a large part of the earth is still suffering horrors of war. The "Golden Rule" so long ago proclaimed by the Son of Man as the ideal rule of life, lies practically unused by men and nations. Were it to become their rule of action, the earth would become almost a paradise. Is it practical?

It is a sad fact that, as a whole, both individuals and nations live by the rule, "Look out for Number One." This rule is rooted in selfishness. It was by this appeal to selfishness that the Devil succeeded in persuading Mother Eve to commit the mother sin. "God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." So he spake, and our first parents desiring to be like God dared to disobey. All through the years men have presumed to be wiser than God. We give intellectual assent to the statements of the Bible, and, in our hearts, deny their truths.

Ever since the fall of man, war seems to be his nature, manifesting itself first when Cain killed Abel. No good came out of this first war, and yet, all down through the years, strife of man with his fellow man has followed, and always with a like result. Among the closing utterances of the Sermon on the Mount, the Son of Man gave this rule as the fundamental principle for living. He immediately warned that it would not be easy to follow it, by exhorting men to "Enter in at the strait (narrow) gate; for wide is the gate and broad is the way which leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." If each individual would put himself in his fellow's place in every act, it is easy to see how social life would be revolutionized and the relations of men to each other fundamentally changed.

If the Golden Rule were carried into business life, the same beneficent results would follow. We have long heard the saying, "Competition is the life of trade." What a misnomer this was seen to be when grim war struck its fangs into the throat of the nation. It was supplanted by the cry for "co-operation." Competition between capitalists leads logically to competition between capital and labor. Forgetfulness of the Golden Rule led capital to grind Labor in years gone by, causing the formation of "union" armies to "fight" Capital, the very Capital upon which the life of Labor hangs. It is forgetfulness of this same rule on the part of both that is responsible for the incessant war between them now going on. Each factor proceeds upon the assumption that the other is "trying to do it," and neither employers nor employes seem willing to sit down in a brotherly way to face the facts and adopt the conclusion which the facts demand. A well-known statistician estimates that during the twelve months ending September 1, 1920, labor troubles cost employes $250,000,000 in wages and employers $25,000,000 in profits. While both were heavy losers, the general public, by far the more numerous class, was by far the greatest sufferer of all.

It is just as true that the practice of the Golden Rule between nations will produce the most serene national life. "Do the other nation before the other nation does you" is just as unprofitable between nations as between individuals. A nation is but a company of individuals, and as no individual can live to himself alone, so no nation can live to itself alone. Our nation applied this rule to China after the Boxer troubles, and who will say that it has not been profitable to us? All China looks to the United States as a friend and trusts her. The cry, "America first," as generally used, will not make a single friend for America, but will tend to combine the rest of the world against her. "Look out for Number One" is no better rule for a nation than for an individual. The best asset any nation can secure is the friendship of other nations. For the accomplishment of this a new statemanship must be born in the nations, and it is for you and me as Americans to help bring it to the birth in America. When once it becomes the national rule it will be found the most practical statemanship ever known. Then patriotism, and not partisanship, will govern political life at home and abroad, and the abounding corruption in official life will cease to be the menace to the nation it is today.

A SILVER TRUMPET CALL.

BY MORGAN HAVERHILL.

Of all the high notes recently sounded, has any one of them reached a loftier pitch than that calling for a restored Sabbath? Those who set apart the one day in seven, safeguard the remainder of the week. Keepers of the Sabbath will not be breakers of God's laws, for they will be governed by a command that includes everything good and beneficial.

Is it not time to voice the central charge of the Bible when we see church officers administering the communion service in the morning and doing real estate business in the afternoon, to say nothing of church members who paint their houses, do carpentering and plumbing, plant and cultivate gardens—ignoring the fact that their pews stand empty?

And while they are doing these things that sear conscience and destroy sensitiveness of spirit, let them remember that they are affecting the atmosphere of the day for many who are trying to keep it as they should. I often think of a fragile little woman who had courage to tell her next-door neighbor that the sound of his lawnmower spoiled her Sabbath. If more of us had that kind of courage, perhaps there would be less desecration of the sacred day.

The blessings of life are pronounced upon those who "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy;" the curses upon those who do not thus remember. Any nation that destroys this bulwark, established by Almighty God for the safety and well being of his children, is a doomed nation. The Bible's recurrent message from Genesis to Revelation is to "Keep the Sabbath."

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

Since Rev. Charles Schall, D.D., pastor of the First Church, Greensburg, Pa., has accepted the call to the Wayne Church, near Philadelphia, we shall lose a fine, upstanding, strong preacher of the Gospel from this region. It is understood that the Wayne Church has some large plans in view, and offers an opportunity for vigorous executive operations. Dr. Schall's experiences as a leading chaplain in the great war were not only most helpful, but also educational.

Then if Rev. Matthew Smith, of Beaver Falls, accepts the call to the First Church, Indianapolis, Ind., we shall give away another workman that needeth not to be ashamed, a minister specially qualified to develop the church activities, and the organizations of the younger members.

A shadow falls across many friendly hearts as we learn of the death of the son of Rev. Dr. W. O. Campbell, pastor-emeritus of the Sewickley Church. This son, in the fullness of his ripening maturity, an active lawyer, beloved and respected by all, died suddenly at his father's home on Aug. 25th, of heart failure, resulting from an anæsthetic. There are the griefs not only too deep for tears, but beyond adequate words of sympathy, but the parents and sisters know whom they have believed, and may be sure, as Bryant said of his own path of life, while watching the flight of the water fowl:

"And He who guides thy flight from zone to zone Will guide my steps aright."

Out of the Bible rises that beautiful picture of the Roman centurion seeking Christ for the healing of his daughter, and Christ's sympathy and love. Such miracles are not often repeated, for this life is not all; "this is not your rest, it is polluted;" and again and again God's hand tenderly touches us, and bids us look to a larger life, and a world unshadowed with pain and unstained with tears. May "the God of all comfort" keep these hearts and minds, and make them realize that the consolations of God are not small.

For the Gypsy Smith evangelistic campaign the Motor Square Garden building, in the East End, is being prepared with seats for six thousand people, and weekly community prayer meetings are being held to prepare for the larger success of the meetings, which are to continue from Sept. 11th to Oct. 3d.

As it is still summer weather and the front porch allures us with its literature, let us note a recent publication of a Lenten course of sermons by Bishop Gore, entitled "Christian Moral Principles." Bishop Gore is one of the stronger religious thinkers of Great Britain, independent and vigorous, and more of the High-Church thinker than I like. He is not as sympathetic with Non-Conformity as he should be, for a well-trained mind, but I am bound to say he is deeply and truly religious, loyal to the truth, and intensely conscientious. Sometimes we note that even the highly ritualistic have an admirable piety, a fervor of thought, which your modernist never understands. Gore is not a ritualist. He is simple, straightforward, unassuming; and here a personal note may be pardoned, as I recall some twenty years ago, when he was a Canon of Westminster Abbey, and I sat beside him in the beautiful choir, which, every one knows, occupies part of the nave, and faces the reading desk and pulpit. At the proper time, he stepped down into the aisle, and walked over to the altar and pulpit, still in his simple gown, and preached a sermon earnest and simple as man to man. These lectures are, as the bishop says, "a study in the scientific spirit of the moral principles of Christian living." A reviewer's quotations arouse my interest, thus: "The greatest mistake the Church has ever made, and it has pervaded its history, is that of concealing from the young, or from men in general, that Christianity is not an easy thing." Note and ponder these sentences: "The root of idolatry lies in low ideas of God;" "It is your duty to God to love him with mind as well as with heart;" "The Bible is of all books most contemptuous of majorities;" "We can learn to love the people we do not like;" "Service means sacrifice. It is comparatively easy to learn this in war; it is extraordinarily difficult to learn it in peace;" "We can not read the Bible honestly without becoming conscious that there is therein a tremendous suspicion of being rich;" "How many public careers, which might in greater or smaller degree have been careers of public usefulness, have been destroyed by privations!" He has a sermon on "Charity, and the Use of Money." Such a preacher is very searching and very direct. Possibly, in your rocker on your front porch, you think he tends to austerity; but when every breeze of the time tends to materialism and self-love, and physical ease, and consecration is almost a lost art, may there not be a use in a contrary wind? It was Gore's steadfastness of faith, and confidence in the Bible and Christianity, that helped to win Professor Romanes back from atheism and utter skepticism to a childlike and intelligent faith in God and his Word, and the Cross of Christ one of the most interesting and beautiful examples of a restored faith and joy of salvation.

And chatting here, may we not turn from grave to gay, and enjoy Rev. Dr. Howard A. Bridgeman's parody of Edison's Questionnaire? Thus: 1. If Solomon was the son of David, and Joab the son of Zeruiah, what relation was Zeruiah to Joab? 2. Where are the lost tribes? 4. How long should the "long prayer" be? 5. What do men's clubs in the churches do between meals? 7. Which has the more deadly effect on church attendance, a rainy Sunday, or a pleasant? 8. Who invented the Sunday-school picnic? 10. What is the date of the reunion of Christendom? 11. For what is the building in New York once occupied by the Interchurch World Movement being used today? 12. How can we stop the rush from Amherst and other colleges into the ministry?

There is a value in such humor and kindly sarcasm. How many of you can correctly answer the first question?

OUR MICHIGAN CORRESPONDENT.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

Your correspondent is spending the month in the far northern forests of Michigan on an island remote from railroads, telephones and postoffices, where mail receipt is somewhat of an event and transportation a delightful uncertainty.

But it is fine, even if it seems selfish, to get away from the crowded thoroughfares or even the usual quieter walks of life and spend a few weeks where the wild things are comparatively tame, because they know no enemies. Is it worth nothing that within a quarter of a mile of your camp you can go fishing for an hour and bring home a generous string of big yellow perch—deep-water Lake Huron perch? Only yesterday one of our party in less than an hour's casting landed six large pickerel, weighing up to nine pounds each; enough for the six families of us camping on the island together. He who knows fish only as bought from the local dealer, and packed on ice for perhaps several days, is ignorant of the flavor of fish caught, cleaned and cooked on the shore. Add to this the procuring of fresh eggs and milk from a neighboring farm, only a reasonable boat ride away, and what does one care for the luxuries of civilization, especially if one is unaccustomed to them?

From our front porch we can see in the distance the big freight steamers that are carrying ore and grain southward and coal northward. But this year the traffic is sadly curtailed. Fewer steamers than we have ever known. The miners are to a large extent idle, because of the steel and copper conditions throughout the country, and, in fact, throughout the world. The moneyed men who are complaining of reduced or possibly past dividends do not always realize that what is to them largely a temporary inconvenience, is to the laborer and his family in the days of unemployment an experience of real suffering. There are men in Northern Michigan who were for a while getting their $8 a day who are now begging for employment at $1.25. Most of them would have been just as well off if there had never been a period of inflation. But we are sorry for them just the same.

Speaking of vacations, are they simply days of rural enjoyment, or is there any deeper experience connected with them? Is it a small matter that busy men and women have time to think, as they had not when perpetual activity was their lot? No man can do his best thinking when the days are too short for the work that must be done, and the close of a day or toil makes absolute rest a necessity. But when the day begins care-free, after a night of such rest as is only enjoyed in nature's blessed solitude, and there is no necessity for working at high pressure, physically or mentally, then life takes its new adjustments and appraisals, and sees what before was invisible.

We read books that we never had time to read in the rush of an exacting round of duties. Incidentally he said that we read the Herald and Presbyter and the few other really valuable papers and magazines that find their way to us, after more or less delay, as we never had time to read before. It is not simply the reading, but the atmosphere that is different. No call of compulsory duty makes it a crime to read leisurely. No ringing doorbells or telephones break in on the quietness. The most familiar chapters of the Bible have a new meaning. We are thankful that the Holy Spirit spoke to shepherds and vine-dressers and fishermen, and made them a medium for communicating divine truth. They saw with a clear vision truths greater than political or sociological modern writers could possibly see, and in quietness they listened and in peace of spirit they wrote. Yes, we must get away to lake and forest sometimes to repair mental and spiritual waste and get a new grip on the realities.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Missionaries being sent out by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions to various fields include Miss Emily L. Peterson, who sailed by the Caronia Aug. 27th; Rev. W. H. Whitlock, who sails by the Cedric Sept. 3d, and Miss M. J. R. McDonald, who sails Sept. 5th, all going to the Punjab. Also, sailing Sept. 3d, are Rev. S. Neale Alter, Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Friedlinger, who go to Syria. A farewell reception was given at the Board rooms to twenty-five outgoing missionaries.

One of the most interesting preachers in New York last Sabbath was Captain Gipsy Pat Smith, who spoke morning and afternoon in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church. He is a great evangelist. He has just returned from Great Britain. He conducted a series of meetings in Belfast last January, said to have been one of the greatest religious movements in Belfast. During his last trip to America, last year, he addressed upward of 800,000 people and won many to Christ. Captain Smith while in the British Army, during the war, was badly wounded and at that time dedicated his life to evangelistic work. Ten years ago he was a dweller in a gipsy tent, going about selling things at back doors. He was soundly converted, and has been a soul winner ever since. He married an American girl of New York City. He will conduct evangelistic meetings in various parts of the country until January, when he will return for work in Great Britain. He has had a limited education and no theological training. He gives God the praise for what he has been able to do, as he has had the Bible interpreted him by the Holy Spirit.

John McKay, the Wall Street evangelist, told at the conference of the New York Evangelistic Committee, how a man had inquired the secret of the "lick" of the evangelist, as he termed it, in getting along so well in every way. Said the inquirer: "I am a church member, the largest contributor, and why does God let me lose my money as he has done?" The answer of the evangelist was, "God does not want your money. He wants you," and the man listened earnestly to the Gospel and consecrated his life to Christ.

The Methodists of New York City will erect a ten-story building, which will house "The Church of All Nations," now occupying a part of the old Germania Assembly property. Provision will be made for Hadley Rescue Mission and various other polyglot work connected with this center. The entrance to the new church will be on First Street near the Bowery. A movement has been started to buy the property on which the Tent Evangel is erected. The suggestion was made by Rev. Dr. Mark A. Matthews, of Seattle, when he was in New York recently.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

The President of the College of the Ozarks, located at Clarksville, Rev. Hubert S. Lyle, D.D., writes that the outlook for the college is most promising. Dr. Lyle has a number of students who wish to attend the college, but for the lack of money may not be able to come. The Self-Help fund is not sufficient to assist all these worthy students and I wish to make a personal appeal to all who may read this article to send Dr. Lyle your check for whatever amount you may be able to give, so that these worthy students may be cared for. They are willing to work if we can secure a fund to pay for their labors. I know one small home-mission church having three splendid young ladies who desire to attend the college if they can work their way through. On of them has given herself for foreign mission work. It seems a calamity not to be able to place these worthy students in our own institution. Mr. Coleman will be the physical director and athletic coach in the college this year. The college is receiving daily supplies of books. The General Assembly last May gave $1,000 with which to purchase books for the college. I trust every loyal Presbyterian will rally to the support of our college at Clarksville.

Rev. Mr. Boudra is just closing a ten days' meeting in the White Oak Church, resulting in sixteen professions and five additions.

The pastor of the Harmony Church, Rev. Otis C. Epperson, will meet all delegates at Chidester on Friday, the noon train, Sept. 9th, who expect to attend the Little Rock Presbytery.

A fine meeting was recently held at Pea Ridge by Rev. A. E. Carnahan, the pastor. He had the assistance of Rev. Denton R. Woods, of Oklahoma. There were three accessions and the church was greatly revived.

I spent Aug. 18th at Revenden Springs with the student supply, Mr. Jordan and the officers of the church. Mr. Jordan returns to the seminary after Sept. 5th.

Rev. T. E. McSpadden supplied the church at West Fork on Aug. 14th and received one member. I spent Aug. 21st with the Elkins Church and received nine members and eight of them received baptism. Dr. Lewis closed a meeting at Elkins recently at which there were forty-seven professions. I visited Cincinnati Church on Aug. 22d and a call was extended to Rev. M. L. Womack, of Kansas. Nicodemus is grouped with Cincinnati and will take one-fourth time.

Mrs. G. A. Kuntz, of Fayetteville, was buried Aug. 20th. She was the mother of Mrs. M. L. Gillespie. Mr. Kuntz is an honored elder in the Fayetteville Church, of which Rev. M. L. Gillespie is the pastor. The departure of this sainted woman has brought great sorrow.

Dr. D. T. Waynick, pastor at Siloam Springs, expects to install his new pipe organ at an early date. The new church building is a thing of beauty and convenience. Fifty-two members have been received since its dedication a few months ago.

Dr. T. M. Hartman, of Oklahoma, and Rev. T. A. Lampton, of Texas, have been visiting in Siloam Springs this summer. Dr. Hartman is planning to build a new $40,000 church and he was looking over the building at Siloam Springs for suggestions.

The Boards are in great need of money and as the fall season opens up, money should be secured and sent to the Boards.

STEUBENVILLE PRESBYTERY.

In accordance with General Assembly's plan for the Presbyterian Evangelistic Campaigns, three evangelists have been secured for a period of eight months: Rev. R. L. Warnock, New York City; Rev. J. Webster Bailey, Rockville Center, N. Y.; and Rev. William Wilson, Columbus, O. They begin their work on the first of September, holding a conference in each of the churches where later they will hold a two weeks' meeting. Following these conferences the evangelists will meet with the members of the presbytery, at the meeting at Mechanicstown, Sept. 12th and 13th. During the fall and winter these three men will conduct a two-weeks' meeting in forty-five churches of the presbytery, while a number of churches not included in this group will be served by pastor-evangelists, men called in from neighboring presbyteries, in a simultaneous evangelistic campaign, soon after the holidays. It is expected that every church in the presbytery will have been reached with a two weeks' evangelistic service before the campaign closes next April. The campaign proper will begin on Sept. 13th with Mr. Warnock beginning services at Augusta, Mr. Bailey at Kilgore and Mr. Wilson at East Springfield.—J. W. Ischy.

MISSIONARY PAGEANT.

An interesting and instructive musical pageant was presented recently by the Woman's Missionary Society of the Lakeside Presbyterian Church of Storm Lake, Ia., Rev. Donald M. Grant, D.D., minister. This is one of a series of pageants prepared by the Board of Foreign Missions, and represented by tableaux the three stages of Womanhood: "Childhood," "Girlhood" and "Motherhood," in contrast with the same as found in Christian lands. The tableaux were presented in costume, amid attractive surroundings, accompanied by a musical program of high order. Following the program, the society served light refreshments.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Judson Swift, D.D., of New York City, died at his home on Aug. 19th, after an illness of several months. For the last twenty-seven years of his life he had been General Secretary of the American Tract Society, becoming Secretary Emeritus last May, on account of illness and advancing age. For twenty-five years preceding he had been in the pastorate, at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, Grace Church of Oswego, N. Y., and at Adrian College, Michigan. He was a graduate of Wittenberg College and was ordained in 1868, thus being in the ministry for fifty-three years. He was a man of great ability and usefulness.

Rev. Henry E. Giles, pastor of Hope Church, Portland, Ore., was drowned on Aug. 14th, near Portland, after rescuing a boy scout from a stream where they were camping. Mr. Giles was a young man, only in the thirty-ninth year of his age, and was very greatly useful in his ministry. He was born at Roney's Point, W. Va., May 5, 1883, and was a graduate of Muskingum College and Princeton Seminary. He had been pastor of the church at Newell, W. Va., and Prospect Street Church, Ashtabula, O., before going to Portland. During the last year he received about seventy members. His death is a great loss. His wife and a little son survive.

Rev. William Hicks, of Littleton, Col., senior member of the Presbytery of Denver, died, on Aug. 12th, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Nutting, of Littleton, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. He was born in Canada and became a minister in the Methodist Church of Canada. He served the following Presbyterian churches: Laramie City, Wash.; Highland Park, Denver, Col., and Littleton, Col. He was a good minister of the Gospel.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Rev. E. M. Martin, of Westwood, preached last Sabbath in Walnut Hills First Church for Dr. F. N. McMillin.

The Presbytery of Cincinnati is to meet at the First Church on Sept. 19th, at 10 a. m., according to adjournment, but will probably adjourn at once to meet in Mohawk Church, McMicken and Ravine Streets, on special in-itation of Dr. Peter Robertson and congregation. Only enough for a quorum will probably meet at the First Church.

Dr. E. T. Swiggett, of Trinity Church, preached on Aug. 21st at Covington First Church, and on Aug. 28th at Hyde Park, and on next Sabbath will preach in Immanuel Church of Milwaukee, Wis. Trinity pulpit was occupied last Sabbath by Dr. Whallon.

The American Legion and other service men's organizations are asking that Sabbath, Sept. 11th, be set aside as Service Men's Sabbath. They plan to attend church services in uniform, and they ask the churches to arrange for such special services and invite them.

Rev. W. T. Paterson, of Norwood, has returned from his vacation, and conducted his regular services last Sabbath.

Dr. George D. McCulloch, of Batavia, preached in the Mount Auburn Church last Sabbath.

At the Bond Hill Church, Rev. G. W. Shields preached last Sabbath morning, and Mrs. Webb, of Alaska, was heard in the evening.

Rev. Ralph M. Fox, of Madeira, preached in Wilson Memorial Church at St. Bernard last Sabbath.

Dr. J. V. Stephens supplied the College Hill Church last Sabbath, and Dr. C. F. Goss was heard in the Avondale pulpit.

Rev. W. S. Acomb preached in North Church last Sabbath, in the absence of Mr. Motter, and Dr. Frank Marston preached in the Church of the Covenant.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

The afternoon service last Sabbath, for the old people of Memorial Home, on South Grand Avenue, was conducted by Rev. James Hardin Smith, D.D., pastor of the North Church.

Rev. R. William Van Buskirk, of Coraopolis, Pa., has supplied for two Sabbaths at the First Church, and the pulpit was filled last Sabbath by Rev. Donald MacDonald, of this city.

Rev. P. R. Lippincott, of Cadiz, O., preached at the Second Church on Sabbath, Aug. 21. On other Sabbaths of the summer the pulpit has been filled by the assistant pastor, Rev. N. L. Euwer. Dr. MacIvor is expected home this week, having taken much of his vacation trip by auto.

Dr. Roy Heimburger, of Shantung, China, has arrived in the city to take a year's medical work here, specializing along the line of skin diseases. Dr. Heimburger, who is supported in the foreign field by the Sabbath school of the West Church, has recently been elected a member of the medical faculty of the Shantung University. His wife, who is a daughter of Dr. Corbett, is with him in St. Louis, as also their three children.

Miss Catherine Sutherland, a missionary of our Board at Nansuchow, Anhui, China, is annually remembered on her birthday, Oct. 30, by a "postcard shower" from old friends of the Tyler Place Church, who are just now preparing such a greeting. It is her custom to pass the cards along, after enjoying them herself, to friends among the Chinese people, who greatly value such keepsakes. Miss Sutherland's sister, Miss Sena Sutherland, will enter the teaching faculty of Lindenwood College this fall.

Rev. Ralph Marshall Davis, D.D., pastor of the First Church, has not been idle during his vacation, but has been holding tent services in his home town, Omaha, Ill. He has been preaching every night to large congregations. Upon Dr. Davis' return, a welcome reception will be given to him by the Sabbath school and church, in the form of a picnic at Forest Park, on Saturday, Sept. 10. The Sabbath-school superintendent, Elder J. J. Parks, who is taking a tour with the Automobile Club, will also return in time for this reunion.

Rev. H. Magill, D.D., Stated Clerk of the St. Louis Presbytery, finds his time as well taken up on Sabbaths as if he were in the pastorate. For the last twenty Sabbaths he has had preaching engagements on every Sabbath but one. On Aug. 21 he preached to the North Wood River congregation, near Alton, Ill., in the morning, and at night at the Fountain Park Congregational Church, in an open-air service. Tyler Place and the Oak Hill pulpits were filled by him at morning and evening services, respectively, on the preceding Sabbath.

Rev. Samuel A. Coile, D.D., pastor of McCausland Avenue Church, and chairman of Foreign Missions in the presbytery, has been spending his vacation, the month of August, at home. The congregation has provided a supply for the pulpit, and the pastor takes this opportunity, seldom afforded to an active pastor, of visiting numerous other churches of the city. He sits in the pews, so that he may note methods and receive inspirations, which later may be used with benefit in his own church.

OHIO.

Rev. Mayson H. Sewell closes his pastorate at New Philadelphia on Sept. 11th.

Westminster Church of Steubenville has extended a unanimous and pressing call to Rev. Dr. Walter L. Whallon, of Zanesville. The church, reporting 1,253 members this year, was recently made vacant by the departure of Dr. G. W. Arms to Duluth, Minn.

ILLINOIS.

Rev. O. L. Pride, of Springfield, Ill., with Prof. Thomas Isaacs, of Portland, Ore., as singer, is conducting an evangelistic campaign in Gillespie, with a view to organize a Presbyterian church. Rev. Messrs. W. F. Jones, of Carlinville; F. J. Martin, of Virden; Arnold Smith, of Edwardsville; J. C. Lowe, of Staunton, and others, are assisting in the campaign, and it is expected that an organization will be effected in the near future. Gillespie is a city of six thousand people, a large number of whom are Scotch. Some of the largest coal mines in the country are here.

INDIANA.

The church of Greenfield, Ind., has called Rev. J. W. Armstrong, of Troub Memorial Church of Indianapolis.

Rev. H. D. Trickey, of Argenta, Ill., was called back to his old charge in the Lucerne group of churches, near Logansport, Ind., in August to conduct the funeral of a young soldier whose body had been brought back from France. A part of his vacation was spent by Mr. Trickey at his old home in Winchester, Ill.

The centennial of the organization of the Bath Church, in Whitewater Presbytery, is to be celebrated on Sept. 3, in charge of Rev. Dr. D. R. Moore, of Liberty, Ind., pastor of the Dunlapville Church. On July 18, 1875, meetings were held there by Dr. E. P. Whallon, then at Liberty, sixteen members received, and the present house of worship dedicated. Bath was one of the pioneer churches, and while it has been small, much good was done there especially in early days.

Rev. H. G. Gaige has resigned the pastorate of the Rochester Church to accept a call from the church at Crosswell, Mich., having served the Rochester Church acceptably for three years.

The First Church of Indianapolis has extended a call to Dr. M. F. Smith, of Beaver Falls, Pa. Under his ministry the Beaver Falls Church has become one of the strongest churches in Western Pennsylvania outside of Pittsburgh.

At Indianapolis the First Church was supplied last Sabbath by Rev. G. W. Allison, of Irvington; Memorial Church by Rev. C. H. Winders; Tabernacle by Rev. Hugh N. Ronald; Second by Rev. H. L. Todd, and Seventh by Rev. Dr. A. R. Miles.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Central Church, Canonsburg, Rev. David Dempster, pastor, is engaged in a building enterprise just now, which will very largely increase the seating capacity of the auditorium and of the basement. The contract has been let and the work is now going on.

MICHIGAN.

Rev. Warren E. Hall, of Wyandotte, is spending his vacation at Gill Lake, Mich. He came to Wyandotte eighteen months ago. The church then had a membership of 367. In the short period the membership has increased to 543. The church auditorium has been redecorated; a new lighting system has been installed; and at present a $1,500 pipe organ is being built for the auditorium. In addition he conducted during July a Bible school for the young people, with an enrollment of almost one hundred. During his vacation the church maintained regular morning services. On Aug. 7th the choir, under the leadership of N. V. Russell, gave a musical service. On Aug. 14th and 21st Rev. John Mundell, of Fort Street Church, Detroit, preached excellent sermons. Last Sabbath the choir gave another musical service. Few churches have a choir willing to serve so faithfully during summer.

KANSAS.

The Osawatomie Church is erecting an addition, with basement, to help house the growing Sabbath school. This means about $6,000 in improvements during the past eighteen months. Dr. C. Marshall Lowe is minister.

The services at McPherson are well attended even during the vacation months. Two members were received recently. Professor Lauer, of McPherson College, has charge of the orchestra at the evening service. At present union evening meetings are held in the park. The old manse has been sold and a new one will be built in the near future.

NEBRASKA.

Rev. H. Frank Reid, of Falls City, spent his vacation, with his wife and twin boys, touring Colorado in their car. Mr. Reid is again at home, and, with the other pastors of the city, getting ready for a union evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Evangelist Stough.

Rev. A. E. Perry, of Chillicothe, Mo., was called to Nebraska City on Aug. 21st, to conduct funeral services for one of the young men of that city who had made the supreme sacrifice overseas.

Rev. W. F. Perry, of Auburn, Neb., spent his vacation at Excelsior Springs, Mo., and supplied the church at Mellier Place, Kansas City, on two Sabbaths.

Rev. E. B. Surface, D.D., of Ponca City, Okla., supplied the First Church of Kansas City, Mo., during August.

IOWA.

During July and August the churches of Storm Lake, including the Presbyterian, Dr. D. M. Grant, pastor, held union evening services, alternating from one church to the other, sometimes holding on the lawn.

Calvary Church, in Fort Dodge Presbytery, recently received forty members as the result of an evangelistic meeting, in which the student-pastor, Rev. Arthur Stockwell, was assisted by Rev. W. H. Thompson, evangelist, of Des Moines.

COLORADO.

The First Church of Canon City has extended a unanimous call to Rev. J. Willis Hamblin, of the First Church of Santa Fe, N. M. Mr. Hamblin has been over three years in the Santa Fe Church, and before that had a pastorate in the Synod of Michigan.

Evangelists Rev. and Mrs. H. P. Dunlop, who have spent the summer at Boulder, have been quite busy in the Lord's work, preaching at Denver, Brush and Boulder, and for two months carrying on the work of Rev. Mr. Gillett, of Netherlands, who has been sick. Sept. 4th they open the new season's work in a meeting at Akron, Col. Their Western address is 604 Marine Street, Boulder, Col.

Rev. Samuel Garvin, D.D., of the First Church of Colorado Springs, in view of the losses suffered in many of the churches by reason of the Pueblo floods, in Pueblo and the Arkansas Valley, has sent out an appeal for $10,000 to help in the church life and work of the region, and starts the subscription with the promise of $100 from his own church.

During the past year the church at Bayfield, Rev. Halford Wilhelm, has received thirty-one members. The federation of the two churches is working well and is increasing in favor with the people.

Alamosa First Church, Rev. C. H. Harrell, pastor, received two members recently. The work is going on well. The Sabbath-school sent the pastor to the recent State Sabbath School Convention at Colorado Springs, paying all his expenses. The pastor spent August with his mother at his old home in Illinois.

The Presbytery of Denver has arranged a great rally program for the last two weeks of September, beginning with a meeting for laymen and ministers for prayer and testimony on the 17th, including "Assembly Day" on Sabbath, the 18th, Young People's Evening on the 23d, "Pan-Presbyterian Get-Together" (a gathering of ministers, church officers and members for an all-day celebration) on the 24th, and Rally Day on the 25th.

Rev. Frederick W. Evans, D.D., pastor of the Harlem Church of New York, is supplying the Central Church of Denver during Dr. Boyles vacation.

The new church building at Sedalia is now under roof and is being rapidly pushed to completion.

Rev. J. Mont Travis, Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Denver, was appointed by the General Assembly of 1920 as a delegate to the World Presbyterian Alliance, which is to meet in Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 16-26 next.

There are several good opportunities in the Presbytery of Denver for ministers having full college and seminary training and desiring to locate in country or small town churches.

IDAHO.

The Presbytery of Twin Falls met Aug. 18th, in the First Church of Twin Falls, to dissolve the pastoral relations between Rev. A. H. Brand and the Twin Falls Church. Mr. Brand was dismissed to the Presbytery of Austin, where he has accepted a call to the Madison Square Church of San Antonio, Tex. The church of Twin Falls, the presbytery and the synod will greatly miss Mr. Brand, who is the present moderator of synod.

The church of Eden, Rev. Ralph E. Thurston, pastor, recently received ten high-school girls into its membership. Eight of them were baptized. These additions were largely the result of a class which the pastor is conducting among the young people on the fundamentals of Christianity. Mr. Thurston, also pastor of Hazelton Church, has just returned from a week's outing with the Hazelton Boy Scouts.

Dr. J. H. Barton is enjoying his vacation with friends and relatives in Pennsylvania.

MINNESOTA.

At the congregational meeting of the Stewart Memorial Presbyterian Church, Minneapolis, Minn., to act upon the resignation of Rev. James O. Buswell, D.D., pastor, Rev. Wm. L. Porter, associate pastor, was called as regular stated supply, commencing Oct. 1st, when Dr. Buswell's resignation goes into effect.

WISCONSIN.

The Oostburg Church, forty-five miles north of Milwaukee, was very happy on Aug. 14th, when about five hundred people from Westminster Church, Milwaukee, and others, thronged the Lakeshore Camp and observed an annual prayer and praise service. Mr. John Jones, a fine Welsh singer, led the choir. Rev. Everett Cutler, a former pastor, started this annual meeting several years ago. Among the speakers were Rev. Roy H. Brown, missionary from the Philippines and others.

Rev. Paul B. Jenkins, D.D., of Immanuel Church, Milwaukee, who has been resting at Lake Geneva, and preaching in Freeport, is expected home soon. His pulpit has been well supplied by Rev. Roy H. Brown, missionary of Milwaukee Presbytery in the Philippines, during August.

TEXAS.

The Reynolds Presbyterian Orphanage at Albany, under the superintendency of Dr. J. Gilmore Smith, is doing a good and much needed work. It is still feeling the effect of the fire that burned up much that was valuable. Dr. Smith lost all of his 1,200 volumes. The gift of a few from a good many sources would help him and would not impoverish the donors. The orphanage needs supplies of every sort for its many little children.

CALIFORNIA.

The many friends of Rev. C. S. Tanner, former pastor of Lincoln Park Church, San Francisco, will sympathize with him in the recent death of his daughter, Georgia, at Beaumont. She was an honor graduate of the Rochambeau school.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

The Church of the Mennonites, which numbers only about 120,000 members, has recently furnished six relief workers for the orphans and refugees of the Near East. The party, sailing on Aug. 20th, included two farmers, two mechanics, one carpenter and builder, and a stenographer. Upon their arrival at Constantinople they will be assigned by the Near East Relief to the stations most in need of the service each is qualified to render.

The summer term graduation class of the Moody Bible Institute numbered eighty, thirty-five men and forty-five women, who had completed the two years' course in the Bible, Gospel music and practical methods of Christian work. These students came from twenty-five different states and four foreign countries. Twenty-four of the graduates plan to go to foreign missionary fields; nine will take up home missionary work; ten will enter the pastorate; seven evangelistic work; five of them as Gospel singers; assistant pastor, one; Bible teaching, one; young people's work, one; public school teaching, two; undecided, twelve.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

YATES—Harriett Maria Dunlap, daughter of Napoleon and Eliza Dunlap, was born on a farm near Dunlap, Ill., Oct. 15, 1852, and departed this life Aug. 8, 1921, at her home in Hoopston, Ill. She was united in marriage with George V. Yates Dec. 18, 1873. She united with Prospect Presbyterian Church in early womanhood, being an active member there until 1902, when her membership was transferred to the First Presbyterian Church of Hoopston, Ill., of which church she was an active member at the time of her death. She was a devoted Christian woman, unassuming in manner, but ever firm in her faith in her Savior, a good Bible student and devoted to her church and family. As friend and neighbor she had the respect of all who knew her and was ready to go at the call of her Master.

OVER THE HILLS AND FAR AWAY.

Over the hills and far away,
A little boy steals from his morning play,
And under the blossoming apple tree
He lies and he dreams of the thing to be:
Of battles fought and of victories won,
Of wrongs o'erthrown and of great deeds done—

Of the valor that he shall prove some day,
Over the hills and far away.
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away!
It's, oh, for the toil the livelong day!
But it mattereth not to the soul aflame
With a love for riches and power and fame!
On, O man! while the sun is high—
On to the certain joys that lie
Yonder, where blazeth the noon of day,
Over the hills and far away.
Over the hills and far away!

Over the hills and far away,
An old man lingers at close of day;
Now that his journey is almost done,
His battles fought and his victories won—
The old-time honesty and truth,
The trustfulness and friends of youth,
Home and mother—where are they?
Over the hills and far away.
Over the years and far away! Ex.

BILLY'S VACATION.

The following story from By-Water Magazine has in it a suggestion that might be the means of much happiness to some one.

"Say, Billy, when are you going to start on your vacation?" asked James Hurd as he dropped two pennies instead of one into the dirty, bony hand and reached for the "Extra" with the other.

"Me! Vacation?" came the astonished reply from the little newsie.

"Certainly! When do you get yours?"
"Aw, quit your kiddin, chief," was Billy's reply.

"I'm honest about it."

"No, you're not."

"Yes, I mean it. Don't you get away sometime during the summer? I missed you from the corner for quite a time last year."

"Oh, that's when I got the mumps. Why, I never had a vacation in my life. Newsboys don't have them. They're for rich kids—only," he added after a pause.

"Well, I'm going tomorrow afternoon. Billy, and I would like to have you go with me for a fortnight. Lake trip up north, fine meals, great beds, scenery, fishing. Oh, all the fun you can think of and eating all of the time. Everything paid. Will you go?" ended Mr. Hurd in a burst of enthusiasm.

"Wonder if he does mean it? Never heard of anything like that happened to a newsboy," he thought to himself.

"Who'll take my corner? Maybe I kin git the boy next door. He has a little brother that could help and they could work both stands," he was thinking.

"Sure, I'll go if I kin git him," he said aloud. "Will morning be soon enough to tell you?" he added.

Mr. James Hurd never felt happier in his life. He had just been talking over long distance with main office in New York. He had taken another splendid order that day. The general manager had begged him over the wire to "for the love of those in the factory, lay off—go fishing—take a vacation—to do anything as long as he got off the job and did not send in any more orders for a while."

He had signed his mail, closed his desk, and taken one long look from his twenty-second story window, across the roofs of many buildings, across the tree tops, at the late afternoon sun.

The quick drop of the crowded express elevator, the hustle in the lobby, and the good-evening smile of little Billy, his newsboy, brought a fuller realization of this prosperity to him, and he had resolved on the spot that he would take a lake trip with Billy as a companion. He'd give the kid a good time for once. It would at least be something different and he knew the lad would enjoy it. So would he.

James Hurd was a bachelor or a widower—his friends at the club had never been able to determine which. He lived in a splendid suite. Those who had been able to make his acquaintance liked him, but few understood him. His reserve was beyond them. He never talked of his own affairs. * * *

A few days later a sun and wind-burned, clean little boy, in new shoes, pants and sweater, with cap pulled down tight on his head, and a windmill gaily painted by Indians, spinning madly in his hand, walked up the deck.

The wind was strong but tempered with warmth. One had to lean way forward and push hard to walk against it. It was one of those winds of the northern country that seemed to strike the body flatly and make you hungry all the way through.

Tipped back in a large cane chair against a sheltered portion of the cabin was a man very much content with the world and his particular lot in it at the time. Through his half-closed eyes, he had been watching the approach of the lad.

"Say, Mr. Hurd, there's lots of air up here. I never knew there was so much air in the world. And there ain't no dust in it either. Makes a fellow hungry, though, don't it?" said Billy, with hardly a pause.

"And this afternoon we go fishing, don't we? What's that place again, Mr. Hurd, where we get off—that Irish name, I mean?"

"Killarney," replied Mr. Hurd.

"Oh, yes! I just can't 'member it. I'll ketch a fish as big as a bundle of newspapers. My, wouldn't I like to take 'em all back and walk up Main Street in town with 'em."

"I saw a picture of a jedge with a big fish he caught, in the sporting section onc't. S'pose they'd put our picture in the paper if we walked up Main Street with a whole lot of fish's big's me?"

But it was all music in the ears of his host. Never could he remember of having so much genuine enjoyment on a trip. He had caught the spirit of the boy. He felt years younger. He sincerely hoped the boy would catch at least a few fish.

Just then the steamer made a sharp turn to the right around a point of land, and there at the left of a narrow channel, half a mile ahead, was Killarney.

happy man and a very weary tired little boy again crossed the gangplank a few days later. The boy tugged a string carrying several large blue-gills, and a pickerel.

"Oh, Mr. Steward!" he exclaimed as he saw that officer approaching with a grin, "can't you please keep my fish in the ice-box until we get back? I caught that big one all myself. I do want to walk up Main Street and show him to all the kids." * * *

"Boys, if you want a genuine vacation," stated Mr. James Hurd to a group sitting about him in the lounging room of the club a few days later, "go get some little youngster who doesn't have much and take him with you on a trip. A fellow on the boat did that. He had a newsboy. I amused myself by watching them a lot. It was hard to tell which was having the best time, and when the kid caught a four-pound pickerel, I thought they both would jump in before it was finally landed by the boy. Try it."

JUST KEEPIN' ON.

BY NINA M. LANGFORD.

Some days it doesn't seem worth while
Even to smile.

'Pears like I better quit
And rest a while.

No use to keep a-goin'—
No use to try, I say.

Yet I dunno. I might be glad Fer keepin' on—some day.

The other folk who've reached the goal
Of which I dream,

I s'pose had days like this Without a gleam;

And they kept goin' on.
Guess it's the only way!

Tomorrow I may reach the light
By keepin' on today.

A TINY MISSIONARY.

BY HELEN RICHMOND.

"Gertrude, could you spare a dolly for the missionary-box?" asked mamma. "The ladies have a small corner not filled, and we want to send it today. The minister has a little girl three years old who has never had a doll in her life, so I think you ought to let her have one of your children. Which shall it be?"

"Why, mamma, I don't see how I could give up any of my dollies," said Gertrude. I love every one of them. I might send Polly, since she has lost her wig, but that is the only one. I'll tie her hood on, and maybe the little girl will think all dolls are like that, if she has never had one. The others are too nice to go to that cold country papa was telling about."

Someone was speaking to mamma from the kitchen, so she did not hear what Gertrude said. The ladies met that afternoon to pack the last things and send the box away, so when they were in the sitting-room, mamma called to Gertrude and Guy to bring their things for the children. Everything but the one corner of the big box was filled, and the dray had been engaged by four o'clock.

"You are not going to give your very best books and ball, are you, Guy?" said Gertrude, as her little brother brought his nicest things for the missionary-box. "Don't you know that isn't the way to do? Why, mamma and the other ladies gave their very oldest things, and I'm going to send Polly because she's lost her wig. Folks only put in the missionary-box what they don't want themselves."

"I'm going to give these," said Guy, sturdily. "If they only get old things in the boxes, they can have a little 'sprise party with my good books. I guess the baby will like the ball if he can't read."

"I am afraid Guy is right" said one of the ladies, with very red cheeks, while Guy's mamma fell on her knees beside the box and took out a very shabby old dress.

"Let's follow Guy's example, and send something very nice this time," said another lady. "In an hour we can get lots of things together, and I'm going to try."

Guy did not know what it was all about, but the ladies all hurried away, and came back in a short time with nice, new clothes for the missionary and his family, some lovely shoes for the baby, pretty handkerchiefs, and even some candy and popcorn.

"Isn't it going to be a missionary-box, mamma?" asked Gertrude, with wide-open eyes. "I thought you never sent nice things to the poor people in the West."

"We are going to this time," said mamma, crowding the nice, new clothes into the vacant space. "Do you want to send Polly?"

"Not if you are going to take out all the old things like that. I'll send Josephine, for she is the very nicest child I have. Do you know, mamma, I'm glad not to lose Polly, for all she has no wig? And I'm glad those poor people are going to get some nice presents, aren't you?"

And all the ladies kissed Guy, and said he was a dear little missionary himself for giving his pretty things first.

TABLE MANNERS.

Your table manners are the way
You eat your dinner every day.
My mother says the piggies small
Show what we mustn't do at all.

They never learned from Mother Pork
The way to hold a knife and fork;
Right in their plate they put their feet,
And eat and eat and eat and eat.

They have a splendid appetite
That lasts from morning straight to night,
And eat between meals all day through:
A thing that children should not do.

And though the noise they make is rude,
It's good the way they chew their food;
They do not gobble like a pup,
But steadily they chew it up.

No cocoa do they get to drink,
No cake and no preserves, I think,
For food that's such peculiar stuff
Their manners are quite good enough.

HELPING MOTHER FORGET.

BY MRS. HATTIE KNAPP.

"Girls," Mr. Grey asked, as he rose from breakfast, "Would you like to take a ride, this morning? It will be a real treat to have you ride with me, again. I have some oats to deliver to Mr. Dayton, on the Ashley place, so you will have an opportunity to see the changes that have taken place since you went away."

Leone and Meta Grey had returned the day before, from a distant city, where they had been attending school, and they promptly accepted their father's invitation, for they had missed the long rides which they had been accustomed to take with him, when he went to deliver grain, or other produce.

The day was ideal, and the ride proved a most delightful one, the girls chattering of school friends and good times they had enjoyed during the school year, and their father answering, and laughing at the amusing tales.

When the oats were delivered and the three were on the way home, Mr. Grey said, "I want to speak to you about your mother, girls. She has not been very well this spring, and the responsibility of the housework is telling on her. I want you two girls to help her all you can. There is one way in which you can help especially. That is, you can help her forget at once, the things she asks you to do."

"I do not understand, papa," Leone said. "Why should she want to forget at once, what she had asked us to do?"

Mr. Grey smiled, "I wondered if you would see what I meant, at first. Do you understand, Meta?"

"I'm not sure, papa, whether I do or not," Meta said hesitatingly, "I think you mean that when mamma asks us to do anything we should do it at once, so it will be one thing less for her to remember, is that it?"

"Exactly, Meta," Mr. Grey said, "Mother has many things to think of and remember, and if as soon as she has asked either of you to do a certain thing or go a certain place, she can, at once, dismiss all thought of that from her mind, it will rest her mentally, and will also make it easier for her to remember other plans and other work that must be attended to."

"I see, now, what you mean, papa," said Leone, "I never thought, before, how much unnecessary strain it was on mamma's mind, when she had to keep telling us over and over, to do the same thing. We'll try, won't we, Meta, to help mamma forget the things she tells us to do, as soon as she tells us?" "Indeed we will," Meta answered, and all through the summer the girls tried, very earnestly, to keep their resolve.

DID HE GET IN?

A child, holding her father's hand, stood before Holman Hunt's picture of "The Waiting Christ." The look of grief and ill-requited kindness on his worn face touched her tender heart, until at length with slowly filling eyes, she asked, "Papa, did he get in?"

On that question hang the issues of the Judgment Day. If there is any truth in the Gospel as set forth in the Scriptures, the crucial question at the Great Assize will be, "Did this man accept Christ as his Savior or not?" The consideration of a less or greater shade of personal purity will cut but a small figure then, since all alike will be guilty and inexcusable in the sight of God.

Only those shall enter a holy heaven who have been washed in the atoning blood of Christ and clothed in the fine linen of his imputed righteousness, which is the "righteousness of saints."

LIFE.

Life—what is it?
Ah, who knows!
Just a visit,
I suppose;
Joy and sorrow
For a day,
Then tomorrow
We're away.

Youth and morning;
Manhood, noon;
Age—the warning—
Night comes soon;
Shines a star to Light us; then
'Tis not far to Home again.

See the good and bad within,
Often we should love the sinner
All the while we loathe the sin.
Could we know the forces working
To o'erthrow integrity,
We should judge each other's errors
With more patient charity.

Ordinary doings become honorable, if done in Christ's name. Most elaborate and spectacular service comes to shame if Christ be left out.

Mere doctrine, though ever so sound, will not alter the heart.

Prayer lays hold of God. It commands his resources and secures the sweet fragrance of his presence.

The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men."
—Alice Cary.

To do the thing that God asks us to do is the best way to show our trust in him.

Talk about the questions of time; there is but one question—how to bring the truths of God's work into vital contact with the minds and hearts of all classes of people.—Wm. E. Gladstone.

Just stand aside and watch yourself go by;
Think of yourself as "He" instead of "I."
Pick flaws; find fault; forget the man is you,
And strive to make your estimate ring true.

The faults of others will then dwarf and shrink,
Love's chain grow stronger by one mighty link.
When you with "He" as substitute for "I"
Have stood aside and watched yourself go by.

Maintain daily loyalty to your Master, Jesus Christ, so that the ideals which you have learned from him may remain in clear constant control of all you do.

"Dorcas was full of good works and alms-deeds which she did—not which she dreamed of doing. Perhaps we imagine that we are full of good works because we think about them and plan to do them; the question is, do we do them?"

The power of the Christian religion does not lie in its rites, forms and ceremonies. These forms may help toward spirituality, but never produce it, as it must come alone from a higher source.

There is nothing else quite so brotherly as the religion of Jesus, and nothing else binds men quite as close to each other as the Spirit of our Lord. The Church of Christ is and ought to be a great friend maker, and of such friendship we have no reason to be ashamed. It is possible to make the Church a more potent friendship producer.—The Christian Guardian.

Santification destroys no natural appetite, neither does it lessen any proper enjoyment of appetite. It does however, empower the soul to hold every appetite in due control.

Lesson XI—September 11.

PAUL IN ATHENS.

(Acts 17:16-31.)

16. Now while Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred in him, when he saw the city wholly given to idolatry.

17. Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons, and in the market daily with them that met with him.

18. Then certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoicks, encountered him. And some said, What will this babbling say? other some, He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods: because he preached unto them Jesus and resurrection.

19. And they took him, and brought him unto Areopagus, saying, May we know what this new doctrine, whereof thou speakest, is?

20. For thou bringest certain strange things to our ears: we would know therefore what these things mean.

21. (For all the Athenians, and strangers which were there, spent their time in nothing else, but either to tell, or to hear some new thing.)

22. Then Paul stood in the midst of Mars' hill, and said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious.

23. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him I declare unto you.

24. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands;

25. Neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though he needed any thing, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things;

26. And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation;

27. That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us:

28. For in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring.

29. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, given by art and man's device.

30. And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men every where to repent:

31. Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.

Golden Text: "In him we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17:28).

INTRODUCTORY.

In our last lesson we saw Paul and Silas in prison at Philippi, and we saw the triumph of divine grace in the deliverance of these men of God and in the conversion of the jailer, and the baptism of himself and his family. Going from Philippi, Paul and Silas went to Thessalonica, where they preached with such success that many were converted. But the hostile and envious Jews gathered a great mob and drove them away. The Christian friends took them by night to another city, Berea. Here they found many who were willing to listen to their preaching, and to test it by the Scriptures, with the result that many of them believed. But the Jews of Thessalonica heard of it and came to Berea, and stirred up the people there to reject the Gospel and to drive away the evangelists. So his friends took Paul and started him away, bringing him to Athens, the great city of art and learning and heathen religion of Greece. As they left Paul at Athens to go back to Berea, he directed them to send Silas and Timothy to him. So they returned to Berea to start Silas and Timothy to Athens. During the interval Paul was comparatively alone in that city, and our lesson tells us how he employed his time. He was interested, no doubt, in the art and learning and architecture of the city, and in seeing its libraries and temples and other fine structures. But he was not out on a sight-seeing expedition, nor for the study of architecture or the classics. He knew enough of these, and he knew something of infinite importance that these people did not know. He knew about Jesus Christ and the way of salvation. He was there to preach the Gospel and he was not there very long until he had the opportunity to tell the people about Christ. If we seek to serve Christ, and to save souls, we will find ways to do so.

EXPOSITORY.

16. Those were busy days for Paul in Athens. He was studying how he might best approach the people. He was investigating, not as a mere idler or visitor, but as an explorer and advance agent for Jesus Christ. He saw evidences of idolatry on every hand.

17. He conversed with the Jews in the synagogue meetings, with all who were willing to talk on religious subjects, and on the streets and in places of business. But religion was his one theme.

18-21. Soon he encountered the philosophers, the Epicureans and the Stoics, who differed something as did Pharisees and Sadducees. But they agreed in opposing Paul. Some called him a shallow babbler, and others thought he was in propaganda for strange gods, because he talked so zealously and incessantly of Jesus and the resurrection. So they took him to the Areopagus, the place for public speaking, on Mars Hill, and gave him the opportunity he desired, to speak in connected discourse on his great subject. This was courteous to him, and it was gratifying to the Athenians, who delighted in nothing more than in the privilege of hearing public speaking on some new topic.

22. Paul was very ready and wise and tactful as a public speaker, and he used his arts with conspicuous ability on this occasion, as God opened up the way for him to preach the Gospel. He is courteous to his hearers, addressing them politely, and introducing his address on religion by saying that he had found them to be very religious themselves.

23. This altar had been built, supposedly, with the thought that they, in erecting altars to all the gods and goddesses who were in their lists, might have omitted some one. So, not wishing to give offense to any such divinity, this altar was erected to the honor of such a god. They were not only very religious, but were, certainly, very superstitious, as evidenced by this altar. So Paul takes this as a starting point from which, without offending them, he could preach to them of the true God and Jesus Christ whom he had sent.

24-29. Here, in eloquent language, Paul tells them of the true God. And he says, positively, two things in which he antagonizes their idol worship. The first fact that he dwells upon is that there is but one God, and, second, that he is not to be worshiped by means of idols. These are the teachings of the First and Second Commandments. These are the two great faults of heathenism today, as they have always been. Innumerable gods and goddesses have been proclaimed, and these have been set forth in all sorts of forms. Temples have been reared to them. Mythologies have been devised and written. These divinities have been characterized by all the vices imaginable. Wherever this system of polytheism and of idol worship has prevailed people have been degraded. It is of great importance to study this remarkable address carefully. It says that God, the one God, is the Creator of the whole universe, and of all people and all lands, and should be worshiped by every one, instead of each city or village having some weak and unworthy god. The true God is the God of providence. We ought not to think that such a being can be worshiped by means of a bit of gold or stone, shaped into some crude, or artistic form.

30, 31. The address concluded with a call to immediate repentance of sin and acceptance of the Gospel. He tells his hearers they are no longer ignorant, and, consequently, no longer excusable if they go on in sin. He tells them of their responsibility to God, and of the coming day of Judgment. He assures them that God has given full warning. The resurrection of Jesus Christ makes it certain that he was what he claimed to be, as the divine Son of God and Savior. If we accept him and trust and serve him, we are saved. If we do not, we remain lost. So Paul put the truth to these people. It was with them as in so many other cases. Some believed Christ and accepted him, while others rejected him.

LOVE.

Who of us has not proved the infusion of strength that comes when a loved and trusted friend takes hold with us, and the inspiration of his presence is felt through all we do? In a sense very much broader than that in which it was meant, the sentiment of the old song is true, "Tis love that make the world go 'round." How much power it puts into the doing of one's work to be doing it for the sake of some one, to have all that one undertakes glorified by that personal element. The Lord Jesus was so vital and strong in all that he did, because he did it all in the consciousness of the love of the Father; duty came to him glorified into the personal wish of one he loved above all. God has shown how highly he prizes this force of personal loyalty by revealing himself to men in one who could stand before them and add to the cold arguments of common sense, and the calm dictates of duty, the vivid appeal, "Do this for my sake."

THE ONE FOUNDATION.

What a marvelous pre-vision Paul had when he wrote that wonderful passage in I Corinthians 3 about the foundation and the superstructure of the Church. After all, we may comfort ourselves with the thought that the things we call modern and liberal have been known and preached, in one form or another, from the beginning of the history of the Church. Paul knew them face to face, as his epistles abundantly prove. And, in regard to minor differences or differences of statement, he was liberal enough. But when it came to essentials, and especially when it came to the doctrine of Christ, he unflinchingly faced the foe. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

NO OTHER NAME.

"There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" but the name of Jesus. Apart from Christianity we have nothing to depend upon. Without stopping to decide the question whether your Christian experiences have been genuine or not—you need not go into the rubbish of the past—if you give up Christianity you are gone.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, SEPTEMBER 11.

Endeavor Topic: How To Make the Most of Our Bibles. Psalm 19:7-14.

The Bible is the Word of God. On its pages God speaks to us, telling us the truth about many things we would not otherwise know anything about, and the things that are infinitely important for us to know about. He tells us that we have immortal souls, that we may be saved from sin and be made holy and happy through all eternity through the saving grace of his dear Son, our Savior. He tells us of himself, our Creator, and Heavenly Father. He tells us of the Holy Spirit who purifies the heart and leads into the experiences of Christian life. All of this, told over and over again in many ways, with much else of high and blessed importance, should arouse us all to make much of the Bible, the message of God to our souls.

We shall make the most of it, for one thing, if we always remember what it is. A soldier, out on the front, who receives a letter from his mother, treats it with great regard. He reads it over and over. He carries it carefully next to his heart. He thinks, many times, of the loving words she speaks to him. He tells his friends that he has heard from his mother, repeats some of the words she wrote to him, and talks about the home and the loved ones there. So the Christian reads the Bible as a message from his Heavenly Father, carefully and lovingly; reads it over and over again; marks some of its passages; thinks over its words; tells his friends about it; talks to them about it; and thinks and talks of the home that it describes and to which some day he is going.

In order to make the most of the Bible we must become acquainted with its contents, so as to know what it contains. If one has a farm given to him he will not be contented to put the deed away and never become acquainted with the farm itself. It is not enough to own it. One will want to know all about it. He will walk all over the farm, see its fields, one by one, its woods, its valleys, its hillsides, its springs, its buildings and all its boundary lines. So with the Bible. We will read all its books and chapters and verses. We shall become acquainted with all its writers, and with all the men and women who are there described. We shall see how they served God and were useful, and, alas, how many of them sinned and had sorrowful and darkened lives. But through it all we shall find how God has wonderful love and patience, and is able and willing to save us from all our troubles and sins.

If we would make the most of our Bible we will commit to memory many of its precious passages. The Psalmist said: "Thy Word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." The Bible is called "The Sword of the Spirit," and we should know so much of it that we shall always have in reach many of its wonderful and precious words, so that we may use them as one uses a sword that is always within reach.

But we can not make the most of the Bible unless, in sincere and personal faith, we take Jesus Christ, the Savior there revealed, to be our own personal Lord and Savior. We must not fail here. Christ is the Living Word of God; the Bible being the Written Word of God. If we take him we are rich and happy and saved to all eternity. This Nineteenth Psalm is a great expression of the value and glory of the Scriptures. The great, central truth of the Psalm is that the Law of the Lord is "perfect," "converting the soul." Let it do that for our own souls.

PRAYER MEETING

SEPTEMBER 7.

CONCERT OF PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.
INDIA.

India is one of our intensely interesting countries. A large part of our work is being done there. The country is under English control and many English missionaries are there. Of course, there, as elsewhere, missionary work has been largely disturbed by the war, but the power of God is ever manifest in winning the hearts of men. The last year has had interruptions, but there have been many encouraging manifestations of divine grace.

Our Presbyterian missions were started in India in an early day. The Punjab work goes back to 1834, that in Northern India to 1836, and that of Western India to 1858. We have connected with our 31 stations 144 outstations. We have at this present time a total of 235 missionaries on the ground, of whom 64 are ordained ministers, 9 are male medical missionaries and 6 are female physicians, 14 men who are neither physicians nor ministers, 65 single women and 77 wives. The native force is 1,290, of whom 63 are ordained and 163 are unordained preachers, the others being teachers and Bible readers. There are 774 unorganized congregations, and 77 organized churches, in which there are 10,860 communicants, of whom 1,265 were added during the year. There are 72,150 adherents, many of whom are anxious to become communicants. In the 8 hospitals and 17 dispensaries there have been 235,206 individual patients, so that many persons are being reached through these means.

What is known as the Punjab Mission was the earliest to be planted. It was before the organization of the present Foreign Board, and while the Western Foreign Missionary Society was still in existence, that Rev. John C. Lowrie and Rev. William Reed, with their wives, were sent to India to lay the foundations of the work which the Presbyterian Church had resolved to carry out in that land. Leaving America in May, 1833, they reached Calcutta in October of the same year, and after getting the best information available, they decided to begin work at Ludhiana, then a frontier town of the Northwest Provinces. Rev. John C. Lowrie arrived in the city to begin work in November, 1834, and the first reinforcements came in December, 1835. From the first energetic evangelistic work has been carried on, both in the city and in the great outlying district.

The beginning of the North India Mission was by Rev. James McEwen, who was led providentially to start work in 1836 at Allahabad. In 1902 a college department was opened in connection with the Boys' High School at this station, which has become the Ewing Christian College, an institution whose development has exceeded the fondest hopes of its founders. Other conspicuous features of the work of the station have been the Sara Steward Hospital for Women and the boarding school for Christian girls.

The Western India Mission was formerly known as the Kolhapur Mission. Its field lies about one hundred miles south of Bombay. It was opened by Rev. Royal G. Wilder in December, 1852. In 1870 the mission was taken under the care of our Presbyterian Board.

"Why did you come to Westminster College?"

For three years this question has been asked every student attending Westminster. The following reasons are arranged in the order indicated by the largest number of answers:

1. Because it is a men's college and not co-educational.

(Westminster is the only men's College in Missouri.)

2. Because it is a college instead of a university.

(This means close friendships, a feeling of unity, opportunity to participate in student activities, more attention from the professors—as a rule no class larger than thirty.)

3. Because of the persuasion of a student or former student.

(Westminster men are loyal.)

4. Because of the moral and religious ideals of Westminster and Fulton.

(Westminster is a Christian college. Fulton is a clean, church going town.)

OUR EXCHANGES

HIGH COST.

The doctor who recommends pleasant thoughts while eating should edit the food prices.—Washington Post.

COMING FACTS?

A Philadelphia paper states that Baptists and Lutherans would probably be slowest to accept the Lambeth Proposals for Church Unity. We agree, but if it takes the Presbyterians fifty years and the Methodists sixty, and the Baptists and Lutherans are the slowest, at what rate is Church Unity traveling? One thing we can say: If the Lambeth Proposals unite the Anglican, Greek and Roman communions, and a move toward uniting Church and State follows, as it would, it will take Presbyterianism about five minutes to line up against Hierarchy.—Lutheran.

NATIONAL GREATNESS.

A country is not made great by the number of square miles it contains, but by the number of square people it contains.—Dayton News.

GIVEN AN INCH, TAKEN AN ELL.

The Federal Council of Churches believes in progress. Several years ago it was a mere advisory body. Its latest move is to turn itself into a working organization, raising funds and pushing forward the work in home and foreign fields. It duplicates the same work in the various churches constituting the Council, which must lead to confusion, if not conflict.

This is one of the results of that mania for organization which has laid hold upon the religious world. Whether this mania is due to a discontent with the old methods of our forefathers, or to a desire to create new offices for men who dread the hardships of the ministry, we can not say. We only know that every phase of church work has to be organized, and then when the organization is perfected, it must have something to do which can only be provided by duplicating the work that the churches themselves are doing. We allowed the Council to start, and now it is getting beyond control. It is another proof that if you give an inch, and ell is taken.—Presbyterian Standard.

HERE'S AN OPTIMIST.

Somebody must always be putting joy in life, or there would not be so much for other people to take out.—Indianapolis News.

BACK TO FIRST PRINCIPLES.

The latest device suggested for securing permanent full attendance at church is congregational worship. The idea came to a city man, who had long lost interest, but was attracted to a country church. It was the music that caught and held him. The old-time hymns of his boyhood days. And the people, the church members, the congregation composed the choir. These were songs of worship, written by worshipful men and women, now being sung by worshipful men and women, not for pay but for devotion, not as art but as worship.—Commercial Tribune.

THINGS TO FORGET.

If you would increase happiness forget your neighbor's faults. Forget all the slander you ever heard. Forget the fault-finding and give but little thought to the cause which provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends, and only remember the good points which make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels or histories you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem worse than they are. Blot out as far as possible all the disagreeables of life. They will come, but will only grow larger when you remember them, and the constant thought of the acts of meanness—or worse still, malice—will tend to make you more familiar with them. Start out with a clean sheet today, and write upon it only those things which are lovely and lovable.—Claremont Herald.

THE MUSIC OF LIFE.

The music of life need not necessarily be voiced in words. It may be a silent surrender to God where there is no verbal expression, a deed of love, a gentle word of comfort.

Talk about "the music of the spheres," the music of a saved soul excels it by far, for such a song echoes and re-echoes through the dome of heaven. It is a new song that only he can sing that has been washed in the blood of the lamb. The soul must be properly attuned in order to sing it. The Israelites in exile could not sing at the waters of Babylon because their souls had been put out of tune by their disobedience and heart wanderings from God. Disobedience to God will always paralyze the song of the soul. The music gradually dies out, and the soul is like a barren waste—yea, a howling wilderness. The song of the soul is divinely inspired and directed.—Evangelical Messenger.

A STRANGER AT THE DOOR.

BY LOUIS REICHOLD.

In Holman Hunt's great picture called, "The Light of the World," we see one with a patient and gentle face, standing in front of a big iron door, which is thickly covered with weeds and ivy-vine, as if not having been opened for ages. He holds in one hand the lamp of Truth and is girt with the priestly breastplate. He stands there with all patience and perseverance, knocking at the door. There is no answer, —but still he knocks. His face beams with yearning; his eyes express love and sympathy. The door is without a knob or latch on the outer side. It can only be opened from within.

Do you not see the meaning of it all? The blessed spirit of the Creator comes to our heart's door and patiently knocks and waits to be admitted. He can not enter unless we open up the door. The only latch is on the inner side.

GENERAL NEWS

AMERICAN-GERMAN PEACE TREATY RESIGNED.

The formal treaty of peace between the United States and Germany was signed last Thursday.

It puts into force the economic, reparations, military and various other provisions of the unratified Treaty of Versailles, but provides specifically that the United States shall not be bound by the covenant of the League of Nations or by other enumerated parts of the Versailles settlement.

The declarations of the peace resolution are reaffirmed in the treaty and it contains in addition, a blanket provision that any benefit which might accrue to this country under the Versailles pact is to be regarded as of full force.

Germany's renunciation of her overseas possessions jointly to the five big powers is reaffirmed, as are the military clauses of the Versailles Treaty, the sections relating to prisoners, reparations, finance, economic settlement, commerce and abrogation of all other existing treaties between the two countries.

In disassociating the United States from the League of Nations the document provides not only that this Government will not be bound by the covenant, but that no action of the league shall be considered as placing an obligation upon America.

The United States also stipulates that it will not be bound by the sections of the Versailles Treaty relating to the boundaries of Germany, to political readjustments in Europe, to the settlements affecting China, Siam, Liberia, Morocco, Egypt, Turkey, Bulgaria or Shantung, or to the establishment of an international labor organization.

In a State Department statement, issued to announce the signature of the treaty special mention was made of the reaffirmation of this Government's share in the renounced German overseas possessions, the statement declaring that this provision "confirms the right of the United States with respect to Yap and other former German overseas possessions upon an equality with the other Powers."

FORTY-THREE NAVAL MEN KILLED WHEN WORLD'S GREATEST AIRSHIP COLLAPSES.

Sixteen officers and men of the United States Navy and twenty-seven officers and men of the British Navy met death in the collapse of the great dirigible Z R-2 over the city of Hull, England, last Wednesday.

Only one of the Americans on board the ill-fated craft escaped.

The Z R-2, the world's largest dirigible, had been sold by the British government to the United States, and was making a test flight before being formally accepted by this government.

For a week or more there had been persistent reports that the Z R-2 was structurally weak, and that practically a rebuilding was necessary before attempting the seventy-two hour flight across the Atlantic.

IRISH PEACE STILL POSSIBLE.

According to a semi-official report from Dublin, the Dail Eireann Cabinet has replied to the letter which Premier David Lloyd George sent to Eamonn De Valera, Irish Republican leader, August 13. It was in this letter that the British Prime Minister informed Mr. De Valera that there could be no compromise on the question of the right of Ireland to secede and also attempted to make clear the conditions of the proposed peace settlement.

While the text of the Republican Cabinet's letter will not be made public until an agreed joint communique is issued, it is stated that it makes no mention of a republic, but enunciates the principle of independence and expresses aversion to a resumption of warfare. Thus observers consider there still is a wide opening for a continuation of the peace negotiations, a fact which has caused widespread satisfaction and a general feeling of optimism.

RAILROADS BEGINNING TO PICK UP.

Railroads of the country earned $174,662,167 during the six months ending in June, as against $31,721,706 during the same period last year, according to figures made public Aug. 25th by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The total revenues of the carriers for the period derived from operating their roads was $2,676,497,252, as against $2,741,587,192 for the same period last year. The expenses entailed in operating the roads for the six months was $2,365,747,874, as against $2,575,186,302 for the year before.

The operating expenses of the carriers for the period were 88.39 per cent of the operating revenues, as against 93.93 for the six months' period last year.

Panama has announced that it will immediately evacuate the Coto district which was given to Costa Rica by the White award.

The Malabar district of British India has been proclaimed to be a military area. This action was taken because of the serious aspect which rioting by the Moplahs, or Mohammedan inhabitants of Arab descent, had assumed in the district.

During the last week there have been several cases of lootings and burnings.

After a conference between General Bandholtz, representing the War Department, and mine union officials, during which General Bandholtz delivered an ultimatum, the march of three thousand armed miners across West Virginia was called off.

So far only one serious clash has occurred. That was when a small force of state police were attacked at Beach Creek, in Boone County.

Strike ballots on the acceptance or rejection of the $400,000,000 wage reduction recently ordered by the Railroad Labor Board were mailed last Sunday to the 409,000 members of the "Big Four" Brotherhoods and the Switchmen's Union of North America.

The ballots revealed a difference of opinion among the chief executives of the five organizations, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway Conductors and the Switchmen using a joint ballot, while the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen sent out a separate ballot.

Damage estimated at from $1,000,000, to $2,000,000 was caused by a fire which broke out on Army Pier 5 at the Government transportation station, Hoboken, last week. For a time the entire Hoboken water front was threatened.

Government officials claim to have unearthed a regularly organized gang of swindlers, operating through banks and brokerage offices, who have disposed of more than $15,000,000 worth of stolen securities and forged notes within the past year.

The new 56,000-ton liner Majestic, largest ship in the world, will be put into service on the New York-Southampton-Cherbourg run next spring, the International Mercantile Marine Company has announced.

The Majestic, which was to have been called the Bismarck by her original German owners, now is being finished at Hamburg. The giant craft, which is 2,000 tons larger than the Leviathan, and 10,000 tons larger than the Olympic, will carry a crew of 1,100 and have passenger accommodations for 4,100.

HOME AND FARM

NUT RECIPES.

Muffins.—Boil one quart of chestnuts until tender, remove the kernels and press through a colander. Add to this one teaspoon of salt, the yolks of two eggs whipped into half a cup of milk. Next stir in half a cup of flour containing one teaspoon of baking powder. Fold in the beaten white of the eggs and bake in pans.

Almond Cookies.—Two pounds of sugar, two pounds of almonds, blanched and chopped fine, one-half pound of citron, two tablespoons of cinnamon and the whites of nine eggs beaten to a froth. Stir well. Drop with a teaspoon onto paper and bake in a moderate oven.

Almond Pretzels.—Grate one-half sugar and the almonds until they become creamy. Thicken over a moderate fire. When cool, put on the kneading board, spread well with flour, make into rings. Sift granulated sugar over them and bake in buttered pans in a moderate oven.

Fried Almonds.—Twenty rounding tablespoons of flour, four tablespoons of butter, four rounding tablespoons of sugar, one-half teaspoon of salt, one tablespoon of vanilla, one-quarter of a pound of grated almonds. Stir together, roll, cut into almond shape and fry in hot oil. Drop into sugar mixed with cinnamon.

Spice Nut Cakes.—One cup of molasses, two cups of brown sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, one cup of nut meats, chopped fine, spice to taste and one teaspoon of soda dissolved in a little hot water. Mix in flour enough so that the ingredients will stir easily. Roll and cut in small cakes.

Hickory Nut Macaroons.—Mix one cup of hickory nut meats with one cup of sugar and one-half cup of flour. Drop in buttered tins.

Hickory Nut Kisses.—Whites of six eggs beaten to a stiff froth, one pound and one cup of powdered sugar, one cup of hickory nut meats chopped and a piece of citric acid the size of a pea. Drop in teaspoons on buttered pans and bake.

Hermits.—Three eggs and one-half cup of sugar, one cup of butter, one-half teaspoon of soda, a pinch of salt, nutmeg to cover a silver half-dollar, one and a half cups of seeded raisins, one pound of English walnuts, both chopped, and two and a half cups of flour. Drop from spoon and bake in quick oven.

PROMISES OF THE NEW GENERATION.

BY MARGARET STEEL HARD.

"Mrs. Scott promised to furnish sandwiches for the parish tea this afternoon. It's time to commence serving and she hasn't sent them; they say she's gone motoring with friends—what shall we do?"

I hurried across the street to make sandwiches of what available material I could find in the house, and I reflected upon Matilda Scott and her kind. What, after all, was the reason that not only she but many other women could not be depended upon to keep promises and carry their legitimate share of responsibility? As I looked out of the window the answer came.

Sally Brown was passing with her mother. Her shrill entreaty reached my ears.

"Mamma, let me have another candy!"

"No, Sally, you promised you'd not ask for another when I let you have the last one."

"Just one more, please, mamma!"

"No."

"Just one more, I'll not ask for another one, I promise."

"Well—just one more, then."

"Goody! One—or two."

How easily Sally slid out of that promise! It seemed a trivial thing, perhaps, and yet such small promises and their keeping form the foundation for conscientious girlhood and boyhood, womanhood and manhood. If children are to possess a sense of responsibility, they must be capable of responding to obligations, they must be trustworthy; and there is but one beginning offered for the development of these qualities, namely, the every-day occurrences in the life of the little child. It is a matter for eternal vigilance.

My mind slipped back to a call upon a young neighbor. It had not been a satisfactory call, due to the constant and unnecessary interruptions of the little daughter of the family.

"Sarah," her distressed mother pleaded, "you promised not to interrupt when mother had friends."

"Yes, but, mother, just get it for me this time."

"No, I must not be disturbed."

Sarah swung on her mother's chair, buzzed in her ear.

"Sarah!"

"Mother, just this time."

"Very well, just this time. Excuse me a moment, Mrs. —, while I get it for her."

Then I recall a supper party where the hostess excused herself at least six times during the meal to ascend to the nursery in answer to the demands of her small son; explaining, "He promised he wouldn't call; but I think he must want something."

Wearily I spread the last sandwich and prepared to go back to the Parish house. Matilda Scott was probably spinning along country roads and saying complacently, "I promised to furnish sandwiches for the Parish tea this afternoon, but when this delightful invitation came I never gave it another thought." And twelve to one her friend nodded without a shade of disapproval.—Ex.

THE INFLUENCE OF EXAMPLE.

BY HELENA WILSON.

Parenthood imposes both privilege and opportunity. Only to the extent that parents realize this, can they fulfill their obligations to their children. The personal character of the parent is a moral force; his example a silent teacher.

Because a child is trustful and impressionable, too great care can not be taken to surround him with the right environment. The influence of his home and associates is readily discovered by watching any child. Having few experiences of his own, he naturally imitates whatever he hears or sees. A certain little girl of ten had learned to courtsey when introduced to her elders. This form of salutation so impressed her little cousin of six that she immediately adopted it and within a week a younger sister and brother of two were attempting that accomplishment with more or less success.

It is generally through the indolence, negligence and sometimes ignorance of the parent that the child is not given the right start in life. Honesty, and exhaustless patience, keen insight and trustworthiness are necessary in the person who is responsible for his training.

The older child finds his ideals in the great characters of history and literature; to the young child, father, mother and other intimates are the ideal, the very embodiment of what is best, and he follows the pattern set before him.

If on one occasion a mother makes a promise and fulfills it and at another time and without any explanation to the child fails to do so, how can he be expected to trust her? If one day she punishes her child for carelessness or some other childish misdemeanor and the next day overlooks the same offense because she is busy with some important household task or is visiting with a neighbor, how can the child "believe in a truth and justice that are eternal"? Surely the same results should follow the same acts. Small wonder that some children are capricious or rebellious!

A certain mother who was much surprised that her small daughter lied very frequently and seemingly without cause, would have been filled with shame had she recalled how often she had said to her maid in the child's hearing, "Tell Mrs. Blank that I am not at home today."

The right home training is the greatest force for morality. The character of the individual is determined by the way in which it is begun.

SHALL BLACKBURN DENY THIS LAD ADMISSION?

He writes: "I was born the son of a poor carpenter, the seventh of ten children. It was the earnest desire of father that all of us be educated. He gave the oldest son an education, but was taken ill and after three years of sickness died. I was ten and after his death I started shifting for myself. By selling papers and working around I managed to finish the grades and one year of high school. But I had to help with the family support and all the education I have received since then is what I got in night school and what I learned through reading and using my eyes. However, I have never given up the idea of going back to school as soon as I possibly could and I am hoping that some way may be provided so that I may come to Blackburn, even if I can not pay the $160. I'll work all the harder and make it up somehow."

A DOUBLE EXPLANATION.

One morning a woman walked into a village grocery store with a majestic stride. It was easy to see, says The Argonaut, by the sternness of her expression, that she was, to state it with all possible mildness, somewhat disturbed.

"This," she sarcastically explained, throwing a package on the counter, "is the soap that does the washing itself. It's the soap that makes washing a pleasure. It's the soap—"

"That isn't soap, madam," interrupted the groceryman, examining the package. "Your little girl was in here yesterday, and she bought a half a pound of cheese and a half a pound of soap. Why, this is the cheese."

"U-m, that accounts for it!" said the woman, as the light of understanding began to glow. "I wondered all night what made the Welsh rarebit we had for supper taste so queer."—Ex.

Mental Arithmetic.—"Now, then Johnny," said his teacher, "if your father gave you seven cents and your mother gave you six and your uncle gave you four more, what would you have?"

Johnny wrinkled up his forehead and went into the silence for the space of several minutes.

"Come, come," said the teacher impatiently. "Surely you can solve a simple little problem like that."

"It ain't a simple problem at all," replied the boy. "I can't make up my mind whether I'd have an ice-cream soda or go to the movies."—New York Sun.

It was the first case ever tried in Stony Gulch, and the jury had sat for hours arguing and disputing. At last they straggled back, and the foreman, a tall mountaineer, expressed the general opinion. "We don't think he did it," he said slowly, "for we allow he wa'n't there; but we think he would of ef he'd had the chanst."—Youth's Companion.

"The absence of the price of a meal," replied Jones.—Knoxville Journal and Tribune.

Look to Jesus

BY FRED SCOTT SHEPARD.

Do temptations fierce assail?
Jesus Christ can victory give;
In his strength you can prevail;
Look to Jesus, then, and live.

In the fight with sin and wrong,
Human strength is all too frail;
In God's strength you may be strong;
Trust the power that can not fail.

Victory most certain is,
If the fight be rightly made;
Christ is yours and you are his;
Look to him; be not afraid.

Though the strife be fierce and long,
Comes a day when conflicts cease;
Then to sing the victor's song;
Then to know God's perfect peace.

SALVATION FROM SIN AND SINS.

It is stated that about nine hundred various diseases may be tabulated. It is a frightful statement. It would make a most formidable list. The very thought of it makes an ordinary mortal feel like keeping within call of a good physician constantly, since he is liable to attack by so many sorts of enemies.

But although the non-professional person might not know the names of these diseases, or know the remedies for them, there is one most effective form of resistance to be employed against them all; one most practical and efficient prophylactic, and that is good health. Let one maintain his health and vigor and he will ordinarily be able to meet and withstand all these various forms of attack. It matters not how many they may be, nor what their names may be, if he eats and drinks and sleeps and exercises and breathes in such a way that his physical health remains firm and vigorous, he may repel almost any number of threatening sicknesses. A fortress that is absolutely invincible can withstand five hundred attacking enemies with no more strain than is involved in keeping any one of them outside its gates. It is unconquerable by all as surely as by one.

There are many varieties of sin in the world to which our human nature is prone. It would be almost, or quite, impossible to catalogue them all. It would take a desperate, dark and horrid, list of nouns or adjectives to describe them all. A minister once announced that he would preach on a different sin each Sabbath evening, but after keeping at the series for almost two years he gave it up, saying that the list seemed to be growing longer all the time, instead of shortening or becoming exhausted.

But there is one condition in which one is able to resist and overcome all of them at once. It is the condition of salvation, or the saved life, into which one comes by believing in Jesus Christ and being born again by the Holy Spirit. Then one has new life, the life of God, in him from above, and is in spiritual grace to withstand sin, and all the forms of sin, or sins, of the flesh and the world and the devil, to which he may be tempted.

God does not undertake to catalogue or describe all the sins to which we are liable. He does, in the Ten Commandments, describe a few of the great, outstanding families or departments of transgression, but he tells us that they are all comprehended in one great sin, that of disobedience to the divine will, and that they will all be done away with if we come to possess the one spiritual grace of love, to God and to those about us. So if we have spiritual life and health we may be saved from all forms of sin, because then we have been saved from sin unto the everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Christ is our only Savior and our only hope. He takes away the sin of the world, by atoning for it and by saving individually all who believingly accept of him as the Savior. By taking away sin from us and out of us, he saves us from all the sins, or forms of sin. By giving us life, he gives us power to withstand all forms of diseases. Thanks unto him who enables us to overcome. Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

ENFORCEMENT OF THE LAW.

The address of United States Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty, in this city last Wednesday, before the American Bar Association, on the enforcement of prohibitory and all other laws, was a most heartening message, being a ringing appeal for law and order, and the assurance that as long as he is attorney-general "the law will be enforced by all the power possessed by the government." It had the right ring to it, and was delivered with a force that gave assurance that he meant every word of it. The cause of prohibition was strengthened by what he said, as it should be by every official of the United States.

General Daugherty was very plain in his words. He said, among other things, after insisting that it is the duty of the government to enforce every existing law:

"The government will endure on the rock of law enforcement; or it will perish in the quicksands of lawlessness.

"Those who do not believe in our government and the enforcement of our laws should go to a country which gives them their peculiar liberty.

"To those who come to our shores to take advantage of American opportunities it is becoming to wave the hands of welcome. But it is our duty to warn them to stay away unless they intend to observe our customs and obey our laws.

"My duty is clear. As long as I am the responsible head of the Department of Justice the law will be enforced with all the power possessed by the government which I am at liberty to call to my command."

Following this masterful address a report was made by Judge Charles A. Woods of South Carolina, Chairman of the Judicial Section of the Association, in which was said: "Commercial and social leaders who scoff at the federal prohibition law are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence, robbery and homicide. The people of the United States have undertaken to suppress the age-long evil of the liquor traffic. When, for the gratification of their appetites, lawyers, bankers, merchants and manufacturers, and social leaders, both men and women, scoff at this law, or any other law, they are aiding the cause of anarchy and promoting mob violence, robbery and homicide. They are sowing dragon's teeth and they need not be surprised when they find that no judicial or police authority can save our country from reaping the harvest."

It would be well for every one to take notice of this language. It is the truth. It was received with great applause by the Bar Association, made up of members of the Supreme Courts of the United States and of most of the states, of attorney-generals from many states, of United States Senators and of the leading lawyers of the whole nation. There was serious consideration given to the matter of the suppression of crime, especially in an address by United States Solicitor General Beck, and the emphatic expression was that disrespect for any law was a war on all law, and that the failure to obey and to enforce law was for the furtherance of anarchy. It is not in the province of any officer to choose what laws he will enforce, nor of any loyal citizen what laws he will obey. Most officers are trying to do their duty, but some are enforcing the law in such a way as to remind us of what Mr. Roosevelt said of "febleness as amounting to crime."

These addresses were published here in the daily papers. The people have had the privilege of reading them. Some people and some papers here have mocked at the prohibition law. They have scoffed at it in jokes and cartoons. It is an infamous shame. They have been fostering anarchy. Let them stop it. They know now what the leading men of the nation think about this. Let the daily papers, all of them, as the most of them do, stand up for law and order, against disloyalty and anarchy.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION.

A great many prominent lawyers were in Cincinnati last week, at the meeting of the American Bar Association. It was a notable gathering. Many of the most prominent men of the nation came together for the meeting which they seemed to think of with almost as high regard, and of as sacred importance and significance, as we do of our Church's General Assembly. Justices of Supreme Courts of nation and states, Federal and state judges, attorneys-general, United States Senators, and several high officials from England, Canada, Japan and other countries were in attendance. It was the greatest body of men here for many a day.

The impression of reverence and conscientiousness was made in all the meetings and by most of the addresses. The ancient traditions of the high standing of the profession, and of the need for high and unblemished character were often referred to. It was remarked by many that there was need for demanding and maintaining a high character, and that the profession was custodian, in high degree, of the morals of the nation and people. A solemn earnestness marked the utterances generally. Obviously they felt, each one, that dignity was demanded in such an imposing presence. But it was more than being on their good behavior. They left the impression that they wished to put all the people on their good behavior permanently.

Very gravely the fact was considered that we are in the very midst of an epidemic of crime, and that some people, who ought to know very much better, are disposed to be smart over the law-breaking, and join in with all the base elements in the encouragement of anarchy. Even lawyers themselves were rebuked, where any one of them was found making light of any restrictive law for the sake of the gratification of his own appetite. The editors that use their papers for jesting and sneering at any law were reprimanded as abetting crime.

If this same lofty spirit of responsibility could be carried by all these men into all the lines of business they represent, commercial, legislative and judicial, and if the same general views were to prevail among all whom they represent, our national and community life would be conducted on a high plane. And it is for this very purpose, of mutual uplift and stimulus, that these meetings are held. One comes to a high estimate of the dignity and moral strength and importance of the men who are associated in this great profession.

One of the leading addresses, dealing with moral influence and character of lawyers, contained this passage: "The great trouble with the new members of our bar is the loose scrutiny that is given to their moral character. In most states now high educational qualifications and a stiff examination on the various subjects of the law insure us against the admission to the bar of ignorant and unlearned men, but there is everywhere a laxity of test as to the moral character, an equally important qualification for any lawyer. Why not compel all students of the law, before coming up for examination for admission to the bar, to first pass a creditable examination on the Bible and Shakespeare? Such an examination would compel the reading and study of these great literary masterpieces, and certainly no man can read and understand the Bible without being benefited morally, and the same is true, although in a lesser degree, of Shakespeare. Therefore, it must be conceded that the moral character of those admitted to the bar should be more closely followed up both before and after admittance, and the biggest duty of bar organizations is insisting upon early and universal action on this important subject."

The general influence of the meeting of this Bar Association in our city has been good and uplifting. It should have a lasting effect in awakening a loftier patriotism and purer morality, a truer regard for law and order, and a more thoroughgoing determination to see that law is respected and enforced.

QUESTIONABLE QUESTIONS.

Controversialists sometimes disclose their views by their questions.

An editor, replying to a writer who deprecated the bad results of destructive criticism, asks: "What do you mean by destructive criticism?" We should suspect from the question that he himself is a destructive critic, even if we did not know that he holds views destructive to the evangelical doctrine of inspiration and of other doctrines which logically follow.

Now comes another editor with comments on the announced object of the newly formed "Christian Fundamentals League of America," which is to "encourage fellowship between the churches on the basis of Christian fundamentals." He asks: "What are Christian fundamentals?" and "Shall we look for them in men's heads or in their hearts?"

We can not believe that this editor denies the fundamental doctrines recognized by all evangelical churches. The probabilities are that he has been reading articles by certain modernists, who have tried to draw a new line and so divide evangelical believers.

The concerted attack on the fundamentalists in various denominational assemblies indicated this purpose, but their efforts failed. They could not name a pre-millennialist who advocated making pre-millennialism a fundamental. No fundamentalist leader or platform has announced any new fundamental or any variation from the universally recognized evangelical faith. The whole thing was worked up by rationalistic advocates, and would be amusing if it were not so deceptive and dangerous.

Our contemporary's questions are easily answered. "What are the Christian fundamentals?" Just what the evangelical churches have always recognized as necessary and essential articles of faith. "Where shall we look for them, in men's heads or hearts?" In both. Christianity considers and is for both head and heart, and indeed for the whole man and all the issues of life. The wose plan is to look for them in the Word of God, the "only infallible rule of faith and practice."

INVISIBLE RECORDS.

A singer whose voice has delighted thousands says that the most trying ordeal for a singer is singing into the phonograph. "You know," she said, "that the tiniest discord is going to be recorded and afterwards reproduced, perhaps, a thousand times. Naturally, one shrinks from having his name associated with that which is faulty and imperfect, and is to be handed down from generation to generation."

Just here comes in the thought that there are other records than that of the phonograph. Our words are recorded, not upon the sensitive wax plate, but upon a more delicate and susceptible instrument, not only in heaven, but on the minds of men here on earth.

The Scriptures have many suggestions as to our spoken words, and many exhortations to purity, kindness and charity in speech. Our words may meet us in our homes or business, or at the judgment seat. They may make or break our friendship here, or be testimony for or against us to all eternity.

THE "MEDICINAL BEER" BILL.

Congress did not entirely conclude the anti-beer bill before adjournment, and so the matter goes over for completion until the meeting a few weeks further on. But both houses agreed on the part opposing beer for medicinal purposes, which was the sum and substance of the bill. So, taking this sensible view of the case, Secretary Mellon announces that there will be no regulations issued permitting the use of beer for medicine. Furthermore, the brewers had enough sense to see that the case is against them, and have not asked for permits to manufacture beer for medicine. Still further, the general sense of the nation, as well as that of the medical profession, is that beer is not medicine, and that it is called for only by guzzlers. So, for the present, at least, the country is not to be "flooded" by beer. But every good citizen should be on guard against violations of the law, and should inform their Congressmen that they want the prohibitory laws upheld and strengthened.

A GREAT EARLY EVANGELIST.

Rev. E. P. Elcock, of Wichita, Kan., Stated Clerk of Wichita Presbytery, writing of the saintly evangelist, Edward Payson, for whom he was named, says: "What a mark that great and good man left behind him. There were five or six who bore his name in Princeton Seminary when I was there, 1869-72. I consider it an honor to have such a name. That name was bestowed on many sons for three generations. He was a saint in life and a power in service. He was one of the most winning and effective evangelists who ever preached in America." Tens of thousands were converted under his preaching. So great was his desire to impress all with the importance of the Gospel that, when he was about to die, he directed that a card should be placed on his breast in the coffin, bearing the words: "Remember the words that I spoke to you while I was yet with you," and thousands of persons read them and were reminded of his passion for preaching Jesus Christ. Any one who carries this name, as many do, should be impressed with the thought of the high ideals possessed by his parents in naming him for this devoted Christian evangelist.

If the whisky crowd imagines that, by persistently inciting the weak and vicious to trample on prohibition, they will be able to sweep it out of existence, they are greatly mistaken. This nation is not in the habit of giving up to rebels and anarchists, and will not do so in this case.

There should be much prayer by all Christian people for God's blessing on the Disarmament Conference, called for Nov. 11th, by President Harding. The hearts of men are in God's hands, and every Christian and every church should pray that God will dispose the world to shake off war and work for the things that make for peace.

No one in his senses expects responsible nations to throw away all their means for policing the world and restraining crime. We expect to have policemen on the streets of all our cities, but that is very different from every man carrying a pistol in his hip pocket, ready for a duel at the corner of every street. Nations should prevent disorders, but we do not need to spend ninety per cent of all our income on means for war.

When the nations get wise enough to get along without war, they can make the world a safer, more comfortable and better place in which to live, by spending on the arts of peace, that which is now worse than wasted in fighting.

We have taken occasion, when it seemed necessary and opportune, to call attention to the serious evils, in teaching and in practice, physical and spiritual, involved in Mary Eddyism, sometimes called "Christian Science." Usually we are at once besought by its committees and readers to print something showing that we were wrong in what we said. Of course the request, or demand, is refused. Our paper is printed, not for the defense of error, but for the clear and simple statement of Biblical truth.

Extremes meet on many occasions, as, for instance, in the great National Bar Association held in this city last week. During the great debate on higher educational demands for young men entering the profession, led by Elihu Root, and participated in by Chief Justice Taft, a young Kentucky lawyer spoke who said he had practiced law for thirteen years, but had never attended a law-school and had never been in any law office excepting his own. Yet he manifested conscientiousness, intelligence and considerable knowledge of law. All men do not need to be great in order to be good and useful.

CLOSING HYMN FOR COMMUNION.

BY REV. S. M. MORTON, D.D.

As thy table we are leaving,
May we, Lord, thy grace receiving,
Go forth, strong in faith, believing
Thou can'st keep as well as save.

Thou, our Bread of Life, art feeding
Us, who thee are ever needing;
Thy love and mercy far exceeding
All that unbelievers have.

Keep us, lest in times of sorrow,
Lacking faith for the to-morrow,
We should needless trouble borrow,
Doubting thy great power to save.

With thy love our souls be filling,
Boundless trust in us instilling,
Brave to do, to die be willing,
Conquerors over death and grave.

GREAT BIBLE CHAPTERS.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

ABRAHAM'S PRAYER FOR THE SODOMITES.

(Gen. 19: 24, 25.)

"Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimstone and fire from the Lord out of heaven; and he overthrew those cities, and all the plain, and all the inhabitants of the cities, and that which grew upon the ground."

A whole city would have been spared for the sake of ten righteous men. Here we see a great principle in the government of God. We are sparing others, or are being spared for their sakes. It may be your little child that is keeping the cloud of wrath from bursting upon your wicked house. Even now you may be getting the benefit of prayers your mother prayed long ago. The righteous man has to suffer many disadvantages on account of the presence of the wicked, whereas the wicked man receives nothing but advantages from the presence of the man who is good. Is there, then, injustice with God in this particular? In no wise. For there is not a just man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not; and there is no man who is inherently and independently good: if you are now good, you were once dead in trespasses and sins; and then you were spared on account of the goodness of others. (Parker.)

A second remark: The inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed, and that by a direct act of God, and the narrative shows that it was because of their exceeding vileness and depravity. For their own good and for the good of the whole world we are justified in saying that that whole population received so severe a visitation of the retributive justice of Almighty God. In relation to another people, the Canaanites, who are ordered exterminated by order of Jehovah, the Book informs us:

"Thou shalt utterly destroy them—as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee: that they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods; so should ye sin against the Lord your God."

And Dr. R. A. Torrey adds:

"When one stops to think about the matter, that is, that the iniquity of any people should have become so full, their rebellion against God so strong and so universal, their moral corruption and debasement so utter and so pervasive, even down to babes just born, as to make such treatment absolutely necessary in the interest of humanity! But this was precisely the case with the nations in question. Not from the Bible alone do we learn how unfathomable were the depths of moral pollution to which these nations had sunken. They had become a moral cancer threatening the life of the whole human race. That cancer must be cut out in every fibre if the body was to be saved." ("Difficulties in the Bible," p. 47.)

A third remark: Every man and woman, every community, every nation, is under the piercing eye of God, who has said:

"His eyes behold, his eyelids try the children of men" (Psalm 11: 4).

"God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil" (Ecc. 12: 14).

"So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14: 12).

The Book often compares one individual or nation with another with respect to the opportunities they have enjoyed of knowing the Gospel. Speaking of the people of his own day, who enjoyed his presence, his teaching, his miracles, Jesus said:

"And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell; for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I say unto you that it shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee."

If the inhabitants of Capernaum were exalted in point of privilege over the Sodomites—and unquestionably they were—what shall we say of the people of the present day in all the lands of the earth who are as signally favored with Gospel light and knowledge as we are? (Matt. 11: 23, 24.)

As to our privileges of prayer and our knowledge of God through Christ; as to our opportunities of carrying the Gospel over the whole earth; as to the widely extended area covered today by the missionaries of the Cross at home and abroad; as to the wider dissemination of literature, the increase in the number of Bible schools, etc., how vast our opportunities, and how vast, therefore, our responsibilities! If Abraham prayed fervently for Sodom, surely our increased acquaintance with the wide world's needs should widen and deepen the scope of our prayers. Should it not? But listen to Rev. Andrew Murray:

"Throughout the Church there is a complaint of defeat. The Church has so little power over the masses, or the educated classes. Powerful conversions are comparatively rare. The fewness of holy, consecrated, spiritual Christians, devoted to the service of God and their fellow-men, is felt everywhere. The power of the Church for the preaching of the Gospel to the heathen is paralyzed by the scarcity of money and men. And all owing to the lack of the effectual prayer which brings the Holy Spirit in power, first on ministers and believers, then on missionaries and the heathen. Can we deny it that the lack of prayer is the sin on account of which God's presence and power are not more manifestly seen among us?" ("Ministry of Intercession," p. 73.)

We thank God for the spirit of Abraham which is the spirit of intercession; yes, the very spirit of Christ, who, in the days of his flesh, offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears. That was always the spirit of Hudson

Taylor, of whom Mr. William B. Doughty writes:

"As I speak I am in my thought, far away in China, traveling on a house-boat. There are in the boat, besides the Chinese crew, the Rev. and Mrs. J. Hudson Taylor and I. It is night, and, disturbed for some reason I can not sleep, but am lying awake in the darkness. In a little while I hear the striking of a match upon a box, and then I see, through the thin curtain, the flicker of a light. I know what it is. Mr. Taylor, the man who is not strong in his advancing years, and who ought to sleep rather than wake, is up and astir. Through the curtain I see him sitting, bending over the Word of God. Then presently I hear him pray. Through the hour, or possibly two hours, I hear the pleading voice, the escaping sigh. This man of God is interceding simply and specifically, but most of all is identifying himself with God and men, and this is the explanation of the choice of the midnight hour, the many words, and the sigh which amounts almost to a sob."

PHASES OF PROGRESS.

BY REV. CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD, D.D.

The moon can teach us hope as well as despair: it waxes as well as wanes, and the sun never loses sight of it and hold upon it. Our world must have its phases also, but it never gets away from the light and control of Christ. Society has a fluctuating welfare, but the purpose that God has purposed upon the whole earth and all history through Christ never halts on its way to a final and glorious outcome.

Men dispute as to which end of the millennium will greet Christ: whether he will bring it or it will bring him, but all Christians can agree that it is coming and that he is going to reign. They can agree too upon the fact that God can use wanings as well as waxings, cataclysms as well as developments in bringing it in.

So everything can be made to serve Christian character and progress. The purpose of God progresses in individuals by the working together of all things for good. It is as true spiritually as it is physically that in our development we pass through embryonic phases. We can not put away childish things while we are still children. We can not take sound and strong doctrinal positions while we are yet babes in Christ. We have to struggle with law in our spiritual youth before we learn the meaning of grace in our maturer experience. While we are always righteous by faith in Christ, yet we have to learn righteousness by that slow process of sanctification which is really the outgrowing of our selfish selves and practices.

We expect too much of people at first. We mistake struggle for perversity. We too easily despair of people, nations and the world. Looking out upon the world and the world of history, the Lord of it all said: "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." Contemplating the divine love and resources, he bade us never to despair.

What changes are possible! From raw material comes fine characters; from crude stuff, refined product; from weak ability, effective power. Look at the pictures that were taken of us when we were young. Read over some of your early compositions and sermons. Compare early efforts with the easy force of today. Consider how many follies and sins have been left forever behind. Think how many sinners have got as far as the dying thief, who was crucified with Christ justly and yet obtained an entrance into paradise.

The sun is bigger, brighter and more powerful than the world. Christ is of infinite patience and meekness, but there is no weakness in him. He has his eye on results that he is going to reach; results so great and glorious that we can not conceive of them. All history must serve them. We, too, can be caught in their net, surrendering to their spell. Then we gravitate upward, whatever may seek to hold us down.

Now are we the children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus. Truly it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but it will. We shall be like him. Further on than that no thought can reach. That will be enough to satisfy God. Even God can ask no more than that. Through all the strange phases of life and history we are on our way to powerful, incorruptible, glorious and everlasting life. There is a lot of strength and comfort in that thought in the dark of the moon!

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

One of the unpleasant features of a vacation is that it ends. And when it does end, it ends by giving one a shock at the office when he returns. I have no shock absorber and, therefore, got the full force of this one which came to me on my return on Aug. 29. I notice that others have written of the Summer Assemblies at Ovoca, Tenn., and Hollister, Mo., which it was my privilege to attend. To me the great uplift is fellowship, of which there is far too little in our modern life. The fellowship at Ovoca was delightful to me, not only because of friendships made but especially of friendships renewed. Here I met men and women who are heroes and heroines in the warfare of the kingdom.

Conferences are over and our faces are to the future. The men on the field in our home land have been faithful. The reports that come from our superintendents speak of the lack of men on the field, for the most part, but here is a note from one which is very encouraging. He says: "Our work is thus in pretty good shape, with vacancies only at three places and with men to secure for two others in the fall, if the summer student work on these fields proves as satisfactory as it now seems to be." This comes from one of our smaller synods.

One of our superintendents sends liberal quotations from one of our home missionaries who went from the seminary to a very difficult field, and who said when he went that he wanted one of the hardest fields in the Church: "I am not always in a position to get a horse whenever I need one. Two weeks ago when I was ready to start for ——— I found I could not get the horse. As a result, I could not get to ——— on time; so I had preaching here in ———, and then walked to ——— in the afternoon. I left here at 5:15 and reached the church at 7:45. The distance is more than ten miles, and mostly uphill. They tell me it was the fastest time ever walked to that place. After the sermon I walked back again, arriving here at 12:45 a. m. Coming back I could not make the same time, since it was black as coal. It was a day's work. I told them I would come back the next week. So last Sunday I rode twenty-two miles and walked eleven, besides the other things. You may ask, why did I not stay in ——— that Sabbath night. It was because the next day was the Fourth, and since I was to make the patriotic address, I had to be there a little early."

This is a rather long quotation, but the letter is much longer and exceedingly interesting. In this letter this missionary tells of a man who had not been to church in twenty years, but came out to prayer meeting, where there were thirty-three people present, and this old man, hardened in sin, promised to be regular in his attendance at service. I do not see why any one should say the pioneer work of the Church of God is done, when right here in our own country we have communities like this, where there are people like this man to whom the missionary refers.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY S. J. FISHER, D.D.

"Like doves to their windows," the pastors of this region are returning to church and pulpit, all, we trust, recreated physically and with enlarged courage and spiritual power. Some will find an empty place in a pew, a worker called up higher, a family in the forest shadow to whom he can bring the consolations of God. Thus from the Edgewood Church an elder and Sabbath-school superintendent loosed his cables, as Paul phrased it, last week, and set sail for the desired haven above, and Pastor Cameron returns to miss the cheer and light and example of Elder Craig, whose sun has gone down while it is yet day.

Pastor-Emeritus W. O. Campbell, D.D., of Sewickley, was suddenly called home from his summer sojourn at Muskoka to bury his only son.

The pastor of Sewickley Church, Rev. Dr. O. D. Odell, has left for a three weeks' vacation in September, having remained at home during the summer.

During September the pulpit of the Third Church will be supplied by Prof. W. R. Farmer, D.D., it being the expectation that Pastor McEwan will then return from his Meadville farm, bronzed and engirthed with the muscle of Western Pennsylvania.

On Sept. 4, Rev. C. S. McClelland, D.D., participated in the centennial of Bethel Church, Salineville, O., of which Rev. James S. Colton is the pastor. Dr. McClelland is the oldest living ex-pastor, having followed Rev. Robert Hays, whose pastorate extended over thirty-four years.

We note with interest the celebration at Washington, Pa., of the ninetieth birthday of Mrs. Martha Stevenson, the mother of President J. Ross Stevenson, D.D., of Princeton Theological Seminary, and Rev. Thomas J. Stevenson, D.D., of Stirling, N. J., who were present to show that the ninety years had a rich fruit.

The Presbyterian Hospital of this city is preparing a special circular descriptive of its work and needs, preparatory to a campaign to raise funds for its ordinary expenses over and above the other income. This has become necessary by the decision that the state legislature can make no appropriation for any sectarian institution. In the justice of this decision we must all acquiesce, unless we are content to see the Roman Catholic institutions favored and aided out of all proportion and fairness, as they have been.

Providence and presbytery permitting, the pastor-elect of the Second Church, Wilkesburg, Rev. Hugh Leith, D.D., will be installed in October, as he begins his ministry Oct. 9.

As the Roman Catholics are making an effort to create favorable public opinion concerning their tenets, and as a Roman Catholic Bible Congress was held in Cambridge, England, in August, Rev. D. G. G. Coulton, of Cambridgeshire, a scholar of the English Church, has been moved to publish a number of historical notes on the attitude of the Roman Church toward Biblical study. Despite the errors and misstatements made by Cardinal Gosquet, who defended the Roman Church, Dr. Coulton shows that the medieval church strictly forbade laymen to read the Bible in the vernacular. As another says: "Miss Deanesly, in her masterly work on The Lollard Bible, has proved this once for all. Dr. Coulton is severe upon Cardinal Gosquet, of whom he says, 'He has habitually employed literary methods which can not be alleged, I believe, against any other living historian in the civilized world.' The trouble with writers like Gosquet, and the editors of modern Roman Catholic papers, is they are obsessed with the Jesuit theory of end and means, and practice sophistry for reasoning. There are some signs of progress since in the evangelical of Pope Benedict, Sept. 15, 1920, he exhorts the faithful to read the Bible daily and assiduously, and he commends the Roman Catholic societies which are circulating the New Testament." We note this with pleasure, but it is doubtful if the adherents of that Church in South and Central America will be moved to cease the burning of Bibles circulated by Protestant missionaries and societies.

CLEVELAND LETTER.

BY REV. GEORGE A. MACKINTOSH, D.D.

Rev Charles T. Darling, the new pastor of the Boulevard Church, preached last Sabbath for the first time. He comes from Fort Collins, Colorado, and is the successor of Rev. Charles T. Shaw, who went to the Woodlawn Park Church of Chicago in May.

More than one thousand persons have enrolled for religious training in the four night schools of the Cleveland Sabbath-School Association. Bible study and pedagogy are to be taught. "The Significance and Teaching Value of the Old Testament," "The Teacher," "Training the Devotional Life," and "Training World Christians" are the text books to be used. The thirteenth annual session of the schools will begin this month.

Glenville Church was supplied last Sabbath by Rev. William Houston, D.D., University pastor of the Ohio State University. Mr. Augustus Nash, Religious Director of the Y. M. C. A., spoke at the Bolton Church last Sabbath morning.

Rev. Alexander McGaffin, D.D., one of the pastors of the Church of the Covenant, after an illness of several months, was able to preach last Sabbath and was cordially welcomed by his people. Rev. A. B. Meldrum, D.D., pastor of the Old Stone Church, was in his pulpit last Sabbath after his two months' vacation.

Many of our pastors preached Labor Day sermons on Sabbath in accordance with the request of the Commission on Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ. "The Responsibility of the Church in Industry" was the general subject for discussion and pastors endeavored to apply the teachings of religion to present day social and economic questions.

The pastors of the churches affiliated with the Federated Churches organization are to spend a full day in prayer and conference at the country home of Mr. F. W. Ramsay, at Gates Mill, on Sept. 15th.

COLUMBUS LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM ANDREW PERRINS, D.D.

Professor Francis Greenwood Peabody, in one of his famous college chapel addresses, refers to a papyrus fragment, discovered on the Nile of 1887, which contains this attractive sentence: "Jesus says: Smite the rock and thou shalt find me; cleave the wood and there am I." Then the professor follows with this statement: "The quarryman driving his drill under the hot Eastern sun, finds his Master looking up at him from the task well done; and the carpenter, at his bench, fitting the joints of his work true to his pattern, meets the Lord Jesus Christ as though in the carpenter's shop at Nazareth." The thought of Professor Peabody found a large place in the Labor Day discourses of the Columbus pulpits, as the day was largely observed by the ministers; many of them taking the following topics: "Jesus and the Workingman," "Religion and Industry," "Religion's Vision for the Worker," "The Church and Labor," "The Church and the Laboring Man."

All the Presbyterian ministers are back in their pulpits. The Ministers' Association will begin its weekly meetings next Monday. Some of the topics early on the program for the year are as follows: "Perils and Advantages of the Long Pastorate," "The Sermon; Its Preparation and Delivery," "Week-Day Religious Education," "Developing a Spiritual Church."

Ninety soldiers, dead, from overseas, were received in Columbus last week, with solemn and impressive services, conducted by Rev. B. F. Brundage, D.D., pastor of the First Church, and chaplain of the Franklin Post of the American Legion.

Rev. William Houston, D.D., University Pastor, has found it necessary to open a new office, with a young lady as an assistant, to meet the increasing demands of the thousands of students coming to the Ohio State University. Dr. Houston has prepared a very helpful "Letter" to be sent to all the freshmen. Other activities have been started to interest the Presbyterian young people coming to our State institution this year.

One of the city papers contained excellent photographs of Dr. W. M. Hindman, pastor of the Northminster Church, his noble father, a consecrated minister under the Home Board, also the two sons, Rev. William B. Hindman, Bloomington, Ill., and Rev. Ralph B. Hindman, Portage, Wis. An eloquent answer to the appeal for men in the Christian ministry.

IOWA LETTER.

BY REV. W. H. JORDAN.

Rev. Paul Shedd and wife sailed from New York with twenty-five other missionaries, Aug. 17th. They go to Persia. Their trip takes six weeks. On board were many Jews returning to Palestine, also $100,000 worth of farm machinery donated for Palestine by the Jews in America. Mr. Shedd is a Coe College and an Omaha Seminary graduate, a son of Rev. F. H. Shedd, of Bronson, Iowa.

Rev. William Thompson, for the past three years pastor at Anderson, where he has done an excellent work, has resigned. He has been assisting Rev. J. W. Todd in meetings in California Junction. Mr. Todd is working with Council Bluff Presbytery, at present having closed his labors at Sidney, Iowa.

The Cedar Falls Church, Rev. M. K. W. Heicher, pastor, announces the Presbyterian School of Christian Leadership, which has been organized to serve the Presbyterian students at the State Teachers' College at Cedar Falls. While in many states there are several teachers' colleges, in Iowa there is but one. This throws a great responsibility upon the local church, and it is a matter of real gratification that the pastor and his people are alert to the situation and are seeking to cope with it. Their success will depend in no small measure upon the cooperation of parents and others who notify them of Presbyterian attendance. The General Board of Education co-operates with the church in this effort. Faculties of our state and church institutions can not feel too great a responsibility to return our boys and girls earnest Christians and efficient Christian workers.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

McCormick Theological Seminary will open on Tuesday, Sept. 13th, at 10 a. m. President James G. K. McClure will deliver the opening address. His theme is, "The Victorious Jesus." The friends as well as the alumni of the Seminary are cordially invited to attend these exercises in the chapel of the Seminary.

Chaplain U. S. A., James Lincoln Griffes, who is stationed at Ft. Sheridan, has recently come into an additional honor when he received the rank of Lieutenant Colonel. He is now one of nine Lieutenant Colonel chaplains. There is but one Colonel in the service and he is John T. Axton, who is chief of the army chaplains. Lieutenant Colonel Griffes is a member of Chicago Presbytery, a graduate of McCormick Theological Seminary and Blackburn College. He graduated with the class of 1891 from the Seminary. He held pastorates in Kansas and in Indiana before entering the army as chaplain. He has served in Mexico, the Philippines, in China and in France in the World War. Chicago Presbytery extends its heartiest congratulations and acknowledges its honor of having one of its members thus exalted in military honors after his long term of faithful service.

Rev. Willard H. Robinson, Jr., has been elected to the presidency of Whitworth College, located at Spokane, Wash. He has been teaching English Bible in Whitworth for several years. Before that he taught in Blackburn College at Carlinville, Ill. He is a graduate of McCormick Theological Seminary of the class of 1913. His father, Dr. Willard H. Robinson, is now pastor-emeritus of the Englewood Church, and his brother, Benjamin W., is a professor in Chicago Theological Seminary, Congregational, now affiliated with the University of Chicago.

Rev. Samuel Johnson, who has been taking a post-graduate year at McCormick Theological Seminary, has accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Piper City, Illinois.

Rev. Alfred T. Cory, after three years' pastorate at Peotone, has resigned to accept the pastorate of a community church at Emerado, North Dakota, in the Presbytery of Pembina. At an adjourned meeting of Chicago Presbytery, held in the Peotone Church, Aug. 15th, Mr. Cory was released from Peotone and dismissed to the Presbytery of Pembina. The community of the church life, with educational facilities for the children, were attractions strong enough to draw Mr. Cory from his very pleasant and successful pastorate with the Peotone Church. He will be followed by the prayers of his Chicago brethren.

Announcement has been made of a very substantial addition to the musical service of the Old First Church, of which Dr. William Chalmers Covert is pastor. A new pipe organ will be installed during the winter at a cost of $25,000, of four manuals with an echo organ. The First Church enjoys the distinction of having two of the foremost musicians of the city, in charge of its musical service in the persons of Messrs. Philo A. Otis and Francis S. Moore, each of whom has been in constant service with the First Church for more than twenty-five years. These two leaders, Mr. Otis, choir leader, and Mr. Moore, organist, are responsible for the acquisition of the new organ.

Rev. William F. Weir, D.D., secretary of the Assembly Committee on Men's Work, supplied the Hyde Park Church pulpit one Sabbath in August. The press announced Dr. Weir as a resident of Wooster, Ohio. He has recently moved, however, to Evanston, Ill.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

As most of the pastors have not returned from their vacations, "Labor Sabbath" was not generally observed in the New York churches. However, in St. Nicholas Collegiate Reformed Church, of which Dr. Malcolm J. MacLeod is pastor, Rev. Dr. Charles R. Brown, of Yale Divinity School, preached on "The Message of the Carpenter to Men Who Toil."

In the Marple Collegiate Reformed Church, Rev. Dr. David J. Burrell, pastor, Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, preached morning and evening, his topics being, "The Five Most Successful Men in the Republic" and "The Six Hundredth Anniversary of Dante." At the Fort Washington Presbyterian Church, Dr. John McNeill, pastor, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of London, preached. Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, evangelistic secretary of the Federation of Churches of Christ in America, preached at the West End Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. A. E. Keigwin, pastor.

Rev. Dr. Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, and Prof. E. L. Goonaskara, of India, were the speakers last Sabbath at the Tent Evangel. Dr. Straton and the man from India will speak every night this week. The latter told the story of his conversion from Buddhism to Christianity.

At the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. John Hutton, of Glasgow, Scotland, was the preacher. Dr. Hutton is a very strong and practical preacher.

Rev. E. A. Corbett, a Wall Street evangelist, not only writes his own tracts, but hands them out, and with the tracts he gives to those who are destitute, beans and coffee. At the Bowery Mission and at other missions the number of the unemployed who have to be fed is increasing at an alarming rate. It is noted that the men in the bread line are neither Jews nor Italians. They are usually those who have never learned anything but manual labor. The seamen are the worst sufferers, because the ships, so many of them, are idle at anchor.

The supplies for the relief of starving Russia are piled up on the docks in great quantities. Col. W. N. Haskell, in charge of the supplies, sailed Saturday with his assistants on the Olympic.

Faith Presbyterian Church, in the Bronx, Rev. R. F. Jenney, pastor, is active and useful every day in the week. It is distinctly a workingman's church. Last year 101 members were received.

The Stony Brook people, of whom Rev. Dr. J. F. Carson, pastor of Central Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, is the leader, have bought a large tract of land upon which they will erect a Girls' School, the counterpart of the Boys' School. Dr. Carson, with Rev. Dr. Ford C. Ottman, president of the Board of Church Election, will, this winter, take a trip to the Orient, returning in the spring.

The other day, Sept. 1st, two Greek ships raced from quarantine across New York Bay to Ellis Island, each bearing a large company of Greeks anxious to be in time to be counted in the quota of their countrymen allowed to enter the Port during September. When the quota was filled the remaining immigrants were to be carried by the losing ship back to their native land, and the best they could do would be to try it over again, hoping next time to win the race.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

Some members of the Central Church, Princeton, Ky., have given the church some nice furniture. One family put in a set of pulpit chairs and another member put in a beautiful pulpit. The old furniture was sold at a moderate price to the Kuttawa Church. Miss McLin, a member of this church, was buried a few days ago. Her loss will be felt severely. The Central Church has just purchased fifty copies of the large Church Hymnal. Mr. Claycombe begins his seventh year with this church Sept. 1st. All the organizations of the church are in good condition.

The writer has just closed a meeting at Ebenezer, in Green County, Ky. The meeting lasted something over two weeks. It was a great meeting. This country church has a very large house, with a large gallery in the rear. Sometimes the house would hold but little over half the crowd. It was estimated that some nights there were eight hundred present. There were twelve confessions and ten additions to the church. This does not seem large as we commonly measure meetings, and yet it was a great meeting. First, because of the conscious presence and power of the Holy Spirit in every service. Those who attended regularly will testify to this fact. Second, every child and member of the families of the church, old enough to be consciously responsible, as far as the writer knows, was saved except one young man, and he was deeply impressed. Third, the church was organized for better service. Rev. L. B. Hart, Ph.D., is pastor. He is a great pastor as well as an excellent preacher. And Mrs. Hart is truly a consecrated Christian lady, thoroughly competent in every respect, having taken training in the Moody Bible School, and one of the most indefatigable Christian workers the writer has ever seen. Dr. Hart lives in Greensburg and his wife does a similar work there, and Ebenezer is six miles from Greensburg. The free-will offering for the evangelist was $124,101.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

The General Assembly of 1920 appointed 130 delegates to the World's Presbyterian Alliance, which convenes in Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 16-28. The writer is one of the delegates. During our absence all mail will be looked after and the work of the synod will be handled carefully.

On our recent visit to Elkins a committee was appointed to purchase new pulpit furniture. The Elkins and West Fork Churches form a fine group. We wish to correspond with some young man for this field.

Rev. W. T. Thurman, pastor at Piggott, reports a fine vacation in Texas. Mr. Thurman has his church well organized for the fall and winter campaign.

Rev. J. J. Tarleton, Little Rock Presbytery, recently held a meeting for Dr. S. M. Templeton, Locust Grove, Tex., with good results.

Rev. Peter Carnahan, of Bentonville.

now on the honorably retired roll of the Church, is eighty-three years old and his wife is eighty-one. Recently five of his six children spent a week in the old home. This aged couple is held in high esteem by all the townspeople, where they have spent the most of their lives.

Evangelist Lewis and his singer, Mr. Nixon, have just closed a fine meeting at Ratcliff. There were forty professions of faith. We have no church organization at Ratcliff, but may organize later on.

Dr. Lewis opened a meeting at Grannis on Aug. 31. The outlook is fine for a good meeting.

I spent Sabbath, Aug. 28, with the West Fork Church, and deep interest was manifested. Every one spoke highly of the fine meeting recently held there by Dr. Lewis.

Since the resignation of Rev. V. K. Aubrey at Ozark, the elders of the church have provided for regular worship on the Sabbath. An elder takes charge and then the Woman's Missionary Society or the young people alternate in conducting services.

Churches should not forget to send in as soon as possible at least one-half of the budget for the various Boards. Our Home Mission Board is in need of the money now, and I am sure this is true of all the Boards of the Church.

EAST TENNESSEE NOTES.

BY REV. ROBERT I. GAMON, D.D.

A feature of the services at Hebron Church Aug. 21 was a home-coming of many former members. The new pastor, Rev. Robert Franklin, was reared in this community, but labored in Siam for the past ten years. Three new members were received at this service.

After a month's absence, Rev. J. S. Eakin, D.D., Rev. J. H. Miller, Rev. W. R. Dawson, D.D., Rev. R. M. Ramsay, Ph.D., and Horace C. Wilson, D.D., have returned to their pulpits.

Rev. J. C. March, of Crossville, has been appointed principal of the high school at Sevierville, and expects to remove at once to his new home. He will render assistance to the church at that place also.

The writer has accepted an invitation to conduct a brief series of services in the Co-hutta Church preceding the fall meeting of Chattanooga Presbytery on Sept. 13. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Wooten, received five members on a recent Sabbath.

The outlook in all our Presbyterian colleges in this part of the state is good for a large enrollment this year. The increased number of high schools makes it possible for more students to prepare for college without leaving home, and it is beginning to show in attendance on the higher institutions of learning.

The return of Rev. R. T. Brumbaugh, after a vacation in the East, means renewed activities in the Harris Street Church, Atlanta, Ga. It was the privilege of the writer to preach in this church Aug. 28. The evidences of a good year were to be seen on every hand. It is nothing more than the duty of Presbyterians moving from the North to this city of the South to visit the Harris Street Church before deciding on a church home. Moreover, it will be a great encouragement to pastor and people, if the names of members are sent by ministers to the pastor of Harris Street Church, when they go to Atlanta.

There is a movement on foot in Knoxville among the churches of all denominations to have a simultaneous evangelistic campaign perhaps during November.

Knoxville, Tenn.

CHRISTIAN AMERICANIZING.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbytery of Huntingdon is carrying on a good piece of work in Winburne, Pa., among twenty-five and more girls, from six to fourteen years of age, belonging to German, Slovak and Magyar families, under the direction of Miss June Merritt, member of the local church. The girls have been meeting at the church twice each week during the summer to sew and to receive Biblical instruction. On Wednesday, Aug. 24th, there were exhibited in the presence of fifty mothers and girls such articles as handkerchiefs, bureau scarfs, cushions, aprons, etc., handiwork of the girls of foreign parentage. Fourteen of the girls were neither absent nor tardy in August. Miss Merritt proposes to meet them once a week during the school year. This is Americanization and Christianization. The pastor, Rev. Benjamin Thomas, spent his vacation at Collegeville, Pa., and East Northampton, Mass.

CINCINNATI PRESBYTERIAL.

The executive meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Cincinnati Presbytery will be held Tuesday, Sept. 13, 10 a. m. to 1 p. m., in the First Presbyterian Church.

Emma H. Dickson.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. William B. Gage, of Aberdeen, S. D., was killed on Aug. 23, as was also his wife, when their automobile was struck by a train at Sterling, S. D. He had come to Aberdeen less than a year ago, and during the year over two hundred members had been received. He was a son of the late Rev. John L. Gage and brother of Rev. Dr. H. M. Gage, President of Coe College, and of Rev. Howard P. Gage, of Placentia, Cal. Mr. Gage served with distinction as a chaplain overseas, and for seven years was pastor at Washington C. H., O.

Rev. Paul J. W. Pestke, pastor of Ridgely Street Church, Baltimore, Md., died on July 16th, at the residence of his mother, Rochester, N. Y., in the forty-third year of his age. The funeral was conducted by Rev. G. B. F. Hollock, D.D., and the burial was at Rochester.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Cincinnati Presbytery will meet on Monday, Sept. 19, at 10 a. m. at Mohawk Church, Dr. Peter Robertson, pastor.

President Millis, of Hanover College, occupied the pulpit of the Mt. Auburn Church last Sabbath, and spoke to the great edification of the people on the subject of higher Christian education.

Dr. Leith, of Covington, has accepted the call to the Second Church of Wilkinsburg, Pa., and will soon take charge.

With very few exceptions the pastors have all returned and were in their pulpits last Sabbath, after their vacations.

Prof. W. A. Pabodie, a teacher in Cincinnati high schools for sixty-two years, and a member of the Wyoming Church since its organization, fifty years ago, died last Friday in the eighty-eighth year of his age.

Miss Lucille Sisson, assistant in the Church of the Covenant, is back after a year's absence, and was heartily welcomed last Sabbath by her Bible class of over one hundred girls.

Dr. J. V. Stephens, of Lane Seminary, preached in Westminster Church last Sabbath.

Dr. McKibbin, of Lane Seminary, preached last Sabbath for the Sixth Church.

Dr. Frank Marston occupied the pulpit of the Church of the Covenant last Sabbath.

During the absence of the pastor, Rev. E. H. Vail, on his vacation, the pulpit of Linn Street Church was supplied by Rev. A. J. Loeppert, Rev. W. S. Acomb and Rev. W. J. Hirst.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Rev. George C. Hitchcock, of Bowling Green, Mo., preached at the Tyler Place Church, on Sabbath, Aug. 28th.

Rev. W. H. Claggett, D.D., preached his closing sermons as vacation supply at the Sidney Street Church, on Sabbath, Aug. 28th.

The pulpit of Oak Hill Church was filled on Sabbath, Aug. 28th, by Rev. John L. Roemer, D.D., president of Lindenwood College.

Rev. William B. Lampe, D.D., has arrived home from a vacation spent with his family in Michigan, and resumed his pulpit at the West Church last Sabbath. Much of his trip was taken by motor.

The United Christian Missionary Society follows the practice of opening every day with chapel services, at one end of its large suite of offices. For the last week, Rev. George Wales King was selected to conduct this service, daily.

Rev. D. C. MacLeod, D.D., pastor of Central Church, has returned from a two months' vacation, part of which was spent in Nova Scotia.

Unusual music was heard at the North Church last Sabbath evening, in a sacred concert given by the Danish opera singer, Miss Mary Lenander, of Copenhagen. She has been in this country giving Chautauqua engagements, and consented to sing at the North Church.

Rev. A. L. Odell, D.D., formerly pastor of the Kings Highway Church, preached for that congregation last Sabbath morning and evening. Dr. Odell is now pastor of the First Church of Phoenix, Ariz., where the health of his family is greatly improved.

The offices of the New Era Movement for the Southwestern District have been removed from Dallas, Texas, to the Arcade Building, St. Louis, with Rev. Charles L. Oversteer, D.D., in charge. In the re-arrangement of Synods, Missouri, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas are now included in the district. New Mexico has been transferred to the Western District. The St. Louis office is on the same floor as the Home and Foreign Mission offices, and the Woman's Board.

OHIO.

Rev. W. E. Bryce, D.D., of Wooster, has been camping in the Algonquin National Park, in Canada, in company with Rev. F. I. Woollett, of Brookville, N. Y., and close to them have been Dr. Charles Zorbaugh, of Cleveland, and Dr. U. L. Mackey, of New York.

On Aug. 26 the Presbytery of Dayton released Rev. James E. Harris from Blue Ball and arranged for his installation at New Paris; released Rev. Frank Granstaff, D.D., from Oakland Church, Springfield, and received William F. Mills as a candidate.—J. King Gibson, S. C.

INDIANA.

The First Church of Connersville, Ind., has just completed renovating and redecorating. The decoration is beautiful and was done at an expense of $3,000.

Rev. J. L. Bardelmeier has taken charge of the work at Greensburg as successor of Dr. W. H. Reynolds, now of Liberty, Ind., and is doing successful work.

S. C. Moorhead, an elder in the Bethany Church of Fort Wayne, conducted the service Aug. 21, and was assisted by the superintendent of the Sabbath school, while the pastor, Rev. C. O. Shirey, D.D., was attending the Bible Conference at Winona.

By an airplane accident, on Aug. 25th, at Winona Lake, Jack Rodeheaver, aged eighteen, brother of Homer Rodeheaver, the singing evangelist, lost his life, the engine becoming unmanageable and the machine crashing to the ground. He had been associated in business with his brother.

Rev. Dr. Matthew F. Smith, of Beaver Falls, Pa., spent last Sabbath with the First Church of Indianapolis, to which he has been called, and on Friday evening preceding was entertained at a dinner in the church, attended by three hundred of the members.

Rev. Herrick L. Todd preached in the Second Church of Indianapolis last Sabbath, in the absence of Rev. Jean S. Milner. The Men's Bible Class was taught by Ex-Governor S. M. Ralston.

Rev. E. L. Williams, D.D., occupied the pulpit of the Tabernacle Church, Indianapolis, last Sabbath.

Rev. R. H. Dunaway has resigned at Rochester, Ind., to accept a call to Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

ILLINOIS.

Dr. John C. Leonard, of the First Church of Morrisonville, Ill., has returned from his summer's vacation, which was spent in Chautauqua work.

Singing Evangelist William S. Dixon, Wheaton, Ill., assisted in a union tent campaign during August in Payson, Ill. Two large choirs featured in the campaign. Pastors desiring Mr. Dixon's assistance in campaigns may reach him at Wheaton, Ill.

Rev. J. H. Hughey and his wife, of McLeansboro, Ill., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, at their home, with their children and their families, thirty in all, on Aug. 23. Mr. Hughey is now retired from active service, but has had a long and successful ministry.

Rev. L. D. Laswell has accepted the call to Raymond and has begun work there.

Rally and evangelistic services were held Aug. 21-27 at the Dudley Presbyterian Church by the pastor, Rev. S. F. Wenger, assisted by visiting ministers.

Rev. W. F. Garvin and family of Tulsa, Okla., visited recently at Grandview and Neoga, Ill., where Mr. Garvin was formerly pastor.

MICHIGAN.

White Pigeon.—Services were resumed by the pastor, Rev. W. S. Jerome, after his vacation, on Sept. 4. During the summer the church tower has been painted and a new carpet laid in the auditorium. A former pastor of this church, Rev. Judson Swift, died in New York on Aug. 19. He is well remembered, and all were glad to hear from him on the occasion of the ninetieth anniversary of the church last summer. The pastor will begin on Sept. 11 a series of Sabbath evening sermons on the general topic "Does It Pay?" as follows: "Does It Pay to Attend Church?" to "Join the Church?" to "Pray?" to "Read the Bible?" to "Do Right?" to "Sin?"

NEW YORK.

Summer work for children received better attention from the churches of Brooklyn-Nassau Presbytery during the season of 1921 than ever before.

Daily Vacation Bible Schools were held in seventeen churches and missions, while three other churches co-operated in union schools. Several of the stronger churches had schools for the first time. These seventeen schools enrolled 1,685 boys and girls, and of these 35 per cent were recorded as not attending any Sabbath school.

Dr. John F. Carson, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., and president of Stony Brook Presbyterian Assembly, reports that Stony Brook Assembly has voted to acquire Belle Terre Clubhouse Inn and adjacent land, part of Belle Terre Park, near Port Jefferson, Long Island, for the purpose of establishing there a Christian girls' school, to be operated in conjunction with the Stony Brook School for Christian Boys. The Bible is to be a textbook during the four years' course. Belle Terre Park and Clubhouse represent an investment of two million dollars.

IOWA.

Rev. E. C. Horton will take charge at Luverne as stated supply.

Rev. A. M. McIntosh, of Hawarden, becomes pastor of Olivet Church, Sioux City, his twin brother, Rev. D. M. McIntosh, being pastor of Knox Church of the same city.

Evangelist W. A. Bodell began a union meeting of all the churches of Wapello, Iowa, Sept. 4th. He is assisted by Mr.

Money and his wife. From there he goes to Cairo, Ill., to be with the Presbyterian Church.

Any home mission church needing a communion set can secure one, if applied for at once, by the payment of expressage alone. Write to Rev. W. W. Tait, D.D., Manning, Iowa.

At Manning, on last Sabbath, the pastor, Rev. W. W. Tait, D.D., welcomed five new members, baptizing one adult and two children.

The Franklinville Community Presbyterian Church was dedicated Aug. 21. The pastor, Rev. J. C. B. Peck, invited Rev. J. F. Hinkhouse, D.D., to take charge of the program, assisted by Rev. R. L. Van Nice, Rev. L. E. Koenig and Rev. Frank Schroder. The building and its equipment cost about $25,000. Four thousand dollars was needed, and of this amount $3,000 was subscribed at the dedication, which, with $1,000 expected from the Board of Church Erection, will clear the financial obligations.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Rev. J. W. Smith was recently installed in New Providence and Nemaacolin Churches; Rev. A. B. Weisz at Laurel Hill; Rev. George K. Bamford at New Salem, and Rev. E. J. Kneppshild at Little Redstone, all in Redstone Presbytery.

WISCONSIN.

Rev. William Ruby, the new pastor of the Assembly Church of Beaver Dam, and his workers, are making great preparation for the active campaign of fall and winter. At the regular quarterly meeting of the Sabbath-school teachers, a fine banquet was served with thirty-six covers and the business was discussed at the table.

Wisconsin people, more than ever, have attended the interesting conferences, especially the young people, for Christ and his work, at Conference Point, Lake Geneva, Green Lake and Chetek.

President W. A. Ganfield, of Carroll College, at Waukesha, is taking hold of his work with courage and faith and more students than ever are coming at the opening of the year. The past year has been prosperous and large gifts have come in. A pledge of $100,000 comes from the General Education Board and then from the Presbyterian Board a large amount, beside some handsome benefactions from friends in the state. Waukesha is a beautiful little city, delightfully situated a few miles west of Milwaukee, in the hill and lake country of eastern Wisconsin. The little college in the hill has done a marvelous work in raising faithful ministers and Christian workers, and much more needs to be done.

OREGON.

Rev. Aaron Wolfe, D.D., has been in charge at Rogue River for four months and the work in all departments is making fine advances.

COLORADO.

A great tent meeting has been in progress at Aurora for the last few weeks, conducted by Evangelist Chester Birch, of which the local paper speaks as "the most successful ever held in Aurora." Dr. Francis E. Smiley is pastor there.

NORTH DAKOTA.

The church at Hazen received four members recently. It has elected four elders and six trustees, and united with the Red Butte Church is ready for a good year's work.

The church at Carson recently elected full boards of elders and trustees. It has been vacant, but is at work.

The young people at Keith are carrying on an evening service each Sabbath and are determined to make their church live and prosper.

The Lark Church recently heard their former pastor, Rev. D. K. Ford, now of Steele, with great pleasure, while on a visit.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D.D., formerly pastor of the Sixth United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh and later president of Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., died Aug. 20 in Sterling, Kan., where he was attending a missionary conference.

HOME CIRCLE

THE THINGS WE DO.

The things we do that are clean and sweet,
Are like roses that fall at the Master's feet;
And they cheer and they help as we go along,
And they lift the weak till they've made them strong—
The things that we do with a true heart's beat,
And a lilt of laughter to season the song.
The things we do that are dark and bad,
Are like thistles that set the traveler mad
On the road of life where he yearned, God knows,
For only the path of the velvet rose—
The things to brighten and make him glad
And not the battle and not the blows.
The things we do that are fair and square
Are like the breath of the summer air;
The things that are true and fine and high,
And that live in the heart of toil and care
Till the dust and the smoke and the stain pass by
And only the beauty and truth are there.
The things we do that count the most
Are the things that are noble and pure
As a breeze far-striking some summer coast,
And they are the things that endure,
That sweeten the world with the joy they bring,
As the lark at the gates of heaven doth sing.

DOLL COUSINS.

BY SOPHIA T. NEWMAN.

"May I go down to the other house, mamma, and play with the little girl there? She's just as big as I am, an' her name's Bessie."

"How d'you know?" interrupted Ned

"'Cause she told me. She was standing by the stone wall, seeing our trunks come, an' we told each other our names. An' I told her our papa had bought this land, an' built this house for us to live here summers, an' she said she lives here all the time, an' her pape takes care of our papa's land. 'N then I asked her who did she have to play with, 'n she said she had two dolls, 'n their names are Prudy an' Polly. Can I take Margaweeet an' go over there, mamma?"

"Yes, Ruth, if you'll be sure to be polite."

"Oh, mamma Bell!"

"Yes, I know, dear, that you're not rude, but I want you to be particularly careful about the real true politeness that comes from kindness in our hearts. Bessie has lived away off here in the woods all her life and does not know about the city ways and things that you are used to. But then she knows a great many things that you don't—the names of the birds, and which trees are nut trees, and where the wild flowers grow, and—oh, a great many things. And I want you to promise me not to say, or look, or think, or do anything that can hurt her feelings."

"I'll promise you, mamma," answered Ruth, earnestly, little thinking how soon she would be put to the test.

With her beautiful doll, Marguerite in her arms, she ran down the lane, finding Bessie on her doorstep with her two dolls beside her.

Dolls? Corncobs! That is just what they were; corncobs with ink marks for eyes, nose and mouth. Corncob dolls were indeed the only dolls little Bessie had ever owned.

One of these had a red handkerchief pinned around it for a shawl; about the other, folds of white cotton were tied with a faded pink ribbon. A queer feeling of surprise such as Ruth had never before felt seemed to go all over her. But quicker than lightning, before even the least little bit of a look that could possibly hurt had crept into her eyes, Ruth remembered.

"Oh, aren't they cute!" she cried. "I never saw any before. Did you make them? Let's play my dolly is their cousin, come to visit them. There, Margaweeet," she added, putting her doll on the steps beside the others, "you're introduced, now get 'quainted!"

Bessie's shy little face suddenly brightened, and a happy comradeship had begun.

What delightful things there were to play and to do! The dollies were taken to ride on the big loads of hay; they were set on the bank to watch while Bessie and Ruth and Ned splashed about barefoot in the brook; they were cuddled down in the hammocks under the elms, while Ruth's mamma read aloud; they were propped up in shady nooks in the berry pasture, while the berry picking went merrily on.

Sometimes it was Ruth who carried Prudy and Polly, while Bessie bore, with tender admiration, the beautiful Marguerite; sometimes the dollies were carried by their own little mothers, but always there was the happy sharing, making glad the long summer days.

Then one day, when the maple leaves were turning red, a wagon load of trunks went from the big house to the station ten miles away, followed by a carriage with the Bell family.

There were good-bys and good-bys, till the carriage turned the corner, and then Bessie ran off to the barn. She meant to have a good cry all by herself, but her mother's voice called, "Bessie, Bessie, come here and see what there is for you in this big box."

And Bessie, running back, lifted the cover wonderingly. There was a beautiful new doll, exactly like Marguerite, except that her eyes were blue and Marguerite's were brown.

And there, too, was a complete outfit of pretty clothes, even more and lovelier than those of Marguerite. A little note was pinned to the doll's dress. It read:

Dear Bessie: This dollie is for your very own, to be another cosen to Prudy and Polly. Her name is Pearl, and she will be cosen to Marguerite, too, so they'll all be cosens, and when I come next summer, we will have perfectly lovely times, just like we did this year. Yours loving,

Ruth.

And it would be hard to tell which little girl was the happier, the one that wrote the note or the one that read it.—Stand-ard.

THE CHIPMUNK AT HIS TOILET.

Some of us might take lessons from this little animal.

The chipmunk is industrious in all weathers, except the very rainy, although he is rather shy on a very windy day, the rustling and waving branches making him wary. He eats sitting on his haunches and holding his food in his forepaws.

He drinks by lapping like a dog.

He is very neat about his person, combing out his fur and his long tail with paws and teeth.

He washes his face by lapping his forepaws and then rubbing them both at the same time over his face with such speed that the eye can hardly follow his motions.—Selected.

POLLYWOG PHILOSOPHY.

The Tadpoles all sat in the river and said: "How lucky we are to be all tail and head! Just think how we'd feel if we were as absurd

As a goggle-eyed fish or a feathery bird!"

"Oh, worse still!" they cried,

"We would wish we had died, If, instead of our being such nice pollywogs, Mother Nature had made us all into green frogs!"

The dignified frogs sat on green lily pads And said: "How absurd to say we sprang from tads;

From the little black tadpoles, all tail and all head!

Why, if it were true, we would wish we were dead!

But it cannot be so!

For how could we grow

So beautiful if we had been pollywogs? No, no! We have always been dignified frogs!"

And the feathery birds, high up in the tree,

Sang: "The world is as funny as funny can be!" —Ex.

WHY GRANT NEVER SWORE.

While sitting with him at the camp fire late one night, after every one else had gone to bed, I said to him: "General, it seems singular that you have gone through all the tumble of army service and frontier life and have never been provoked into swearing. I have never heard you utter an oath or use an imprecation."

"Well, somehow or other, I never learned to swear," he replied. "When a boy I seemed to have an aversion to it, and when I became a man I saw the folly of it. I have always noticed, too, that swearing helps to arouse a man's anger; and when a man flies into a passion, his adversary who keeps cool always gets the better of him. In fact, I never could see the use of swearing. I think it is the case with many people who swear excessively that it is a mere habit, and that they do not mean to be profane; but to say the least it is a great waste of time." —Michigan Christian Advocate.

OUR FATHER.

President Lincoln had a son who died in early life. He was familiarly known as "Little Tad." At school one day, smarting under some real or fancied wrong, he started for home. Running at a breathless pace through the streets he came to the White House. Up the marble steps he sped, past the guards, until he reached the room where he knew the Cabinet sat in session. There, heedless of everybody and everything, he threw himself into his father's arms and poured out his sorrows. The members of the Cabinet sat in silence, and the affairs of Government stood still while the President listened to the complaint of little Tad.

Is God our Father? Are we his children? And shall he not hear and be moved and answer when we appeal to him?

A BEAUTIFUL ANSWER.

One day a little girl in a white frock and with a great bunch of flowers passed by a boy who was playing in the dusty street. Somehow the sight of that dainty figure stirred the spirit of mischief in the boy's heart, and suddenly he threw a handful of dirt which struck the edge of the white dress and fell in a shower upon the kid shoes.

The girl stood still. Her face flushed pink.

Her lips trembled as if she would cry. But instead a smile broke over her face, and, taking a flower from her bunch, she tossed it to the boy, who stood waiting to see what she was going to do.

A more surprised boy no one ever saw, nor one more heartily ashamed. He hung his head and his cheeks reddened under their tan and freckles. His unkind fun was quite spoiled, just because in return for a handful of dirt some one had thrown him a flower.

What a changed world this would be if everybody, big and little, were as wise as this six-year-old maid! How quarrels would go out of fashion, if for angry words we threw back gentle answers!—Selected.

THE LITTLE THINGS.

'Tis the little things and the common things,

And the things we do each day;
'Tis the little sigh and the little song
And the common words we say,
That round at last to the perfect whole,
For life is but this, my dear,
A summing up of the common things
That make the common year.

Oh, the little things and the common things

Are the things that make the day;
The common sun and the common rain,
And the grass beside the way,
The song of a bird on the swaying bough,
The flashing of soft, brown wings,
Are all but a part of a perfect whole—
God's beautiful common things!

A FRENCH BOY'S SERVICE.

"Speed boldly, Jean; the safety of God's elect depends on thy fleetness and courage," said a French peasant woman, as, standing at the door of a hut perched over a gorge in the Cevennes Mountains, she bade farewell to her young son. He, mounted on a small white pony, looked fearlessly out of his abundant tresses of fair hair, bent to kiss his mother's hand; then descending a steep, winding path, disappeared in the pine forest.

This was the period of that so-called "religious" war in France, which lasted twenty years, and in which the king, Louis XIV, employed sixty thousand soldiers to exterminate three thousand Protestants, because they persisted in worshipping their Maker in their own fashion. Through the upper valleys, for some weeks previous to the time of this story, all the faithful knew that the great pastor, Brousson, emerging from his secret cavern dwelling, would meet and minister to his persecuted flock in the afternoon of the first day of the year 1703, at the Bourges Mountains.

News of the intended convocation had reached the town of Hais, and Captain Daiguirrier, with six hundred men, was coming up from the plain to surprise the innocent congregation.

Just before noon today, Jean, when climbing the rock back of his father's hut in search of a missing goat, spied the red bonnets of the cavalcade, traversing a defile far below; he knew well their terrible purpose, and hurrying down, said to his mother:

"I have seen the king's troops going up; there's none to give warning but me."

Twenty minutes later Jean was riding along through the dim forest when he heard the sound of a conchshell, and, on the instant, a flash of scarlet streamed around a spur of the forest.

"Whither you go?" asked the captain.

"To the upper hills to seek my father," replied Jean.

"This is not a safe country for youngsters like you to travel in alone," said the officer.

"I have confidence in God. Those who do no ill need fear none," returned the child, calmly.

"You shall come with me," continued the captain, suspiciously; "so fine a boy must not grow up a rebel. I shall dedicate you to the service of the king and the church."

Jean made no answer, riding on with his captors, apparently in submissive composure; but the vigilant little fellow, quick in expedients, contrived to fall back gradually, till, when the dismounted troops, painfully climbing, were half way up a steep ascent, Jean was among the hindmost. A brook wound round the base of the hill, and Jean knew that near the stream was one of those caverns common in a country of volcanic formation, the entrance to which was concealed by thick, clustering bushes. Seizing an opportune moment, the active boy turned his pony, dashed down into the brook, leaped from his steed and ran into the cavern. Some minutes elapsed before the more clumsy soldiers could descend; when they reached the stream, the pony was scrambling homeward over the rocks, and no trace of the rider was visible. Little Jean tremblingly crouched in his covert during their brief, vain search, but soon, eager for a larger prey, the pursuers returned to join the rest of the band.

When the last echoes had died away, and only the brook's gurgle was audible in the stillness, Jean ventured from his retreat and, following the bed of the mountain stream, hastened breathlessly on.

Not far away some hundreds of resolute men and women were assembled on a rocky platform amid the desolate hills. Muskets stood near, ready for a sudden call to arms. Around the worshippers was a chestnut forest, through whose enormous trunks and leafless boughs the wind moaned in melancholy cadence accompanying their psalmody and supplication. On a flat, smooth stone, at the base of a precipitous rock, stood the minister who, while little Jean sped toward them, was thus addressing the congregation:

"What fear you? Did not God nourish his people in the wilderness? Did he not send the ravens to feed his prophet, and will he not again work miracles? Has not his Holy Spirit comforted his afflicted children? He consoles—he strengthens us. Will he not in time of need cause his angel to go before us?"

Concluding thus, the preacher advanced to a natural stone slab, serving as a sacramental altar, and the assembly in reverential stillness, to which peril added a solemn awe, came forward, two by two, bare-headed. A cry startled them.

"Fly! the enemy comes!" rang in shrill childish treble from above the kneeling multitude, and looking up they saw, on the rocky summit before the pastor, a little figure, whose white goatskin coat and locks of gold gleamed in the mellow sunset as the rocks and caverns re-echoed his vibrating cry.

"Fly! the enemy comes!"

The startled throng, gazing up, knew not the son of their neighbor and friend, Roland Cavalier. The solemnity of the place and the danger always near their worship had infused their exalted minds with a sense of the immediate presence of the super-natural, and the simple-hearted peasants thought the child Jean a veritable messenger from heaven.

They quickly dispersed through pass and defile, and when the troops arrived the early stars shown down on the deserted rocks and lonely forest.

Jean joined a party of fugitives, and lived to be a valiant and famous defender of the Protestant faith. While the commander cursed him as a treacherous little rascal, most of the congregation always maintained that God sent an angel to save them.—Intelligencer.

Lesson XII—September 18.

ABSTINENCE FOR THE SAKE OF OTHERS.

(A Temperance Lesson.)

(I Cor. 10:23; 3:16, 17.)

Ch. 10:23. All things are lawful for me, but all things are not expedient: all things are lawful for me, but all things edify not.

24. Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth.

25. Whatsoever is sold in the shambles, that eat, asking no questions for conscience' sake:

26. For the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof.

27. If any of them that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no question for conscience' sake.

28. But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice unto idols, eat not for his sake that shewed it, and for conscience' sake: for the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof:

29. Conscience, I say, not thine own, but of the other: for why is my liberty judged of another man's conscience?

30. For if I by grace be a partaker, why am I evil spoken of for that for which I give thanks?

31. Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

32. Give none offense, neither to the Jews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God:

33. Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be saved.

Ch. 3:16. Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?

17. If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

Golden Text: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." I Cor. 10:31.

Catechism—Q. 39. What is the duty which God requireth of man? A. The duty which God requireth of man is obedience to his revealed will.

INTRODUCTORY.

This is our regular quarterly temperance lesson. It is taken from the writings of St. Paul, whose life we are studying, through all these Sabbaths. It is taken without regard to its historical connection, but a temperance lesson is good for any time and for all times. The use of these quarterly temperance lessons for so many years had a great deal to do in impressing the subject upon the minds of the people of this generation, and so preparing the way for prohibition. Now that we have prohibition, we still need these temperance lessons. The laws must be enforced, and they can be more easily enforced if all people come to see how reasonable and salutary they are, and if they become total abstainers from principle. Of course the laws are going to be enforced.

EXPOSITORY.

23. Paul did not mean that all things, even wicked and criminal things, were lawful to him. He meant that there were certain things, about which there might be differences of opinion, which were to be considered not by the letter of the law, but by studying the general harmfulness, or good influence, resulting from engaging in them. He meant that if there is something that I am sure does not hurt me, yet, if it hurts others and they are led astray by my example, I will be willing to forego it absolutely for the sake of others. This is undoubtedly a Christian principle, and one which any Christian will be willing to adopt.

24. This rule of unselfishness is the Christian rule. It was the rule followed by Christ in giving up his place in glory and coming into this world to save. "When he was rich, for our sakes he became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich." This is the rule followed by our foreign missionaries in giving up worldly prospects and going to heathen lands. Why should it be a hard rule for us to follow in our daily lives, as we seek the well-being of others rather than of ourselves?

25-30. Here comes in an instance of Christian dealing with a practical question which may illustrate, very forcefully, the matter of our own abstinence from intoxicating drink. The apostle used the question of meat that had been used in the heathen sacrifices and then put on the market for sale as food. Of course it was the same as any other meat, for there was no heathen god, and the supposed sacrifice could not make any difference in the meat. But some good Christians, who had turned from heathenism to Christ, might think it was being involved in idolatry to buy and eat this meat. So you would not want to seem to him to be doing a wrong thing, and you would not buy this meat and eat it, just for his sake. It would not hurt you, understanding the matter, but it would hurt him, and so, for his sake, you let it alone. So we are urged to let wine, or anything in the world, alone, in order not to set a bad and dangerous example. Anything that has the poison, alcohol, in it, will hurt anyone who drinks it. Science makes this plain. But people did not always know that. Many people came to be abstainers because they could see that it was hurting others. There was a Christian principle involved, and they acted as Christians should. It is good to do right. Good results from it.

31. Here this same principle crops out, in slightly different words. We, as Christians, are to have God's glory in view always. It is not a mere matter of making a profession of religion, and of going to church and to the communion table, but of trying to do God's will, and living in a way to glorify him in everything in our daily life. If we are true Christians we will try to eat just what God would have us eat, and to drink just what God would have us drink, and to do everything in life just as God would have us to do it. This makes life a very sacred and responsible matter, and if we live on this plane we will be willing to be very careful in regard to every act. It will not be hard to be abstainers if we love God, and wish to see his kingdom advanced in the hearts of the people.

32, 33. The Christian will feel as did Paul, that he is not willing to run the risk of doing harm to a single soul, or of leading any one astray. Rather, it will be his abiding desire to do good to every one. With this in mind he will consult the highest spiritual well-being of all those around him, and will be ready, at any measure of self-sacrifice, to try to save them.

3: 16, 17. Here we come to the very crowning thought of the lesson. If we are God's people we are to be careful, in everything we do, to be reverent and holy as those whom God has made to be temples for his indwelling. If we have been born again, or made over into God's image, or have become those within whose lives God is dwelling, as temples, we must be careful not to allow anything to enter our bodies, or our minds, or our hearts, or our plans, or our words, that is not clean and pure and pleasing to God. If this is our life we will be full of good thoughts and purposes to those around us, and will try to do them good in every way we can.

At this very time we need this lesson greatly. We have good laws and we want to make them still better. We need to enforce them and to find new ways of enforcing them better. But we want to use our very best efforts to lead people to be willing to keep them and to love them.

A PRIZE PARAGRAPH.

An English newspaper offered a prize for the paragraph that had given the greatest inspiration and help. Lines from Tennyson and others were sent in by the hundred. The letter that gained the prize was as follows:

"I am only a boy, and boys' opinions are not respected by most grown-ups; but we have them just the same.

"The paragraph which helps me most is the Boy Scout Promise as follows:

"On my honor I promise that I will do my best;

To do my duty to God and the King;

To help other people at all times;

To obey the Scout Law."

THE GRAVE YARD BEAUTIFUL.

We are told of a country church which divided its burying ground into plats and assigned one plat to each Sabbath school class, offering a simple prize to the best kept plot.

How think you that plan worked out? The simple fact is, that little country Campo Santo, that God's acre, became the most beautiful spot in all the countryside.

Does not that country church furnish an example that might well be worth imitation?

The latest thing in prohibition detection work is the employment of hogs.

"Fat hogs on a poor farm invariably have proved," he says, "that moonshiners have been operating in the neighborhood."

Once it has tasted mash, a hog will go through fences, thickets and brick walls to obtain it, according to Mr. Bee.

He stated that his officers were training hogs to seek out stills.

Withdrawals of whisky from bonded warehouses during the first six months of this year fell off by more than 3,500,000 gallons, compared with the same period last year, according to records made public by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

From January 1, 1920, to June 30, 1920, the records show 5,170,598 gallons of whisky were withdrawn, as against 1,487,306 gallons during the corresponding period of this year.

Decrease in withdrawals during the first three months of this year were explained by the ban closing warehouses and distilleries, which was modified in April to permit withdrawals by retail druggists and in May to allow wholesale druggists to withdraw whisky.

Prohibition has been abolished in Soviet Russia and the country now is on a light wine basis.

A dispatch to the Letvian Telegraphic Agency, confirmed by Moscow newspapers, announces the issuance of a decree permitting the manufacture and sale of beverages containing up to 14 per cent of alcohol, which will be taxed highly.

Prohibition of the sale of vodka, once the Russian national drink, was decreed by the government of former Emperor Nicholas in the early months of the world war.

In June, 1916, the Duma, then in power, adopted a law prohibiting the sale of any beverage containing more than one and one-half per cent of alcohol.

Jesus knew the Scriptures. He could find what he wanted to read. He could read so to be understood. Here are valuable suggestions.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, SEPTEMBER 18.

Endeavor Topic: Sins of the Tongue. James 3: 1-12.

It is so easy to talk that there is much said that has not been considered well before it was spoken. He who thinks before he speaks is a wise person. Good speech is of great usefulness and influence, and everyone should learn to use words that shall be a blessing to those who hear what he says. Evil words may result in much harm, and there are many words said that would better be left unspoken. Words are simply an avenue for the thoughts that are in one's mind, and one makes known to others what sort of a person he is by the words that he speaks.

When we read that, by our words we shall be justified and by our words we shall be condemned, we have impressed upon us the fact that our words are a very sure indication of what we are in the depths of our being, the speech showing what is within us, as the water bubbling from a spring shows the nature of the spring. How careful we should be that our minds and hearts are right, thinking the right thoughts and filled with right emotions, so that our words shall be truthful, and reverent, and pure, and kind and gentle, so that others will be helped and not harmed by what we say.

In the chapter before us James urges Christians to be very careful as to the use of the tongue. Of course, as the mere physical organ of speech, the tongue is under the control of our thoughts, just as the hand, or the foot. He means to urge us to be careful as to the language we use, so that it may be, as Paul says: "Sound speech that can not be condemned." If one has complete self-mastery, as a Christian person should, he will control hands and feet and tongue, and all he is and has, so that the sum total of his influence shall be good and right in the sight of men and of God.

James compares the tongue, or the power of speech, to a horse that must be controlled by the bit, and to a ship that is steered by the rudder, and says that an uncontrolled horse or ship is sure to bring disaster. Words, once spoken, can not be recalled. Those who hear them will remember them, and spread them, as a fire spreads in stubble, or as seeds of weeds are carried by the wind to take root somewhere and grow and reproduce and spread. Let us be careful that we do not use wrong words.

One may be untruthful in heart and use words of falsehood that will injure others, and give him the reputation of being a liar. One may be irreverent in his soul and, when the occasion arises, will use profane language. One may be hateful in his life and when irritated will use harsh and unkind language. One may be an unbeliever and may use irreligious and infidel words. All these, and many others, are forms of wrong language which will be used if the heart is not right.

It is absolutely necessary that we shall be right in heart and thought, if our words are to be right. They are only an indication of what is within. We must be born again. We must live as God's children. We must be the sort of persons, who use good and truthful and reverent and loving and kind and religious words because our souls are fountains of Christian life, from which these good words will naturally gush out.

It is not enough that we shall not speak evil words and idle words for which we shall be called into judgment. We must be in the habit of using good words that will help lead souls to Christ.

PRAYER MEETING

SEPTEMBER 14.

THE NEED OF SPIRITUAL ENTERPRISE.

Matthew 4:23-25; John 4:34-38.

Christianity makes headway in the world by means of earnest and positive efforts to spread the knowledge of it, and the blessings of it, by those who know and love it. There is a call for constant and enterprising effort on the part of Christian people. They must be alert and diligent in Christian work. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, or calls for genuine earnestness, and the earnest and enterprising take it by force, or secure success for the work and cause of Christ.

This is a very wicked world. The hearts of multitudes are set in them to do evil. Hand joins in hand among the wicked to bring about evil things. This was never more apparent, it seems to us, than it is today. Crimes are committed on every hand, and life and property are assailed so that there seems to be no safety. Along with this we find infidelity and lawlessness taught by means of books and papers and public speakers and personal propaganda, so that the powers of Satan seem to be united in bringing about the downfall of all that is good and hopeful in the world today.

It is therefore a necessary thing for Christian people to be awake and determined and enterprising, in advocating what is good, in working and agitating for what is right, in organizing for the advancement of what is righteous, and in being positive and energetic in counteracting evil and advancing all that is good.

Jesus Christ, our Lord, gave us an example of this. His coming into our world, in his Incarnation, was a great missionary enterprise, and his undertaking our redemption by his vicarious offering up of himself as a sacrifice for our sins upon the cross of Calvary, was the one stupendous act of self-devotion and saving enterprise of all time and eternity. His restless, active, busy life while on earth was a continual manifestation of spiritual enterprise, as he went about doing good, teaching the truth, healing the sick, relieving the distressed, and ministering to the multitudes who followed him about to receive blessings at his hands.

The apostles of our Lord were examples of the same self-sacrificing devotion. They went everywhere preaching the Gospel, relieving sinful and suffering humanity, pointing them to Christ and doing work for the breaking down and destroying the works of the devil. They wrote the New Testament and sent it out to the world as an enterprise under God's Holy Spirit, of age-long and world-wide proportions.

So our foreign missionaries are giving an example of self-sacrificing religious enterprise, in going throughout the world and giving the Gospel to every creature. So is the Church of Christ, in home lands, doing a work of positive importance and power, in evangelizing the people, in pressing every form of religious work, and in doing reformatory work to break down the massed forces of sin and the hoary forms of iniquity. This needs to be done all the time, positively and incessantly. There must be actual stir and enterprise in the Church.

The call of God today is to his church to resist every form of evil and error, and to preach and teach and give and organize, so that the work shall positively and uninterruptedly go on. Let there be a holy enthusiasm in the hearts of all who love Jesus Christ. Let there be the spirit of wise and courageous enterprise. Undoubtedly the enemy comes in as a flood, but the Spirit of God raises up a standard against them; and where that blood-stained standard is spread let the armies of his consecrated followers assemble to do his will.

BEWARE!

Most of the traveling carnivals, or street fairs, are rotten to the core and ought not to be tolerated. As a rule there are indecent exhibitions given by women in a tent "for men only." Good citizens should promptly and persistently remonstrate.—Arkansas Methodist.

"Why did you come to Westminster College?"

For three years this question has been asked every student attending Westminster. The following reasons are arranged in the order indicated by the largest number of answers:

1. Because it is a men's college and not co-educational.

(Westminster is the only men's College in Missouri.)

2. Because it is a college instead of a university.

(This means close friendships, a feeling of unity, opportunity to participate in student activities, more attention from the professors—as a rule no class larger than thirty.)

3. Because of the persuasion of a student or former student.

(Westminster men are loyal.)

4. Because of the moral and religious ideals of Westminster and Fulton.

(Westminster is a Christian college. Fulton is a clean, church going town.)

OUR EXCHANGES

HARD TIMES.

Swords may be beaten into plowshares. But a silk shirt can't be converted into a pair of overalls.—Detroit Journal.

A BACKSLIDER.

Lenine must be a great disappointment to his followers in America. Get the man in a tight place and he shows almost as much common sense as a hated capitalist.—Baltimore Sun.

MODESTY.

The outstanding objection to the modern dance is that it is immodest and lacking in grace. It is not based on the natural and harmless instinct for rhythm, but on a craving for abnormal excitement.

And what is it leading to? The dance in the process of its degradation has passed from slight impropriety to indecency, and now threatens to become brazenly shameless.—Hobart College Herald.

LOSS ALL ROUND.

Capital does not run all the risks of industrial losses. Laboring men, their wives, and helpless children are right now suffering from industrial losses through unemployment. Capital may lose its profits, but labor may lose its bread and butter.—Western Christian Advocate.

DISARMAMENT.

The conference may not amount to much in the concrete, but it will mean much in the abstract, and the abstract is important, much as we may poke fun at it. The proposed conference will "start the ball rolling," and there will be other conferences—conferences that will evolve into concrete results.—Christian Standard.

NATURAL.

Much objection to laws arises from the impossibility of making them apply only to the other fellow.—Detroit Journal.

MODERN FICTION.

The novelist of the natural school is a perfect simpleton in religious matters. He lives in another world. All he has is a skimming ability to describe the superficialities of life. He is dumb to what goes on inside a man. He is like the casual observer who thinks he knows the inner meaning of business by looking at the false fronts of a block of one-story shops.—Christian Register.

THE PREACHER AS A STUDENT.

Few people realize how very busy the modern preacher is. His time is taken up as is the time of few other people. The calls of the pastorate are not only well-nigh innumerable, but they are from such different sources that a preacher's preparation requires work that the average person does not dream of.—Alabama Advocate.

PUBLICITY.

In a recent meeting held in a Methodist Centenary office the question was asked: "To what extent is the leaflet literature promoting the Centenary read?" This information was sought because there is now being sent out, and has been, for that matter, during the past months, almost tons of tracts and leaflet literature promoting the interest of the Church. From one pastor after another came the answer to the question: "The people do not read this kind of literature." . . . If it is true, as we are now inclined to believe, it must be acknowledged that the weekly church papers, the Advocate are the only reliable means by which the membership of the Church is to be reached. The church paper is the old reliable dispenser of Church information and spiritual inspiration. When a pastor promotes the circulation of the "Advocate," he is working not for it but for himself and the interest of the kingdom of Christ.—Western Christian Advocate.

PSALM CXXI.

BY WILLIAM DEARNESS.

(Tune—Portuguese Hymn.)

Why should I look up to the mountains for aid?

Appeal to a mortal for help when afraid, Jehovah, Creator of earth and of heaven, His promise to keep me in safety hath given.

Thy foot shall stand firm, neither totter nor slide,

The night against danger he'll fully provide; His Israel he loveth in safety sustains, Nor watch intermitting Jehovah maintains.

The Lord is thy keeper, thy shield and thy shade,

He leads on thy right, why should'st thou be dismayed?

The moon's gentle beams shall thy covert delight,

The sun's noon-day ardor thy vigor incite.

Thy life he'll count precious, his care shall not cease,

No terrors disturbing thy soul's perfect peace;

Even now and forever thy footsteps he guides,

Outgoing, incoming, God safety provides. —Israelite.

GENERAL NEWS

WEST VIRGINIA MINE TROUBLES.

The situation in West Virginia reached a critical point last week. Governor Morgan called on the National Government and troops were sent to the seat of trouble. A fleet of airplanes was also sent. There was fighting at various points, and some casualties, though it does not appear that the government troops were engaged.

One plane, a Martin No. 5, was wrecked en route and four men killed and one seriously hurt.

The national forces are under command of General H. H. Brandholtz.

Large numbers of the insurgents have surrendered and given up their arms and indications are that matters will soon be settled.

There are reports of mining troubles similar to those in West Virginia at the Rosiclare mine of the Hillside Fluorspar Co., in southwestern Illinois.

President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, and James Lord, president of the mining department of the Federation, called on President Harding. The Federation president urged Mr. Harding to adopt the suggestion of President Lewis, of the United Mine Workers of America, that a conference of operators and miners be called to endeavor to reach a conclusion which would not only settle the present controversy, but establish relations between the miners and operators for the future.

The President listened with interest, but stated that his first duty as President was to establish the authority of the United States and the maintenance of order.

FOREST FIRES.

Forest fires have done considerable damage in the Northwest. Two Minnesota towns—Whitepine and Solana—have been abandoned as a precaution against loss of life, and it may become necessary to abandon McGrath. National Guardsmen have been called to fight the fires.

THE PEACE TREATY.

The treaty of peace with Germany, which was signed Aug. 25 at Berlin, will be sent to the Senate on Sept. 21, the day that Congress assembles after its recess. Prompt ratification is hoped for. The German Reichstag meets Sept. 27. There were reports that it would be called at an earlier date, but it is said that the cabinet desires to avoid debate on the American peace treaty before it is ratified by the United States Senate. The government would be unable to prevent such debate in view of the overheated political atmosphere engendered by the murder of Herr Erzberger. He had been a prominent figure in the government and his murder is apparently part of an effort of the monarchical party to overthrow the government and restore the empire.

It is hoped that the treaties with Austria and Hungary will be promptly signed.

WARS AND RUMORS OF WARS.

Hostilities are reported from many countries. There is fighting between Hungarian and Austrian soldiers along the frontier between the two countries. The Greek and Turkish armies are still at war. Spain and the Moors are lining up for battle and there are hostile movements in many sections of Eastern Asia and predictions of conflict in China.

THE UNEMPLOYED.

A great many people are out of work. According to the Bulletin, issued by the United States Employment Service, the number of unemployed in 1,428 firms, located in sixty-five of the principal industrial centers, showed an increase of 2.9 per cent. Twenty-seven of the sixty-five cities report increases in employment, while thirty-eight cities show increases in the number of those unemployed.

IRELAND.

The Irish situation is practically unchanged. The Sinn Feiners want an absolutely independent all Ireland. The British plan is to make Ireland one of the dominions of the British empire, on a par with Canada, Australia, South Africa and the other dominions, with complete autonomy of taxation and finance, courts, postal service and "all those powers and privileges upon which the autonomy of self-governing dominions is based." There has been more rioting in Belfast.

POSTAL REFORM.

The Literary Digest, in an article on Postmaster General Will H. Hays, says:

"He announced at the very outset that he was going to try to restore the Postoffice Department to its legitimate function; make it a going business." Also that he plans to have letteres delivered the same week, within a reasonable area, reduce the burdens on the taxpayers, and restore the service generally to popular favor. He is a man of great energy and efficiency, and his plans appear to have been worked out along definite and logical lines.

DELAYED PAYMENT.

Forty-four years ago Moses M. Bane, was receiver of public moneys for the territory of Utah, at Salt Lake City. He had to fish down into his pockets to pay the rent of the office he occupied during 1877, 1878 and the first quarter of 1879.

Now the Senate has passed a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the estate of Moses M. Bane $1,080 to cover the rent.

THE SOO RAPIDS.

Modern engineering has broken the prestige of the old-time Soo Rapids, reducing to rocks and shallow pools a stream, which has been one of the wonders of the world.

Completion of the last of the compensating dams above the rapids has brought to the surface moss-clad rocks hidden for centuries.

Capitulation of the rapids, which has drawn near and nearer during seventy years, reached its climax with startling quickness recently when, within an hour after the closing of the dam, the rapids became gaunt rocks and disconsolate rivulets.

Field Marshal von Buelow, who was Commander-in-chief of the German Second Army during the war, died in Berlin Aug. 31st.

Five great nations will meet at Washington Nov. 11th to discuss world problems looking to limitation of armaments and a lasting peace.

The New York state soldier bonus law is unconstitutional, according to a decision of the Court of Appeals, handed down on Aug. 31st.

The population of Great Britain is 42,767,530 persons, an increase of 4.7 per cent over the 1911 population. Greater London's population is 7,476,168.

Owing to lower prices the United States will furnish Italy with her main supplies of coal for the next five years.

New Zealand reports that financial depression hangs heavily over the country and thousands are unemployed.

An anti-bachelor bill introduced into the Turkish Parliament makes marriage compulsory for men over twenty-five.

About one-third of all the coal mined in the United States is required to keep the country's 65,000 locomotives going.

The present cost of German labor in metal working trades is stated to be about one-sixth of the cost of equivalent labor in the United States.

The former German Emperor has paid, under protest, the poll tax of 5,000 guilders, demanded by the municipality of Doorn, says a press report. Mr. Hohenzollern contends that as he is not voluntarily a resident of Doorn, he should not be taxed.

According to a West Virginia prohibition official, hogs are inveterate "mash eaters."

HOME AND FARM

IN THE HOUSE OF TOO MUCH TROUBLE.

In the House of Too Much Trouble
Lived a lonely little boy;
He was eager for a playmate,
He was hungry for a toy.
But 'twas always too much bother,
Too much dirt and too much noise,
For the House of Too Much Trouble
Wasn't meant for little boys.

And sometimes the little fellow
Left a book upon the floor,
Or forgot and laughed too loudly,
Or he failed to close the door.

In the House of Too Much Trouble
Things must be precise and trim—
In the House of Too Much Trouble
There was little room for him.

He must never scatter playthings,
He must never romp and play;
Every room must be in order
And kept quiet all the day.
He had never had companions,
He had never owned a pet—
In the House of Too Much Trouble
It is trim and quiet yet.

Every room is set in order—
Every book is in its place,
And the lonely little fellow
Wears a smile upon his face.

In the House of Too Much Trouble
He is silent and at rest—
In the House of Too Much Trouble—
With a lily on his breast.

KITCHENS.

Large kitchens and small kitchens, light kitchens and dark kitchens, kitchens with closets and kitchens without closets, convenient kitchens and inconvenient kitchens—I saw them all when I started on my search for a new home last spring.

Now my idea of a perfect kitchen is one which is small enough to save steps and large enough to provide ample room for storing kitchen equipment. It has plenty of closets and windows and doors so placed that there is a cross draft. 'It has—but why waste time talking about it? No one who buys or rents a dwelling which some one else has built ever finds exactly the kind of kitchen she wants in just the kind of house she needs and it is wiser to turn one's thoughts to plans for making over kitchens which are inconvenient.

After many weeks of patient search I found a home that in the main fitted my needs. Though the kitchen did not in any way meet my ideas as to all a perfect kitchen should be, still with the optimism we homemakers have learned to cultivate I saw its many possibilities.

It was a basement kitchen, very large and well ventilated, but made depressingly gloomy by ugly brown walls and wood-work.

The first step toward improvement was to have the forlorn old linoleum which had been left by the former tenant, removed. Then the ceiling and dingy walls were thoroughly scrubbed. I had always thought I should like to have a kitchen all gleaming white—woodwork, walls and furniture, everything finished with white enamel paint. But when I looked at the big room and realized what an expense and care it would be, I changed my mind and decided to have only the walls and ceiling white.

When it came to the question of the baseboard, doors and other woodwork, I hesitated about the finish, and then decided to have it painted Delft blue. I know it sounds strange, but it is really very charming. It is practical, too, for it does not show finger marks.

Around the tops of the washtubs and where the splashboard of the sink joins the wall a line of blue four inches deep was painted to protect the white enamel wall finish.

Then came the question of floor covering. The floor was made of wide boards which were smoothly joined, so an inlaid linoleum of a blue and white mosaic design was selected. And, taken all in all, it is a most satisfactory floor covering.

White walls and blue woodwork and blue and white floor covering made it impossible to use stained furniture, such as the stores usually offer for kitchens. White furniture was also out of the question. So two Windsor arm chairs and a ladder chair were painted Delft blue to match the woodwork. The legs and framework of the large kitchen table were also painted blue. The heavy ash top of the table was left in the natural state, for the more it is scrubbed the whiter it grows—a most desirable thing in a work table top.

You will all understand the difficulties I encountered when it came to the point of arranging the equipment.

There are many other things I would like to do to make my kitchen more convenient, but I shall have to wait. When I look at the bright pretty room I realize how much easier it is to work in congenial surroundings and I feel that everything which has been done is really worth while.—Ex.

LISTS AT HAND.

It is a convenient thing to carry about with you in your handbag certain measurements that may prove very useful when you are shopping. They may all be condensed on a small card, and can surely not be a burden to you.

For instance, at this time of the year, when many of the department stores have special sales of table and bed linen, it is a good plan to have the dimensions of your beds and dining table. Often you see veritable bargains in bed spreads and sheets, but hesitate to buy them because you are not sure that they will fit your beds.

Often you can find odd tablecloths or remnants of table linen that you could make use of if you but knew exactly the size of your table.

The dimensions of your rooms are also something that you might carry about with you. A little floor plan of your house, giving the important dimensions, might be put on the back of the card containing your other list.

It may be that you will find a rug that just suits a certain location, but you are not sure of this without definite knowledge of dimensions. You may see a table, lounge or other piece of furniture, but you hesitate to buy it because you are not sure that it will fit into a given space.

Other lists that are a convenience to carry about with you are the sizes of stockings, gloves, shoes, collars, etc., of various members of your family, and your own, too, if you are one of those persons who find it a bore to have to keep such details in mind.

WIT AND WISDOM

LULLABY.

If, my dear, you seek to slumber,
Count the stars an infinite number;
If you still continue wakeful,
Count the drops that make a lakeful;
Then, if vigilance yet above you
Hover, count the times I love you;
And if slumber still rebel you,
Count the times I do not tell you.
Franklin P. Adams.

A lady reader sends us this morsel of old-time humor:

It happened in grandma's day that a young lady at a party lost her gloves. The finder was a wealthy old bachelor named Page, and he returned it to her with the following note:

"If from your glove you take the letter 'g,' that glove is love and that I have for thee."

To this the young lady replied:

"If from your name you take the letter 'P,' then Page is age and that won't do for me."

Election Agent—That was a good, long speech our candidate made on the farming question, wasn't it?

Farmer—Oh, yes, it wasn't bad; but a couple o' nights' good rain wud 'a' done a sight more good.—British Farm and Home.

Sir Hubert von Herkomer, the well-known artist, who died recently, used to tell an amusing story of a London art dealer. This man had two beautiful reproductions of the painting, "The Approaching Storm." One of these pictures he placed in the show window, but it did not sell. At length, in order to draw attention to the picture he used the words, "The Approaching Storm," especially suitable for a wedding present.—Reedy's Mirror.

Men's Associations With Men

After All Is Said—

- ¶ The Churches have the best chance to organize popular, satisfying fellowships of men, because nearly all men recognize that the supreme interests and responsibilities of life center in religion and therefore in the Church.
- ¶ Christian men have more precious experiences, greater responsibilities and bigger tasks in common, as a basis for fellowship together, than any other men.
- ¶ The Churches do not compete with the lodges and other good men's organizations, but contribute to them by establishing men in right relations with God and their fellow Christians, the life relations which are indispensable to the best character and service.
- ¶ We must make the Churches social centers for men so as to capitalize the Church's share of the time and money men will spend where they have their associations with men.
- ¶ The Churches have the best chance to enlist men in Christian work, because the local Church is the only available field for continuous service for most men.

THE PROTECTION OF GIRLHOOD.

A Greek orator, after the great Peloponnesian war, in which many young men had lost their lives, compared the cutting down of the promising youth of a country to the stripping of the fruit trees, in the springtime, of their blossoms, thus destroying the hope of fruitage. But the loss, to society and the world, of the girls by processes which accomplish their ruin, physical and moral and spiritual, means not only a terrible destruction, but the change of their lives, oftentimes, into instruments of incomputable harm and injury to others.

The statement is made by a secular paper of prominence, that claims to be responsible and exact in its representations, that sixty-five thousand girls disappeared in the United States last year. Certain it is that, whether this be the exact number or not, a terrific number have been lost, some of them leaving no trace, many of them going into conditions that are worse than death, and all of them being a net loss to the world, to the home, and to society, in which they should have grown up to be good and useful members.

There are influences at work today for the destruction of young girls. The lure of passion and the stress of the flesh has always been urgent as a lash to drive on to fatal mistakes, and it is no less persistent today than it has always been. In addition there is a present-day freedom, for both sexes and all ages, that makes for less resistance to the calls of the lower nature. Without any possibility of question, the exposure of the female person, permitted and cultivated, not only is an incitement and excitement to those of the opposite sex, but breaks down, consciously, the nice sense of modesty which is the greatest safeguard of feminine virtue. Without doubt the dance-craze, with its increased modern liberties of personal contact, breaks down the barriers of safety. Then come the moving-picture shows, often with their impure plots and familiarizing with sensual subjects, by which much of proper delicacy is swept away. An impure literature, with foul teachings and situations and language, is in the hands of too many young persons, who are introduced by it into a life in which they are plied by evil suggestions and coarse temptations.

It is increasingly difficult to get young people to pay attention to the plain, old-fashioned counsels as to godly living and thinking. A thousand worldly influences come, flashingly, to lure them away from the sanctuary on the Sabbath. The advice of parents is looked on as too strict; the wise sermon as too uninteresting and severe; the good book as too slow; the religious observance of the Sabbath by church-going as too puritanical, and the rush is for the pleasure-seeking contrivances of show or automobile ride, or ball games, or card table, or worse.

Our high schools, instead of being filled with those who are bent on the acquisition of learning and the ways of sober life, are too often crowded with those who are too precocious in evil and impure things, and automobiles are, oftentimes, headquarters of real danger.

It becomes parents and pastors and teachers to be alert and vigilant to avert disaster, and to use every opportunity and possibility for the safe-guarding of the children and leading them in the ways of life. It is still the old-fashioned duty to try to save the lives and souls of those who are in danger.

Only a few days ago the Cincinnati police authorities helped back to their country home in Kentucky two girls who had been lured to the city by a promise of employment, and who were taken to an evil house from which they managed at once to escape. But many do not escape.

Only recently a little girl of this city nine years of age, disappeared as suddenly as if the earth had swallowed her, and other girls have disappeared here in the same way. Some nests of human vampires are being discovered and opened up where deeds of indescribable abomination have been committed. Herod is still seeking the life of the young child. There must be some old-fashioned protection given to the young, or wholesale crimes will still be perpetrated.

SABBATH DESECRATION.

As a matter of religious obligation one ought to observe the Sabbath conscientiously, ought to go to church, ought to abstain from all work save that of necessity and mercy, ought to leave worldly amusements out of his life, and spend the day with reference to the spiritual needs of himself and others.

But while this is the Christian program which he will strive carefully to follow as far as possible, it is not the Christian program to have all this incorporated into the civil law and exact this life by law from all others. This is the right life, undoubtedly, before God, but there is a difference between what is religiously right, and what can be demanded by the civil law, as to Sabbath observance.

A minister was trying to make this distinction in a sermon, and used some illustrations, as to some things that could not be prevented by law. Some daily papers reported him as being in favor of Sunday amusement, as golf and baseball, which he distinctly denies. It is easy to be misrepresented, or improperly reported. This being the case, it becomes increasingly important for every public speaker to express himself so clearly and distinctly that that he can not be misunderstood, and especially upon the matters where distinct teaching is particularly needed. Surely no Presbyterian minister is going to give any sort of aid or comfort to Sabbath desecration.

THE PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

A notable meeting will be that of the "Eleventh General Council of the Alliance of Reformed Churches Throughout the World Holding the Presbyterian System," to be at Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 16th to 25th. Its last meeting was held in 1913 at Aberdeen, Scotland. All activities were necessarily suspended during the war. Rev. William Park, D.D., of Belfast, Ireland, was elected President at the last meeting and will preside at the Pittsburgh meeting, his successor being chosen at that time. The organization having a long and cumbrous appellation has usually been known by the short name of the "Presbyterian Alliance," and this answers all practical purposes. A finely arranged program has been prepared, with many valuable papers and addresses by men of prominence and distinction from all over the world.

TIRESOME.

We believe in "exact science" and in the "latest investigations," and in "the consensus of world scholarship," but weary of the persistent appeal to them by men whose only knowledge of them is from some book they have read, or some lecture they have heard. We are particularly tired of the common charge by such men that those who do not swallow some theory advanced by the author or lecturer are ignorant or behind the times, or blind, or lack the scientific spirit.

Every now and then some one, usually a young professor or new theology minister, issues a book which boasts of original research and knocks the bottom out of all orthodoxy. Many such are simply rehashes of some old book which has been disproved and accumulated dust on the shelves of some foreign library. Its only claim to novelty is that it was forgotten so long ago.

The Eastern Methodist resents the claim to scientific standing of certain recent books and the claim that those who do not accept them are ignorant. It says: "The charge of ignorance comes amusingly from those who are only echoes of Germany, where the voices no longer utter what the echoes here repeat! Echoes belated, with not an original idea in whole volumes, like 'The Hexateuch,' 'The Bible in the Making,' 'Beacon Lights of Prophecy,' 'New Testament History.' If there is a new idea in any of them, will not some one with great patience pick that grain of wheat from the big hills of chaff?"

A BURDENSOME DEBT SHIFTED.

The Interchurch World Movement debt is paid. That is, the Bankers Trust Company of New York has been paid the balance, $583,365.77 by the Treasurer of the General Assembly, and has turned over canceled warrants showing that our Presbyterian Church is no longer indebted to it for any part of the Interchurch obligation.

But the money was raised by being advanced by the Boards of the Church, and they are to be repaid, their loans to the Church being in the form of certificates of indebtedness authorized by the General Assembly, to the payment of which the faith of the Church is pledged. Until paid, these certificates, signed by the Moderator and Stated Clerk of the General Assembly, are to draw six per cent interest. Thus it is that money contributed to these boards is safely invested, and consequently has not been diverted from its original purpose.

But how are these certificates of indebtedness to be paid and when? Just as soon as the money can be raised by contributions from churches and individuals for this special purpose. It is to be hoped that it may be raised soon, so that all these obligations may be met, and the Church be entirely free from this load.

These certificates of indebtedness have been taken by the respective boards to the following amounts: Home Missions, $94,000; Foreign Missions, $258,600; Education, $69,100; Publication, $39,400; Church Erection, $20,500; Relief and Sustentation, $50,000; Freedmen, $16,300; Temperance, $7,000; Sabbath Observance, $500; Woman's Home Missions, $30,000. The propriety and desirability of the prompt payment of these certificates is obvious.

OUR SABBATH SECRETARY.

We are glad to present to our readers, on the first page, the face of an exceedingly useful and diligent Presbyterian minister. Dr. Bowlby is closely identified with the work of preserving the Sabbath, and is held in high esteem by all who know and appreciate what he is doing in his important position. He was born at Asbury, N. J., graduated at Princeton University and Seminary, and ordained in 1904 by the Presbytery of Huntingdon. His first and only pastorate was in the First Presbyterian Church of Altoona, Pa., where he took high rank as a pastor and preacher. He is widely known and highly regarded for his valuable services in the safeguarding of the Sabbath.

DANTE THE GREAT.

Six hundred years ago today, Sept. 14, 1321, the great Italian Christian poet, Dante, passed from earthly life. He ranks with the greatest of all the poets, but deserves particularly to be associated with the English poet, Milton, both of them dealing with the deep things of life, along lines of theology, and both of them being believers of Christian truth and under its influence in their lives and their writings. Each of them too, was concerned in the political affairs and activities of his own time and nation, and each aspired to render patriotic service to his own country.

Dante lived from 1265 to 1321. His fame rests on his "New Life" and his "Divine Comedy." In the first is delineated his lifelong passion for Beatrice, whom he first saw when they were each about nine years of age. He seems to have seen her but a few times, but her image was in his heart, and she became the realization of all his ideals of beauty and purity and goodness, and his embodiment of all the virtues. She married Simone de Bardi and died at the age of twenty-five. Dante himself married and became the father of eight children. But Beatrice is the pure spiritual force in his life, and when he wrote his Divine Comedy, called Comedy because it ended happily, she is personified as Truth, or Christian Theology, to guide him through the scenes of paradise.

The heathen poet Vergil, becomes his guide through the dark and mournful regions of the Inferno and Purgatory, but when he comes to write of Paradise he has the light of Christian Truth, and Beatrice, already many years in that blessed existence, becomes the guide and preceptor, who helps him know the way and the happy scenes and life of that blessed abode, according to the representation of his poetical fancy.

It may be said that Dante writes of the unseen world something as Milton did, without exactness as to all his statements. It may be so. Neither one may be quoted as divinely inspired authorities. Each as a poet exercised a poet's fancy. Yet each one realized the awful meaning of sin and death and hell, and, in an age which does not accept the full divine teaching as to these fearful realities, we may be glad that these clear-eyed and true-hearted poets wrote emphasizing the facts in a way that compels the world to listen. Their poetry is infinitely nearer the facts than is the materialism of those who open their eyes only to the things that are seen and temporal. Better is it to read the Paradise Lost and the Paradise Regained by Milton, and the Paradise through which Dante was led by Beatrice, than to walk through the world blind and untouched by the marvelous realities of the life infinite and eternal.

THE RECOGNITION OF GOD.

It is to be hoped that the Disarmament Conference, called by President Harding to meet on Nov. 11th at Washington, will recognize the existence and authority of the Supreme Being by looking to him in prayer for his blessing. There was no word of prayer or acknowledgment of God in the Versailles Conference. All such public meetings might well have in mind the words and example of Benjamin Franklin in the Continental Congress when, reminding the members that "unless the Lord build the city they labor in vain who build it," he urged the passage of the rule, which was adopted, that all sessions of the Congress should be opened with prayer to God for his blessing and guidance.

HELP ASKED FOR RUSSIA.

Owing to the terrible famine conditions in Russia, thirty-five millions of people are threatened with early starvation. No matter where the fault lies, the fact is that human beings are in danger of perishing. The American Relief for Russian Women and Children, 1400 Westminster Building, Chicago, Ill., Jane Addams, chairman, is ready to receive contributions and render quick and effective aid. Distribution in Russia is carried on through the American Friends Service Committee, a non-political, non-sectarian force ready on the ground and actively engaged in the work. Among those on the Chicago committee are Dr. John Timothy Stone, Walter L. Fisher, Mr. Emmons Blaine and Bishop Anderson.

NEAR EAST RELIEF.

The conditions in Armenia and Transcaucasia continue to be such that many are perishing and that many more must perish unless there be speedy and continued relief. The harvest is almost a failure and is absolutely and pitifully inadequate to sustain the people. There are at least 250,000 boys and girls in the region, some in orphanages and some in refuge homes, who need food and who must get food from America, or starve. Five years of this work has been going on incessantly. Wars and oppression in that region prevent normal conditions.

The Near East Relief in this country, chartered by Act of Congress recently, told its officers in the Eastern lands that contributions are falling off, and that supplies must diminish. The word came back that supplies must not diminish and that food must be sent. The Near East Relief is turning to the farmers, begging for five million bushels of grain as the least that they must have. Ohio's quota is ninety-six carloads of corn and forty-six carloads of grain. Governor Davis and L. J. Taber, Master of the State Grange, are trying to get this pledged, and the promise has come in for a large part of it.

The plea is made in behalf of suffering multitudes, and the people of our country are urged to continue their beneficent relief to those who suffer. Let the hearts of the people be tender, and their hands be wide open to give, as the Lord prospers them.

A STRONG SESSION.

A London dispatch announces that the St. Columba Scottish Church in that city recently ordained new elders. They were Field Marshal the Earl of Haig, Brigadier-General Sir Wm. Alexander, Deputy Chaplain General Rev. Wm. Stevenson Jaffray and Frederick Chas. Thompson, Member of Parliament. There were in the session as already constituted a number of men influential in the government and active in the war. Among them were Lord Balfour or Burleigh, since deceased, Sir John Nairn, the Duke of Atholl, the Earl of Stair, the Earl of Haddo and two or three Baronets. The Presbyterian Witness regards this as a very remarkable session, but adds that while it may be unique in the number of members distinguished in the public life of the country, yet we also have in the Presbyterian Church a goodly number of Knights, Judges, Senators, members of Parliament, College Professors and other public men who prize the eldership and are glad to serve the Church in this distinguished and honorable way. And we also have thousands of less well-known but equally faithful elders.

A QUESTION OF CONTRACT.

We are asked as to the action of the last Assembly on a petition of Rev. H. C. Rimmer and Dr. John R. Gass, calling attention to an action of the Home Board which they claimed was a violation of contract with Mr. Rimmer and with the Presbytery of Pecos Valley. This matter has been before several Assemblies. At Winona, the Judicial Commission recommended that the Assembly instruct the Presbytery of Pecos Valley to report to the next Assembly sufficient grounds for abrogating the agreement made with Mr. Rimmer, as provided in presbytery's engagement and the Board of Home Missions Commissioner.

We are sorry that our paper last week was slow in reaching subscribers, Labor Day being a holiday, always puts us a day behind. Following this, labor contentions and a break in machinery delayed us still farther. We hope such an unusual combination will not occur again.

The First Church of Long Beach, Cal., Dr. G. M. Rourke, pastor, recently distributed fifty copies of "Religio-Medical Masquerade," by Mr. F. W. Peabody, among the people of the congregation, made possible by one of the members. It would be a good thing if this book were widely distributed in every church and community, as it is an unanswerable exposure of the pretenses of so-called Christian Science.

Prohibition is blamed, by the professor of anatomy at the University of Toronto, for the scarcity of bodies for dissecting purposes in medical colleges. Few persons now die destitute, whereas, on account of indulgence in liquor, there were formerly many whose bodies could be had by the colleges. There might be a new branch of those opposed to prohibition organized to restore pauperism to its former flourishing condition.

SOME MOUNTAIN LESSONS.

BY MRS. ALICE MATHER DIXON.

Unto the hills lift up thine eyes,
O child of God, by sorrow pressed.
From mountain heights God will arise,
And bring thee home, through pain to rest.

As mountain peaks fair Salem bound,
Making for her a sure defense,
So God shall compass thee around,
And naught shall ever snatch thee hence.

Though mighty peaks should be removed,
And hills and mountains should depart,
Jehovah's kindness stands approved—
His love shall be thy strength of heart.

How beautiful the blessed feet
Upon the mountains now appear,
Of those who bring good tidings fleet,
And publish peace to far and near.

Soon it will come that day we bless,
When Olive's Mount his feet shall cleave,
Who comes to reign in righteousness,
And all earth's sorrows to relieve.

GREAT BIBLE CHAPTERS.

THE PROVING OF ABRAHAM.

Genesis 22.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

Here is the record of a very dark thing. It seems at first thought difficult to understand why God should make such a requirement of Abraham as to order him to slay his own son whom he loved. But when we read the story through, we learn how little we understand God and how much our God deserves our most profound reverence and our deepest love.

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

"Deep in unfathomable mines
Of never-failing skill,
He treasures up his deep designs,
And works his sovereign will."

The gifted authoress of "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life" tells of a Christian lady who had great difficulty in finding the truth regarding God's effective providences. She did the right, wise thing, however; she asked God to guide her into the truth. She asked him to make it clear to her whether he was in everything or not. After praying thus for a few days, she had what she described as a vision. She thought she was in a perfectly dark place, and that there advanced toward her a great body or atmosphere of light which completely surrounded her on every side. Then a voice seemed to say: "This is the Presence of God. This is the Presence of God."

While in the midst of this atmosphere of light all the great and awful things in life seemed to pass before her, fighting armies, wicked men, raging beasts, storms and pestilences, sin and suffering of every kind. She was afraid at first, but she soon saw that the Presence of God so protected her that not a lion could reach out its paw, nor a bullet fly through the air, except as the Presence of God moved out of the way to permit it. She noticed that if there were ever so thin a film of his glorious Presence between herself and the most terrible violence, not a hair of her head could be ruffled, nor anything touch her. Then all the small and annoying things in life passed before her, and in like manner she felt herself so protected from them that not a cross look, not a harsh word, nor petty trial of any kind could affect her unless the light of God's encircling Presence moved out of the way to permit it.

This vision was God's answer to his servant's prayer, telling her that he was in everything. After that she had no difficulty in believing that all the circumstances and events in her life were directed and shaped by him, no matter what human agencies seemed to be immediately responsible for them, and she was thus led to an unwavering, child-like trust in his wise and loving care.

This is indeed comforting teaching, and all the more comforting when we know that it is all abundantly borne out by the explicit statements of God's Word.

But life's dark and hard experiences are not merely permitted by our Almighty and Gracious Heavenly Father, but, note well, they are used by him to lead us into the light of a clear faith, a warmer love and a more happy and active service in his name. Did not Jesus say, "Every branch in me that beareth fruit he purges or pruneth it that it bring forth more fruit." (John 15: 12). Upon this verse Dr. Godet, in his scholarly commentary on John's Gospel, says:

"It is first of all by the Word of Christ that God shall purge his people from the shooks of their own life which show themselves in them; then, when this proves insufficient, God will use other and more painful means, which will, like a sharp pruning knife, cut to the quick of the carnal affections, and thus the whole being of the disciple will at last be devoted to the production of the divine fruit which we ought to bear."

Obedience was the fruit in Abraham's case, absolute and unquestioning. This God heartily prizes.

"Almighty God demands the complete subjugation of our will to his own. This is a hard lesson for man to learn. Man loves his own will. He thinks it best. He clings to it long. It is just here that the great battle must be fought. We are not called upon to give up one taste out of many; one pursuit out of many; one wish out of many; we are distinctly called upon to give up everything—to sink our will in God's; to be no longer our own; to sum up every prayer with 'Nevertheless not my will, but thine be done!' That is pure religion before God and the Father." (Parker).

And how inexpressibly rich and abundant the reward which follows such obedience! A special angelic visitation communicates the tidings of it. Hear it:

"And the angel of the Lord called unto Abraham out of heaven the second time, and said, By myself I have sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son; that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the seashore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice" (Gen. 22: 15-18).

We can not but admire the great faith of Abraham. He took God at his word.

His was unquestioning, prompt, real obedience.

"Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die;
Into the valley of death
Rode the six hundred."

And what a munificent reward there is assured to all such as Abraham! Listen to the royal promise:

"Verily I say unto you, There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father or mother, or children or lands, for my sake and the Gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses and brethren, and sisters and mothers, and children and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life" (Mark 10: 29, 30).

The story is told of an Eastern king who was once in need of a faithful servant and friend. He gave notice that he wanted a man to do a day's work, and two men came and asked to be employed. He engaged them both for certain fixed wages and set them to work to fill a basket with water from a neighboring well, saying he would come in the evening and see their work. He then left them to themselves and went away. After putting in one or two bucketfuls one of the men said:

"What is the good of doing this useless work? As soon as you put the water in on one side it runs out on the other."

The other man answered: "But we have our day's wages, haven't we? The use of the work is the Master's business, not ours."

"I am not going to do such fool's work," replied the other, and, throwing down his bucket, he went away.

The other man continued his work until about sunset, when he exhausted the well. Looking down into it he saw something shining at the bottom. Carefully letting down his bucket once more, he drew up a precious diamond ring.

"Now I see the use of pouring the water into a basket," he exclaimed to himself. "If the bucket had brought up the ring before the well was dry, it would have been found in the basket. The labor was not useless after all."

The king had ordered this task to test their capacity for perfect obedience.

Dear friend, try implicit obedience to the divine will and you will see its reasonableness, and you will enjoy the rewards God has promised.

A MINISTER IN CHINA.

Dr. J. H. Gauss, superintendent of the Brookes Bible Institute, 2051 Park Avenue, St. Louis, has received a very interesting letter from his co-presbyter, Rev. J. S. Flacks, known and loved by many people of St. Louis and throughout the country.

Mr. Flacks tells of an exciting railroad trip from Hankow to Peking, China, passing through drouth and flooded districts, and being plunged into the turmoil of warring soldiers, all within one or two days' ride. He himself, however, was brought through in safety without a loss, though with some discomfort, in the midst of delightful reflection upon our Lord's gracious and bountiful providences, as seen in more favored sections of the country.

Mr. Flacks has met with warm welcome from many missionaries, God's children never failing to recognize the presence of his Spirit in another believer. He made the acquaintance of Dr. Gauss' daughter while at a Bible conference at Kuling, where many missionaries spend their rest season, and where, as Miss Gauss has written, his expositions of God's Word were considered very helpful by many.

At Shanghai our brother had a door opened to him to preach the Gospel to Jewish refugees from Russia, including other Russians, among whom the message of God's grace found saving access.

Let us pray that sinners may be saved and saints built up through our brother's ministry as he continues to follow the Lord's providential leading. It is his hope to visit Palestine and Egypt before he returns.

STONY BROOK CONFERENCE.

The Conference on the Fundamentals has closed its sessions at Stony Brook, Long Island. This was the last of a series that began on July 3. More people were present and deeper interest was manifested than in any of the previous summers in the ten years since the Stony Brook movement was inaugurated.

The conference was opened on Aug. 21 with a sermon by Rev. Dr. John H. McClurkin, pastor of the Sixth United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh and a director of the Stony Brook Assembly. The evening sermon was preached by Rev. Dr. Ford C. Ottman, of Stamford, Conn. Throughout the conference morning devotions were conducted by Rev. Dr. W. F. McMillin, of St. Louis.

Prof. John G. Machen, of Princeton, lectured each morning on the four Gospels, concluding with a lecture on "Jesus of the Gospels." The ministers, as well as others, crowded to hear Prof. Machen's lectures. They were clear in teaching, loyal in spirit and brilliant in presentation.

Rev. Dr. Hugh Jack, of Newark, N. J., gave two helpful addresses. Rev. Dr. Aquila Webb, of Philadelphia, made two addresses, specially to ministers, on evangelism in the pastorate and in the Church. Rev. Dr. David G. Wylie lectured on "The Bible and How We Got It." Rev. Dr. David S. Kennedy made an address on "The Everlasting Covenant." Rev. Dr. David M. Skilling, of Webster Groves, Mo., made three addresses on the Church and the Doctrines needed for our times. Dr. William Hiram Foulkes spoke on the three "Sevenfolds" of the first Epistle of Peter—a sevenfold glory, a sevenfold suffering, and a sevenfold way. Rev. M. H. Fishburn, of Frazer, Pa., gave a thoughtful and helpful message to Christians.

Captain Gipsy Pat. Smith spoke on venturing on larger evangelistic efforts. Rev. Dr. William A. Curry, of Philadelphia, spoke on "Evangelism in Three Pastorates." Dr. George G. Mahy and Dr. W. B. Greenway spoke on the Outlook for Evangelism. Rev. William Charles Hogg, of Williamsport, gave a helpful address. Dr. A. Gordon MacLennon, of Boston, spoke on "The Justice of God." Mr. John C. Williams made an address on the "Value of Doctrinal Studies to Young Men." Dr. William R. Coil, lecturer and explorer, gave a lecture on China.

The last sermon of the conference was delivered by Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young, of Brooklyn, on "The Ageless Jesus." One night of the conference was given to a memorial service for Charles M. Alexander and John H. Wyburn. Dr. Carson presided and addresses were made by Mr. Philip I. Roberts, Mr. W. E. Robertson, Mr. Hugh R. Monro, Mr. F. Murray Olyphant and Dr. Ford C. Ottman.

The closing session will be long remembered. Dr. Carson presided. Brief addresses were made by Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, Dr. Herbert Ure, of Woodburg, N. J.; Mr. William F. Kline and Dr. William F. Curry, of Philadelphia; Dr. S. Turner Foster, of New Haven; Dr. Herbert F. Fields, of Brooklyn, and Dr. Ford C. Ottman. Dr. Carson made the closing address, focusing his appeal upon three questions: "Do I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Savior?" "As a believer have I definitely dedicated myself to Christ?" "Am I willing to do God's will in all things?" A profound impression was made.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

The Board of Home Missions is now in the business of budget-making, not simply for the year ending March 31, 1922, but for the year beginning April 1, 1922, and ending March 31, 1923, by the order of the General Assembly. The Board, therefore, has called a meeting in New York for Sept. 22d to 29th, in an effort to build a reasonable budget, and, at the same time, one which will enable the Board to serve the whole Church with the greatest possible efficiency and economy. How near we will come to this ideal will be determined by the future.

Dr. Montgomery and I will be in New York from Sept. 13th on to Sept. 29th, engaged in daily meetings with the Executive Council of the Home Board until the larger meeting is called, when the whole field of our home mission enterprise will be carefully considered and our budgets adjusted to our needs and expectations. It's a difficult task, but everything worth while at the present day presents difficulties.

We are delighted with the reports that come to us from the field of the progress of the kingdom. In Montana, Mr. Livingston and Dr. Shepherd are giving their time, without stint, in the promotion of better organization and more thorough evangelization, Mr. Livingston giving practically his whole time to evangelistic meetings and to the organization of them.

Dr. Cory, the superintendent of Arizona, has not been well for some weeks, and is scarcely able now to do the work committed to him, but recent advices from Arizona assure us that they are getting a better organization and are better equipped to do a larger work than heretofore.

Our superintendent for New Mexico, Rev. Dr. J. L. Marquis, was in a very serious railway accident not long ago, and was forced to go to his home for two or three weeks to recuperate, but he writes that the fields are better supplied in New Mexico now than they have been for years.

In Arkansas, Rev. Mr. Lewis and his singer are going into churches, conducting evangelistic meetings with great results, and the men in Arkansas are greatly encouraged by what he and others are doing.

North and South Dakota, as well as sections in Montana, have suffered greatly with successive droughts, but are steadily holding their places and battling for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God. It became necessary in the Presbytery of Bismarck to give one man a circuit covering a good many churches, in order to supply needy communities with the Gospel. These are communities, also, in which there is no other Protestant church.

The field men in Texas are planning for and conducting evangelistic meetings, and the reports are that the kingdom of God is being greatly advanced by these meetings. I think the same can be said all over home mission territory, and I am hopeful that the records of the current year not only equal but surpass those of the preceding year, which, perhaps, show the largest increase in all the years of our Church's life.

A new section in Louisiana will, no doubt, soon be opened for us, and, in co-operation with the Board of Publication and Sabbath Schools, we will supply a very needy section with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. A French-speaking pastor will be secured, a woman worker and a representative of the Board of Publication. The section has been investigated by Dr. King, Dr. Provine and Dr. Webb, and they agree that there is a wide field for the Church in that section. Almost every day letters come to this office saying: "We have found a good man who will supply some of our vacant churches, if the Board can assist us in supporting them." We in this office believe that the Church will support the Board of Home Missions in its efforts to assist needy communities in supplying themselves with the Gospel.

Much of the talk about overlapping in home mission fields is wide of the mark, as shown by records which we have in our office, and which we hope to present at the proper time to the proper authorities. It is very easy for a man to come as a stranger in a community and see a number of church houses, and then go away and say, "Great waste of men and money." He doesn't take into account the fact that the churches he sees in the community supply the Gospel to a large area around the village, and when he considers the community at large, there is very little overlapping.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

The Gypsy Smith evangelistic meetings, which are designed to reach the East End residents, have been prepared for with a great deal of energy and care. They began Sept. 11th, and are to continue for three weeks, being held in Motor Square Garden building, a large edifice originally constructed as a market-house enterprise. Located quite in the center of East Liberty, it is not far from our East Liberty and Tabernacle churches, and is accessible from many other churches. The platform is constructed to accommodate a choir of fifteen hundred persons, led by Messrs. McEwan and Young, who have conducted the service of song in connection with this evangelist for some years. Twenty captains, supported by twenty assistants, have been enrolled for personal work, and a committee of two hundred women will look after the afternoon meetings, specially designed to reach the women. The last of the preceding community prayer meetings, designed to arouse interest and enlist workers in that region, was held at the Third Church on the evening of Sept. 7th, in which five churches of as many different denominations took part. The harmony, interest and mutual devotion were indicative of a great desire to support Gypsy Smith, and gain the largest spiritual results. These gatherings are a body blow to the critics of the Church, as being selfishly sectarian and unfraternal, and they remove the theory that formal union is so necessary. Perhaps I feel this most strongly, because Presbyterians seem so fraternal, and truly co-operative. On Saturday, Sept. 10th, a dinner was given Gypsy Smith at the William Penn Hotel to meet the ministers of the city.

At the same time the preparations for the "Eleventh Council of the Reformed Church holding the Presbyterian System" are being made, and it is hoped this council will also show the essential unity of believers, when so many churches abroad and at home, through their delegates, unite in the highest devotional exercises, and the discussion of the great religious questions, which range over "Inspiration," "The Church," "Labor Questions," "Temperance and Morals." The East and the West, despite Kipling, do meet when Dr. Park, from Ireland, and Blair, from China, stand on the same platform.

The body of Lieutenant Joseph M. Duff, Jr., killed in France shortly before the armistice was declared, has been brought to Carnegie, Pa., his former home, and buried from the church of which his father, Rev. Joseph M. Duff, D.D., was pastor for so many years. Not until several days after the cessation of war did his parents learn of his death on the field of battle, in one of those deadly wilderness struggles. Let us hope that the sacrifice of such a young and useful and heroic life, like that of so many others, may not be ineffectual to preserve the world from future wars. Would that such offerings of life and heart and strength might reiterate, in an ever higher meaning, the old cry of France, "They shall not pass," when directed at the selfishness of nations, and the rapacity of governments, and the avarice of peoples.

MEETINGS AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

There has just been concluded in Springfield, Ill., one of the most remarkable series of union open-air Sabbath evening church services held anywhere in the United States. The services were held on the grounds of the Court House square, in the heart of the city, which has a population of about 70,000.

Fred G. Fischer, former chorus leader for Rev. Billy Sunday, was engaged for the period to organize and conduct a large chorus. One of the local bands was engaged to accompany the chorus and render special sacred musical numbers. A large platform was built for the ministers and chorus and 2,500 canvas seats were set out each time. The preaching in nearly every case was by one of the local pastors. A special feature was made of the music, some of the great sacred choral masterpieces being presented by the chorus, aided by local soloists and accompanied by the band; for instance on the last evening a portion of the oratorio, the "Messiah," lasting thirty minutes, was given following the sermon.

The attendance at nearly every service was 2,500 or more. On the last evening, with a visiting evangelist preaching, more than 3,000 persons were present. Hundreds of people were attracted to the services each evening who seldom, or never attend a church service. Fifteen churches and religious organizations joined in the services throughout the period, and twenty-seven churches and organizations participated in the last service.

Eight services were held at a total cost of about $2,300. The financing was so arranged that no burden was placed on any of the participating churches. In addition to the free-will offerings received at each service, a fund was raised by popular subscription in amounts of 50 cents, $1, $2 and $5. After paying all bills, the committee in charge will have left a neat surplus for next year. E. J. Kneale.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

A year of intensive evangelistic campaigning is planned for the city under the auspices and direction of a committee of one hundred, at the suggestion of the Chicago Church Federation Council. This means that, working under one leadership, all of the Protestant churches will carry on simultaneously a forward movement in evangelistic services. It is proposed that the movement begin on Sept. 15th with a union prayer service, held in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, led by Dr. John Timothy Stone. On Oct. 3d a union meeting of the ministers will be held at the same place, to be addressed by Dr. Charles L. Goodell and evangelistic secretaries. Dr. Goodell's address will be, "A Call to the Colors." From this meeting until the holidays the campaign will be on, each church entering freely, with liberty for any to conduct its own campaign independent of the Federation's program. Gypsy Smith, "the most beloved living evangelist," has been invited, and has accepted, to give a week in January to the campaign, delivering six addresses, two on the North Side, two on the South Side and two on the West Side, thus intensifying the fervor and zeal of the campaign. During Easter week, Dr. F. F. Shannon will again take the Holy Week services in the loop. The Presbyterians are represented in the movement by the presbytery's Evangelistic Committee, of which Dr. Henry Hepburn, of Buena Memorial Church, is chairman, to which committee have been added, as representatives at large, Drs. John Timothy Stone, Henry S. Brown, Clifford W. Barnes, Elders Nathan G. Moore, Vice-Moderator of the General Assembly, Frank J. Loesch and J. B. Cornish.

Labor Day Sabbath was not largely observed by the pastors. For the first time in many years the Chicago Federation of Labor observed the day with a parade.

Rev. W. E. Donaldson occupied the pulpit of the Third Church on Sept. 4th, both morning and evening.

Dr. M. D. Hardin passed through the city from his summer home at Ephraim, Wis., last week.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

Rev. George S. Watson has a new development in his field. At Travelers' Rest the people made a fine subscription for a Junior High School. They need a man to take charge of the church at this place, to become superintendent of the school, and to teach the two-year high-school course. The salary will be $1,500. Living will be cheap. It is one of the finest communities in the state. There has been a Presbyterian Church here for many years. It is a great opportunity for some young man.

Rev. W. H. Neal has just closed a good meeting at Mt. Moriah. They had four professions and four additions.

Rev. H. M. Gilbert, in canvassing the Presbytery of Princeton for Ministerial Relief, raised $3,700 for the five-year period. Mayfield subscribed $838.50.

Rev. J. R. Crawford, D.D., is back from his vacation and hard at work in the Kentucky Avenue Church.

Rev. John A. Troxler has finished his month and a half vacation. The first part was spent at the Ovoca Bible Conference. He then assisted in two meetings. In the last thirty days of his vacation he preached forty-six times and made three addresses. He first assisted Rev. J. C. Callan at Pine Grove Church. There were more than fifty professions and forty additions. It was a great revival. Mr. Callan is doing a fine work. Mr. Troxler then went to Guston to assist Rev. T. N. Williams. They had seven confessions and seven additions.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Rev. Dr. John MacNeill, of the Fort Washington Presbyterian Church, preached last Sabbath morning and evening for Rev. Dr. David J. Burrell, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church.

Rev. Dr. Charles R. Brown, of Yale Divinity School, continues to be the supply at the St. Nicholas Collegiate Reformed Church, until the return of the pastor, Rev. Dr. MacLeod.

In the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church last Sabbath, morning and afternoon, Rev. F. B. Meyer was the preacher. Dr. Meyer preached in the evening in the Tent Evangel.

It has been decided to continue the Tent Evangel work this fall and winter in a downtown auditorium, where a service will be held each Sabbath beginning in October. The First Reformed Episcopal Church has been presented with an eighty-three-acre farm at Pine Bush, N. Y., to be used for fresh-air work. This church was the first of its denomination, and its edifice was on Madison Avenue in a fashionable district. The building was sold, and now, after some years of comparative inactivity, the work of the church will be continued on a large scale in the building formerly the Beekman Hill Methodist Church. The cornerstone of the old church will be placed at the front of the building, and dedicatory services will be held Oct. 9; and Oct. 15 the church will be consecrated by Bishop Rudolph immediately after he has called to order the annual convention of the denomination.

The noon-day services at the Brick Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. William P. Merrill, pastor, have been resumed and are held every day except Saturday.

Rev. Dr. E. P. Jones, of Cardiff, Wales, preached last Sabbath morning in the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Rev. E. W. Work, D.D., pastor.

Rev. Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, the pastor of the Broadway Congregational Tabernacle, has been bereaved by the sudden death of his son, twenty-three years of age, at Utica, N. Y., where he was engaged in business.

The Presbyterian Ministers' Association held its first meeting Monday, Sept. 12, the members telling of their vacation experiences and what they brought back with them. The meetings are held in the assembly room of the Board of Foreign Missions, in the Presbyterian Building, 156 Fifth Avenue. Brethren visiting in New York are cordially invited to attend the Ministers' Meetings.

The Dry raiders have been very successful during the past few days. The statistics show that, since the advent of prohibition enforcement, there has been a marked increase in the use of milk in New York. Another item of interest is that the death rate among children is less on the East Side than up in the Riverside Drive region. The children on the East Side play in the streets, are flooded in the hot weather by streams played on them by the good-natured firemen, and in many other ways lead the strenuous life. What these children need is more Sabbath schools. The day schools are just opening for the year, and the lack of room for the children is appalling. Many have to attend school on short time. This is because of lack of funds in the city treasury.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

Jonesboro Presbytery met in Macy. Rev. R. L. Nicholson was re-elected moderator. Rev. E. M. Morse is the pastor of the Macy church. Every minister was present but only three elders. The presbytery voted no to the two overtures sent down by the General Assembly. Rev. T. E. Threlkeld, of Monette, will supply Ravenden Springs and Concord churches.

Greenwood Church entertained the Ft. Smith Presbytery Sept. 6th. Rev. L. E. Blakemore was elected moderator. Rev. H. W. Chamberlin was received from East Tennessee Presbytery. Mr. Chamberlin was called to Boonville and his installation will occur on Oct. 2d. Presbytery gave the Charleston U. S. A. church and property to the Washburn U. S. Church. The property is valued at about $3,000 and the church had about twenty members. Presbytery voted no to the two years overture and yes to the overture on women as deacons. Rev. D. Art Ray is the pastor here and he will soon have a splendid new church building.

Rev. W. E. Ellis, whose home is near Jonesboro, lost his home by fire recently and his loss is about $6,000.

Rev. M. L. Womack, of Richmond, Kan., has accepted a call to Cincinnati and Nicodemus churches in Arkansas Presbytery. Rev. F. Sanders again becomes pastor of the Atkins-Stouts Chapel churches. Rev. Geo. T. Clark becomes pastor at Hartford.

Evangelist H. E. Nixon, evangelistic singer, has an open date during October and would be glad to assist any minister wishing his services.

WORK FOR THE SABBATH.

Rev. H. L. Bowlby, D.D., of New York, secretary of the Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance of the General Assembly, Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., and general secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States, together with Rev. H. H. McQuilkin, D.D., of Orange, N. J., chairman of the Permanent Committee, and Rev. Robert Watson, D.D., a member of the Board of Managers of the Alliance, were speakers at the three days' institute on the Sabbath question at Montreat Summer Conference of the Southern Presbyterian Church, N. C. The institute was arranged by Dr. Robert Hill, chairman of the Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance of the Presbyterian Church, U. S., and Rev. I. Cochrane Hunt, D.D., secretary of the Southern District of the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States.

Dr. Bowlby spoke at the Stony Brook Assembly, Aug. 25th, on "The 'Blue Law' Propaganda Attack on the American Christian Sabbath and the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States." Following this, he left for Winona Lake, where he spoke before a number of denominational conferences. He will go from there to St. Louis, where he addresses the National Association of Letter Carriers in biennial convention. It was the Lord's Day Alliance which won for one hundred thousand letter carriers and postoffice clerks their Sunday rest, having led the movement which resulted in 1912 in the enactment of a federal law closing first and second-class postoffices, general delivery windows and letter carriers windows on the Lord's day. Laboring forces in the employ of the Government and in many large corporations are grateful to the churches for the victories they have been winning for them along Sunday and weekly rest-day lines through the intermediary of the churches, the Lord's Day Alliance. Every church ought to realize what a great service is being rendered by the agency which they created thirty-three years ago, and lend it every possible moral and financial support. The exceptional and terrific attack by well-organized and heavily-financed organizations during the last nine months should be sufficient to awaken every member of our evangelical churches to the real perils of our Christian Sabbath.

SABBATH WORK.

I am glad to see that you stand four-square for a proper observance of the Sabbath. The experience of the writer is that railroads are the great force that is undermining the sacred rest day. Sunday trains, especially at division stations, call for Sunday work for a large percentage of the citizens. If engineers, firemen, conductors, porters and brakemen work on Sunday, why can not their neighbors at any necessary job, and so the idea spreads. Many of these men are church members, or if not, their wives are, and you stir up a hornet's nest if you preach against Sunday labor.

Then if the trains run, express office work goes on. The mails come and go. The creameries must care for the milk coming on trains. Farmers bring their milk to town on their way to church. So that the best of men, seeing others pursuing labor on Sunday, think they, too, can work, and so the day is becoming less and less a sacred day. D. A. W.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. James B. Cochran, foreign missionary of our Presbyterian Board at Hwai Yuan, China, since 1899, died on Aug. 30th, while on furlough, at the home of his mother at Plainfield, N. J., in the forty-seventh year of his age. He was born at Mendham, N. J., Dec. 27, 1879; graduated at Princeton University and Union Seminary, and was ordained in 1899 by the Presbytery of Morris and Orange. His wife, who was Miss Margaret H. Jenkins, of Boonton, N. H., died some years ago.

Rev. George Ernest, of Fort Simcoe, Wash., a member of Emporia Presbytery, died at the home of his daughter, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He was born Sept. 19, 1845, in Jevestedt, Holstein, Germany. He came to the United States in the fall of 1867. He graduated from Hanover College and Duquesne Seminary, and was ordained in 1876 by the Presbytery of New Albany. He spent his whole ministry in the home mission field. His charges were in New Albany, Rushville, Nebraska City, Wichita and Emporia Presbyteries. The burial was in Burlingame, Kan. His was a long and useful ministry.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The church of Evanston has entered upon its fall work in a newly decorated and frescoed building. The trustees have expended $1,500 on this work. A new Y. P. S. C. E. has been formed. On last Thursday night, at a reopening social conducted by the Woman's Bible Class, Dr. Moses Breeze, of Columbus, was the speaker. On last Sabbath the church arranged a special ex-service men's program, with Thomas H. Morrow as the speaker.

Rev. and Mrs. Meigs V. Crouse are now in their new residence, 531 Terrace Avenue, in Clifton, and the Children's Home, which they served so long and so well, is now under the superintendency of Mr. Carroll H. Lewis. Mr. Crouse retired on the day he became seventy years of age. During the forty years of his service here 42,000 children passed through the Home, with all of whom he came into helpful, personal contact. The trustees have placed on the permanent records of the Home a most beautiful expression of appreciation of his work.

Dr. Charles Frederic Goss, having spent the summer in this city, has returned to Daytona, Fla., where he will occupy the pulpit of the "Tourists' Church" for the next six months. He and Mrs. Goss went in their automobile, as they have done several times before.

Lane Seminary will open on Thursday, Sept. 22d, at 11 a. m., with an address by President McKibbin on "The Gospel, and the Promises and Problems of the Present Age." All the faculty, including the new members, Dr. Frank Granstaff and Rev. Julian Price Love, are on the ground, and there is great promise of a fine year.

The Kentucky Sunday-school Association will hold its annual meeting in Newport, Ky., Oct. 4th to 7th. A good program has been prepared. Some of the speakers are Marion Lawrence; Robert M. Hopkins, St. Louis; A. M. Locker, Chicago; Miss Ida M. Koontz, Miss Emma Wells, Dr. W. A. Ganfield, Danville, Ky.; Dr. Charles W. Welch, Louisville; Rev. C. P. Moore, Miss Mary F. Price and Rev. J. W. Weldon.

Services were held last Sabbath in many of the churches for the ex-service men, and in nearly all of the churches the general subject was of a Christian patriotic nature.

Dr. Frank Marston preached last Sabbath in the Church of the Covenant; Dr. McKibbin in the Sixth Church, and Dr. J. V. Stephens in Westminster Church of Price Hill.

Rev. Peter Robertson, D.D., preached last Sabbath in Carmel Church, assisting Dr. W. L. Breen.

Rev. Dr. W. S. Nelson, of Syria, has been changed again in his field, going back from Aleppo to Tripoli, Syria.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Rev. Ralph Marshall Davis, D.D., returned from his vacation at the end of last week and resumed his pulpit at the First Church last Sabbath morning.

Rev. R. S. Calder, D.D., dean of Bible literature at Lindenwood College, preached last Sabbath at Kings Highway Church.

Rev. H. Magill, D.D., stated clerk of St. Louis Presbytery, preached at Jerseyville, Ill., on Sabbath, Sept. 4th.

Rev. Frank H. Magill resumed his pulpit at the Oak Hill Church on Sabbath, Sept. 4th, after a vacation, with his family, spent at Goodland, Ind.

The North Church began its "fellowship" dinners last week, the first dinner being served by the "September Circle," preceding the midweek service, Wednesday evening.

Two of our pastors, Rev. A. F. Wells, of Curby Church, and Rev. R. L. Evans, of Sutter Avenue Church, and the head of Brooks Bible Institute, Rev. J. H. Gauss, D.D., gave addresses at a union Bible conference in Forest Park, on Labor Day, Sept. 5th.

A suggestion to generosity is made by Rev. George Wales King, of Markham Church, in behalf of the College of the Ozarks, at Clarksville, Ark., where books are scarce. Mr. King has recently taken from his own library one hundred volumes, which he has donated to this college.

A missionary meeting, preceded by a dinner, was held last Thursday evening at Kings Highway Church, of all the evening missionary societies of the Presbyterian churches. Miss Jane Thompson, whom the young people of this presbytery support as a missionary in India, made an address.

Rev. John W. MacIvor, D.D., pastor of the Second Church, motored in his own car, during his vacation, from St. Louis to Boston, Mass. and back again. He went by train from Boston to Nova Scotia for several weeks among relatives, returning home on Sept. 2d.

The Brandt Memorial Mission, at 5023 Morganford Road, observed its first anniversary, Sabbath, Sept. 4th, with a service in which addresses were made by the Sabbath-school Missionary, Rev. E. A. Smith, and by Mr. E. T. Eitzman, who assisted in the organization one year ago. There was also a reception to new members, and the building committee reported. This mission is under the care of Tyler Place Church.

Dr. Skilling, of the Webster Groves Church, returned from the East and preached in his own pulpit for two Sabbaths before leaving for the Presbyterian Council at Pittsburgh, Sept. 16th to 25th, to which he is one of the General Assembly's delegates.

OHIO.

Bethel Church, Presbytery of Steubenville, Rev. J. S. Cotton, pastor, celebrated its centennial on Sept. 3 and 4. The anniversary sermon was by Rev. Thomas J. Gray, of Pittsburgh, Pa. The history of one hundred years, written by the pastor, was read. Rev. H. C. Foster, D.D., of Cement, Okla., gave an address. The ministerial sons of Bethel are as follows: Rev. M. M. Travis, who died at Chenoa, Ill., Oct. 27, 1901; Rev. John F. Patterson, D.D., of Orange, N. J.; Rev. Hugh F. Earseman, D.D., of Knox, Pa.; Rev. Walter M. Grafton, Ph.D., of South Sioux City, Neb.; Rev. Elmer E. Patterson, of West Lafayette, O.; Rev. John Norris; Rev. Vincent Gray, Oroville, Wash.; Rev. Wendell Foster, Chickasha, Okla., and Rev. S. Ernest Foster, who died at Union City, Ind., Sept. 24, 1918. Addresses and sermons were delivered by Rev. M. H. Woolf, Rev. W. H. Clark, Rev. C. S. McClelland, D.D., of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Rev. John F. Patterson, D.D., Orange, N. J. This is the third church centennial the present pastor has had in three successive fields.

Second Church of Portsmouth was supplied Aug. 28 by Rev. W. S. Harold, of Seaman. Lacy Harold, his son, is a teacher in this Sabbath school while taking a course at Portsmouth College of Business.

Rev. G. M. Whitenack, of Salem, has received a call to the Deep Run and Doylestown Church, Pa., in the Presbytery of Philadelphia North.

Rev. J. B. Williamson, of Pataskala, began his work as pastor at Rushville on Sept. 4. Extensive repairs have been made on the manse. Rev. John A. Stemen, of Bremen, has been supplying the church for two years, most acceptably. He preached at Logan on Sept. 4.

The church at Bremen, Rev. Gibson Wilson, pastor, is doing fine work for its young people. The pastor attended the Bible Conference at Winona Lake.

The meeting of Athens Presbytery has been postponed, for necessary reasons, for two weeks, so that it will be on Sept. 26, at Deerfield.

INDIANA.

Rev. Henry E. Neff, of Evansville, has returned from Winona Lake and the work in First Avenue Church is going on with special success.

Rev. J. C. Garritt, D.D., formerly president of Nanking Theological Seminary, China, is to be addressed at the College of Missions, Indianapolis, where he is to occupy the chair of Missions in China.

Dr. Matthew F. Smith, of Beaver Falls, Pa., has accepted the call to the First Church, Indianapolis, and will commence work there in October. He is a graduate of Grove City College and of Western Theological Seminary.

Ground has been broken for the new building of the Tabernacle Church, Indianapolis, Dr. J. Ambrose Dunkel, pastor.

Rev. Robert C. Byerly, of Sidon, Syria, was heard last Sabbath evening in Memorial Church, Indianapolis.

MICHIGAN.

The church of Wyandotte, Rev. Warren E. Hall, pastor, is having a fine pipe organ installed at an actual cost of $15,000. The church is prospering in every way.

NEW YORK.

The Church of Waverly, Rev. Albert O. Caldwell, pastor, with a membership of 381, has employed Mr. J. C. Travis, of Cortland, as director of the young people's work of the church.

PENNSYLVANIA.

During the vacation of Rev. C. R. Scafe, the Tyrone First Church pulpit was supplied by Rev. Dr. J. C. Day, a former pastor; Rev. I. Harvey Brumbaugh, D.D., and Rev. E. S.

Wallace, D.D. The pastor spent his vacation at Seattle, Wash., and other places.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rev. Dr. Edward A. Krapp, of Morgantown, has inaugurated the campaign for his fall and winter church work, by securing a thorough organization of his church members for intensive effort in their own local church.

Rev. G. H. L. Beeman, of Grafton, is the new Christian Endeavor president of West Virginia. In a recent number of the State Christian Endeavor Bulletin a fine, ringing message from his pen, accompanied by an excellent picture of the new president, is found on the first page. He is anxious to press the work of organization and spiritual effort. A better leader could not have been found.

KANSAS.

Conway Springs Church, Rev. T. R. Mordy, pastor, received three new members on confession on Sept. 4th.

The Kircher evangelistic party, of Emporia, Kan., are beginning the year with a tent meeting at La Harpe, Kan., co-operated in by all the churches of the community. The interest is good. Rev. J. T. Mitchell is Presbyterian pastor there.

First Church, Independence, Rev. W. Clyde Howard, pastor, starts the fall season with enthusiasm. The church has been renovated and new improvements have been made. The men's class is running at one hundred a Sabbath.

Rev. A. E. Wardner, D.D., has returned from his summer camp and has resumed his work at Hiawatha.

MISSOURI.

Rev. F. P. DeBolt, Ph.D., was installed pastor at Dexter last May, and since then a number of new members have been added. The old frame building is soon to be taken down and a modern brick structure to be erected, modern in plan and equipment for church and Sabbath-school work, with a good gymnasium, reading rooms and social parlors. A special evangelistic campaign is to begin Oct. 12th, and the pastor will be assisted by Evangelist Chester Birch.

The Presbyterian Orphanage of Missouri, located at Farmington, is doing a fine work and is making a strong appeal for help to all the Presbyterians of the synod. Full information will gladly be furnished by the superintendent, W. S. Stinson.

IOWA.

Rev. W. E. Ruston is just completing his sixth year as pastor at Columbus Junction with excellent success. Rev. Frank Schroeder has just completed a thorough religious census of the town.

NEBRASKA.

The church of Fairbury has just had the interior of the church building decorated at a cost of $600. The pastor, Rev. P. A. Davies, has a class of young people studying the book "Know Your Bible," by Dr. Young, of Dallas, Tex.

Harris G. Hilscher, a senior in Princeton Seminary, and son of Dr. S. S. Hilscher, of the Second Church of Lincoln, Neb., has been supplying the church at Bennet, Neb., during the summer, but will return to Princeton this month. He has had a fine work at Bennet. Fourteen, nearly all adults, were received into the church on a recent Sabbath.

Harold Long, a student in McCormick Seminary, has been supplying the church at Panama, Neb., during the summer, and has decided to continue through the year, taking a trip to Europe and the Holy Land in January and February, resuming his seminary work a year hence. Mr. Long is a son of Dr. B. M. Long, synodical superintendent of Evangelism. The work at Panama has been very successful. Many have been added to the church.

TEXAS.

The Presbytery of Fort Worth met at Denton Sept. 6th. Rev. S. D. Logan was elected moderator.

An evangelistic team, employed by the presbytery, reported for the last six months over 300 conversions. Two young men were taken under the care of the presbytery as candidates for the ministry. Two young ladies consecrated themselves to mission work. The presbytery purchased a car for the use of a young man just entering one of our most difficult fields. Two candidates, Everett B. King, of McCormick Seminary, and Albert G. Nash, of our State University, were licensed. The overture on women and the deaconship was answered in the affirmative and the one in reference to commissioners in the negative.—M. E. Chappell, S. C.

OKLAHOMA.

The Synod of Oklahoma meets at Cushing, Okla., Oct. 4th. All delegates, or others attending who desire entertainment, will please communicate as early as possible with the pastor, Rev. Leo. R. Burrows.

Cushing Church has been presented with a $5,000 pipe organ by Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Cullison, which is now ready for use. The church feels very grateful to the donors. Rev. Leo. R. Burrows has begun his pastorate here and is being greeted with large congregations.

COLORADO.

The First Church of Boulder received twenty-nine new members Sept. 4th. The pastor, Rev. Robert Karr, gave a series of studies covering the history of the Church, the doctrines and conditions for membership. These lectures were given Sabbath afternoons and about seventy-five people attended them. It is believed that those who are so trained will become firm in their adherence to the Church. Mr. Karr has spent just one year in Boulder, and during that year he has received 184 new members.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Huron Presbytery met Sept. 6th at Miller, Rev. T. J. Simons, pastor. The following new members were welcomed: Rev. Geo. S. McCune, from Cedar Rapids Presbytery; Rev. Chas. B. Bryant, from Sioux City, and Rev. Edwin L. Prather, from Rock River. The following were dismissed: Rev. Irwin Grant Smith, to Sioux City Presbytery; Rev. Oliver P. Devin, to Oklahoma, and Rev. R. W. Bellis to Lackawanna. Mr. Wendell Pontius was licensed.

Huron College closed its past year without any deficit in its current expense account. This was due to the determined and strenuous effort of its board of trustees, helped by the many friends of the college.

CALIFORNIA.

Twenty new members were welcomed into the First Church of Long Beach on Sept. 4th, by the pastor, Rev. George M. Rourke, D.D., at the communion, when Rev. W. H. Wray Bogle, D.D., of Denver, Col., assisted.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

Sir William Mitchell Ramsay, the eminent archæologist, is now in this country, and an itinerary is being arranged for him, the secretary being Miss Alyse Paddock Young, 1273 Pacific Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Dr. Ramsay has been excavating at Antioch of Pisidia, and has been discovering tablets and inscriptions of great corroborative value, in their relation to early Christian history.

Cedarville College, of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, at Cedarville, O., opened on Sept. 7th, with about one hundred students and about fifteen in the theological seminary.

Bishop W. N. Lewis, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died on Aug. 24th at Sioux City, Iowa, in the sixty-fifth year of his age. He was elected as a bishop in 1908.

More than one hundred young missionaries, bound for China and Japan, sailed from Seattle, Aug. 27, on the Hawkeye State. They are of various denominations, many of them being Baptists.

ALLISON—GILCHRIST—In San Francisco, Cal. Sept. 5, 1921, by Rev. Hugh W. Gilchrist, D.D., father of the bride, Miss Sadie Crowe Gilchrist and Mr. Ira S. Allison, instructor in the University of Minnesota, at Minneapolis, Minn.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

WILLEY—Amelia Hedges, daughter of Stephen O. and Sarah White Hedges, was born in Colerain Township, Hamilton County, O., April 30, 1836. She was united in marriage to Israel B. Willey April 7, 1858. For fifty-two years they shared each other's joys and sorrows. Their entire married life was spent on the Willey Farm, near Venice, where her husband died April 2, 1910. Since then she has spent a portion of her time in Westwood. There were born of this marriage five children, one son, Amos, having preceded them to the better land. There are still living two sons, two daughters, five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Early in life she united with the Venice Presbyterian Church and was a faithful and consistent member until her death. A love for her church, a deep, sympathetic interest in the welfare of others, a strong spirit of Christian hope, faith and love, characterized her life to the end, which came peacefully, after a lingering illness, July 21, 1921, in her 86th year. "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Funeral services were conducted at the Venice Presbyterian Church, July 23, by Rev. D. D. Davies. N. R. W.

HOME CIRCLE

A CAT TALE.

BY ELLEN MANLY.

The little old woman to town would go
To buy her a Sunday gown,
But a storm came up, and the wind did blow,
And the rain came pouring down;
And the little old woman, oh, sad to see!
In a terrible fidget! and fret was she—
In a terrible fret was she.

The little old man was cross and cold,
For the chimney smoked that day,
And never a thing would he do but scold
In the most unmannerly way.
When the little old woman said: "Listen to me!"
He answered her nothing but "fiddle-dee-dee!"
No, nothing but "fiddle-dee-dee!"

Then she whacked her puggy-wug dog, she did,
As asleep on the mat he lay;
And the puggy-wug dog ran off, and hid,
And howled in a dismal way.
For a puggy-wug was he of spirit and pride,
And a slight that he couldn't abide—
He couldn't, of course, abide.

Then Muffin, the kitten, said, "Deary me!
What a state of affairs is this!
I must purr my very best purr, I see,
Since everything goes amiss!"
So Muffin, the kitten, she purred and purred
Till, at last, the little old woman she heard—
The little old woman she heard.

And she smiled a smile at the little old man,
And back he smiled again,
And they both agreed on a charming plan
For a walk in the wind and rain.
Then, hand in hand, to the market town
They went to look for the Sunday gown—
For the coveted Sunday gown.

Then the chimney drew and the room grew hot,
And the puggy-wug dog and the cat,
Their old-time quarrels quite forgot,
And snuggled up close on the mat,
While Muffin, the kitten, she purred and purred,
And there never was trouble again, I've heard—
No, never again, I've heard. —Ex.

THE OLD-FASHIONED WAY.

BY FELICIA BUTTZ CLARK.

"Somehow, Aunt Jane, it seems to me as if Jim and I were growing a little apart—religiously, I mean. I love him just as much as ever and I'm a bit worried."

"Just what is the matter, dear?" Aunt Jane laid down her knitting and looked at this beloved niece through her tortoise-rimmed spectacles.

"Well, you see, I've always been regular in going to church and before we were married Jim always went with me. Now he says he's tired on Sabbath morning, and poor fellow! I believe he is. It's hard to work steadily six days out of seven. So he doesn't get up early, and breakfast is late, and I'm tired, too. We just decide that we'll stay home.

The needles clicked in the gray wool; one would call it vicious clicking if they were not in gentle Aunt Jane's hands.

"Sabbath newspaper?" she asked, suddenly.

"I don't think it's that, Aunt Jane, though I must confess that to read the volumes that we get every Sabbath requires time."

"Then there are the automobile rides," suggested Aunt Jane.

Miriam looked up at her, her blue eyes as clear as the reflection of the sky in a deep pool.

"We've only been a few times," she pleaded, "on the loveliest days. What's the matter with us, anyway, Aunt Jane, that we don't seem to want to go to church."

There was a long silence. Aunt Jane was thinking and wondering whether she dared to tell Miriam her thoughts. Nobody likes to be called old-fashioned by the dear girl whom she has brought up from a baby, and it really required courage for Aunt Jane to speak her mind. A pretty little flush came over her pale cheeks.

"Oh," burst out Miriam. "There was a young artist, one of Jim's friends, at our house for dinner on Wednesday, and he said that he never, never could forget the prayers which his father had made every morning when the family were all together. At the time when he was a boy, he had thought them, well, not exactly a bore, but a sort of waste of time, when he wanted to be out fishing or off to school. He and his sister used to nudge each other and look at the clock. But all the time his father's voice and his words were sinking into his mind and he remembers them now."

"I was going to suggest," began Aunt Jane, but Miriam was so interested in her subject that she went right on: "You know, Aunt Jane, I couldn't help thinking that if ever there were children in our home, I'd like to have them remember such things as that. But think of Jim conducting prayers!"

"I think you are mistaken about Jim. He has a high ideal of what a man ought to be in his home, and it will be your fault if he does not attain it."

"Mine?" Why, Aunt Jane, that's hardly fair."

"He is probably as afraid to speak to you of such matters as you are to broach them to him. It's extraordinary," mused Aunt Jane, "how easy it is for folks to talk politics, or the latest play, but let any one speak of religion, the most vital thing in our existence, and they shut up like clams. Now, Miriam, I have a book here with readings arranged for every day and short prayers. Take that home, dear, and tomorrow morning, have breakfast a little earlier and then put your arms around Jim's neck and say, 'Dear, let's begin right.' Jim will be glad, Miriam, yes, glad, Miriam, of the chance."

"I'll hurry away, Aunt Jane, or I'll not have time to get dinner before Jim comes. And I thank you a thousand times for the book and the advice. I guess maybe you're right about Jim, and maybe I have been at fault."

"How did it work?" Aunt Jane asked her niece a few weeks later when she literally "blew in" on a blustering March day.

"You mean the little book and—everything? Aunt Jane, I was so ashamed. Jim said he'd wanted to have a little prayer in the morning before he went away to business, it kind of helped a man to keep straight, and he'd longed to have me kneel down beside him, something to remember all day, he said. And he hadn't dared to mention it because it seemed so old-fashioned, you know. But he was glad—glad. And we're nearer together than ever, Aunt Jane, and we are going to be all our lives, even if it is old-fashioned."—Ex.

CHARLIE'S GOOD IDEA.

"Oh, Charlie dear, don't make such a noise with your drum!"

"Why not, Kitty? I'm a soldier home from the war," and six-year-old Charlie strutted up and down the nursery, beating his drum harder than ever.

Kitty tried to go on reading her pretty story-book, but in vain. "You forget that mamma has a headache," she said, looking rather cross.

"Oh, yes, so I did," said Charles; "I won't do it any more," and he was quiet as a mouse.

"Can't we have a game of soldiers, Kitty?" he asked at last.

"No; it's too noisy."

"The game I mean isn't noisy. I could be a soldier in the hospital, and you the nurse reading to me," said Charlie. Kitty laughed, but all the same she agreed, and she found that in pleasing her little brother she was happier than when reading her pretty story to herself.—Our Little Tots.

"A STRANGER GIRL."

BY CORA MATSON DOBSON.

When things go crisscross, mamma says,
"A stranger girl has come;
I do not like her manners, and I wish she'd stay at home.

"I think her mamma ought to make
Her lie all day in bed,
And not come frowning over here—
Send a sunshine girl instead."

And then, somehow, it leaves right off,
The crisscross things are gone.
There's no bad girl—there's only me—
And I'm the sunshine one. —Ex.

HOW TRIxie EARNED HER LUNCH BONES.

Trixie was a lovely white silky-haired dog with the cutest little black spot on each ear, and the tip of her ever-friendly wagging tail and she was the beloved pet of a little girl named Priscilla. Now Trixie often went to the store when Priscilla accompanied her mother and it happened one day when Trixie went alone the kind-hearted butcher man, seeing the friendly little dog looking longingly at the meat, yet never offering to touch anything, threw her the end of a soup bone.

To the butcher man's surprise, Trixie gave a delightful little bark, which said, "Thank you" as plainly as any dog could say it.

"That's quite a smart little dog you've got there," the butcher man said to Priscilla. "What's her name?"

"Her name's Trixie," Priscilla answered, "and she's tricky, too."

"I can well believe that," the butcher man laughed.

"Would you like to see her do some stunts?" asked Priscilla.

"Come around tomorrow about noon," the butcher man answered. "I won't be quite so busy then."

So the next day Priscilla took Trixie along with her to the butcher man's place, and when the dog had performed a number of cute little tricks, the butcher man gave her a nice, rich, juicy bone.

That was how it happened that every day about noon a little white dog with a black spot on each ear and the tip of her tail would enter the meat market, and standing on her hind feet, with her paws propped against the counter, would give a little bark to attract the butcher man's attention, and beg with her gentle brown eyes while she waited for the bone which she never failed to receive.

"You're about the nicest little dog there is," the butcher man declared, as he gave Trixie the end of a juicy bone, and Trixie never forgot her "thank you" bark as she picked up the bone and trotted proudly off in the direction of home.

When Priscilla saw Trixie coming home the first time all by herself with a fresh bone in her mouth, the little girl ran laughing to her mother.

"Mamma," she said, "Trixie has learned to go after her own lunch bones."

"I'm afraid Trixie is becoming a nuisance at the meat shop," Mrs. Deveny replied. "I'll have to see the butcher man about it."

So the next day when Priscilla and her mother went to the meat market they decided to keep the dog at home, but Trixie sly slipped out the back door and beat them to the shop, and to their great surprise, when they entered the shop they found Trixie at her accustomed place by the counter, waiting patiently for the bone, which she always received.

"I fear that dog's making you a lot of trouble," Mrs. Deveny said to the butcher man.

"Not at all, ma'am," he assured her. "She's a dog in a thousand, for I can go out and leave her alone and she never touches a thing—she really earns her bone by her nice, polite ways."

MY TASK.

To love some one more dearly every day;
To help a wandering child to find his way;
To ponder o'er a noble thought, and pray;
And smile when evening falls;
This is my task.

To follow truth as blind men long for light;
To do my best from dawn of day till night;
To keep my heart fit for his-holy sight;
And answer when he calls;
This is my task.

And then my Savior by and by to meet;
When faith hath made her task on earth complete;
And lay my homage at the Master's feet;
Within the jasper walls;
This crowns my task.

—The Christian Evangelist.

TESSIE'S TEXT.

"Bear ye one another's burdens."

Slowly Tessie read over the illuminated text that grandma had hung in her room. She thought it rather an inappropriate text for her room, because she was only seven, and you surely can't be expected to bear other people's burdens very well at seven. It would have been much better, she thought, to have it put on Aunt Mary's wall, or big brother Will's. Aunt Mary knew so much—oh, 'most everything there was to know—and brother Will was so strong. How easy it would be for them to bear the burdens of others. But she, Tessie, was little and weak and far from wise. What could she do?

A moment later, on her way down stairs, she heard grandpa say: "How I wish I had this letter mailed. But I do not feel as if I could walk five blocks in this hot sun."

"I'll mail it, grandpa," cried a joyous little voice, as Tessie flew for her hat. Here was a chance of bearing a burden for dear old grandfather, who was always so kind to her.

When the little girl returned from her errand she dropped into the hammock on the porch, and lay swinging to and fro in the shade of the vines, enjoying the delicious breeze that had sprung up. Inside, she heard mamma say to grandma: "Did you ever see a baby so fretful? I have never had such a weary time trying to sew. And this dress must be finished for tomorrow night!"

"Another chance to be a burden bearer," thought Tessie. She leaned in at the window. "Just hand me baby, mamma. I believe he will go to sleep for me out here in the hammock. It is so nice and cool now in the shade."

So mamma passed the whining little bundle through the low window, and the little girl sang and swung him to sleep.

So Tessie, who had never thought much about such things before, found that even a little child may help to bear the burdens of the world.

IT'S NOT TOO LATE.

BY BERTON BRAYLEY.

With doubt and dismay you are smitten,
You think there's no chance for you, son?

Why the best books haven't been written,
The best race hasn't been run;
The best score hasn't been made yet,
The best song hasn't been sung,
The best tune hasn't been played yet,
Cheer up, for the world is young.

The best verse hasn't been rhymed yet,
The best house hasn't been planned,
The highest peak hasn't been climbed yet,
The mightiest rivers aren't spanned,
Don't worry and fret, faint-hearted,
The chances have just begun,
For the best jobs haven't been started,
The best work hasn't been done.

LOVE TAKES THE HURT OUT.

A small brother and sister were playing together, and suddenly Ralph began to sob: "Martha slapped me," the tears beginning to roll down his cheeks.

"Why, Ralphie," cried Martha, much distressed, "I didn't mean that for a slap! I meant it for a love-pat."

And Ralph's tears stopped promptly, as if a faucet had been turned off somewhere, and, in the most matter-of-fact way imaginable, the little fellow said, "Oh, if it's a love-pat, it didn't hurt."

We may laugh at the quaintness of the lad's speech, yet it contains sound philosophy. As a matter of fact, love takes the sting out of that which otherwise would hurt. It is a small nature which does not respond when some one calls attention to something in matters or conduct, not for the love of finding fault, but for the love of us.—Selected.

"IT IS I."

"It is I; be not afraid." When Christ calmly spoke those words in the midst of the storm-tossed waves of Gennesaret, he laid down the criterion of justifiable and unjustifiable fear. When Christ is in the storm we are not to be afraid; when he is not there, we may well be terror stricken. Christ was not with Jonah in the tempest, and the runaway prophet had good reason for trembling. Christ was with Paul in the storm, and the great apostle made good cheer on his ship. So whenever our hearts beat wildly and deep anxiety grips us we must ask: "Is my Lord in this threat of disaster?" If he is, we are as safe as a babe in its mother's arms. If he is not, let us make all speed to where he is.

THE CUP AND SAUCER.

There was a terrible gale at sea, and some vessels were lost with all hands. A skipper, whose boat was saved, wended his way thankfully home, where his wife and children were anxiously waiting to welcome him.

He took off his sea boots, and his little girl brought him his slippers. He had just begun his supper when he said, "I can't go on, wife, thinking of how I have been taken care of by God." As tears filled his eyes he added; "My heart is too full, my cup runneth over." Then his little boy of four came running to his father's knee, as he said to him. "If your cup's running over, father, put a saucer under it, and pass on what runs over to some one else!"

He understood it right. He heard his good minister say when he told him about it, "Yes, I don't believe that God ever continues the 'over-flowing cup,' unless there is 'the saucer' ready to pass on the overflow to some one else. I do not know of any blessing spoken of in the Bible to those who hoard."

WALKING WITH GOD.

To live with God is to take away the desire for things which hurt our moral natures. The sure way to conquer sin is to so love God that sin will have no attraction for us. As long as we crave evil we can never be good. A blessed thing is to so live that the soul will be satisfied only in God. If we live in the Spirit, we will walk in the Spirit, and life will be safe and serene because it is content in the place for which it was created.

A STRIKING STATEMENT.

Dr. Caleb W. Saleeby, of London, is known throughout the world for his scientific contributions to the study of "race culture." He recently gave to the world the benefit of studies showing the destruction of vitamins of grain in the process of brewing, which he sums up in the following statement: "Beer is not liquid bread, but merely poisoned water." Dr. Saleeby who returned recently to Europe made an intensive study of conditions respecting childhood and motherhood in America and in dry Canada since the adoption of prohibition.

No. 649—QUOTATION JEWELS.

Our vision was dazzled with "Full many a (1) *** of purest ray serene" (Gray) as we were led through the jewelry shop.

In one case, "myriads of (2) ***** lights" (Tennyson) gleamed from golden brown jewels like tiger's eyes. The contents of another case reminded me of "Infancy, pellucid as a (3) *****" (Browning). In fact, every kind of jewel attracted me from some quotation I associated with it, such as the following:

"Only in dreams is a ladder thrown From the weary earth to the (4) ***** walls." (Holland.)

"For all the haft twinkled with (5) *****
sparks." (Tennyson).

"For thy mind is a very (6) *****"

(Shakespeare).

"Forth from her (7) ***** lips such folly broke." (Congreve).

"Thick set with (8) ***** and the azure sheen

Of turkis blue and (9) ***** green."

(Milton).

"Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
Which like dumb mouths do ope their (10) **** lips." (Shakespeare).

THIRD QUARTER.

Lesson XIII — September 25.

REVIEW OF QUARTER.

Golden Text: "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." Gal. 6:10.

We have been giving our attention during the weeks of this quarter to the study of the life of the apostle Paul, and we have had twelve very delightful and profitable lessons. Commencing with the consideration of his boyhood days and his early life, when he was known as Saul of Tarsus, we traced the events of his early ministry and apostleship. We learned the facts as to his conversion and his being chosen by the Lord to take up the work of giving the Gospel to the Gentile world, and we saw him starting out in his preaching, and then proceeding to Europe, to preach at Philippi and at Athens, and other places, and to write his wonderful letters, or epistles, to the churches he had organized. These epistles became a very large and important part of the inspired New Testament Scriptures, and we found in one of them the temperance lesson for the quarter. The only regret is that as this study has been during the summer, or vacation months, some may have neglected to keep up with the subjects and may have lost out some of these great lessons.

The first lesson was on "The early life of Saul," at Tarsus in Cilicia and in his studies at Jerusalem. He did not become a Christian until he was about thirty years of age, but he had been religiously reared in the Jewish religion, and was educated at Tarsus, and, afterwards, in the great schools of the Law at Jerusalem. But this was not enough then and it is not enough now. He needed more than there was in the Jewish religion, and every unconverted Jew today needs more than he is accepting. Jesus Christ is the need of every human soul, and these lessons tell how Saul found Christ or was found by him, and how each one of us may find the Savior.

The second lesson tells of a time when Saul was a member of the great Jewish Sanhedrin, and Stephen, a follower of Jesus Christ, was brought before that tribunal, charged with various offenses. The truth was that the only thing in the world of which he was guilty was that of loving and serving Christ, and the Jewish leaders wanted him killed and put out of their way. So they stoned him to death. Saul never forgot the dying testimony of this good Christian man, the first Christian martyr.

The third lesson shows us Saul excited and angry against all Christians, using all his power to destroy the work and church of Christ, in Jerusalem and even in foreign cities. But on one of his furious, persecuting campaigns, he was met on the road to Damascus, by the risen Jesus, and converted to him. The lesson tells of his being led into the city, there instructed, baptized, welcomed into the church and started on his life service.

The fourth lesson tells of his preaching the Gospel which he once opposed, and serving Christ, and Christians whom he once hated. He finds out soon what it is to be persecuted. It has come to be his portion to receive what he had given to so many others. The Jews try to kill him, but he is rescued and goes to Jerusalem, there to take up his work for Christ.

Lesson five tells of a great revival, or evangelistic work begun at Antioch. Barnabas goes to carry it on, but feeling need for assistance he secures Paul and they work together for a whole year, showing that they were men whom God was able to use for his great service. We find them going with famine relief to Jerusalem, taking gifts from the Christians at Antioch, showing that social service is not a matter of modern times alone.

The sixth lesson shows how Paul and Barnabas were set apart for foreign missionary work, how they started out from Jerusalem, and of their opening work at the Island of Cyprus and at Antioch of Pisidia. We see how wisely and mightily Paul met and overcame one who opposed his efforts.

In the seventh lesson we find Paul performing a notable miracle in the healing of a cripple at Lystra, and the people trying to offer a sacrifice to Paul and Barnabas, thinking them to be gods. Paul preached the Gospel earnestly to them, and soon opposition is stirred up and they stoned him and thought they had killed him. But he did not give up, but started out to revisit the church where he had been, always ready to preach the Gospel.

In the eighth lesson we find Paul starting on this great visitation, through Syria and Cilicia, Derbe and Lystra and other cities. We read of Barnabas taking John and going in one direction, while Paul chose Silas and went in another. We also read of Timothy and the beginning of his ministry for Christ.

The ninth lesson carries us out of Asia into Europe and the beginning of the work that was for the turning of that great heathen continent to the knowledge of Christ. How can any one object to foreign mission work when we know what it has done for us. They come to Philippi, after God had given Paul that notable vision of the man of Macedonia, and here they find the prayer meeting at the river side, and Lydia becomes the first European convert, she and all her household being baptized. In this lesson there is also the incident of casting the devil out of the maid and making enemies out of her masters.

In the tenth lesson Paul and Silas are beaten shamefully and thrust into the prison, but are delivered by the Lord by means of an earthquake. The conversion of the jailer occurs in this lesson, with his question, "What must I do to be saved?" and Paul's answer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house." The great change in the jailer is seen when, as a Christian he gives loving care to Paul and Silas. He and his family are baptized and become a new Christian household.

In the eleventh lesson we have the account of Paul's visit to Athens, and of his wonderful address on Mars' Hill. It is a great sermon, manifesting eloquence and spiritual power, and is worthy of being read many times, over and over again.

The twelfth lesson is that of "Abstinence for the sake of others," and lays down some great Christian principles which should be practiced in all the walks of life. It is a great temperance lesson. We are not simply to work to get good laws passed, but are to do all in our power to lead others to turn away from everything hurtful, and be temperate in using all good things, and abstainers as to all that is harmful. We have prohibition, but there is much work of education and persuasion yet to do, as well as the work of law enforcement.

So we run through all these lessons, and refresh our memories and our hearts. It will be well to go through the list of titles of the lessons, to repeat the various Golden Texts, and the answers from the catechism. If we have studied these chapters from the Book of Acts, as we have had the opportunity, we are much richer for having done so.

AN HONORED NAME.

To carry another's name implies responsibility, especially if the name has honor. Alexander the Great permitted the bravest of his soldiers to bear his name, but if one of these would conduct himself dishonorably he would say, "Change your name, or mend your manners." To carry the name of Christ is the highest honor that can come to man. To dishonor is treason; it is sin.

"Then never dishonor the title,
The name will nobility bring,
Be proud of your noble ancestry
The Christian's a child of the King.
Stand up for the name and defend it,
Against every possible foe;
Remember the Christian has honor,
Uphold it wherever you go."

ARE WE DRIFTING?

It is now nearly sixty-one years since I yielded to an urgent request to teach a class in a Sabbath school. I was but a youth—a hard working farmer's son—of course incompetent. However, as I now look back to that time, I had a few worthy qualifications. My first was a determination to master my lesson, if possible, before I appeared before my class. As a result of this, I usually held the studious attention of my boys from first to last.

I soon found that I was about the greatest learner in the class, and while I sought to impart truths into other minds, the great Teacher had me in his school. In these years I became ineffaceably impressed with the largeness of divine things and the majesty of divinity, the hatefulness of sin, the unshakable truthfulness of the Bible.

I have witnessed the coming in of many improvements; mostly in conveniences and appliances. There have also come changes that are not improvements. It is my conviction that the great Sabbath school world is drifting away from the deeper things of God, and heading toward the sociological. It is become more difficult from year to year to lead the children into an experimental knowledge of Christ, than ever before.

Look over the titles of the lessons. Living, work, health, wealth, poverty, education, recreation, rest, home, neighborhood, nation, world, the social task. Truly good things to study about, but "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?" The world's great need is now just what it was sixty-one years ago: a living Christ, appropriated by a living faith, established in a living word, resulting in a living knowledge of him.

One way for children to do good is by getting people to subscribe for a good church paper.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, SEPTEMBER 25.

Endeavor Topic: Missionary Results in South America. Psalm 2:1-8.

In this meeting, in which our attention is directed to foreign missions, we turn to the continent which lies to our south in the Western Hemisphere, to study some of the results of missionary effort in the many countries there with which we are so intimately connected. We find that, although it is America, and, in many ways, as favorably situated as our own, it does not rank with the more advanced people who make their homes in the northern part of this great world section. We say this not in boasting, but in plain statement of the facts.

South America has been claimed by the Roman Catholic Church as belonging to it. For four centuries Romanism has had a great opportunity to make the people of South America cultured, educated, prosperous and moral. But there have been no such results and there never will be where Rome controls. Rome is a tyranny. It favors autocracy and is itself an autocracy. It does not uplift the people. Where it has power it is always as it is in South America, Mexico, Italy and Spain. A few men control and have all the power, while the masses are in ignorance, superstition and immorality. Usually, too, as in South America, the few who are prosperous are unbelievers, casting off the Church which, they see and know, has in it no power to uplift and save and bless the people.

But even in South America, although illiteracy and immorality prevail, under Rome, to a greater proportion than in most countries, the Gospel has been preached by our Protestant missionaries and teachers, and is bearing fruit in renewed lives. We have mission stations and schools and churches in Brazil and Colombia and Chile and other parts of South America.

All of Southern Mexico, with a population of about four millions; the entire republic of Guatemala, with two millions, of which number the half are pagan Indians; Colombia and Venezuela, on the Spanish Main, with a joint census of eight and one-half millions, which includes a large Indian population, and the half of Chile, with a million five hundred thousand, are all a direct responsibility of the Presbyterian Church. In Brazil, where there is still some overlapping of boundaries, probably one-quarter of the population, or five millions, may be considered as falling under our responsibility. In other words, more than twenty millions of Latin Americans, through the process of co-operation, have become the peculiar responsibility of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. And of this number some five millions must be classed as pagan Indians, with no knowledge whatever of Christianity.

The Gospel is being preached, and good and promising results are being attained.

A QUESTION.

I thought that foreign children
Lived far across the sea
Until I got a letter
From a boy in Italy.
"Dear little foreign friend," it said,
As plainly as could be!
Now I wonder which is "foreign,"
That other boy, or me?

PRAYER MEETING

SEPTEMBER 21.

CHRISTIAN GIVING.

Luke 14:12-14; II Cor. 9:6-15.

The church and cause of Christ must be sustained by the followers of Christ. We ordinarily call the use of money for Christian work by the name of Christian Giving, although it is not giving. It is paying. It is a little like the taxes that we pay into the treasury of the city or county or state where we live. It is a payment, rather than a gift, in either case.

We are called on to devote one day in seven, or the seventh of our time, to sacred purposes, and as we do this we mark ourselves off as having regard for the will of God. So we are called on to pay into the Lord's treasury the tithe, or tenth, of our income, and as we do this we show that we love God and his cause. What we give above the tithe may be called our gift, or our free-will offering.

The Bible has a great deal to say as to stewardship, or the use of the money God has put in our hands, so as to honor him, and to show that we believe we belong to him. A great deal has been said on this subject by Christian teachers, and we do well to think of our duty to tithe, as to money, and to remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, as to our time.

The following was said not long ago by a Christian writer, and is to the point: "The tithe is not 'mere legalism'; it is older and more general than the Jewish law. It is not oppressive; the whole country has been vainly searched through forty years to find a tither who was hurt by tithing. It is democratic; it releases the Church from dependence on the patronizing gifts of the rich, which often are as oppressive as a mortgage. It is enough; the Church machinery does not exist which could wisely use more than the tithe, if all church members were tithers. If the Church has any word of authority to speak about a Christian's use of money, surely she ought to be as definite about it as when she speaks of a Christian's use of time. A seventh of time, a tenth of possession, that is the Church's faith; not saying in detail how either shall be spent. But she must insist that they shall be dedicated, devoted, offered; not as being our own, but as being God's trust."

As one illustration of what may be accomplished by enlarged ideas and practice in the use of money for Christ and his cause, it is well to read the following from the pen of "Layman."

"The 'New Era Movement' in the Northern Presbyterian Church and the 'Progressive Movement' in the Southern Church were inaugurated about the same time. The membership of the Northern Church, as given in the Assembly Minutes for 1919-1920 is, in round numbers, 1,637,000; in the Southern Church, 376,000. The goal of the Northern Church for benevolences for 1919-29, was $13,300,000, about $8.00 per capita; of the Southern Church, $3,500,000, about $9.00 per capita. The offerings for benevolences in the Northern Church were less than $5.00 per capita; in the Southern Church for the same causes, $11.81 per capita. The Northern Church fell short of their goal more than $5,000,000, contributing only about $8,000,000; the Southern Church gave $4,300,000, exceeding their goal by more than $800,000.

"If the Northern Church had given to benevolences in the same proportion per capita, $11.81, their contributions would have been more than $19,000,000—six millions more than their goal—instead of $5,000,000 less; a difference of more than $11,000,000."

"Jesus, thy Church triumphant
The eye of faith can see.
'Tis there, 'tis here, 'tis everywhere.
It fills eternity."

God's Spirit has much to tell us that we like to hear—children, heirs of God, sharers with Christ.

God does not love men because Christ died for them. God so loved men that he gave Christ that they might be saved. God is as a father seeking his lost and prodigal children.

And thou, O Lord, by whom are seen.
Thy creatures as they be,
Forgive me, if too close I lean
My human heart on Thee.

—Whittier.

"Ye shall have tribulation in the world, but peace in Me." And seeing he hath jointly bequeathed these two to his followers, were it not great folly to renounce such a bargain and to let go that peace for fear of this trouble?

What is it to be a gentleman? It is to be honest, to be gentle, to be generous, to be brave, to be wise; and possessing all these qualities, to exercise them in the most graceful outward manner.—Thackeray.

"LORD HELP ME!"

"Lord, help me" (Matt. 25: 25). There is a chain of but three links in this prayer of the poor woman of Canaan, but it reaches a long way. One link is on the throne of God; it is "Lord." The other link is down here; it is "me." And then here is a great link between that and this; it is "help." "Lord, help me." And the greater your need, the more that middle link in the chain will express.

THE MASTER NEEDS US.

The branches need the vine and the vine needs the branches. I need my Savior, my Savior needs me. He wishes to grow his fruit on my life, and to manifest his glory where I live. Without me he is deprived of a witness; in me and with me he can reveal his glory.

O Lord my God, I would be a branch in the living vine. Let the heavenly sap possess all my powers. Use me to reveal thy fruitage. Let me abound in the graces of thy Spirit, and all for thy glory in Jesus Christ my Lord. Amen.—Dr.
Jowett.

GOOD NATURE.

Two ladies were unnecessarily crowded into the end of a pew. Next to them sat a demure little lass. When they arose for prayer the lady at the end of the pew said to her companion, "When we sit down you move up a little." The lady did so, but the other occupants of the pew failed to take the hint, with the result that the lass found her seating space suddenly reduced, but, looking up sweetly into the faces of the ladies, she said: "We grewed some when we stood up, didn't we?"

OUR EXCHANGES

SPIRITUALISM.

We are reminded of Sir Oliver Lodge's excursion into the domain of spiritualism, and while we have the highest regard for Mr. Lodge as a scientist, we certainly have no greater respect for his name in connection with spiritualism than any ordinary medium.—Jewish Voice.

THE WHITE MAN'S BURDEN.

The real white man's burden is war-debt.—Saginaw News-Courier.

WORLD PEACE.

At Paris the Allies attempted to regulate the Near East, and they have admitted in the Supreme Council that they can do nothing to force Greece and Turkey to respect the arrangements. During the war they made friends with the Arabs, yet at Paris parceled out territory that the Arabs coveted for their own allied gain. We shall never attain to world peace until Western Europe gives up its attempt to dictate world policies in the interest of Western Europe.—Congregationalist.

MINISTERIAL SUPPLY.

Candidates for the ministry come from all classes of people. But it may surprise some people to see in what proportion they come from various sources. Here are the facts on the subject. The sons of farmers make up 48 per cent., of ministers, 14 per cent, merchants, 11 per cent; laborers, 4 per cent; salesmen, carpenters, clerks, physicians, each 3 per cent; lawyers, 2 per cent; professors and bankers, each 1 per cent; all other classes, 7 per cent. One thing to be noticed is that nearly half of all ministers come from the country. This shows that the country churches should be sustained and strengthened and that home mission work should be pushed. Another striking fact is the large proportion who are ministers' sons.—Presbyterian of the South.

UNDUE FAMILIARITY.

Judging from present-day dancing, familiarity doesn't breed as much contempt as it ought to.—Life.

CONFORMED.

The modern church has become afraid of the charge of Puritanism—not because it is more religious than the Puritans, but because it has lost their fervent religion. It has become broad and tolerant. It has also become largely impotent in a time of universal chaos. The desperate need of the world today is a church blazing with moral passion, unafraid of the sneers of those whose vision of the things which make a nation great or small is lamentably defective.—London Methodist Times.

UNITY OR UNION.

The Interchurch Movement is defunct, but its spirit is wandering about the world seeking reincarnation. The Interchurch Movement was only the most colossal and arrogant of all the movements that tried to put into one sack all the Christian bodies of the land. All the Union Movements are on the wrong track. What Christendom needs is more unity-of-spirit movements, not more Union-in-form movements. But the unity of Christ has no press agents to toot it. It is not sensational. It makes no glory or worldly honor for men, calls for no super-directorate of super-Christian statemen. Denominationalism is not America's reproach. It is rather America's glory. It shows that in America we do have free consciences, religious liberty. That alone is more than worth all the wisdom the Union Church protagonists have put in all their books or emitted in oratory from ten thousand platforms.—Western Recorder.

HERE, THERE AND EVERYWHERE.

An ex-doughboy was relating his experiences somewhere over there. "I'll say it was some battle. I was up in the air for the time being with my back against the wall, but I resolved to die in the ditch rather than to yield an inch, so I continued to advance regardless of the Jerries who were pressing me from the rear."—American Legion Weekly.

BAPTIST ORTHODOXY.

At the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention, at Des Moines, a new departure, at least among Baptists, was made. A Confession of Faith was presented, in which a definite stand was taken on every fundamental belief of the Christian Church. This precipitated a great debate between the Modernists in theology and the Conservatives.

Judging by the noise these Modernists have been making in the Northern Baptist Church, we expected either a defeat of the Conservatives or else a close division. The Conservatives carried the day by a vote of 900 to 75, which goes to show that in the Baptist churches as in some others, we must not be deceived by the noise made.

We may not agree with our Baptist brethren in their views as to baptism and the Lord's Supper, but we stand shoulder to shoulder with them in the defense of the old-time Gospel, and value them as staunch defenders of the faith once delivered unto the saints.—Presbyterian Standard.

GENERAL NEWS

THE WEATHER.

We note in various papers predictions as to the coming winter. Some reason from the conjunction of certain stars, some from the breast bones of geese, and some from the amount of nuts the squirrels have stored up. There are also comparisons of the past summer with other summers. The claim this has been the hottest on record is met by figures showing that there have been many just as hot. There are also complaints of the Weather Bureau that its predictions are often wrong. We are impressed with the wisdom of the old nursery rhyme:

"Nobody knows," says Tommy Jinks, Nobody knows what the weather thinks."

During the past week the country has experienced all kinds of weather. It has been intensely hot in some sections and cool in others. There have been forest fires in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Maine and Canada. In other states there has been a surplus of rain. There have been destructive tornadoes and floods in Texas and snow and ice in Montana.

BRIDGE COLLAPSES.

Thirty persons were drowned or crushed to death and others injured at Chester, Pa., when the Third Street Bridge over Chester River collapsed. A crowd had gathered to watch the police grappling for the body of a boy who was drowned. The bridge was an old-fashioned structure ninety feet long and cleared the water by about twenty feet.

THE SAN ANTONIO FLOOD.

Eight inches of rain in a few hours last week raised a flood in the San Antonio river and tributaries, which did great damage in the city of San Antonio. The water covered an area estimated at two miles wide and six miles long, including the larger part of the business district, causing about 250 deaths and millions in destruction of property.

San Antonio is a city of about 175,000 people. It is the largest city in Texas and the military headquarters for Texas and New Mexico.

IRELAND.

The situation in Ireland is unchanged. English papers express the opinion that the Government has gone as far as possible. The London Daily News says "that the present note asks nothing whatever of Ireland that is not freely conceded by Australia, Canada and the ruling majority of South Africa."

The London Times declares that Mr. Lloyd George "opens the door to an agreement between Great Britain and Ireland as wide as he can."

THE MINERS' WAR.

The war cloud in West Virginia is vanishing. The belligerent miners realized that they could not resist the United States forces. Many surrendered and others disbanded and returned to their homes. A dispatch from Logan County says that "about forty warrants have been issued there for the arrest of men who formed part of the armed force whose march brought federal troops into the coal fields."

The troubles in Illinois mining districts are less threatening than they were a week ago.

ORGANIZED CRIME.

An Italian murder syndicate has been unearthed in America. It has centers in New York, Chicago, Detroit and other cities. One hundred and twenty-five murders have been attributed to it. Its headquarters are in Italy, and from there many of the commands come for the killing of Italians who have in some way incurred the enmity of some of those in power in the society in Italy. Others are killed for a stipulated price.

A DISCOVERY.

What may result in one of the great discoveries of the age is contained in a dispatch from Tokyo, which says:

"A new process by which sand-iron, or magnetic sand, may be converted into pig iron and thence into steel has just been made public by Goro Matsukata and Dr. Asabu Naito.

"The discovery, the scientists aver, will not only revolutionize the steel industry in Japan, but of the world. The process is carried out by means of combining the sand-iron with coke, using hot gas flames and making ferrocoke, from which iron can easily be taken.

"Japan has little or no iron in any form which may be easily mined, and this fact has made this country one of the biggest importers of iron, especially from England and the United States.

"However, magnetic sand is abundant throughout the empire, but was quite useless up to the time of the discovery of the new process."

A PREDICTION.

A French writer says that the 900,000,000 of yellow and brown people will one day dominate the earth. He speaks of the crystallization of the Oriental races into a gradually solidifying mass, and of their dawning consciousness of power. They are awakening, he says, politically as well as industrially, and he shivers at the prospect of nearly a billion dark-hued people driving the white races gradually from their dominance.

OLD AGE.

Old age tells on the bad and good. Raisuli, a noted bandit, for years the terror of the Moorish hills, has been in retirement for some years. He had a chance to get into a real war, and declined the offer with a frank but pathetic letter to the Spanish High Commissioner. He wrote: "Very sorry. Can't fight any more. Too fat. Willing to surrender if I can do it without getting out of chair."

THE WASTE OF WAR.

Details of an offer by Henry Ford to purchase the Government nitrate plant at Mussel Shoals, Ala., for $5,000,000 and for lease for 100 years on completion of the Wilson and No. 3 Dams, providing power for the project, at an annual aggregate payment of $1,680,000, were made public by the War Department.

No action has been taken by the Government, although it was announced that no other bids had been received.

The dam lease proposals include provisions to amortize in 94 years the Government investment in the Wilson Dam, taken at $40,000,000, and in 97 years the $8,000,000 in the Dam No. 3 completion.

This offer is made subject to complete right of the Government to plant, processes and personnel in case of war, and for the purpose of determining whether or not "the application of electricity and industrial chemistry" to agriculture may do "what they have accomplished economically for other industries."

Profits of the operating company would be limited to 8 per cent under the offer, a board of farm organization representatives to check up the books and to supervise territorial distribution of fertilizer produced, with the Federal Trade Commission as final arbiter on distribution disagreements in the board.

Secretary John W. Weeks, of the War Department, indicated that considerable modification would be necessary in order to make it acceptable. Mr. Ford practically was asking a guarantee for the delivery of 600,000 horse power from the plant, Mr. Weeks pointed out, and this the Government could not undertake.

* * *

So far, the plant has cost the Government $87,000,000, and about $17,000,000 must be spent on it before it is available for sale.

President Harding has named Senators Lodge, Root and Underwood and Secretary Hughes to represent the United States in the Conference on Reduction of Armaments, Nov. 11th.

There are more than 13,000,000 foreign-born persons in the United States.

It is estimated that the Hawaiian pine-apple pack will total 5,884,000 cases this season, a slight falling off from last year's figures.

Thousands of sea gulls suddenly appeared in the wheat fields of North Dakota. They did not molest the grain, but devoured the grasshoppers.

A dispatch from Bogota, capital of Colombia, says that a revolution has broken out there, led by Colombian liberal elements, and that the revolutionists had put President Saurez, Bishop Herrera and the Conservative candidate for the Presidency, Pedro Espina, in jail.

The capture by the Greek forces of the Turkish Nationalist capital was reported from Smyrna Sept. 6th.

At the session, Sept. 5th, of the Assembly of the League of Nations, Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, of Norway, appealed to the world for $150,000,000, which he said was required to buy 2,000,000 tons of wheat to save Russia from starvation. He declared Europe was menaced with the greatest disaster in its history.

In the craw of a chicken, killed for Mrs. Edwin Bloome's table, she found her $3,000-diamond engagement ring, lost four months ago.

Paraguay has given to the Mennonites five hundred square miles of rich land, with exemption from military service for all future time. It is expected that they will emigrate in large numbers to Paraguay from Canada and the United States.

Cooked Radishes.—When radishes are plentiful they are nice to serve as a main dinner vegetable. Boil them till tender in salted water, then drain and reheat in a cream sauce. They are more delicate than turnips and make a very attractive looking dish.

Poor Man's Mushrooms.—Radishes have always been considered good only to eat raw. Try the following when mushrooms are at a premium: Peel and slice large radishes, and when you put your steak in the pan turn in the sliced radishes and allow them to cook in the juice of the steak until quite brown. Before taking them out put in a generous piece of butter. Season with salt and pepper. They can hardly be detected from the real article. Radishes are always very good when boiled like turnips. Boil until very soft, season, mash and cream.

Using Ham Scraps.—A nice way to use remnants of a boiled ham is to make them into ham toast. Grind or chop enough ham to fill a cup, using some of the fat, as that improves the flavor. Melt a tablespoonful of butter in a saucepan and add a tablespoonful of flour. As soon as blended, add a cup and a third of sweet milk. Let this thicken slightly, then add ham and the whites of two hard-boiled eggs which have been mashed with a fork. Season with pepper and a little salt. Pour over round slices of toast which have been placed on a platter. Take the yolks of the eggs and put through a potato ricer and sprinkle over the top of the toast. Garnish with parsley and the dish is ready to serve.

Mixed Pickles.—Seventy-five medium-sized cucumbers, sliced in rings about an inch thick, two quarts of onions, one quart of green tomatoes sliced, and one head of cauliflower steamed till tender; soak all in salt and boiling water enough to cover for twenty-four hours, then wash in clear water and drain, cover with vinegar and let them come to a boiling heat; have ready six peppers chopped, seeds and all; one pound of brown sugar, one-fourth pound of white mustard seed, two tablespoonfuls of ground cinnamon and one teaspoonful of ground mustard and one-half ounce of tumeric, all mixed with cold vinegar enough to make a thick paste, and add to the pickles when a little cooled.

Pear Compote.—Wash one-half cup rice, add one cup boiling water and steam until rice has absorbed all the water; then add one and one-half cup hot milk, one-half teaspoon salt and one-third cup sugar. Cook until rice is soft. Turn into slightly buttered individual molds. When shaped, turn onto serving dish and arrange on top quarters of cooked pears, and pour around pear syrup.

SUPERIOR TO FOREIGN SPECIES.

That the oaks, maples and elms of native stock are superior to foreign species for lawn and street planting is pointed out by the department of forestry, Ohio Experiment Station.

The American white-elm is adapted to alluvial soils, lives to an old age and increases in beauty year to year; it is injured by insects in some sections however.

Landscape gardeners find that nursery-grown stock of the better species of shade trees is quite satisfactory in establishing new plantings.

Young elms, oaks and maples from nurseries are accustomed to have the direct sunlight from all sides and therefore are checked but little when removed to permanent quarters.

Trees are sometimes taken from native woods and placed in nursery rows for several years before being planted permanently.

BUDGET FOR THE HOUSEHOLD.

American housewives are being urged by high officials of the Government to adopt the budget system in family book-keeping. Members of Congress who advocated and worked for the passage of the law creating the Bureau of Budget insist that the same principle should be adopted in every home in the United States. Those who have made a study of the question contend that wives and mothers are better managers than are the actual breadwinners of the family. Much of the financial difficulty in a great many American homes, the advocates of the household budget assert, is due to the lack of some system suitably apportioning the family income to cover the cost of food, shelter, savings, clothing and the other things which must be provided for decent and comfortable living, not forgetting provision for education and wholesome recreation.

Failure of commercial establishments to chart their course in such a way as to avoid the reefs and shoals of bankruptcy has resulted in many business shipwrecks. Lack of knowledge of the exact financial condition of his business has caused many a man whose conduct has been marked by enterprise and energy to come to grief. Many of the troubles and worries in the American home have been caused by the same sort of ignorance. The problem can not be solved by merely living within the family's income. The contents of the pay envelope must be apportioned in such a way as to leave a reasonable sum each week for some safe investment.

GRAPES.

Grape Butter.—Pulp ripe or half-ripened grapes; cook the pulp until soft enough to rub through a colander. Add the skins and cook until tender. Add sugar, allowing to each pound of fruit a half pound sugar, or more if the grapes are quite green. Cook until thick, stirring often, then can.

* * *

Grape Jam.—For this use the smaller Concord grapes or the late Isabellas. Stem, weigh and wash. Weigh but a pound of sugar for each pound of uncooked grapes. Put the grapes in a large preserving kettle with just enough water to keep them from sticking to the bottom. Cook gently for half or three-quarters of an hour, then press them through a colander. Add the sugar, stir well and cook gently until it drops from the spoon in a jelly-like consistency. Skim as it needs it, and when as thick as you desire, turn into glasses.—Lillian Mason, in Inter Ocean.

* * *

Grape Preserves.—A recipe which comes from India, and which has a most distinctive and Oriental flavor. It is most delicious served at luncheon with cold meats, and is infinitely more interesting than the usual spiced grapes. Wash and stem two pecks of blue grapes. Place them in a stone crock with a cover, and set the crock in a kettle of boiling water. Cook slowly one hour, or until the grapes are soft. Then put them through a jelly bag, a little at a time, squeezing them through with the hands. To every four pints of the juice add four pounds of granulated sugar, which has been warmed in the oven, and the pulp and rind, finely chopped, of three large oranges, and one pound of seeded Malaga raisins. To the grape juice add first the chopped oranges and raisins, and boil almost twenty minutes, then add the heated sugar, stirring thoroughly until the sugar is dissolved, and boil from six to ten minutes longer. Pour into jelly glasses, and, when cold, cover with paraffine. If time is no object, it is just as well to let the juice drip all night from the jelly bag, for in that case the juice will be clearer, and, best of all, the hands may be kept stainless. The greatest care should be taken not to boil it too long after the sugar has been added, for when it has once passed the jellifying point it will only grow sticky to an incredible degree. When it has boiled about six minutes, it is wise to try a little of this syrup in a cold saucer, moving it around, and as soon as it shows ever so little inclination to "jell" remove the kettle from the fire. It should be of the consistency of a rather soft fruit jelly.

ROUTINE WORK.

Young people, and especially young people who have from their earliest years been regarded as having brighter minds than most of their contemporaries, are usually impatient of the routine work to which an older generation condemns them. They have ideals and ideas, and feel that they should be free to meditate and to produce according to their own promptings. If the tedious older persons in authority would only realize that they would get much better results by giving their brilliant, enthusiastic and conscientious young men and women wider liberty of hours and of tasks, and greater responsibility!

The young people who cherish that view are precisely the ones who are most in need of the firm, restraining discipline of routine work. Their ideals and visions, if examined, would be found to center chiefly about themselves, and to be merely euphemistic terms for egotistical ambition. No truer genius, it may be believed, was ever reduced to dullness or inability, or ever prevented from producing, by the need of bowing to a routine task; and many a youth who, if more indulgently treated, would have been a bumptious fritterer, has through the constraint of routine acquired a capacity for useful and self-effacing service.

The person who goes at his routine work each day cheerfully, promptly, without reluctance, and who does it neatly, accurately and quickly, will gain efficiency for the work that requires initiative and decision, the work that is not routine. The person who scorns all work that does not demand the exercise of the higher faculties is likely to sit most of the time in superior and arid idleness. Routine work is good for the soul, and it enlarges the working capacity. Even so gifted a writer as Thackeray did not merely write "when he felt like it." He forced himself to his daily task when he did not feel like it, and often fished ideas out of his inkwell when there were none in his head.—Ex.

WIT AND WISDOM

Near Enough.—One rainy afternoon, as a train from the East pulled up at the little station of a most depressing town in the fever-and-ague district of a Southwestern state, a passenger, thrusting his head out of a car window, asked of a dejected-looking man who was leaning against the station door:

"Say, what do you call this measly, dreary, ornery, low-down place?"

"That's near enough, stranger," replied the native, in a melancholy voice. "Let it go at that."

A Pertinent Query.—A certain captain had been lecturing his recruits at some length on the duties of a soldier, and decided that he would see what effect his eloquence had had on them.

Casting his eye over the men, he fixed on his first victim. "Private Clancy," he asked, "why should a soldier be ready to die for his country?"

The private scratched his head, then an ingratiating smile flittered across his face. "Sure, Captain," he said pleasantly, "you're right. Why should he?"

The Majority Had It.—The manager of the apartment house received a call one morning from an irate top-floor tenant.

"The roof leaks!" cried the top-floor man.

"Roof leaks? Nonsense!" retorted the manager. "None of the people in the other flats say so."

NOISES OF THE NIGHT.

The baby's tooth was coming through,

And it was aching hard,

Which made him cry so loud he woke

The watchdog in the yard.

The dog, suspicious and alert

For wrongs to set aright,

Patrolled the grounds with hasty feet,

And barked with all his might.

The inmates of the poultry house,

From peaceful slumber stirred,

Began to cackle and to crow,

Till every voice was heard.

Out on the streets a fire alarm

Was told with clang of bells—

And lively boys went racing by

With sympathetic yells.

The wakeful hours wore on and on,

And it was almost day

Before the noises of the night

Had wholly died away.

But when the morning fairly dawned,

With sunshine, bloom and dew,

The house was calm, the yard was still,

For baby's tooth was through.

"THE FORM OF SOUND WORDS."

One of the manifestations of "Modernism" is a repugnance to "the form of sound words," in which the old and eternal truths of God have been conserved through the ages. There is a desire to get away from the language which has been employed for the conveyance of established truth, back of this being the purpose to get rid of the truth itself.

We are told that the words that expressed the great doctrines of the Scriptures are not used in sermons or in books or in papers today, and that, if employed, they would not be understood. This is only partly true. Some liberal leaders have abandoned the old language in the desire to get rid of the old truths, but this is not true of the great body of the followers of Jesus Christ.

We are told that the catechism is not taught as generally as it was a century ago, or a generation ago, and that the children who are now growing up are not being made familiar with the old teachings as to the Bible and the field of religion. This is true to the extent that the loose element is trying to discard the form of sound words while it is trying to discard soundness, but it is not true of the Church as a whole. Catechetical instruction of the children is one of the most valuable elements in their Christian culture, and no church that has regard for its own future can afford to neglect this method for training its young people. The children may not understand all the words that they learn, but these words become a part of their life, and hold them to the truth in coming days and years. If the Church has departed from this, it should get back again as speedily as possible.

The standard of weights and measures must not be permitted to vary, or there will be all sorts of confusion and dishonesty in the mercantile world. These standards, for our own nation, are kept in a secure and well guarded repository, and modern variations are not permitted. Everything must be made to conform to the established and guarded standards. So should it ever be as to our Church standards.

The words we use should be made to conform to the "form of sound words" found in the Holy Scriptures, and in the confessions and catechisms of the Church. There should be no modern fashions in words that are supposed to convey serious truth, even though there are changes in the fashion of apparel as set by the volatile and giddy fashioners of society dress. We need to know the truth and abide by it.

The human body upon which are hung the changing fashions of dress does not change, and a surgeon can perform the most delicate operation with unchanging accuracy in any land or any age. The bones, muscles, veins, arteries and nerves do not change in their places and relations. Nor do they, with the medical profession, change their names.

It is no sign of brilliancy or reliability for one to change the words by which the religious life and its relations to God are described. It is a good thing to adhere to the words of the Bible and of the catechisms, and to make the world know the meaning of the words and of the things by which they were divinely designated.

What we need today is not a change from old, but a clear understanding and acceptance of the old. It is the merest shallowness to say that science changes and we must change. True science, and that with which science deals, does not and can not change. The sun has been the same for ages and will continue to be the same. God is the same, yesterday, today and forever. What we want is a clear acceptance of the truth and the life and the salvation that comes from God, through Jesus Christ, and the faithful adherence to it forever. Let no fickle and shallow modernism draw us away from the truth that abideth forever.

THE MOVIE MENACE.

The movie show has come to be a widely extended form of popular entertainment, and the statistics as to the attendance, the amount of money invested, paid to the performers and producers, and expended by the public for admission, show that this whole enterprise has come to be one of the large features of modern life.

This wonderful and attractive invention has immeasurable possibilities for instruction and entertainment. It has been partially utilized for good, but there is room for great developments of usefulness. It is one of the great modern inventions, or discoveries, and may yet come to a much larger place than it now holds for the real educational and recreational benefit of the people. Nothing can be said in disparagement of its possible advantages, but much may be said as to the menace, morally and otherwise, that it presents today.

In the first place it has come to be largely a monopoly, held, in its present development and organization, in the hands of a comparatively small number of men. The amount of money made by means of it, the fascination it has for multitudes, and the opportunity afforded by it for ready access to the people for the spread of any special sentiment or ideas, make it a power that is of great proportions. Added to this the fact that many of its proprietors, organizing and developing this enterprise, are entirely aloof from religious life and bent only on making money, and we have here another element that adds to the menace.

Before this influence the Sabbath has become secularized and commercialized as under no other influence. Wherever possible, the movie show is running on Sunday in cities and villages, and multitudes of the unstable are drawn away from any possible church attendance, and led to think of the Sabbath as a mere day for secular amusement. Then this movie show interest is found associated with the base-ball organizations and other interests for resenting any wholesome regard for the Sabbath, in a mad, wild assault on Sabbath observance as being "blue Sunday" intolerance. It may be seen that there is a widespread conspiracy to break down the Christian Sabbath.

Another element, dangerous and demoralizing, in this movie enterprise is the irresponsible and vicious life led by many of its foremost exponents. Free divorce of many of the leading actors and actresses and moral entanglements and notorious escapades and criminal dissipations have been features in the lives of too many of those whose names and faces are most prominent in these pictures. Many of these persons, receiving money in almost fabulous amounts, and without the safeguards of established character, are led into conduct which is a moral and social menace to society.

The worst element still, perhaps, is in the nature of the films which are produced and sold, which, without most careful censoring, are, many of them, evil and demoralizing in the extreme. There must be a general and effective system for censoring these productions, or there is sure to be a general evil influence exerted over the people of the whole land.

The matter is a problem. If properly managed and controlled, there are the possibilities of much good, but if uncurbed and unsupervised the certainty of much harm.

THE SACRED BOOTLEGGER.

A great and furious interest was stirred up in the United States Senate just before its recent adjournment, by a few friends of the saintly and sacred bootlegger, who were determined to filibuster and prevent action on the anti-beer bill, lest the automobile or suit-case of some whiskey-smuggling, law-violating anarchist might be looked into by officers of the law without a search warrant. Had it not been for this diversion the anti-beer bill would have passed easily. The part of it which barred the use of beer as medicine had been passed, and with little division of sentiment, when the wet element thought they might do something for the liquor cause by raising a storm over the search and seizure clause, insisting on a search warrant in every case and under all circumstances.

The proposed bill leaves the home of any one and every one protected from search, unless a search-warrant has been secured, and this is as far as is "reasonable." One who is engaged in smuggling liquor in an automobile, or in any other way, has no right to immunity from search and arrest, for if the officers do not do their work promptly the criminal suspect will promptly escape. If there is "reasonable" ground for suspicion there should be the swift arrest and search, for the sake of the promotion of the public safety. No really innocent person will have any difficulty in making his case clear, nor will he object to the zealous efforts of the authorities to enforce the laws. It is only the criminal who will be inconvenienced, or who will object, and it is really in the interest of these law-breaking bootleggers and smugglers that the opposition to the bill was stirred up in the Senate. Let the Senators hear from their constituents.

The good people of the country are tired of this law-breaking element, and of the assistance which is rendered to them by men who have been elected to safeguard the well-being of the people. Had automobiles from Los Angeles been subjected to search and seizure last week, there might have been one less carouse and brawl, and one less murder, in San Francisco.

GOD AND THE CONFERENCE.

There is a growing interest in the great Disarmament Conference that is to meet in Washington City on Nov. 11th, Armistice Day, and a deepening conviction that in order to its success there must be much prayer on the part of all Christians. The pastors and people of the churches are agreeing to make the preceding Sabbath, Nov. 6th, a day of special prayer for the blessing of God upon the meeting. It is to be hoped that the mistake will not be repeated which so shadowed the League of Nations conference at Versailles, when there was no prayer at any time during the meeting, or any recognition of God or any reference to the need for his guidance. In any matter, and especially in a matter of such great importance, the favor and help of God should be humbly entreated. "Unless the Lord build the house they labor in vain who build it; unless the Lord keep the city the watchman waketh but in vain."

GAMBLING ON SPORTS.

It is unfortunate that as soon as any sport or competitive game becomes popular, the gambling fraternity takes hold of it. The training of horses and speeding on tracks at county fairs were useful, but betting on the races was demoralizing.

Baseball is a noble game, but is discredited by the revelations not only of systematic gambling on results, but of schemes to control such results.

Now boxing, which many regard as the most manly sport, is in danger. The gamblers have taken possession of it. A Cincinnati paper says that the sport in this city is digging its own grave, and that "shovelfuls of earth were thrown into the grave of manly sport when a horde of gamblers descended upon the clubs." It says that "the situation is such as killed the Horton boxing law in New York and set the sport back twenty years. It is analogous to the circumstances that gave baseball its scandal in the world series of 1919, and it is exactly the thing that will kill boxing in Cincinnati unless the Boxing Commission sets its foot flatly upon gambling at once."

Men need exercise and love honest competition, but where gamblers control any sport or competition and make it the opportunity to fleece the public, honest men will lose interest in it, if indeed the law does not forbid it.

PRAYING FOR BETTER DAYS.

Anti-Sabbath, anti-prohibition, and all sorts of similar organizations are meeting in a general conspiracy, in favor of a "liberal," open, commercialized Sabbath, in which every one may make all the money possible out of a pleasure crazed populace, and prepare the way for a free and easy, personal-liberty life all the other days of the week, with temperance laws neutralized, and the sanctions of religion and well-tried morality swept out of existence. It is a time for new consecration on the part of all good people; standing close to God in obedience to his laws, and rallying around his standard. We need to be very patient and very prayerful and very faithful. We are not to be warlike, or theatrical, or agitated. But we believe that God, who still rules, and who has been in the habit of overruling, will bring about better and safer and more orderly and more spiritual conditions, before long, into the world.

SUBURBAN PREACHING.

This is a new phrase which appears in English papers. It means not preaching in suburban churches, but "preaching that is itself suburban, which makes its home in the fringes and outskirts of Christian truth rather than in the center and the citadel."

The writer says that this type of preaching has found congenial soil in America, where it takes the form of addresses on current topics, social questions, and such like, in which the pulpit is transformed into a miscellaneous lecture platform, and the distinctively Christian message gives way to a syllabus of subjects quite unblushing in their secularity.

He notes that Germany had an attack of the epidemic in the time of Dr. Thollock, who wrote to Pusey, "Our preachers, having got rid of the Christian doctrines, are now insisting with great earnestness upon the importance of taking regular exercise."

The Presbyterian Witness says: "This is not the preaching by which Christianity conquered the pagan world in apostolic times, nor is it the preaching by which the great forward movements of Christianity are inspired today. It may for a time entertain the shallow crowds who do not wish to think too seriously on the deep things of life, but it can never grip the hearts of men and move them to great acts of sacrifice and devotion."

It quotes another who says: "If we can not win and hold men by the great things of the New Testament, we shall never do it with the smaller wares of the politician and the social reformer. This is the testimony of the greatest and most fruitful ministries in the history of the Church."

A great many people are back from vacation and are telling what a good time they had and how much good it did them. Now let them give proof of it to those who did not enjoy such a privilege, by doing more and better work, by means of renewed strength of mind and body.

Undoubtedly these are times when crimes are very frequent and very outbreaking. But the one remedy for it all is a great revival of true religion and the enthroning of God in the hearts of the people. Where God is revered and loved there is no desire to commit crime.

Let children commit to memory the precious texts of the Gospel and the great answers of the Catechism. It does not matter if they do not understand them at the time. It is not necessary that the soil shall understand why the grain of corn is placed in its bosom. After a time the corn will grow. After a time the child will know.

The "beer" bill should pass in Congress just as soon as possible upon its reassembling after the recess. Of course the drinking and dissipated element has been beseeching and threatening the members of Congress to let free beer flood the country, but Congressmen and Senators know that this class of people is irresponsible and lawless and should not be considered. Now is the time for good people to make themselves felt, and for petitions to be sent in from all who have at heart the welfare of society and the nation. The right of petition is one that should be constantly exercised, but that is not exercised by good people as much as it should be.

It has been well said that if you "take one step in the right direction, another, fairer and more beautiful, opens before you; but, take one in the wrong direction, and another, darker and deeper, crumbles beneath you, and the abyss is bottomless." The old-fashioned admonitions of the Holy Scriptures, that the ways of true religion are ways of pleasantness and that all her paths are peace, would better be heeded by those who would find success and joy for time and for eternity.

One crime leads on to another, or rather, they travel in one another's company. That crowd of drinking movie revelers in the San Francisco hotel, boisterously and defiantly breaking the laws as to liquor, and carousing as a set of outlaws, was simply paving the way for one of the most vicious crimes on record. When one vicious hand joins another vicious hand there will soon be outrageous crime.

French papers report a great increase in crime. They say that this is a natural consequence of the war. Le Temps protests against "false charity" and sentimental tenderness in dealing with criminals and the exploiting of their work in the press. It says: "In the hands of a judge constrained by a hundred rules essential to the general guarantee of liberty, a criminal becomes a sort of hero with whom newspapers entertain the public."

The American Board is just now facing a serious financial crisis. This, the Congregationalist says, has been repeatedly brought before its readers. It now adds: "It is not so generally understood that the co-operating Woman's Boards are facing a like crisis. The Woman's Boards have their separate treasuries, they raise and appropriate their own money, support and administer their own work and must make up their own deficits."

The literary editor of the London Times expresses the sentiment of many students of public affairs and present-day contentions. He says: "The greatest questions before the world are not the establishment of democracy or the settlement of the controversy between capital and labor, but first, what think ye of Christ? and second, how is the sincere acceptance of Christianity to be reconciled with a free and generous view of civilization."

Dr. Swearingen, moderator of the Assembly, announces that Dr. Herbert Booth Smith, of California, having asked to be relieved from service on the Assembly's Special Committee on Theological Seminaries, his request has been granted, and Rev. W. H. Wray Boyle, D.D., of Denver, Col., has been chosen in his place.

George Washington said, and said truly: "It is impossible to rightly govern the world without God and the Bible. All irreligious schemes are bound to be failures. Any government founded on such inadequate and dangerous principles is sure to crumble."

HYMN FOR COMMUNION.

BY REV. S. M. MORTON, D.D.

According to thy blest command,
We gather, Savior, round this board;
Thy followers, a little band,
We keep this feast in sweet accord.

The emblems of thy death we see
Before us on this table spread;
And this we do in memory
Of thee, thy Church's living head.

Thou cam'st from heaven to die for us,
To make atonement for our sin;
For thus it was, and only thus,
Could heaven be opened to let us in.

We keep the memory adored
Of our dear Lord, until he come,
According to his gracious word,
To call his ransomed children home.
Taylorville, Ill.

ISAAC'S WELL-DIGGING.

(Gen. 26: 18.)

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

"And Isaac digged again the wells of water, which they had digged in the days of Abraham his father; for the Philistines had stopped them, after the days of Abraham: and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them." (Gen. 26: 18.)

Pure water is a necessity of life, and men have digged for it from time immemorial. It comes from the clouds and is one of the good gifts of God. Water fills the oceans, the lakes, the rivers, the creeks, and filters into the crust of the earth, from which it is pumped often from great depths.

Isaac lived in an enemy's country, and when he began to re-dig the wells which the Philistines had filled up with earth, he met strenuous opposition. His enemies recognized the value of a good well of water and contested its possession.

"And the herdmen of Gerar did strive with Isaac's herdmen, saying, The water is ours: and he called the name of the well Esek; because they strove with him. And they digged another well, and strove for that also: and he called the name of it Sitnah. And he removed from thence, and digged another well; and for that they strove not; and he called the name of it Rehoboth; and he said, For now the Lord hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land." (vs. 20-22).

Notice the suggestive names of Isaac's wells. "Esek" means "Strife."

The best things have been fought for again and again in the history of the world. Good wells of water are like great truths which are well worth contending for in an honorable way. For the discovery, the maintenance and the propagation of truth, what seas have not been sailed, and how much treasure and blood have been expended in the history of the world. For example, history bears witness to the earnestness of my Scotch ancestors in their efforts to know the precious Word of God in the face of tremendous opposition. Hear Dr. Mc'Grie in his thrilling and interesting "Life of John Knox":

"By means of merchants who traveled from England and the Continent to the posts of Leith, Dundee and Montrose, Tindall's translations of the Scriptures, with many Protestant books, were imported. These were consigned to persons of tried principles and prudence, who circulated them in private with great industry. One copy of the Bible, or of the New Testament, supplied several families. At the dead hour of night, when others were asleep, they assembled in a private house; the sacred volume was brought from its concealment, and while one read, the rest listened with mute attention. In this way the knowledge of the Scriptures was diffused, at a period when it does not appear that there was a single public teacher of the truth in Scotland." (p 35.)

Isaac's second well was named "Sitnah," which means "Hatred." Isaac showed a beautiful spirit in not turning around and thrashing these herdmen of Gerar. But hatred hurts the man who cherishes it more than it does anybody else, for "Hatred hinders prayer, it beclouds heaven, it dries up the beautiful well that springs in the middle of our heart; or it turns the crystal water rising from that human fountain into a kind of poison."

But love suffereth long, and Isaac took the right course and passed on to the finding of another well. Isaac believed in keeping our peace with God as well as with our neighbor. For does not Jesus say: "Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought against thee: leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (Matt. 5: 23, 24.)

But how often is Christ's way of settling difficulties thrown to the winds!

After the digging of the third well the Philistines let Isaac alone. He called the name of well number three "Rehoboth," which means "Room." "For now the Lord hath made room for us, and we shall be fruitful in the land."

And the Lord appeared unto him the same night with promises of great blessing.

Dear friend, re-dig the old wells and as many new ones as you can!

Re-dig the old well of Prayer. There is living water in it. There is unsearchable riches in it. For one thing you will have a good conscience, for another thing you will give God an opportunity to be heard in the deep places of your heart and life. He will pour out a blessing which you will not have room enough to contain. The surplus will overflow from you in a hundred ways.

Re-dig the old well of Family Worship. Listen to this from the autobiography of Dr. John G. Paton:

"I have heard that in long after years the very worst woman in the village of Torthorwald, then leading an immoral life, but since changed by the grace of God, was known to declare, that the only thing that kept her from despair and from the hell of the suicide, was when in the dark winter nights she crept close up underneath my father's window, and heard him pleading in family worship that God would convert the sinner from wicked ways and polish him as a jewel for the Redeemer's crown! 'I felt,' said she, 'that I was a burden on that good man's heart, and I knew that God would not disappoint him. That thought kept me out of hell and at last led me to the only Savior.'" (page 21.)

Re-dig the old well of Church Attendance.

In a great address one of our strongest American preachers sounds this clear, ringing note which should be heard wherever men, women and young people congregate:

"Our statesmen need the hour of Sabbath worship, that they may put justice into laws and ethics into politics and love into service. Our young men and maidens need the hour of meditation, that, pondering upon the ways of God to men, they may find out the pathway God hath appointed for their young feet and be ordained for noble service.

"The poor, toiling in mines and forests, midst the rattle of machinery and the dust of factory, who for six days seem like captive and fettered eagles, need this day for remembering that the earth is not a huge barn; that its fruits are not fodder; that a man is not a beast. No hour is more precious, for the reason that writes books, the talent that paints pictures, the conscience that enacts laws, than the hour dedicated to worship, the place named the Sanctuary, the day dedicated to God." ("How the Inner Light grows" by Dr. N. D. Hillis.)

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Sabbath afternoon, Sept. 11, we heard Rev. F. B. Meyer preach in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church to a large congregation. The topic of the sermon was "The Second Chance," not for the impenitent after death, but for the Christian who has backslidden. The text was taken from the story of Jonah's failure to go to Nineveh at the first command of God, and his final performance of duty. Mr. Meyer spoke very directly to the congregation, saying "you" rather than "they" when he was calling attention to the indifference and neglect of duty of which some Christians are guilty. The preacher gave great encouragement to all to make the most of their second chance, citing the experience of Peter and Mark, who "made good" after sad failure. It was a most profitable discourse.

Last Sabbath in the Fifth Avenue Church the preacher was Rev. Dr. Robert J. Drummond, of Edinburgh, pastor of one of the largest churches in Scotland, and also chairman of the Home Missions Committee of the United Free Church; a man of great influence not only as a preacher but as a leader in missionary work. Dr. Drummond has also served conspicuously as moderator of the Free Church.

The pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church, Rev. Dr. John Kelman, is on his way home from a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Hayes, in China, and will occupy his pulpit on the first Sabbath of October. The lectures delivered by Dr. Kelman at Vanderbilt University, "The Foundation of Faith," have been published and will be on sale here as soon as the English edition is ready.

Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, preached last Sabbath morning and evening in the Marble Collegiate Reformed Church, of which Dr. David J. Burreil is pastor. The sermons were "The Invisible Victory" and "Would Be Saviors of the World."

The Welsh preacher, Rev. E. P. Jones, of Cardiff, preached again last Sabbath in the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. E. W. Work, pastor. Dr. Jones, who is one of the leading ministers in the Welsh Church, is representing his denomination at the Pittsburgh meeting of the World's Presbyterian Alliance. Protestant churches are sometimes criticized for moving up town to easier fields, thereby overlapping the territory of other churches. There is one church that will not be subject to the criticism of seeking an easier field. We refer to the Presbyterian Church of the Puritans, located in what is now a district crowded with negroes. With the coming of Rev. George J. Russell to the pastorate, the church has taken on new life and there is no thought of surrender to the inroads of the colored people. Miss Ellen S. Kinkaid has become minister's assistant. She was for six years church visitor in the First Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh, at the time Mr. Russell was assistant to Rev.

Dr. Maitland Alexander, the pastor of the Pittsburgh Church. The church is being organized with the idea of "two new members for each present member during the year," and Mr. Russell plans progressive work, particularly for men. He expects the Brotherhood to double in membership to one hundred by Christmas.

Rev. Dr. William J. Johnson, of the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare of our Church, gave an address last Sabbath evening in the West End Presbyterian Church on a topic related to the great work the Board is doing. The General Secretary of the Board, Rev. Dr. Charles Scanlon, has been attending the World's Temperance Congress across the Atlantic, as representative from this country going at the request of President Harding. Never before have the several departments of this Board had greater opportunity to save and upbuild humanity in the name and for the sake of Christ, and the work will be carried on with greater faith and energy than ever.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Chicago Presbytery held its September meeting in the Fourth Church chapel on Sept. 12. The attendance was large. Rev. Peter A. Fant was dismissed to Cleveland Presbytery, accepting a call from the Beckwith Memorial Church in Cleveland; Rev. W. B. Richmond to Upper Missouri Presbytery, accepting a call from English Grove, Mo.; Rev. John C. McCoy to Marion Presbytery, accepting a call to Marysville, O.; Dr. Otis G. Dale, of the Moody Bible Institute, to Pittsburgh Presbytery, to become religious director in the East Liberty Church of Pittsburgh; Rev. B. F. Jacobs to Ottawa Presbytery, accepting a call to the Kings Church; Rev. S. A. Johnson to Bloomington Presbytery, accepting a call to the Piper City Church; Rev. Joseph Shauer to Logansport Presbytery and S. Delmar Conger to Toledo Presbytery.

Edgewater Church, which has been supplied by Dr. George L. Robinson, of McCormick Theological Seminary for two years, issued a call to Dr. Asa J. Ferry, of Bethany Temple Church of Philadelphia. Dr. Ferry is expected to begin his pastorate at Edgewater on November 1. Both the church and Dr. Ferry are to be congratulated.

A resolution was adopted expressing presbytery's great interest in the coming disarmament conference to be held in Washington beginning Nov. 11. The Social Service Department was instructed to convey to President Harding the high hopes of the presbytery for the success of the conference, and to urge the pastors and the churches of the presbytery to give much prayer and public attention to the matter.

The semi-annual meeting of presbytery was changed from the 3d to the 10th of October and will be held in the Harvey Church, of which Rev. Robert E. Ziegler is pastor, and which is federated with the Methodist Church.

McCormick Theological Seminary opened as announced on Tuesday, Sept. 13, with an address of great power and beauty by President James G. K. McClure on the "Victorious Jesus." In closing the address Dr. McClure referred to the beginning of his ministry on July 9, 1871, at which time he preached from the text: If any man will lose his life for my sake he shall find it. Fifty years of faithful and eminently useful ministry had proved how greatly and abundantly the Lord Jesus can reward a man for losing his life for his sake. It was a loving tribute to a gracious Master.

News from Dr. A. S. Carrier was heard with interest. After a tediously long journey, he arrived at Nice and Rome. Soon he expects to be at Weisbaden for treatment. He is spending his sabbatical year from the seminary duties abroad mostly in search of health. During the year Dr. Carrier's department of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis will be conducted by Rev. Charles K. Osborn. This appointment is a fine tribute to an alumnus who after seven years is still studying Hebrew. Mr. Osborn was a Fellow in this department at his graduation from the seminary. He will not be released from his pastorate of the River Forest Church during the present year. This promotion of this young pastor meets with the cordial approval of all who know him.

Dr. W. S. P. Bryan, president of the Presbyterian Home, announces that the ceremony of laying the cornerstone of the new Home in Evanston will take place with due dignity and delight the last week in the month.

The dedication of the Clement Church will take place on Sept. 25. The pastor, Rev. Peter W. Fischer, will soon announce the full program of dedication.

Chicago has been enjoying the visit of a very distinguished visitor, Rev. Dr. Robert Forgan, pastor of the United Free Church in Aberdeen, Scotland. He is a commissioner to the Pan-American Council, which convenes in Pittsburgh. He preached in the Fourth Church Sabbath morning, addressed presbytery on Monday and took part in the opening exercises of McCormick Seminary on Tuesday. Dr. Forgan is a brother of the noted financier of our city.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

I woke after a night on the train, during which I had passed through Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse in a dreamless sleep, and found I was nearing Utica and entering the beautiful Mohawk Valley. Alongside the quiet Mohawk my journey continued through the cities and towns which preserve the memories of Revolutionary generals like Herkimer, or the lingering love of Dutch immigrants, who built Amsterdam. The great barge canal which is often the enlarged river, with its stately locks and bridges, showed occasionally barges towed by small steam boats, hurrying to the Hudson at Albany. The valley is full of warlike and tragic memories. The very name of the river recalls the Indian tribe, and reminds of the six nations and their bloody history. There is scarcely a decade of our earlier history where the Iroquois do not seem to burst in upon hamlet and village, or people the forest depths with threatening forms. Here is Johnstown, which preserves the name of the remarkable English baronet who was so powerful in his control of the Indians, with his co-called wife, the sister of Brant, the Indian, educated, and yet bloody in action. Fort Johnson Hall, the home of this English leader, stands almost unchanged beside the automobile road which bears the name, "The Mohawk Trail," recalling the paths of the Iroquois. Through Schenectady we ride, with its double stain of massacre, and then Albany, with its great capitol and pleasing residence streets, reminds us of the patroon days, and the thrift yet calm of the Dutch colonists.

As we cross the Hudson, our train passes a large and handsome artistic office building, near wharves and railroad, striking in its outline and pleasing in its ornate simplicity. And then the upper reaches of the Hudson stretch before us. As yet the shores are low, and wide meadows stretch far away. There are few signs of the charms of hill and vale and mountain, which, a few miles further on, are to attract our eye. For awhile the most striking objects are the large ice houses, at the river edge, the sources of New York's supply. Then slowly the hills rise, the ground on either shore lifts itself into forest and high plateau, and then, as I journey down the eastern side, the west looms up with the Catskills, and their unbroken forests. Ere long I discern, like large white bird's nests, the old Mountain House, and the Hotel Kaatskill, perched on the high mountain slope, inaccessible, one fancies, unless he realizes the railroad winding through the cloves to their rear. Meanwhile the eastern bank rises in lovely knoll and woodland, and sloping hillside, and delightful homes appear through the trees on these wide lawns and grove-shaded heights.

We pass Hudson, in its pleasant union of city and village, and across the river the Catskills seem to creep nearer. Then before us, down the river, we catch sight of the slender and lofty railroad bridge which spans the river at Poughkeepsie, and has cast its lacelike shadows on many a college boat race. A charming city this. North of it on the beautiful and tree-crowned heights are two large buildings, attractive in architecture, as they rise above the trees, but there is a sadness in their association, a pathos in their charm of situation and view, for each is an institution for the mentally unbalanced, the invalid mind. Yet one can hopefully fancy that, with the finer and kindlier science of our time, there is a purpose in such a beautiful situation, the hope that "the mind diseases" may find pleasure and perhaps relief in such visions of a beautiful river and wooded shores, and mountain's charm. Perhaps they repeat the words which rise so often to our lips in this region, "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills from whence cometh my help."

If these institutions, so shadowed, lie near this city, we do not forget that behind it stands Vassar College, whose, more perfectly than in Tennyson's dream in the Princess, there are fair young students, and proctors with golden hair.

Here we leave the train, and, on the little ferry boat, cross to the western side, and then by trolley ride several miles back to one of the first settled Huguenot towns of America, New Paltz, a pleasant village in the Watkill valley, and beside this broad river bordered by trees. Then we ride across the wide farmland, and soon mount, by winding road, the strange range of the Shawangunk Mountains, on which are two of the loveliest hill-top lakes in our country. It is a strange range, for, though the Catskills lie only a dozen miles distant across the Rondout Valley, the geological formation of the one is totally different from that of the other. Rarely in the larger and longer range will you find such tremendous blocks of stone, such craggy walls of rock, so white and bare, shining in the sunshine.

Here the Mohonk Lake, embosomed in a great basin of stone, lichen-marked, from whose crevices pines and hemlock or laurel obstinately grow, and overhang the mirror of the lake. Just beyond the lake, and creeping up to huge rocks of the mountainside, is one of the most beautiful of gardens, with wide stretches of velvetlike grass, across which the striking colors of wonderful flowers find a delightful background in huge clusters of clematis, or banks of roses, surrounded by birch and pine and fern.

Looking across the wide valley westward, which is so far below that one imagines those small hills and cloves are really a plain, I am reminded that some fifteen miles away, as the crow flies, and at the base of the Catskill range, is the lake created by the Ashokan Dam to supply New York with plenty of pure water. Only there, where the mountain slope is clean and untouched by corrupt conditions, they planned a reservoir from which an aqueduct large enough to hold a freight car, might carry an unceasing stream of water ninety miles to Manhattan. On its way it sinks five hundred feet to pass under the Rondout and rises the same height, and rushes across much higher ground. Again it sinks and rises in the same manner, until at Storm King, below Newburg on the Hudson, it drops a thousand feet, flows through a tunnel bored through solid rock, and springing up to its lost height runs to the great city, which without such a supply must falter and perish.

The dam creates a large lake, on ground from which three villages were removed, and as you ride in your automobile along the fine brick paved road between low stone walls, upon the cap of the dam, you exclaim at the enterprise and the beauty. It is almost like one of the larger lakes of Scotland, with the mountain slope tree covered behind it. So long is the encircling road, so great the plan, so complete the engineering results, that one might echo Domine Sampson, and cry, "Prodigious!" But we are reminded that it is not enough to make and fill a reservoir with pure water. Like unused talents or wealth, water grows stale and stagnant, and so it must regain some of its lost richness and strength ere it is poured into the metropolis. Therefore, ere it enters the aqueduct, as it leaves the reservoir, it is thrown into the air by hundreds of pipes, forming the most beautiful feathery and white powdered spray, exquisite fountains twenty feet high, perpetually flinging their snow white veils into the air, a fascinating sight. Even water may lose its richness. Even water needs renewal and restoration of lost graces. So at its source this huge stream must be purified if the great city is not to sicken and die. Draw your own moral! Form your own allegory! But is it not true that a life and power, simply quiescent and unused, disappoints expectation and can not help. Thus on this isolated mountain crest, miles distant from railroad or city, or the roar of industry, you look with gladdened eyes upon the mountains, and seek the lesson of glacier-marked crag, of sighing forests, and sunsets glowing above the silent hills and look from nature up to nature's God.

CLEVELAND LETTER.

BY REV. GEORGE A. MACKINTOSH, D.D.

The Old Stone Church, Rev. A. B. Meldrum, D.D., pastor, welcomed six new members last Sabbath.

Rev. Charles D. Darling, Ph.D., recently pastor of the Church of Fort Collins, Col., has begun his work with the Boulevard Church and has met with a very enthusiastic reception. His work in the near future will be to lead his people in the raising of funds for a Sabbath-school building, which is urgently needed.

The Forum of the Church of the Covenant, that has been held successfully for a number of years on Wednesday evening, will be resumed soon. Dr. Alexander McGaffin, D.D., who was away for several months on account of his illness, as well as the illness of his wife, is back at work in this church, restored to health. His co-pastor, Dr. Paul F. Sutphen, who remained at his post during the summer, is now absent on his vacation.

The annual Mission Study Institute of the Protestant Churches of the city will be held for four days, beginning Tuesday, Sept. 27th. The best talent available has been secured for the instructors. The sessions will be held afternoons and evenings.

Several hundred pastors of the city and county were present at the religious conference held on Thursday at the country home of Mr. F. W. Ramsey, at Gates Mill, where they were the guests of this prominent Christian layman. The speakers were Mr. S. D. Gordon, of New York, and Rev. Floyd W. Tompkins, of Philadelphia.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

The Minutes of the General Assembly having arrived, Dr. Montgomery has been compiling some facts about our Home Mission task, as these set this forth. Some of these are somewhat disappointing.

Some of our Home Mission synods show a clear loss in the membership of the Home Mission churches, which is always to be deplored, because the supreme purpose of the Board, as we understand our purpose, is to get men and women to Christ and into the fellowship of the Church, and when we find that this has not been the result, we at once set about the task of finding why it is so.

Knowing the facts in these synods where there is a loss we are able to give the reason for it. It is the result of a condition for which no one connected with our work there is responsible, because in most of these cases this occurs where the most faithful work has been done. Even when we consider the whole seventeen synods served by the Board as aid-receiving synods, there are only four that show a net loss, and in every case we are able to trace the loss, as I have said, to that over which the men at work there have no control. The per cent of gain in Home Mission churches in some synods runs as high as fourteen. It must be kept in mind that we are not considering the whole synod, but only the Home Mission churches in it.

The whole showing is very creditable, and in most of these synods the per cent of gains in Home Mission churches surpasses the per cent of gain for the whole Church. We have done our best to lay stress on this one thing: in all our counsels and letters, and it is real pain where the results are disappointing.

Dr. Montgomery and I are now in New York, in the business of assisting in projecting a budget of need for the year beginning April 1, 1922, and every man who has tried to forecast conditions in this country, that far in the future, knows that it is rather perilous business.

The reports which come to us since we came are not very reassuring, but we have faith in God and his Church and, whatever may be the present outlook, we believe that things will work out for his glory and the ultimate good of his Church.

We are trying to get all our home missionaries to adopt some sort of program or goal which they will follow and toward which they will work. The New Era policy has been a real help to a good many ministers. I feel sure, at this point, because it has laid a good deal of stress, and rightly, upon goals.

Whatever may be the outcome of the year, it will be all for the best, if we have done our part, but woe unto those of us who have been careless about the Zion of our God. These are testing days for the Church, because, when all is said that can be said about hard times and unemployment, I know we are dealing with a just and holy God and he will not spare those who fail to honor him, though he may delay.

EXECUTIVE COMMISSION.

The Executive Commission of the General Assembly will meet in Atlantic City, Nov 10 to 15. In addition to other matters, the entire commission will sit as a budget committee of the whole. Representatives of all the boards and agencies will present their budget estimates. After consideration, the budget total will be announced Nov. 15th. Sitting with the commission on the final day of the budget discussion, Nov. 15th, will be the Committee on Apportionment, consisting of one representative from each synod. This committee will continue to sit after the Executive Commission has adjourned, through Nov. 16th, apportioning the budget to the various synods.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

On Sabbath, Sept. 4, Rev. James D. MacDonald surprised his congregation by offering his resignation. He has accepted a call to Tucson, Ariz. He has been pastor of the Highland Park Church for over eighteen years, and is the only pastor this church ever had. It was organized as a mission of the First Church, and was supplied for a while by Rev. Perry V. Jenness, who was assistant pastor under Dr. William Betty Jennings. The Highland Park Church has had a remarkable growth, and has been the mother of Grace Church, now a prosperous and growing field, soon to remove to the corner of Glendale and Twelfth Street, a fine location in a good neighborhood.

Rev. Alexander Danskin has resigned the pulpit of Grace Church, as he notified the people several months ago. Rev. R. D. Dodge, of Mt. Clemens, has accepted a call to Grace Church.

Rev. T. G. Sykes, D.D., who has been temporarily supplying the St. Andrews Church, has declined a call to become the permanent pastor. The people are now obliged to continue their search for a pastor to take the place of Dr. W. H. Jamieson, deceased. There has been some talk of merging with another Presbyterian Church further west of this location, but the officers believe that there is an important future for the church just where it is, and that it is needed for the Presbyterian denomination as well as for its local importance.

Last year there were six Detroit churches with over 1,000 members each, viz: Woodward Avenue with 2,317; First with 1,714; Trumbull Avenue with 1,514; Scovel Memorial with 1,222; Fort Street with 1,123, and Bethany with 1,013. This year there are nine churches with that membership, viz: Woodward Avenue with 2,164; First with 1,880; Trumbull Avenue with 1,579; Immanuel with 1,500; Scovel Memorial with 1,223; Fort Street with 1,172; Covenant with 1,149; Calvary with 1,100, and Bethany with 1,010. But the three churches that have been added to the list all had over 950 members each last year.

In looking over the "suspended" list, it is evident that there has been a vigorous revision of the rolls, accounting for some apparent losses. When we note that two of the churches reporting over 1,000 members do not report any as placed on the revised list, one reports only four and another only two, we are satisfied that those churches must have an unusual number of loyal and devoted members.

Last year there were only three churches reporting over one hundred members received on confession of faith, viz: Calvary, 150; Bethany, 137, and Scovel Memorial, 118. This year there are six, viz: Immanuel, 487; Covenant, 172; Wyandotte, 148; Woodward Avenue, 137; First, 103, and Trumbull Avenue, 101.

In the Synod of Michigan outside of Detroit, Kalamazoo First is the only church reporting over 1,000 members. Only two churches received over one hundred members on confession of faith, viz: Westminster of Bay City receiving 119, and Flint First 116.

Only three Sabbath schools in the synod report 1,000 members, viz: Woodward Avenue of Detroit, 2,164; First of Detroit, 1,278, and Warren Avenue of Saginaw, 1,083.

AN UNFORTUNATE DELIVERY.

Herald and Presbyter for this week has not come to hand yet; this is Friday. We would like to have it by the middle of each week if possible. It is and has been a household necessity for thirty-five years past.

J. W. B.

We had many similar complaints last week. Our paper is usually mailed on time to reach most subscribers before Sabbath. The issue of September 7th was late. Labor Day, labor trouble, though not in our own office, and broken machinery combined to put us back.

MISSION WORK

OHIO SYNODICAL.

The annual meeting of the Home and Foreign Synodical Missionary Societies of Ohio will be held in the First Church of Marion, Ohio, Oct. 4th, 5th and 6th. All delegates are to send name and time of arrival to Miss Winona Hughes, 259 Church Street, Marion Ohio.

Mrs. W. F. Dickens-Lewis,
Mrs. U. S. Bartz,

Presidents.

CINCINNATI PRESBYTERIAL.

The executive meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of Cincinnati Presbytery was held in the First Church Sept. 13, 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. Mrs. J. Shane Nicholls, the President, in the chair. Miss Tudor, the Young People's Secretary, told of an institute to be given at the First Church, Walnut Hills, Oct. 17 to 20, inclusive. Supper will be served every evening at 6:30. Two classes will be held after supper each evening, and each session will close with a general meeting. The registration fee, including the four suppers, is $1.75. For the full course, without supper, a fee of 50 cents will be charged. Mrs. W. E. Lewis announced that the eighth semi-annual meeting of the Woman's Department of the Federation of Churches of Cincinnati and vicinity would be held Thursday, Sept. 29, at the Salem Reformed Church, Orchard and Sycamore Streets. Mrs. Hannaford, of Japan, gave a comprehensive review of the work being done by herself and husband. The President expresses the desire that a great many of the women of Cincinnati Presbyterial would attend the annual meeting of the Woman's Synodical Societies of Home and Foreign Missions at Marion, O., Oct. 4-6. Each auxiliary is entitled to one delegate. Room and breakfast will be provided for each delegate. Mrs. A. O. Bing conducted the devotional service. The speakers for the October quarterly meeting will be Miss Mary Forman, of India, and Miss Schultz, of the Board. The place of meeting has not yet been arranged.

Mrs. A. W. Mossman, Sec.

mouth Second, Sept. 25; Rev. Allan H. Brown at Georgetown Sept. 29. The overture on women as deacons was answered in the affirmative.—B. B. Cartwright, S. C.

Rev. John Carl Paul has resigned the Springhill Church and Elder Denton Crowl, of DeGraff, Logan County, O., R. D. 2, is the person to address for information concerning this field.

WEST VIRGINIA.

The Presbytery of Grafton met in the Buckhannon Church. Rev. E. M. Rittenhouse was elected moderator. The overture on women as deacons was answered in the affirmative; that on commissioners in the negative. Disarmament was approved.—J. V. Koontz, S. C.

MICHIGAN.

Rev. Joseph I. Lindsay, of Saratoga, Ind., has accepted a call to Harbor Beach. He is a brother of Rev. Edmund C. Lindsay, pastor of our church at Sandusky, Mich., in the same presbytery.

The church at Sandusky, Rev. Edmund C. Lindsay, pastor, has received more than thirty new members during the summer. Plans for a new church building have been secured and it will be started in the early spring.

INDIANA.

Centennial exercises were held in the Bath Church, Franklin County, on Saturday, Sept. 3, the historical sermon being preached by Rev. D. R. Moore, D.D., of Liberty, pastor of the Dunlapville Church. Bath Church at one time had 237 members. The church has had an interesting history, but now has few members.

The Dunlapville Church building has been renovated and redecored and is now in attractive and well-preserved condition. Dr. D. R. Moore is pastor.

The Y. M. C. A. of Fort Wayne conducted a contest, in about sixteen of the Sabbath schools of the city, between boys of 'teen age, on attendance, on time, and new scholars, extending over the months when hardest to keep up attendance. The boys of the Bethany Church school, with Mr. Stacy Stanley as teacher, won, and are the proud possessors of a very fine loving cup.

Cremeans from Presbytery of Boulder and arranged to install him in Springfield, Westminister; released Rev. J. B. Donaldson, Jr., from Springfield, Fifth, Rev. S. B. Harry from Petersburg, Central, Rev. J. B. Muir from Lincoln Hill and Union, dismissing him, and also Rev. W. R. Gibbons, to the Presbytery of Bloomington; answered in affirmative the overture on women as deacons; approved campaign to complete endowment fund of James Millikin University, and will meet in Taylorville, Oct. 3d, at 4 p. m.—D. G. Carson, S. C.

KANSAS.

The church at Halstead is looking forward to a visit from the missionaries whom they support in Korea, Rev. and Mrs. Alex. A. Peiters. They are now at home on furlough, located at Howe, Ind. This church is also planning the erection of a new church building, beginning next April. The church is in prosperous condition. Rev. J. P. Clark is pastor.

FLORIDA.

The Presbytery of Florida meets Oct. 11, 7:30 p. m., at Miami, Fla. At that time the synod will be erected, dividing the present presbytery into three, North, Southeast and Southwest Florida; Rev. R. W. Edwards, convener, and Dr. W. B. Witherspoon, clerk.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Presbytery of Erie met in the First Church, Bradford, Sept. 12. It was preceded by an evangelistic conference in which the plans for the evangelistic campaign during the coming winter were discussed. Rev. Delmar B. Ralston was received from the Presbytery of Washington, to be pastor of the Fairfield and Sandy Lake Churches. Rev. Paul Sappie was received from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh to be pastor of the Waterford Church. Rev. Plummer M. Osborne resigned the Bradford East End Church and arrangements were made for his installation at the Rocky Grove Church. Rev. Samuel Marshall, Jr., was released from Waterloo Church and Rev. Burgess D. Holter from East Springfield and Fairview Churches. Mr. Marshall was dismissed to the Presbytery of Buffalo and Mr. Holter to Clarion.

The overture on women as deacons was answered in the affirmative, the one on commissioners in the negative. The winter meeting will be in Erie.—Joseph M. Ross, S. C.

Rev. Irving T. Gumb has been appointed by the Shadyside Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh, of which Dr. Hugh T. Kerr is pastor, to serve as student pastor for students in Pittsburgh University and Carnegie Institute. If the names and addresses, both home and school, of such students are sent to Mr. Gumb, he will be greatly assisted in his work for these young people.

Blairsville Presbytery met in Greensburg First Church. Rev. Charles Schall, D.D., was released from this church and dismissed to Chester Presbytery to become pastor at Wayne. Rev. J. C. Porter was released from Kerr, to take up educational work in West Virginia. Candidate John Lloyd was ordained, and dismissed to Clarion Presbytery, where he has a call. Chalfant Greves and George J. Porter were received as candidates. The overture on women as deacons was answered in the affirmative and that on commissioners in the negative. Disarmament was favored.—J. C. McCracken, S. C.

The Presbytery of Westminister met in Center Church, New Park, Pa., Sept. 12th. Rev. George W. Ely was elected moderator. Rev. George A. Lenkel was released from Little Britain and dismissed to Chester Presbytery to accept a call to Kenneth Square, Pa. The overture on women as deacons was answered in the negative.—R. L. Clark, S. C.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The wife of Welcome W. Wood, M.D., of Bahia, Brazil, South America, died recently, just as they were about starting to their home in South Dakota on their first furlough. Dr. Wood is an alumnus of Huron College.

Rev. Dr. George S. McCune, of Pittsburgh, who served for some years successfully as missionary in Korea, has accepted the presidency of Huron College and has entered upon his new work to the great gratification of the trustees and friends of the college.

The church of Aberdeen, and indeed the whole city, deeply mourn the loss of Rev. Wm. Boynton Gage and his wife, who were killed Aug. 23d as they were crossing the Northern Pacific Railroad in their auto. For scarce ten months he had been the pastor of the church, during which time the membership had increased from 325 to over 500, and the congregations had come to so crowd the house of worship that the building of a new and much larger and better equipped house of worship had been determined. Such a throng attended the funeral, which was conducted in the church yard, that the street adjacent was filled for a great distance each way, and great banks of flowers bedecked the scene. All the ministers of the city and most of the members of the presbytery were in attendance, one of the latter presiding. A brother, Dr. Harry Morehouse Gage, president of Coe College, read the biography of William B. and preached in his place the following Sabbath. Interment was in the Aberdeen Cemetery.

The churches of Bridgewater and Canistota have had the same pastor, Rev. Albert C. McCauley, for thirty-six years, the longest of any church in South Dakota. In that time 615 members have been added to their number, and they have strengthened from having aid to self-support and now contribute annually thousands of dollars to beneficence. Mr. McCauley has spent all his ministerial life with these churches and has attained state-wide influence both as a minister and as a citizen.

NORTH DAKOTA.

While Rev. J. W. Bond, Cavalier, was on his vacation at Winona Lake Bible Conference, the people repaired and beautified the manse to the extent of $500 or more. The first Sabbath after his vacation he baptized five infants at Backoo Church.

MONTANA.

Rev. W. G. Rees, of Three Forks, has been called to Cut Bank, Mont.

TEXAS.

The Presbytery of Brownwood met at Ballinger, Tex., Sept. 6. Rev. T. W. Davidson was elected moderator. The overture as to women deacons was answered in the affirmative and the one as to commissioners in the negative. Rev. W. C. Kunze was received from the Presbytery of Cincinnati. Rev. Solon Johnson was allowed to resign as stated supply of the Winters Church.—R. R. Rives, S. C.

CALIFORNIA.

During August the First Church of Hanford was supplied by Rev. M. L. Pearson, of Orange, Cal., and Rev. E. O. Hoffmeister, of Dinuba, Cal., while the pastor, Dr. C. F. Ensign, was away upon his vacation. The Endeavor Society has maintained a Sabbath school all summer for the Mexican population of the community. The church will maintain a "rest room" during the county fair and help show to the world the friendliness of the great Presbyterian Church. During his vacation the pastor preached at the West Hollywood Church, Los Angeles, and at Orange, Cal.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

WIGTON—Miss Mattie M. Wigton, of Roseville, O., youngest daughter of James and Sarah Horner Wigton, after suffering intensely yet patiently for many weeks, passed to her reward Aug. 23, 1921. Those who knew her could speak only good of her. Not only in the home where she was so tenderly loved, but in all her relations in life, she drew friends to herself by her cheerful, friendly, helpful spirit. A large part of her life was spent in teaching in the public schools. In early life she united with the Presbyterian Church of Roseville, and was ever one of its most faithful and devoted members, teaching in the Sabbath school, singing in the choir, assisting as organist, interested and helpful in every good work. She loved the house of God, and what she could do was to her not a sacrifice but a privilege. The four sisters and one brother remaining can well say with the poet:
"Beautiful spirit free from all stain,
Ours the heartache, the sorrow and pain,
Thine is the glory and infinite gain,
Thy slumber is sweet." A. M. C.

HOME CIRCLE

THE SLEEPYTOWN EXPRESS.

Just beyond the rainbow's ends a river ripples down
Beneath a bridge, around a bend, and flows through Sleepytown—
Through Sleepytown, where goblins toil to fashion wondrous toys
And make up fascinating games for little girls and boys.
And automobiles, just the size for little hands to drive,
Await to whirl you all about as soon as you arrive.
But no one is ever allowed in Sleepytown, unless He goes to bed in time to take the Sleepytown Express!

I know a foolish little boy who always starts to whine
When he is asked to trot upstairs before it's half-past nine.
And often he will stamp his feet and shake his tousled head
And make a racket, even then, when he is sent to bed.
Of course when he has said his prayers it always is too late
To catch the Sleepytown Express; it starts at half-past eight.
And so, in all his long, long life—he's five years old this fall—
That little boy has never been to Sleepytown at all.

But other wiser little boys and little girls as well,
As soon as eight o'clock has struck rush right up stairs, pell-mell,
Get off their clothes and say their prayers, just of their own accord;
And when the train comes rolling in, they're to climb aboard.
Then, through a long, delightful night they wander up and down
have the most exciting time in queer old Sleepytown,
And not for cake or anything that children could possess
Would any of them ever miss the Sleepytown Express!
—Kansas City Star.

MARY ELLEN'S UMBRELLA.

Mary Ellen was so very busy watching the big raindrops trickle down the windows of the schoolroom that she misspelled three words and could not answer when her turn came in geography. Mary Ellen had an umbrella which she loved better than almost anything else she possessed. She was anxious to begin a plunge homeward, safely housed beneath it, that she had no mind left for lessons. To be sure, one of the umbrella's sides drooped miserably and its handle was broken. But it was an umbrella; and it was hers. It was the first umbrella Mary Ellen ever had.

When school was over, Mary Ellen held it proudly over Marion Jenkins, the little lame girl, till one of Marion's yellow curls caught on a button on her coat. Mary Ellen was helping undo the tangle, when suddenly a gust of wind swept around the corner, and, filling the umbrella with air like a balloon, it carried it, rolling and tumbling, down the street.

"Oh, my umbrella! My darling umbrella!" cried Mary Ellen. She darted after it, catching it just as it was starting to roll down the steep bank toward the Key Highway, over near the city jail. Mary Ellen was too late. Another of her dear umbrella's bows was broken, making it unfit for even Mary Ellen to carry. Mary Ellen could not keep back her tears. She had loved her umbrella, and now it was little better than a wreck.

When Mary Ellen stopped at her gate to wipe away the tears, so that mother need not see how foolish her little girl was, she found her mother was not at home, but an old woman was standing on the vine-covered porch, waiting for the rain to cease.

"I've been very sick and dare not get wet," she explained to Mary Ellen. Mary Ellen politely invited her to come into her mother's little sitting-room, and pretended not to notice the woman's threadbare coat and frayed dress. She put the little woman in her mother's little sewing-chair, made her a cup of tea, and while the poor battered old black bonnet was drying by the kitchen stove, Mary Ellen was entertaining the little woman with stories about her school. At last the woman decided that she must wait no longer.

"If I only had an umbrella," she said, "I might at least keep my shoulders dry, and maybe could keep from being sick again."

"Is mine too awfully broken?" asked Mary Ellen, but the tears streamed over her cheeks as she tenderly opened it.

The little old woman took it gladly. "I don't mind its being broken, dearie; and I'll return it in as good shape as it is now," she promised. Then she limped away down the street, Mary Ellen eagerly watching her.

For days there was a sad weight at Mary Ellen's heart. But one morning a strange boy came to the door and thrust in Mary Ellen's umbrella, and a note that had been sent with it. Mary Ellen seized her beloved umbrella and hugged it before she noticed that it was not the old, warped handle, but a new, whole one. She opened it cautiously, as she had often done before, but the side refused to droop. Mary Ellen shook it easily, then harder, but each triangle remained stretched to its fullest size.

"O mother, mother! Just look!" she exclaimed.

Mother finished reading the note. Then she looked up. It was the umbrella mender's mother to whom you loaned your umbrella, Mary Ellen," she explained. "He says that mending an umbrella is a very little thing compared with the kindness you showed a poor old woman."

Mary Ellen stared. "Why," she stammered, "lots of people wouldn't have carried my umbrella at all."

"It wasn't the umbrella, dear, that she appreciated," said mother. "It was the kindness you showed in offering your poor, crippled treasure to a stranger. I have no doubt that even she was a little ashamed of the umbrella, but the kindness was a very different thing."

Mary Ellen was thoughtful. "I suppose nobody can tell then, by looking at a thing, whether there's a kindness in it or not. But it paid that time."

AN AFRICAN CUSTOM.

One morning I heard the baby crying as if his little heart would break. I went to see what could be the matter with him in front of her house. And do you think she had a nice little bath-tub and scented soap and warm water? Oh, no! She was holding the little baby on his little feet, and was pouring cold water over him by the handfuls. The poor baby was screaming at the top of his lungs, and fighting against the cold water as hard as he could; but the mother paid no attention to that, and went on with the washing. Did she have nice, warm flannel cloths to dry him with, and others with which to wrap him? No; but when the washing was over, she lifted the baby up and with her mouth blew vigorously into his eyes and ears to drive out the water, and that was all the drying he got. Then she proceeded to dress him. The dress consisted of a string of beads around his waist, one around his neck, and one around each one of his wrists and ankles. The air and the sun did the rest of the drying.—The Lutheran.

IN THE PANTRY.

BY L. M. MONTGOMERY.

Johnny Wright was in the big pantry behind the stairs, eating a saucer of plum jam which Nora had left there for him. Ellis saw him there and, partly because he thought Johnny had no business to be eating the jam and partly because he was far too fond of teasing his small brother, he softly shut the door and slid the stout, old-fashioned iron bolt into place so noiselessly that Johnny never knew he was locked in until he had swallowed his last spoonful and tried to get out.

Ellis went off laughing. He meant to let Johnny out in about a quarter of an hour; but Stan Herbert from across the way called to him to go over and help him develop some photographs he had taken, and Ellis forgot all about the small boy bolted in the pantry. The only window in the pantry was high up near the ceiling. Fortunately Mamma Wright came home sooner than she expected and let the prisoner out.

He had promised to meet Elmer Herbert and Willie Grigson in the park at two o'clock. Willie's uncle was going to take them bathing. The time was long past, and of course they were gone and Johnny had no idea where to look for them, even if mamma had been willing to let him start off alone.

Johnny grimly resolved that he would "pay Ellis back." This was very wrong in Johnny's of course, but then you know even small, nine-year-old boys are human when then have missed a very 'portant 'gagement. Besides, Johnny had already endured a good deal at Ellis's hands.

He brooded over his wrongs all day and went to bed still full of resentment. Ellis was not coming in until late. He had gone over to Westmouth to attend a baseball practice with the Westmouth nine.

About eleven o'clock Johnny woke up with a jump. He heard a noise below and knew Ellis had returned. The noise was in the pantry. The remembrance of his wrongs rushed over our small boy's soul. He crept out to the landing and peered through the banisters to the moonlit hall below. The house was so still that Johnny felt creepy, and the pantry door was shut, but he knew Ellis was inside getting a snack before coming to bed.

Johnny made up his mind what he would do. He softly crept down the stairs, a little, white-clad figure. The stairs creaked until Johnny thought every soul in the house would be rushing out to see what the noise was about. That is a habit stairs have at night, you know.

Outside the pantry door he halted. He could hear Ellis moving about inside and softly rattling the dishes. Johnny shot the bolt noiselessly into place and then crept back upstairs with a chuckle.

"We'll see how Master Ellis likes being locked in the pantry for hours at a stretch himself," said Johnny vindictively, as he shut the door tight and scrambled into bed. "If he makes ever so much noise nobody'll hear him.

He shut his eyes tight and resolved to go right to sleep. Then Johnny's conscience began to trouble him. He had never known he had a conscience before; and he didn't know now what it was. But he felt uncomfortable. Something worried him. He tried to think of all the tricks Ellis had played on him, but could only remember all the nice things that Ellis had done for him.

Just then the door opened and Ellis, lamp in hand, walked unconcernedly in. "O, so you got out yourself?" said Johnny.

"Hello, youngster, aren't you asleep yet?" said Ellis patronizingly.

"How did you do it," persisted Johnny. "do what, kid?"

"Why, get out of the pantry. I bolted you in—and I was just starting down to let you out. I don't know how you ever managed to open it yourself. I'm sure I bolted it good and tight."

"You've been dreaming, Johnny-kid. That's what's the matter. I wasn't near the pantry tonight. Didn't need to be. Ted Stavert's mother over at Westmouth gave us a dandy lunch. Ice cream and"—

"I wasn't dreaming," said Johnny stubbornly. "I tell you I heard some one in the pantry and I went down and locked the door to pay you out for locking it on me. If it wasn't you, who was it?"

Ellis looked puzzled. Johnny certainly seemed to be wide-awake and in earnest. But if his story were correct, who or what was in the pantry?

"You stay here, Johnny," he said. "I'm going to wake father up."

Mr. Wright listened to Ellis's story in amazement. Johnny was brought out into the hall and stoutly maintained his story. Finally Mr. Wright telephoned to the police station. Two men came down and they opened the pantry door.

There was a burglar and they captured him and took him off to the police station.

Johnny Wright was the hero of the town for nine days. He did not enjoy it; somehow, Johnny had very little to say about his exploit. Although it had turned out well he was ashamed of it. Mamma Wright had talked a little talk to him about giving way to revengeful feelings. She said the fact that it had all turned out so fortunately was no excuse for the motive. Johnny hung his head and promised that he would never again try to pay people out.

Ellis got his talking too from his father. I do not know just what Mr. Wright said to him, but I know that Ellis never played any more tricks on his small brother. He went from his conference with his father straight to Johnny.

"Look here, sonny," he said manfully. "I'm sorry for locking you into the pantry and putting ice down your back and knocking over your Indian ambush and hiding your air gun and all the rest. Forgive your brother and he'll let you alone after this."

"G'way with you," said Johnny, very red in the face.

But he told Elmer and Willie that afternoon that Ellis was a splendid brother and he meant to be just like him when he got big.—Pacific.

FAIRY FANCIES.

If you meet a fairy,
Don't run away;
She won't want to hurt you,
She'll only want to play.

Show her round the garden
And round the house too;
She'd love to see the kitchen
(I know they always do).

Find a little present
To give her when she goes;
They're fond of silver-paper
And tiny ribbon bows.

I knew a little girl once
Who saw twenty-three Dancing in the orchard
As jolly as could be;

They asked her to join them
And make a twenty-four,
She ran to the nursery
And hid behind the door;

Hid in the nursery
(What a thing to do!)
She grew up very solemn
And rather ugly too.

If you meet a fairy
Remember what I say:
Talk to her nicely
And don't run away.

A BAD MARK FROM GOD.

A little girl was called to court one day to be a witness. She was so small that the lawyers thought she might not know what an oath was. So they asked her some questions.

"Do you understand the nature of an oath?" asked a lawyer.

"Yes sir," said the little girl.

"What is it?"

"It is a swear."

"What do you mean when you say, 'It is a swear?'"

"Well, it is that I have to tell the truth."

"If you don't tell the truth, what then?"

"That would be a sin."

"What is a sin?"

"A bad mark from God."

They let the child tell what she knew, and they all believed her.—Selected.

YE ARE THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

Matt. 5:14.

Near the mouth of the Thames there is a channel through which sea-going steamers can only be piloted with great skill, and there was a church on the shore and on the church tower a flagstaff. This was blown down. The church consulted as to whether they should put the flagstaff up again and decided not to.

Within a fortnight a government messenger requested to see the officials. He said that for years that flagstaff has been one of the marks by which pilots took bearings, and "we can not do without it. The pilotage of the Thames is impossible without it."

The flagstaff was replaced.

They never realized that other people, precious lives and rich cargoes were shaping their courses by their silent witness. You do not know who is shaping his course for heaven or hell by your life.

Love, to be love, must walk thy way
And work thy will;
Or if thou say, "Lie still,"
Lie still and pray.

Love will not mar her peaceful face
With cares undue—
Faithless and hopeless too
And out of place.

Love here hath vast beatitude;
What shall be hers
Where there is no more curse,
But all is good?

—Christina Rossetti.

If we miss heaven the fault is ours.
The prepared kingdom is vain unless we are fit to possess it.

The motto of a wide-awake church is given by an exchange as, "Plan your work and work your plan."

Our duty to our country includes doing what we can to get others to do their duty —to vote for the right men and the right measures and to understand their civic duties. No one lives to himself alone in citizenship any more than in any other interest.

Christ was a model citizen. His nation was oppressed by Rome, was held in virtual slavery. He wept over Jerusalem, and felt keenly the sorrows of his country, and yet he bade his followers render to Caesar the things that were due to Caesar.

There are souls in the world who have the gift of finding joy everywhere, and leaving it behind them when they go.
Their influence is an inevitable gladdening of the heart. They give light without meaning to shine. Their bright hearts have a great work to do for God.—Frederick W. Faber.

JUSTIFICATION.

The word "justified" is among the greatest words of the English language. It really means to be acquitted at the bar of a righteous Judge. It assures us an open way into the Father's presence and makes us know that we have a standing before God that neither heaven nor hell can challenge.

SIN AND GRACE.

"All are included under sin." The heart faints at the fearful fact of universal guilt, but it is gloriously true and it heals the hurt the other fact has made, that, where sin abounded, grace did yet more abound.
All are under sin but all may be saved through the blessed provisions of grace.
O, believe it!

GIANTS IN THE LAND.

Too often even now, men come to the borders of the land of promise, and through fear of the difficulties of conquering the land, turn away from the opportunity of spiritual privilege into the world whose only promise is a fleeting pleasure, and whose real reward is a wilderness of woe full of gnawing hunger and flaming thirst.

Lesson 1—October 2.

PAUL IN CORINTH.

(Acts 18:1-11.)

1. After these things Paul departed from Athens, and came to Corinth;

2. And found a certain Jew named Aquila, born in Pontus, lately come from Italy, with his wife Priscilla; (because that Claudius had commanded all Jews to depart from Rome:) and came unto them.

3. And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them, and wrought: for by their occupation they were tentmakers.

4. And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks.

5. And when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was pressed in the spirit, and testified to the Jews that Jesus was Christ.

6. And when they opposed themselves, and blasphemed, he shook his raiment, and said unto them, Your blood be upon your own heads; I am clean: from henceforth I will go unto the Gentiles.

7. And he departed thence, and entered into a certain man's house, named Justus, one that worshipped God, whose house joined hard to the synagogue.

8. And Crispus, the chief ruler of the synagogue, believed on the Lord with all his house; and many of the Corinthians hearing believed, and were baptized.

9. Then spake the Lord to Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace:

10. For I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee: for I have much people in this city.

11. And he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them.

Golden Text: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." I Corinthians 2:2.

Catechism—Q. 40. What did God at first reveal to man for the rule of his obedience? A. The rule which God at first revealed to man for his obedience, was the moral law.

Q. 41. Wherein is the moral law summarily comprehended? A. The moral law is summarily comprehended in the Ten Commandments.

INTRODUCTORY.

Paul had a great experience in Athens, and, even in that city of learning and culture, God so made use of his apostolic eloquence and power that there were some converts. Of course there were unbelievers, and mockers even, but some persons were won to know and love Jesus Christ. And so he went from that cultured but heathen city, to Corinth. He had waited at Athens for Silas and Timothy, but it seems that they did not join him until he came to Corinth. So he may have gone alone to that city from Athens.

EXPOSITORY.

1. Corinth was a city of a different nature. It was noted for its worldliness, its pleasure loving and wealth loving people, and although Paul did not encounter the pride of learning there, he did run into a luxurious and dissipated life that opposed the purity and simplicity of the Gospel. He spent a long time here, and did a very great amount of work. He met with some considerable success, and it will always be a source of gladness to Christian people that he went to Corinth since he wrote from there two of his most remarkable, striking and valuable epistles.

2. Here he found two valuable helpers, Aquila and his wife, Priscilla, who were Jews, but who, with all the Jewish element, had been recently banished from Rome by order of the Emperor Claudius. Paul learned about them and found them. Their cruel banishment from their home in Italy was, of course, a great grief to them, but it turned out to be a blessing. By coming to Corinth they came to know Paul, and learn about Christ. They came to be helpers of Paul and useful workers in the church.

3. Paul as a boy had learned the trade of tent making. It was the rule that every Jewish boy should learn a trade. Wherever he might be cast he could support himself. It was a source of great satisfaction to Paul that he could make his own living at any time and place. He found that Aquila and Priscilla were tent-makers too. He went to their home, and stayed with them for a time; possibly during all his stay at Corinth. He gave them valuable spiritual instruction while he was with them, and prepared them for large usefulness in the work of spreading the Gospel.

4. His home being established, he went or with his own work in trying to win the people, and especially the Jews, to faith in Christ. There was a synagogue here and, as a Jew, he was privileged to take part in their public meetings. This he did with the express purpose of making Christ known to them. He felt that all Jews should accept Christ, who was foretold in the Old Testament Scriptures. So they should then, and so they should now. But he did not confine his attention to the Jews, but preached to the Greeks also as he had opportunity.

5. Silas and Timothy, for whose company he had waited at Athens, joined him here. It was a great encouragement, no doubt. He could put more courage and power into his work with these faithful and reliable friends to assist him. So he felt all the more impressed with the necessity of preaching Christ and urged the Jews to take Jesus as their Messiah and Lord.

6. With Jewish obstinacy many of them set themselves in opposition to the claims of Christ and the Gospel, and used violent language against the Savior. Paul realized that his duty was plain to give special attention to the Gentile people. He told the Jews that he had done for them all he could, and that, if they chose to go on to death unsaved, the blame would be theirs, not his. So it is with some people today who will not accept Christ. The minister feels that he can do nothing more with them or for them. He is sorry, but he must give his time and strength to those who are willing to be saved.

7. He did no more preaching in the synagogue, but there was a private home near by, the home of Justus, a Christian believer, where he held services and where the people came to hear the Gospel. This home because, for the time, the home of the church of Corinth.

8. Many of the Jews had blasphemed and driven Paul out of the synagogue, but the chief ruler of the synagogue, Crispus, believed, and all his family with him, and many more of the people of Corinth also believed, and were baptized, and so the cause of Christ had a great start in that city, notwithstanding all the rudeness and unbelief of many of the Jewish people. God always has a faithful people everywhere.

9-10. All of this had been a hard and trying experience for Paul. Notwithstanding all his learning and eloquence and devotion, he was only a man, and he had a man's heart and a man's capacity for suffering, and no doubt he was often anxious and fearful. But God knew him and knew all about him, and he had him in mind, and one night, when he was needing some comfort and reassurance very greatly, God came to him in a vision and with a message, to urge him to be of good courage. He told him not to be afraid, and not to give up his preaching. He told him that he would be with him and that no one would be able to hurt him. It was in this way Jesus had given his promise to his church: "Lo, I am with you alway." This assurance is for all who love and believe and are trying to do God's work and will. The Lord had many people in Corinth whom he wished saved, and he told Paul to keep on until they were reached. So God has those in the world today whom he wishes saved. Let us be obedient to God, and keep on with our work until they are all gathered into his fold.

11. For a year and a half Paul stayed in that one city, not in personal pleasure or business, or in secular study or enterprises, but in the one work of teaching the Word of God. Let us all be sure that we do as much of this, ourselves, as we possibly can.

THE CHILD'S CHAIR.

The chairs for children should fit the children. Trying to make the pupils fit the chairs may disrupt the department. No pupil can be long controlled when uncomfortable; nor can he derive much benefit from the school unless he is physically at ease. The pupil's feet should rest squarely on the floor while he sits on the chair. If the children must sit on the church pews, boxes can be placed so that they have a resting place for the feet. Before we complain about the restlessness of children in the school or in the church, let us be sure that the chairs or pews fit them. We should not expect more from the children than we could or would endure. If we want the child in the school or the church, let us have chairs that fit him.

THE BIBLE.

"That book, sir, is the rock on which our republic rests."—Andrew Jackson.

"In regard to the great Book; I have only to say that it is the best gift that God has given to man."—Abraham Lincoln.

"I find more sure marks of authority in the Bible than in any profane history whatever."—Isaac Newton.

"All the wonders of Greek civilization heaped together are less wonderful than is the simple Book of Psalms."—William E. Gladstone.

"The first leaf of the Mosaic record has more weight than all the folios of men and philosophy."—Jean Paul Richter.

IN GOD'S SIGHT.

"I'll give you an orange if you tell me where God is," said a man to a little girl.

"I'll give you two if you will tell me where he is not," she replied.

IN THE SWEET BY AND BY.

BY HERBERT ETHERIDGE.

I know not why the tenderest feet must sometimes tread the roughest road.
I know not why the weakest back must sometimes bear the greatest load.
I do not know the reason why
The bravest heart must sometimes sigh.

I know not why my lot in life is oftentimes so hard to bear:
But this I know, I live in faith that sometime God will make it clear.
Then I will know the reason why
The storm clouds marred my sunlit sky.

A few more years, a few more tears, and then my race will have been run;
The toils of life forever past, the battle fought, the victory won.
On wings of love I then will fly
To joys that wait for me on high.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, OCTOBER 2.

Endeavor Topic: Thy Will Be Done. IV. With My Time. Matthew 6:7-15.

We have been considering this petition of the Lord's Prayer for three preceding consecration meetings, on the first of July, August and September, respectively. When we thought of God's will being done in respect to our Strength, our Pleasures, and our Mind, or in our work, our recreations and our thinking and planning for life. The thought at this time is God's will in reference to our time. Has God a wish or program for the occupation of our time? How much of our time belongs to God? Does God have a right to all of our time? When we are told that the Sum of the Ten Commandments is that we shall love God with all our heart, all our mind, all our soul and all our strength, does it mean, actually, that all we are and have should belong to God, and, if so, how is our life to be lived?

All of our time belongs to God in the sense that we are not to use one moment of it in a way that is not in accordance with his will, or pleasing to him. If we use a part of our time in doing what we know is displeasing to God, or wrong in his sight, we show that our heart is not right, and that we do not love God, or we would not be willing to give up any part of our time to what is a grief to him. All our time must be given to God. We can not deceive him. We can not successfully pretend to be willing to serve him by doing right a part of the time, and then doing wickedly for a time. A decayed spot in a piece of fruit soon spreads so that it is all decayed. Let us be sure that we are God's entirely, and then all our time will be his.

But, although all our time belongs to God, this does not mean that we shall be engaged all the time in church work, or what we sometimes call religious work. We must be busy with our daily duties, in our business, in making a living, or in earning our daily bread. This is not irreligious if we, ourselves, are religious. This is the duty which God gives us to do. He says in the Tenth Commandment: "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work." We are to be busy and hard working people. We do not obey God unless we are. The very Commandment which defines Sabbath observance tells us that we must be industrious in doing the duties of our daily life. If we do this, as God directs, and in the spirit that God desires, we are serving God in our daily work. If we are serving God then, in our daily work, our time has been employed as God would have wished, and we can say that, in being thus busy, our time has been given to God and has been used for God. Let us be sure that we carry this spirit into all the days and hours of our work-day life.

We should, however, find some time every day for some strictly religious duties. We should never be too busy to read the Bible and to pray every day. We should find time for the blessing at the table, for the prayer meeting hour, and for the special acts of Christian care for God's cause, and his people, that he desires at our hands. The difficulty with too many of us is that we think we are too busy for the things with which God wishes to see some of our time employed.

And then let us especially remember that God has set apart one day of the week and called it his own. This Sabbath day we are to keep holy. It is God's day. It is especially for the sake of his church, of our souls, of religion, and of the whole range of eternal things. If we observe this as we should we show that we are willing for God's will to be done with all our time. If we are not willing to keep the Sabbath day holy, we show that we do not want God to have any of our time, and that we are anarchists and rebels against God.

PRAYER MEETING

SEPTEMBER 28.

LOYALTY TO THE CHURCH.

Psalm 84:1-12; I Timothy 3:14, 15.

The Church of God is very precious to all of his believing and lovinghearted children. If one does not love the Church, it is because he does not love God and does not have any interest in his cause. It is a good deal as it is with one's home. If he has no love for his home, it is a very sure sign that he is not right himself, and that he has no warm affection for the members of the family who are associated in that home.

The Church is God's own institution here on earth and for the spiritual benefit of our human race. The State and the Family are also divine institutions. The State is for organized governmental purposes. The Family is for the domestic life. Both are greatly important, and great attention should be given to both. But the Church is different from either of them. It is for the cultivation of spiritual life, and for the spread of the spiritual kingdom of God among men. It was devised by God for the very highest and holiest life and work on earth. It is for the teaching of the truth of God; for the emphasis upon the spiritual life; for the giving of the divine teachings as to the soul, sin, salvation and the future life; for providing the benefits of the sacraments, and a place for holy worship for all who love the Lord.

We should all be members of the Church of Jesus Christ. We should in no wise neglect this. It is awful when any one deprives himself of the privilege and comfort of being a member of the family of God and having a place in the house that is provided here on earth for all who love and trust the Savior. If any one is not a member of the Church, it is his own fault. It is because he has neglected his privilege, and has been disobedient to the call of God. Some people are homeless because they are bereaved and unfortunate, but if any one is without a place in the Church of Jesus Christ, it is because he will not heed the divine and loving invitation.

If we are members of the Church, we should be loyal to it with the full power and intensity of our whole nature. We should make ourselves known as those who are true to all our professions and sincere in our affection and devotion to him who died for us that we might live forever.

The history of the Church on earth is a most wonderful and radiant record. It magnifies God in what he has done for our sinful race. It magnifies the good and holy men and women who have loved Christ and have been true to him through all the long centuries. Those who have lived in the Church, and sustained it and supported it, have been the noblest and the best who have lived. They have received great good, and they have done great good, by reason of their life in the Church of Jesus Christ.

We are to show our loyalty to the Church by standing for the truth of God that has been committed to it. Infidels have tried to destroy and pervert it, but God's people have stood for the trust that was once delivered to the saints, and have not been willing to allow any false doctrine to take its place. God's people have stood for truth in doctrine, and for purity and holiness of life. They have been willing to live in, and work for, and give to the Church. They have gladly used their time, their influence, their money, their powers of body and of mind to support the Church. Let us show the same loyalty and follow in the noble train of those who have loved Christ and his Church.

MEMORY TREES.

My own dear soldier brother sleeps across the wide blue sea,
But in our garden here at home we have a little tree
New planted in his memory, his name upon the bark.
Its roots are in my mother's heart, she says; and after dark
We follow down the garden path and, listening in the grass,
Can hear the gentle summer wind among the branches pass.
I never saw a memory tree, or heard of one before;
It's something sweet that all the time grows precious more and more.
To name a tree for one you love and watch it day by day,
Makes him you love seem near again, although he's far away.
—Helen L. Casey.

ABOUNDING GRACE.

The greater our calamities, the more abounding and effective is the comfort that God gives. If only we look up from the wreck of blasted hopes we can see the face of God smiling above us and we know that God is able to make all grace abound.

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

The universe is keyed to righteousness, or God is not its Maker. "Why art thou cast down, O, my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God!"

TARIFF LEGISLATION.

The Underwood tariff sent $10,000,000 steel mills and innumerable lumber mills to Canada, opened our markets to products from all over the world, threw our own people out of employment and failed to raise revenue. With other countries taxing, both imports and exports, the Underwood tariff was a piece of utter folly.—St. Louis Times.

CAMOUFLAGE.

All this talk about premillennialism by our bishops is, without doubt, for the purpose of calling the attention of our people away from what they did when they, at Portland, Oregon, illegally approved the course of study—it is throwing dust into the air.—Eastern Methodist.

A SLOGAN OF PAGANISM.

"Art for art's sake" is the slogan of a paganism that is often insolent, sometimes rankly unchaste in its suggestiveness, and always densely unaware of the profounder spiritual needs of normal human beings. To assume that nothing is to be accounted artistic, or worthy to rank as literature, which deals sympathetically with Christianity as a redemptive force is a canon of literary criticism in far too many of the houses which make a speciality of fiction.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

THE ENGLISH COAL STRIKE.

NOT UNCOMMON.

Committee reports presented to the Assembly are necessarily prepared largely without any knowledge on the part of one committee as to what other committees are going to report. It often happens that these reports over-lap in some respects, and the recommendations of one may not harmonize with another. That was just what occurred this time, one report adopted by the Assembly said that no secretaries of the Executive Committees should be elected members of those committees, and yet in adopting other reports the Assembly elected three secretaries members of their respective committees to hold office for three years each. This presents a question for the ecclesiastical lawyers to solve, are these secretaries members of the committees or are they not?—Presbyterian of the South.

NATIONAL EXPENSES.

The government is costing us about six times what it cost us in 1914. This charge upon the Treasury can not be met by either vituperation or mere irresponsible statements. The administration has already taken the most significant and far-reaching steps to accomplish it.—National Republican.

CURING THE CLERGYMAN.

One of our Eastern pastors was dangerously ill with pneumonia. The thought of leaving his family unprovided for so bore upon his mind as to jeopardize his recovery. A number of his wealthy members agreed upon a plan to lift the burden from his mind. By the consent of his physician, a committee waited upon him and asked him how much he would leave for his family should he be called away. He said: "But a few thousands of life insurance." The spokesman replied: We have come to inform you that your estate is now worth fifty thousand dollars." The patient began to recover immediately, and ere long was in his pulpit. The suggestion is worth passing along.—United Presbyterian.

CONGRESS.

The national Congress meets today. Indications are that it will have a busy session. The committees have worked during the recess harmonizing views on various bills. It is intimated that the revenue bill with revised income taxes will have the first attention, though ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany may precede it. Other matters on the docket are the railroad re-funder bill and temperance legislation.

* * *

It is announced from Berlin that the treaty of peace between Germany and the United States has been ratified formally by the German Reichstag, or Upper Chamber.

THE PHILIPPINES.

The question of Philippine independence has been long under discussion both in the Islands and in the United States. Neither here nor there is the sentiment unanimous. Now it is announced that the Board of Directors of the American Chamber of Commerce of Manila has approved a plan proposed by J. L. Heath, president of the Chamber, for a territorial form of government for the Philippines. In accordance with this plan the Philippines would be known as the "Territory of Malaya," and an American governor would be appointed.

COTTON.

There has been a great advance in the price of cotton. The Manufacturers' Record says that it increases the value of the present crop and stock brought over probably $1,000,000,000. This will revive and stimulate every industry in the South. It adds: "Let the South reverently thank God for this increased wealth, take courage and go forward with new zeal and energy."

PERIL IN TIME OF PEACE.

Floating mines are not only effective in time of war, but dangerous for years afterward. Quite a number of ships have sailed and never been heard from since the great war closed, and it is possible they struck loose mines. Mine sweepers attempted to gather them up, but some were missed. A report from Portsmouth, Va., is that a mine three feet in diameter, coated with barnacles and oysters and provided with an electrical firing device, washed ashore at Ocean View. It bore the appearance of having been in the water for a long time and bore the letter K-1, and is of a type not known to naval men who have seen it.

SPAIN AND MOROCCO.

There have been conflicting reports of the war of Spain and the Moors, but the latest news seems to favor Spain. The Moorish reports last week were that the fortress Melilla was surrounded and must surrender. Spain now reports that the Moorish tribesmen fled from their positions near Melilla, when Spanish forces began their offensive Sept. 13. The Moors were disconcerted by the Spanish maneuvers and the terrific shell-fire poured upon them and abandoned food-stuffs and everything belonging to them in their fight. Though the war is far from our borders, a foreign legion of three hundred men, recruited in the United States, has sailed for Spain. They are all ex-service men.

MUSIC AS AN AID TO WORK.

The Minneapolis postoffice has been experimenting on methods of increasing the efficiency of its force, and has found that music helps men render good services. It is said that, "stimulated by phonograph music, night clerks have increased their speed and accuracy." Postmaster E. A. Purdy, at the conclusion of tests covering a month's period, said: "We have found that classical and popular records abolished worry during the 'graveyard' shift from 7 p. m. to 3 a. m."

PRECAUTIONS.

An epidemic of diphtheria in Ohio this winter is predicted by Dr. Lockhardt, Health Commissioner of Cuyahoga County. He says that the disease, instead of dying down as is customary during this period of the year, has maintained its general prevalence.

He advocated the early use of anti-toxins on the suspected cases and immunization. Dr. Peters, Health Commissioner of Dayton, urged that all school children be vaccinated early this year to prevent the recurrence of the annual winter epidemic of smallpox.

IRELAND.

The situation in Ireland is practically unchanged. The appointment by the Dail Eireann of delegates to confer with English appointees seems hopeful, but De Valera's statement that only as representatives of Ireland as a sovereign state did the Dail Eireann have power to act, made it apparent that to confer with these delegates would be a virtual recognition of Irish independence. However, English papers generally are hopeful that a way will be found to harmonize differences, and that a peaceful conclusion will be reached. A reason for this is a note from Eamonn De Valera to Lloyd George, in which he says that the Sinn Fein already has accepted the Premiers' invitation in his own terms. They had not asked the Premier to abandon any principle. Some, however, hold that such disavowal should be made by the Dail Eireann, which appointed the delegates.

BEGGARS.

There are worthy poor people who are forced to beg, but all beggars are not poor. Some years ago in this city the fact came out that the daily receipts of a certain beggar were more than four times as much as the average wages of a mechanic. Now comes word from Chicago that a beggar known as French Sal, 84 years old, died last week in a dreary little attic, and was found to have $100,000 in stocks hidden in her room. For years she begged from the well-to-do near her home.

The city of Quebec has voted itself wet by a majority of 12,000.

Elihu Root has declined nomination as a member of the International Court of Justice under the League of Nations.

Major General Leonard Wood has announced his acceptance of the post of Governor General of the Philippines tendered to him by President Harding.

Oranges grown in the Holy Land are being shipped in abundant quantities to the United States, according to Rabbi M. A. Giskan, of Jerusalem, who is in Cincinnati to raise money for a Palestinian Orphan Asylum.

The force of good example is shown in China, where Great Britain is following our example in remitting the Boxer indemnities for Chinese purposes of education and in the proposal of France and Great Britain to have an official share in the relief of famine in Russia, undertaken by the United States.

There is evidence of I. W. W. activity in various countries. Thirty agitators have been arrested in Tokio, Japan, and more than that number in Hungary, charged with preparing a revolution. The latter had organized an army of 3,000 infantry, the artillery commander being a master baker.

Fourteen hundred head of sheep were burned to death when lightning struck a large stock barn on the E. G. Stephen's farm near Muncie, Ill., Sept. 13.

It cost the nation $54,000,000 less to fill its sweet tooth last year than the previous year, according to the Internal Revenue Bureau, $408,729,560 being spent for candy. It cost more, however, to keep the country's jaws in motion, the chewing gum bill for 1921 amounting to $44,405,900, as against $37,498,100 in the previous year.

The California alien poll tax law was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in an unanimous decision, which held that the measure was in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution and to the treaty between the United States and Japan.

South and Central Africa have had unusual storms. The worst blizzard in many years has been raging over the greater part of the Orange Free State, Natal and portions of Cape Colony and the Transvaal, says a dispatch from Capetown.

The Quest, the small ship on which Sir Ernest Shackleton will explore the uncharted sections of the South Atlantic, the Pacific and the Antarctic Seas, left the Thames Sept. 17 on the start of her two-year voyage.

Three hundred and twenty-five names were included in a blanket indictment, charging murder, returned by a Logan County special grand jury Sept. 17. The indictments followed an investigation of disturbances on the Logan-Boone County border.

THE NURSE.

BY CHARLES POOLE CLEAVES.

I lay my hand on your aching brow,
Softly, so! And the pain grows still.
The moisture clings to my soothing palm
And you rest because I will.

You forget I am here? 'Tis the darkness hides.

I am always here and your needs I know.
I tide you over the long, long night
To the shores of the morning glow.

So God's hands touches the aching soul;
Softly, so! And the pain he stills.
All grief and woe from the soul he draws
And we rest because he wills.

We forget—and yet he is always here!
He knows our needs and he heeds our sighs.

No night so long but he soothes and stills
Till the dawn-light rims the skies.

Sweet Potatoes Surprise.—Boil some yams or sweet potatoes until soft. Drain and then peel. Butter a casserole and put in a layer of sliced sweet potatoes and then sprinkle with pecan nuts, then another layer of sweet potatoes, then a layer of pecans, chopped fine, and so on, until you come to the top layer. Instead of nuts, put marshmallows on top and put in the oven to brown. It will take about twenty-five minutes to brown. Sprinkle sugar over each layer and add one-half cup of water to the whole dish.

Macaroni with Tomatoes.—Fry half an onion slightly in butter and as soon as it is colored add two cups of strained tomatoes. Boil one-quarter pound of macaroni, broken in small pieces, in three pints boiling salted water until tender. Drain and rinse thoroughly with cold water. Put the macaroni in baking dish, pour over it the tomato and sprinkle in three tablespoonfuls of dry grated cheese. Bake in slow oven for fifteen minutes. Cover top of dish with bread crumbs before baking.

Sauce.—Two tablespoonfuls flour, two tablespoons butter, one cup milk, one-quarter pound cheese. Blend butter and flour together until smooth, add milk and cook ten minutes, then add cheese grated or cut up fine and cook until smooth.

Wild Plum Preserves.—In the store closets of many country housewives preserved plums find time-honored places. These little mouth-puckering, tough, fire-red wild plums, it is thought by many, make the most delicious preserves in the world. The fruit is found in nearly all parts of the country. To preserve them, cover the fruit with cold water, in which a teaspoonful of soda to four quarts of the water has been dissolved, and bring to a boiling point. Drain, rinse thoroughly and put the fruit into a saucepan or preserving kettle, with alternating layers of sugar, using three-quarters of a pound of sugar to a pound of plums. Add enough water to come within an inch or so of the top of the fruit, and cook very slowly until the plums are soft.

CANNING CORN ON AND OFF THE COB.

The following seasonable recipes for the canning of corn have proven both practical and economical for the housewife. The recipes have been worked out in the canning kitchen and the products tested for nearly two years.

These recipes have been used in connection with five different types of canning devices, and the corn has been put up in all types of containers, such as glass top, screw top, suction top, and tin cans. The method employed is the cold-pack method, the same as is now being used in the best commercial factories of the world, instead of requiring the laborious and tedious method of fractional sterilization of an hour each day for three consecutive days, and the lifting of the products in and out of the canning devices three times. The method now employed contemplates but one sterilization, and turns out the product in better shape, with better color, texture and flavor, than the fractional sterilization method. By following these recipes and method, the family can have corn, either on or off the cob, throughout the year at a very reasonable expense of time, energy and money:

Corn Off the Cob.—Select sweet corn ears of uniform size and proper ripeness. If too ripe the corn will color while processing. (Processing is the canning term for sterilization or cooking.) If not ripe enough, much of the food value is lost in cutting the corn from the cob. Use either glass jars or tin cans. For market purposes and greater safety in transportation, use tin cans.

Remove husks, silk, shank, tips, and injured or defective places. Blanch corn in boiling water or steam chest for from five to ten minutes. The time depends upon the stage of ripeness, size of ears, and degree of freshness. Remove the ears and plunge quickly in cold water.

Cut the corn from the cob with a sharp, thin-bladed knife. Pack well in glass jar or tin can; add hot water and a level teaspoon of salt to the quart or No. 3 can. Place rubber and glass-jar top in place, not tight. If using tin, solder cap in place and fill vent hole, or seal completely. Process the corn from three to four hours in the home-made or hot-water commercial bath outfits; for one and one-half hours in the water-seal outfits; for one hour when using from five to ten pounds of steam pressure, with the steam-pressure canning devices, and forty minutes when using the aluminum steam pressure-cooker outfit. After processing, remove the jars, tighten covers, invert to test the joints, and cool.

If using tin, inspect the soldered end caps for pin-rod leaks. Repair all leaks; allow to stand for twenty-four hours. If cans are still bulging at ends at the end of this time, one of two things is true—the pack is too full, or some live spores are still left in the can. If the latter, replace in sterilizer and process the second time from thirty minutes to one hour.

Canning Sweet Corn on the Cob.—Blanch according to ripeness, size and freshness; plunge quickly in cold water. Pack, alternating butts and tips; add just a little boiling water and one level teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Place rubber and top and partially tighten. (Cap and tip tins.) Process three to four hours in hot-water bath; one and one-half hours in water-seal outfit; one hour under five or more pounds of steam; forty minutes in aluminum pressure cooker. Remove jars, tighten covers, invert, and cool. (Heat up for table use in steamer, not in water. If corn seems flat, or water-logged, it has been overcooked or allowed to stand in too much water.)

Use one or two-quart glass jars if not needed for other products. Quart jars will hold two ears, two-quart jars will hold from three to five ears, according to size of ear. Do not can large ears. Half-gallon or gallon tin cans with large openings should be used in the canning of ear corn when idle glass jars are not available. Gallon tin cans will hold from six to twelve ears. They should be graded to uniform size.

In high altitudes, 4,000 feet and over, it will be necessary to increase the time requirements in the canning of sweet corn about 25 per cent, if water boils at about 202 degrees Fahrenheit and even less.

In the average home a large number of glass jars are idle every year. The use of these idle jars is recommended, but if none are available, the most economical and practical containers are the half-gallon and the gallon tin can.

The gallon tin cans, including soldered-hemmed caps, will cost about six cents apiece, but they will hold six to twelve ears of corn, which is enough for a good-sized family. If the corn is removed from can and steamed for a few minutes, it can not be distinguished from the sweet corn removed from the husk in midsummer. The corn can be heated in the container before opening to serve.

An ear of sweet corn on the average dining car and hotel a la carte service costs twenty-five cents. Considering this, canning corn on the cob for the market might prove a very profitable investment for a thrifty housekeeper, and bring to her considerable pin money.

One advantage of sweet corn canned on the cob over other corn is, that all the best food values are kept with the cob. In cutting corn off, the germ quality of the kernel, which keeps up its standard, is usually lost. This germ quality is the part of the corn that is sought by rats and mice when they look for food in the corn bin, and is the most vital part. Much of the corn is also rendered mushy when it is cut from the cob.

In regard to the container for corn on the cob, it might be mentioned that for advertising and exhibition purposes glass is much more satisfactory than the tin can, but if corn on the cob were to be put up in large quantities as a business venture, the glass would not be practical, being too expensive, but the tin cans would prove quite satisfactory.—Ex.

IMPORTANT IF TRUE.

The statement is made by medical specialists that the careless use of face powders results in nose troubles which may be serious. One authority says: "American womanhood is developing a diseased condition of the sinuses, the important channels communicating with the nostrils." Another says that a large number of women, both young and old, are suffering from the effects of various degrees of irritation of the septum, the bony cartilaginous piece that separates the nostrils. It is the result of too much powder going up the nostrils. It is not the use of the powder that is harmful, but the hurried way that it is applied."

Give These Boys a Chance

The saddest experience which comes to the College President is to be compelled to turn away Promising Young Men because they have not available sufficient loan and scholarship funds to meet their needs.

President Millis is having that experience this year at Hanover College.

Church and State can ill afford to lose the expert service which, with a little assistance, these young men will equip themselves to perform.

I'm glad I'm not a boy, for boys

Balls and marbles, tops and bags
Worms and crawly things.

They tear their hats and spoil their shoes;
They break and smash their toys,
I am so glad to be a girl;
I'd hate to be a boy.

AUTOMOBILE PHILOSOPHY.

"Why do you turn out for every road hog that comes along?" said the missus, rather crossly. "The right of way is ours, isn't it?"
"The reason is plainly suggested in this epitaph:

'Here lies the body of William Jay,
Who died maintaining his right of way;
He was right, dead right, as he sped along,
But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong.'

A WAY OUT.

A tailor with more ingenuity than education had occasion recently to order two large flatirons of the variety known as the "tailor's goose." He scratched his head in some perplexity over the proper plural form to use.

"Two tailor's geese!" he muttered. "Two tailor's geese—that sounds worse!"

He puzzled over the question till it began to worry him, but suddenly a bright idea popped into his head. He wrote:

"Messrs. _____: Please send me one tailor's goose. P. S.—Send two instead of one."

MORE STUDENTS IN UTAH.

Utah's Westminster College opened on Sept. 7 with the largest enrollment on record.
The college department has increased 50 per cent over last year. The total enrollment is already greater than for the entire year 1920-21, with a considerable number of students to enter in another week. The boys' dormitory is full and three dwellings have been requisitioned for boys. Salt Lake City has sent an unusually large number of students. Patronage from cultivated homes is encouraged because of the high-grade work done and the Christian atmosphere maintained. These two things mean much in Utah.

A PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGE

President Warren G. Harding, at the commencement exercises of the American University, spoke as follows of the conditions and needs of our times:

"You of the next generation of leadership will live in a time of readjustment and reorganization. . . . It is a commonplace that at this time the world stands on the brink of what looks much like a precipice.
. . . . Humanity is seeking, as it never sought before, for those who can see widely, clearly, fearlessly; who will be capable of determining what is sound and what is right, and courageous enough to stand for it, though they stand alone. . . . Therefore I implore a dedication to common service, to human betterment to civilization's advancement, on the part of these young people who at last must so largely direct the affairs of country and of society in the hard but very hopeful times which lie ahead."

That for which the President pleads is intelligent, highly trained and truly Christian leadership, for it is only the Christian spirit which prompts to devotion to the service of mankind.

It is in order to produce that type of leadership that we maintain our Presbyterian colleges and work at state universities.

SABBATH WORSHIP

BY REV. S. M. MORTON, D.D.

With glad hearts we gather, dear Lord, on this day
Set apart for thy worship, to sing and to pray,
And mingle before thee, in sweetest accord,
Receiving rich lessons of truth from thy word.

Our sins like a mountain before thee arise,
But thy love and thy bounty mount high as the skies:
We thank thee, O Lord, for such favor divine,
And would live that all men may know we are thine.

In health and in sickness our help thou shalt be,
In trouble and gladness our trust is in thee:
When full we will bless thee, when hungry will still Be faithful, and patiently bow to thy will.

Dear Savior, our children we leave in thy care;
All our friends we commit to thy keeping in prayer:
Our country, thy kingdom, and all we hold dear,
We leave in thy covenant love without fear.

Thy kingdom is coming! Dear Lord, we can see Thy promise fulfilled. All the isles of the sea
Our Redeemer are crowning as Lord over all;
All nations are heeding his merciful call.

OUR EXCHANGES

BAD BOOKS.

Ephesus had a bonfire of magical books in the days of Paul's pastorate there. What a big burning there would be if all the impure books, obscene pictures, lascivious carvings, ouija boards, immoral films, and packs of cards in any one American city were to be heaped together and consigned to the flames? The fire department would receive a ten-blow alarm.—Western Christian Advocate.

PROBABLY TRUE.

That more than one minister has been canonized after his retirement from a pastorate who was cannonaded in it.—Watchman-Examiner.

WOMEN AS JURORS.

When the women of Ohio became electors, they automatically became potential jurors and have been used for jury service. They have exercised this duty during a time when the whole jury system was under fire. And yet, coming in at this crucial time with no previous training for jury service, women jurors have justified all reasonable hopes.—Woman Citizen.

AN OLD SAW RESET.

Money may make the mare go, but it requires real horse sense to keep the money from going.—Ashville Times.

HAVING FUN.

Perhaps there is no other one thing in which so many people miss the mark as when they are trying to have fun. We are all familiar with those poor dupes, some of whom are in almost every community, who ruin themselves with drink or gambling or sexual delinquencies in the delusion that this is the best way to have a good time in life. Every right-thinking person recognizes how very much they are mistaken.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

"GOVERNMENT" BY ORGANIZED MOBS.

It is rather ancient but sage advice that if you bid the devil in to tea, before you know it his business shingle will be nailed to your gate-post and he will be having his mail sent regularly to your address. Americans who love the flag will do well to pay heed immediately to the lawlessness of organized mobs which constitutes today one of the outstanding perils of the Republic.—Reformed Church Messenger.

AMERICAN INFLUENCE IN CHINA.

When the United States relieved China of paying the Boxer indemnity, and China gracefully responded by appropriating the money to the education of Chinese youth in America, a force was set in motion that is transforming Chinese thought and promises to transform China. The most powerful dynamic in changing China is the ideas that Chinese students are bringing back from America, and no nation is looked upon as so disinterested a friend as the United States.—Congregationalist.

MORE SENSIBLE THAN UTOPIAN

Englishmen as a whole have come to believe not in the League of Nations, but in some kind of international co-operation such as President Harding has in mind. Over-ambitious schemes are always likely to fail. But, without overreaching, it is quite possible to get nations of good will together. The disarmament conference at Washington itself pre-supposes and exacts this spirit. Every other line of action is to provoke the reign of insanity and with our own hands to write the doom of our civilization.—London Spectator.

SALVATION.

A Methodist preacher is publishing a book on "What can the Church do to save itself?" Well, suppose the Church should more strenuously strive to save sinners outside, would she not save herself also? And suppose, on the other hand, she should center all her concern upon herself to be saved, would not that be just the sure way to be lost? To what condition have we come, when the agency to save the world finds itself among the lost?—Eastern Methodist.

THE IZVESTIA WOULD BE PLEASED.

The Izvestia of Moscow, an official Bolshevik paper, argues that war between the United States and Japan is greatly to be desired. "Such a conflict is needed," it says, "if Red plans for a world revolution are to succeed." The Izvestia would be particularly gratified if Great Britain and other powers were drawn into the fight. Probably another great war would not lead to the sort of world revolution the Bolsheviks are looking for. Moreover, it can scarcely be argued that Bolshevism offers a refuge from war, in view of the fact that the Moscow government today maintains the largest army in the world. But it is possible that another great war, exhausting the Western peoples and disgusting them with their governments, would lead to anarchy and the general collapse of our civilization.—Times-Star.

A PERIL.

A peril to modern missions is the temptation to substitute civilization for salvation. Once a missionary or a station is bent on this, the missionaries would better be called home and the station closed. We note among the missionaries going out were a number whose labors were to be secular, such as agriculture, architecture, building etc. Such objects are necessary for material support and alleviation, but great care should be taken that the persons doing this work should be decided and vigorous Christians, in order that by their lives and associations they might witness to the Gospel. Unbelievers in these positions could do much to embarrass the missionaries.—Presbyterian.

THE DOG'S LAMENT.

It's very hard to suffer and be still—
Our name's applied to every human ill.
A "doggerel" is a rhyme that's very bad,
Indeed, the very worst that's to be had.
A book is dog-eared" when it's been abused.
Alas! I think we're very hardly used.
A man's a "dog" because he won't behave.
(It almost makes an honest doggie rave!)
A "puppy" is a fellow most uncouth—
A slur upon the flower of our youth;
A "hound" a villain of the deepest dye,
An insult to his dogdom's majesty;
A "cur," of course, is not a shining light,
Yet even he is called to bear the slight.
To "dog one's footsteps" is, I really think,
A dreadful thing, from which we dogs would shrink.
A "dogma" is a hard religious school,
A "dogged" person always plays the fool.
And "dog-days" find us panting with the heat;
We scarce can blink our eyes or lift our feet.
Why—why—throw mud upon our noble name?
A dog's a dog through all the world the same.
—London Answers.

A NEW BLACKBURN STUDENT SAYS:

"In 1916 I finished high school, and since then I have been hoping and praying that I might be able to go on to school and fit myself for more intelligent service in the world. I never gave up the hope, and each year I put aside just a little money for that purpose. Very often I said to myself, What's the use cherishing this hope? I can never go to college, for I can never save enough money. Then last summer I read about the wonderful self-help plan at Blackburn, and I was so overcome with joy that I could have shouted aloud. It hardly seems possible to me now, that I am really in college and on the way to realize the hope of all these years." Blackburn could help many more such young people if more friends shared in the work. Let me tell you about it. Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

WERE THE FORMER TIMES BETTER?

We often talk of the good people of former times and their earnest lives and their correct ways of living. We have good reasons for admiring many of these people, as the Covenanters and Puritans. They have left a record of strong faith in God's Word, and of love for his Church, of devotion to Christian principles, and of opposition to evils in the world about them, that we may well emulate. We make a great mistake when we fall into the worldly estimates of the ungodly element and criticize and censure them for their strictness. They were deeply conscientious and self-sacrificing, and we would better be more strict ourselves than to underestimate their devotion and nobility of character.

But the times in which those Christian people lived were not good times, as compared, even with the times in which we live. There has been, we believe, a gradual improvement in the times, that is in the general condition of the world. This has been strikingly true, as to material comforts and social conditions. But we have special reference to the religious and moral conditions, and we think there is evidence that the world is a more moral and more religious world than it was one hundred or three hundred years ago. Scores of discoveries and inventions have made it more easy and more pleasant to live and work. But, beyond all this, the organization and successful prosecution of missionary and reformatory and educational and evangelistic agencies has brought about a great advance in social and moral and religious life.

A hundred years ago or more there was a great tide of infidelity and unbelief and ungodliness breaking over our land. Only about one person out of fifteen was a member of the Church. Granted that the one person was very devoted and pronounced, he had a sorrowful outlook as he considered the fourteen who were indifferent, or worse, to religion. Today about one in three of our nation is enrolled as a member of the Church. There are many who are unconverted, but the relative influence of the Evangelical Church, will all its organized activities and literature, is proportionately immensely greater than in those earlier times.

As we read the reports and resolutions made in our own Presbyterian General Assembly, of only a century or so ago, we are made to realize that there was a most depressing amount of unbelief and infidelity and immorality on every hand. God's people cried and prayed; they preached and remonstrated. They were oppressed and over-borne by the conditions that confronted them. They realized that only the power of God's Spirit and Gospel could change the hearts of the people, and they prayed for a mighty and sweeping work of divine grace, to break down the existing evils and build up the kingdom of Jesus Christ.

There is no form of immorality of today that was not vigorously manifesting itself in the period just following our own Revolutionary War. Gambling, profanity, Sabbath desecration, licentiousness and other evils abounded, and good people were especially anxious and bewildered as they contemplated the influence of these evils on the young people of the day. The glamour of French infidelity and immorality was over society. In addition to our difficulties of today, there were the undiscarded evils of dueling and slavery and the unrestricted liquor traffic. The sins of the world, the flesh and the devil, involving all unregulated human nature, involved not only the early life of our own nation, but the life of the unsaved among the Covenanters and the Puritans. Every age has been a dark age as we contemplate its sins.

We have no reason to be discouraged today. The world is still sinful, but God lives, his Church is at work, and grace abounds. There are multitudes of Christian people today as prayerful, as believing and as consecrated as those of Covenanter and Puritan days. They are at work with far better instrumentalities and organizations. The enemy, of course, is desperate, and comes in as a flood, but the Lord lifts up his standard against him. The Church of today is putting up a magnificent fight. In coming centuries the church work of today will be remembered as a wonderful exhibition of consecrated energy and intelligence. There is much evil in the world to be combatted today. But it is being combatted, and, altogether, these times are splendid times.

THE PRESBYTERIAN ALLIANCE.

The Alliance of the Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian System had a great meeting in Pittsburgh from Sept. 16th to Sept. 25th, attended by many representatives of the various American churches and by about sixty of the most prominent leaders of the churches of Great Britain, Continental Europe, and other parts of the world. Without legislative functions the Alliance has existed for many years as a great bond of union for forty millions of Presbyterian Church people, perhaps the largest Protestant church group or family in the world.

The meetings of the Alliance had been interrupted for many years, or since before the war, and this meeting was one largely for the renewal of the old relationships and for the reassurance of the old cordial ecclesiastical friendship. It was largely successful along these very lines, and the delegates from Europe went away from the meeting convinced anew of the real Christian friendship and love of the American churches. If there were nothing more than this accomplished, the meeting was rich in good results.

But there was more than this. There was the strengthening of Christian faith for the proclamation of the essential truths of Christianity. Paper after paper was presented by strong men, emphasizing the fundamental faith of our Presbyterian Christianity, and for the consolidation of the faith held and contended for in these lands. Presbyterians may not all be thoroughly sound, but they ought to be, every one of them, and although their system is a form of Church Government, it should not be a form of faith, evangelical and intelligent, and, for the most part, it is, has been and will continue to be.

There was the consideration of many practical questions, growing out of the new alignment of the world as a result of the world war, and the spread of necessary reforms if there is a recovery from the war in any reasonable time. The address on Worldwide Prohibition, by Hon. William Jennings Bryan, was a marked feature. The nations that are not having sober workmen can not hope to compete with American sober labor, and, on the other hand, America must be surrounded by a sober world if it maintains properly its standard of sobriety or its safeguards of prohibition.

We have not time, at this date, to give an extended report of this great Presbyterian meeting. The influence of it will be extended into the future. The addresses will be repeated in some form all over the country. The visitors will carry back with them reports of the cordiality with which they were met and welcomed by the Christian people of the United States. We are friends of all patriotic people of the world. We stand in most cordial relationships with Great Britain and other such lands for the sustaining of evangelical faith, world-wide missionary aggressiveness, and progressive Protestant Christianity. All of these influences and elements have been strengthened, we believe, by the meeting of this great Presbyterian Alliance.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF ANARCHY.

The diseased nerves and perverted appetites and misguided natures of the liquor and beer drinkers of the country keep stirring up a good many people to break the prohibitory laws, and a good many persons are encouraging them to do so. Some secular newspapers are among the worst offenders, seeking to please a part of their patrons, but as a rule the newspapers of the country are among the best helpers of law and order. The whisky papers are, every day, making vicious suggestions as to the impossibility of enforcing prohibition, and the possibility of the repeal of the laws against wine and beer. Then there are certain lawyers encouraging men to commit offenses, assuring them of immunity, through their services. Then there are a good many of the old crowd of distillers and brewers and saloon keepers, who were always criminals, who are stirring up opposition to the law, and there are liquor agents going over the country, forming organizations of many names, all in one conspiracy for the overthrow of prohibition. And there are some mayors and other officers who are permitting law violations, with the hope of bringing the law into disrepute and securing its repeal. All of this is anarchy, pure and simple, or rather, vile and criminal and conspiring, and should meet with swift punishment by those who are in a position to punish them.

All of this should stir up all good citizens to do their best for law enforcement, and for the securing of a better sentiment among the people, many of whom are uninstructed and need assistance from those who are wise and good citizens.

The struggle is at its most severe and critical stage just now. Many law-breakers are at the most unreasoning and desperate stage. They are rehearsing the old stock arguments for free drunkenness, personal liberty and dissipation and vicious life, and for the open saloon. But, in spite of this, all the great and good and uncontroversial arguments for sobriety and prohibition are the same they ever have been. There must be no flinching and no discouragement. The evil elements are organizing, but the organizations against them must hold.

Five years more of struggle and the fight will be won. We are now in the crisis for enforcement. We struggled for a century to break down the liquor traffic. The greatest victory in the history of moral reform has been won. We must keep up the work, standing on guard, and holding the fort.

Let every school go on teaching the truth as to alcoholic poison. Let every Sabbath school have its quarterly temperance lesson. Let every pastor keep on arousing his people. Let every father and mother keep on instructing their children. Let the Anti-Saloon League watch the political workings and see that the cause is not betrayed. Five years more and the outburst of anarchy will be crushed and educated out of existence.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS.

Dr. E. C. Wareing, President of the Editorial Council of the Protestant Press of America, spoke before the Economical Congress in London, Sept. 14th, on the work of the church paper.

He held that "the press as an active agency builds the roads over which the truth of the spiritual life passes as it becomes incarnate in the lives of men."

In discussing the need of a revival of the spiritual life of the world, he said: "The present expression of the life of Protestantism has spent itself. There is a lack of solidarity in the belief in the fundamentals of the teachings of Jesus Christ. There must be demand for the world expansion of Christianity. It is either Christ or chaos. To meet the demands for the proper promotion of the spirit of evangelism the religious press is indispensable. The spoken word has its place, but the written word must go with and immediately precede and carefully follow up all that is said by the preacher in his pulpit ministrations, or his work has no permanent value."

THE APOSTLE OF METHODISM.

John Wesley was undoubtedly a busy man and very versatile and efficient. We find it hard to believe all the stories of his labors and productivity. We suspect that they have grown since his departure.

One biographer says: "John Wesley averaged three sermons a day for fifty-four years, preaching all told more than forty-four thousand times. In doing this he traveled by horseback and carriage more than two hundred and ninety thousand miles, or about five thousand miles a year. His published works include a four-volume commentary on the whole Bible, a dictionary of the English language, a five-volume work on natural philosophy, a four-volume work on Church history, histories of England and Rome, grammars on the Hebrew, Latin, Greek, French and English languages, three works on medicine, six volumes of church music, seven volumes of sermons and controversial papers. He also edited a library of fifty volumes, known as the 'Christian Library.' He was greatly devoted to pastoral work.

Later he had the care of 'all the churches' upon him. He arose at 4 a. m. and worked solidly through to 10 p. m., allowing only brief periods for his meals. In the midst of all this work he declared: 'I have more hours of private retirement than any man in England.'

ONE WAY TO PAY DEBTS.

Some of the Allied nations that borrowed tremendous sums from the United States during the great war are hesitating and faltering as to the possibility of their ever being able to pay the debt, and some are even suggesting that the United States should cancel the obligations. There is no call for this, nor justice in it. If the people of those countries will exercise the proper thrift and industry and economy, they can pay their debts to us. Especially can they do it if they will quit wasting their strength and money on intoxicating liquor. Great Britain's people squandered over two billion dollars on this dissipation last year. Let them practice sobriety and they can keep their promises and pay their debts.

There is a deep interest felt by all good people in the Disarmament Conference of Nov. 11, to be held in Washington. Many religious bodies are expressing their prayerful desire for God's blessing on the meeting. It is to be earnestly hoped that God may be revered and that he may be recognized in prayer to him. It is also to be hoped that the delegates from other lands will respect our prohibitory laws, and not trample on them, expecting to be permitted to do so by general courtesy. Law is sacred, and the laws of an entertaining country are worthy of respect.

Astronomers assure us that the fall season has commenced. The important thing in our church life is that the fall work shall commence, good and strong, with earnest purpose to make the coming months effective in evangelizing the people of our whole country.

Friends of Foreign Missions will rejoice with the American Board that the deficit which threatened to seriously cripple it has been overcome. A few weeks ago the situation seemed hopeless, but the deficit for the current year has been met, and last year's debt cut down $81,515. This seemed beyond all possibility a few weeks ago. The Congregationalist says: "It leaves the net debt of the Board to be carried forward at $161,930. The results have gone far beyond the most hopeful expectations. In fact, seldom in the Board's history have two months brought such a success out of a situation of danger."

Almost without exception the presbyteries that have voted on the overtures from the General Assembly have voted in favor of the ordination of women as deacons, and in opposition to the election of Commissioners to the Assembly for a term of two years. It is too early to predict what the final outcome will be, but the trend has, so far, been unmistakeable.

We are asked to explain the "discrepancy" in Mark 1: 2, which credits Isaiah with a prediction made by Malachi. Our questioner evidently uses the Revised Version. The Authorized Version has "as it was written in the prophets." So have most manuscripts and translations. Manuscripts in early days were copied by hand, and it is possible some scribe either wrote hastily or, thinking the passage was from Isaiah, put in his name, or some earlier scribe had made a marginal note which he incorporated in the text. At any rate, it was a mistake, and the revision committee made a mistake in putting it into the Revised Version.

Some men in the United States Senate would scarcely be heard of if they were not constantly engaged in obstructing the efforts of the rest to advance good measures. Some men come out strongly and vehemently in opposition to any prohibition measure. Of course such men are useful, in a sense, by keeping good people from going asleep in the work, and by giving assurance that the liquor fight is not yet ended. But what small creatures such persons are, after all.

Mr. Henry Barraclough, office manager for the Stated Clerk, announces that up to Sept. 7th there had been sent through the mails 11,000 copies of the Minutes. He suggests that pastors who have not received theirs advise him if their copies are still missing. At the time of writing 150 copies had been returned by postmasters because ministers had removed and had not notified the Stated Clerk's office of their change of address. The Reports of the Boards are now being mailed.

A special edition of the Lawrenceburg Press was issued last week in the interest of the Presbyterian Church of Lawrenceburg, Indiana, Rev. Forest C. Taylor, pastor. The church is ninety-two years old, having been organized Sept. 27, 1829. The paper has a great deal of interesting historical matter and many illustrations. Among these is a picture of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, who was pastor in early times, and of the church which was used in his days. It contains, also, pictures of the present building and pastor, and many other interesting people and places and buildings. The paper is a fine one, and all who have been interested in its production are worthy of commendation.

A conference of Sioux Indians in South Dakota entered its protest against modern dances. The Sioux have given up war dances, the ghost dance and other forms of dancing, some of which were more spectacular than wholesome, and some of them are disposed to prohibit dancing altogether. Some of the modern dances are worse than their tribal dances, and there were suggestions that they could do missionary work among their white neighbors.

The papers for some months have been full of scandals among stage people. These culminated in reports of a murder by a popular moving-picture idol with most sensational charges. The Western Christian Advocate says: "These charges merely emphasize the more or less chronic lack of morals among men and women of this class. The leading screen stars are already divorced. Orgies of debauchery are common to many actors and actresses. And yet these unclean individuals are allowed to entertain Americans by the thousands. The recent outbreak is only the climax of similar parties. Drinking and licentiousness have been associated together before. The boil finally came to a head and burst."

THE CALL.

BY LILLIAN F. LEWIS.

Above the clashing world of trade,
Above its urge, its toil, its aim,
An inner voice sets forth the claim—
'Tis man's high privilege to aid
Some other soul in heaven's name.

Beyond the earthly sphere of strife,
Beyond the vales and steeps below,
There sounds a call that pilgrims know;
"Be faithful, and the crown of life
The Heaven Father shall bestow."

For holds it ever strangely true,
The "still small voice" is loud and clear,
If ears attentive are to hear—
And what it bids us give or do
Becomes a law of love, not fear.
Dansville, N. Y.

THE SPIRIT OF THE MASTER.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

A remarkable address was that which the Apostle Paul gave to the elders of the Ephesian Church, assembled at his special request on the seashore at Miletus.

"They were gathered together—probably on some solitary spot upon the seashore—to listen to his address. This little company formed a singular contrast with the crowds which used to assemble at the times of public amusement in the theater of Miletus. But that vast theater is now a silent ruin, while the words spoken by a care-worn traveler to a few despised strangers are still living, as they were that day, to teach lessons for all time, and to make known eternal truths to all who will hear them—while they reveal to us, as though they were merely human words, all the tenderness and the affection of Paul, the individual speaker." (Conybeare and Howson: "Life and Epistles of St. Paul," Vol. II, p. 216.)

St. Paul's speech was followed by earnest prayer by the apostle. Then an outbreak of sincere grief. The men fell upon St. Paul's neck, clung to him and kissed him again and again, sorrowing most because they would never see him again.

Paul's address to these Ephesian elders on this occasion can not easily be reproduced. You can read it in Acts 20: 17-36.

1. In it you notice the Savior's tender love reproduced in his faithful apostle. He loved his people in spite of sore trials:

"Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day have I been in the deep; in journeying often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness" (II Cor. 11: 23-27).

2. St. Paul loved his people enough to tell them the whole truth.

"I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you," and "have taught you publicly and from house to house" (Verse 20).

3. St. Paul loved his people sufficiently to teach them the fundamentals of the Gospel truth, "repentance towards God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ" (Verse 21).

4. St. Paul loved his people enough to face future and yet unknown dangers in behalf of the truth as it is in Jesus. He was willing, if need be, to imperil his life in the Master's name. "None of these things move me," he said, "neither count

I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God" (Verse 25).

5. St. Paul loved his people enough so that, if any were lost, it would not be his fault. He said: "I take you to record this day, that I am pure from the blood of all men" (Verse 26).

As Matthew Henry says:

"He challenges them to prove him unfaithful, or to have said or done anything by which he had made himself accessory to the ruin of any precious soul," for, he adds, "I have not shunned to declare unto you all the counsel of God" (Verse 27).

Now he has for these elders a word of earnest counsel:

"Take heed, therefore, unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseer, to feed the Church of God, which he hath purchased with his own blood" (Verse 28).

Breathing through this entire address is utter devotion to the souls of those under his care. He feels responsibility for their souls. He is willing to spend himself and be spent in their service. There is nothing honorable he is not willing to do for them, if by that means he can minister to their real welfare. He has tried to be all things to all men, if by all means he can save some. Listen to Ralph Connor:

"Now let me say in conclusion just one thing. Go after your man. Go after your man. Go and get him. Grip him. In some way get some hook into him and stay with him. What does that mean? It means that back of your plan and method, back of your splendid machinery and organization, there must come the great pulsing passion to help men, the great frenzy, the great madness that seized upon the Apostle Paul, the great madness that thrust him out into his world work of saving men from sin, of bringing them, leading them, dragging them to the Christ. When the pilot was reading one night to Bill and the group about him, he seemed to be serious, this Bill, whom they all learned to love so much, and they came across this word:

"Brethren, I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren's sake. 'What does it mean?' said the pilot. 'Why it means—it means he'd go to hell for 'em.' We must not be shocked. That is the exact meaning of the word. 'I could wish myself accursed from Christ for my brethren.'"—"Ralph Connor" (Dr Charles W. Gordon), in a Presbyterian Brotherhood Convention address.

Dr. Shedd, in his Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans, is in substantial agreement with the above exegesis of Rom. 9: 3:

"The meaning of St. Paul in this passage is, that if it were possible, and permitted by God, and would secure the eternal salvation of his brethren and kinsmen 'according to the flesh,' he would be willing to be made a vicarious sacrifice for them like the typical lamb of the Old Economy, and the Lamb of God, of the New. In this utterance of self-sacrificing love for his kinsmen, the apostle shows that the same mind is in him that was also in Christ Jesus."

But how secure that burning love, that quenchless passion for souls? To answer this important question requires another article.

Colorado Springs, Col.

BACK FROM VACATION

BY REV. WILLIAM S. JEROME.

The first of September finds nearly every minister back from his vacation, and congregations once more resuming their worship and work. The modern vacation has altered considerably the church calendar. The General Assembly may fix the beginning and end of the ecclesiastical year, but practically our church year begins September first. That is the time the schools open, and then work is resumed, and hence it is the most fitting and convenient season for beginning again the work of the church.
