as true today as it was in the days of the Son of Man that the hardest class to reach with the Gospel are those who pride themselves on their morality. "The good is often the enemy of the best," and such is notably the case in this matter.

"Either make the tree good and its fruit good, or else the tree will be corrupt and its fruit corrupt." Moral Reforms do not make the tree good, they aim merely to destroy the bad fruit, not all bad fruit, but only such as is hurtful to temporal interests.—Presbyterian Standard.

BORROWING FROM FUNDS.

All church officials should beware of borrowing trust funds for private use. Pastors handle quite a bit of money during the course of a year. The church treasurers have the possession of moneys in quantity at short periods. Treasurers of Women's Missionary Societies, Ladies' Aid Societies, Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues, and classes of various kinds are supposed to keep every rule of honor.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE CHURCH PAPER.

The religious newspaper question has become a real problem in ecclesiastical life. All the great churches are finding it exceedingly difficult to float their church organs, even where they resort to taking commercial advertising to help support them. It is very rare that a church paper is self-supporting. Practically all of the leading official organs of the great Methodist Episcopal Church are sources of heavy financial loss to the church.

If we need our own religious papers, not simply as news gatherers, but far more as organs of defense for truths we hold dear, and of antagonism to things which put in peril our most precious spiritual possessions, we must provide for putting these papers on a firm and secure basis.—Herald of Holiness.

Nothing can daunt the student at BLACKBURN COLLEGE

Among the students is a young man who has no kinfolks and no money. In order to get along he is working every spare minute. Recently he asked permission to run the gang plow all day Saturday, as he is quite clever with a tractor. When asked how much time he could put in, he replied, "Well, I can begin plowing at six, I'll get an early breakfast with the cooks, and if some one will bring me a sandwich, I'll not stop for dinner and I'll quit at dark."

Surely such young people ought to have an opportunity to go to college. Many more could be helped at Blackburn if more friends shared in the work. Let me tell you about it. Address President Wm. M. Hudson, Carlinville, Ill.

SHORT COURSE

Special classes covering five weeks' work in religious education are offered by the lay school of Auburn Seminary.

Jan. 18 - Feb. 24, 1922

This course is planned for volunteer workers of churches who wish to fit themselves for trained leadership. It is distinct from the regular classes of the School of Religious Education which began work last September.

Total cost, $50; includes room, board and tuition.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS

A PASTOR'S SUGGESTION: "The Loan Fund would make a great appeal to the constituency of some of the progressive Sabbath schools of the Church. The Sabbath school of ..... Church would like to head your list."

WHAT IT WOULD MEAN: For a Sunday school to assist in building up the Rotary Loan Fund is something like taking out an insurance policy for the benefit of some needy boy or girl of the congregation.

IN CASE OF ACCIDENT: You know a fine boy who expects to go to college? But suppose his father should die, the family income be cut off! Would it not be a fine thing if, under such circumstances, your school had helped build up a fund to enable that boy to attend college?

THE ROTARY LOAN FUND: It is rotary because it keeps revolving. Money is loaned to worthy students; they pay it back when they are through school; then it is loaned again. Will your Sunday school help make it bigger? Write for information.

IDEAL RULING ELDERS.

The Presbyterian Church is strong in its noble body of Elders. They are a choice body of ordained men, who, with rare exceptions, realize the responsibility of their position, and seek to discharge it in the fear of God.

From early years this has been the unvarying characteristic of these officers of Christ's visible Church. It has been understood among the members of the Presbyterian Church that the men elected to this exalted office should be men of high character; intelligence, spirituality, and leadership. Those who have been chosen have been anxious to meet the expectations of the people and of their brother elders and ministers, and have grown in grace and power as the official years have gone by, trying to maintain the type and do their real duty.

A pastor is closely drawn to his elders as he tries to do his work in the church. He feels that he can depend upon these men, and that they are spiritually pledged to make the church strong for Jesus Christ. They will go to the full of their possibilities in their efforts. They will be present at the services, as leaders and helpers and centers of life. They will be as deeply interested and anxious as the pastor himself can be in seeking the spiritual advancement of the Church and Kingdom of Jesus Christ.

A true pastor learns to depend on these elders. In all his plans he consults them as kindred Greathearts and commissioned officers in the army of the Lord. He seeks the fellowship of their sympathy and prayers, and the fraternal guidance of their consecrated leadership. In seeking for the unity of the entire church he seeks and cultivates it first of all in the choice circle of his elders. Seldom is he disappointed.

Occasionally an elder breaks down, and is unworthy and listless and weak and useless. When he does, he becomes a person of most unhappy standing. Said a pastor once: "I have been greatly disappointed in one of my elders. He never opposes and he never makes trouble, but he never takes any interest in leading in the work, and can not be depended on to be present or to do anything of any importance. He seems to have no proper estimate of the meaning of his office, or even of the importance of being depended on in Christian work of any kind." Such a man, although not offensively injurious to the church, fails to come up to the measure of an elder, or real Christian.

Very different from this sorrowful note is that struck by another pastor, who says to his people in the Sabbath church bulletin: "Few churches have elders as loyal and helpful as those of this church. Not only do they aid in making our prayer meeting successful, visit the sick, go with the minister to help administer the communion to shut-ins, but every Sabbath morning as the people are gathering they are in the study of the church, pouring their hearts out to God for a blessing upon us."

It is fortunate for this pastor to have such elders, and to appreciate them as he obviously does. The only difficulty in the statement is that he is not exactly correct when he says that "few churches" have such elders. From a wide acquaintance we are prepared to say that many churches are blessed of God in having just such elders as these, who are trying to do all in their power to lead on in the work which God has given to them to do.

Let every elder strive and pray that he may measure up to the approved standard and become, by the grace of God, an ideal elder. He who shirks or shrinks back, and is known as one who is indifferent or lazy or undependable, dishonors Christ, injures the church and fails in one of the loftiest places in which a man is ever called on to serve God and his fellow men. That few do thus fail is for the glory of God and the blood-bought Church of Jesus Christ.

EXACT SCIENCE.

We have been told that science is not science unless it is exact; that hypothesis belong to the domain of philosophy, and is, in fact, only a technical name for guesswork.

A great many times, when some minister has antagonized the evolutionary hypothesis as a method of accounting for the origin of all things without recognition of a creator, we have heard the reply that ministers are not exact, but are "men of faith rather than of profound scientific research," and that science, through the work of Prof. Haeckel and other investigators, has established evolution.

We referred not long ago to the confession of Professor Haeckel that certain diagrams in his book on the evolution of the universe were forged. This reference has attracted some attention. Two correspondents seek information.

One says he has repeated our statement and that it had been challenged. The other calls it in question and affirms that Haeckel's writings are the highest authority. He thinks it "an unpardonable offense to charge such a man with forgery."

Professor Haeckel's confession was in connection with his trial by the Jena University Court about twelve years ago. He had been regarded as a "most careful observer and exact recorder of facts." Many investigators accepted his word as law, and regarded his embryo diagrams as proof that our race is descended from lower orders of life. It was proved that some of his embryo drawings showing evolution were fictitious or purely hypothetical, and the result was his repudiation by the scientists of Germany, who until then worshiped him as a scientific idol.

The judgment of the court was followed by his confession. Here is what he said in the Munchener Allgemeine Zeitung:

To put an end to this unsavory dispute, I begin at once with the contrite confession, that a small per cent. (six or eight per cent.) of my embryo diagrams are really forgeries—those, namely, for which the observed material is so incomplete or insufficient as to compel us to fill in and reconstruct the missing links by hypothesis and comparative synthesis. . . .

I should feel utterly condemned and annihilated by the admission, were it not that hundreds of the best observers and most reputable biologists lie under the same charge. The great majority of all morphological, anatomical, histological and embryological diagrams are not true to nature, but are more or less doctored, schematized and reconstructed.

There is a difference between evolution and the evolutionary hypothesis. All observers recognize certain changes which are properly described as evolution or development. The evolutionary hypothesis, as taught by Haeckel, is that everything has come by evolution, without a creator and without Providence. He believed in some great principle or law, but not in a personal God. He held that man was evolved from the lower animals; and to prove this, published diagrams showing the changes that have come to pass in the development. His diagrams showed the "missing link." Virchow and other scholars who denied the evolutionary hypothesis were discredited. The Bible was discredited. Science had spoken. One writer expressed the situation when he said: "Great is science, and Haeckel is its prophet."

Now it is confessed that the embryo diagrams were forged. About six or eight per cent. of them were not representations of anything in nature, as they claimed to be. Most of the other diagrams were all right. Between these, where Haeckel wished diagrams of the missing links showing the changes, he found nothing. He was "obliged to construct the missing links by hypothesis and comparative synthesis." In other words, he guessed at them, and published his guesses as his scientific observations. Worse than this, he says, that this is what scientists are doing all the time. The majority of such diagrams are "not true to nature, but are more or less doctored, schematized and reconstructed."

Let all unthinking, inexact, uninformed and unscientific preachers take note of this. Haeckel was and is absolutely discredited, but there will be other Haeckels. His theories are repudiated, but there will be other theories antagonistic to the Word of God. These will be classed as scientific, and men will be admonished that science is exact and great, and that some man or other is its prophet. Remember Haeckel and how great he was, and how he collapsed. Remember that the Word of the Lord is true, and that it endureth forever.

GOSPEL TRACTS.

The Presbytery of Southern Oregon overtures the General Assembly to direct the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work to furnish free to Presbyterian ministers, and other persons recommended by their Church Sessions, Gospel tracts for free distribution. This plea will strike a responsive chord in many a pastor's heart. Tracts have always been of great value, and are as greatly desired by pastors now as ever, but they are hard to find. The Presbyterian Board and the various tract societies formerly had great numbers of excellent tracts that were available for evangelistic and pastoral use. But of late years, as many will testify, they have been hard to procure. It is especially the province of the Board of Publication to provide these, that pastors may have them for free distribution among the people whom they visit, or otherwise. We can scarcely imagine a better aid to the work of evangelism than the Gospel tract. The Southern Oregon Presbytery asks that these be furnished free. The Presbyterian Church could well afford to do this. At any rate good tracts, in great abundance, should be easily accessible to all who wish to use them.

JEWISH EVANGELIZATION.

Jewish evangelization is to have particular attention given to it in a monthly magazine published by our Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, with Dr. John Stuart Conning as editor, called "Our Jewish Neighbors." This is a subject demanding careful attention. Of course, the Jews of today do not realize or admit the need of evangelization and of conversion to Christ. They have their churches, and have many earnest and scholarly ministers in their synagogues and temples. They preach of religious and moral and social subjects, but they do not preach Christ, nor do they believe in him as the one and only Savior. This is the essential thing. It is not enough to be religious, for one must be Christian. It is not enough to recognize the Old Testament, for one must accept the Gospels and the rest of the New Testament as the Word of God with its divine revelation and the way of salvation. It is not enough to have the faith of the Jew, for this is only a preliminary in the way of true religion.

If one were learning to read he would not stop after having learned the first ten letters of the alphabet. These letters are valuable as far as they go, and a correct knowledge of them is valuable and essential. But if one would know how to spell the words of the language, and know the meaning of the sentences and books that wise men have written, he must learn all the letters of the alphabet, and use them, and be familiar with the way that others have used them. So, the Jew who knows the Old Testament must learn and believe the New Testament, if he would enter into the truth of God in spiritual life. He is defective and partial and inchoate and incoherent in his present faith. He should go on to completion.

The Jews in the time of Christ did not wish to accept the divine truth that had come to them in Christ. So they rejected him and have been in darkness ever since. "He came unto his own, but his own received him not." Some of them received him, however, and "to as many as received him he gave power to become the sons of God." Peter had the privilege of leading thousands of Jews to faith in Jesus Christ, and so had Paul. There have been many Jewish converts during the ages, and there are thousands of them today. The number is sure to increase, and the day is coming when all these flesh-descendants from Abraham will become spiritual descendants also, and will believe in Jesus Christ as their spiritual and only Savior.

Of course, many of the Jewish people resent the thought that they are called to be Christians. They are made indignant by invitations to accept Christ. But they can be no more indignant than were many of those whom Christ called, and whom Peter invited, and whom Paul argued with in his presentation of the Gospel of Christ as their personal need. We need to follow the example of Christ and his apostles. We need to invite our Jewish neighbors to become Christians.

Many of them are moral and good in their way, and set a worthy example of generous and charitable treatment of the poor and needy, but so did those who were called by Christ to repentance and faith and salvation. Many of them pray to God, in their way, but so did they in the time of Christ, when he taught them to ask in his name, in order that they might receive. Many of them are our neighbors, but Paul found some of them who were his friends and kindred according to the flesh, without Christ, and entreated them to be reconciled to God.

We must not neglect the evangelization of the Jews. We must not forget that the promise is that they shall be gathered in. We must pray for them and must believe that they are to become Christians as a body and nation some day. It is not in disparagement of such excellent characteristics as they possess that we call them to take Christ as their Lord and Master, but it is in a desire for their well-being that we press the Gospel upon them and believe the promises that they shall as a people come to salvation in Christ.

THE MORNING STARS.

The other morning we found a great aggregation of planets in the eastern sky shining out as morning stars. There were Venus and Jupiter and Mars and Saturn and Mercury. Beneath us was the earth, which was probably as bright as any of the other planets for those who were properly located for observing its reflection. Seldom are the planets so massed. We had been waiting for this morning for many months. God moves the heavenly bodies by unerring laws and they responded in exact obedience. Infinite power and skill are manifest in the creation and direction of these planets and stars. "The undevout astronomer is mad." Only the "fool" can say in his heart that there is no God. "The heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament showeth forth his handiwork." "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? And the Son of man that thou visited him?" "O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth!"

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The union of Church and State in Germany was a source of strength to the Government and of weakness to the Church. The Government controlled the education of ministers as well as teachers. The philosophy of the universities was rationalistic and in harmony with the political superman creed of the Kaiser. Naturally, this affected the theology and preaching of the churches, but this effect has probably been over-estimated. There are still multitudes in the churches of Germany who are true to the ancient faith.

The Lutheran replies to critics who say that "the Lutheranism of Central Europe is so poisoned by negative criticism, politics and indifference as to be practically dead," and that Lutheranism in America is practically tarred with the same stick.

Of course, this is not true. The Lutheran churches in this and many other countries are loyal to the Scriptures and full of good workers. The churches of Germany were not all given over to rationalism. The Lutheran recognizes the evils of the union of Church and State, and of the control of education, religious as well as secular. It sees many faults in the Church on the Continent, as it existed before the war, and assigns the bulk of them to a single fountain head—its connection with the state. "On this continent," it says, "we have never seen the Government and the faith yoked together, and our views may be prejudiced; but a combination of taxes and offerings, confirmation and civic privileges, university and ordination, do not look good in theory, and they certainly do not work well in practice. Neither Church-State nor State-Church are an ideal marriage. Still, he is a poor reasoner who decides that the Evangelical Churches of Germany were dead in 1914."

METHODISTS IN COUNCIL.

The Northern Methodists in conference in Detroit, Nov. 17th, gave special attention to their benevolent work. The facts as brought out were both encouraging and discouraging. Subscriptions to their Centenary Movement launched there in May, 1918, and covering a five year period, amounted to $102,000,000. Of this there had been paid in to the Centenary treasurer up to October 31, 1921, $41,351,501, or 84 per cent of the amount due on subscriptions to that date. It was stated that hard times, unemployment, deaths, removals, world disillusionment, the Inter-Church collapse, plain human nature had a part in the drop in subscription payments, while the world upset, including the high cost of commodities, travel and service, and the perversities of international exchange, together have discounted the purchasing value of the sums paid in. The report showed that enterprises at home and overseas, begun on the assured expectation of forthcoming funds, have lagged or have been stopped entirely; and increased giving by the growing native church abroad, stimulated in a measure by percentage promises from America, which in some cases have not been made good, has raised questions as to faith-keeping on the part of the mother church.

Every day discloses some new plot for breaking down the prohibition laws, and corrupting the people. Notwithstanding all this, it is refreshing to know how the authorities are discovering and punishing these criminals. It is anarchy, vicious and rebellious, and needs to be dealt with severely until it is quelled, as it certainly will be, in the future. For a time appetite and covetousness combine in a wicked and willful war upon law and order. But after a time it will be seen that the liquor forces are defeated. Righteousness is to triumph.

If temperance people were having as hard a time as the liquor forces are having, they would be nearly discouraged enough to quit. But the temperance side has a thousand reasons for hopeful buoyancy and exhilaration. All that is now necessary is unflinching and pertinacious determination to press law enforcement to perfect success. The prospect is bright. The results are sure. Let there be no yielding at any point.

We see indications of a growing regard for religion in the minds of the leading men of our nation and of the world. Conditions, moral and economic, are so desperate, for all the world, that no power short of that of God can change the hearts and lives of men and bring about the right sort of life. For this we are dependent upon God, and men are realizing this fact.

TRAMMELS.

BY REV. CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD, D.D.

Worms weave in silk and bind themselves in chains,

Fine filaments enwrap the roadside weeds,
The mighty beasts are spun of slender threads,

Life moves on finest lines, in rarest web.

Man, too, is bound to be himself, and breaks

His cords and bands but to undo his joy;
For even God is caught in his own net
To owe himself his faith unto himself.

Oh, he is free who makes his trammels give

Him liberty to thus untrammelled live!

VITAL THINGS OF THE EVANGEL.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

I am going to write down here a few of the most important teachings of the Word of God in such brief compass that this statement can be used by any who see fit to circulate it in their evangelistic work.

First—The glorious Gospel of the Son of God is offered to all men without money and without price.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; buy wine and milk without money and without price.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Harken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." (Isa. 55: 1, 2). Also John 4: 14.

Second—This Gospel includes the forgiveness of sins: "Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." (Luke 24: 46, 47). "The Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." (Mark 2: 10.)

Third—This Gospel is offered to the sincere believer. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." (Jno. 3: 15, 16.)

"But without faith it is impossible to please him: for he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." (Heb. 11: 6.)

Fourth—God's great and tender love in Christ constrains the sincere believer to real obedience. "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead. And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them and rose again." (2 Cor. 5: 14, 15.)

"Ye are not your own. For ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and your spirit which are God's." (1 Cor. 6: 19, 20.)

Fifth—Sincere obedience will bring unfeigned joy.

"My son, keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee. Keep my commandments and live; and my law as the apple of thine eye. Bind them upon thy fingers and write them upon the table of thine heart. Say unto wisdom: Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman." (Prov. 7: 1-4). "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." (Jno. 15: 11.)

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law." (Gal. 5: 22, 23).

Sixth—Sincere obedience will deepen your conviction of the truths of God's Word.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." (Jno. 7: 17). "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." (Jno. 13: 17.)

Seventh—God, through his Spirit, will be your guide and helper, your tower of strength, your eternal reward.

"And I will pray the Father, that he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you for ever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you." (John 14: 16-18.)

"And the Lord went before them by day in a pillar of a cloud, to lead them the way; and by night in a pillar of fire, to give them light; to go by day and night: He took not the pillar of the cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night, from before the people." (Ex. 13: 21-22.)

"Our soul waiteth for the Lord: He is our help and our shield." (Psa. 33:20.)

"When thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, the Savior." (Isa. 43: 2.)

Eighth—God will be your shield from the temptations of the evil one.

He is "able to keep you from falling and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." (Jude 24.)

Ninth—Think of the reward in store for faithful service.

"He that had received five talents and brought other five talents, saying, Lord, thou deliverest unto me five talents; behold, I have gained beside them five talents more. His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord." (Matt. 25: 20, 21.)

"Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." (1 Cor. 2: 9, 10.)

"For the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." (Rom. 8: 18.)

"And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." (Rev. 21: 4.)

Tenth—Note, finally, the terrible penalties affixed to persistent neglect of the munificent provisions of Divine Grace for the salvation of the lost.

"Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip.

"For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense and reward;

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" (Heb. 2: 1-3.)

"I know thy works, that thou art luke-warm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." (Rev. 3: 15-16.)

COUNTRY RELIGIOUS HELPS.

BY A FARMING PASTOR.

That there are religious helps in country life may be inferred from the well known claim that ninety per cent of the Protestant clergymen of all denominations are from the farms and small towns governed by country conditions.

A healthy body and sound mind and clear conscience are co-related. Country life is recognized as most favorable to the development of the child, even the puny child, into rugged health. The open air and varied exercise and plain fresh food are the helpful conditions. The time has passed when a strong robust athletic body was presumed to spell the coarse brutal disposition of a bully and the delicate, feeble attenuated body is no longer indicative of a refined and cultured woman. We have come to know that a well developed physique makes for the highest type of manhood and also of womanhood.

A perfect machine is easily guided and controlled, but when the power is irregular or brakes broken so that it will not obey the driver at the wheel, it is impossible to escape the catastrophe. With a perfect body the mind and conscience can readily guide and keep control, but when the appetites are abnormal and the passions are aflame, there is ruin in spite of the protest of reason and conscience. Diseases and feebleness of the flesh are not the promoters of grace, but bounding joyous health is more readily conducive to holiness.

The Bible is an out-door book, both Old and New Testaments, and to understand and appreciate either one must be an out-door man. Abraham and Isaac and Jacob lived under the skies; even the royalists, as Saul and David, were familiar with camels and cattle and sheep and their habits. The great fore-runner, carried into the wilderness to escape the fury of Herod, remained and grew up in the wilds. The Lord's life was in the open. He preached his greatest sermon on the mountain. He continually illustrated his teachings by familiar processes of nature that have not changed and are unchangeable. One must be familiar with country life to fully appreciate and understand them. One must have worked in the corn field to recognize the springing blade and the changes in the plant until it is ripened and in the shock. The boy who has tried to pull the cockle out of the wheat knows how hard it is to get rid of the tares and not root up the grain. The boy who never went a fishing, to whom all fish look alike, does not appreciate the separation of the good from the bad. The boy who has not worked in a garden can not appreciate the possible large growth from a little seed like the mustard. One must have himself found the lily in the moist spot in the meadow, planted and brought to its perfect delicate bloom without man's care, to understand the comparison. When one has watched the birds so happy and so free, care-free, gathering their food each day, he is helped to the strong but simple faith that says "Give us this day our daily bread."

The fundamental grace of industry is compelled. "Six days shalt thou labor"; "If any will not work neither shall he eat." City folks who go to the country for outings and picnics think of the country as a great playground, where they can walk or roll on the grass; where melons and all sorts of green things grow in the fields; where apples and pears can be clubbed from the trees; where eggs can be had for the gathering and berries for the picking; where the cows come in from the pasture every evening loaded with butter and cream. When one would make his home and earn his living in the country these illusions are quickly dispelled. There is unending toil, even the boys and girls have the continuous round of chores in the house and barn and garden and field. There is the succession of crops that must be planted and tended and harvested at the proper times. They often conflict in their demands for attention. Weeds must be subdued in all fertile soils and every useful plant that grows has its enemies. Pests attack the fruit before the blossom is full blown. Diseases threaten the usefulness of the stock of every kind. The family that gets its living out of the soil must "dig or starve." Industry is compelled. That this toil is continuous is of great value in the building of character. Idleness dissipates both physical and moral fiber. What is gained by industry may be lost by a period of idleness. It is better for the character of a man that he work a week for his wage than to receive the same wage for three days of work and three days of compelled idleness. The intermittent jobs do not promote material nor mental prosperity. Economy is naturally allied with industry. The spendthrifts of the world are not those who have learned the value of a dollar by honestly earning it. Industry and economy are linked and the basis of every worthy life. He who submits gracefully to the sentence "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread" has taken a long step in the path of righteousness.

The farmer is compelled to seek and obey the truth. Facts alone are valuable to him. Falsehood is always and necessarily a failure with him. The true nature of the plants must be known; the demands of soil and climate; the mode of culture and the brand of fertilizer required. No mistake must be made. Plants will not change their nature nor permit a substitute. The dealer may impose a lie upon the farmer, but the farmer can not pass the lie on to his potatoes or any crop that grows. The same is true with the nature and habits of every animal he handles. He must know the conditions and feeds that develop kine-life and sheep-life and swine-life. The true nature of both plants and animals must be discovered and the real stimulating fertilizers and appropriate nourishing feeds must be supplied. This necessity of knowing the real truth induces the habit and leads to a search for the truth in any other field of thought, scientific, political or religious. The habit of obeying the truth is also compelled. Though a farmer should be very intelligent and know the nature and requirements of his plants and animals, yet neglect, or, for any reason, fail to meet their demands, there could be only certain failure. These habits of mind have given the farmer a reputation for innocence or freedom from guile and plain simple honesty. The term "honest farmer" is often derided and the assertion is made that there are just as many farmers dishonest as any other class. If this is true it may be truthfully added that a dishonest farmer is worse than any other dishonest man, because he sins against the light of his knowledge, of his habits, and all the leadings of his occupation.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE.

BY REV. A. W. BENSON.

There is no truth taught in the Word of God more comforting and encouraging than the assurance that "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord; and he delighteth in his way." When our experiences are such that we cry, "All these things are against me," he is saying, "All things work together for good to them that love God." "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in him." Many illustrations of this are given in the Scriptures, and none more significant than when the Apostle Paul made his arrangements to preach the Word of God in Asia, he was forbidden by the Holy Ghost, and when he "attempted to go into Bithynia, the Spirit suffered him not."

In going to these places the Apostle had sought divine guidance by prayer, we may well believe, but it came in a way entirely unexpected. He received a vision in which he saw a man from Macedonia, beseeching him, "Come over into Macedonia, and help us." He recognizes it as a direct call from God, and obeys the voice and departs immediately for Philippi, the chief city of that part of Macedonia, taking with him Silas, Timothy, and Luke. To the Apostle the disappointment in his plans and the change of procedure may have been a perfect enigma, but he does not presume to question the divine will and to interpose objections. It is enough for him to know it is from the Lord, who is too wise to make any mistakes and too loving and kind to do his children any wrong. He is content to believe that the Lord our God puts us in those places where we shall see the most of his mercy and goodness, and that an obedient servant is the only true one. He is willing to trust God where he can not trace him, and to do God's work in God's way, however much it may seem to conflict with his own desires and wishes. On arrival there he was received as the missionary of the Cross often is, with perfect indifference. There was no welcome, or loving response. He tarried several days with nothing done. No heathen were allured to the Gospel by his preaching. No men were reached. Only one lone woman becomes interested in his message. What an insignificant result after the Spirit's double injunction, the Macedonian vision, the long journey, and the high expectation of spiritual success.

But God's purposes ripen slowly. Time goes on and there stands the church at Philippi, the most blessed of all the works of God and Paul, and the Epistle to the Philippians with its rich legacy to the Church in all ages. Let no man despise the day of small things. That act of leaving Asia Minor, on which his heart was set, and going into Macedonia at the Lord's bidding, was the winning of a new continental to Christ, and the winning of that continent (Europe) meant a christianized Greece, a christianized Rome, a christianized Germany, France, England and America. We need to keep in mind that God's ways are not our ways, nor his thoughts our thoughts.

Our plans are often thwarted, and our fondest desires and expectations defeated. But in this there is always love and mercy. Our disappointments become God's appointments by which a greater good is to be realized, both as it respects the cause of Christ and our own spiritual welfare. The Lord our God never takes anything from us, but he gives us something better instead. So it proved in his dealings with Paul at this time. He was leading him away from the conversion of Asia Minor to the conversion of Europe. Two doors were closed against him that another larger one might be opened. But the way must be attended with discouragements and difficulties to test his faith and perseverance. It is all God's work and he is taking care of it. He often sends the sunlight of success after long darkness of waiting. Results are to be reckoned by what they themselves originate. After ten years of seeming unfruitful labor in China there came the beginning of what is now the largest church in that Empire. At the time it seemed a small thing that a young man was started in the Christian life by a sermon from a poor preacher, but that young man was Charles Haddon Spurgeon. It was a boy on his father's farm who heard a visiting evangelist tell a pathetic story of a lost sheep, which God blessed to the conversion of T. DeWitt Talmage, and through him multitudes of others.

In Christian work the best of us may expect times of great discouragement, but we must wait patiently, for we have not seen the end. With our God there is no failure, and though he may tarry long in the display of saving grace, yet at his appointed time he will come and not tarry, and his promise be fulfilled. "And let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." (Gal. 6: 9.) "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised." (Heb. 11: 23.)

TENDERNESS AND GREATNESS.

BY REV. D. L. CHAPIN.

The most sublime and absolutely perfect example of the principle of tenderness in a great life is found in Christ. The home in Bethany where Christ frequently visited was bereft of one of its members. Standing by the grave of the one whom he loved, and ere he spoke the word that restored him to life again, we are told that Jesus wept. "Jesus Wept." In this way his tenderness and sympathy were wondrously and perfectly manifested. Drawing nigh to Jerusalem, as he beheld the city, he wept over it.

"He wept that we might weep,
Each sin demands a tear,
In heaven alone no sin is found,
And there's no weeping there."

In a delightful little book, written by Ozora S. Davies, 1918, are found these words: "Jesus wept. It is the shortest verse in the Bible that records this fact. It is also one of the most precious. It lets us look into the heart of Christ. We discover his human sympathy, we see him in the finest expression of his personality, suffering with others. Effusiveness and sentimentality are, of course, undesirable. But a hard and cynical temper, in the presence of human sorrows, is inconsistent with the true ideal of life. Jesus never let his feelings run away with his control of himself; on the other hand, he gave full expression to his emotions, and was not ashamed of his tears."

"Young men," he added, "often yield to the tendency to steel themselves, when they meet the experiences that appeal to the emotions, and call out expressions of grief. They think it manly to be stoical, when their eyes ought to be wet. The strongest men are tenderest."

In our boyhood days our father presented us with a book written by Rev. Joseph A. Collier, Kingston, N. Y., entitled "The Young Men of the Bible." In this book the writer is speaking of St. Paul, and his resemblance to Christ, and no less so in his tenderness and sympathy. He also refers to the too general impression that it is unmanly to weep, quoting these lines from Sir Walter Scott:

"He turned away, his heart throbb'd high,
The tear was bursting from his eye.
With haughty laugh his head he turned,
And dashed away the tear he scorn'd."

When the black lines told us our beloved President Lincoln was assassinated our father wept almost like a child. Were David and Jonathan weaklings? Nay, verily, they were mighty men. Mighty in war and in peace. Men of valor, they were the heroes of their day and age. Yet they wept the one with the other. Is it necessary to make further Scripture reference to demonstrate this fact that tenderness is an ally to greatness? Joseph and Jonathan are characters that any and every young man should prayerfully study and seek to emulate their virtues. In secret and in public, Joseph in his exaltation had his eyes bedewed with tears, even as his divine Savior of whom he is a most impressive type.

Who does not remember that when President Harding and his wife were in New York last May, as he reviewed the survivors of the world war in Brooklyn, tears came to our President's eyes. Then, as Mrs. Harding stopped to shake the hand of a paralyzed soldier, her eyes filled with tears, as she took a pink rose from her gown and attached it to his blouse?

The last words of a Christian soldier in the Civil War were: "Tell my mother how I longed to see her. Tell my father I am glad he gave his consent. Tell my minister I thought of him, and thank him for all his counsels. Tell him that I find that Christ will not desert the passing soul, and I wish to give my testimony to the living, that nothing is of real worth, but the religion of Jesus Christ. And now, chaplain, will you pray for me?" With swelling emotion and tender tones the chaplain besought God's help. Then restraining his sobs, the chaplain bowed down, and three times impressed a kiss upon his beautiful brow.

Gipsy Smith, recently in Columbus, said: "The prayer meeting is not stale, except to stale people." He told them to get nearer to God. "Pray to him, lift up your hearts and pelt heaven with your tears." The divine promise is that "they who sow in tears shall reap in joy." And who has not seen tears of joy? A man at least sixty years of age with six others accepted Christ. As he received the sacrament of baptism, his wife, very near by, smiled through her tears. Thousands of men there are, yes, tens of thousands, with seemingly cold exterior whose hearts are warm and tender. May not, then, the heart weep, while as yet the eyes are not suffused with tears? How comforting to the child of God is the promise that he will wipe away all tears from their eyes. "Rejoice with those who rejoice, and weep with those who weep."

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

Our Ministerial Association on Nov. 21 was addressed by Rev. J. C. Clark, describing the conditions of Armenia, and the starving children. Some of the speakers in the following discussion very strongly criticised the United States government for not accepting the mandate over Armenia, asserting that it would have entailed no more expense than our Philippine problem, and would have protected this ancient Christian country, and prevented massacres and starvation. While the present duty is recognized, it was clear that as a nation we have missed a great opportunity.

The Homewood Church on the evening of Nov. 23rd held an informal reception for the new pastor, Rev. C. Carson Bransby, and his wife in the church chapel.

On Monday, Nov. 21st, a number of ministers from all denominations met in the Smithfield M. E. Church to protest against the rumored removal of the prohibition officer who has been in charge of this district. This officer, Mr. Exnicios, was reported to the Government as having criticised judges of our District Court for a lax enforcement of the prohibition law, in an address made in the Second Presbyterian Church. It is rather difficult for men of marked energy and zeal to speak softly, or always wisely, on such a theme, but Dr. Shelton and others asserted that his language had been misconstrued. The meeting sent a request to Washington to prevent any action looking to the removal of Mr. Exnicios, and, it is said, the removal has been countermanded. It doubtless is a great disappointment to energetic officers to find the courts unsympathetic apparently, but patience and persistence will do more than even oratorical complaint.

There is something odd, but not unpleasant in the offering of prayers by the participants in the revival meetings now being held in our Sheridan suburb, that if rain must fall it shall descend in the morning or late at night, so the attendance at the meeting might not be hindered. Now do not smile at this simplicity of thought and desire. I like it, and regard it as preferable to the so-called intelligence which thinks God can not control a universe he has created. The old Scottish farmer of whom Carlyle wrote as proceeding quietly with his fanily devotions while the winds threatened his sheaves of wheat, is a finer man, and a wiser, than Hume or Herbert Spencer. On the other hand, let us who pray remember that a dry street or evening is not essential to God's work, and through difficulties we reach not only the stars, but a true salvation. It is a straight gate and a narrow way, and despite our modern effort to make the Christian life inviting.

The Third Church, finding the Sabbath-school attendance increasing, is making over the galleries in the chapel into class rooms. The architect of this church had a remarkable genius for a Gothic auditorium and exterior, but his acquaintance with Sabbath-school needs or arrangements seems undeveloped.

The Sixth Church, Rev. B. F. Farber, D.D., pastor, is considering plans for the enlargement of the auditorium and the Sabbath-school rooms. This necessity has been resisted only by the high cost of building, and it is hoped that during the winter or spring, the conditions will be more favorable. This church has called Mr. J. P. Ewing, formerly of Portland, Oregon, to be director of religious work.

"No one has done his duty until he has done his best."—Selected. This poster hangs in a prominent place, meeting the eye of every person entering the Bank of Pittsburgh. The officers of this bank are great believers in stimulating and suggestive precepts or sayings like this, and use many, sowing as it were, beside all waters.

Elder S. E. Gill, having been Superintendent of the Sabbath School of the East Liberty Church for thirty-one years, was recently presented with a gold watch by the session and Sabbath-school workers. There is a propriety in such a gift to one who is ever on the watch, makes a minute of every good thing, and seconds every earnest teacher's effort.

On the evening of Nov. 19th, a reception was given by the Second Church, Wilkesburg, to the new pastor, Rev. Dr. Hugh Leith and his wife, and also the new members received at the last communion. The address of welcome was made by Prof. William Martin, to which a fitting and appreciative response was made by Dr. Leith.

A series of special lectures are being delivered by Rev. Dr. S. N. Hutchison in the East Liberty Church, after the half hour devotional service on Wednesday evenings. Preceding the devotional meeting for fifty meetings, classes take up different subjects. Dr. Hutchison's special lectures will be on John Calvin, John Knox, Andrew Melville, and the Covenanters, the Westminster Assembly, William the Silent, and the Church of the Netherlands. For the convenience of those enrolled in the classes, supper is served at 6.20. On the evening of Nov. 20th Dr. Hutchison preached on "Future Punishment, and one who heard him said, the speaker, while freeing the subject from the false imagery of medieval writers and Dante's fancy, held fast to the evangelical faith, the clear statements of Christ, emphasizing the anguish of separation from God, and while stressing the everlasting character of such a punishment left all the mysteries of the problem to God.

The report of the Permanent Committee on Synodical Home Missions, of which Rev. S. J. Glass, D.D., is secretary, and Rev. C. C. Hays, D.D., president, has just been published. It is suggestive, and in some ways encouraging. This committee has fixed as its ideal the bringing up of the minimum salary to $1,500 and a manse; certainly, in these days, no extravagant aim. Some of the presbyteries which are abundantly able to do so, should resolve that they will contribute to the committee as large an amount as they draw out. This is an inconsistency of several well-to-do presbyteries.

Space will not permit me to analyze this great work of Pennsylvania, but one of the most remarkable and exhilarating and interesting features of this report is the list of workers among foreigners. Here are seven pages of such workers, each a foreign name, men and women going out among the millhands, and miners, and industries, to which Middle and Southern Europe sends its often ignorant and superstitious tens of thousands, whom our great corporations use, but whom the Church, and especially the Presbyterian, is doing so much to evangelize, to Americanize and to make better workmen and better citizens. The few pages of this report by Dr. Glass read with a Christian imagination and an intelligent remembrance of these foreign-speaking peoples. They widen our thought, and remind us that "we have not done our duty until we have done our best." It is also true that when our pastors put this subject clearly before their people, many of whom are interested in these industries, there is a cordial response. Sometimes when the would-be survey critics comment on the relations of capital and labor in our vicinity, let them pause and reflect that the Presbytery of Pittsburgh gave $131,000 last year for the work of Home Missions within our state, and its employers are willing contributors to every scheme which will transform the wayward and ignorant.

Recently an interesting conference took place in New York between the officers of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, and several gentlemen who are heads of, or closely interested with the great corporations. Mr. Rowntree, of England, spoke at length on the relations of employers and employe, and illustrated his theory by facts from his own industry, the manufacture of chocolate. It was interesting, but Mr. Rowntree acknowledged that different businesses have different problems, and a steel corporation, or a great manufactory of railroad engines or machinery, was more complicated than the output of chocolate. One effect of the conference was, at least, to restate the principle that the most efficient way to reach righteousness and entire justice in such relations, is for every man, employer and employed, to live and act in a Christian way.

WASHINGTON CITY LETTER.

BY REV. W. F. EAGLESON, D.D.

The Presbytery of Washington City, held a profitable meeting in the New York Avenue Church last week. The Moderator, Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, introduced Dr. John A. Marquis, Dr. Thomas C. Moffett, Dr. John B. Kelley, and other visiting officials of the Boards and Agencies of the Church. There was an unusually large number of visiting brethren. Rev. John D. Keith, who came from Idaho within the year, was dismissed to the Presbytery of East Hanover, of the Southern Church.

The brethren of Washington City try each year to outdo the record of the preceding year in entertaining the Moderator. This year, the Church of the Covenant, Dr. Charles Wood, pastor, gave a splendid program and banquet in the church parlors, in honor of Dr. Henry C. Swearingen. The Moderator responded in a telling address. It was a very great pleasure to see the Moderator, Dr. Swearingen, and ex-Moderator, Dr. Radcliffe, both of whom came from the United Presbyterian Church. The success which has attended these brethren is an argument for wider union. Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, changing cars, became a welcome guest for a part of the occasion.

The Ministerial Association of Washington City, usually addressed by home talent, is having three speakers this year from beyond our bounds. One is a Presbyterian. Rev. D. H. Johnston, D.D., of Scranton, Pa., addressed the meeting last Monday on "The Preaching Task for Today." An incident he narrated, worth repeating, was of a minister who was given to the preaching of sensation and all the follies which go with it. On entering his pulpit one Sabbath, he found a note from a parishioner which read: "Sir, we would see Jesus." The minister betook himself to his study in prayer and in true searching of self. He began preaching sermons of a Spirit-filled Gospel. One day he found on his pulpit another note which read: "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord." Dr. Johnston made an earnest plea for a pure Gospel, sincerely preached to a needy world, with faith that God's Word would not return to him void. The paper was an illustration of the sincerity for which the speaker pleaded.

Twenty churches of Washington City have just completed an "Exposition." The First Church, Dr. John Brittain Clark, pastor, had a booth in which the work of the church among the mountaineers was on exhibit. This church also presented an interesting program telling of the work among the mountaineers. The Eckington Church, Dr. Henry E. Brundage pastor, had a booth and gave a program descriptive of the work of the Daily Vacation Bible School. Likewise eighteen other churches presented the work of missions in China, Japan, etc. Then from the talent of all these churches one hundred characters in costume presented the "Pageant of Christian Liberty." It is a pity this exposition, and particularly the pageant, could not be produced by the churches in every city and hamlet where church bells ring. The New Era Committee is very busy with these programs, and will likely serve those communities which really want the exposition.

Much credit is given here to Marshal Foch and General Diaz, for the example they have set in practicing total abstinence while in America, in order that they might not break the laws of the nation in which they are guests. Such officials are exempt from sumptuary laws. They could drink if they wished. Other foreign officials are using drinks. A local paper says: "The public example of these two war heroes, who abstain while on American soil, is one of the finest examples of respect for law that has ever been presented to the nation."

The Conference on Limitation of Armament has proceeded far enough to prove that it has in it the richest possible blessings for the Church. It would take columns instead of paragraphs to tell the story. The coming of the delegates made some memorable occasions. When the Chinese arrived, the hosts of that nationality, from far and near, thronged all approaches to the Union Depot, to greet them. Delegates, lawyers, clerks, etc., from China alone, are reported to be over one thousand. Other nationalities throng our streets in like numbers. Unexpected aid is coming to the Christian religion in the conference, from the work done by the missionaries abroad. Vice Admiral Tsai Ting Kan, adviser to the Chinese delegation, was educated partly in America. He addressed the National Geographic Society. In referring to the proposals of Secretary Hughes, he said: "Your statesmen scrapped the navy, and more. They scrapped the old international diplomacy. They can do this because they have back of them public opinion. They have lived near God. They believe in God." The Church has ever taught the Scripture: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for after many days it will return to thee." The Church cast its bread upon the waters in China many years ago. And now in a moment of the most imperative need, and in the most unexpected way, the bread is returning to us. The Church has unseen helpers in the Conference which is weighing the destinies of the world.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

Dr. King and Dr. Montgomery are both back from the Texas itinerary, and have made full reports touching upon the work done in that empire. This itinerary was agreed upon between Dr. King and the Texas brethren, and at a conference in June last, in Dallas, the agreement was reached as to the general plan and the time. Dr. King was to provide the teams, and they were to arrange for the meetings as to places and times.

Three teams were provided for, one of which Dr. King would head, and another Dr. Montgomery, and the third Dr. Warren H. Wilson. The members of the various teams were to be a representative of the Boards, a representative of the New Era, and a representative of the Woman's Home Board, on one of the teams, together with a representative of the state. The time to be occupied was to be two weeks at the most, but in the case of one team a somewhat longer time was required.

Here are the results so far as results of spiritual work can be tabulated. Thirty conferences were held, 160 churches were reached, 225 addresses were delivered, and 14,688 people were in attendance. There are 375 churches in the synod, so that almost half of them were reached in this itinerary, and there are 31,384 in our Church in that synod, and this shows that almost one-half of them were present at some of these meetings. Who can estimate what instruction and encouragement were given these people who were in attendance? But there is a larger circle who were reached by them when they went home and told what was said and done in these meetings. People came forty and fifty miles, and went home after the night meeting, so eager were they to hear what was said and see what was done. While emphasis was placed on Home Missions, the whole benevolent work of the Church was stressed, because if the budget is all provided for, then Home Missions will get its share, and its work will be done.

I feel sure that a new day has dawned on Texas, because of this work which has been done with great labor and effort to win the whole synod to a larger vision of its possibilities, and the work that should be done to hasten the kingdom.

It becomes my painful duty to write of the death of one of the outstanding men in Oklahoma. On Nov. 4, Rev. S. V. Fait went home, and the church of Anadarko was left to join with his family in mourning their loss. The whole community felt the shock and all the ministers of the city joined in a great memorial service on the following Sabbath. Mr. Fait was one of the most trusted members of synod's Home Mission Committee. He was a Christian gentleman and it will be hard to fill his place in the Church in that synod.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

We are sometimes told, by those who have never very carefully examined into the facts, that the problem of the vacant church and of the unemployed minister is practically easy of settlement by placing the unemployed minister in the vacant church. Methodism may accept this as a possible arrangement to a large extent, because that is the theory under which the system works. But Presbyterianism has no such system in practical working order. Possibly the nearest we come to it is through the Committees on Vacancy and Supply, a plan that works well where presbyteries give it a fair trial, by the co-operation of the churches. But even were it carried out to the fullest extent, it does not provide for a big shortage of ministers who are acceptable to the churches, and we must always take into account this matter of acceptability. But supposing that some very wise and tactful committees could locate the men who want to be located, how far does that take care of the situation? A careful study of the situation in the Synod of Michigan reveals certain facts. 1. There are 275 ministers in the Synod and 261 churches, apparently a minister for every church. 2. 167 of the 275 ministers are pastors or stated supplies of 189 churches, some having more than one church under their care. 3. Not more than twenty at the outside of the ministers who are not in charge of churches are looking for a field. The list includes secretaries, professors, general missionaries and others already employed in church work. 4. Out of the less than twenty who would accept a call to a church, a great majority are at an age when no matter how good preachers they are, it is difficult for them to make a new settlement. So as far as the Synod of Michigan is concerned the relief for vacant churches is not in sight.

The visit of R. A. Haynes, federal prohibition commissioner, to Michigan has given new courage to those who desire strict enforcement of the law. Detroit has special difficulties to deal with, because of the persistent shipments of liquor across the river from Canada, but Mr. Haynes has found the Canadian authorities ready to co-operate in controlling this traffic. Our state laws are definite in regard to issuing beer as medicine, and it is not likely that we shall have any serious trouble from the physicians in regard to this. As to private stills in the homes, mostly of foreigners, at the rate they are blowing themselves up by accidents, fear will have large weight in checking this evil. Even parents, who are willing to risk fine or imprisonment, hesitate at seeing their children blown into eternity in making private booze. Mr. Haynes declares that he is not here to control that sort of thing, but to reach the men of means, who are on a large scale defying the law. Plans have been made in Detroit to follow up the work systematically as well as vigorously. On Nov. 17th, there was a mass meeting at the First Presbyterian Church, where Commissioner Haynes and others spoke. Dr. James W. Inches, one of the best police commissioners any city ever had, is heartily with the policy of wiping out the leaders of commercialized liquor traffic.

It is always unfortunate to base expectations on a big "IF," but when experience compels it, there seems to be no other way of judging. The "IF" in this case refers to the proposed visit of the New Era Committee of our Church to Detroit, Dec. 10th and 11th. We are to have Dr. Swearingen, Moderator of the General Assembly; Dr. Foulkes, Dr. J. A. Marquis and Dr. Schell, the new Secretary of Foreign Missions, with Miss Dawson and Mrs. Roys, representing the Home and Foreign Work of the women. The pulpits of the First, Woodward Avenue, Trumbull Avenue, Jefferson Avenue, Westminster Covenant, Bethany and Highland Park churches are to be occupied by these representatives, besides special meetings at Grosse Pointe. A noonday lunch on Saturday is to be attended by ministers and laymen. All of the Synodical New Era Committee are specially invited, and if they come, they are to occupy various pulpits in Detroit Presbyterian churches. Every minister, with as many elders as possible, will be expected from churches outside of the city. The two big "IFS" are, "Will they come out to the services?" and "Will the members generally receive the benefit?" The pastors are the key to the situation, and their hearty co-operation is essential to success. May we confidently expect such co-operation?

Rev. Thomas G. Sykes, D.D., was installed at Mt. Clemens, Dec. 5th.

Rev. Walter Nichol was installed at Ecorse, Dec. 9th.

Rev. W. J. C. Belch, assistant pastor at Highland Park, receives a call to be full pastor.

CLEVELAND LETTER.

BY REV. GEORGE A. MACKINTOSH, D.D.

The Cleveland Heights Church, Rev. W. F. Dickens-Lewis, D.D., pastor, will soon be able to use the basement of its future auditorium, which will provide room for about four hundred of its Sabbath school. On Sabbath there was a union service of this church and the Fairmount Church in the latter's edifice, Dr. Dickens-Lewis preaching.

Rev. S. R. Welty has come as the assistant to Dr. A. P. Hegley in Calvary Church.

The Old Stone Church is planning to entertain and hear Dr. and Mrs. Goheen, of India, during the week of Dec. 4-10. Dr. Meldrum's sermon on "The Grave and the Garden," delivered in the Old Stone Church about eighteen years ago, has just had its seventh printing, so insistent is the demand for it.

Every week-day morning sixty or more children drop in at North Church for a twenty-minute service of scripture, song and prayer. Rev. Harvey Holt is the pastor.

The First Church of East Cleveland is adding a $20,000 addition to its Sabbath-school building. The Presbyterian Union is lending $10,000 without interest.

The Maple Heights Mission is getting an $11,000 church building as its first church home. The Presbyterian Union is paying the whole amount, but expects the church eventually to repay half of the cost.

Bethany Church has just been given a grant of $2,000 to be applied to the debt on its $11,000 manse purchased last January.

The Wickliffe Church has received a grant of $1,000 toward the purchase of a much-needed manse.

Ashtabula First Church, Rev. H. D. Borley, pastor, will celebrate its one hundredth anniversary Dec. 4-10. Former pastors and Rev. A. C. McGiffert, D.D., a son of a former pastor, will preach. Presbytery will hold its winter meeting during the celebration, holding sessions Dec. 5 and 6. The Brotherhood of the church will entertain presbytery at dinner Dec. 5. Dr. W. F. Weir and Dr. Charles H. McDonald, at the head of the men's work in our church, will speak at the dinner conference. Dr. Henry B. Master, D.D., secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, with its actuary, will be present to answer the protest of Cleveland Presbytery that there is unfairness and discrimination in the present plan of the Sustentation Department of the Board.

Phillips Avenue Church, Rev. W. P. Thomas, pastor, welcomed thirteen new members last Sabbath at its communion service, following two weeks of evangelistic meetings, when the pastor was assisted by Dr. W. F. Dickens-Lewis, Rev. A. H. Limouze and your correspondent.

At the forum of the Church of the Covenant last Wednesday was heard Mr. Whiting Williams, who is a member of this church. He has recently returned from a tour of France, Belgium and Germany, working his way as a laborer through these countries. The speaker at the forum this week will be Dr. Charles F. Thwing, who has just laid down his work as president of Western Reserve University after many years of service.

The Presbyterian Ministers' Club was the guest of the Congregational Ministers' Club at Pilgrim Church on Monday, when the latter gave a farewell reception to President Thwing.

Rev. P. A. Fant, one of the best-known Italian ministers of the country, has taken charge of the St. John's Church, that was served for many years by Rev. P. E. Monnet. The latter will spend his last years at Valdeese, N. C.

Rev. James D. Williamson, D.D., chairman of the Church Extension Committee, has been made acting head of Western Reserve University to serve until a successor to Dr. Thwing is chosen.

Immanuel Church, of which your correspondent is pastor, is, for the second season, observing "Church Night" every Friday, with dinner at 6:30 o'clock, followed by the devotional service. This is in turn followed by a musical program or an address by some prominent speaker.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Rutgers Presbyterian Church is celebrating the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of its founding. Last Sabbath the pastor, Rev. Dr. Daniel Russell, preached a historical sermon in the morning, and in the evening the choir sang "The Music of 1796." Tuesday morning there was a special meeting of the Woman's Guild. Wednesday evening a service of consecration was conducted by Rev. Dr. George Alexander, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. There will be a historical pageant Thursday evening, and Friday evening will be "An Old Home and Neighborhood Night." Next Sabbath, Dec. 4, there will be a special communion service in the morning, and in the evening Rev. Dr. Dwight W. Wylie, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, will preach.

An effort was recently made to have New York Presbytery unite Rutgers and the Fourth churches, but there was nothing accomplished. The pastor of Rutgers Church, Rev. Dr. Russell, is doing a fine work and is to be heartily congratulated. Another excellent work is being done by Rev. George J. Russell, the minister of the Church of the Puritans, a Presbyterian congregation, with a good church edifice and little material around the church for upbuilding. The neighborhood has been overrun by colored people crowding out the white people. Nevertheless, Mr. Russell is bringing in a large congregation, and without sensational methods.

The forty-ninth anniversary of the McAuley Water Street Mission was celebrated Sabbath, Nov. 27. The exercises are continued through Sabbath, Dec. 4. Among the speakers were Rev. Dr. Edgar W. Work, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church; Rev. Dr. Arthur J. Smith, of the New York Evangelistic Committee, and Mrs. Charles M. Alexander, widow of the great evangelistic singer. The mission was founded by Jerry McAuley, formerly a river thief and convict. It is said that it is the first Rescue Mission of its kind in the world. As soon as Jerry McAuley was converted he began to tell it out. The first services were held in what was known as "Kit Burns' rat pit." The other superintendents of the Mission have been the late S. H. Hadley and John H. Weyburn. Mrs. Weyburn was chosen to succeed her husband and is now in charge. Only God knows how much has been accomplished by this Mission, and the great work goes on steadily.

Bronx Gospel Hall and Bible School has gone into its new building. It is under the auspices of the National Bible Institute.

The West Side Y. M. C. A. was twenty-five years old last Sabbath. More than 100,000 members have been enrolled during the quarter of a century. There are now 8,300 members.

A reception to Marshal Foch was given at the home of Colonel Kountze by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. Mr. William Sloane Coffin, Dr. John H. Finley, and Dr. Charles S. McFarland, of the Federal Council, spoke, and Marshal Foch replied, presenting, on behalf of the French Protestant churches, a pulpit Bible from the Protestant church at Rheims, which was destroyed.

EDUCATION WEEK.

The American Legion and the National Educational Association are sponsoring "Educational Week" to be observed throughout the whole nation, December 4 to 10. The great body of people to whom this proposition is of concern, is the Parent-Teacher group, has been requested to work with them in promoting an educational rally during that week. This movement has as its object better schools, better homes and greater advantages for children, and a fuller citizenship.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

The Field Day of the Board for Chicago begins Dec. 5th. There is so much already scheduled for Chicago at that time it seems that the Field Day will have to begin with the meeting of the presbytery and end with the banquet of the Social Union, as Tuesday night, Dec. 6th, is Moderator's night and Dr. Swearingen will be the speaker and guest of honor at the Morrison Hotel.

The Englewood Church, Rev. A. C. Dudley, pastor, made a special occasion of the re-opening of the newly decorated auditorium on Nov. 13th. The same day the Drexel Park Church, Rev. Clinton C. Cox, pastor, dedicated their new pipe organ. The morning service was conducted by the pastor as a homecoming day. At 3 p. m. Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, of McCormick Seminary, preached the dedicatory sermon as the new pipe organ was opened. At 7 p. m. Dr. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of the Kenwood Evangelical Church, preached on "The Lure of Paganism."

Rev. Hubert S. Lyle, president of The College of the Ozarks, located at Clarksville, Ark., on a recent visit to Chicago procured a gift for the college of $25,000, contingent upon his raising $50,000 more for the college.

When the Synod of Illinois met in Lincoln, the story was told how this city of Illinois came to bear the name of Lincoln: "When Robert Latham was surveying the town plot of Lincoln (the original town was called Postville) he was assisted by young Abraham Lincoln, who practiced law in the old yellow Court House. Mr. Latham said: 'Abe, I don't know what to call my town.' Lincoln replied: 'Name is after me.' Mr. Latham said: 'I will, if you will name your first boy after me.' So the bargain was made and the town received its name of Lincoln, at Lincoln's own request."

Dr. George L. Robinson, Professor of Biblical Literature and English Bible in McCormick Seminary, preached the sermon at the union Thanksgiving service of the seminary community, which was held in the Wesley Methodist Church.

The ladies of the Wilmington Church, Rev. Edgar Beckwith, D.D., pastor, at a recent bazaar cleared over $500.

PONCA CITY, OKLAHOMA.

The new First Church at Ponca City was dedicated Oct. 23d. The church cost $87,000, and is beautiful, commodious and harmonious. With its social rooms, gymnasium, shower baths, Sabbath-school rooms and equipment, together with an excellent pipe organ, and auditorium with beautiful art glass windows, all is admirably suited for the glory of God and the good of man. Rev. Moses Breeze, D.D., Columbus, Ohio, preached three times on Sabbath. Rev. D. L. Edwards, the former pastor, was present, taking part in the services. The sermons of Dr. Breeze were masterful, and he is a great money raiser. Twenty-one thousand dollars of the total debt of $36,000 has been raised and subscriptions are still coming in. At the close of the Sabbath evening service the pastor, Rev. E. D. Surface, offered the dedicatory prayer. The music, which was superb in every particular, was in charge of Mrs. Frances S. Catron, for eighteen years the capable director of our church choir, and Miss Pauline Roberts, of Oklahoma City, organist of our First Church there, presided at the new pipe organ. A dinner was spread in the social room of the church. The Sabbath services were followed by a "Week of Dedication." The Monday evening meeting was presided over by W. T. Oates, one of the elders. The City Band was present and gave three selections. Miss Roberts, of Oklahoma City, gave two numbers on the pipe organ. The mayor of the city, the ministers, and other citizens, representing the various interests of the city, gave four-minute talks, after which Dr. Breeze gave his closing message. Wednesday evening Daniel A. Hirschler, Dean of Music at Emporia College, Kansas, gave a pipe organ recital. It was a rare musical treat. Thursday evening was Young People's evening, which was addressed by Harold Singer, the capable field man for United Christian Endeavor in Oklahoma. The "Dedication Week" closed with a soul-stirring message from Rev. L. D.

Young, D.D., the renowned pastor of City Temple, Dallas, Texas. His message will bear fruit in the life of our church and congregation. Seventy new members have been received into the church since April 1st, a large number joining on Dedication Day. The dedication of the First Presbyterian Church of Ponca City was one of the greatest occasions in the history of this thriving city of ten thousand people. Oct. 30th the men's chorus from the First Presbyterian Church of Winfield, Kan., "the best chorus in the state of Kansas," came down in their automobiles and furnished music for the evening service. They were greeted by seventy-five men of our church, and the women provided dinner. How those men did sing! The pastor gave a short talk and two men of the chorus gave appropriate messages. The men of this church are now organizing a men's chorus. For Ponca City Presbyterians the future looks as bright and hopeful as the unfailing promises of God.

THE SYNOD OF TEXAS.

BY REV. B. WRENN WEBB, D.D.

A series of Presbyterian Home Mission Conferences have just closed with great profit to all Presbyterians of the Synod of Texas. Dr. William R. King, of New York, Secretary of the Board of Home Missions, selected the teams, and in connection with the synodical field forces carried out the program most admirably, and the following facts are of interest:

Team No. 1, consisting of Rev. S. D. Crouch, Assistant Superintendent of Home Missions of the Synod of Texas; Rev. Andrew J. Montgomery, D.D., Associate Secretary Board of Home Missions, Western Office, and Rev. Charles Overstreet, D.D., Secretary of New Era of Southwestern District, held the following conferences: El Paso and Marfa in El Paso Presbytery; San Antonio and Austin in Austin Presbytery; Houston in Houston Presbytery; Nacogdoches and Jacksonville in Jefferson Presbytery. As far as results can be recorded, the team reached in the seven conferences thirty-seven churches, including the churches visited on the two Sabbaths of their campaign, spoke to a total of 3,476, delivered a total of fifty-eight sermons and addresses and conducted ten devotional services.

Team No. 2, the personnel of which consisted of Rev. W. M. Baker, Assistant Superintendent of Home Missions, Synod of Texas; Rev. Warren H. Wilson, Ph.D., Director of the Country Life Department, Board of Home Missions; Rev. Paul G. Stevens, D.D., Associate Director of the Educational Department, Board of Home Missions, and Mrs. Adelaide Aldrich, Field Secretary. Woman's Board of Home Missions, held conferences at Forest Hill, Grapevine, Denton and Grandbury, in Fort Worth Presbytery; Vernon, Amarillo and Plainview in Amarillo Presbytery; Post City and Stamford in Abilene Presbytery and Brownwood and San Angelo in Brownwood Presbytery. This team reports, churches reached including three Sabbaths, sixty-five; attendance, 4,500; sermons and addresses, one hundred and four; devotional services, ten; and mission study classes promised, twenty-five. This team held twelve conferences. It is seriously regretted that Dr. Warren H. Wilson had to leave the team on the 7th and Dr. Stevens at the close of the day on the 13th.

Team No. 3, consisting of Rev. B. Wrenn Webb, D.D., Superintendent of Home Missions, Synod of Texas; Rev. Wm. R. King, D.D., Secretary, Board of Home Missions; Rev. George H. Mack, D.D., New Era Secretary and Home Mission Superintendent, of Nashville, Tenn. This team held conferences at Temple, Hillsboro, Corsicana and Teague in Waco Presbytery; Dallas, Terrell, Miller Grove and McKinney in Dallas Presbytery; Sherman, Honey Grove and Clarksville in Paris Presbytery. This team conducted fourteen devotional services during the eleven conferences, reached eighty-eight churches including three Sabbaths, delivered 122 sermons and addresses to a total of 7,413 people.

The teams were everywhere most cordially received and heartily entertained by the pastors and by the people. The number of churches represented by the delegates was one hundred and twenty-two. A great interest has been awakened in all the Boards and Agencies of the Church and especially in Home Missions, Stewardship and in general a larger vision for the things of the kingdom.

The order of the conferences was as follows: An afternoon conference, a supper conference for men and a mass meeting in the evening. The supper conference for men was an especially strong feature of the conferences. The women everywhere, where it was possible, provided a sumptuous dinner for the local and visiting men and for the men of the team. As high as one hundred and twenty persons sat down together at dinner during the conferences.

The Synod of Texas greatly appreciates the privilege of having these men of the Board of Home Missions and New Era Movement give time, strength and thought to the work of the kingdom in our Synod.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

The church at Coal Hill had a fine revival meeting under the leadership of Licentiate Boudra, assisted by Rev. G. W. Neal, D.D.

Rev. Clifford H. Helm, of South Wales, N. Y., has been called by the Greenwood Church.

It was my pleasure to preach for Rev. Dr. McMillen, Glenshaw, Pa., on Sabbath morning, Nov. 13, and for Rev. Dr. Woodfin, at Homestead, in the evening. These churches are but a few miles out of Pittsburg and among the strong churches of the Pittsburg Presbytery.

The church at Bentonville gave their new pastor, Rev. T. E. Beard, and his family a hearty welcome, recently, to this important work.

Rev. E. M. Morse is holding a fine meeting in the Bono Church. There have been a number of accessions to the church. Mr. Morse will soon begin a meeting in the Rector Church.

It gave me pleasure to preach at Dumas, where Rev. Dr. Preston is the minister, on Nov. 20. Plans are being made to erect a manse at Dumas, which will cost about $2,500. Mr. Preston serves the Tillar Church one Sabbath each month.

Evangelist Lewis recently closed a good meeting at Huntington, held in the M. E. church. There were about thirty professions. Our church received several members as a result of the meeting. Dr. Lewis is now in a meeting at Benton.

The budget for the year closing March 31, 1922, for the Arkansas Synod is about $20,000 for all the Boards. At the present time only about one-third of this has been sent to the Boards. The every-member canvass for next year should be put on during March. I sincerely trust that the budget for this year will be out of the way before the canvass is made for next year. Our churches are introducing a more business-like way in church finances. They are to be commended for this. However, a large percentage of the money is not collected until the last of the year. A part of the budget should be sent at least each quarter. The Boards are in need of the money. Owing to our failure, the Boards must spend thousands of dollars in interest. Send in the money at once and it will be appreciated.

EAST TENNESSEE NOTES.

BY REV. ROBERT I. GAMON, D.D.

The Harriman School, under the Woman's Board, plans to open Jan. 1. Miss Rena Avery is in charge of the preparations and is already on the ground. Some thirteen acres of land, a large house, a cottage and a barn constitute the contribution of the city. Some alterations, now in progress, will make the property more suitable for the work. A recent visit of Miss Edna R. Coss, who comes from the Woman's Board, has made these plans definite. Later it is the intention to erect a large dormitory for girls. Miss Avery will be glad to correspond with any one in reference to the school, either prospective pupils or their parents or friends.

The Hopewell Church at Dandridge introduced the rotary system of church officers on Nov. 13. As elders they elected J. E. Bettis and Arthur Holtsinger for three years, Ferd Headrick and James L. Lyle for two years, and H. M. Rankin for one year. As deacons, A. S. Nichols and J. W. Cowan for three years, H. B. Jarnigan and Fred Fain for two years, W. A. Lyle and W. H. Sheppard for one year. The writer conducted the meeting at the close of a well-attended preaching service. Rev. R. M. Ramsay, of Knoxville, conducted a Thanksgiving service on Thursday.

Rev. A. J. Coile will supply the Oakland Church until the spring meeting of Holston Presbytery.

Rev. L. F. Smith will begin a series of evangelistic meetings in Timber Ridge on Dec. 4. The writer will assist him.

On Nov. 20 the writer preached in Jonesboro in the morning and at Tusculum College at night.

The death of Judge W. D. Wright, elder of the Knoxville Second Church, was a great shock to the congregation and to the community. It came as the result of an accident, in which he and Mrs. Wright were knocked down at a street crossing by an automobile. Judge Wright's passing away is a distinct loss to the moral and religious forces of the city and state, as well as to the leadership of his church.

The Kirkwood Church, Knoxville, recognized Thanksgiving Day by a sunrise service, and at night by a missionary meeting and social. The writer made an address. An offering was made to the Ladies' Society. Knoxville, Tenn.

CLERGY CERTIFICATES.

The Railroad Clergy Bureau announce that clergy certificates will be issued for 1922 under the same conditions as those issued for 1921. Ministers are advised to secure application blanks from the local railroad ticket agent and apply to the Bureau serving his particular territory. Eastern Clergy Bureau, Mr. C. L. Hunter, manager, 143 Liberty Street, New York City. Territory: East of Illinois and north of Ohio and Potomac Rivers.

Southern Clergy Bureau, Mr. W. H. Howard, manager, 702 Healey Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Territory: East of Mississippi River and south of Ohio and Potomac Rivers.

Western Clergy Bureau, Mr. E. E. McLeod, joint agent, 2162 Transportation Bldg., Chicago, Ill. Territory: West of and including Illinois and Mississippi River, except stations in southwestern territory enumerated below.

Southwestern Passenger Association, Mr. J. E. Hannegan, chairman, 702 Compton Bldg., St. Louis, Mo. Territory: Arkansas, Louisiana, Mexico (eastern portion) Missouri, Oklahoma and Texas.

W. H. Kearns,
Transportation Secretary.

AN OFFER OF CURTAINS.

There is a set of dark-red plush curtains, suitable for choir rail and coverings to match for pulpit and pulpit furniture, offered to a church having need of same. Any congregation wishing to avail itself of this generous gift, please communicate with Dr. David G. Wylie, General Secretary, Board of Church Erection, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Ships of four nations carried 89 per cent of the approximately 11,600,000 tons of cargo which moved through the Panama Canal during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921.

American vessels led all others with a total of 5,163,000 tons, establishing a new record by increasing the total tonnage of the previous high year by 615,885.

British ships were second and surpassed the high mark of 1917, their last banner year. They reached a total of 3,738,250 tons.

Japan and Norway took third and fourth place with 758,600 and 637,880 tons, respectively. Norway dropped below its figures for 1918, but Japan soared to new heights, exceeding her last high mark by 32,279 tons.

Enclosed please find draft for $2.50 to renew H. & P. for another year. I have taken the Herald and Presbyter for thirty-five years and can't well do without it. It has become a part of our home, and I hope that it may prosper in the future and stand as in the past for the doctrines of our Holy Religion. W. C. W.

RELIGIOUS NEWS

DEATH IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Silas V. Fait, of Anadarko, Okla., died on Nov. 4 in the sixty-fifth year of his age. He was born at Man's Choice, Pa., April 26, 1857, graduated at Lafayette College and Union Seminary, and was ordained in 1889 by the Presbytery of Chickasaw. For some years he served as a home missionary in Indian Territory and then had charge at Chickasha, going to Anadarko in 1906, where he organized the church, and has served ever since as pastor. He was greatly useful as pastor and in the general work of the synod. The whole community joined in a memorial and funeral service on Sabbath, Nov. 6. He was greatly beloved.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Dr. Edgar P. Hill, general secretary of the Board of Education, and Dr. C. B. McAfee, of McCormick Theological Seminary, are expected to be in Cincinnati on Presbyterian Day, Dec. 8, to take part in the exercises at the Church of the Covenant.

Rev. Arthur James, of Porto Rico, made a very instructive and interesting address at Wyoming last Sabbath evening. In the morning the Woman's Missionary Society had its annual praise and thank-offering service, with a sermon by the pastor, Rev. D. G. Smith.

In the Sixth Church, Rev. A. M. Campbell, pastor, an Anti-Saloon address was delivered last Sabbath morning by Mr. L. D. Ogden.

Dr. McLeish, of the American House, Cincinnati, spoke last Sabbath evening at the Poplar Street Church, Rev. D. A. Greene, pastor.

Rev. W. L. Schmalhorst, of Pleasant Ridge, and Rev. Jesse Halsey, of the Seventh Church, exchanged pulpits last Sabbath evening, Mr. Halsey giving an illustrated lecture on "The Pilgrim Fathers."

The birthday of Mr. Ren Mulford, Jr., is to be celebrated in the Norwood Church this evening, at the weekly prayer meeting, by all the members of his "Sunshine" Sabbath-school class attending the service together.

The First Presbyterian Church of Covington, Ky., has extended a call to Rev. Charles C. McGinley, of Kansas City, Mo.

The Presbytery of Cincinnati, Nov. 21, dissolved pastoral relations between Rev. A. E. Williams and the Elberon Church, and between Rev. E. M. Martin and Westwood First Church. Rev. E. M. Martin was called to Westminster Church, and is to be installed Sabbath, Dec. 18, at 3 p. m., the moderator to preside, Rev. M. W. Brown to preach, Rev. C. A. Austin to charge the pastor, Rev. Dr. J. V. Stephens to charge the people. Rev. D. W. MacMillan was called to West Liberty Church, installation to take place at a time to be fixed later. The overture on commissioners was answered in the negative. The following resolution was adopted: "The Presbytery of Cincinnati records our agreement with the Conference on Disarmament in its effort to destroy the machinery of war, and to make unnecessary and impossible the appetites, the jealousies, the rivalries and the intrigues that lead to war. We trust that America may blaze the way even beyond the consideration of armaments and the rivalries of nations, and will seek to bring them into permanent accord on the basis of brotherhood and good will, as taught by Jesus Christ. Resolved, that a copy of the above, with the good will of the presbytery, be sent by the Stated Clerk to Secretary Charles E. Hughes, as ranking member of the American delegation to the Conference now sitting in Washington." The Moderator and Stated Clerk were directed to send a copy of the following action to the Governor of the State of Ohio: "Whereas, The matter of religious education in our public schools is before the public mind, and before the Governor of this state, in the form of a petition that he appoint a commission upon the subject, to ascertain what may be done in this direction, without coming into conflict with the Constitution of the United States guarding religious liberty; resolved, that the Presbytery of Cincinnati respectfully petitions the Governor of Ohio to appoint such commission, representing all our religious bodies." The presbytery will meet in the First Church on Walnut Hills on Dec. 19 next.—E. T. Swiggett, S. C.

Rev. W. D. Harrell and Mrs. Harrell, of St. Bernard, were very pleasantly remembered, by the people of their church and other friends, on last Friday evening, the occasion of their silver wedding, and they were presented with pleasing testimonials of affection and appreciation.

The Associated Charities of Cincinnati occupy a large place in the benevolent activities of the community, being an aggregation of a great many charitable organizations. The money for their maintenance is now raised at one time, in a great "community chest," and divided proportionately among them, each year, so that no one of them makes a separate canvass for funds. The fortieth anniversary meeting of the Associated Charities was celebrated on the evening of Nov. 23 with an interesting program.

Thursday, Dec. 8, is to be set apart in Cincinnati and the region around about as Presbyterian Day, with services in the Church of the Covenant all day. Dr. Swearingen, Dr. W. H. Foulkes, Dr. John A. Marquis, Rev. W. P. Schell and Mrs. C. K. Roys and Miss Lucy Dawson are to tell about the Boards and the general work of the Church. The ministers are to meet at 10:30 a. m., the women at 2:30 p. m. The supper for men is to be at 6 p. m., and the meeting for everybody at 7:45 p. m.

Mrs. Caroline Burnham, eighty-four years old, widow of Erastus Burnham, for many years secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Cincinnati, died in Dayton, Ky., Nov. 27. She was an earnest and efficient Christian worker and for many years a leader in the Women's Missionary Societies of Cincinnati Presbytery.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

An annual Bible Conference on "Christian Fundamentals" was held last week, at the Washington and Compton Avenue Church, with speakers from outside the city. Three other conferences were also carried on, one of these being at the Curby Memorial Church. The meetings continued for five days, ending on Thanksgiving Day.

Dr. William R. King, of the Home Mission Board, occupied his former pulpit at the First Church on Sabbath, Nov. 20. His sermon topic was, "Christianizing America."

Rev. R. S. Calder, D.D., of Lindenwood College, gave an address, "Discoveries of a Bible Teacher," at the meeting of the Ministers' Association, Monday of last week.

"Prosperity the Gift of God" was the topic of a Thanksgiving sermon, preached by Rev. James Hardin Smith, D.D., pastor at the North Church, on Sabbath, Nov. 20. Forty-one new members were received into the church at that time.

At the annual Thanksgiving service at Greeley Memorial Church, last Thursday, the sermon was preached by Rev. R. Calvin Dobson, D.D., executive secretary of the presbytery.

Dr. James Hardin Smith, of the North Church, delivered a lecture at Sterling College, Sterling, O., on Tuesday night of last week.

Rev. N. L. Euwer, assistant minister at the Second Church, preached the annual Thanksgiving sermon at Lindenwood College, for the student body, last Thursday.

Rev. James W. Hawkes, of Hamadan, Persia, who has been a missionary in Persia for over forty years, preached at the Second Church last Sabbath. He was the guest here of Rev. N. L. Euwer, who was associated with him in the mission field some twenty years ago. His work has been among Mohammedans, Armenians and Jews.

Several union Thanksgiving services were held, in which the Presbyterian churches participated, last Thursday. The First Church congregation came to the Second, together with a Christian and a Methodist congregation. Dr. Lampe, pastor of the West Church, preached at a community service at Cabanne Methodist Church. Kingshighway congregation participated with three others in a service at the Second Baptist Church.

OHIO.

Rev. Samuel Dodds, D.D., Bible Extension lecturer of the College of Wooster, concluded a successful Bible Institute in the Second Church of Newark, O., on Nov. 20, Rev.

B. R. Weld, pastor. Dr. Dodds still has a few open dates for institutes in March, April and May of 1922. All arrangements are made through the College of Wooster.

Recently a fine musical recital was given at Hillsboro, in the First Presbyterian Church, by Misses Mackey and Emerson, of Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Men's Bible Class. On Nov. 4 there was a men's banquet, attended by a hundred men, with addresses by Attorney John Phillips, of Chillicothe, and Rev. W. Hamill Shields, D.D., of Mt. Vernon, O., a former pastor. For the last seven Sabbath evenings of the year the pastor, Rev. B. F. Paist, is preaching a series of sermons on "Questions of Mind and Heart," giving Christian answer to some fundamental questions. The district meeting of the Woman's Presbyterial was held in this church on Nov. 9, with an address by Mrs. Edgar M. Wilson, of the West India Mission.

Rev. Joseph T. Britan, D.D., moderator of the Synod of Ohio, addressed the Brotherhood of the Bremen Church, Rev. Gibson Wilson, pastor, Friday night, Nov. 18. Each man of the church had the privilege of bringing his wife or a friend. One hundred and seventy-seven people sat down to the supper. It was a great evening of fellowship for the church.

About seven hundred men from the Brotherhood Bible Classes of Canton held a union mens' meeting at sunrise Thanksgiving morning, in the Baptist Church. Rev. Alfred Lee Wilson, of the First Presbyterian Church, conducted the devotional exercises. The address was by Rev. Daniel Rittenhouse, of the First Baptist Church of Columbus. A light breakfast was served by the men of the Baptist Church.

At a union meeting in the First Presbyterian Church in East Liverpool, on Thanksgiving Day, the sermon, on "The Faith of the Pilgrims," was preached by Rev. Frederic A. Dean, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, and it was published in full in the East Liverpool Evening Review. At the Presbyterian Fathers' and Sons' banquet on Nov. 23 there was an attendance of 215 men and boys.

Revival services were held in Reiley for two weeks, closing Nov. 13. Twenty-three members were added to the church, twelve coming on profession. The pastor, Rev. Harlan J. Manley, was assisted by Rev. G. Matthew Jordan, of Rossville, Ill., a classmate in Lane Seminary. Mr. Jordan is a forceful preacher. Since coming to Reiley May 1, 1920, fifty-one members have been received, twenty-three being on profession. Sixteen adults and thirteen infants have been baptized. The membership of the church is now 156. The church is prospering in all departments.

A very attractive poster is being sent out to all the churches in Ohio by the Campaign Committee of the College of Wooster calling attention to "Wooster Day," Dec. 11.

At a meeting of the men of the Second Church of Wellsville, O., Rev. Thomas G. Berger, pastor, on Nov. 17, after a supper with seventy-five present, an address was delivered by Rev. C. D. Cramer, of Mt. Gilead, and an organization for men's work was effected. On Sabbath evening, Nov. 20, the Ladies' Missionary Society held its praise service and celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary. The pageant entitled "The Lifting Hands" was given. A liberal offering was received. The pageant, just issued by the Womens' Foreign Board, presents the work of Foreign Missions in a very impressive manner.

On Nov. 15 the Men's Club of the church at St. Marys, Rev. Homer A. Neff, pastor, held its monthly meeting at the Fairview Country Church. Dr. J. Knox Montgomery, president of Muskingum College, gave a fine address, and seventy-seven men were present.

The First Church of St. Clairsville has called Rev. H. G. McMillen, of Holliday's Cove, W. Va.

Early in November, at Lancaster First Church, ninety-two young people representing Presbyterianism in this section sat down to a successful supper conference. Rev. Frederick Kirker, moderator of presbytery; Rev. R. E. Shields and Rev. E. W. Pocock, of Columbus, and State Secretary Freet of Christian Endeavor work made the principal addresses. The first conference was under the direction of the church at Lancaster, and other gatherings of like nature will be held later. Eleven new members were received recently into the Lancaster Church, Rev. W. J. Holmes, pastor.

MICHIGAN.

Westminster Church of Big Rapids, Rev. Carl L. Attig, pastor, has let the contract for building the new church and construction will be begun immediately. The old one, was destroyed by fire last winter.

INDIANA.

The Bedford Church have wiped out their $15,000 debt, after a three months' campaign led by the pastor, Rev. Dr. D. T. Scott. Four years ago the plant was remodeled at a cost of $32,000. During this time the church has paid $17,000 on principal and $5,000 of interest. One member of the church offered $5,000, if the congregation would handle the balance of $10,000. It was undertaken to raise one hundred subscriptions of $100 each. The mortgage was burned on Nov. 17. This was done by Dr. J. F. Freeland, assisted by little Miss Isabelle Scott, the pastor's daughter, and Master Frank Crawford. Dr. T. B. Terhune of New Albany, Rev. J. H. More of Seymour, Rev. Joseph Lindsay of Mitchell, and Captain J. D. Alexander gave short addresses. Bedford now owns one of the most handsome and well-equipped churches in New Albany Presbytery.

Rev. J. R. Bardelmeier, who has been pastor of the church at Greensburg, Ind., since last May, is having a very successful pastorate, and his labors are greatly blessed. The prayer meeting has increased to 146 and all the organizations of the church are in flourishing condition. The congregations are large. For the past three Sabbaths, from twenty to twenty-five men from the congregation have filled the choir and furnished the music.

The Fourth Church, Indianapolis, is celebrating its seventieth anniversary this week, Rev. Dr. E. H. Kistler, pastor. The church was organized Nov. 30, 1851, and Dr. George M. Maxwell was the first pastor. The following have served as pastors: Rev. A. L. Brooks, Dr. C. H. Marshall, Rev. J. H. Morrison, Dr. E. B. Mason, Dr. A. H. Carrier, Rev. G. L. McNutt, Dr. E. P. Whallon, Dr. G. L. Mackintosh, Rev. R. M. Fulton, Rev. W. E. Danforth and Dr. E. H. Kistler. The church is located on Delaware Street, near Seventeenth, in a finely equipped building. The sermon on last Sabbath morning was preached by Rev. M. L. Haines, D.D. Special anniversary exercises are to be held Wednesday evening, Nov. 30, with words of greeting from former pastors and members. Elders Charles H. Moore and E. H. K. McComb have been busy in making the arrangements.

Rev. Hugh N. Ronald has resigned at Thornton after a pastorate of eleven and one-half years. He will be pastor of the torate Church at Portland, Ind., in Jan. Church at Portland, Ind., in January. olences have been multiplied ten-fold, the support of a foreign pastor, Rev. Frank M. Gault of Elat, West Africa, has been assumed, $35,000 have been collected for the erection of a new house of worship, and over 300 members have been added.

Bethany Church of Fort Wayne, Rev. C. O. Shirey, D.D., has greatly enlarged and beautified its church building, and a notable dedication service was arranged for Sabbath, Nov. 20. A Sabbath-school department, 50x60, with three stories and basement, has been erected, and it is a complete and beautiful building, with all conveniences necessary for life and growth. Bethany Church was organized Feb. 15, 1894, with thirty-nine members, eleven coming from the First Presbyterian Church and twenty-eight on profession. Rev. George E. Davies, Rev. W. A. Bodell, Rev. J. C. Breckenridge and Rev. James W. Campbell were the ministers who preceded the present pastor, Dr. Shirey, who came in 1909, and who is now in his thirteenth year here. The church has over 600 members and is prospering in every way.

Westminster Church, Indianapolis, Rev. H. T. Gorham, pastor, has been having a celebration of the thirty-third anniversary of its organization and a homecoming on successive Sabbaths of November. It has a fine and stately building which it is getting paid for. About $700 was raised during the celebration for the November payment. Dr. and Mrs. Spence of Alaska spoke for them one Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. John S. Hamilton and party just closed a union meeting of several churches at Wabash, Ind., with good results.

NEW YORK.

Rev. A. W. Gray, of Niota, Ill., has accepted a call to Middleport, N. Y.

Rev. Stewart M. Robinson was installed as pastor of the First Church of Lockport on Nov. 18 by the Presbytery of Niagara. Rev. George L. Tappan, moderator; Rev. G. S. Swezey and G. A. Jameson, of Lockport; Rev. J. B. Laird, D.D., of Philadelphia; Rev. W. Courtland Robinson, D.D., the pastor's father; Rev. Anthony W. Evans, D.D., of New York City, and Rev. H. T. Chadsey conducted the service. An automobile coupe was presented to the pastor by the people on Nov. 17. The church will soon send an automobile to the church's missionary in India, Rev. John W. Bowman. The church is to celebrate its centennial in the near future.

Rev. Frederic L. Greene, of Margaretville, N. Y., has accepted a call to Wilson, in the Presbytery of Niagara, and will be installed in the spring, at the time of the celebration of the church's centennial.

Rev. A. W. Gray, recently of Niota, Ill., began his work in the church of Middleport, as stated supply, on Nov. 20.

DELAWARE.

Rev. W. C. Little, Ph.D., from Atlantic City, N. J., was installed as pastor of the Drawyers Church, Odessa, Del., Nov. 3, and Port Penn, Del., Nov. 4.

Rev. William Leishman, of Stewartstown, Pa., has accepted a call to the Eastlake Church, Wilmington, and is to be installed on Dec. 2.

On Nov. 15 Rev. and Mrs. A. Everett Hallman were given a reception by the members and friends of the First Church of Newark, Del. Mr. Hallman is the new pastor of the church, succeeding Dr. William J. Rowan, deceased. Rev. Messrs. Reed, McMurray and Jones took part in the services.

Rev. G. Ashworth Burslem, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Dover, Del., has been elected chaplain of Walter L. Fox Post, No. 2, American Legion.

Rev. William Davies resigned, Nov. 20, from the pastorate of Rock and Zion Churches, Maryland.

WISCONSIN.

Rev. Ernest Wright, of Oconto, was recently installed at Appleton.

Rev. C. J. Koukol, who has served the Bohemian Churches around Phillips for many years, has accepted a call to Omaha, Neb.

Rev. Roy A. Brown, of Albay, the Philippines, spoke in the First Church, Beaver Dam, on Nov. 20. Many remember the visit of this beloved missionary in 1914. In a few weeks Mr. Brown expects to visit the Assembly Church.

At the meeting of Milwaukee Presbytery in Bethany Church, Milwaukee, Nov. 20, the pastoral relation between Rev. Charles H. Sidebotham and Grace Church, Milwaukee, was dissolved and Mr. Sidebotham was dismissed to Petoskey Presbytery. Mr. Roy Millar, a senior in McCormick Seminary, was ordained. Presbytery will meet in Calvary Church Dec. 5 at 2 p. m.

The Presbyterian Forum, on Friday evenings, at Milwaukee, has been attracting most of our young ministers and leaders in church work. Great questions of church work and methods are discussed, and prayer is made for God's special blessing upon the churches. The last Friday-night meeting was at Calvary Church, when Dr. McAfee preached a stirring sermon.

MISSOURI.

Rev. Dr. Charles C. McGinley, for seven years synodical superintendent of the synod of Missouri, has resigned to accept a call to the First Presbyterian Church, Covington, Ky. During Dr. McGinley's official service in Missouri, this synod has been brought to self-support, the annual offerings to Home Mission evangelization increased from $14,000 to $43,000 and the total membership of the synod increased from 41,000 to 52,560. The First Church of Covington is a fine church with a great history. United States Senator Ernst is an elder in this church, superintendent of the Sabbath school, and clerk of the session. Dr. McGinley expects to begin his pastorate there the first Sabbath of the New year.

KANSAS.

At the communion at Mulberry Creek on Sabbath, Nov. 20, there were seven additions to the church, five being on confession. One infant was baptized. This was largely the result of an evangelistic campaign, in which the pastor, Rev. Adolph Haberly, was assisted by the presbyterial evangelist, Rev. Dr. T. J. Graham, D.D., formerly of Louisville, Ky. Dr. Graham is a strong preacher. The entire community was visited and the church was revived. Mulberry Creek is an afternoon appointment connected with the Idana Church.

The Junction City Church has spent two weeks in special services. Dr. D. M. Clagett, the pastor, was assisted by Dr. J. F. Clokey, of Salina whose sermons were much appreciated. The people have been greatly blessed. Thirty-five persons were added to the church, most of them on confession. One man of seventy-five was received.

Rev. L. H. McCormick, recently of Lincoln, Kan., has become pastor of the Community Presbyterian Church of Chase, Kan., organized only a short time ago.

In the church of Osawatimie 66 members have been received, following a union evangelistic meeting during October, conducted by Rev. and Mrs. George L. Rose. Other churches also received large additions, and the evangelists are heartily commended by every one. Dr. C. M. Lowe is in the third year of his ministry to this church. Building additions, costing over $6,000, are nearly completed.

The church of Wamego, Rev. J. F. Thompson, pastor, has completed a very excellent and attractive church building, which was dedicated on Sabbath, Nov. 6, free of debt. The cost was about $35,000, of which $10,200 was raised on dedication day. Mr. Thompson took up the work here as pastor in August, 1920. The building was started last March and it is now complete, commodious and beautiful. Rev. W. H. Kearns, D.D., of Omaha, Neb., preached on dedication day and assisted in the services. Rev. D. H. Fisher preached on Monday evening, and Rev. W. M. Irwin, D.D., on the following two evenings. Rev. I. R. Prugh, a former pastor, was also heard. The church was organized Feb. 7, 1869, and its first building was erected in 1870. On Sabbath, Nov. 13, Mr. Thompson, the pastor, welcomed five members and baptized three children. He has received 56 members during his pastorate.

The Walnut Valley Church received 16 members, 15 of whom were baptized, Dec. 20, by the pastor, Rev. H. A. Rink, following a ten days' meeting, in which the pastor was assisted by Rev. W. C. Templeton, D.D., of Winfield.

The First Church of Winfield recently received 17 members, most of them on confession, and all adults. Rev. D. M. Clagett, D.D., of Junction City, assisted the pastor, Dr. Templeton, for ten days in special services. More than 300 persons have united with the church during Dr. Clagett's three years' pastorate.

NEBRASKA.

Six or eight Home Mission churches in Nebraska are in need of pastors. These churches are located in the western part of the state. Correspondence can be had with Rev. W. H. Kearns, Peters Trust Building, Omaha, Neb.

Evangelistic meetings are being held in various parts of Nebraska City Presbytery, in which one pastor is assisting another in the meetings. At Pawnee City there have been thirty-one accessions. Rev. Paul C. Payne is pastor of this church.

A two weeks' meeting has just closed at Westminster Church, University Place, Rev. James B. Brown, pastor. Rev. E. C. Lucas, D.D., of Beatrice, assisted the pastor in this meeting. There will be substantial gains to the membership.

A three weeks' meeting, Nov. 1-20, was held at Auburn, Rev. W. F. Perry, pastor, conducted by Evangelist R. Hayes Willis and wife, of Winona Lake, Ind. Three services a day were held. In the evening meetings there were twelve professions, and at one Sabbath-morning service a large number of children took their stand for Jesus Christ. On the last Sabbath morning a goodly number of Christians stood, signifying that they would establish the family altar. The people were greatly pleased with the work of Mr. Willis and wife and their wonderful singing. The appreciation of the people was shown by an offering of more than $400 at the close of the meeting.

A three weeks' campaign has been conducted in the Highland Park Church of Lincoln, Rev. Ralph W. Orr, pastor, and there will be an ingathering at the next communion.

Work on the basement of the Auburn Church has been going forward quite rapidly and, if the work is not stopped because of a lack of funds, the Auburn Church will soon be one of the best equipped in this section of the state.

WYOMING.

Rev. Harry E. Bickler of Geetingsville, Ind., was recently installed as pastor of the Lingle Church. The exercises were conducted by Rev. Clyde H. Mahaffy, of the U. P. Church of Torrington; Rev. H. W. Bainton, Stated Clerk; Rev. W. E. Patton, a former pastor; and Rev. Robert R. Marquis, Sabbath school missionary of Idaho Presbyterian, and a class-mate in McCormick Seminary of the new pastor.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Dr. George Shannon McCune was inaugurated as President of Huron College on Nov. 29. Dr. Maitland Alexander, pastor of First Church of Pittsburgh, gave the address, Dr. Calvin H. French, a former president of Huron and now president of Hastings College, delivered the charge, former president, Dr. Harry M. Gage, president of Coe College, took part in the inaugural exercise.

OREGON.

Rev. W. E. Baskerville of Brookings, Ore., has taken up the work of the Langlois—Port Oxford Church, to be addressed at Langlois, Ore.

CALIFORNIA.

Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, raised $150,000 at the morning service on Sabbath, Nov. 21. Dr. Herbert Booth Smith, the pastor, led the campaign for $200,000 of new money. A group of canvassers was to canvass the congregation, Nov. 21-28, for the other $50,000. This makes $410,000 so far raised for the new building. Ground will be broken for the first unit, to cost $200,000 next Easter. After the Sabbath school and Community service building is erected, the present structure will be torn down and the main auditorium built.

Rev. Dr. Herbert Booth Smith of Immanuel Church, Los Angeles, was called to Phoenix, Arizona, on Armistice Day on account of the death of his brother, Mr. Peyton Huston Smith, a prominent young attorney, a member of the First Church of Phoenix of which Dr. Arthur Lee Odell is pastor. Dr. Smith's father, Rev. Dr. J. Addison Smith died in 1920, and his sister, the wife of Rev. Charles Dean Holland of Hillsdale, Md., died this year. The people of his church have abounded in sympathy for their pastor.

TAXES UP, BUT TOTAL RECEIPTS LOW.

Tax receipts of the Government during the fiscal year 1921 decreased nearly $1,000,000,000 as compared with the previous year, while the cost of collection increased thirty-two cents for a hundred dollars, according to the annual report of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Collections by the bureau during the last fiscal year totaled $4,595,000,765, against $5,407,580,250 for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, a decrease of $812,579,486, or 15 per cent.

The cost of administering the internal revenue laws for the year, the report said, was $40,203,716, or 87 cents for each $100 collected, compared with 55 cents for the preceding year.

However, the report added, included in the expenditures was $6,899,407 for the administration of the prohibition and narcotic laws and $1,300,000 for the enforcement of the child-labor law, which, deducted from the total, leaves $33,174,309, or an equivalent of 72 cents for each $100 in taxes collected.

Of the total taxes collected during the past year income and profit taxes aggregated $3,228,137,673, compared with $3,956,936,003 in 1920, and miscellaneous collections totaled $1,366,863,091, against $1,450,644,248 in 1920.

The principal decreases in these taxes were:

On alcoholic liquors, $57,247,720; tobacco manufactures, $40,589,969; excise taxes, $38,538,121; corporation capital stock, $11,494,767; and stamp taxes, $11,879,813.

I enclose P. O. order for my subscription for the coming year. I am past eighty-one years of age and feel I can not do without my good home church paper. I like your attitude upon all important questions of the day, and wish others to see what you say; so my paper goes to four families. E. M. S.

MORRISON—James Allison Morrison was born in Coles County, Illinois, Oct. 20, 1845. His earthly life ended Oct. 25, 1921, at his home in Sweet Springs, Mo., where he had lived for sixteen years. His going breaks up an old-fashioned Christian home of the type that has been the main strength of our nation and the strong support of the Church. The days were never too busy for family prayer night and morning; Sunday never found the family absent from the services of the church. For more than fifty years he and his devoted wife gave their best for the upbuilding of God's kingdom upon earth. He served the church in some official capacity most of this time, as Sabbath-school superintendent and teacher, and as a member of official boards, and at the time of his death was secretary of the official board of the church of which he was a member. He was a fearless champion of prohibition when that great cause needed fearless support. In every community where he lived he helped to create the sentiment which finally gave us the eighteenth amendment. As a neighbor and friend Mr. Morrison could always be depended upon for any kindly service within his power to render. Strong ties of grateful appreciation bind his memory to the hearts of many people in every community where he has lived, because of his unselfish service to them in times of sickness and sorrow. It was his nature to relieve suffering of any kind wherever he found it. Mr. Morrison enlisted when he was eighteen years old in the Union army, Co. E, Fifth Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and served two years, or until the close of the war. It was one of the great joys of his life to attend the reunions of the G. A. R., where he would renew the old friendships made during those terrible years of suffering on battlefields. He and his wife had just returned from the last reunion and a visit to his old home and with relatives and friends, both in Indiana and Illinois. On the first day of January, 1868, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Jones, an English woman by birth, one of the Pilgrim type of women. Six children were born to them. One son died in infancy and five remain to mourn, with their mother, the loss of an honored father and a devoted husband. These five are in widely-separated homes: Edwin K. Morrison, at Emporia, Kan.; Mrs. T. C. Hood, at Rogers, Ark.; John J. Morrison, Fayetteville, Ark.; James E. Morrison, Burial, Idaho; Frank J. Morrison, Vancouver, Wash. These children, and the fourteen grandchildren who carry forward the lives of this Christian man and his wife, may be justly proud of the real nobility to which they are heirs, the nobility of Christian character. ## HOME CIRCLE

HOW MANY?

"How many bones in the human face?
 Fourteen, when they're all in place.
 How many bones in the human head?
 Eight, my child, as I've often said.
 How many bones in the human ear?
 Four in each, and they help to hear.
 How many bones in the human spine?
 Twenty-four, like a climbing vine.
 How many bones in the human chest?
 Twenty-four ribs, and two of the rest.
 How many bones the shoulders bind?
 Two in each, one before, one behind.
 How many bones in the human arm?
 In each arm one; two in each forearm.
 How many bones in the human wrist?
 Eight in each, if none are missed.
 How many bones in the palm of the hand?
 Five in each, with many a band.
 How many bones in the fingers ten?
 Twenty-eight, and by joints they bend.
 How many bones in the human hip?
 One in each; like a dish they dip.
 How many bones in the human thigh?
 One in each, and deep they lie.
 How many bones in the human knees?
 One in each—the kneecap, please.
 How many bones in the leg from the knee?
 Two in each, we can plainly see.
 How many bones in the ankle strong?
 Seven in each, but none are long.
 How many bones in the ball of the foot?
 Five in each, as the palms were put.
 How many bones in the toes, half a score?
 Twenty-eight, and there are no more.
 And now altogether these many bones wait,
 And they count, in a body, 208.
 And then have, in the human mouth,
 Of upper and under, thirty-two teeth.
 And now and then have a bone, I should think,
 That forms on a joint, or to fill up a chink—
 A sesamoid bone, or a Wormian, we call;
 And now we may rest, for we've told them all." —Ex.

"Miss November" And the Pink Silk Dress

By MARY McCRAE CULTER

(Copyright, 1921, by Monfort & Co.)

CHAPTER III.

One rainy evening just a week before Christmas, Nancy Varden dragged wearily home from college. It had been a hard day in the office, for there were all the grades of all the students to be recorded, credentials to be made out for a number who were transferring to the State University, and courses to be arranged for several who were entering for the Spring Semester; therefore the Dean and his secretary had been rushed so steadily that they had hardly taken time to eat lunch. As she trudged homeward, Nancy wondered whether the professor would honor her with his presence that evening, and sincerely hoped that he would not come. She was so tired. She just wanted to drag the couch up in front of the fire and lie down to rest, without the strain of having to talk to any one. Yes, she certainly hoped the professor would not come.

Mammy Lou was hovering about the front windows watching for her mistress, and was ready to open the front door as the girl came up the steps.

"Honey Chile, yo' sho am late," she said with repressed excitement in her voice. "I bin lookin' foh you foh a plum houah. What yo' s'pose came foh you dis aftahnoon?"

By this time, Miss Varden was in the hall and could not help seeing the large wardrobe trunk that occupied a prominent position just where the expressman had left it in his hurry.

"Why!" the girl exclaimed. "Who is here?"

"Nobuddy a-tall. It's jes' got youah name on it, so I s'pose it's youah's. Heah am a lettah dat mebbe tells about it."

Nancy, almost as excited as Mammy Lou, divested herself of raincoat hat and rubbers, and hastening to her chair before the fire, tore open her letter and read:

Boston, Dec. —

My Dear Nancy: I wrote a month ago informing you that our dear Bettie had gone from us, and that our hearts were broken by our loss of her. 'Our house is indeed left unto us desolate,' for her merry spirit that kept us bright and happy has departed forever.

Her going was so sudden that traces of her are everywhere about the house—her fancy work, her books, her hat upon the hall rack, her silent piano—and all speak of the one who will use them no more; so that which ever way we turn we can but think of her.

She was always so happy, so active, so youthful for her years, that although she was thirty—just your age—she was more like a girl of twenty than a matured woman, and was so received by every one belonging to our wide social circle.

It is more than a month since her going, yet I have only just nerved myself to begin to put away her things so expressive of her own dear self. Some way, in all this sad work, you have been ever present in my thoughts for, as children, you and Bettie were inseparable in your funny childish pranks as well as in your demure Sunday behavior. Bettie always called you "her twin-sister-cousin" and loved you as if you were her very own flesh and blood.

Therefore, it is no wonder that you have been constantly in my thoughts, as I have folded away Bettie's precious things.

I wondered what I should do with all of her pretty suits and dresses and the dainty accessories that go with them. Then the thought came to me that perhaps you—"her twin-sister"—would be glad to wear them for her sake. No doubt you have many social functions in your college town and have much use for the pretty frocks that Bettie's exquisite taste selected and that Bettie's dainty self wore with such a distinguished air. I could not bear to think of any one else wearing them, but some way I believe that if Bettie could speak to me, she would ask that you should have them.

And so, my dear Nancy, I have packed them into Bettie's own trunk and am sending them to you with the earnest request that you wear them just as they are, for Bettie's sake, and with the hope that something of Bettie's own happy spirit may enter your soul because of contact with them. Perhaps some day I may have the joy of seeing you wear some of them.

Please let me know at once whether the trunk reaches you safely.

With very much love,

Aunt Elizabeth.

The girl read the letter hastily, wiping away tears as she read, for "Bettie" was the only sister she had ever known, and memories of her were woven about every happy incident of her childhood. As the letter dropped into her lap and she wiped away the swiftly flowing tears, Mammy Lou said sympathetically:

"What's de mattah, Honey Chile? Somebuddy done daid?"

Then Nancy had to explain her tears and tell the excited old woman what the mystery trunk contained. Mammy Lou was on her feet before the story was half done.

"De key ain wiahed to de han'le ob de trunk wif sealin' wax," she announced. "Le's see all dem pretty t'ings. I'se jes' honin' to see you in 'em."

The trunk was soon opened there in the lower hall, as it was impossible for the two women to move it, and as Nancy unpacked, she loaded the arms of her faithful servitor with heaps of pretty and expensive garments, which the old woman carried upstairs to Miss Nancy's own room.

When everything was out, the trunk was pushed back, and Nancy ran up the stairs with a swiftness and lightness of foot uncommon to herself, so excited was she over the wonderful and unexpected treasures that had come to her. She found bed, chairs and table heaped with the things which Mammy Lou had carefully spread out. There was a beautiful street-suit of Hunter's Green with the softest of fur trimmings: a dinner dress of black velvet rich with sparkling jet: a wonderful evening dress of shimmering grey silk under a net overdress wrought with a web of silver embroidery: beside several dainty house-dresses such as Nancy Varden had never worn in all her life.

Then Mammy Lou placed a suit-box before her, saying:

"I reckon de heabenliest one ob all am in dis heah."

Both women gave a gasp of delight as Nancy took out "a perfect dream of a dress"—a dainty, shining robe of rose-colored silk that carried with it the suggestion and even the scent of the delicate blossoms of June, and made one involuntarily think of warm summer evenings and rose gardens and moonlight—or romance and poetry and the happiness of care-free youth. All of Bettie's bright joyous personality seemed to be wrapped in the shimmering folds, and Nancy could imagine how Bettie's own dear face had looked, smiling above it.

Just then the doorbell clanged insistently.

"O dear!" sighed Nancy. "I did hope that no one would come tonight, for the rain is just pouring. Go down and answer the bell, Mammy Lou."

Mammy Lou stamped down the stairs, muttering to herself as she went, and opened the door to admit Professor Darker. The man stepped into the hall with quite the air of being master of the house and of the old negress as well, handed his dripping raincoat and hat to her and walked eagerly to the chair beside the warm fire in the livingroom.

"Tell Miss Varden that I am here," he said to Mammy Lou in passing, without even a request that the lady might receive him: then he sat down to await her coming.

Ah! this was life as it should be. This was ease. These were the proper surroundings for a distinguished college professor, he told himself. And Miss Varden herself would be a very pleasing accompaniment to them—she was so dignified, so considerate of one's comfort, so appreciative of intelligent companionship. Yes, he must surely hasten the day all these "goods that the gods"—seconded by old Dr. Varden—"had provided," were his own to enjoy continually. Why delay matters and condemn one's self to the discomforts of a common boarding-house where one was scarcely noticed, much less appreciated? He would settle things that very night and arrange for an immediate marriage.

In the meantime, Mammy Lou had stamped her way upstairs again, with "a black cloud of wrath upon her brow"—if such an expression may be applied to one whose brow was already as black as African blood could make it.

"It am dat puhfessah, Honey Chile. Doan't yo' bodder yo'se'f wif him. Jes' let me go down an' git de dictionary to 'muse him. He jes' drippin' as a drowned rat, an' steamin' dat livin' room up lak a kitchen on wash-day. Jes' let him sizzle in front ob dat fiah, whiles you go on lookin' at youah pretty dresses an' t'ings. Jes' hol' dat rosy t'ing up in front of you onc't. I want to see how you look in it. "Ah!" as Nancy quickly complied. "It am heabenlier dan I fought it was. Look in de glass, Honey Chile, an' jes' smile at you'se'f once."

Nancy turned quickly toward the long mirror and involuntarily smiled at the figure she saw reflected there—a girl with a really young face; with a wealth of golden-brown hair that might be most bewitching if it were not drawn back into such a tight, plain coiffure; a pale complexion that needed but the eagerness of denied youth to blossom into delicate rosinness; a girl that needed to learn how to smile once more, as she had done in the dear dead days of childhood and Bettie.

"O, Honey Chile! O, Honey Chile!" ejaculated the enraptured Mammy Lou. "Ef I was a honey-bee I wouldn't have to hunt no farder foh sweetness ef I saw you in dat dress. It sho am de heavenly robe dat you read about in de Good Book. I reckon all de angels doan't hab to dress in white, does dey?"

"O, you flatterer!" Nancy said as she gently laid the fascinating dress upon the bed. Then with a regretful glance at the piles of pretty things still unexamined, she turned away and went slowly downstairs to greet her untimely caller.

Mammy Lou scowled and shook a defiant fist at the floor beneath which the self-engrossed professor sat.

"You ole bumblebee dat gavvers honey jes' foh you ownse'f an' nobuddy else! You ole dictionary mole! Ef you jes' knew how Mammy Lou lubs you, you'd—you'd—you'd be plum flambusticated!"

And then Mammy Lou felt better.

PIE-CRUST PROMISES.

"Now, you promise to be there promptly?" insisted the first girl speaker.

"Oh, yes, I promise," carelessly agreed the girl who had just been invited on the trip for the morrow. But the other girl was not quite satisfied yet.

"Well, now, promise me that you'll keep your promise," she demanded laughingly. "For you know as well as I do, Estelle, that your promises are not always the guaranteed all-wool kind."

Rather a sorry thing to say to any one, even in a joking way, was it not? And all the worse because the one accused could not, and did not, resent it. It was the truth, and she knew it. Worst of all was the fact that she did not think of resenting it, because she did not care that it was true.

Promises are more serious things than that. A promise, once given, should stand as good as the actual performance. A promise should never be made unless the one who makes it is as sure that he can and will fulfill it as he can be sure of anything.

The safe rule for all to follow is two-fold. First to think and be sure of the possibility of performance, before making any promise. Second, when that is done, and the promise made, to let nothing make you break it—nothing that lies within your power to prevent.

If you stop, think, make sure, before you promise, you will train yourself to careful, conscientious habits in giving your word. If you make good the promises so made, as you will in the natural order of things, you will train your friends to know that your promises are guaranteed "all truth," if not all wool.—Pleasant Hours.

WHY BETTY DIDN'T LAUGH.

"When I was at a party," said Betty (aged just four),

"A little girl fell off her chair, right down upon the floor,

And all the other little girls began to laugh but me;

I didn't laugh one single bit," said Betty, seriously.

"And why didn't you laugh?" said mamma, full of delight to find

That Betty, bless her little heart! had been so sweetly kind.

"Why didn't you laugh, my darling, or don't you like to tell?"

"I didn't laugh," said Betty, "'cause 'twas me that fell." —Ex.

THE RESCUE.

BY NELLIE BALLOU.

Detta was bustling round, helping her mother wash dishes and dust, for Aunt Hilda from the city was coming the next day to pay a visit. Detta and her mother even went out to straighten up the garden.

It was chilly for early October. "Dear me!" said mother, "I'm afraid there will be a frost tonight. If there is, it will be the end of the asters; and I did so much want them to be pretty when Hilda came!"

Detta went to the fence and looked over into the Bowens' vegetable garden.

"Is a frost coming tonight?" she asked Mr. Bowen, who was digging late potatoes.

"Not if it stays cloudy," he said. "But if it clears, we shall have a frost."

"If the flowers were kept warm would the frost hurt them?" asked Detta.

"No," Mr. Bowen replied, "but it is hard to keep things warm out of doors without our old friend, the sun, to help with the job."

Detta went to bed early, but she did not go to sleep; instead she lay and watched the sky through her window. The clouds drifted away slowly and the stars began to shine one by one. It was clearing off; now for the frost!

Detta cuddled down under her quilt. "The poor asters!" she said. "They will not be fit for Aunt Hilda to look at."

She lay still for a long while and pondered over the plight of the asters. "Now, if I myself were out in the garden this chilly night, I shouldn't be cold," she thought, "because I'd have on plenty of clothes."

Then another thought came to her. "Why shouldn't flowers wear clothes when they need them?"

She got softly out of bed and put on her flannel dressing gown and her slippers and stockings. Stealing over to the closet where her clothes hung, she piled her arms high with dresses, coats and sweaters. Then she tiptoed downstairs and out into the garden.

The moon was shining bright, and the asters were still holding their brave heads high. But they would soon begin to feel the cold.

Detta stood still and looked at them; she began to feel doubtful. What if the clothes should be too heavy and weigh them down?

Beside the fence was a pile of sharpened stakes; the sight of them gave Detta a new idea. The stakes could be used to hold up the garments. Laying the clothes on the ground, she set to work.

At last, when she straightened up, every clump of asters had a tall, slim stick to guard it.

"Now I can go ahead and dress the flowers," she said.

Five minutes later one corner of the garden was a queer looking place. Two coats and three dresses with two sweaters seemed to be standing there alone, and the asters had disappeared from view. Inside the house a tired little girl was tiptoeing upstairs, to snuggle down under the blanket with a sigh of relief.

Detta waked a little after sunrise. Slipping her wrapper on, she ran out into the garden, gathered up her clothes and ran back to her room.

When she went down to breakfast her father and mother were busy talking.

"I can't understand it," her mother was saying. "The frost was so heavy that the other flowers were badly hurt, but the asters look just as they looked yesterday."

Detta smiled to herself over her oatmeal and cream. "I won't tell on the asters," she thought.

But that afternoon when she and her mother were showing their guest about the garden and Aunt Hilda was admiring the asters Mr. Bowen put his head over the fence.

"Where are your scarecrows, Mrs. Perry?" he asked.

"What do you mean?" said Detta's mother.

"Why, I looked out of my window a little after dawn," said Mr. Bowen, "and there were five fine scarecrows over there in the corner where the asters are. Handsomely dressed, too."

Detta stamped her foot, but she was laughing. "They didn't have on a thing but my old clothes," she cried.

Then the secret was out, of course.

Aunt Hilda carried home a big bunch of asters. "I should never have had them but for Detta's coats and dresses," she said.

HOW DICKY DRAKE GOT HIS DINNER.

Dicky Drake was a snowy-white fellow with a long yellow bill and strong yellow legs, and he prided himself on being the cock of the walk in the duck yard. He always managed to be the first one on the scene when Johnny Hill came to feed his flock, and Dicky Drake rarely failed to get the first grain of corn Master Johnny dropped.

Johnny was very fond of this particular drake, because Grandmother Brent had brought him all the way from Maine to sunny Tennessee for her grandson, Johnny Hill, who lived on a big farm 'way out in the country and who was making a bank account by raising ducks for his future education. So when he added the new drake to his already famous duck yard, he was a very happy little boy; and it amused him very much to see Dicky Drake strutting around the duck yard with his neck arched as if he were king of the tribe, getting the best of everything.

But one day Johnny, accompanied by his mother went to feed his ducks, and Dicky Drake, as usual was there first, ready to gobble up the first grain of corn.

"My, my!" Mrs. Hill exclaimed as she watched him eat. "Isn't he a greedy, selfish fellow?"

And Johnny looked at his favorite in a new light.

"I never had thought of him as being greedy, mother," the little boy said slowly, "but since you've mentioned it, he is greedy and selfish; and My Sunday-school teacher, Miss Ray, only last Sunday said that selfishness grew on boys when once they took it up, and I'm afraid it will be the same with Dicky Drake."

"I'm quite sure Miss Ray was right in saying what she did about selfishness," answered his mother, "and the sooner the habit is broken, the better."

"Well, I shall find a way to break Dicky," Johnny replied. "And when I do I'll tell you, mother."

Several weeks later Johnny surprised his mother by saying: "Mother, Dicky Drake has learned his lesson; you should watch him eat now."

Mrs. Hill could hardly believe it possible when she saw the new king of the duck yard approach the feeding pen after the others were in.

"How did you do it, Johnny?" she asked.

"Well mother," answered Johnny, "it took a long time to teach him, but he finally learned that it was easier to come and eat with the others than it was to have to dive to the bottom of the pond for his dinner."

"What do you mean, Johnny?" his mother asked with interest.

"Just this, mother," the boy answered. "Every time I fed my ducks and Dicky Drake came prancing in to grab up the first bite, I would put him in the coop until the others were through; then I'd drop his corn kernel by kernel into the pond, and he'd have to dive clean to the bottom for every bite he would get."

Mrs. Hill looked at her little boy in astonishment, then at the big white drake who was slowly devouring the grains scattered before him.

"That was a hard lesson, son," she said slowly.

"Yes, 'twas, mother," Johnny answered. "But drakes are somewhat like little boys, mother; they learn faster when the lesson is a hard task."

Mrs. Hill smiled faintly and lovingly put her arms about Johnny's shoulder. "Yes, dear, I guess you are right," she said softly. "A hard lesson, when once learned, is not easily forgotten."

Hate hurts the hater more than the hated.

Try and you may. Don't try and you wont.

Truth has nothing to fear from the future.

When a man loses the fear of God, he is capable of almost any crime.

We do not know how cheap the seeds of happiness are, or we should scatter them oftener.—Lowell.

Disappointment should always be taken as a stimulant and never viewed as a discouragement.

Some men only find themselves after a catastrophe. They discover their talents like the miner discovers gold, through the explosion of dynamite.

If die I must, let me die in glorious struggle for the things I know is right and best. Fallen, then I am a victor in the struggle, for I have striven and felt the ecstasy of strife for the ideal of my soul.

The power of restraining one's temper under provocation is one of those choice attainments whose winsomeness men universally recognize.

The Commandments of God are not restraints on our liberty, but inspirations to liberty, for they are interpretations to us of our own true nature, and ideals of what we may become.

No matter how much cowardice and fickleness may be one's by nature, we can be made brave and resolute by fellowship with Christ. "Are we ashamed of our half-heartedness? Get closer to him." He shall be to you strength as well as salvation.

Active, aggressive, persistent seeking, and seeking what we want, and wanting what we ought is the law of progress for the kingdom of heaven. Jesus came to seek and save that which was lost, and that ought to be the chief aim of those who would follow in his steps.

AN UNDYING INFLUENCE.

A little more than two hundred years ago an old Puritan doctor wrote a book and died without knowing whether his book had done any good. The name of the book was "The Bruised Reed." Richard Baxter was converted through reading "The Bruised Reed," and he wrote "A Call to the Unconverted." Philip Doddridge was converted through reading Baxter's book and wrote "The Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul." William Wilberforce was converted through reading this book, and wrote "A Practical View of Christianity." Thomas Chalmers read Wilberforce's book and was converted. A young minister by name of Leigh Richmond read Chalmers' book and he was inspired to write "The Dairyman's Daughter," which has been the means for the conversion of tens of thousands." This true story shows how a book, sermon, poem, or article may form a link in the golden chain of influence which in God's providence grows longer and longer. But be it remembered that links in the golden chain are formed by kind words and good deeds. A smile today may be a sunburst of glory to men and women a century hence.

HAVING A GODLY FEAR.

The fear of God makes a hero; the fear of man makes a coward. Fear to do wrong makes a hero; fear to do right makes a coward. Noah was warned of things not seen as yet, the world had never known. It was out of the range of his experience; there were scores of arguments against it; but God's word was stronger than all arguments. The need of this day is a healthy fear; faith in Sinia with its thundering of judgment as strong as faith in Calvary with its whisperings of love; a belief in the words of Christ about the worm that dieth not as strong as a belief in the mansions which he is preparing for his people.

GOLD STARS IN FRANCE.

BY FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

The gold stars in France which make their appeal to the heart of America are not the stars on the uniforms of great dignitaries; they are stars made of masses of yellow pansies, and bloom, in the American cemeteries of France.

"I wish," said one returning mother, "that you might have been with me when I went to visit my son's grave. He lies in the cemetery at Romagne. The cemetery lies on the slope of a hill beyond which rises Montfaucon which figured so prominently in the Meuse-Argonne Drive. In the foreground is an immense bed of pansies, star-shaped, and every pansy yellow. Near by, in purple pansies, is spelled the name of the cemetery.

There are 24,000 graves, every one with its tiny white cross and the American flag floats over all."

This mother had gone over with the intention of having her son's body brought home; she changed her mind. "I could not have brought him back to our little cemetery at home. He lies there with his comrades; he occupies a place of honor among these dead. I could not imagine that he would like to be disturbed. I talked it over with a young woman who served tea to me in a little hut at the cemetery gates; she said that many mothers who had made the pilgrimage had come to this conclusion.

"A PLACE FOR ME."

"My Father has need of the birds and the flowers.

A place for each beautiful tree,
And so I am sure in this wonderful plan,
There's a place and a mission for me.

He has a good purpose in all He has made,
And surely I know it must be
That when he pronounced his creation all good,
He meant something lovely for me.

So, wherever I go and in all that I do,
I crave the dear vision to see,
My place in my Father's own wonderful plan,
My task and his blessings for me.

I'd like to use all of my talents and time,
And ever so faithful to be;
That God should not miss any service of mine,
To perfect his service in me.

Then I must look close through the days
as they pass,
The sign of his guiding to see,
And be glad that my Father's own loving good plan
Included a mission for me." —Ex.

Lesson XI—December 11.

PAUL WRITES TO A FRIEND.

(Philemon 8:21.)

8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient,

9. Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such an one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds

11. Which in time past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

12. Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels:

13. Whom I have retained with me, that in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the gospel:

14. But without thy mind would I do nothing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

15. For perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever;

16. Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh, and in the Lord?

17. If thou count me therefore a partner, receive him as myself.

18. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account;

19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

20. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh my bowels in the Lord.

21. Having confidence in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

Golden Text: "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant" (Matthew 20:27).

Catechism—Q. 61. What is forbidden in the Second Commandment? A. The Second Commandment forbiddeth the worshipping of God by images, or any other way not appointed in his Word.

INTRODUCTORY.

This short epistle to Philemon is striking and beautiful. Great skill and tact are displayed in its composition, and its expressions are very tender and affectionate, while being so strong and compelling that one can scarcely doubt that Philemon complied with his request, and received Onesimus with a kind and forgiving spirit. It appears that Onesimus, a slave, had run away from his master, and, while a fugitive, had come under the influence of the Gospel as preached by Paul and had become converted. He had, at Paul's advice, gone back to Philemon. Paul says that he had sent him back. This is not saying that slavery is right, for it is not. But slavery existed then, and, in order that the Gospel should not appear as a lawless force, it was advised that existing laws should be recognized until they could be changed. The Gospel has changed them, until slavery has almost entirely disappeared everywhere. Philemon was a good man; a Christian convert; his family were Christians; and a church was maintained in his home. Philemon probably lived in Colossæ. Apphia was probably his wife and Archippus their son. With all of this as a back-ground we may study the rest of the letter.

EXPOSITORY.

8, 9. Paul felt that as a prisoner, undergoing many hardships for the sake of Christ and for winning souls to salvation, and being in old age, he had a right to urge and enjoin men and women in the church to do what was their duty. But he did not choose to command them. For love's sake he chose to entreat. He felt that if he could not induce people to do what was right, willingly, it was hardly worth while, in the long run, to drive them to it. If one's heart is right he will love to do the will of Christ.

10-13. These are very affectionate and loving words about Onesimus whom Paul had won to Christ, and whom he now regards as his own child in the Lord. He speaks of him as "my child." He had been born again, into God's family, and Paul regards himself, having led him to Christ, as his earthly spiritual father. He says that he holds him in tender affection, as "my very heart," and says that he would gladly have kept him, not for his own convenience, but that he might be of help in the work of the Gospel. It appears that Onesimus had committed some offense by which Philemon had suffered loss. It was more than running away. It seems that he took some money or other property from Philemon. But Paul takes measures so that Philemon shall not lose anything. He sends back Onesimus "in his own person," and we find further on, that he offers to pay everything that may be due. We do not know what Philemon did. It would seem that he might well have spared Onesimus to go back to Paul and help him in the work of the Gospel. It may be that he did. But we do not know.

15-17. Paul says he would take no advantage of Philemon. Whatever he was to do must be done freely. He says it was obviously an advantage to Onesimus to have come to him, since he had become converted and would now be willing to remain contentedly at home; that, going back home now, he would be a very different person; that he would be a fellow-Christian, and should be loved and treated as such; that he was dear to Paul and should be dear to Philemon; and he asks that, for Paul's sake, the servant should be kindly welcomed and treated considerately. We can scarcely conceive a more beautiful letter than this. Carrying it back home and handing it to his old Christian master, he could hardly fail of a kind welcome. Thus Christ himself opens up the way for every repentant sinner to have a kind welcome as he goes to God in penitence and faith.

18, 19. Here is the clear and positive offer, on the part of Paul, to pay anything that Onesimus might be owing. He offers to make full and adequate settlement of all claims. This is making atonement. This is what Christ does when he makes full settlement of all the claims of justice, and pays all righteous demands against the sinner by his own death upon the cross. "He was wounded for our transgressions; he was bruised for our iniquities; the chastisement of our peace was upon him and by his stripes we are healed." Paul intimates that Philemon was greatly in his own debt, for what he had already done for him, in leading him to salvation, but says that he does not make this the basis for any claim. He wants Philemon to remember who Paul is who makes this request, that is all. So should we remember all who have ever been of benefit to us, as pastor, teacher or Christian friend, and especially Jesus Christ, who died to save us.

20. The letter closes with a renewal of his request, and an expression of confidence. The request is founded upon their common experience of the love of the Lord. "Let me have joy of thee in the Lord." There should be a great deal expected of a Christian. He should come to be like Christ, and to act like Christ. One Christian has a right to expect to be treated in the right way by a fellow-Christian. The world has a right to expect that a Christian shall act in the right way. Christ has a right to expect it. It is a great grief and disappointment when one fails to come up to what is rightfully expected of him. "Refresh my heart in drink." A true Christian refreshes those around him, as a spring of water refreshes those who find it in a dry and thirsty land; or as a breeze on a hot and scorching day refreshes one who is almost overcome by the heat. A true Christian, by his good life and good words, is a source of refreshing to those who know him. How sad when it is otherwise! Let us make our lives refreshing to other Christians and to those who are led to hope to see good and Christlike conduct on our part.

21. Paul was able to say to Philemon that he had confidence in him, so that he knew he would do even more than he asked him to do. There are some persons in whom we have such confidence. We are sure, always, that they will do their whole duty, and even more than is asked of them. Christ has given us such an example. His life was pure grace, which has been defined as goodness to the undeserving. Let us accept his grace, and let us imitate it, in trying to do all that is expected of us as Christians, and as much more as is possible.

THE MESSAGE.

BY F. M. N.

"Jesus loves you,"—send this message
Hither, thither, everywhere;
It will bring the little children,
It will bring strong men to prayer.

'Tis the message of the Father,
'Tis the message of the Son,
'Tis the Holy Spirit's message
Unto you and ev'ryone.

"Jesus loves you," "Jesus loves you,"
Breathe it out into the air,
Just wherever you are living
'Tis the message needed—there.

A STAYER.

"I'm not going to Sunday school any more, Mother," Charlie announced, with a Black Cloud sort of a look on his face. Mother and Uncle Joe and Aunt Clara could see it as plain as day.

"Why, Charlie, I didn't know you were not feeling well," Mother said; and it was the Surprised Look that came to her face just then.

"I'm well enough!" Charlie snapped, "but I just can't stand it any longer to be called 'China,' and that is what that freckle-faced Rob keeps calling me all the time. I've had enough of it."

The Sorry Look began to show itself pretty strongly on Mother's face, but it didn't come out on Uncle Joe's at all. He had been a boy himself once, and he knew all about the Feelings that are likely to be getting their grip on a boy.

"Not ashamed of old China, are you?" Uncle Joe looked as sunny as a mid-summer morning as he asked this question.

"No, I'm not!" The Snappy Mood still had its grip on Charlie. "But I don't like to be called 'China' all the time. I'm not a Chinese if I was born in China. Last Sunday he called me a 'Chink,' and that settled it. No more Sunday school for me with Rob in the class."

"What kind of work is your father doing, Charlie?" The Sunny Look was staying right along on Uncle Joe's face.

"Missionary," said Charlie.
"What do the heathen Chinese people sometimes call the missionaries and other American and English people who are in China?"

"Foreign devils."

"Does your father pack his trunk and come home just because some of the Chinese people call him by an unpleasant name?"

"N-no, he stays. He stayed right through the Boxer trouble." In Charlie's eyes his father was a hero.

"And he's staying now right by the people who call him unpleasant names, trying to help them to a better life, while Mother and his boy Charlie are in this country for a year or two?"

"Ye-es, he is. My father's a stayer, all right. He's the best man in this whole world."

"How about your father's son: is he a 'stayer,' too?"

It was the Softened Look that came to Charlie's face as Uncle Joe put this question.

"I suppose I ought to stand Rob's abuse if Father can stand it to be called mean names. I—hadn't thought of it in just that way." And Charlie picked up his books and trudged off to Sunday school with Uncle Joe and Aunt Clara.

SCIENCE OR PHILOSOPHY.

The destructive critics confuse science with philosophy. Science is the knowledge of facts and their relations. Philosophy is speculation on facts. They do not agree themselves, and they change with the generations. Evolution is not science, it is a philosophy. It is pitiful to hear men of culture blunderingly confuse evolution with science. Some scientists may think they see indications of evolution, but no true scientist affirms it as a fact. It is only secondary, imitative men who do this.—Ex.

MILLET'S ANGELUS.

Henry Drummond said of Millet's Angelus that its especial charm lay in its combination of the three chief factors in real living: love, labor, religion.

O Lord of Life, and love and power,
How joyful life might be,
If in thy service every hour
We lived and moved with thee,
If youth in all its bloom and might
By thee were sanctified.

—Ella S. Armitage.

SOLUTION.

The Christian does not imagine that his task is done when he has worked out his own salvation. He knows that salvation can not be selfishly attained, that no man can be saved alone, and that we save ourselves by saving our brethren.

THE UNAPPRECIATED GIFT.

It is said that a miniature silver egg was once presented to a Saxon princess by a royal visitor. Somewhat surprised that she should receive a gift of such a character, she let it lie neglected for some time among other possessions. But one day, picking it up idly, she discovered secret spring, and on pressing it the halves of the egg flew open, disclosing a jewel of exquisite workmanship.

Thus do gifts come to us from the King. It takes more than a careless glance to discover their value. The Bible, for instance, is a gift of infinite value, but how many of us appreciate its worth? It is not until some deep life experience touches the hidden spring that we have revealed to us the radiant promises of his love, and come to understand the full magnitude of his gift. From that hour, his words take on a loveliness never before perceived, and we learn to cherish them as jewels only the King himself can bestow.

MR. AND MRS. OHIO PRESBYTERIAN:

I am your college. You brought me into being. You own and control me. I care for your children. I educate your pastors. I prepare your missionaries. I train your school teachers. I inspire your boys and girls to lives of service. I magnify your Church and exalt your Christ. Have I not a right to your love, your prayers and your support?

Listen. I need your help just now. I am at a crisis in my history. I must have more endowment to continue my work. Unless subscriptions to the amount of $750,000 are obtained before next June, I will lose the $250,000 offered by the Rockefeller Fund.

On WOOSTER DAY, December 11th, you will be given the opportunity at your church service of making your subscription on a four-year, annual-payment basis. Be liberal. Do not disappoint me. I am your college and am doing the Lord's work.

PRAYER MEETING, DECEMBER 11.

ENDEAVOR TOPIC: Points in the Pledge We Are Likely to Neglect. Luke 9:57-62.

No pledge can be made to specify all the points of Christian life and service, or all the duties that should be undertaken and performed in living as one should live to the glory of God. The great central, vital necessity is that one shall love the Lord sincerely and trust in Jesus Christ for his salvation. If one does this, his heart being filled with divine grace, he will be sure to hate sin and to turn from all forms of it. Repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ will be in his heart as his new nature.

If one's heart is right with God, made so by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, he will have the steady impulse from on high to do the things he ought to do and to leave undone the things he ought not to do. In this condition he will be constantly stimulated to do the essential things of a spiritual Christian life. Without it he will be in constant danger of neglecting the really important things of the Christian life. So we see that, in connection with any resolves one may make, or any pledge he may take, it is absolutely essential that he have in his heart the indwelling Spirit of God.

There is a great difference between a formal Christian life and a really vital and spiritual life. On the one hand there is the attempt to live by rule; to do certain duties; to come up to a certain mark, and it may be all in a very good and conscientious spirit. But on the other hand one may be so devoted to Christ, so in love with him, so filled with the spirit and impulses of Christian life, that he will be faithful and true in all the details of the service he ought to render to the Master.

It is fine to have taken so good a pledge, for instance, let us say, as the Christian Endeavor pledge, which prescribes a great many important duties which should be performed. But if one is not a really devoted Christian he will not fill up his life with Christian service and joy, although he may keep the pledge in a pretty good and careful way. One may read the Bible and yet not commune with God. He may go to church regularly and not be full of worshipful love. He may even pray and yet it will be like saying prayers instead of talking with the Heavenly Father. And he will be in danger, too, of forgetting or of neglecting what he ought to be or to do. It is important to be so in love with Christ that we will delight, as the very law and rule of life, to do his will.

For instance, here is a watch. If it has a good spring within it, and it is wound up once a day, the hands will point out every hour, and every minute, and every second, on the dial, right straight along, all through the twenty-four hours. If it has not these well-regulated works within it, the owner may move the hands around, occasionally, with his fingers, but it will not answer the purposes of a watch.

God, in making our bodies, gave us nerves by which we can move our hands and feet and other parts of our bodies at will, but for a part of the time we are at rest and unconscious. But our heart and lungs and other organs of our bodies need to be at work all the time. So he has given us a part of the brain, and a set of nerves, that work all the time and keep the vital processes in activity. So we need to have the power of God's Holy Spirit in our souls to insure that we shall be Christians all the time, at night and by day, at home and abroad, in youth and in old age.

Let us read and study all the rules of this good pledge. There is nothing in it but what every Christian should try to do, even if he has never seen the pledge. Let us read and study all the duties that are laid down in God's Word. But while we know the duties, let us accept God's Spirit to dwell within us and to lead us to do all we ought to do.

DOING GOOD.

Bless'd be those feasts with simple plenty crown'd,
Where all the ruddy family around
Laugh at the jests or pranks that never fail,
Or sigh with pity at some mournful tale,
Or press the bashful stranger to his food,
And learn the luxury of doing good.
—Goldsmith.

ENRICHMENT.

So at once, wherever you get a Christian, the saving process is set at work in all direction around him. A Christian is a man placed there to play a friend's part to any who need a friend, and so to bring them also into the friendship of God. And the result is that his own life is enriched in exact proportion to his enrichment of others.—F. A. Burroughs.

OUR TASKS.

For what we can not do, God never asks:
Beyond what we can bear, he never tries.
In sweet fulfillment of the little tasks
We make our preparation for the skies.

The restless heart seeks to do something great,
And let the common things of life slip by,
Forgetting that the trifles indicate
Which path we're taking for eternity.
—London Sunday-School Times.

CHRIST THE CENTER.

If there is one truth this age needs driven in upon it to save it from the darkness of spiritual apostasy, it is that Jesus Christ is the center and the very heart of Christianity, and that without him we are turning back toward Judaism and have no more claim to than the Mohammedan. Jesus Christ is central. He is all and in all. Drop him out, and Christianity crumbles away and leaves us in despair.

COMPROMISING IN PRAYER.

BY REV. DAVID G. WYLIE, D.D.

A compromise has been defined as the settling of a controversy, or the readjustment of conflicting views, by mutual concession, often involving a partial surrender of principles. A Christian should never leave his Lord outside the door of any organization, or smother the name of Almighty God under the general terms. Men of other faiths are apt to discredit and doubt the sincerity of a Christian minister, who, on a public occasion, seeks to please by omitting the name of Jesus Christ in his prayer.

PRAYER MEETING

DECEMBER 7.

CONCERT OF PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.
PERSIA.

Modern missionary work began with Henry Martyn, who spent a little over a year in Persia in 1811-12. His stay will be ever memorable for the translation of the Persian New Testament and Psalms, and for the immortal example of devotion and self-sacrifice. The Basle Missionary Society and the Scottish Missionary Society left permanent memorials in an apology for Christianity to Mohammedans, "The Balance of Truth," by Rev. Dr. Pfander, and in the translation of the Old Testament into Persian by Rev. Dr. Glenn.

Rev. Justin Perkins began work for the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, going to Tabriz in 1834, and with Asahel Grant, M.D., settling in Urumia in 1835. The work was for the Nestorian Christians with a view to the revival of their ancient Church. Fidelity Fiske ranks as one of the pioneer heroes in work for women. About 1860 the work changed from the old Nestorian Church to establish the separate Syrian Evangelical Church. In 1870 the Missions to the Nestorians, now known as the Mission to Persia, was transferred to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions. Work was established throughout the mountains of Kurdistan in Turkey. In 1869 the English Church Missionary Society established work in Ispahan in South Persia; this work was extended and they divide Persia with the Presbyterians. Roman Catholic Missions go back to medieval times; their modern missions began a little after the Protestant Missions. In 1899 a Russian Orthodox Mission was established in Urumia and the majority of the Nestorians in that region became members of the Russian Orthodox Church. In 1883 the Presbyterian Mission was divided into the East and West Persia Missions.

West Persia includes the province of Azerbaijan and the Nestorian region of Turkey. The largest body of Protestant Christians in Persia is the Syriac Evangelical Church, mainly in the Urumia region. Of late years the work has developed largely among the Mohammedans. The services of the missionaries during the famine of 1880, during several cholera epidemics, and during the disturbances of 1915-1919, together with their steady Christian life and work, have given the mission a strong hold on the people of all classes. Since 1919 Urumia Station has been completely disorganized, due to conditions existing on account of the World War and following its close.

In Persia, East and West, the report last given, for normal times, showed 90 missionaries, male and female, from our own country at work there, of whom 21 were ordained ministers. Most of these are still at work there, although not in the regular lines and places, all of them, but all doing what they can to help sustain and help the people and lead them on in the ways of Christian life. There is also a native force of 108, of whom five are ordained ministers and thirteen unordained.

There are 2,289 communicants. The work has been carried on in the best possible way, under the trying circumstances in which all Christians have been placed. But all are hoping and praying for brighter days.

BULBS AND BLOSSOMS.

How lacking in beauty would spring be—the flowering season of the year—if we did not plant our bulbs just before winter sets in! Edgar A. Guest's poem on "Bulb Planting Time" may strengthen our hope to eternal life and encourage us to plant beauty on earth before our eyes open upon the glories of heaven.

Last night he said the dead were dead
And scoffed my faith to scorn,
I found him at a tulip bed
When I passed by at morn.

"Oho!" said I, "the frost is near
And mist is on the hills,
And yet I find you planting here
Tulips and daffodils."

"Tis time to plant them now," he said,
"If they shall bloom in spring."
"But every bulb," said I, "seems dead
And such an ugly thing.

"The pulse of life I can not feel,
The skin is dried and brown.
Now look!" a bulb beneath my heel
I crushed and trampled down.

In anger then he said to me:
"You've killed a lovely thing;
A scarlet blossom that would be
Some morning in the spring."

"Last night a greater sin was thine,"
To him I slowly said,
"You trampled on the dead of mine
And told me they were dead."

Barber Memorial Seminary, Anniston, Alabama, was burned November 7th. Erected to the memory of a noble Christian and generous friend of the Negro, it has been a great blessing to the colored women of America. As it is the only institution of its kind in the large State of Alabama, THE FREEDMEN'S BOARD feels it a duty to rebuild, and resume this great work of Christian education. In addition to available funds, $60,000 will be required to completely restore. We appeal for aid. Give us your money and your prayers.

GENERAL NEWS

ARMAMENT DELEGATES OUTLINING THEIR POSITIONS.

When the arms delegates quit work for the Thanksgiving Day recess, these considerations embraced the central points of interest in their discussions:

Whether the efforts to apply generally accepted principles to specific cases in the Far East would bring definite accomplishments or only lead to futile debate.

Whether, in view of the position of France, and the general situation in Europe, any serious attempt should be made to agree on a limitation of land armament.

Whether a way can be found to hasten consideration of details of the naval limitation plan, which is proceeding smoothly but too slowly to satisfy some of the delegates.

Of these questions the first was brought sharply to the fore by several direct clashes of opinion regarding elements of the Far Eastern negotiations. At executive session the right of the Chinese delegates to speak for the whole of China was reported to have been questioned by France, and later a British interpretation of the general principles already adopted was challenged by some of the Chinese.

On the side of the naval reduction program, developments are so completely out of the picture that some of the delegates showed impatience, and pointed out the possible danger that the negotiations might become confused by too exhaustive discussion of details. It is possible the naval experts will be asked to simplify their methods so as to expedite action.

BRITAIN WARNS FRANCE.

One of the most outspoken warnings ever addressed by the Foreign Minister of one nation to another friendly nation was delivered publicly last Thursday at a luncheon by Marquis Curzon, of Kedleston, to France.

The British Foreign Minister declared that if France pursued an isolated and individual policy she would not in the long run injure Germany and would fail to protect herself.

It was a warning, couched if anything in plainer terms than a similar speech delivered by Premier David Lloyd George last May, at the time when France was proceeding to the occupation of Germany's Ruhr towns, which caused a sensation.

Lord Curzon's address was directed primarily to the Washington conference on limitation of armament and Far Eastern questions, but it was clearly an intimation to France on the effect of that country's attitude toward disarmament. It also applied with equal force to the French policy in the Near East.

Premier Aristide Briand, of France, took sharp issue with Earl Curzon, British Foreign Minister, on that part of the latter's speech in which he intimated that France had "stolen a march" on her allies by entering into a separate agreement with the Turkish Nationalist Government.

The agreement was drafted and signed in London, after France had given notice to her allies that she intended to effect "a special agreement for the settlement of our private affairs." M. Briand asserted in a statement issued just before returning to France.

HOPE FOR IRISH SETTLEMENT FAILS.

Negotiations for an Irish settlement are nearing an unfavorable end, according to high authority, and there is apprehension that next week may witness their collapse unless more favorable circumstances, not now foreseen, develop.

It is stated that Ulster no longer is presenting the sole obstacle, but that the Sinn Fein refused to accept allegiance to the King, although willing to take the oath to an Irish constitution.

Furthermore, and equally important, it is added, the Sinn Fein will not agree to a veto of Irish legislation by the British Crown.

The Sinn Fein idea is said to be a completely independent Irish state, although connected loosely with other states in the empire. Acts of Parliament establishing British dominions give the King the power of vetoing all legislation, but by constitutional usage this veto now is never exercised.

The Sinn Fein, however, is declared to have made known its belief that a similar veto power regarding Ireland constantly would be used at the will of the British Cabinet.

Ulster, apart from its objection to any all-Ireland Parliament, is insistent upon allegiance to the Crown.

COMPROMISE TAX BILL BECOMES A LAW.

The tax revision bill became a law last Wednesday, President Harding signing it at the Capitol during the closing hour of the special session of Congress.

The executive signature was attached within less than one hour after the Senate had completed enactment of the measure by agreeing to the conference report by a vote of thirty-nine to twenty-nine.

Six Republicans—Borah, Ladd, La Follette, Moses, Norbeck and Norris—voted against the report, and one Democrat—Broussard—voted for it.

This is the bill which repeals the excess profits and transportation taxes, does away with most of the so-called nuisance and luxury taxes, reduces individual taxes all along the line, and increases the corporation income tax from ten per cent to twelve and a half per cent.

Few, if any, Senators, supporting the measure were entirely satisfied with its sections, but they took the view that it contained more good provisions than bad ones. The measure is generally conceded to be only a temporary one, and the understanding now is that a new revenue bill will have to be framed within a year or so.

PORTO RICANS TO PROTEST TO PRESIDENT.

Governor E. Mont Reily, of Porto Rico, accompanied by a number of prominent Porto Ricans and members of his official family, arrived in Washington last week prepared to lay before President Harding a program of changes in the island legislative system and to confer with Secretary Weeks, of the War Department, under whose direction the affairs of the island are administered.

Coincident with Governor Reily's arrival, Felix Cordova-Davila, Resident Commissioner at Washington from Porto Rico, announced he would take steps looking toward the Governor's removal, as he had received a telegram that a delegation of "representative citizens" was embarking at San Juan en route to Washington to present the "case of the Porto Ricans against the Governor." Commissioner Cordova-Davila said most of the delegation were members of the Porto Rican House and Senate affiliated with the Unionist party.

Governor Reily refused to comment today on charges of maladministration of office as preferred by thirty-nine of the fifty-eight members of the Porto Rican Assembly in a cablegram to the Island Commissioner here. He denies, however, that the charges were in any way responsible for his visit to the United States.

TUBERCULOSIS PREVENTABLE.

Tuberculosis can be prevented in the same manner as smallpox and typhus, according to what is declared to be the most important medical discovery of the year. The method has just been announced by Prof. A. Calmette, Assistant Director of the Pasteur Institute, and a famous French savant.

Before the French Academy of Sciences Prof. Calmette demonstrated that the Koch bacillus could be rendered sterile by cultivating a preparation of bile, which, injected in the veins of animals, caused an abundance of "anticorpos," from which, in turn, the serum is constructed.

The serum, if injected in human veins, especially children of tender years, absolutely assures immunity from tuberculosis in any form.

Prof. Calmette emphasized that the serum had no curative powers. Medical circles here hail the discovery as the greatest in the history of the anti-tuberculosis fight.

Extension of Executive clemency to offenders against the war-time laws, now serving prison sentences, would receive early consideration at the hands of President Harding, it was said at the White House.

The subject was discussed at the Cabinet meeting, and it was understood that a policy of leniency toward these offenders, where possible, was approved generally.

The President has asked Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty for a digest of each case, and the latter expects to have the histories of the war law prisoners completed within two weeks.

Alleged effort of eighteen New York patrolmen to buy Sergeancies in the police force through a saloon keeper, who professed to be able to bring about their promotion, was testified to by Patrolman Jos. Toomey, at a hearing before David Hirschfield, Commissioner of Accounts.

Patrolman Toomey said he collected $26,500 from the eighteen men, which he turned over last August to a saloon keeper, Michael J. Burke, who, he said, had disappeared and was believed to have gone to Ireland.

A pledge to refuse to assist in future wars has been taken jointly by Mrs. Julia McCudden, British War Mother delegate at the burial of America's unknown soldier, and Mrs. R. Earnest, Digney, of White Plains, N. Y., official American War Mother.

This became known at a luncheon tendered to Mrs. McCudden by the New York State Chapter of American War Mothers.

Lieutenant Kersley, British army aide to Mrs. McCudden, said the pledge was taken in Philadelphia recently when, with clasped hands, they repeated the following:

"I pledge with all my heart and soul that so long as I live I never will raise my hand again to assist any armed conflict between nations."

British Mothers, Lieutenant Kersley said, have started a movement to pair off with American Mothers as Mrs. McCudden did with Mrs. Digney.

Two bombs were exploded in a Belfast (Ireland) tramcar full of shipyard workers last week, killing three of the occupants and injuring eighteen others.

Shortly after the attack two more bombs were thrown into a crowd watching a fire in Newtownards road and twelve additional persons were injured.

The deaths of the three persons inside the tramcar were due to gas fumes. The total number of deaths during the disorders is nine.

Thomas Proctor, who gave his bed to President Lincoln the night he was shot by Wilkes Booth, ate Thanksgiving dinner this year in St. Andrew's Brotherhood Home, at Gibsonia, Penn., after having passed the last six months as a ward in the City Home on Blackwell's Island, New York.

Arrangements for the transfer of Mr. Proctor, who is over 80 years old, were made by Chaplain Sidney N. Usher, representing the Episcopal City Mission Society. Mr. Proctor, with Robert Todd Lincoln, son of the martyred President, are the only living survivors of the small group of persons who were present when the great liberator died.

In his new home the aged attorney will be permitted to enjoy many comforts of which he has been deprived for the last twenty-five years.

Unless the desire for economy works to their disadvantage, leaders in Congress are prepared to introduce an omnibus bill early after Congress reconvenes, appropriating $70,000,000 for the construction of new postoffices, sites and improvements and extensions in many cities. The leaders feel that if the bill were passed promptly, that construction can begin this winter and aid in the relief of unemployment; that most of the construction is necessary to the proper operation of the Postoffice Department; that the appropriation will help ameliorate dissatisfaction with Congress.

The Illinois Commerce Commission has issued an order reducing street car fares in Chicago from eight cents to five cents, effective last Friday. The order asserted that a return of six per cent on the fair value of the property was a just return on the investment, and ordered that a re-valuation of the lines be made and submitted to the commission.

The matter has been taken to the court, and is to be heard on its merits Dec. 2. In the meantime the Commerce Commission is restrained from enforcing the order.

A radio system designed to give information to aviators of weather conditions along their routes of flight has been approved by the Army Air Service and soon will be extended over the entire continent. Actual construction has begun at Mitchell Field, Long Island; Langley Field, Virginia; Moundsville, West Virginia, and the Wilbur Wright Field, at Fairfield, Ohio.

Crown Prince Hirohito has been designated to be Regent of Japan. An imperial rescript making the announcement was issued by Emperor Yoshihito. It said:

"We are unable to attend in person to the affairs of state, on account of protracted illness, and accordingly appoint Crown Prince Hirohito to be Regent, with the approval of the Council of Princes, the Imperial family and the Privy Councilors."

King George of Great Britain has announced the engagement of Princess Mary to Viscount Henry George Charles Lascelles.

Princess Mary is the third child of King George and Queen Mary. She is twenty-three years old.

In disturbances at Bombay, India, coincident with the visit of the Prince of Wales, the total casualties, according to Reuter's correspondent in that city, were thirty-six killed, including two Europeans, and one hundred and fifty sent to hospitals suffering from injuries.

The situation is becoming normal, the correspondent adds.

America may take the lead among nations associated with her in the World War in freeing those convicted of wartime offenses, if the program of leniency being considered by President Harding is adopted, it was announced from Washington.

Investigation of the steps taken in this direction by foreign nations made by representatives of this country abroad was said by officials to have disclosed that prison doors still are closed upon violators of war laws of all other governments.

Foreign governments, officials said, have treated the question of war-law offenders in two ways. Where individuals were arrested and held upon suspicion of disloyalty or intrigue, but were not convicted before the end of the war, allied nations have given them their freedom, but those sentenced for such offenses still are held in prison.

Warning that a reopening of the question of Government ownership of railroads would result from congressional action limiting the rate-making power of the Interstate Commerce Commission was given to the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission last week by S. Davies Warfield, President of the National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities.

Mr. Warfield, discussing pending bills to modify the commission's control over state rates, asserted that adoption of the proposed changes would mean that the Government served notice it was not endeavoring to provide a "reasonable" return for carriers on their investments.

The natural consequence of such a notification, he added, would be that transportation lines no longer could obtain adequate financial backing and would face abandonment of private rail operations.

HOME AND FARM

THE CRANBERRY.

Early Colonial settlers on the New England coast welcomed the cranberry which they found growing wild. History tells that the Indians also taught our forefathers that this humble little fruit, with its delightful tart flavor, was very necessary for their physical well-being during the fall, winter and early spring months.

The first cultivation of this red berry began around Cape Cod, and today Massachusetts is still the state that produces the largest quantity of berries. The acid content of this fruit is very acceptable to the body.

First, to provide various mineral salts and organic acids that purify the blood stream and help eliminate the poisonous waste.

Second, to act as an anti-scorbutic.

Third, to lessen the acid content of the blood stream and other bodily secretions.

Fourth, to stimulate the appetite and improve digestion.

How to use Cranberries.—Cranberry cocktail and cranberry ade are delicious beverages, and should be served many times during the fall, winter and early spring. If you are giving a luncheon, serve cranberry cocktail or julep, and note how very agreeably surprised your guests will be and how very anxious to find out your recipe.

* * *

Cranberry Cocktail.—Wash two pounds of cranberries, and place in a preserving kettle. Add three cups of cold water. Heat slowly to the boiling point and then cook very slowly until the berries are soft. Turn into jelly bag and strain the mixture. Measure this juice and add: Tiny pinch of salt, four tablespoons of sugar to each cup of the juice. Heat to the boiling point and then cook for three minutes. Let cool, then pour in pitcher and place in ice box to chill. Fill into cocktail glasses and serve at the beginning of the meal.

* * *

Cranberry Julep.—To serve this old-fashioned Southern beverage, beat the white of one egg slightly and then brush the outside of the edge of a tall, thin tumbler with the beaten egg, just about half an inch deep. Roll the edge of glass in powdered sugar and allow to dry. This frosting of the edge gives the glass a very pretty appearance. Now place in glass, one-half cup of cranberry cocktail, one tablespoon of sugar, a little cracked ice. Fill with carbonated water and add a sprig of fresh mint leaves.

Cranberry Ade.—Use two parts of water to one part cranberry cocktail mixture, adding, one-half cup of sugar, one banana, sliced thin, one orange, cut in bits. Serve in thin glasses and add a little crushed ice.

Have you a cold or do you feel chilly? Then try this old Indian cranberry tea. It is a fine stimulant when you are fatigued or low-spirited.

Two cups of cranberry cocktail mixture, one-half cup of sugar, one-quarter teaspoon of powdered ginger, pinch of allspice.

Add two cups of boiling water and a handful of mint leaves chopped fine. Cover the pitcher with a cloth for a few minutes and then drink. This can be given with safety to small children.

Now to utilize the pulp left in the jelly bag, rub this through a fine sieve and remove the skins. Measure and place in preserving kettle and add one package of seedless raisins, two-thirds cup of sugar to every cup of prepared cranberry pulp, one and one-half cup of finely chopped nuts.

Stir to blend and then let heat very slowly and cook slowly until thick like jam. Fill into sterilized glasses, sealing in the usual manner as for jellies. Store in a cool place. Use on cold meat, with boiled beef, for cold boiled ham.

The prudent housewife will bottle as many bottles of cranberry juices as she possibly can to utilize for summer beverages.

To Prepare Cranberry Juice.—Wash the berries and cover with cold water. Heat slowly to the boiling point and mash well with potato masher. Mash very fine, so as to extract all the flavoring from berries. Cook until very soft and remove from stove and let cool. Now beat hard to break up in fine pulp and filter as for jelly. Fill into sterilized bottles and stand bottles in preserving kettle. Fill kettle with water to neck of bottles and boil for twenty minutes. Seal securely and when cold dip tops of bottles in melted paraffin.

Tomato Fritters.—Cut medium-sized tomatoes in slices one inch thick. Now prepare a batter as follows: Place in a bowl, one cup of flour, two-thirds cup of water, one tablespoon of shortening, one-half teaspoon of salt, one egg, two tablespoons of grated onion.

Beat to a smooth mixture, then dip in the slices of tomato and fry until golden brown in smoking hot fat. Lift, drain and serve with cheese sauce.

Vegetable Jardiniere.—Mince fine two ounces of salt pork, then place in a stewing pan and cook very slowly to a delicate brown. Now add: one cup of chopped onions, two red peppers chopped fine, one and one-half cups of string beans cut in inch pieces, one and one-half cups of diced carrots, one cup of diced young turnips, one cup of young lima beans.

Add one and one-half cups of water and then cook very slowly until the vegetables are tender. Then add sauce as prepared for lima beans, Indian style, and serve. Use this jardiniere, omitting the peppers, for young children.

Continental Potatoes.—Wash, pare and slice very thin five medium-sized potatoes and then rub a baking dish with bacon fat or other good shortening. Now place the potatoes in the dish. Rub two cups of stewed tomatoes through a sieve and add: one-half cup of chopped onions, one teaspoon of salt, one-half teaspoon of pepper, four tablespoons of bacon fat.

Turn over the potatoes, making smooth on the top, and sprinkle thickly with bread crumbs and then with grated cheese. Bake in moderate oven for one-half hour.

BUYING TOYS AND GAMES FOR CHILDREN.

BY MAUD BURNHAM.

A certain little boy was given an electric train and his whole family would gather around to watch it operate. Very shortly they found reason to wonder why their pampered child ignored the expensive train and preferred to play with the boy next door, whose train was made from cigar boxes and the broken parts of toys contributed by his playmates.

An old toymaker once said, "Children sometimes get the toys they want, but many times those their parents want them to want."

In buying a toy one does well to study the child's point of view and then to make a selection which will be helpful to his development. Toy manufacturers of today recognize the educational possibilities of the toy and produce many playthings that promote the physical and mental development of children. The coaster cart, Kid-die car, Erector and Anchor Architectural Blocks serve as illustrations.

The possibilities of certain old and familiar toys and games should not be overlooked. The domino is easily forgotten, but offers valuable aid in number work. The well-known nest of picture blocks, is also excellent, and a box of toy money is a real source of education.

If one acquaints himself with the educational toys of the kindergarten, he will learn at once the benefit and pleasure to be derived from their use.

For outdoor play, the problem of toys is not difficult to solve, since Nature's garden produces much for a child's needs.

Before school days, parents alone are responsible for their children's development. From that time on teacher and parents take up the problem together. Why not give the teacher all the help possible by providing our children with suggestive toys and games which will supplement the school work and develop initiative?

There are many interesting educational games on spelling, arithmetic, history, and literature adapted to children of different ages. The well-known game of Authors is excellent for older children, since it familiarizes them with the best literature. Stamp collecting also is fascinating, and teaches both geography and history.

Today, educational play is organized not only in our public schools, but on the summer playground. It is the parent's privilege to direct play in the home through the intelligent selection of toys.—Ex.

FOR CHRISTMAS.

The kind of things that are usually put on conspicuous tables in the shops the last week before Christmas, as suggestions to the late Christmas shopper, are just the kind of things that it is wise to avoid in selecting your Christmas presents for those of your friends who receive many gifts. And that is the advantage of early bird Christmas shopping; you have time to think of something unusual, and you don't have to fall back on the usual box of handkerchiefs, sewing basket or telephone address book with a French brocade cover that occurs to you as a last-minute purchase.

It is rather a clever idea to give something extremely useful for Christmas, and very few people would possibly take offense from such a gift nowadays. If you happen to have a little farm tucked off somewhere in the country, or an orange grove in Florida or a prune ranch in California, you can perhaps send your friends such things as a crate of oranges, some very choice dried prunes, some hams or bacon where they have been cured on your own farm.

Home-made pickles or preserves make excellent Christmas gifts, though they are sometimes difficult to send, because they break so easily and are so heavy.

Often at this time of year, when no special effort is made to attract Christmas shoppers, you will see things that will really be quite suitable and reasonable Christmas presents that will not be shown later on. For merchants move along pretty much in a traditional rut as far as Christmas gifts are concerned. It would take considerable temerity for a department store manager to spread a table at Christmas time with an array of egg beaters and double boilers and butter curlers that might, as a matter of fact, prove more acceptable than the bottles of perfume and sachet bags that they do display.

WIFE OR MOTHER?

BY LILLIE STAHL.

"He was an only son, and his mother was a widow."

I receive occasional letters from strangers, and some of them unfold tales of woe. I am not a judge on the bench and I feel unequal to pass judgment or proffer advice. The only thing I can do is to put myself in her place, realizing that every question has two sides. This plaint comes from a mother-in-law and it verifies the old saying that "daughter-in-laws and mother-in-laws are natural enemies." Here I am in receipt of but one side of the story, and dare not be biased in my judgment. If the mother in question tells a truthful tale, it is a case of pure cussedness. The old-time verse will apply here, where it reads:

"A daughter's a daughter to the end of her life,

But a son's a son till he gets him a wife."

One time we discussed in a Woman's Club the question as to "which should take precedence in a man's affections, his mother or his wife." Mothers were "lined up" like fighting soldiers on one side and young wives on the other side. We grew heated and "made the sparks fly." No definite conclusion was reached. It was the old maxim verified about a "man convinced against his will," etc. If I were to go down to the root of the matter I would say that it is a bit of jealousy on the part of wives and mothers. As mothers we always have on our fighting spurs, and feel that no man or woman is good enough for our son or daughter. It is a sort of fierce mother-love, like a she-lion or eagle defending her young. We must be willing to make concessions, and divide the love of our child between wife and mother, and the "contestants" must not be too eager to enter into the domestic fray.

If the woman in question and her son's wife would give a little more attention to their Bibles and read the story of Naomi and her daughter-in-law, they might grow tranquil. Listen to the mother's letter:

"Dear Madam: I have discovered that my son's wife does not like me, and I see a tempest ahead of us. I am not an old woman, and may live many years, and if we could avoid 'breakers' ahead, it would be so much cheaper to live together. It is expensive to conduct two households because of high prices, such as coal, gas, electric and foods. I have tried to please Sarah and adapt myself, but she will not be 'adapted.' Henry's wife is insanely jealous. We went down to the postoffice together and soon returned to find ourselves locked out—and I own the home! She knows that my son and I don't like greasy foods, and she has the meal just swimming in grease, and then growls and says we are hard to please. The doctor does not want us to eat too much warm bread, and Sarah manages to feed all the stale bread to the hens, just for contrastiveness!

"She does not allow me to kiss the baby, though his dear dimples are tempting. I am living with Henry, and we often clasp hands and kiss on the veranda when he goes to his work on the night 'shift'; when I stood there she slammed the door in my face, and it was my door too! Sarah likes to cut a dash, and will say: 'My house, my rugs, my piano, my automobile, and my solid silver.' The girl was a peniless orphan when she came, and served years as dishwasher in a restaurant. Henry's wife had the toothache, so he and I went tonight to church together, and when we returned the house was dark and locked. We called, pounded and thumped around, and she pretended to not hear. My son had to go to the shop for a chisel, and pried open a window, and so we entered the house. Fortunately our means are mine. I surmise that Henry's father had a foreboding, and left all to me during my life time; so I have my grip on the whip handle. It would be just like Sarah to report me to court as an imbecile, so she could be appointed my guardian and handle the sheckels."

The Bible and the Body

By ROWLAND V. BINGHAM

Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas in the introduction writes: When I read them in The Evangelical Christian, I was greatly interested and helped because of their thorough loyalty to Scripture, their large-hearted sympathy, and their careful adherence to simple facts. These features will insure for them a welcome from all who desire to know the truth.

WIT AND WISDOM

Mrs. Brown: "There is not a boy in this town who is as clever as our Tom."
 Mrs. Black: "How is that?"
 Mrs. Brown: "Look at these two chairs. Tom made them out of his own head, and he has enough wood left to make an armchair."

"No, I shall marry only a brave man," said the maiden firmly.
 "But you must admit that it takes bravery for me to propose to such a beautiful and talented girl," countered the suitor.
 So they lived happily, etc.

Outbid.—The clergyman's eloquence may have been at fault, still he felt annoyed to find that an old gentleman fell asleep during the sermon on two consecutive Sundays. So, after service on the second week, he told the boy who accompanied the sleeper that he wished to speak to him in the vestry.
 "My boy," said the minister, when they were closeted together, "who is that elderly gentleman you attend church with?"
 "Grandpa," was the reply.
 "Well," said the clergyman, "if you will only keep him awake during my sermon, I'll give you a nickel each week."
 The boy fell in with the arrangement, and for the next two weeks the old gentleman listened attentively to the sermon. The third week, however, found him soundly asleep.
 The vexed clergyman sent for the boy and said: "I am very angry with you. Your grandpa was asleep again today. Didn't I promise you a nickel a week to keep him awake?"
 "Yes," replied the boy, "but grandpa now gives me a dime not to disturb him."

"Man died from wife's cooking," read Mr. Jenkins, cynically, glancing at the headlines. "Another woman who never learned to cook, I suppose."
 "Or else," retorted Mrs. Jenkins, meaningly, "another man who never learned when to stop eating."

A dog's bark is worse than his bite, but, unfortunately, a mosquito doesn't bark.

POSSESSING OUR POSSESSIONS.

Christian people do not always live up to their privileges. If they have become Christians by believing in Jesus Christ and accepting him as their Savior, and there is no other way of becoming Christians, they have come into covenant with God and into possession of innumerable and immeasurable blessings. The question is as to whether they will possess these possessions, or live on in a vague and unblest experience.

There is a story of an Indian who was living in poverty and distress, appealing for help to a white missionary. The Indian was wearing as a sort of amulet or charm a little package, which, upon being examined, proved to be a title from the Government to a large and fine tract of land. He was rich without knowing it, and without getting any benefit from his richness. When he was advised and helped by the missionary to realize on his grant, he came to possess his possessions, and got comfort out of what he owned.

The Prophet Obadiah speaks of a time coming when the house of Jacob shall "possess their possessions." Happy are all those who, in a spiritual sense, come into a full realization of what their rights and privileges are as the children of God. If we are children of God we are children of God. If so we are heirs. If so all things are ours, since we are Christ's and Christ is God's. He, who spared not his own son, will freely with him give all things that are needed to those who have accepted him. What Christians should do is to simply possess their possessions.

A very sweet-hearted and clear-minded evangelist used to say to Christian people: "My dear friends, always remember to be what you are and to possess what is yours." There is an immense amount of satisfaction in living up to that counsel. It is in line with the invitations and counsel of God.

Let the Christian remember that he is in possession of the divine pardon. God for Christ's sake has forgiven him. He has removed his guilt from him as far as the East is from the West. He has cast his sins behind his back, and drowned them in the depth of the sea. The wounded hand of Christ has erased all the record of guilt, and it is gone forever. Let the fear and anxiety be lost out of the heart and soul.

The Christian is in possession of peace. It is the peace of God. He is at peace with God and with his own conscience. He is saved, and saved forever, because he believes in Jesus Christ as he has been invited to do. Let him never say that he believes in Christ, but can not realize that he is saved. This would be like one receiving a deed to a home and, after having the deed recorded, saying that he can not realize that it is his. Let him move into it, and live in it, and he will realize it. So it is for the Christian to take the peace of God into his heart and go on living in peace and faith and prayer and gladness.

Some people do not get the good out of their relationship with God because they do not put to its actual use that which God has given to them. A young man had completed a college course and had prepared himself for teaching. But he felt timid, and doubted his ability, and said he was afraid that he was not sufficiently prepared. But he was urged to go on with the work in a place that had opened for his occupancy. He soon found that he was able to do the work. He had resources of information to draw on as he took hold of his duties, and he continued to grow as a teacher all through life. So it is in Christian service. Many Christians have the power to be very greatly useful if they will only go on to serve God and depend on him for his grace and strength to help them in their every hour and place of need.

How happy all Christians might be if they only were bent on enjoying and using the riches that God puts in their possession, instead of lamenting their lack of other things that are of no real value after all. Every Christian may be overflowing rich in the love and presence and comfort and grace and strength of God, and he is thus rich, if he will only realize his real riches and possess his possessions. It is not necessary to have earthly riches and honors and powers. One may do very well without these things, but if he is not rich toward God, he is poor indeed.

If one is the son of a good mother, or the husband of a good wife, in a good home, let him be what he is, and let his life be full of domestic joy. If he is a citizen of a good country, let him be what he is, and let his life be safe and happy. If one is a Christian let him be what he is and, possessing his possessions, he will be rich in spiritual peace and joy, for time and for eternity.

MODERN PANTHEISM.

We have been re-reading several books by advocates of the New Theology, all apologetic, and we must add somewhat deceptive. Words of established definition are given new meaning.

Emphasis is laid on the doctrine of God's oneness in such a way as to exclude his personality. God's immanence is made to mean his identity with nature, and this is simply pantheism.

The "New Theology" is essentially pantheistic. When its exponents say, "God is not thought of apart from the universe," they plant themselves on the pantheistic foundation and abandon the Scripture doctrine that God is thought of and known in his Word and by his Son. When they say God is "the immanent law" of the universe they adapt monistic phraseology as against the Scripture doctrine that God is the Lord and the law-maker, and that he himself is immanent in nature, as well as over and above it.

When they say that "with the nature and attributes of the Absolute, Christianity has nothing to do," then ignore the Word of God and announce one of the Hindoo pantheistic platitudes of two thousand years ago.

Their statement is simply a weak echo of the Yoga conception of the universal ego, "devoid of all those phenomena by which alone existence can manifest itself." They certainly deny the true Christian doctrine which does have to do with God's justice, mercy, love and other attributes. When they ignore creation and say that "man is at once a product of causes and a creator of values," they are very near the phraseology of the Vaiseshika school, which finds the origin of man and all else not in "a quiescent and useless God," but in "Adrishta," or the accumulated merit and demerit of all past stages of existence.

When they say that they "accept development as the law of the physical universe," and that "the contrast between natural and supernatural disappears," and that "all life is of a piece," and that "sin is the survival of the animal in man," and that "salvation is a process, going on through all the ages and rooted as sin itself is in the nature of man," they deny the Scripture doctrine of creation, and of the fall, of Christ's atonement, and of salvation by faith. Men who use such phrases are on the toboggan slide, and may go into pure Pantheism or be shunted off into idealism or agnosticism or into the very abyss of atheism or of nihilism.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

For a great many years the first full week of each new year has been observed by the evangelical churches as a Week of Prayer for the blessing of God upon the work being done to bring about the conversion of the world.

Great and good results have followed this general concerted prayer. The last seventy years have been a time for great forward movements in the evangelistic and missionary work of the Church. It has been a period of great religious activity. Revivals have abounded. Great evangelistic efforts have been put forth, and the churches have made great bounds in their onward progress.

If the question is asked whether the prayers made for the conversion of the world have been answered, it may be readily said that these prayers have had abundant answers. The condition of the world as to missions is greatly different from what it was seventy years ago. Encouraging conditions are readily found in every country in the world. There has been a great advance in the number of missionaries, converts, mission stations and churches, schools, colleges, hospitals, and printing presses, and in the general interest in this work everywhere, and in the recognition given to it by increasing multitudes in all lands, at home and abroad.

We are asked to continue in our prayers. In order that we may have unity and aim and purpose in these prayers, the Evangelical Alliance has sent out topics again this year, and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ has agreed to them, and they are given to the people and pastors of the churches for general use. The subjects embrace the topics usually considered, and embrace the field of all the agencies employed for aggressive Christian work.

They best observe the Week of Prayer who make the whole year a round of prayer, every week and every day being an opportunity to come boldly to the Throne of Grace, to ask mercy and to find grace. There are many such praying people. That they may have unity in their prayers for a time this week is designated and these topics have been suggested, but it is to be hoped that God's people may be instant in prayer through all the year.

The suggested topics may be found on another page. Many churches still observe this week with nightly services, and in many cases encouraging revivals have followed the faithful and fervent use of the means of grace during the Week of Prayer.

REPREHENSIBLE METHODS.

Without doubt the Roman Catholics are trying to get the public ear for their advantage, and prevent the people from reading what is to the disadvantage of Romanism. This effort is being made through the newspapers and the public libraries in a way that calls for the careful attention of all intelligent and fair-minded citizens.

Persistent efforts are being made to introduce books that are favorable to Romanism into the public libraries, and to have excluded from their shelves any book that speaks the plain truth as to the errors and evils and dangers of this Church, either for the past or for the present. Bitter and implacable opposition toward any book that is hostile to Romanism is manifest in their course as to every library in the country, and it is their purpose to keep the coming generation from knowing the facts.

A body of men are offering prizes for historical papers and books, on periods and places and phases of our United States life and history, with the purpose of ignoring Protestantism and lauding Romanism, and of publishing and advertising and circulating the ones that they regard as favorable to their side, with the intention of reversing history, and making succeeding generations regard them favorably, or as they say: "Taking the hiss out of history." It is through schemes like this that wrong information is secured and disseminated.

But the same thing is manifest very largely in the daily newspapers in many of which Protestant causes have very little show, while Romanism is kept prominently pushed before the public eye. Far out of any rightful proportion the men and enterprises and occurrences of the Roman Catholic body are made prominent in some papers that have very little to say about the work of the Protestant churches, and yet depend for patronage upon Protestants, or non-Roman Catholic readers.

Recently a number of Roman Catholic business men paid for the publication of a series of advertisements in Pittsburgh daily papers in behalf of their faith. Professor David S. Schaff, D.D., a Presbyterian, prepared a counter advertisement and presented it to the same papers, offering to pay for it at regular rates. After accepting the matter, one paper broke its contract; another paper refused it at once. There was nothing offensive to fairness or good taste in Prof. Schaff's article. It merely presented the position of Protestantism, against which the Roman Catholic advertisement had been subtly directed. In common honesty, those two papers ought to explain why Roman Catholic propaganda is legitimate advertising and why Protestant defense of truth is libel.

To a far larger degree than most persons know or think, the world has been, and is being, agitated by the ambitious schemes of Roman ecclesiastics. Inquisitional methods for the destruction of Protestantism in Serbia were directly responsible for the tragedy which brought on the great world war; and Rome is directly back of the turmoil and bloodshed in Ireland in a determination to weaken Protestant Great Britain and break down its power and influence in the world.

An unpleasant story comes from Farley, Iowa, that makes one wonder how arbitrary and destructive Rome would be toward the whole public school system of our country if it had the power. The report is that at Farley the village school house burned down, and the voters of the village, Catholic by a large majority, have four times voted down the bond issue which is necessary for rebuilding. The Catholics have their own parochial school and are not willing for the Protestant children to have a public school to attend. Such a position of opposition to one of the institutions of America is not to be passed by without measures to overcome it. Let it be widely known. Such a course is not a wise one for these Catholic people to take. If they do not pay any attention to what is said by us, and others like us, their own friends ought to be in haste to tell them that this is not the way to work for the advantage of Romanism in America.

PRACTICAL RELIEF.

Dr. E. W. Huelster, Ohio Director of the Near East Relief, has advised that six thousand acres of farming land in the region of Thrace have been rented from the Greek Government by the Near East Relief, to be used principally as a homeland for one thousand destitute Armenian refugees, dependent on the resources of the American charity. American money has provided the land, the American flag flies over it, and American machinery is to till it. The soil is expected to yield fifteen bushels of grain per acre, to one of seed, and it will take but one season to pay back with interest all that has been invested in it.

The Government of Armenia has gone the Greek Government one better and granted the Near East Relief, free of all rental, 17,600 acres of land for the establishment of a similar enterprise in Transcaucasian Russia.

The Armament Conference in Washington seems, day by day, to be bringing about more friendly relations between the great nations that are there in mutual consultation. It is just as easy for great nations to live at peace among themselves, as for villages or families or individuals, if they only have a mutual understanding, and rules for the settlement of difficulties. War is too terrible a thing to be engaged in by intelligent people, and the intelligent and conscientious people of the world are demanding of their governments that measures shall be taken promptly to put an end to it, on land and on sea.

Christmas is the anniversary on which we talk of peace and good-will. This Christmas should be marked by such agreements among the great nations of the world as shall make certain the banishment of war from the borders of our modern civilization.

The prophet spoke well and wisely when he spoke of nations "learning war" no more. If the implements of war are manufactured, and soldiers are drilled to use them, they are learning war, and feel that they are of little use unless engaging in war. Let there be a vacation in making ships and guns, and in learning war, and there will be a greater likelihood for peace.

A modern battleship costs $43,000,000. That means an endowment of $1,000,000 for forty-three colleges; or it means 8,600 houses worth $5,000 apiece. It would seem to be for the better welfare of the race to build homes and endow colleges.

The Anti-Saloon workers of the United States held a most important meeting in Washington City last week, for the purpose of consultation as to the most effective measures to be taken to stimulate law enforcement. This is the great need for the day. Progress is being made, but it is against all the force that depraved appetites and avaricious and dishonest profiteers and criminals can wield. The whole body of good citizens need simply to be steady and strong and unyielding for righteousness, and as the crime wave recedes there will be better conditions.

All honor to such foreign visitors as General Foch and General Diaz, who are respecting the prohibitory laws of our country, and who show their respect for our nation by leaving wines and liquors alone, while here, because of our laws. Such men are gentlemen and constructive statesmen. They know that there can be no national stability where law is not respected and obeyed. They know that international, world-wide relations can be stable only when entered into by those who have good faith and respect for covenants and law in their souls. The possession of this honorable spirit by these foreign delegates is the sign and seal of honor and good-will that can be depended on.

We read about "little foxes that spoil the vines," and we often hear coughs at church that spoil the sermon. It is very largely an expression of thoughtlessness. It is not necessary to burst out in a fit of coughing and drown out the voice of the speaker, thus destroying the effect of his effort to make himself heard. Dr. Billy Sunday positively forbids such actions. He directs and urges people to "cough silently in your hand." "You can do it if you will" he says, and he is right. It is all out of place to interrupt a sermon or a lecture by an unnecessary outburst.

Some whisky papers that fought prohibition to keep it from coming, are now fighting it to make it go away. The propaganda they are now carrying on would be frightful if it were not so ridiculous, and pathetic if it were not so criminal. They say that prohibition never can be enforced; that more liquor is used now than before prohibition; that there are a million private stills in operation; that nine million gallons of liquor are being imported every month, or 108,000,000 a year, which would be a gallon apiece for every man and woman and child in the nation. Yet in their news columns they tell of prohibition being enforced on every hand; of criminals being arrested and fined and imprisoned; and of steady progress made in defeating this anarchy. If these publishers would give up this propaganda, and act as decent and law-abiding citizens, its enforcement would be all the more sure and efficient.

Who wants war? Only such people as the Hohenzollern Kaisers. Happily these are out of commission just now, and they and their kind should be permanently kept out of commission.

THE WAY OF PEACE.

BY MARGARET ALLISON MCLEOD.

O God of nations, hear the prayer
Thy children ask the world to share!
Nations, ashamed of war and strife,
Are searching for the way of life,
And, sending men across the sea,
Seek where "The Way of Peace" may be.

They have left homes of want and woe,
Where youthful warriors slain lie low,
Where widows weep and orphans cry,
And maidens in their beauty die;
From war-worn countries now they come
To plead with thee in freedom's home.

In days of old thou ledst the way
With fire by night and cloud by day.
Now, Lord, forgive the bitter strife,
The cruel disregard of life,
And teach them all how wars shall cease
When Christ shall reign

"The Prince of Peace."

KNEE-RELIGION.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

Dr. A. L. Banks relates the story of a veteran missionary who, on returning to China after a long absence from the field, received on the very day of his return a visit from a former convert. The Chinese Christian brought with him six countrymen who had been led to Christ out of the horrible filth and degradation of the opium habit. "What remedy did you use?" asked the rejoicing missionary. The Chinaman's only answer was to point significantly to his knees!

He had prayed for them; he had induced them to pray for themselves; and when one of these men came to him saying in despairing tones, that he had prayed, but it had done him no good, this man of faith sent him back to his knees. "Pray again," he said. And when he came the second time he sent him back to his knees; and so when he came the third time and many more times. And, as a result, here these six men were, clean and sound in body and mind, the cruel chains broken, and the new songs of praise to God upon their lips. Is it not true today that we may "come boldly to the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy and find grace to help in time of need." (Heb. 4: 16.)

Yes, we need more knee-religion. For, for one thing, the religion of the knees means humility. The word humility has in it the idea of leveling ourselves to the earth in recognition of our utter unworthiness of the blessings we seek at the hand of God. The Latin word humus from which the word humility is derived means the earth, the ground, the soil. We make no boasts of our deserts. We empty ourselves of any claim to heaven's favor. This is the attitude of mind and heart in which to expect largest blessings.

For another thing the religion of the knees means absolute trust in the mercy of God in Christ. Often and often Jesus said to those who came to him in that spirit: "Thy faith hath saved thee. Go in peace." For such God is ready to work miracles even now.

Let me tell here the story of the sinking of the well as related in the autobiography of Rev. John G. Paton, the missionary hero of the New Hebrides islands. The natives did not believe that water could be obtained by digging down through the coral rock. Mr. Paton decided to prove to them the existence and power of God given in answer to prayer, in the meantime earnestly praying for the success of his experiment.

One morning the old chief said:

"O Missi! Wait till the rain comes down, and we save all we possibly can for you."

Mr. Paton replied: "We may all die for lack of water. If no fresh water can be got, we may be forced to leave you."

The old chief looked imploringly and said:

"O Missi! you must not leave us for that. Rain comes only from above. How could you expect our island to send up showers of rain from below?"

Mr. Paton's reply was: "Fresh water does come up springing from the earth in my home land, and I hope to see it here a so."

The old chief grew more tender in his tones and cried:

"O Missi, your head is going wrong; you are losing something, or you would not talk wild like that! Don't let our people hear you talking about going down into the earth for rain, or they will never listen to your word or believe you again."

But the intrepid missionary started on the hazardous job with no one to help him, till he reached a depth of about thirty feet. One morning at daybreak he sank a narrow hole in the center about two feet. The water rushed up and began to fill the hole. It was fresh, living water from Jehovah's well and the missionary was overjoyed. The old chief tasted it, and rolling it in his mouth with joy for a moment, he swallowed it and shouted:

"Rain, rain! Yes, it is rain! But how did you get it?"

He repeated, "Jehovah my God gave it out of his own earth in answer to our labors and prayers. Go and see it springing up for yourselves!"

The sinking of that well wrought a revolution, under God, among the inhabitants of Aniwa. The old chief said in an address to his people the following Sabbath:

"From this day, my people, I must worship the God who has opened for us the well and who fills us with rain from below. The gods of Aniwa can not hear us, can not help us, like the God of 'Missi.' Henceforth I am a follower of Jehovah God."

That very afternoon the old chief and several of his people brought their idols and cast them down at the missionary's feet beside the door of his house. Company after company came to the spot, loaded with their gods of wood and stone, and piled them up in heaps, amid the tears and sobs of some, and the shoutings of others, in which was heard the oft-repeated word, "Jehovah! Jehovah!"

Very true is it, as Mr. W. E. Doughty has said:

"There are hundreds of millions to which the Church has not yet carried the personal Christ. If these hundreds of millions are to sought and won, there must be veritable avalanches of power in Christ-possessed personalities sent out across Latin and Moslem and Pagan lands. We believe, theoretically at least, in the adequacy of the Gospel to meet modern social conditions, yet the three great social sins over all our world still cry unto God, "the blood of my brother Abel crieth"—the sin of slaughter. The sin of Sodom and Gomorrah crieth—the unrestrained, unconquered passions of men. The cry of the reaper defrauded of his wages and his rights still comes up before God—the sin of economic injustice. The Church must get strength to cope with these forces which are struggling for mastery in our modern world. If, on the one hand, "the Church" as one expressed it, "is to know what is going on in the tin can back in my alley, and, on the other hand, if the Church is to win the whole world, we must find that path to power, that lonely road which leads into the hidden recesses of God."

SELF-POSSESSION.

BY REV. CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD, D.D.

Foreseeing coming confusions and conflicts in public and private history, the Savior taught his disciples that patience would be the secret of self-possession; in steadfast endurance they would win their souls: by faith and patience they would inherit the fulfillment of a promised salvation that embraced even the hairs of their heads.

The Old Testament teaching that we are built of dust supports the idea of our lowly origin and progressive development. In the divine scheme and up to that point of history when God inbreathed a living soul, the speck of dust may have passed through many processes and forms on its way to humanity. Such a scheme and such a history involved patience. There was need of the patience that waits hopefully while the seed, persisting through the plant and bowing to many a storm, brings forth its fruit.

The New Testament teaching that we may be built of spirit contains the same ideas of small beginning and great consummation, with attendant patience. The new man develops from a word of truth unto a whole volume of Christian life. He has a new birth, a new nature; he is a partaker of the divine nature; but he has in himself the remains of an old nature that must be outgrown, and about him the continual contradiction of a world that he is to leave. Like a caterpillar, he is on his way to a world of beautiful perfection through strange and humiliating changes. He must have patience with God, with history, with himself. It can not yet appear what he shall be, but he shall be it.

If we forget these things God does not. He never loses patience or fails to inculcate it. He never loses sight of his child while life perseveres on its way to maturity. God never fails to discriminate between our true selves and our false selves. His message to us while we wait for self-realization is, "Ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you." That which is born of the Spirit is forever spirit. God differentiates us from our false selves all the way up. We should share this divine view. It is only in faith of what we are that we can become what we should be. The Church of Christ is created, built and sustained by the words of eternal life. We believe in that Church through its period of imperfect immaturity. We hail its increasing maturity of love, made visible in good works. We have patience with it until it shall pay God all. How patiently Christ waits for that time when he shall see all things put under him. He will come as the lightning, for God will not keep his anger for ever, but he would fain come as the light. Through centuries of process he steadfastly endures contradiction. that he may win and possess slow souls. Events that contradict the love of God prove it; he suffers long, unwilling that any should perish.

Self-possession is very different from being possessed by self. It is in being wholly possessed by God. The reward of patient and developed faith is the possession of the soul in God. What a blessed and peaceful poise amid life's storm! What a foothold upon the rock of ages! What an uplook for our approaching redemption! The trouble with Israel in the wilderness was impatience, literally "shortness of spirit." Our best ideals are as short of the ideal as our best productions are short of them, but Christ would give us breadth and length of spirit. As it was in the beginning so it shall be in the ending; man shall be in the image of God: there shall be a harmonious universe. You can not arrive at any perfections yet. Have patience!

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

In the weekly envelope of one of the members of the Church of the Divine Savior, El Paso, Tex., each week is found three silver dollars, which it has been discovered is the regular offering of a man whose weekly income is thirty dollars. This means that the Spanish-speaking neighbor of ours is giving one-tenth of his weekly income to the church and thus to the Lord's cause. I wonder if, after all, we may not be forced to turn to these people to learn the spirit of giving to the cause. This man has a family, but before he makes any provision for the family, he puts into the treasury what he feels belongs to God.

Word has just reached this office that the new Community Church, which is under Presbyterian auspices, at Weed, Calif., was dedicated Sabbath, Nov. 20. This is really a community church, and it has been built by the community, very largely. It is a lumber town, and the lumber people have become interested in it, and have made large contributions to it. The building committee sends out a bulletin which shows that the total cost of the building is $21,500, and all of it has been paid or subscribed except $1,100. This shows what can be done when a man gets the thing on his heart, as Rev. Anderson Crain got this on his heart, and then put it on the hearts of the people. The committee announces that the property will be dedicated free from debt, and the whole community will take a pride in the building and the work it is designed to do there, because the whole community has done something for it.

Mr. Crain is one of our missionaries, and he and his people will now be in a position to do more for themselves and require less from home mission funds. I feel sure that what has been done here by this minister and his people can be done in other places.

The death of Rev. R. W. Edwards, who was the field man in the Presbytery of Florida, leaves that synod, as it is now, without his guidance, but the synod at its initial meeting in Miami, in October, elected Rev. Dr. J. P. Calhoun superintendent, temporarily, and authorized the Committee on Home Missions, in co-operation with the Board of Home Missions, to select a permanent superintendent. The rule of the Board is to pay to the widow of missionaries who die in service one quarter's salary, and this has been paid to Mrs. Edwards, which leaves no means with which to pay a successor, but Dr. Calhoun is looking after the work as best he can without salary for the present.

Mr. Edwards was a man of great faith and did his work well, and was careful to look well to the needs of the field, and, when he went away, every field in the presbytery was filled except one. He believed in Florida and that there was a great future for our work in that state, and threw himself into it with an abandon which is worthy of imitation.

Such is the experience in this work. The workers die, but the work must go on, and, in the good providence of God, it does go on. In my last letter I referred to the death of Rev. Mr. Fait in Oklahoma, one of our best chairmen, and a man who was always ready to spend and be spent, if by so doing he could contribute to the upbuilding of the kingdom. He believed in the Indian, and, when he went away, the Indians in Oklahoma lost a good friend and faithful advocate of their interests; but other men will come after him on whom the Lord will lay his hand, and they will take his place, and so the work will go forward.

One of the encouraging signs of the times in the home mission enterprise is the fact that Dr. King, who has charge of the work of promotion, is overwhelmed with appeals to come into synods with teams to give the information, which these teams are giving on this great enterprise. As I have written, these teams have just completed an itinerary in Texas, and began, Nov. 27, in Oklahoma, and will finish that itinerary about the middle of December, and they are being called for by Arkansas, South Dakota, Missouri and other states, and Dr. King says he needs about ten men to help him put across his great program. He believes, and others agree with him, that the only way to get what is wanted from the Church, in the way of prayer, money and men, is to go right to the local church with the appeal which this cause makes to us as patriots and Christians. There never was a time when the cause appealed to the hearts of the people more than it does now, when, in our Capital, the world is in conference over peace. The only hope of the world is in those great truths for which the Church stands, and General Foch is right when he says that "we must fight on our knees as well as in the trenches." This is the time to make Christ regnant in the lives, homes and business in America, and the way to this is through the prayers and efforts of the Church in America, and ours must do its part in this enterprise.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

Hon. William Jennings Bryan's recent statement in New York that American colleges do not enough regard God and his Word, and that some of them are actually atheistic in their teaching, is resented and denied by Professor Hawkes, dean of Columbia University, and partially admitted by Chancellor Elmer E. Brown, of New York University.

Seven foreign bishops are in New York, participating in the annual meeting of the Foreign Mission Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The seven bishops come from virtually every part of the world. They are Bishop Edgar Blake, from Paris; Bishop John L. Nuelsen from Central Europe; Bishop Anton Bast from Copenhagen, the son of a fisherman, who became the first foreign-born bishop sent abroad; Bishop H. Lester Smith from India; Bishop William F. Oldham from South America; Bishop W. T. Thirkield from Mexico, and Bishop Herbert Welch of Japan and Korea. The bishops are part of the administrative system of the Board, which maintains in foreign lands 1,309 missionaries and upward of 16,500 native preachers, ministering to 500,000 converts to Christianity. Fifty languages are represented on the Board's missionary staff. Approximately $5,500,000 was spent in foreign mission work by the M. E. Church during the year. New churches, hospitals and schools were erected with funds from the Centenary Mission Expansions subscription. Dr. North, secretary of the Board, states that President Obregon is heartily co-operating with the missionaries in Mexico, and that the British Government is in sympathy with the work in India.

At the Central Presbyterian Church, Rev. Dr. Dwight W. Wylie, pastor, a triple quartet sing at each service, and there are violin and harp accompaniments, with the organ. Good music and good preaching, such as they have at the Central Church, make a happy combination.

Rev. Dr. John L. Clark, of the Bushwick Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, preaches into a megaphone connected with radio apparatus, which has a sending reach of three hundred miles. The apparatus does not interfere with the dignity of the service. Hereabouts a great many are installing receiving wireless telephones, and the children are expecting them as Christmas presents.

Dr. John H. Finley, chairman of the Russian Famine Relief Committee, is urging that the Government send to the sufferers its huge stock of surplus stores of textiles, food-stuffs, drugs, etc., which are in danger of deteriorating if kept and not used. Surely this would be a Good Samaritan act.

At the annual meeting of the New York Bible Society, last Sabbath evening, in the St. Nicholas Collegiate Reformed Church, Sir William Ramsey, the archaeologist, spoke on the "Authority of the Bible." Governor Miller, of New York, also spoke.

The annual luncheon of the New York Presbyterian Ministers' Association will be held at the Martha Washington Hotel, Monday next, Dec. 12. The speakers will be Rev. Dr. Wylie, of the Central Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Dr. John McDowell, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

WEEK OF PRAYER.

SABBATH TO SATURDAY, JAN. 1-7.

Topics suggested by the Evangelical Alliance and the Federal Council.

Sabbath, Jan. 1.—Topics and texts suggested for sermons or addresses.

1. From whom to learn. "Lord, teach us to pray" (Luke 11:1); 2. Co-operation. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 18:19); 3. Faith. "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them" (Mark 11:24); 4. Conditions of success. "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you" (John 15:7); 5. Persistence. "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint" (Luke 18:1). (Read Luke 11:5-13; Matt. 15:21-28); 6. Intercession. "All prayer and supplication for all the saints" (Eph. 5:18). "I exhort that intercessions be made for all men; for kings and for all that are in authority" (I Tim. 2:1,2).

Monday, Jan. 2.—Thanksgiving and Confession.

Thanksgiving, for the possibilities of prayer; for all who are serving Christ in all lands; for the opening of the world to the Gospel; for the desire for unity amongst the Churches; for signs of spiritual awakening and revival at home and abroad.

Confession, of the unworthiness which mars the lives of Christ's disciples, and the inadequacy of their service; of acquiescence in spiritual weakness and defeat; of conformity to the world, and love of money, or pleasure, or ease; of unbrotherliness amongst men and nations. (Psa. 145; Isa. 64; Matt. 24:3-14; Col. 1:9-23.)

Tuesday, Jan. 3.—The Church Universal.

Thanksgiving, for the abiding witness, in spite of much frailty, of the redeemed Church; for all whom, in our own day, the Lord is adding to the Church; for the noble army of martyrs.

Prayer, that our corporate sins and failures may be forgiven; that all who profess and call themselves Christians may have a transforming experience of God in Christ; that all preachers of the Gospel may be endued with power from on high; that the Bible may be given its rightful place as the authoritative and all-sufficient voice and Word of God; that to the Church there may be given a clear message to the age, with the spirit of power and love in making it known; that the influence of the Church in all matters social and political may be for the glory of Christ; that clearer light on the path toward fuller unity may be granted. (Isa. 55; Col. 1:14-23; Acts 2:37-47; Heb. 11:32, 12:3.)

Wednesday, Jan. 4.—Nations and Their Leaders.

Penitence, for all arrogance, covetousness, injustice or falsehood in international affairs; for all failure of Christian nations to realize the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man.

Prayer, for the time when there shall be war no more, and for the coming of the Kingdom and reign of Christ in all the affairs of men; that God will strengthen and guide all movements towards the fellowship of nations; that America may lead the way in the disarmament of the world; for nations where new conditions have arisen, particularly the new nations of Europe, India and China, and the Near and Middle East, that they may be delivered from all racial hatreds and class pride; that the hearts of nations that have been at war may be cleansed from the passion of revenge; that famine-stricken lands may again be blessed with plenty; that in the economic reconstruction of society the law of Christ may be fulfilled; for all employers and employes, and all labor movements and democracies of our day, that they may own Christ as Lord; that the press of the world may be used to establish truth and justice. (Psa. 24; Jonah 3; Acts 17:22-31; Rev. 21:1-7.)

Thursday, Jan. 5.—Foreign Missions.

Thanksgiving, for mass movements in India and West Africa, and for all who have turned to God in Christ; for the gifts of Christian people, and for the dedication of young life to missionary service.

Prayer, for all missionary boards of administration that they may combine courage with wisdom; for missionaries, that both by their life and doctrine they may let their light shine before men; that they may be preserved from danger, and may be helped to understand the spirit of the people amongst whom they labor; for all educational, medical and industrial missions, that in all things Christ may have the pre-eminence; for the Moslem world, and for all who have not yet come into the light of Jesus Christ; for all Bible societies and their agents; for increase of understanding of, and of spiritual sympathy with, the missionary movements in all Churches; for more officers of service, and for more indigenous preachers full of the Holy Ghost and of faith. (Jer. 10:1-16; Isa. 35; Luke 4:16-30; Acts 16:9-15.)

Friday, Jan. 6.—Christian Education and the Christian Home.

Prayer, for universities, colleges and schools, that all learning may be subservient to the will of God and be dedicated to his service; for all families, that they may be homes of pure love; for the increase of the practice of daily family worship; that the sacredness of marriage may be upheld; for young men and women facing the call of the new age, and all agencies seeking their moral and spiritual welfare; for all Sabbath-school teachers, that they may seek the early conversion of the young. (Ruth 1:1-8, 14-17; Mal. 3:16, 4; Matt. 19:13-22.)

Saturday, Jan. 7.—Home Missions.

Prayer, for all home missions, and for more workers who in the power of the Holy Ghost can teach of Jesus Christ, the mighty to save; for increased realization of the duty of personal evangelism; for those seeking the suppression of national vices and the laying aside of besetting sins; for the uplifting of the fallen and the conversion of the heedless; for the maintenance of the Lord's day as a day of rest and worship; for the carrying of the spirit of Christ into every phase of our social life. (Psa. 2; Isa. 61; Luke 14:12-24; Rom. 11:33-36.)

COLUMBUS LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM ANDREW PERRINS, D.D.

The Red Cross drive is being pushed with insistent vigor. The plea is made that we hold a vital relation to the disabled soldier; it is stated that the strong ought to help the weak; that "one God made us all." On the ground of this relationship the Red Cross will meet its quota, which is $40,000 for Columbus.

Extensive preparations are being made for the coming of Dr. H. C. Swearingen to our city. The Moderator of the General Assembly will be accompanied by Dr. John A. Marquis, Dr. W. H. Foulkes, Dr. W. P. Schell, Mrs. C. K. Roys and Miss Lucy Dawson. There will be a luncheon of ministers and laymen at noon; in the afternoon a mass meeting of women in the Central Church, and at 6:30 a dinner in the Welsh Presbyterian Church, to which but three hundred and fifty can be admitted, this being the capacity of the banquet room.

The Father and Son banquet at the Crestview Church was a decided success. The speaker of the evening was Dr. A. W. Blackwood, of the Indianola Church. This church is placing emphasis on the community brotherhood idea, and many men who are not members of the church are members of the organization.

"Wooster Day" will be observed in practically all the churches of the city. Dr. George N. Luccock will be in the city for that day, and will speak in the Broad Street Church in the morning and in the Northminster Church in the evening. Columbus Presbytery is vitally interested in our college in Wooster, and it is expected the total amount from the churches will exceed the most hopeful expectations.

Dr. W. M. Hindman, pastor of the Northminster Church, is now able to be in his pulpit again, after an absence of three weeks. About a year ago he was nearly asphyxiated, also members of the family. It left a trouble, and of late the trouble has been intensified, giving him much pain. The physicians say that treatment will give him a complete recovery.

Mrs. Joseph T. Britan, the wife of the pastor of the Central Church, has sustained a very painful accident, and is now in Mercy Hospital, where she will remain several weeks. The specialist declares she will not be lame, though she will not walk for some time.

The Indianola Church, Rev. A. W. Blackwood, D.D., pastor, is an active organization. The Sabbath school has increased to the extent that it is now necessary to have an afternoon Sabbath school to accommodate those who can not be admitted to the morning session of the school.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

It requires a very little effort, and a very small amount of brains, to get liberal publicity on the front page of Detroit daily papers, for a minister. All that is needed is to leave the regular paths of faithful service and do something unusual. Just at present two ministers are receiving whole columns of valuable space. One of them is a New Jerusalem preacher, who was practically unknown until two weeks ago, when, instead of ministering to the little flock that accepted him as a preacher, he suddenly disappeared at the time of the regular morning service and has not yet been found. Where he is, why he deserted his work, and what he is doing, his anxious mother and sister are asking. If all that he wanted was to create a sensation, he has made the biggest success of his life. The other minister is an Episcopalian, also in charge of a small parish, who has taken occasion to assail prohibition, declaring that there are a million private stills in Detroit. As the population is just about a million, every two days' old baby must have started a private still. This is only a sample of the wild statements made. But the result is that the enemies of law and order are getting unlimited space in the Detroit dailies for airing their opposition to prohibition. Another result is that on Thanksgiving Day this minister had an overflow meeting at his little church, of people who gathered to praise him for his brave attack on a law that is unpopular from their viewpoint. It is quite needless to mention the names of these two ministers. They will soon be forgotten. But the moral is that if a minister wants newspaper notoriety, all that he need do in Dearoit is something unusual and without any value to the community.

That suggests that the usual combination service was held on Thanksgiving Day, with Jews, Unitarians, Universalists, Roman Catholics and Evangelical Christians, in some way allotted a part in the service, even though that part was only to read the President's proclamation and the Governor's proclamation, or announce a hymn. The majority of our churches formed themselves into neighborhood groups and held appropriate services. Just what is gained by having a union service in a theater once a year and advertising a quasi-union, it is difficult to comprehend, but the Jewish rabbi who organized the plan is still in charge of it, aided by a nominal committee of various churches. Naturally the Romish participation is by some liberal-minded layman, not by a priest.

It is interesting in these days, when we are seeking for the greatest municipal economy, to compare the cost of administering city affairs in two communities of about the same population. For instance, Highland Park is the most expensively governed community of its class in the whole country, costing $50.24 per capita, while Bay City stands sixty-ninth out of ninety-five cities of that class, with only $21.94 per capita, and Kalamazoo eighty-fourth, with only $17.08. We have to remember that the Ford Motor Works are in Highland Park, and they pay their full share of taxation.

Some interesting facts not previously mentioned should be recorded as to the fiftieth anniversary services of Memorial Church of Bay City. Two of the scholars who were present when the Sabbath school was organized, fifty years ago, were present at the services, and also three of the present elders of the First Church, who were teachers in the Sabbath school forty years ago. They were C. B. Chatfield, Frank S. Pratt and John McEwan. The pastor, Rev. Henry Kreulen, is starting a campaign of consecration, to lead up to what is hoped to be a revival.

The new chairman of Church Extension in Detroit Presbytery is Rev. Minot C. Morgan, D.D., who so ably filled that position once before. The question of an executive secretary has not yet been settled, but Dr. W. T. Jaquess is filling the position so satisfactorily that there is no pressing anxiety as to his successor. He is also New Era secretary and treasurer.

The Methodist college at Albion has decided to postpone its campaign for another million dollars of endowment, on account of business conditions. Alma College has gone too far in its campaign to dare to discontinue it until final success has been achieved, as it must be.

St. Andrew's Church of Detroit has called Rev. Mr. Acton, of Canada, and he has accepted the call, subject to the action of presbytery on Dec. 5.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

To our Ministerial Association, on Nov. 28, Rev. Dr. O. G. Dale, Director of Religious Education in the East Liberty Church, spoke on "The Present Situation in Religious Education." It was his opinion that the time given to the Sabbath school and children's education religiously is not sufficient, that even a week-day hour would not greatly assist, and that, in the present condition of family religion, little is to be hoped for outside of definite efforts in the Church. The discussion that followed stressed the feeling of many ministers that the indifference of parents and the lack of children at the main service call for a great revival.

Following this, Dr. Schaff announced that one of our principal newspapers, The Dispatch, had agreed to publish ten advertisements on religious subjects offered by Dr. Schaff and the Association. These advertisements are free from direct reference to Romanism, and consist of a presentation of what is regarded as true Christianity, fortified by quotations from the New Testament. Thus, e. g., one makes clear that the apostles did not claim to be priests, and that this title applies to every Christian. The all-sufficiency of the one Sacrifice made on Calvary, the simplicity of the conditions of salvation as given by the Scriptures, and the other truths brought to light by the Reformation, are stated in the language of the New Testament. In addition, the names of truly great and revered persons who accept Protestantism and defend it are given. The Association agreed to combine these advertisements in the form of a circular eventually, and issue an edition of one hundred thousand for free distribution, one pastor pledging $25 from his church toward the expense. Dr. Schaff has received a number of not only commendatory letters, but of inquiries by Romanists for information and light. It is this latter need that illuminates this situation, not the purpose to attack or destroy any creed or Church. If we are opposed to Mormonism, it is because it undermines the morality of society as well as asserts falsehood; or Christian Science, it is because it denies God, and sin, and punishment, and Christ, and his salvation; or Unitarianism, it is because it attacks the Bible, the Deity of Christ, his sacrifice, and God's character; or Romanism, it is because it makes the confessional obligatory, and a condition of communion, the priest autocratic, the mass a repetition of Calvary, and salvation impossible except through its priesthood. The Reformed Catholic Church, which includes the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Episcopal and others, is the Christian Church founded by Christ and the apostles, purified from the errors of the Dark Ages, and the misinterpretations of ecclesiastics.

At their annual dinner, on Nov. 7, the men of the First Church, Rev. Maitland Alexander, D.D., pastor, organized a Foreign Missionary Society, to be called the Korean Club, undertaking the support of the college at Pyeng Yang, Korea, at a cost of $5,000, exclusive of other missionary gifts in the church. This college, it is said, was chosen because of "its absolute adherence to the Bible as the inspired Word of God, because it believes the mission of the Church is to evangelize the heathen world and not simply to educate and civilize, because of its stand against the Japanese Government in excluding the Bible from the regular curriculum of the school, which stand was justified in the face of the consent by our own Board to exclude it."

The Second Church, Rev. Dr. G. W. Shelton, pastor, began, on Dec. 4th, its seventh annual series of services in the Alvin Theater.

The churches of Bellevue and Avalon, two of our larger suburbs, are appealing to all societies and organizations, etc., to hold no meetings on Wednesday evenings, that church services may have no competition or hindrance in their week-day meeting.

The Christian Citizenship Convention of the National Reform Association began, on Dec. 4, its three-day series in the Smithfield Street M. E. Church. It will be addressed by Hon. Sam W. Small and Hon. P. P. Campbell; by Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, of Utah, on Mormonism, and Hon. Frank J. Cannon on "And When They Forgot God"; by Rev. Dr. J. R. J. Milligan on "The World and Religion"; and a large number of other interesting speakers, closing with an address by Eli J. Forsythe on "Christ the King."

As a neighbor and successful pastor, we are interested in the call by the First Church, St. Clairsville, O., to Rev. Homer G. McMillen, of the church at Hollidays Cove, W. Va. Mr. McMillen's great success in this latter church, where under his leadership a fine edifice was erected, a greatly increased membership and spirit of benevolence have been reached, and a vigorous mission established in the adjoining mill district, gives promise, along with his sermonic talents and spiritual earnestness, of a still greater usefulness in this important field. Other men labored, as Rev. L. R. Lawther, now of McKeesport, and he enters into their labors, and lifts their flaming torch of Christian zeal.

Each week the statistics of attendance of a considerable number of the Sabbath schools of the city are published in the secular newspapers. It is pleasant to note that almost invariably among the first twelve, a half-dozen are the Presbyterian schools, with a varying superiority in the leadership between the schools of the First Presbyterian Church and that of Christ M. E. Church.

I sometimes wonder if in the desire to recognize a proper advance in revelation and a true increase of light, some of our evangelical theologians do not inadvertently use terms which permit erroneous inferences. There is a justification in Bernard's title and his lectures: "The Progress of Doctrine in the New Testament," and Christ taught his disciples they could not at once bear all his teachings. But is the declaration that the God of the Jews appears in the Old Testament largely at first "a tribal God," justifiable? Would the candid and intelligent reader obtain from the Old Testament such an impression? That some Jews may have had crude ideas of God is of no more consequence than that thousands of intelligent Christians worry over thirteen at a table, that Sir Oliver Lodge can accept the statement that tobacco and dogs are characteristics of heaven. Starting from the magnificent, though simple story of creation and taking every representation of Jehovah, especially those of the Psalms, and the Prophecies, is there not a vision of the one only and true God, a perpetual insistence on his pre-eminence and isolation? Even the Jew thought of God as sitting on the heavens, and creating the overwhelming thought of a greatness that could be mindful of, and visit man. Take the 23d Psalm, or the 90th, or the 8th, or the 139th, and the vast vision of Isaiah, and modern phraseology or imagination, or poetry or philosophy have not surpassed the sublimity of these representations of God. Other "gods" were referred to, just as we speak rightly of evil spirits. But the modern editor or lecturer or moralist often speaks of the god of wealth, of materialism or sensuality, just as Plato speaks of the idols of the cave or market. The Old Testament rightly read, gives, from the beginning, the impression of a God sublime, supreme, yet, let us be thankful, condescending to our low state, and planing at the gate of the lost Eden our salvation and recovery.

In the death of his mother, Rev. H. T. Kerr, D.D., will have the sympathy of his friends and co-presbyters. Dying at the home of her son, in Canada, she leaves two sons in the ministry, and a daughter, the wife of a minister, besides two sons in other professions. Mother love has been emphasized by the Bible and all literature, and though there is a harsh and jarring note in Kipling's verse, "Mother of Mine," the great principle rings in them truly. Motherhood is sublime, and the absence of a mother beggars the world and pleasure and life's richness of much joy. But our Father has her in his keeping and his house.

On Dec. 14th, Rev. Tertius van Dyke, of New York, will speak in the interest of the Waldensian Aid Society, in the Twentieth Century Club.

Watson Memorial Church, Rev. J. W. Claudy, pastor, has become the banner auxiliary of the Presbyterian Hospital, having a membership of 120, and devoting a day's sewing each month for the hospital.

The Social Service Secretary of the Home Mission Board will address the Women's Home Presbyterial societies in the North Church, Jan. 11th.

One of the elders of the Sewickley Church, Mr. Robert Waldorf, has been appointed treasurer of the local Russian Fund, and will receive contributions at the First National Bank.

Twenty-seven deaf mutes attending the Pennsylvania Institute at Edgewood are regular worshippers in the First Church, Wilkesburg, Rev. Geo. Taylor, Jr., Ph.D., pastor, and the service is interpreted by one of the teachers.

The Sabbath school of the East Liberty Church includes a class of twelve Chinese.

The Men's Bible class of the First Church, Homestead, Rev. W. M. Woodfin, D.D., pastor, having a membership of 275, claims to be the leading Bible class in Western Pennsylvania. Its president is Mr. T. J. Jamison, superintendent of one of the furnaces in the U. S. Steel Works, and in his boyhood and youth a member of the Swissvale Sabbath school, under the pastorate of the writer. The class has a faculty of four teachers, including the pastor, and has its own orchestra, which it uses for the purpose of church entertainments.

At the request of the International Protestant League, Prof. D. S. Schaff, D.D., will lecture in the Smithfield Street M. E. Church on Dec. 11th, at 8 p. m., on "Roman Catholic Advertisements from a Protestant Viewpoint." As a student of church history, Dr. Schaff can speak with authority, but also with the utmost consideration for all that is valuable in the Roman Catholic Church.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

There were thirteen members received at Coal Hill as a result of the recent revival. Dr. Hefner, pastor at Clarksville, received the members into the church.

November 20th, Dr. Hefner received five members into his church at Clarksville, making twenty-three during the past two months. The new church building is now nearing completion.

Rev. H. E. Morse recently closed a revival meeting in the Bono Church, which is said to be one of the best meetings ever held here. There were ten professions and four additions to the church.

I held two services at West Fork, Nov. 27th. Deep interest was manifest. Arrangements were made so that the whole budget for this year will be secured.

Rev. M. L. Gillespie, D.D., recently supplied the pulpit at Walnut Grove Church, where its pastor, Rev. Mr. Freyshlag, was holding a meeting at Lincoln. Judge Dickson, of Bentonville, supplied the Fayetteville pulpit for Dr. Gillespie.

Rev. E. Harris, pastor at Lincoln, was assisted in special meetings by Rev. E. M. Freyshlag. Rev. S. E. Marrs, pastor at Cane Hill, led the singing. Owing to the serious illness of the mother of Mr. Freyshlag, who is ninety-three years old, the meeting closed early, but much good was accomplished.

The church at Lowell is supplied on Sabbath afternoon once each month by Rev. T. E. McSpadden, pastor at Rogers. He also supplies Avoka one Sabbath afternoon each month. At Lowell on a recent Sabbath, eight members were received.

John McClelland, former stated clerk of the Arkansas Presbytery, lost his wife by death recently. These good people moved to California a few months ago. Her body was brought back to Rogers for burial. The pastor, Rev. T. E. McSpadden, preached her funeral from the church.

In company with Rev. L. E. Blakemore, Sabbath-school missionary for the Fort Smith Presbytery, I visited Dublin on Nov. 22nd, and preached to a large congregation. We have a few members living in the community and one elder. The people are anxious to resuscitate the work. There are over 800 people in the community and no real religious work being done. It is our purpose to begin work at Dublin just as soon as the man and money can be secured. I am now making an itinerary through portions of Fort Smith and Arkansas Presbyteries.

MONTANA MUSINGSE.

BY J. F. SHEPHERD, D.D.

Rev. John Pate, of Calgary, Canada, has been called to Deer Lodge and has accepted.

Rev. J. O. Skinner has taken charge of the Giengary-Hanover-Klein field in Lewistown Presbytery and is now at work.

Rev. R. W. Rogers has closed his work at Chinook and the church is now vacant. Neighboring pastors will supply it for a time, and Rev. W. L. Livingston, assistant superintendent of missions, will hold evangelistic services there in January. This is a good field for an efficient young man.

Rev. W. L. Livingston recently closed a meeting of ten days duration at Carter, Rev. John S. Park, pastor, with twelve additions.

Your correspondent conducted services Nov. 27th at Dillon, at present federated with the Methodist people. The services were in the Presbyterian Church attended only by our Presbyterian people. Out of fifty-five adults present, fifty were communed. Six were received and an infant baptized. The New Era quota will all be paid. Officers were elected and good reports rendered. We have a fine manse here and a good small church, with an excellent people. We must have our own minister as soon as financial conditions will warrant. This is a pleasant city and our State Normal is located here.

Our church at Missoula, Rev. J. N. MacLean, D.D., pastor, did a fine thing for the students of the State University, located there. The register showed 250 young people of the Presbyterian faith. These received an invitation to be present on the second Sabbath of the school year, each to be entertained in one of the homes of the congregation for noonday dinner. The people of the church responded to the appeal of the pastor and his wife. Two hundred and twenty-five of the 250 students were present and met their hostesses after services and enjoyed their hospitality. This formed a connecting link between the Church and these young people far from home, also a particular link between the particular hostess and their particular guest. With such care our young people will be looked after in this university center. It was a delight to the writer to supply this church one evening and find such a wide-awake people. The pastor and congregation are alive to the needs and conditions of the hour.

The Home Missions Council of Montana met in Helena, Nov. 8-9. The whole of the first day was given to the work of the allocation of the state. Montana is the pioneer state in this work, having begun it two years ago. States like Idaho, that are just beginning, may learn from our experiences.

We are advancing toward the goal of giving the Gospel to every community in this great state, though still somewhat short of it. We have in many cases prevented overlapping, have secured the withdrawal of churches from a field where they had no longer any mission, and have in a number of cases made exchanges that have worked to the spiritual and financial advantage of both denominations so exchanging. But there is another side. Ministers are very human some times, and too often when, in a town where two or more denominations are at work, when one became vacant, advantage has been taken by the remaining minister to foster the idea of "union" or "community church," in spite of the ordinary rules of ethics, to the injury of the defenseless flock. Some ministers are not honest as they should be. Then the "community church" idea has been fostered till the business world has in some cases undertaken to control this, to the overthrow of all denominational control, and, as we are at present organized, to the ultimate spiritual destruction of the church. But even the worst is the disposition of some church leaders to rush into strategic communities, without any worthwhile following, and preach a few times or buy a lot, then neglect the community religiously, but claim it as distinctly theirs, "because they have a work there," thus preventing any other communion from adequately serving that community while neglecting their spiritual needs, and possibly unable, because of the predominance of those of other faiths, to render any adequate service. Then we have the church, presided over by a pastor, who, while holding membership in a denomination that is supposed to be "evangelical," himself denies every fundamental of historic Christianity, and we are supposed to turn our orthodox people over to the tender mercies of such, "to prevent overlapping." Facing the minister on the back of the pulpit, in one of our churches I saw this recently. "Sir, we would see Jesus." This is the insistent call of the people today, and a Church that fails to answer it should not be included in our councils.

Great Falls, Montana.

ONE DAY AT RICHMOND, VA.

BY REV. A. A. HECTOR.

Rev. John Steele, Associate Secretary of the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare and Director of the Delinquent Department made a flying tour covering all the prisons of Richmond, Va., on Sabbath, Nov. 27. Accompanied by Rev. A. A. Hector, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, the State Penitentiary was the first place visited. At 9.30 a.m. Mr. Steele addressed the prisoners at the regular chapel services. His message was full of the Holy Spirit, and it went home to the hearts of all who heard it. Men wept and at the close many lifted their hands and asked for prayers. This service over, they visited the death cell where seven men are waiting execution. Another message equally earnest and touching was delivered. At 11.30 Mr. Steele filled the First Church pulpit, and was greeted by an appreciative congregation; and he delivered his sermon there with telling effect. At 1.15 p.m. they reached different groups of prisoners. At 2:30 they arrived at the County prison; five addresses were made to as many groups of prisoners. At 6.00 p.m. the Reformatory School at Peake, Va., fifteen miles outside of the city—an institution for colored girls—was the last place visited on this remarkable day. With the same amount of enthusiasm, Mr. Steele addressed these unfortunate inmates many of whom were visibly effected. They reached the City at 9.00 p.m., after being constantly at work for twelve consecutive hours. Think of it. Eleven addresses delivered, none of which was shorter than thirty minutes! The Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare must be proud of such an ardent worker; and the Church should be proud of the work this Board is doing.

CHICAGO LETTTR.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

The Church Extension Board of Chicago, Presbytery, Rev. Henry S. Brown, D.D., superintendent, made a strike for the largest goal of City Missions budget ever attempted by the presbytery. With the approval of presbytery, the Board arranged an exchange of pulpits of the one hundred and four churches and the missions, whereby the pastors called attention to the Board's work and the need of $200,000 to carry on the work for the coming year. Only $170,000 was asked for. The exchange was not unanimous, as some of the pastors had already taken an offering for the Board. Some are using the budget system and felt bound not to bring in any extra plea for money. The results of the exchange day have not been as hopeful as was anticipated by the superintendent. A curtailing of the work may be necessary to conform to the gifts of the presbytery through its churches. There are now forty-five churches, missions and settlements, with eighty-five workers, dependent upon the Board. The variety of the Board's service to the presbytery may be summed up in the following lines: church work in the partially-paid pastor, Sabbath schools, Industrial League, economy clubs, neighborhood houses, employment bureaus, daily vacation Bible schools, Americanization programs, work among the Italians, Bohemians, Spanish, Jews, as well as among other alien populations.

Immanuel Church, Rev. C. M. Davis, pastor, gave a neighborhood concert on Nov. 29, in the church, at which time the Welsh male chorus gave its services, all for the benefit of an improvement fund. Dr. David H. Jones, pastor of the First Church of Evanston, presided.

Dr. Charles F. Wishart, president of Wooster College, late pastor of the Second Church, was the speaker at the Sunday Evening Club at Orchestra Hall, Nov. 27. His theme was, "The Palms of Christ."

The monthly union ministers' meeting was addressed by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston on Monday morning, Nov. 28, at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, on "The Atmosphere of Spiritual Power." Reports were made from the various sides of the city as to the progress being made by the churches and denominations in the preparation for the city-wide evangelical campaign, beginning in December. A splendid spirit of co-operation is being found on all sides.

Dr. W. C. Covert, pastor of the First Church, observed Thanksgiving week with a series of services in the church, with Dr. Mahy, of the Committee on Evangelism, helping in the services.

Rev. Ralph M. Davis, of the First Church of St. Louis, supplied the pulpit of the Hyde Park Church on the last Sabbath of November. Hyde Park has been vacant since the death of Dr. Jesse R. Zeigler last December.

ILLINOIS PRESBYTERIANISM.

BY REV. J. W. McDONALD, D.D.

The committee appointed by the Synod of Illinois to arrange for a conference bringing together all the Presbyterian ministers of the state, at least, and equal number of representative laymen, met in Decatur, Tuesday, Nov. 29th, and decided to arrange for such a gathering of the Presbyterians of the state to be held in Decatur, June 13-16, 1922.

The program will run from Tuesday noon until Friday noon, and will enable the Presbyterians of the state to face their opportunity. Dr. Henry S. Brown was appointed chairman of the subcommittee to work out a program which would answer the practical needs of both ministers and laymen. Considerable time will be given to conferences bringing together those interested in common problems. There will also be opportunity for those present, from each of the twelve presbyteries, to meet together and consider their work in light of the findings of the conference. It is the first time serious effort has ever been made to bring together all the Presbyterian ministers of Illinois, to say nothing of the laymen who are leaders in their local communities. Each Presbytery will be asked to begin at once to work for a full attendance at this meeting.

The committee appointed by the synod are: J. W. McDonald, D.D., Decatur; H. S. Brown, D.D., Chicago; Mr. Oliver R. Williamson, Chicago; R. R. Biggar, D.D., Bloomington; and Mr. E. E. Willis, East St. Louis. At noon Tuesday this committee met at lunch with thirty-five men of Decatur to whom they outlined the plans for the conference. Dr. Louis E. Holden, President of James Milliken University, and Mr. A. H. Mills, President of the Millikin Board offered the use of the campus and buildings at Millikin University for the conference. A representative of the Decatur Chamber of Commerce also extended an invitation to have the meeting held in Decatur. From this gathering three local men were added to the general committee to assist in appointing subcommittees, and directing the general plans for the meeting. These were: Dr. C. E. Jenney, Mr. A. M. Kenney and Mr. H. W. McDavid.

Rev. Marion Humphreys, Pastor-at-Large in Springfield Presbytery, is holding a series of week-end church institutes in a number of the churches of the presbytery. Mrs. Humphreys and some of the pastors of the presbytery are assisting him, and gratifying results are reported. As one feature of the institute, Mrs. Humphreys directs a Home Mission Pageant, using young people of the congregation to represent the various Home Mission fields.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

Rev. J. R. Crawford, D.D., is now holding an evangelistic meeting at the Kentucky Avenue Church, Paducah, Ky. The first week he had services only at night and had different pastors in the city to preach each one night. The second week he entered on a campaign for evangelism. He has good helpers and the outlook is fine for a successful meeting.

Rev. John A. Troxler held a School of Missions in his church at Mayfield recently. He had thirty adults studying "Unfinished Business." They graded the church according to the standard for country churches. According to this grading, out of thirty-one points, Mayfield Church has twenty-six, and has 100 per cent on all the points but four. Mr. Troxler preached at Water Valley every night last week.

Rev. J. F. Claycomb has accepted a call to the Providence group and will move there January 1st.

Rev. E. N. Hart has accepted the call to the Marion group. He is now on the field. The people of this group are delighted.

The writer closed the meeting at Morgantown, where W. H. Neal is in charge, on Nov. 27th, after holding it two weeks. There were twenty-four professions of faith. The church members were greatly revived. There were some valuable additions to the church. James T. Smith rendered efficient service in the meeting. Bishop John Moore, of South America, who was reared in this county, preached a great sermon for us the last Sabbath.

THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENT.

In an article about Dr. Mateer, Nov. 2, there is this expression: "He accepted both" the Bible of Jesus and the New Testament," etc. What is the difference? I do not understand the sentence. C.

The Bible, in Jesus' day, was the Old Testament. The New Testament came later.

Four Presbyterian New Era conferences were held recently in four centers in the Synod of Washington, with a team of six speakers, one being Dean Eldridge of the University of Idaho, and another a layman who is New Era chairman for Walla Walla Presbytery. This layman was interested enough to furnish autos to carry the party about, and was so impressed with the results that he is now asking to be allowed to pay all the incidental expenses of the team.

Dr. James H. Condit, for eight years superintendent of Presbyterian missions in Alaska, has accepted the superintendency of Sheldon Jackson Industrial School at Sitka. The school is the largest institution of its kind in Alaska and is operated by the Woman's Board of Home Mission.

The College of the Ozarks, Clarksville, Ark., finds it necessary to raise $100,000 to meet the Arkansas requirements of standardization; $75,000 is needed for a new building and about $25,000 for increased library and science laboratories. President Hubert S. Lyle has received a written bona-fide offer of $25,000 for the new building on condition that $50,000 more be secured.

A Presbyterian Exposition is to be held in Brooklyn, in Classon Avenue Church, Dec. 6, 7 and 8. As a part of the preparation for this important event, thirty-four churches of this presbytery were visited by missionary speakers Dec. 4. It bids fair to be one of the most notable missionary milestones in the history of presbytery.

Find enclosed check for $2.50 for another year's subscription to the Herald and Presbyter. It seems to me the last year it was better than ever. I can't understand how our Church people can afford to be without it, it is so good for the soul. C. D. S.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

Hunter Corbett. By Rev. J. R. E. Craighead. Cloth. $1.60. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. For sale by the Bond Publishing Company, Oswego, Ill.

Dr. Hunter Corbett was a missionary of our Presbyterian Board in China for fifty-six years. The biography is a well-written volume of 224 pages, and much of the material which appears in it was gathered directly from Dr. Corbett while Mr. Craighead visited in China several years ago. This is supplemented by additional facts from numerous sources, chiefly the family letters and private journals of the veteran missionary. The details of the book bring into prominence much of the home-life in Western Pennsylvania from fifty to one hundred years ago and the conditions of the schools and churches in Hunter Corbett's youth. As the scene passes to China the unfolding of his extensive work there is brought out in conjunction with the efforts of his missionary associates, and is thus traced to the end of his earthly career on Jan. 7, 1920. The biography has been written largely as a character study and is a great missionary book.

The Prophetic Ministry for Today. By Bishop Charles D. Williams. Cloth $1.50. The Macmillan Company, New York.

Bishop Williams here urges that ministers should be outspoken in regard to all matters of social and civic righteousness, and gives many illustrations of his meaning by defining the positions they should take as to the practical questions of the day. There is no doubt as to the fact that ministers should make themselves felt for practical advances of righteousness. It is absolutely sure that they have been felt thus in all the ages, including and since the Old Testament prophets. It is, of course, no new thing, nor no old fashion laid aside. It is a matter of great interest to read the views of this writer, who is always very greatly wide awake, even if one may not be able to exactly agree with him in all particulars. The volume is made up of the Lyman Beecher Yale Lectures for 1920, and is stimulating and full of vital interest.

Poisoning Democracy. By George McCready Price. Cloth. $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

That there are many dangers and evils present in the world today, in the heart of society, working out conditions that threaten to be even more menacing, is apparent to all thoughtful and conscientious persons. In this volume many of these are pointed out and warned against, as threatening the very existence of civilization. Among them are various socialistic and evolutionary theories, rationalistic higher criticism, the general positions of the infidel new theology, and the end toward which all these things are tending is the Bolshevism that works death and destruction to all that is valuable in human life. The style of the writer is most fascinating. His denunciation of the smattering sciences of some evolutionary theorists is withering. His characterizations of some theological professors and preachers who betray the Gospel, and who are veritable wolves in sheep's clothing, are most apt and refreshing. The book is worthy of careful reading and is sure to do good.

Prophecy Explained. By George H. Patch. Cloth. $1.50. The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

This is a very careful, reverent and thoughtful study of the prophecies of the Holy Scriptures. The writer does not claim to have answered authoritatively all the questions that may arise as to these difficult parts of the Bible. But he has carefully studied, for himself, and has consulted the tried and evangelical writers as C. I. Scofield, James H. Brooks, R. A. Torrey, L. W. Munhall, Mark A. Matthews, C. G. Trumbull, A. C. Gaebel and many others. The author says: "Every one who uses these lessons is urged to carefully study the Scriptures 'whether these things are so,' and to compare these findings with the conclusions of other writers, and be fully persuaded in his own mind." The volume is arranged in the form of lessons, fifty-two of them, with questions for special study and with expositions of the great books and periods of the Bible. Any one who is interested in the study of prophecy will find much to interest and instruct him in these lessons.

The Non-Sense of Christian Science. By Albert Clark Wyckoff. Cloth $1.75. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Christian Science, so-called, can find acceptance only with the ignorant or with the blasphemous. Those who take up with the monstrous positions defined by Mrs. Eddy are either ignorant of the real meaning of her words, or they are ready to accept what is monstrous in its contradictions of the divine teaching and its opposition to the facts of Revelation. There are a good many people who are being misled. Those who are willing to read and who can understand the volume prepared by Mr. Wyckoff will never suffer themselves to be misled by the follies of the wickedness of this evil system. It seems incomprehensible that any sane person or any reverent person can take up with the false and non-sense positions of Eddyism, and it is logical to insist that those who do so are lacking either in information or in reverential regard for the God of truth. The volume before us is a searching analysis of the pretensions, errors, follies and evils of this so-called Christian Science, which is neither Christian nor Science. Every statement in Mr. Wyckoff's book is based on accurate information and carefully worked out argument. The book is a challenge. They who read it carefully, with enough intelligence to comprehend and enough conscience to care, can never regard Eddyism with anything less than disgust and abhorrence.

Enduring Investments. By Roger W. Babson. Cloth. $1.50. The Macmillan Company, New York.

Mr. Babson, as a great consulting engineer in the matter of business for the whole country, knows as much about business matters and conditions as any man who lives. As the President of the Babson Statistical organization, and the author of a good many informing books, he has shown himself very hard-headed as to the facts of the business world. Yet he has been impressing upon his readers and hearers the fact that the great need of this whole country and the whole world is for religious life, to be back of all the activities of business, in order to make our world and society what they need to be and ought to be. He is not always insistent, as we would like for him to be, that it is evangelical Christian religion that the world needs, but he leaves some things to the individual interpretation, while he insists on the one great fact that without religion the world must perish. So in this book he insists that the best investments are in the enduring investments that produce spiritual life and character. The school and the church and the home are more necessary than the bank and the mill and the machine. Fill the nation with high and good character and all other things will be sure to be added. This was one of the lessons taught by Christ.

Boy Scouts' Life of Lincoln. By Ida M. Tarbell. Cloth. $2.00. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a well written life of this great man. It is written in a way to be readily apprehended by the boys for whom it is prepared, with emphasis upon the qualities which these same boys have been taught to admire, and which find so large exemplification in the life and character of Mr. Lincoln. There have been many persons who have undertaken to write the biography of this great and good man, but this one that is before us has some excellent points and is well worthy of careful reading and study. While prepared especially for Boy Scouts, all intelligent and worthy readers will find in it much to interest and please them.

A Dictionary of Religion and Ethics. Edited by Shailer Mathews and Gerald Birney Smith. The Macmillan Company, New York. 4to. Pp. 513. $8.00.

In this massive volume many subjects are treated, and with a great number of writers as contributors. The articles are for the most part signed. There is a vast amount of information on the pages. It is meant mainly for ministers and those who, like them, are interested and concerned in the subjects treated on the pages of the volume. Of course, no one can vouch for all the vast variety of opinions, judgments and ideas found in a work of this nature, but there has been great care taken by the editors to have the work done in the most careful way possible. For those who do not agree with all statements made, there remains the fact that the work is exceedingly suggestive and scholarly, and that it has an immense amount of information on a great range of subjects.

Spiritism in Antiquity. By Lewis Bayles Paton, Ph.D. Cloth. $3.50. The Macmillan Company, New York.

The author of this valuable and scholarly discussion is Professor of Old Testament Exegesis in Hartford Theological Seminary, and has been a director in the American School of Oriental Study and Research in Jerusalem. His work and study have been such as to make him an authority in many lines of investigation. This volume contains many facts as to the belief in spirit manifestations as held in ancient China, in Egypt, Babylonia, Assyria, among the Semites and in Israel. It shows that all the things considered today in psychical research were known or discussed in ancient times. Hypnotism, mind-reading, second-sight, and all such things were considered as they are today. The book contains extended discussions of the views of the ancient peoples as to the dead and their condition; of the possibility of communicating with them, and of their possible influence over the living. A revival of spiritism or spiritualism today renders such a presentation of facts interesting, as it shows the futility and fruitlessness of this long-drawn-out quest for forbidden knowledge.

To Him That Hath. By Ralph Connor. Cloth. $1.75. George H. Doran Company, New York.

The author of the "Sky Pilot" is always sure of a hearing when he approaches the public. This story is one of compelling interest. Dealing with labor and social problems that have demanded attention since the war, there are many other elements that make the book one most readable. There is a fine description of various athletic contests in Canada, the scene where all his stories are laid, and there are various character descriptions and love stories that are delightful in their charming and satisfying particulars.

Poems. By Louise Hart. $1.50. The Cornhill Company, Boston.

A variety of treatment is found in the verses of this collection, but a true poetic spirit pervades them, and there are many tender and beautiful poems on the pages.

Wee Books for Wee Folks. Profusely Illustrated in Colors. 50 cents each. Just such little books as serve for bedtime stories for little children. Henry Altemus Company, Philadelphia. They are old stories, re-rhymed and retold, for the most part, although some are quite new.

Cinderella. By Kenneth G. Duffield.
The Three Bears. By Kenneth G. Duffield.
Story of Chicken Little. By Kenneth G. Duffield.

Child's Garden of Verses. Robert Louis Stevenson.

Grunt Grunts and Smiley Smile Outdoors.
Peter Rabbit's Easter.
Peter Rabbit's Birthday.
Little Squirrelie Squirreliekin.
Little Lambie Lambkin.
Little Prayers for Little Lips.

The Unity School of Christianity and What Its Teachings Reveal. 30 cents. By C. E. Putnam. Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 North LaSalle Street, Chicago.

There are various books and systems today that have in themselves something true and a great deal that is false and deceptive. The purpose in this little book is to put Christian people on their guard against the specious and misleading teachings of the particular errors that are treated of and pointed out on its pages.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Joseph Kirkwood Alexander died at his home in Vineland, N. J., on Nov. 16, in the sixty-ninth year of his age. He was born at Martin's Ferry, O., Dec. 10, 1852, graduated from Lafayette College and Princeton Seminary and was ordained in 1879 by the Presbytery of Mankato. He served in the ministry forty-two years, most of the time in Iowa. He was six years Stated Clerk of the Presbytery of Iowa. He was a strong preacher and a faithful pastor. His wife and two daughters survive him. Rev. W. L. Alexander, of Findlay, O., is a younger brother.

Rev. Joseph Vitale, pastor of the Italian Presbyterian Church of Vineland, N. J., died on Nov. 21. He was a faithful and good minister and his death is a great loss to his church and people.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Dr. Swearingen will speak to the students of Lane Seminary at the Seminary Chapel, on Thursday, Dec. 8, at 11:30 A. M., this being Presbyterian Day, with many meetings at the Church of the Covenant.

Foreign Missions was the theme at many of the churches last Sabbath evening. In the Third Church Rev. William Gross, pastor, spoke on "Mary Slessor, Heroine of God"; at Clifford Rev. J. V. Stephens, Jr., pastor, illustrated lecture on "China"; at Norwood, Rev. W. J. Paterson, pastor, an address was given by Rev. Arthur James on "Porto Rico"; in College Hill an address was given on "Mexico", and in Pleasant Ridge an address on "Hawaii" was given by Rev. C. A. Austin.

Rev. E. M. Martin began his new pastorate in Westminster Church, Price Hill, last Sabbath morning. He has had a long and successful pastorate in the First Church of Westwood.

Pleasant Ridge Church, Rev. W. L. Schmalhorst, pastor, is almost ready to begin building the Sabbath-school addition to the church, and the contracts will be let in January. About $35,000 has been raised for the purpose, and excellent accommodations will be provided for this department of the church life. On last Sabbath evening Rev. Charles A. Austin of College Hill gave an illustrated address on Hawaii, which he visited last summer, and where he was pastor some years ago.

In the Walnut Hills First Church, Rev. Dr. F. N. McMillin, pastor, the sermon in the evening was by Rev. Julian P. Love, of Lane Seminary.

Rev. Jesse Halsey gave an illustrated sermon on "St. Paul the Traveler" in the Seventh Church last Sabbath evening.

Rev. E. H. Vail gave the first of a series of illustrated sermons on "Pilgrims Progress" in the Linn Street Church last Sabbath evening.

The Wyoming Church, Rev. David Garrett Smith, pastor, received three members at the communion last Sabbath.

Rev. Dr. J. Shane Nicholls spoke last Sabbath evening in Immanuel Church, Clifton, on "The Life and Times of John Wiclif."

Rev. D. W. McMillin has accepted the call to West Liberty Church. He was formerly of Calvary Church, Linwood.

The Executive meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Cincinnati Presbytery will be held on Tuesday, Dec. 13 at 10 A. M., in the First Church.

The Westminster Guild of the Wyoming Church give a playlet, "Tired of Missions" at the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, this evening.

Dr. A. B. Weldrum of Cleveland First Presbyterian Church made an address in this city last week, on St. Andrews Day, to the Scotch people, speaking on "Scotland and Its People."

The National Convention of Colored Young Men's Christian Associations, held in this city last week, was largely attended, and was addressed by such speakers as John R. Mott, and President Moton of Tuskegee.

Presbyterian Day will have large attention here in Cincinnati, at the Church of the Covenant, on next Thursday, Dec. 8. The ministers will meet for addresses in the morning at 10 o'clock and women at 2:30 P. M. The supper for men is at 6 o'clock and public meeting for all will be held at 7:30. Dr. Swearingen and several representatives of the Mission Boards will make addresses.

Wyoming Church, Rev. D. G. Smith, pastor, received three members at the communion last Sabbath.

Walnut Hills First Church, Rev. Dr. McMillin, pastor, received thirty-nine members last Sabbath.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Miss Lexie Denyven, who is on the staff of workers at Boyle Memorial Center, gave an address on "Americanization," Sabbath evening, Nov. 27, before the young people of the Lafayette Park Church.

Dr. John L. Roemer, president of Lindenwood College, filled the pulpit of Kingshighway Church last Sabbath morning and evening. Two Presbyterian missionaries, Dr. Roy Heimbürger, of China, and Miss Jane Thompson, of India, gave addresses in the last week at Lindenwood.

Dr. William N. Cleveland, associate secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions, preached at the First Church on Sabbath, Nov. 27. A recent meeting of the City Christian Endeavor Union was held at this church Nov. 29, with an address by Miss Jane Thompson, one of the missionaries of the Foreign Board, who has spent the last seven years in India. She is a St. Louis young woman, and took a leading part in the Endeavor work of the state before she went as a missionary.

The Sunshine Mission, which work has been carried on under different titles ever since 1903, by Rev. Edward Card, is sending out a strong appeal for help this winter. A letter carries with it a personal letter of appeal by Rev. D. C. MacLeod, D.D., who represents the general body of the ministry, in saying that this interdenominational mission is doing a civic as well as a religious duty. Its attendance, correlated for the last year, has been 24,015. Young peoples societies from many city churches go down every week to sing for the evening meetings, which are maintained the year around. There is also a Sabbath school, a mothers' class and many noon meetings. The mission is at 1526 Market Street, quite near to Union Station.

Mrs. Fannie S. Duncan died Monday of last week at the family residence, 4481 Westminster Place, where she and her husband, the late William Duncan, had resided for many years. They celebrated their golden wedding seven years ago. Their daughter, one of four surviving children, is the wife of Rev. R. Calvin Dobson, D.D., secretary of church extension in the St. Louis Presbytery, and he officiated at the funeral last Wednesday afternoon.

Twelve pastors and missionary leaders are announced for the eighth annual Mission School and Conference for the Presbytery of St. Louis, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Young People's Institute, which will be held on the evenings of this week, at the West Church. Classes are announced in Foreign Missions, "The Way and How of Foreign Missions"; Home Missions, "Unfinished Tasks"; Bible Study; Teacher Training; Young People's Religious Problems, and Young People's Methods. There are also classes for junior workers. Among the features of the conference will be an address, Monday evening, by J. M. Patterson, of the Foreign Board; an open parliament led by the institute's president, Harbert Hahn, Tuesday evening, together with a home-mission pageant; addresses by two missionaries, Miss Jane Thompson and Dr. Roy Heimbürger, Wednesday evening; an address by Miss Marie Preston, field secretary of the Womans Board of Home Missions, Thursday evening, and a decision and communion service led by Rev. R. M. Davis, D.D., Friday evening. Dr. Lampe will be dean of the conference.

Captain Gipsy Pat Smith, the famous British soldier who has gained an international reputation since the war as a speaker, has opened a series of meetings at the Webster Groves Church, Dr. Skilling, pastor. Last Sabbath evening, the Ozark Theater was used for his sermon. A special lecture, "Three Years on the Firing Line," was given by him in the church, Monday evening, Dec. 5. Captain Smith served throughout the war, having enlisted Aug. 5, 1914. He was twice wounded; but was on the firing line on Armistice Day. He was born in a gipsy tent in Glasgow, Scotland, and is of pure Romany stock.

Dr. James W. Hawkes, a missionary for forty-five years in Persia, attracted considerable local interest on his visit here last week to his friend, Rev. Norman L. Euwer, who was associated with him for eight years in Persia. He preached at the Second Church Sabbath morning, Nov. 27. He said that the great opportunity of the missionaries now in Persia is in education, for this is what the people are desiring. This opportunity even surpasses the opportunity of the medical missionaries. He rejoiced over the sending out or returning of forty-two missionaries by the Board in the last year, to fill vacancies caused by the war.

OHIO.

The Father and Son banquet at Wickliffe, Rev. Dr. R. R. Marquis, pastor, was a great success. One hundred plates were served by the Ladies' Aid Society. Two young men spoke for the sons, giving the ideals of what fathers should do. Two fathers connected with the public schools spoke to the boys from their viewpoint. These talks were followed by a talk on ideals for both sons and fathers given by Mr. Walter Baker, a Sabbath-school superintendent from Cleveland, and another by Mr. R. G. Ryan, secretary of the County Y. M. C. A. A more practical or helpful evening could not have been planned.

The men's Bible class of Shelby, O., Rev. J. F. Cowling, pastor, had an attendance of 427 on Sabbath, Nov. 27. A contest has been going on for quite a time with the men's class of Crestline, O., and the Shelby class is now very considerably in the lead.

Rev. J. C. Stamm, of English, Ind., has accepted a call to the Richmond group of churches, Steubenville Presbytery, and will begin his work soon.

The manse at Mowrystown, where Rev. T. G. Melton is pastor, has been repaired and repainted. A beautiful mosaic tile floor has been placed in the vestibule of the new church, which is in harmony with the rest of the building. On Thanksgiving Day services were held in the morning, followed by a fine dinner for all, in the church. In the afternoon a congregational meeting was held and several new elders and deacons were elected and installed. It was a serviceable and enjoyable Thanksgiving Day.

The new church building at Columbiana, Rev. Dr. Carlos S. McGrath, pastor, was dedicated on Nov. 6. Rev. Dr. Moses Breeze preached the dedication sermon and assisted in raising $7,000, so that the church, costing

REV. DR. CARLOS S. McGRATH.

$50,000, was dedicated free from debt. The church was organized May 13, 1865, with sixteen members. It now has about 250. The first building was erected in 1867. A picture of the new church appears on the first page of this paper. During the week preceding dedication special services were held each evening: Tuesday, Nov. 1, being for the dedication of the new pipe organ; Wednesday for greetings by local pastors; Thursday for greetings from the presbytery, with addresses by Rev. W. P. Hollister, Rev. J. I. Gregory and Rev. E. S. Toensmeier; and on Friday there were addresses by preceding pastors: Rev. R. G. Roscamp, D.D., Rev. Isaiah Revenaugh, Rev. Robert E. Porter and Rev. J. F. Kirkbride. The church is very beautiful and commodious and complete. On Sabbath, Nov. 13, nine infants were baptized. On Nov. 20, at the communion, twenty-four members were received, of whom twenty were on profession, and nine adults were baptized.

The cantata "Bethany," by Herbert, was given recently in the Orwell Church, Rev. E. J. Lewis, pastor. It was repeated the following Sabbath evening. Under the direction of the pastor's wife the missionary interests have been reorganized. The pastor has a "Sermonette" in the town paper every week. For seven weeks the pastor has been giving Sabbath evening talks on "Things We Ought to Know." Renovations on the manse have been made recently.

Dr. Swearingen and the Secretaries of the Boards are to be in Cleveland on Dec. 7; Dayton, Dec. 7; Cincinnati, Dec. 8; Columbus, Dec. 9; Detroit, Dec. 10 and 11; Indianapolis, Dec. 12; St. Louis, Dec. 13; Louisville, Dec. 14.

The First Presbyterian Church of Marietta carried out the social visitation plan last Sabbath, when every family belonging to the church was called on by a committee of men from the church. Over forty men took part in the visitation. Dr. Moses Breeze addressed the men of the Brotherhood Bible class at their supper last Tuesday. This is the beginning of a drive for increased attendance and membership in the class. Rev. Mayson H. Sewell is the teacher and pastor.

ILLINOIS.

The First Church of Monmouth, Rev. Paul Arnold Peterson, pastor, is full of activity. A new furnace has been placed in the manse at a cost of $600. A supper was served in the church last week, attended by more than three hundred persons, at which fifty men were cooks and waiters. A School of Missions was recently held, with great interest and profit, and with an average attendance of ninety-two. A missionary pageant was given last Sabbath evening, entitled "The Lifting Hands," with sixty-four on the program. A series of ten stereopticon lectures on Foreign Mission subjects is being given on successive Sabbath evenings.

Evangelist W. A. Bodell, of Bloomington, Ill., has held a very successful meeting with the First Church of Pana, Ill., by Rev. W. C. Meeker, pastor. The church was greatly blessed, and there will be an accession of sixty members.

The First Church of Macomb, Rev. W. T. Rodgers, D.D., pastor, had 932 in Sabbath school on Nov. 6. The membership of the church is now about 800. The church building is very beautiful and is finely adapted for the work of a busy congregation.

Under the direction and supervision of the pastor, Dr. John Calvin Leonard, the First Church of Morrisonville served a community Thanksgiving dinner and supper on Thanksgiving Day, which receipted to the church over $800 from the dinner. Free baskets were also sent out to the poor of the city.

INDIANA.

The First Church of Elkhart, Rev. C. L. Mackay, pastor, had 1,002 present at the Sabbath school on Nov. 27, of whom 675 were in the Men's Bible Class. The highest mark reached by this Bible class in 1920 was 624, and the highest in 1919 was 619.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Evangelistic campaign of Erie Presbytery moves on with increased momentum. The reports are heartening. The churches are revived and many are brought to a confession of Christ. The local churches are seeing their task in a new light, and will reach the community more completely in the future. A spiritual inventory is in process of being taken all over the presbytery. Rev. Harry Burton Boyd is chairman of the Evangelistic Committee.

Park Church of Erie received eighteen members Nov. 27, making seventy-six during this church year. The congregation authorized the trustees to purchase a lot adjoining the church at a cost of $35,000 to provide for a needed expansion of the building. Rev. Harry B. Boyd is pastor.

Rev. C. R. Scafe, pastor of Tyrone First Church, who has been seriously ill for several weeks, is now recovering rapidly. On Sabbath, Nov. 27, the pulpit was occupied by a former pastor, Rev. H. W. Bieber, D.D., of Cynwyd, Pa.

Rev. W. J. B. Edgar, who has labored as an evangelist in Erie Presbytery the past three months, will leave the employ of the Committee on Evangelism Dec. 1 and will supply the church in Titusville during the absence of Dr. Semple. Rev. C. A. Colvin will take his place up to Christmas, and then Rev. William Laumaster will finish his schedule. Mr. Laumaster has been in the employ of the Assembly's Committee of Evangelism for several years.

Lackawanna Presbytery met in Wilkes-Barre First Church. Rev. S. R. Diehl, who has served the Sayre Church for four years, resigned, and is to be installed at Plymouth Dec. 7, 7:30 p. m. Rev. Richard Curnow was received from the Presbytery of Lyons and is to be installed at Shickshinny Feb. 1, 7:30 p. m.—Presbytery is to meet in Scranton Second Church Dec. 7, 2 p. m., to act upon the request of Rev. William Davies for release from Peckville and dismissal to the Presbytery of Lindsay, Ontario, Canada.—P. H. Brooks, S. C.

NEW YORK.

Brooklyn-Nassau Presbytery met at Huntington Nov. 28. Two young men were taken under care of presbytery as candidates for the ministry: Richard P. Ritter, member of Grace Church, Brooklyn, and George L. Willets, of Central Church, Huntington. Dr. Nelson B. Chester was received from Newark Presbytery, Dr. J. Howard Hobbs from Utica Presbytery, Rev. John J. Munro from Hudson Presbytery (United Presbyterian), and Rev. Robert H. Blackshear from the New York M. E. Conference. Mr. Thomas McIntyre, a licentiate of New York Presbytery, was received and examined, and arrangements were made for his ordination as an evangelist in the First Church, Huntington, Dec. 14. Mr. McIntyre has charge of a mission circuit under care of Huntington First Church, which consists of Huntington Station, Melville and Dix Hills. Rev. J. G. Holdcroft, member of presbytery, and here on furlough from Korea, addressed presbytery.

Lafayette Avenue Church has opened a week-day church school. Dr. Alder, superintendent of the Sabbath school, and Mr. Clee, pastor's assistant, have given attention to the plans for the school, with the fullest co-operation of the pastor, Dr. C. C. Albertson.

Two new members were received into the Hannibal Church Nov. 27, making nineteen this fall.

The Pompey Church has just held a successful week of evangelistic meetings and a dozen or more will unite with the church.

The Lafayette Church is rejoicing over the completion of their new parish house. It was erected at a cost of $2,700 and has been dedicated free of debt. There is an increasing missionary spirit in the church, which was manifest in the establishment of "the Overseas Hospital Work." Work is carried on for the Siang Tun Hospital in China. The Lafayette Church recently gave over $400 for the Near East Relief work. This church also has the distinction of having more candidates for the ministry than any other church in the presbytery. Four young men are studying to become ministers or missionaries.

The East Genesee Church of Syracuse carried off first honors in a city-wide campaign for increased membership and attendance of men's classes in the Sabbath school. There were over thirty schools in the contest and the East Genesee percentage of gain was 273. Rev. John R. Woodcock is pastor.

The next regular meeting of the Presbytery of Syracuse will be held in the Fourth Church of Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 12. The Stewardship Committee of the New Era will conduct a conference under the leadership of Secretary David McConaughy.

OBITUARY

Obituary Notices at the rate of 75c per 100 words

HUMISTON—Mrs. Margaret J. Voris Humiston died at her home in Berwyn, Ill., Nov. 26, 1921. She was born near Manchester, Adams County, Ohio, Aug. 1, 1835, and was the youngest daughter of Dr. William M. Voris and his wife, Elizabeth W. Means. Her paternal descent was from pioneer Dutch colonists of New York. Her father was a talented and beloved physician of Adams County, whose sudden death from cholera early left his young family bereaved indeed. Her mother was the daughter of Colonel John Means, who in 1819 left a prosperous estate in South Carolina for conscience' sake, in order to bring his slaves to Ohio and liberate them on free soil. Removing at an early age with her mother to Washington County, Ohio, Margaret Voris was educated at an academy in Harmar, now a part of Marietta, O. Her disposition was peculiarly social and capable of warm and loyal friendships. Even to old age the vividness of detail with which her memory recalled the friends and scenes of many years was remarkable. She had in her youth a fine voice and good knowledge of music, so that her singing gave pleasure in many a social gathering. For years she was a member of the choir of her church and often its leader, while she freely gave time to the musical instruction of the Sabbath-school children. In early youth she united with the Warren Presbyterian Church, near Marietta, and became later an acceptable teacher in its Sabbath school. In 1867 she was united in marriage with Henry Humiston and, removing to Chicago, their home ever since has been in that city or its suburbs. Here Mrs. Humiston readily made friends, though never forgetting those of her Ohio home, and here again she gave assistance in Sabbath-school work as health permitted, and also taught in industrial classes for the poor. Her keen interest in Christian missions and generous support thereof never failed as long as life lasted. Her love of reading was second only to her enjoyment of social intercourse. Her vivacity and responsiveness to mirth and good cheer will be remembered appreciatively by her friends. Her husband survives her, and also her two sons, John M. Humiston, of Berwyn, and W. H. Humiston, of New York City. S. J. C.

COWLING—Mrs. J. F. Cowling, wife of Rev. John F. Cowling, recent pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Shelby, O., died on Oct. 21, at Shelby, and was buried on Oct. 25 in the cemetery of that city. Funeral services were conducted by Dr. S. W. Stophlet, of Canal Fulton, O., a long-time friend of the family. Mrs. Cowling was widely known and highly esteemed by all her friends.

KINGSBERY—Mr. I. C. Kingsbery, of Hartford, S. D., died Sept. 8, in the seventieth year of his age, and his wife, Mrs. Lee Curtis Kingsbery, died Nov. 18, in the sixty-ninth year of her age. Both were earnest Christian people. Presbyterians in their early life, and life-long readers of the Herald and Presbyter. Mr. Kingsbery was born at Monticello, Ind., became a member and an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and for thirty-three years was president of the Bank of Hartford. Mrs. Kingsbery was born at Dayton, O. She was a Sabbath-school teacher and devotedly interested in missions. Three children, Mrs. Lois K. Mayes, Albert C. Kingsbery and Howard C. Kingsbery, and a sister, Mrs. M. E. Crowe, survive her. The funerals were conducted in the Methodist Church, of which they had been members at Hartford.

"GOD CARETH FOR YOU."

BY LINNIE HAWLEY DRAKE

Little children, all the day,
In your study, in your play,
Storms or sunshine, all the way
"He careth for you!"

When among the pillows white,
Sweetly sleeping till the light,
Through the dangers of the night,
"He careth for you!"

If before your eyes shall wake
Leave of earth your souls shall take,
Still, dear one, for Jesus' sake,
"He careth for you!"

"Miss November" And the Pink Silk Dress

By MARY McCRAE CULTER

(Copyright, 1921, by Monfort & Co.)

CHAPTER IV.

Nancy Varden went down stairs with a shadow of the smile still lingering about the corners of her mouth, with a bit of the spring of youth in her step, and as she crossed the living-room to greet him, the professor dimly sensed these things and interpreted them as evidences of her joy at seeing him. He would have liked to shake hands with her that he might have the chance to hold her hand in his for a moment. It might more easily pave the way for what he had to say to her: but that ceremony had never been a part of their greetings heretofore, and Nancy did not even dream of offering it then. So the professor sat down again in the big chair from which he had risen when she entered the room, and allowed her to find her own regular seat at the other side of the hearth.

Some way, the weariness and dreariness of the rain-swept day settled down upon Nancy's heart again. The heaviness and monotony of college duties rose up with the gaunt form of the aged professor, and the joyousness of youth, of which the rose-colored dress had whispered, seemed suddenly very far away. A little resentment against the professor for his unwarranted intrusion on such a stormy night kept tugging at her heart. She wanted to be back upstairs in her own room with the whole evening free to examine her feminine treasures. She could hear Mammy Lou's heavy steps overhead, and something of the belligerency of the black fist was conveyed by them to the sympathetic ears of the girl, so that she smiled again, and—seeing the smile—the professor's smug satisfaction returned.

His task was going to be an easy one, after all. As for ensuing arrangements, they could be settled in a very brief time. So he cleared his throat, and began:

"It's—ah!—it is rather a damp evening."

"Yes," Nancy answered mechanically, her eyes on the fire.

"Boarding houses are rather dismal places of abode on such an evening as this."

"Ye-es—I suppose so," Nancy replied with the same abstracted air.

"You, who have never experienced a boarding house can not well conceive how different it is from such a home as this," the professor went on, warming to his subject.

"No-o—I suppose—not," answered Nancy, her eyes on the fire, her thoughts in the room upstairs.

"Doubtless, however, even in such a home as this, one might pine for congenial companionship."

"No—yes—I—suppose so," reiterated Nancy with such an extreme absent-mindedness that even the obtuse professor sensed that she was scarcely listening to his words, and cast her a look of pained surprise which she did not even see. He perceived that he would have to begin again, and cleared his throat so violently that the girl started nervously.

"O—ah!—I believe I must have taken cold today, the professor said, and did not receive a reply. Why should the girl trouble herself to affirm or deny what the man stated as a fact?

"Do you never grow lonely, Miss Nancy, without any one with whom to share your thoughts—with no companion at all in this big house? Are you not sometimes afraid?"

"O, no," said Nancy coming back to earth for a moment, "I am never afraid. I have Mammy Lou—"

"Did you call me, Honey Chile? 'Spects yo' need some moah wood on dat fiah," answered the old negress, proving her anxious eavesdropping by thrusting her head between the portieres that separated living-room and dining-room. "I'll bring some in jes' a minnit."

The professor frowned.

"I do not see, my dear Miss Varden, why you permit such undue familiarity from a negro menial. You should teach her where she belongs, else she will more and more presume to place herself upon an equality with yourself," he remonstrated as soon as Mammy Lou's retreating footsteps were heard.

"Why," answered Nancy, with real indignation in her voice, "Mammy Lou has cared for me and made life easy and comfortable for me ever since my mother died, years ago. She nursed me through all my childish ailments, she comforted me in my childish sorrows, she tenderly cared for my father in his last illness. I have always been—I still am—very dependent upon her, and could not live without her: and I love her, even though her skin is black."

"I fear you mistake gratitude for love," insisted the professor. "It is right and natural for a superior to be grateful to an inferior; but love, my dear Miss Nancy, can only be exchanged by equals."

"How about the love between God and man?" interrupted Miss Varden with a flash of mischief uncommon to her.

"O—ah!—that is an entirely different thing," began the professor, and got no farther because Mammy Lou came bustling in with an armful of wood which she deposited upon the hearth with unpardonable carelessness and with an undue amount of noise. Then she poked and stirred the fire, managing to send a lot of defiant sparks up the chimney and a nice shower of ashes over hearth and rug. Nancy sensed the wrath in the actions of the old negress, thought of the pink silk dress upstairs, and smiled—while the professor frowned impatiently. Some day, he told himself, he'd teach her to stay in her place and to serve her betters in a proper and deferential way.

It took Mammy Lou an unconsciously long to fix the fire to her liking. Then she had to trot away for a hearth broom to brush hearth and rug, and managed to make the professor move his chair out of her way while she was doing it. Altogether, Mammy Lou behaved abominably, and Miss Varden—only smiled and indulgently forgave her, knowing the circumstances; for she knew that Mammy Lou also was thinking about the pink silk dress.

Nancy rose, went over to one of the front windows, and putting aside the curtains, looked out.

"Why," she said, "the rain is over and the stars are shining. You will not have such a disagreeable walk home as you had coming over here, Professor."

It was suspiciously close to being a hint, but the professor did not take it. He merely walked over to the bookshelves scanned the titles of the volumes thereon, while waiting for the offending servant to take her departure, which Mammy Lou finally did with a glance of unmistakable wrath cast in his direction.

Meanwhile, Miss Varden had picked up the evening paper and was casually scanning its pages. She usually spent the greater part of the evenings reading, while the professor scribbled voluminous notes from the books which he studied; but this evening was different from the ordinary ones, to the professor, and he chose to consider her action lacking in proper courtesy.

"I really do not consider the present day newspapers worthy of an intelligent person's attention," he began. "The Press has sold itself to unregenerated society and to unscrupulous business interests. Do you not agree with me, Miss Varden?"

"Um-m-m—yes—I suppose so," answered the girl, her eyes still fixed upon the page before her.

The professor came over and drew up his chair before the fire with a resolute air. It was time for things to be brought to his intended climax.

"My dear Miss Nancy," he said in a tone that forced itself upon the girl's attention. "as you are aware, I have spent very many pleasant evenings here of late—pleasant to myself, and I trust equally pleasant to you. The fact of your lonely and unprotected position has been more and more impressed upon me, and your need for some one upon whom you can lean for direction and to whom you can turn for intelligent companionship. It is true that you are comparatively young in years, yet it is equally evident that you have sensibly left the frivolities of youth behind you and fitted yourself to become a congenial companion for those of riper years. It may be surprising to you to receive an offer of marriage"—the girl fairly gasped. Was this what "offers of marriage" were like?—"from one who has so much the advantage of you in years and in experience; but I trust you also perceive that what some might consider a chasm between us is really only imaginary, and that in spirit, in habits, in inclinations, in all that pertains to settled and elderly character, you and I are one at heart. Your manners, your dignity, your dislike of society, your very dress, all bear evidence of this."

It was an unfortunate allusion; for Nancy's mind flashed upstairs to the shimmering rose-colored silk that was spread upon her bed, and her most rebellious spirit made her long to flash its youthful folds before his elderly eyes. How dare he tell her that she was old—old as he was!

The professor, unconscious of all this, went serenely on:

"I have considered the matter very carefully, Nancy, and have decided that God intends for us to spend our remaining years together. I therefore ask you to become my wife, and trust that you will name as early a day as possible for our nuptials. There is no need for any of the foolish preparations which most women consider necessary for such an event. I am willing to take you just as you are—" but Nancy was on her feet, and was looking at him with an expression that caused the words to die on his lips. She gripped the back of her chair to steady herself, while uncommon color dyed neck and cheeks and brow.

"Professor Darker," she said, "I am not unmindful of the honor you seek to do me, but—really—why—the whole idea is absolutely impossible! I am sorry if any act of mine has produced such false impressions as those you have expressed. Believe me, I have always considered you only in a friendly, fatherly light; for the disparity in years is truly an unbridgeable chasm between us. Please never mention the matter to me again." Her voice trembled with indignation as she ended.

The professor also had risen, and stood looking at her with blank surprise written on his face. Was it possible that all of his carefully-laid plans were thus to be set aside without any consideration of his wishes? The girl was actually rejecting his offer of an unparalleled opportunity for marriage! Had she lost her senses? Could it be that, after all, these much-desired material comforts were not to belong to him? He looked about the pleasant room in a daze. It would be impossible for him to come there any more after such a rejection as he had received.

Miss Varden read the dismayed thought that showed itself upon his face, and said kindly:

"I do not want you to think that you will not be welcome to come here to read, as you have been in the habit of doing; but please remember, that hereafter you must only think of me as the daughter of your old friend—never as your possible wife!"

With a few mumbled words of leave-taking, he made his way from the room and from the house. Mammy Lou shot the bolt behind him with joyful vigor.

"Praise de Lawd!" she exclaimed—which proved that she had been "on guard" behind the portieres to the very last moment of his stay, and rejoiced in his disappointment and his defeat.

STUDIOUS FRANCISCA.

BY MARION TAYLOR.

Francisca is a maiden

Who's eager to be wise.

She reads her books vo-ra-cious-ly

And asks so many "whys"

That teachers all and parents

And aunts and uncles, too,

Are sometimes at their poor wits' ends

To know what they shall do.

They say they'll find some wise men,

With a million books or so

To hear Francisca's questions

And tell her all they know.

They think 'twill keep them busy

Till the rivers all run dry—

But when they tell Francisca,

She only answers, "Why?"

THE OWL AND THE BOY.

Once there was a little boy—

Boo hoo! boo-hoo! boo-hoo!

Who used to cry at eight o'clock,

Boo hoo! boo-hoo! boo-hoo!

"I don't want to go, I will not go, I shan't go to bed," he'd cry,

"I want to sit up till 'leven o'clock, and there isn't sand in my eye!"

Once there was a little Owl—

Too-whit! too-whit! too-hoo!

He lived in a tree, 'way out in the woods,

Too-whit! too-whit! too-hoo!

Said the sleepy little Owl, when the dark came down, and he nodded his weary head,

"If I were a boy, in a cosy house, I know

I'd go right to bed!"

For owls are very wise, you know,

And a long, long night makes a little lad grow! Ex.

RAINBOW GOLD.

BY FAYNE N. MERRIMAN.

"I wonder if there really is a pot of gold at the end of the rainbow?" said Delia to herself as she scampered down the garden path to the gate. "If it is I am sure it must be over there in Mrs. Bennet's garden. It ends right there."

"Don't get your feet wet, dear," cautioned her mother from the porch and Delia ran back.

"May I put on my boots and raincoat and run and see if there is a really truly pot of gold at the end of the rainbow?" she asked, her eyes dancing with excitement.

"I am afraid it is a long way from here to the end of the rainbow," laughed her mother.

Delia shook her head. "I think it ends right over in Mrs. Bennet's back garden," she said.

"Very well, run along and see if you can find you pot of gold. But remember if you do, my dear, that the truest pleasure that can come from a pot of gold is in the sharing of it."

"I will," promised Delia and her mother laughed and kissed her eager little face.

Delia ran as hard as she could until she came to the fence between the road and Mrs. Bennet's lovely garden. It did truly seem as if the rainbow ended just beyond the big pepper tree at the back of the garden. She opened the big gate.

"Why, if it isn't Delia!" exclaimed Mrs. Bennet, coming down the steps to meet her. "What can I do for you, dear, this rainy day?"

"I want to look for the pot of gold in your garden," said Delia excitedly. "May I, please?"

"The pot of gold?" Mrs Bennet was puzzled.

"At the end of the rainbow," explained Delia patiently. "It seems to end behind your pepper tree."

"Why so it does," agreed the other. "I will go with you and we will look."

So Delia took her hand and they wandered down the wet path through the wonderful garden to the pepper tree. And as they passed beyond it Delia gave a glad shout and danced up and down.

"The gold! The gold!" she cried. For just beyond the tree was a big bed of marigolds.

"Sure enough," said Mrs. Bennet, "and it's the most beautiful gold in the world. You may gather as much as your two little hands can carry."

"I'm glad I followed the rainbow," said Delia happily to herself, as she trudged home with her gay burden. And then she remembered her mother's words and stopped.

"I wonder who I shall share my gold with," she said slowly. "I believe I will take half of it to old Mrs. Walsh because she is too old to follow the rainbow herself. I wonder if she will like my kind of gold?"

But if you could have seen Grandma Walsh's face light up when she saw the flowers you would not have wondered, but would have wanted to follow the rainbow too.—Child's Hour.

MAKING SMILES.

Come and go out to the front yard gate with me and see me make some smiles. They are very fine, and yet are inexpensive and very easily made.

I'll tell you how I do it. In November, when my neighbor pruned her fine roses, I took forty-eight of the cuttings and put them in the ground just where I wished them to grow, with a handful of clean sand about the lower end. Over each was put a glass fruit jar, hilling up the earth about these protectors. These were left on through the winter and until the spring was well advanced. Then I had forty-three small rosebushes, which with a little cultivation grew rapidly and soon began to bloom.

Now the smile factory is ready. I go out near the front gate, where the roses are in a row along the drive, and wait for some one to fit a smile on. Judging from what I hear them say, the girls must have considerable trouble fitting their frocks. But I never fail to fit a fine smile on any one—fat, lean, tall, short, old or young—the very first trial.

Here come two bright girls on their way to school. "Take your choice," I call as I hold up an American Beauty and a La France. Each pins one on her shirt-waist, and with a hearty "Thank you, thank you," they trip away, wearing two smiles that would grace a queen.

Next a young man comes spinning by on his bicycle. I hold up a fine bud, with a beckoning motion. Of course, he stops, and I give him a bud, with a pin to fasten it on the lapel of his coat. The smile he carries away is a becoming companion for the lovely rosebud.

An old black mammy has been down town to deliver the week's washing to several families. The black face looks tired and sad. "Mammy, let me give you these two big red roses." "O, thank you! Ain't they sweet?" And with a courtesy she goes on, the dear old motherly face illumined with a smile that is good to see.

Toward evening, a railroad laborer passes with empty dinner pail, going home. "Take these to the wife," and I hand him a bunch of beauties. A smile lights up the toil-hardened face, and the step is sprightlier as he goes on down the track.

"Would you like this to wear?" And as the little daughter of Ham goes on her way, a smile has transformed her into an ebony cherub.

And so I may and so I will go indefinitely making smiles that suggest that land where there shall be no tears. And every time I fit one of these new-made smiles on another's face I feel one playing over my own face.

Does my smile factory pay? Indeed it does—pays big dividends. Start one yourself; not much capital is necessary. And, judging from the sober, sad, grief-drawn, toil hardened, and care-worn faces, there are not now nearly enough smiles made to go around.

Every day I pass a yard at a street-crossing that is radiant with roses, and none of them are ever cut. I wish I could have it for a few weeks at least; I'd establish in the corner, where so many smileless people pass, a free smile dispensary. And as long as the roses lasted, that should be the most smileful street corner in town.—Ex.

THE BOYS WE LIKE.

The boy who never makes fun of old age, no matter how decrepit or unfortunate or evil it may be. God's hand rests lovingly on the aged head.

The boy who never calls anybody names, no matter what anybody calls him. The boy who is never cruel.

The boy who never lies. Even white lies leave black spots on the character.

The boy who never makes fun of a companion because of a misfortune he could not help.

The boy who never hesitates to say "No" when asked to do a wrong thing.

The boy who never quarrels.

The boy who never forgets that God made him to be a joyous, loving, helpful being.—The Philadelphia Public Ledger.

POOR BOYS WHO BECAME FAMOUS.

Charles Dickens was a label sticker in a shoe-blacking factory.

Michael Faraday, the famous chemist and physicist, was a journeyman book-binder, the son of a blacksmith.

Benjamin Franklin was a journeyman printer, the son of a tallow chandler.

Giuseppe Garibaldi, whom Italians revere as their liberator, was the son of a sailor, and was at various times a candle-maker and a small farmer.

Ben Johnson, on whose grave in Westminster Abbey is the famous inscription, "O rare Ben Johnson," was a poor boy, the stepson of a bricklayer.

Thomas Moore, author of the "Irish Melodies," was the son of a country grocer.

Napoleon was a penniless second lieutenant in 1785; in 1804 he was crowned an emperor.

Samuel Richardson, one of the first famous novelists, was a journeyman printer, the son of a carpenter.

William Shakespeare was the son of a glover in a little country town; both his grandfathers were husbandmen.—Ex.

THE WONDERFUL JAR.

BY DAISY D. STEPHENSON.

There's a wonderful jar on the low pantry shelf.

(I'm sure I could find it at midnight, myself.)

It looks like a common, old, every-day thing.

But its contents would gladden the eyes of a king.

When school is dismissed, I go hippety-hop

Toward home, and I tell you I never once stop

Till I get to that jar! Then I reach in my hand

For a cooky or cruller—the best in the land!

It never is empty—we boys always are! And mother's the fairy that fills up the jar!

Yea God is love! and this I trust,
Though summer is over and sweetness done,

That all my lilies are safe in the dust,

The key to the religious life of a college is its faculty.

No one has a right to insist upon an ideal for his Church or his neighbors that he is unwilling to accept for himself as an individual. The only man who is entitled to criticise the prayer meeting is he who is earnestly trying to improve it—and he will be in better business.

"Quick as the apple of an eye,
O God; my conscience make:
Awake my soul when sin is nigh,
And keep it still awake."

HUMAN LIMITATIONS.

Man has done so much in the way of invention and discovery that he forgets how many things he can not do. A grain of wheat extracts from the soil and air the elements that are turned into the ripened grain which can be used for food. But the chemist can not take a handful of earth and a portion of atmosphere and by his laboratory processes get the flour. The elements are all there. The humble grain of wheat extracts them, but man can not. Before many other like tasks he stands powerless. "Why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" He has not much in himself to make him proud. The earth is full of things he can not do.

BLACK SHEEP.

Not every family has a straying wanderer from the path of rectitude, but practically every person has at least a distant relative who might be thus described. What should be the attitude toward the "black sheep" of the family?

Is not the answer fully given in the parable of the Prodigal Son? But do not rush into conclusions too quickly with that parable.

The expectant and forgiving disposition is the most outstanding teaching of this famous parable. The father was watching for his sinful son to return, and was ready to meet him with embraces and gifts.

Nevertheless Jesus was careful to place within that famous story the repentance of the prodigal.

PURCHASED POPULARITY.

The business of hiring applause has long been conducted in different parts of the world. In France, for example, the professional claqueur is attached to practically all theaters. But it was somewhat surprising to read recently of the intricacies of this conspiracy against reality. We are told that the engaging of clagues is spreading, and applause is now "ordered by wire." Vaudeville artists telegraph ahead and have demonstrations arranged. At variety houses the clagues are often sent by song publishing firms, who wait for a particular melody and then burst into noise.

We trust that so far no churches have found it desirable or necessary to purchase applause for their preachers, or to advertise the worth while things in their congregation through the use of professional claqueurs. But we have sometimes wondered why there are so few folks in some congregations, who, without money and without price, are willing to talk things up instead of talking down, and are glad to speak appreciative words of the work of the minister and the development of the congregation.

It remains true that "an ounce of taffy is worth a ton of epitaphy," and a few bouquets of sincere appreciation have a fragrance and value far exceeding all the belated blooms sent in to cover the coffin. Whenever we fail to give honor where honor is due, we wrong the worker and handicap the work.—Reformed Church Messenger.

THE RETORT PERTINENT.

When Evangeline Booth was in Cleveland she was interviewed by a reporter who asked: "Do you think the world is getting better?"

With a quickness of wit she shot back the reply, "Well, I'm doing all I can to make it better. What are you doing?"

We pass the question along, for it's not a question for newspaper reporters alone, nor preachers, nor lay leaders in our churches. It is a question pertinent to every person as he faces the stern reality of life.

ROYAL SOCIAL SERVICE.

King George of England and his older children, the Prince of Wales and Princess Mary, are known for their lack of aristocratic airs. But their younger brother, the Duke of York, goes even farther in the direction of democracy than they. He has set to work to break down class distinctions among the British people. A summer camp where lads from rich homes and aristocratic schools have been living and playing together with equal numbers of factory boys was the duke's own plan, and he paid for it himself.

LIVINGSTONE: A LIVING EPISTLE.

"For four months I lived with him in the same tent and I never found a fault with him. I went to Africa a man prejudiced against religion, but there came to me a long time for reflection. I saw the old man out there, and I asked myself—Why does he stay here? What is it that inspires him? For months after we met I found myself listening to him and wondering at the old man carrying out the words, 'Leave all and follow Me.' But little by little, seeing his piety, his gentleness, his zeal, his earnestness, how he went quietly about his business, I was converted by him."

Thus did the great explorer Stanley write of David Livingstone. It was the daily Christian life of that consecrated missionary, and not any particular thing he said, which made Stanley a Christian believer. Wherever we go, whether on vacation or in our home community, and whatever we may say or do, let us never forget that we take our influence with us for good or ill. Moreover, we are responsible for our influence, just as we are for our precepts and example. Where the few read the epistles that are graven on stone, inscribed on parchments, or printed on paper, the many are constantly reading the living epistles whose daily walk and conversation is either bringing men nearer to Christ or keeping them farther away from him.

Lesson XII—December 18.

PAUL'S LAST WORDS. (II Tim. 4:6-18.)

6. For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.
7. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course. I have kept the faith:
8. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.
9. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me:
10. Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia.
11. Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee: for he is profitable to me for the ministry.
12. And Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.
13. The cloak that I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.
14. Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works:
15. Of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words.
16. At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge.
17. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.
18. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

INTRODUCTORY.

This letter to Timothy is supposed to be the last of the writings of Paul. It is a very impressive thing to read or to hear the last words of any one. The last words of a great many persons are preserved on the pages of literature, and some of them are very impressive. But these expressions of Paul are worthy of most attentive and reverent consideration. He was a great man and a good man and a divinely inspired man. No one since Jesus Christ has had so wide and mighty an influence upon the life of the world. A very large part of the New Testament came from him, and other books speak of him, the book of the Acts being largely given up to the narration of his life and labors. And now that he draws near death he tries to deepen the religious and Christian impressions that he made during his life. The one important matter is the truth of Jesus Christ and the way of salvation through him, and in this book he tries to emphasize, once more, that which he has given his life to explaining and defending.

EXPOSITORY.

6. Paul was conscious that he could not live much longer. His death could not be far away. He had passed through many trying experiences. He had lived for Jesus Christ, and, now that he was near death, he realized that he was to die for Christ. Living and dying he was the Lord's. He was always the servant of Christ. His life had been a living sacrifice. His death was to be a dying sacrifice. He had lived for Christ's sake, and he was to die for Christ's sake. Many times he had suffered. Many times his enemies had tried to destroy him because he served Christ. At last the time had come. He was soon to depart to be with the Lord. To live had been Christ, and to die was to be gain. But it was to be with him as with a sacrifice that had been brought to the altar. He had been ready to do and to bear anything for the sake of Christ. He had presented his body a living sacrifice, and now the final offering was to be made as the hour of his death drew near. Let us live so close to God, in such devotion to Jesus Christ, and in such unquestioning faith, that when we die we shall be ready and glad to go to him who loves us.

7. He contemplates his past life with gladness. In whatever way it is considered he had been faithful and had done his best. It was something like a fight, and he had been courageous and persistent and enduring. He had fought sin and error and wickedness of every kind. So must we if we are Christ's people. We must be good soldiers of the Cross, and must fight worldliness and wickedness and crime and falsehood, and must fight, too, the enemy of our souls, who would destroy us if possible. But Paul said his life was something like a race, or a long journey, and he had kept on to the end. He was a great traveler. He had gone all over the world, preaching the Gospel. He had spoken to many in many places. Let us, ourselves, be busy for Christ. We are to avoid laziness and self-indulgence. We are to be active and alert and diligent to help save this world. But Paul says he had kept the faith. He had held on to his religious fidelity, and he had held on to the vital truth of the Gospel. Let us stand for the truth against infidelity, and against worldliness, today, and be those who can always be counted on for a faithful and believing life.

8. All this was a satisfaction to him, but Paul did not depend upon his own faithfulness for his salvation. He was sure that he was to have a crown of righteousness at last, but he did not expect to win it by his own works. He depended on Christ alone for his salvation. Christ had secured it for him by his own atoning death. It was to be a gift to him at last from Christ. He said that the Lord would give it to him. So let us have this clear faith in Jesus Christ as our only hope of life and acceptance and heaven. Are we living with such faith in him that we are confident of his acceptance of us, and of a crown from him, at last, as a gift? We may if we will. For that crown is not only for Paul, but for us if we wish it, and for all who love Christ, and love to think and know of his coming again, and of our meeting him. If we know he is our Savior, we hope to see him.

9-12. Paul was lonely. He needed help and companionship, but it was hard for him to have with him those whom he needed. Some forsook him as Demas, and as some forsake Christ and his Church today, because the world is more attractive. Some had to go away from him because sent out by him to preach and teach the Gospel in other places. Crescens and Titus and Tychicus he had sent out on important work. The faithful and good physician Luke, who wrote the Gospel of Luke, and the Book of Acts, was with him. So he urges Timothy to come, and to bring Mark. He needed them both to help send out the Gospel. It is a great thing to be useful in the Church of Christ, and it is an honor to these men to be so mentioned, and so appreciated by Paul.

Let us serve Christ, so that he will think of us as useful in his cause.

13. Paul, in his poverty, asks for his cloak to be brought to him. If he had been rich he could have bought what he needed. But he had to be saving. And yet like Christ, he made many rich. So he asks for his books, and he asks for parchment. He may have been hoping to write more letters to some of the churches. Whatever he possessed was to be put to good use for Christ's sake and for the sake of the Church. Whether we have much or little let us use it for good purposes.

14, 15. Here he speaks of one who had done him much harm. Some neglected him and some forsook him, but some did their best to injure and destroy him. But Paul has no feeling of revenge. He leaves him in God's hands, and says that God will deal with him as is right. But he puts Timothy on his guard against him. It is not necessary for us to be bitter or revengeful against the wicked, but it is right for us to be on our guard against them, and to do all we can to counteract the evil they do. Paul had been lonely and forsaken on many occasions, and, on looking back over a long life, he had many sorrowful reminiscences. But although many had forsaken him at various times he does not rail against them, but prays God that it may not be laid to their account. This reminds us of the last words of Stephen and of Christ. It is Christian to forgive, or to pray God that those who have done us wrong may be led to repentance and faith, and be delivered from the evil consequences of their sins.

17, 18. These are beautiful words of gratitude and appreciation of the goodness and mercy of God. Notwithstanding all the trials he had been compelled to go through, Paul had always had deliverance and help from God. He had especially longed to be delivered and strengthened in order that he might be able to preach the Gospel. It was for this that he asked wisdom and strength and help. It was for this that the Lord upheld him. God not only had kept him, but Paul was sure that he would do the same for others, and bring him at last to his heavenly kingdom. It is blessed to serve so good a Master. He will not only take care of us in order that we may be able to work efficiently and successfully, but he will at last bring us to a personal enjoyment of himself and of his eternal home. It is a joy to read such words as these and to know that this is the sort of satisfaction and joy that may fill the hearts of all who really love and trust and serve Christ. Death is not a terrible event for God's people. It is simply a close of the earthly life and service, and a summons to the presence and home of the Lord and Savior.

WHAT TO TEACH A BOY.

John Smith—not anybody's John Smith—but the head master of Harrow School from 1854 to 1879 and a great Christian educator, used to say: "Teach a boy three things. Teach him to speak the truth; teach him to honor his mother, and teach him to believe in the future life." That is the rule of three for a boy's life according to a great teacher of boys. We often speak about the first two, the love of truth and the love of mother, but we seldom hear about the future life, when we hear men talk of boys. Yet there cannot be a firm faith without a firm future and a long reach through time. Teach your boy that his education is not for time, but for timeless eternity and that the future is in Jesus' hands.—The Family Altar.

"THE ILLUMINATED AND ILLUMINATING TEACHER."

BY ARTHUR B. PATTEN.

Godspeed to the teachers of childhood,
And lovers and leaders of Youth,
Who live in the spirit of Jesus,
And lift up his banner of Truth.

Who learn of the Teacher of teachers,
And serve in the school of his grace,
Unveiling his marvelous Gospel,
Reading the light of his face.

God hallow their tasks and their talents,
And keep them as winsome as wise,
Till won by their love and their leading,
A new generation shall rise.

So hail to the teachers devoted
As leaders and lovers of Truth,
Who brighten the Church for the Children,
And blazon the pathway of Youth.

SELFISHNESS.

The darkness of the world into which Jesus came as Light was not due so much to ignorance as to sin, the sin of selfishness. The darkness of ignorance is being rapidly dissipated, but the shadows of selfishness are still dark and heavy. The day will not break and drive away these shadows until it is generally recognized that the cause of distressing conditions is selfishness and a united attack is made upon this curse of mankind.

I WAS A STRANGER.

We are all strangers to many. Extensive as may be our acquaintance, great as may be the number we call friends, there are a great many people who do not know us and a great many people whom we do not know. Most of us, no doubt, have been in places or under conditions where this strangeness oppressed, where we longed for a familiar face, or a voice whose tones we could recognize.

The Master commended those who helped the stranger, who sought to relieve his loneliness when he said: "I was a stranger, and ye took me in."

A young man, not much more than a boy, went to a church asking admission. Timid, shrinking, knowing but few of the members, he was lonely. Possible it showed in his face. A leading member, busy with his work, passed him, looked into his face, saw his lonely look, reached out his hand, saying, "What is your name? I don't know you, but I want to know you," and passed on. In that young man's heart was a song of joy, and ever after he cherished the man as a friend.

How often is there a failure to take the stranger in when he comes into the church services. Of course at times it is the stranger's fault. As soon as the benediction is given he bolts from the house, not giving anyone an opportunity to speak to him. There are some churches that do not care for strangers—they are a sort of a family club, and do not care to have their church home life interfered with by the coming of strangers—but they are few. Most churches are glad to have the strangers come, but when they do come they fail to take them in by the cheery greeting or the warm handclasp.

Some churches have taken the stranger in and have found that they had taken in the Christ in the form of one of his disciples who brought them blessing and aid along many lines—gave them more than they had given him.

The strangers are about you, on your streets, in your gathering, in your church. Take them in, and the Master will say to you: "I was a stranger, and ye took me in."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

FIRST THINGS FIRST.

A girl said to her friend, "Isn't that lovely?" as she held up an elaborate piece which she had embroidered. She had taken nearly four weeks to do this work. But that same girl had given up her class of little girls in the primary department of a mission Sunday school because, as she said, she "simply had no time in which to prepare the lesson." Seek to use time in the best way. The poet puts it in these words:

"The boy that by addition grows,
And suffers no subtraction,
Who multiplies the thing he knows,
And carries every fraction;
Who will divide his precious time,
The due proportion giving,
To sure success aloft will climb,
Interest compound receiving."

The beauty of the character of Gideon is mainly discovered in his absolute, and minute and unquestioning obedience. Linked with this was a deep humility, and unselfishness, which made him willing to efface himself that God might have all the glory.

PRAYER MEETING, DECEMBER 18.

ENDEAVOR TOPIC: Conscience: Teaching It, Quickening It, Obeying It. Prov. 20:27; Acts 4:13-20.

There is a difference between right and wrong, and we, as human beings who are possessed of moral nature or intelligence, are bound to do what we know to be right, and to avoid and oppose what we know to be wrong. That faculty that demands that we shall do what we believe to be right, and to abstain from what we believe to be wrong, is Conscience. God has given it to us and he expects us to regard and obey it.

When we respect and obey our Conscience, we are in a very different attitude from that in which we disregarded and disobey its injunctions. If we maintain a sensitive relation to conscience it continues to warn us and we remain sensitive to its warnings; but if we are wilful and neglectful and disobedient, we become hardened to its voice, and morally lost and ruined. It is as with an alarm clock. It one responds to its alarm it continues to arouse him in the morning, but if he neglects to respond to it, he soon becomes accustomed to it and does not awaken when it rings. If we are conscientious we shall respond carefully to the voice of conscience when it warns. Otherwise we grow to be hardened and "past feeling."

We have this faculty that impels us to do right and leave undone what is wrong, and on our peril we must regard its dictates. But of itself it does not know what is right and wrong. This we must learn, and when we have learned we are bound to teach others. The Bible is our great source of information as to what is right and wrong. God tells us there, and when he tells us we must accept his teaching, and live in accordance with it, and must be conscientious in abiding by it in every particular.

It is not enough then for one to be conscientious. He must know the real difference between right and wrong, and the Bible is the source of information. For one to do what is wrong, and then say that he is really conscientious about it, shows great ignorance as to moral matters. For one to believe a thing to be right when it is not right does not make it right. In the same way if one is walking toward the west, for him to believe that he is walking toward the east does not change the fact that he is walking toward the west. A woman with the best of motherly motives gave her child a dose of deadly poison when she thought she was giving it good medicine, but it was poison all the same. A man, aroused in the night, thought he saw a burglar in the room and fired his revolver. But he was mistaken about the burglar and killed his own wife. So we see that it is very important that we have correct information as to what is right and wrong, or we may do sadly wrong things believing it to be right. We may say we were conscientious, but we did an evil thing all the same.

All this shows us how very careful we should be in the study of God's Word, in order to know what he says is right. We must do what is really right. We must do what God tells us to do. We must not set up wrong standards for ourselves, and we must not take the shallow judgments and notions of worldly people in regard to such important matters. We must study the Bible, and we must seek the counsel of wise and good people who know a great deal about the Bible. We must attend church and hear good sermons; must read good books and our church papers, and find out in this way what it is that is right in God's sight, as to the things that we are to believe and the things that we are to do. For God's Word is the only rule given to direct us as to what we are to believe concerning God and what duty God requires of man.

Knowing our duty, we are to be conscientious and prayerful in doing it. Let us not make mistakes. Let us not neglect the voice of conscience. Stifle its voice once and it does not speak so clearly the next time. Let us be attentive and obedient to the voice of God's Holy Spirit who speaks through the voice of conscience and bids us ever to do the will of God.

PRAYER MEETING

DECEMBER 14.

THE NATURE AND VALUE OF TRUE CHARITY.

I Corinthians 13.

Love is one of the great and distinguishing attitudes of God, and is presented in the Bible as an essential element in the heart and life of all God's children. We are called on to love our neighbors as ourselves, and a neighbor is any one to whom we may do good.

Charity is a word which has come to be applied almost exclusively to alms-giving, but this was not the original or essential meaning of the word, nor is this what is meant by the word in this great chapter which we are now studying, this thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. The real meaning is simply love; a Christian, pure, kind and tender love, as near like the love of God as can come into the hearts of men.

The apostle urges the possession of this love upon all Christians, and says it is better and greater than all other possessions and endowments. It is the solvent of all difficulties, and the crowning characteristic and trait of Christian life. He who has it in his heart and life has found the most excellent qualification in Christian living and usefulness, and is prepared and disposed by it for the best usefulness in the service of God and in helpfulness to his fellow-men.

So essential is it to Christian life that nothing else can take its place. Learning, eloquence and philosophy are as mere nothing. Great religious insight, and knowledge of truth and doctrine, and wonder-working power, are all of them, great as they are, less than this simple spirit of love that may dwell in the heart of even the least-educated and inexperienced among God's people. When God would make us greatly useful and distinguished in his kingdom, he asks us to be something that is within reach of us all, if only our hearts are right and good.

Even dying as a martyr is not so great a thing as living with the love of God in our hearts, and all the alms-giving imaginable is not so great as the giving of simple love to all of God's people who are around us and in need of our affection. To be God's children, and then to have Christian love to all his children, is the highest point in Christian living to which we may attain.

We may think we are very excellent Christians, and that we are models in most of the points of our daily lives. But suppose we try ourselves by the test of this chapter. Would it be possible for me, whoever I may be, to put my own personal name in the place of "Charity" in this chapter? Could I say that I suffer long and am kind, that I never vaunt myself, never seek my own advantage selfishly, am not easily provoked, and think no evil of others; that I do not rejoice in any part of wrong-doing, but always rejoice in the triumph of truth and righteousness; that I bear all things that come to me in God's providence; that I never fail or come short, but am always full of the right spirit and live always as a child of God should?

We are sure that none of us would dare to say all of these things about ourselves, and yet they should all be true of us. Nor do we know of any other human being of whom they would all be true, although they should be true of every professed Christian.

But we need not despair. This very spirit of love does exist. We can put the name of Christ in every place in every verse of this whole chapter, and we must assent to the statement that his name fits in perfectly. Christ is all of that. Christ does all of that. This sort of charity or love exists. It exists in the heart and life of Christ.

If we would come up to the real spirit and form of true Christian life, it must be by having Christ richly within us. Without him we can do nothing. With him we can be and can do all things good.

UNITED PRAYER.

For some three years the Great Commission Prayer League has been urging believers to observe the last night of the year as a special time set apart for prayer for a mighty revival throughout the world. Each year a larger number of believers are entering into the plan. It is necessary to fix upon some set time for all to be together, and thus be within the promises for collective prayer, as in Matt. 18: 19-20, Rom. 15: 30, and in accord with the suggestion found in 2 Cor. 1: 11, Phil. 1: 19, Is. 62: 6-12, etc. Hence this last night of the year is suggested. Perhaps there could be no more appropriate time.

OUR EXCHANGES

CENTER OF WORLD ACTIVITY.

One thing the Washington conference advertises by the very fact of its existence—the center of the world's activity is no longer in Europe.—The Villager.

IMMIGRATION.

Congress has enacted restrictions on immigration that hold until next summer. Now is the time to press Congress to enact restrictions to hold at least a generation.—Minneapolis Journal.

CAN BE OVERDONE.

The suggestion is freely voiced that too much preparedness may be almost as bad as none at all.—Washington Star.

ON THE ROAD TO NORMALCY

One million idle men have found work in the United States in the last month, according to government reports prepared for the permanent committee on unemployment. This indicates a stabilization of wages, an adjustment to a new level of costs, and a willingness to give a day's work for a day's pay and 2,000 pounds for a ton of commodities, which will work together for sound prosperity.—Chicago Tribune.

QUITE A FAMILY AFFAIR.

No fewer than four outstanding foreign figures of the Washington Conference have American wives—a circumstance believed to have contributed to no little extent to their assignment to the parley. Three British representatives are married to American women—Lord Lee of Fareham, a designated delegate; Ambassador Geddes, who will sit on the side line for emergency use, and Admiral Beatty who will be the chief British naval adviser.

The fourth Conference delegate from abroad, whose wife is American, is Ambassador Jusseraud, of France.—Presbyterian Witness.

ADVICE FOR JEWS AND ALSO CHRISTIANS.

Whenever a Jew engages in an unlawful business or one that is even tainted though not exactly criminal, he commits an offense against the public weal and a great wrong against his co-religionists who must share in the disrepute of his misdoing. Public opinion unfortunately judges Jews en masse and by their worst and not by their best or even their average. It, therefore, behooves one and all of us, not only to be careful of our own acts but to facilitate in every way the exposure and punishment of misdemeanants and to see that they are put outside of the pale of our religious and social organizations.—American Israelite.

THE BIBLE UNION OF CHINA.

An attempt has been made to create the impression that the Bible Union formed in the foreign mission field has created strife. There is a way of testing the question as to who are causing the friction in the foreign field. Does the Bible Union demand anything that the Churches sending out missionaries and supporting them, have not always demanded? If not, what right has any one to charge it with making trouble? The real troublers of Israel are those who have drifted away from sound doctrine. After careful consideration of the facts, so far as we can get them, we are convinced that there was real need of this Bible Union of China.—Presbyterian Banner.

SO EVERYWHERE.

Merchants of Windsor, Ont., say that horse racing in that city interferes with business as customers bet their money and let their bills and other accounts run. The benefits derived by some few merchants is more than offset by the losses of the others.—Presbyterian Witness.

THE PHILIPPINES.

The Philippines are now of age, and they want to leave the parental roof—but at the same time they expect dad to pay their debts.—Christian Stateman.

HARD WORKERS IN UTAH

Utah's Westminster College has some fine specimens of young manhood working their way through school. There are two brothers over six feet tall, sons of a home missionary working in a small country Mormon town of Wyoming.

The elder boy won the college debating prize last year, and was the captain of this year's football team. The younger was also a member of the first team, and is one of Westminster's best students.

Both of these boys, who live in a private home because they were crowded out of the boy's dormitory, are working their way through school with the very slightest help from home. One arises at 5:30 o'clock to get up steam at the college heating plant, and the other tends the furnaces from evening dinner time until the fires are banked at 10:30. They are leaders in general college activities.

Westminster never had so many students working their way as this year. It throws a heavy burden on the college to provide work for them all, but it is worth doing. For information as to other students, address President H. W. Rehder, D.D., Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah.

GENERAL NEWS

CONGRESS IN REGULAR SESSION.

The regular session of the sixty-seventh Congress convened on Monday.

After a ten-day rest from the labors of the extra session, House and Senate returned to the Capitol to face tasks which, leaders predict, will occupy seven months, dovetailing into the next Congressional campaign.

Nearly a dozen questions of legislative policy confront the members, while scores of lesser matters, long pent up in the crowded calendar of business, will be pressed for action by their sponsors.

JAPAN DEMANDS GREATER NAVY.

Japan's proposal for a 70 per cent fleet, as necessary to her national security instead of a 60 per cent fleet, formally was presented to the United States and Great Britain last Thursday.

Baron Admiral Kato, senior Japanese delegate, communicated it personally to Secretary Charles E. Hughes and Arthur J. Balfour.

It is said in Japanese quarters to have the full support of the Japanese Cabinet and the Diplomatic Advisory Council in Tokyo.

American and British naval experts, standing together on Secretary Hughes's "5-5-3" plan as the only one fair to all Powers, regard the Japanese proposal as wholly unacceptable.

In the opinion of certain of the American delegates the situation is delicate, but not without hope that the Japanese ultimately will accept the original plan.

The seriousness of the turn of affairs, in the opinion of the Americans, is that Japan, in persisting in her request for a "10-10" ratio, makes a stroke at the fundamental idea on which Secretary Hughes' proposal is based.

Japan's proposal, it was disclosed, was based not on a calculation of the strength of the existing American, British and Japanese fleets, but upon her estimate of necessity for national security.

CHINA WINS POINT IN CONFERENCE.

China won further concessions in the conference of the nine Powers on questions affecting the Pacific and Far East.

In conformity with the Root resolution, declaring for the territorial and administrative integrity of China, the Pacific and Far Eastern Committee adopted resolutions looking to abandonment of foreign Courts in China.

The resolutions, drafted by the sub-committee headed by Senator Henry C. Lodge, provide for an international commission of jurists, which is to report within a year whether the Chinese laws and Court practices warrant abandonment of the foreign Courts created under treaties granting extraterritorial rights in China.

Immediately these resolutions were adopted the Chinese delegates pressed another of their "ten points"—that declaring withdrawal of all foreign troops from Chinese soil, and also for abandonment of foreign telegraph, radio and police wire systems.

MAINTENANCE OF PRESENT PHILIPPINE STATUS RECOMMENDED.

The Philippine Islands should remain in their "present general status" until the residents there "have had time to absorb and master thoroughly the power already in their hands," Major General Leonard Wood, now Governor General, and W. Cameron Forbes, former Governor General, assert in their report to President Harding, based on six months of study of conditions in the islands.

"We are convinced," says their report, "that it would be a betrayal of the Philippine public, a misfortune to the American public, a distinct step backward in the path of progress and a discreditable neglect to our national duty if we were to withdraw from the islands and terminate our relationship there without giving to the Filipinos the best possible chance to have an orderly and permanently stable government.

"We feel that, with all of their many excellent qualities, the experience of the past eight years, during which they have had practical autonomy, has not been such as to justify the public of the United States in relinquishing supervision of the Government of the Philippine Islands, withdrawing their army and navy and leaving the islands a prey to any powerful nation coveting their rich soil and potential commercial advantages."

These observations of the investigators are contained in the "general conclusions," and "recommendations" made in the report, which was made public last week.

CHANGES ORDERED BY RAIL BOARD.

A decision recognizing the "open shop" principle, as applied to the railroads, and promulgating 148 new working rules to govern the six federated railroad shop crafts, was handed down by the United States Railroad Labor Board last week.

The decision, which supplants the national agreements entered into by the employes with the United States Railroad Administration, will form the groundwork upon which the adjudication of all future wage disputes between railroads and their employes will be based.

The ruling opens the way for the railroads to ask for lower wages for the shop crafts employes, the Labor Board having announced that it would consider no further wage reductions for any class of employes until working rules for that class has been disposed of.

The new rules will affect approximately 400,000 employes and become effective immediately. When normal conditions are restored it is estimated that fully 450,000 men will be effected and the railroads will have an annual pay roll saving of approximately $50,000,000.

This decision, transcending in basic importance the $400,000,000 wage cut of last July, was unanimous, no group of the Labor Board presenting a dissenting opinion.

Attorneys for Governor Len. C. Small of Illinois, and Vernon Curtiss, of Grant Park, Ill., banker, open the fight here to save them from trial on charges of embezzlement and confidence game indictments, returned by the Sangamon County grand jury last July.

The attorneys are prepared to argue before Judge Clarence O. Edwards that the indictments are null and void because of faults in their construction, because the grand jury made public with them a so-called "special return," the constitutionality of which is questioned, and because the grand jury itself was drawn and organized illegally.

The expedition sent out last Spring to explore Baffin land under command of Donald McMillan, Peary's former chief lieutenant, has been heard from. They are now in winter quarters at the south end of Baffin land.

Widespread rioting broke out in Vienna last week. The violence was directed argely against the hotels and restaurants patronized by foreign visitors.

Reports that a merger of seven or more of the independent steel companies is contemplated have been confirmed.

The proposed consolidation will take in all the leading producers and manufacturers with the exception of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Jones & Laughlin Company, of Pittsburgh.

The capitalization of the various companies concerned in the proposed consolidation approximates $500,000,000, and the products of the various companies cover almost every branch of the steel and iron industry.

This consolidation, if effected, will be second in importance to the United States Steel Corporation, now the dominant organization in the industry.

Adoption of a definite agreement for future meetings to discuss world problems is hoped for by President Harding before the arms conference ends.

It was stated that, although the President does not propose to introduce formally the subject into the negotiation until the naval and Far Eastern discussions have reached a decision, he does expect that before the delegates separate they will agree on a plan by which similar discussions will take place in the future.

At the same time it was made known that in drafting the framework of his plan, the President was endeavoring to avoid the impression that any resulting "association of nations" might become a rival of the League of Nations organized at Versailles.

A sale by the Central Railroad of New Jersey of its holdings in the Lehigh Valley and Wilkesbarre Coal Company to a syndicate formerly identified with the latter, together with local interests, involves approximately $32,500,000, according to reports current in the New York financial district.

This is one of the largest transactions affecting any of the important anthracite properties in the Pennsylvania field since the general decree issued by the United States Supreme Court directing all railroads owning coal lands to separate them from parent companies.

Six men armed with sawed-off shotguns, blew open the safe of the Argonaut Mine, one of the richest in California, last week, and escaped with more than $60,000 in gold amalgam, in two automobiles, driven by others who had acted as lookouts during the robbery.

The loot was a month's clean-up for the mine, whose production had averaged nearly $100,000 a month for the last thirty-five years. Its weight was 455 pounds, the amalgam being in the form of balls of ore mixed with quicksilver.

Business conditions in Mexico are beginning to show improvement, according to the monthly cable report from the United States Trade Commission to the Department of Commerce. The readjustment process continues, and while it is distressing in many ways, "it has brought an air of encouragement, particularly since it is known that several business concerns have safely passed through the crisis," states the report.

Prices on general food supplies are lower, while labor is plentiful and cheaper. There is overstocking in several markets, with decreases in imports.

"Political conditions continue quiet," while "industrial unrest is general," the report continues.

"The failure of the government to make a favorable settlement of the Agrarian question, affecting the farmers and to Article 127 of the constitution of 1917, providing for the regulation of the hours, wages and conditions of labor affecting industrialists, is said to have some bearing on the industrial unrest. The principal cause, however, is believed to be the distressing readjustment process."

What archaeologists say may prove to be one of the most important relics ever found in Palestine is reported by Dr. Clarence S. Fisher, head of the University of Pennsylvania's expedition to the Holy Land.

It was a large stone stela, on which were engraved about 30 parallel lines in Egyptian hieroglyphics, unearthed at Beisan (Beth-Shan of the Bible), the first Egyptian inscriptions ever found in Palestine.

University museum officials said the stone apparently was found on the level of the early Christian city of Beisan, and that if it proved to have been placed there originally it would establish a connection, hitherto unknown, between Egypt and Palestine.

THE PINEAPPLE AS A WINTER DESSERT.

The pineapple is a general favorite, and those who have delicate throats will find its juice soothing and easy to digest. The active principal of the pineapple bromelase is a vegetable pepsin; for this reason it is necessary to cook pineapple before using it, in making gelatin desserts.

Chemists used the pineapple for making peptone, which is used by people with delicate stomachs and by invalids.

Many housewives have formed the habit of serving pineapple salad with the meat course because of its digestive qualities. The juice of the pineapple contains the natural ferments of healthy digestion and as an aid for this purpose, it has no equal.

To prepare pineapple—Cut off the top and bottom and with a sharp knife slice the pineapple and then lay each slice on a cutting board and trim off the rind. This method of preparation prevents waste and then lessens the chances of cutting the fingers.

* * *

Canned Pineapple—Prepare the slices as directed and then lay the slices in a preserving kettle and add just enough water to cover and cook slowly until tender, this usually taking about twenty minutes. Let cool and then lift the slices carefully into jars. Now measure the liquid in a kettle and add one cup of sugar to each cup of liquid. Return to the preserving kettle and boil for ten minutes. Pour over the fruit in the jars and fill to overflowing. Adjust the rubber and lid and partially seal. Place in hot water bath and process for thirty minutes after the boiling starts.

Crushed Pineapple—The whole pineapple must be pared for this and then grated. Measure and place in the preserving kettle and add one cup of water, three cups of sugar to every five cups of grated pineapple. Stir to dissolve the sugar and then bring to a boil and cook slowly for twenty minutes. Cool and then fill into jars and adjust the rubber and lid and partially tighten. Process for thirty minutes in hot water bath.

Note attentively that when you place the lids on the jars, just tighten them as far as they will go without forcing, then given one-half turn back. This is necessary to prevent the steam accumulating in the jars and bursting them.

* * *

Pineapple Preserve—Prepare the pineapple the same as for the crushed pineapple and to six cups of the pineapple add three and a half cups of sugar. Let the sugar melt slowly and cook until thick. Fill scalding hot into half pint jars and seal securely.

* * *

Pineapple Jam—Prepare six cups of pineapple as for crushed pineapple and add two pints of finely chopped rhubarb and two cups of suager. Let the sugar dissolve slowly and then cook very slowly until thick like jam. Place an asbestos mat under the preserving kettle and stir with a wooden spoon. Watch constantly, for once burned this is wasted.

* * *

Pineapple Jelly—Chop very fine sufficient rhubarb to measure two quarts. Add six cups of pineapple prepared as for crushed pineapple and two cups of water. Bring slowly to a boil and cook until the rhubarb is very soft. Turn into a jelly bag and let drip. Measure and return this liquid to the preserving kettle. Boil for fifteen minutes and then add three-quarters cup of sugar for each cup of juice. Boil for ten minutes or until 221 degrees Fahrenheit is reached on candy thermometer. Fill into sterilized glasses and then cool and cover with paraffin. Store in the usual jelly manner.

Note that the pineapple must be underripe. The fully ripe fruit lacks sufficient pectin for successful jelly making.

* * *

Pineapple Pie—Place in a saucepan one cup of crushed pineapple, two-thirds cup of sugar, one-half cup of water, six level tablespoons of cornstarch. Dissolve the starch in the water and then pour slowly into the scalding pineapple mixture. Cook for five minutes and then cool. Line a pie plate with pastry and then turn in the prepared filling. Cover the top with inch-wide strips of pastry. Just before removing from the oven, brush the pastry with water and sprinkle with three tablespoons of finely chopped nuts.

Pineapple Pudding—Place in a mixing bowl, two-thirds cup of sugar, four tablespoons of butter, yolks of two eggs, cream well and then add one and three-quarters cup of flour, two level tablespoons of baking powder, one cup of crushed pineapple and one-half cup of water. Beat and turn into a well-greased pudding dish and then bake in a moderate oven for thirty-five minutes. Serve with Caledonian cream, made by placing the whites of two eggs in a bowl and add two-thirds glass of jelly. Beat with a Dover-style egg beater until the mixture holds its shape.

THE VALUE OF RESPONSIBILITY.

BY BARBARA E. HUNTING.

It seems a strange fact that one's neighbor's children are always wretchedly brought up. We could suggest innumerable means and methods of improving upon the "small fry" across the way, while even at the moment our own youngsters run shamelessly wild, and are subject to much the same criticism from that neighbor herself.

But it is not in that spirit of criticism I make a suggestion, rather in a hope that it may be of help to some mother who has a child or two, with the attending problems.

To foster a feeling of responsibility in a child is one of the most important steps in starting him along the right road. It will work wonders with him if he has his own little tasks, duties about the house, for which he alone is responsible.

The boy who keeps the grass trimmed along the walks after the lawn has been mowed, who empties the ashes from the kitchen range each day, sweeps the snow from the walks in the winter, picks up his clothes each morning and leaves his bedroom in order, that boy is beginning well. When he knows that his family depend upon him for the evening paper and the mail, the responsibility thus imposed will strengthen the will to do. It may be far easier for a mother to do a thing herself than to succeed in getting the boy to do it, but in the end the effort will be found well worth the while and one which a thoughtful mother should feel it a duty to make.

The little girl who shares the task of dish-washing with her mother, and whose duty it is to dust the living room before going to school in the morning, that little girl is developing not only her abilities as a young housekeeper, but those characteristics of unselfishness and service that are most essential in us all.

The question arises as to when we can begin to impose these little duties, for surely a three year old can not be expected to shovel snow. No indeed, but a child may be trained at a surprisingly early age to perform duties that lead as he grows older to larger things. Visit any kindergarten and children may be found doing things of which their own mothers never suspected them capable. It is altogether too common a fault that mothers underestimate their children's capability. Many times mothers have come to our kindergarten and said, "Why, I had no idea Johnny could do such a thing. He never has at home!" For example, children in kindergarten will put on their leggings, coats, overshoes and mittens without a murmur, while at home they never even attempt to do this.

A two years old child may be taught to put away his toys, take care of his coat and cap, and run little errands about the house for his mother. He can not be trained too soon to wait upon himself. Don't make the common mistake of being "a slave to your children." Teach them self reliance, give them some responsibility. You will be more than rewarded for your effort when they attain young manhood and womanhood.—Ex.

DRINK BUTTERMILK.

Very few people realize how valuable buttermilk is as an aid to good health, and good looks. Simply as a reminder, I would like to make a list of some of the many uses of this inexpensive drink.

If you are reducing drink buttermilk. The caloric value of a glassful is only 80. It has the same amount of nourishment as a glass of skim milk, but it contains acids which are beneficial to the system.

If you have a muddy skin drink buttermilk. The acids mentioned above stimulate certain organs in the body so that the skin will become clear and fresh.

If you are trying to gain weight and can not drink whole milk as is the case with so many women drink buttermilk with cream added. To make this drink fattening, you should add four or more tablespoonfuls of cream. It will give the buttermilk a richer taste.

If you have indigestion drink buttermilk, which will aid you in digesting other foods and is itself one of the most easily assimilated articles of nourishment.

If your skin has become tanned or freckled use buttermilk externally. It bleaches the skin and gives it a soft, fine feeling. It will not, of course, completely eliminate all the freckles, but it will help to do so.

If your skin has become rough or chapped, rub it with buttermilk, for this will keep it soft and in good condition.

If you want an unusually good bleach, scrape two tablespoonfuls of horseradish into a cup of buttermilk, massage this into the arms or the neck. If you use it on the face be careful not to let any of it get into the eyes.—Ex.

WIT AND WISDOM

NO ROOM TO SPARE.

At last, after many days of troubled hunting, Mr. and Mrs. Jones found a small apartment which somewhat approached their modest ideal.

"This hall paper is dreadful," Mrs. Jones plaintively remarked, "but the agent said the landlord wouldn't change it, for it is in good condition."

"Never mind; we'll get a pretty, inexpensive paper and put it right over this," Mr. Jones cheerfully suggested.

"Oh, Richard"—and his wife's look was full of reproach—"you know we can hardly get our furniture through this entry now, it's so narrow!"

"Good morning, parson."

"Good morning, deacon. As I was coming along just now I saw a fight between a brindle bull-dog and a mastiff. And, upon my word, deacon, more than fifty men were standing around. How can people take an interest in such things?"

"I dunno, parson. Which dawg won?"

Mrs. Smith was on her first ocean voyage.

"What's that down there?" she asked of the captain.

"That's the steerage, madam," he replied.

"Really!" exclaimed the woman, in surprise, "and does it take all those people to make the boat go straight?"

A lecturer had been describing some of the sights he had seen abroad.

"There are many spectacles in the world that one never forgets," he said.

"I wish you would tell me where I can get a pair," exclaimed an old lady in the audience. "I am always forgetting mine."

TOO SUCCESSFUL!

Is it possible to be too successful?

One pastor at a University Center is convinced that it is, for his efforts on behalf of students have brought such response that he is more than embarrassed; he is distressed by his utter inability to accommodate the crowds in a totally inadequate building. And he's not the only one. Many of his co-workers face similar conditions.

Pastors, you know. Will you help?

Many pastors of churches have experienced the same disheartening situation. But their need was that of larger quarters for their own growing congregations, and those congregations could in large measure supply their own needs. The University Pastor must have liberal help from the church at large if he is to provide—not for his own church membership—but the thousands of students away from home.

WHEN I GO TO CHURCH ON

WOOSTER DAY, DEC. 11th*And this card is put into my hand, I am going to subscribe cheerfully and to the very best of my ability, for the following reasons:

1. MY CHIEF INTEREST IN LIFE IS THE PROMOTION OF THE KINGDOM OF God—the kingdom of peace on earth and good will among men through the Gospel of Christ.
2. THE CHIEF PURPOSE OF THE COLLEGE OF WOOSTER IS “GLORIFYING God in promoting sanctified education and thus furthering the interests of the Church and its extension over the whole earth.”
3. THE COLLEGE OF WOOSTER HAS FAITHFULLY FULFILLED THIS expressed purpose of its first Board of Trustees by sending a fourth of its graduates out as ministers and missionaries, a fourth as educators, and the rest as consecrated professional or business men and Christian home-makers.
4. NEVER WAS THE WORLD IN GREATER NEED THAN IT IS TODAY OF the type of men and women being turned out by The College of Wooster to stabilize society and to propagate the highest social and spiritual ideals.
5. I WANT A COLLEGE IN THE STATE TO WHICH I CAN SEND MY SONS and daughters where they will find a social and religious atmosphere of the same kind they have been used to in our home and church.
6. I FEEL A SPECIAL OBLIGATION TO SUPPORT THE COLLEGE OF Wooster because it belongs to the Presbyterian Church of Ohio, and “if any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.”
7. I HAVE GREAT CONFIDENCE IN THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF WHICH Dr. John Timothy Stone is the President, in the wisdom, ability and devotion of President Charles F. Wishart and in the spiritual leadership of Dr. George N. Luccock, the college pastor.
8. I REALIZE THAT BY SUBSCRIBING LIBERALLY NOW I HELP THE college secure the generous offer of a quarter of a million dollars from the Rockefeller Fund, and put the college on a solid financial basis for greater and wider service in the years to come.

OUR EXCHANGES

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.

Your Christmas will be a happier one and you will find greater joy during the days that precede the coming of the Christmas season, if you will thoughtfully and prayerfully consider what God expects you to do to help these enfeebled veterans in the ministry and the dependent widows and helpless orphans of the ministers who have died.—Christian Observer.

A WHOLE CHRISTMAS.

Christmas is the all-conquering holiday. For childhood it is the crown and the cap-sheaf of the year. In December, if ever (and not in June, as the poet sings), comes the perfect day—the day when earth swings so near to heaven that men of good will catch echoes of the angels' song. The universal appeal of Christmas is not hard to understand. The simple beauty of the Gospel Story never fails to touch the common human heart, and it has been the inspiration of the world's supreme achievements in oratory, art and music. In it heaven touches earth; God mingles with humanity. It calls to the best in every man—whether mother, father, or little child.—Christian Advocate.

DISARMAMENT.

If the conference meets with a measurable degree of success, it will mark a tremendous step in the progress of mankind. If the conference ends in failure, we shall know that our old civilization, which seemed so settled and permanent a thing only a few years ago, is in real danger of collapse.—Times-Star.

THE NATION BEING EDUCATED.

One important thing the conference on limitation of armaments is doing. It is educating the American people to the fact that there are Pacific problems. Before the conference is very far along the nation will at least have a fairly clear idea of what it is all about.—Kansas City Star.

NOT MUCH USE—

To talk in meeting about praying for the pastor, if you are shy in the matter of paying him.

To talk about "training up a child in the way he should go," unless you go that way yourself occasionally.

To talk about your interest in the coming of the Kingdom of God, if you don't take and read a religious paper that tells about its coming.—Watchman-Examiner.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

In almost all the countries the Christmas spirit shows itself in a desire to do something for some one else. The gift of the Son by the Father is remembered in every gift to friend, and in every charity to the stranger less fortunate than we.—Presbyterian of South.

PACE THAT KILLS.

The automobile is undoubtedly one of the most wonderful of modern inventions. It is one of the most important aids to business; and it affords a delightful means of social enjoyment and healthful recreation. However, like all other good things, it may be abused; and its abuse has reached a limit, which calls for stringent measures of correction.

During the nineteen months, which American troops served in the World War, forty-eight thousand of our boys were killed; during the past nineteen months of peace, ninety-one thousand persons have been killed in automobile accidents.—Catholic Telegraph.

A HOPEFUL VIEW.

May it not be that much of our present day materialism, selfishness and sensuality are but the dust clouds following the chariot of war—clouds that will speedily be blown away by a strong gust of outraged public sentiment? Let us not only fondly hope so, but labor to make it so.—Christian Statesman.

CHRISTMAS WORSHIP.

It is hardly an open question whether we shall have a Christmas entertainment or a Christmas service in our Church schools. The time is so significant, and its possibilities so promising, that to do less than truly worship the Christ of Christmas in our schools is to fail. It is not necessary to degrade our Christmas festivities to the level of a fantastic heathen orgy, in order to make the day interesting. Scarcely any season of the year can draw so rich a fund of Scriptural song and story of that which is true, tried, and thrustworthy, as can Christmas.—Lutheran.

IMPORTANT IFS.

If labor will work for a fair wage, if it will do a good day's work for its pay, if the Government tax mills will stop squeezing the producers dry, if employer and employe shoulder to shoulder will get prices down to the consuming public—and they can go down only by getting costs down—there will be no unemployment problem, industrial deadlock and business stagnation. Under the irresistible economic laws all the productive wheels will begin running again. Not another thing is needed.—Investment News.

PROTECT THE FOUNDATIONS.

Committees do not always act honestly with the body appointing them. A certain church court in this country appointed a committee to investigate reports that some of the professors in one of its educational institutions were teaching doctrines contrary to the Bible and the standards of the Church. It is said that the majority report was not in accordance with the facts and was really a "whitewashing" of those concerned. When asked about it, the chairman of the committee said: "Anything contrary would divide the church." We admire much more the stand taken by the minority of the committee, who ask in their report this very pertinent question: "Shall the Church control and correct the colleges, or shall the colleges be allowed to control the Church and blast away the foundation stones of its Declaration of Faith?" Let us all protect the foundations.—Presbyterian of the South.

WHEN THE DOORS OF HEAVEN OPENED.

The angels sang, "Glory to God in the Highest—Peace on Earth to Men of Good Will." This is the message of Heaven to men—"the same yesterday, today and forever." This is the constant attitude of God to the world. Peace is the condition of the Kingdom of Christ. It is the enjoyment as well as the duty of each. It is moral and spiritual rather than political and legislative. The doctrine of Paul and the New Testament has defined the office of law, which is not that of detective or policeman, but the message and power of Jesus to inform and inspire. Grace offers the only escape by way of a new nature from which peace flows as a river.—Christian Intelligencer.

A SERIOUS DANGER.

The zeal of an organized group of Christians to promote the kingdom of God is very easily perverted into a kind of militancy which puts the upbuilding of an institution ahead of the extension of the kingdom. It has been observed for centuries that church leaders too readily become "institutionalized" and put the "success" of the enterprises for which they are responsible above the cultivation of the Christian spirit, by which alone the church performs its true function.—Presbyterian Advance.

HOW SHALL WE KEEP CHRISTMAS.

The easiest way out of our perplexity is to shower gifts upon the children, give them the largest possible leeway, fill their lives with material toys and possessions, and then persuade ourselves that we have done our duty. Perhaps we will find that we have gone contrary to duty.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

BE YE STEADFAST.

The speed of a train is much compromised by the number of stops it makes. The speed of some Christians is much modified by the tendency to rest too much betimes. They travel fast, but they stop so often.—Methodist Protestant.

SPIRITUAL GRAVITATION.

If Unitarianism could have anchored at William Ellery Channing's view of Christ it would have remained just outside the door of orthodoxy, if not even with one foot inside. How beautiful and soul-stirring Channing's sermons on Jesus and Christ! But the descent after giving up the Deity of Christ was rapid to a dis-crowned, dishonored and weakly human Jesus; and the church of Channing is now a pitiable denomination, whose last theological seminary has closed and its deserted houses of worship are rotting in many New England hills.—Eastern Methodist.

CHRISTMAS AT

BLACKBURN COLLEGE

There are a number of the Blackburn students who will not go home for the Christmas holidays because they do not have railroad fare. In fact, the present business situation has made it impossible for many of them to pay in full the small sum required of each student. But no worthwhile young man or woman has been turned away yet from education here because they ran out of money during the school year. That would hardly be fair, either to the student or to society.

One hundred dollars will pay the deficit on one student. Will you not send that amount, or your share of it, as a Christmas gift to Blackburn College. Such a gift will do much good and be greatly appreciated.

GOOD WILL AMONG MEN.

Christmas, in actual realization, would be most welcome to our world today. We have been having a sorrowful and distracted life for years. War has been raging in many parts of our world, and for a time our own nation participated in the most terrible, sanguinary and costly war in which the nations of the world ever engaged. Attendant and consequent evils have made these years one of the darkest periods in history.

Happily we are emerging from these conditions with brightening circumstances all about us. Our world is coming into saner conditions than it has enjoyed for many years. People are weary and sick of war. They have come to realize that it is not the way in which to settle difficulties. They are becoming determined that no autocracy and no insanity shall drive them into such an overwhelming misery as that into which they were plunged a few years ago, and from which they are slowly emerging.

When the angels sang above the plains of Bethlehem that first Christmas anthem of Christian peace and good-will, it was, in God's ordering, not simply an expression of tender emotion, but a prophecy of the coming Kingdom of God, in which men should live not for self and for war, but for the glory of God and the welfare of men, in peace and goodwill. The prophecy has been long on its way to fulfillment, but the time is coming when all men shall know the Lord and shall love one another, and peace shall abide in the Earth.

The great Disarmament Conference in Washington is one of the most hopeful gatherings in modern times, and, indeed, in the world's history. The men who have come together, representing the great leading nations of the world, seem to be really reasonable and sweet-spirited, and to be sincere in their desire to find a basis for permanent peace. Well may they be. Our world has been hovering on the very edge of universal bankruptcy. Not much more could be done without the danger of actual collapse. It is time for leading men to be reasonable men, and to see if there is not some way to bring the nations into safety and comfort.

Notwithstanding all the apparent prosperity, in spots, there is suffering and deprivation and agony in widely extended areas all over the world. Every effort should be put forth to help bring back conditions when starvation and pestilence and homelessness shall be relieved, and men and women and children shall be permitted to be fed and clothed and housed and to live in peace and comfort.

If all the civilized nations of the world bend their best energies to the production of food and clothing and shelter, they will be able to provide for those who are in trouble, every year, from providential exigencies such as floods and drought and earthquakes and pestilences. It should be the high ambition of every civilized nation to do all in its power to abate the miseries that are sure to come on unfavored regions and people. It was a laudable recommendation of our President in his message last week, that Congress should provide for sending the millions of bushels of corn necessary to arrest the death and destruction from famine in Russia.

Let us all pray for the coming of peace and good-will among men. Let us be sure that this is what our world needs. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the sole remedy for the sorrows and sufferings of our demoralized and distracted human race. May this remedy be accepted as it never has been in any age previous to this. It is man's extremity. It is the time of the world's desperate need. If we will but have it so, God's sun will rise with healing in its wings.

It would be a blessed thing if this Christmas should be the turning point in our world's life. It may be so if our Government at Washington, and the other governments now represented there, shall determine to conduct themselves in accordance with the Gospel, and arrange for the settlement of all difficulties in a way that shall make for world-wide enduring peace.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

The Federal Council's Commission on the Church and Social Service in its December circular letter reports the result of deliberations of "a group of Christian business and professional men," touching "the duty of the Church to attempt to influence men in their economic relations." It says: "The outcome of the discussion which has not hitherto been published, revealed, within this comparatively homogeneous group, the following opinions, ranging from extreme conservatism to pronounced radicalism!"

Then follows a list of opinions, some of which are:

"The Church should limit itself to the personal relation of the individual to God, and not concern itself with social relations or ethics"; "the Church is responsible for the consciences of its members"; "the Church has further responsibility beyond stimulating the conscience to guide the conduct of men"; the Church should provide moral leadership in society; "the Church should insist upon the complete application of Christian principles throughout all social and economic arrangements"; the Church should oppose the capitalistic system, with its private property in the productive resources and its wage system, as contrary to the principles enunciated by Christ. Pacifism should replace war, conflict and competition. Self-will should abdicate as a governor of human conduct in favor of the will of God as interpreted by the collective state. The government of men should be a pure democracy and should govern all the relations of men."

This circular gives us a distinct shock. We read on its first page the familiar statement that various denominations are co-operating in this service. Turning a few pages we find discussions of various labor troubles, with positive condemnation of parties on one side or the other. Whether such condemnation is justified we do not pretend to say. Personally we are inclined to agree with the Commission, but we question its right to speak for the churches of all denominations on questions touching which, by its own statement, Christian professional and businessmen differ.

Our Assembly has made it plain that before the Council does anything involving or representing our Church, "the Assembly itself should be fully informed" thereupon and give its decision prior to final action.

The literature sent out in great quantities by the Federal Council, deals with many matters on which our Assembly's opinion has not been asked or given. At the same time our Assembly's contribution to the Council helps, as we suppose, to pay for such literature.

Questions have been raised from time to time, in the Southern Presbyterian Church, as to the Council and its authority. That Church believes that church courts should handle only ecclesiastical matters; our Church does not go so far, but there is a growing feeling that if we are to declare ourselves on non-ecclesiastical matters, the Assembly itself should make the declarations rather "than a union Council, or any outside body."

THE MODERATOR IN CINCINNATI.

Presbyterian Day in Cincinnati, on Thursday, Dec. 8, was, perhaps, very much like corresponding days, in many of the churches and cities that have been, and are being, visited by the Moderator of the General Assembly, and by various Secretaries of the Boards, for the encouraging and stimulating of ministers and people in the large work of the Church.

Excellent preparations had been made for the observance of the day, and a hearty spirit of co-operation prevailed, so that the various meetings were well and enthusiastically attended. The visiting speakers said that they had not had larger or better meetings anywhere in the rounds of their visitations. The meetings were held, for the most part, in the Church of the Covenant, and Dr. Frank H. Stevenson and his people opened up their commodious and attractive building to its fullest advantage for hospitality and worship. The meetings were presided over by Dr. Jesse Herrmann, moderator of presbytery, and the music was led by the Church of the Covenant musicians and by the large Billy Sunday choir, under the lead of W. A. Evans.

The morning meeting, well attended by the ministers and elders, was addressed by Dr. H. C. Swearingen and Dr. J. A. Marquis, of the Home Board. The afternoon meeting, for the women, was addressed by Mrs. C. K. Roys, of China, and by Miss Lucy Dawson for the Home Board. The night meeting was addressed by Dr. Swearingen, by Secretary W. P. Schell, of the Foreign Board, and Secretary Marquis, of the Home Board. What was said was of a very high order, and was instructive and attractive, and the large congregation was pleased and edified.

Dr. Swearingen spoke to the students of Lane Seminary in the morning, and again at the men's supper just before the evening service. Secretary Schell gave an address to the women, following supper, in the hall of the Y. M. C. A. The day was a crowded and profitable one, and the visitors abundantly exerted themselves to bring their hearers, representing a widely extended Presbyterianism, into an optimistic grasp of present duty, to upbuilding of their love and loyalty to the Church and the confirming of their faith in the Church's Head and Lord.

CHRISTMAS.

Christmas should be a day of worship and consecration. It is a mistake to think only of gifts we may receive. Christ gave himself. It is a day for consecration, not only of our means, but of our own selves to his service. Some one has suggested that it is a time to try the experiment of living entirely for others. The experiment tried for one day might convince us that it is practicable every day, and thus the spirit of Christmas would reign throughout the year.

It ought to be a day to remember those who are ill, or needy, or friendless, or shut in. A Christian worker says: "If you want a taste of heaven, spend Christmas afternoon going from place to place where there are the unfortunate and uncared-for, bringing to each some token of your remembrance, and stopping long enough for a word of Scripture reading and prayer. Don't let some charitable organization cheat you out of this privilege!"

CHURCH SCHOOL OF MISSIONS.

In the Synod of Montana a strong and urgent call has gone out to all the pastors and churches, from Rev. B. Scott Bates, chairman of the Synodical Foreign Mission Committee, Rev. E. J. Groeneveld, chairman of the Synodical Home Mission Committee, and Mrs. W. M. Fergus, president of the Woman's Synodical Missionary Society, to all the pastors and churches of the synod, to engage heartily in missionary work in all the churches. In order to this they urge the pressing of the work of missionary education.

They say, among other things: "We urge that a Church School of Missions be conducted in every church with one or more week-night classes or group for each, the young people and the older people, and that, at the same time, the Sabbath-school teachers give their classes the chapters from the books adapted to their respective grades. It is hoped also that there will be platform missionary addresses in Sabbath school, and that there may be missionary sermons and addresses, missionary plays and pageants, and missionary study and programs in the Woman's Missionary Societies, Ladies' Aids, Christian Endeavor Societies, Westminster Guilds, and all other societies and organizations. Probably it may be well for all departments to study Foreign Missions at one time, and then Home Missions for a time, say some six or eight weeks to each, thus concentrating for a time, in all the departments, on some one subject. In some places the Aid Societies have devoted one meeting a month to missionary study and have circulated mission books among their members and friends. Something like that can be done practically in every place. Every Sabbath school can give missionary information if the teachers are provided with the book adapted to their pupils' age. The teacher can give a few minutes each Sabbath from a chapter, and not interfere with the regular lesson, and the superintendent can give a few minutes each Sabbath."

We give this as a suggestion. If this much interest in missions is manifested in a synod so far West, it is certainly practicable to push the matter of Christian education as to missions in every synod, and every presbytery, and every church, and in every Christian home.

The work of missions, and of evangelizing, at home and abroad is the great work of the Church today. Let it be pressed everywhere. Ohio and Michigan and Indiana, as well as Montana, should have its thorough-going School of Missions in every church,

It has been the purpose of the Missionary Boards to supply every pastor and session with lists of the Home and Foreign text books and supplies for the year. If any have not received them let them write to the Boards for them. There are many fine sets of stereopticon slides with lectures for all those who can use them. The whole field of missions may be gone over in this way during the year by many churches. Let the great work of education as to missions be pressed this year, all over the Church.

A UNION SEMINARY COMMITTEE ON VACANCY AND SUPPLY.

The following letter was received by the Clerk of Session of a Presbyterian U. S. A. Church.

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
BROADWAY AT 120TH STREET

Arthur L. Swift, Jr.
Chairman

To the Clerk Presbyterian Church —:

Dear Sirs: We learn from — that there is a vacancy in the pastorate of your church. Our Committee on the Alumni and the Churches is in touch with a number of experienced and capable ministers, whom we could commend as worthy of every consideration. If you are willing to receive recommendations from us, may we ask you to advise us of this fact, with the name and address of the person to whom communications should be sent?

It is the aim of the Committee, by means of this and similar communications, to place churches earnestly seeking leadership in touch with men equipped to supply it, to their mutual advantage and the service of the kingdom.

Yours truly,

A. L. Swift, Jr.

Chairman Committee on the Alumni and the Churches.

It is a fact of interest and importance to our Presbyterian Churches that Union Seminary has an organized movement to locate ministers in our churches.

Union Seminary is not an institution approved by our Assembly. It stands for what we regard as an unpresbyterian and unevangelical type of theology. Moreover, the men given the most prominence in this committee are not Presbyterians, but ministers of other denominations.

ARMENIA STILL APPEALS.

About a million Armenians perished in the massacre of 1915 and since, at the hands of the Turks. The rulers of the people that were responsible for such a crime, deliberate and continuous, have their place among the monsters of the race. While the rest of the world was at war these Turks, uninterrupted, did their monstrous murder. Civilized nations must combine in some way to prevent the repetition and continuance of this crime. Most of these Armenians could have saved their lives by renouncing Christianity. Thus Mohammedanism propagates its evil faith. Lord Bryce says: "These Armenians were martyrs to their faith, and surely there is nothing that appeals more to us of the Christian faith than to save the children of these martyrs. It is in the hope of saving this remnant of the Armenian people which lies the best hopes of restoring peace and prosperity to these regions of the East which the savagery of the Turks has so long desolated." Help for them may be sent through Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Cleveland H. Dodge, Treasurer.

To each and all of our readers we wish a very Merry Christmas, full of that old-fashioned and blessed merriness which comes from the abounding love and indwelling presence of God.

Our world was made rich long centuries ago when Jesus Christ was born into it. Any heart is rich today into which Christ is born. There was no room in the inn, but we may all make room in our hearts for him if we will.

Our happiness at this Christmas will result not from what we receive from others, but from what we do for others, and especially from having in our hearts a genuine love for others and a supreme love for God.

The reports from the Armament Conference tell us of an agreement between Great Britain, the United States, France and Japan, to be at peace for ten years, as a start. This is a good prelude to Christmas. This is a good start toward universal and enduring peace. Let us hope that all the world may join in a great and abiding pact of peace.

Deplorable conditions prevail in Russia. The Near East Relief is distributing all the food it can secure, but supplies are entirely inadequate so far. It is well to respond to such a call, and help relieve the misery that is said to be indescribable. Every one would be glad to give something of food and clothing if there were agencies to receive them. The problem is largely that of transportation and distribution.

It is a good thing to "do your shopping early" so as to get it done before Christmas. It is a good thing to do the Christmas preaching early so that its lessons may sink into the hearts of the people and help prepare them for the season of goodwill. It is a good thing to be well prepared for Christmas along every line, so as to get the good out of it when it comes.

President Harding presented a great message to Congress last week, and through the Congress to the people of the nation. It was one of the strongest, most thoughtful and best messages ever produced. A spirit of optimism prevailed as to business and as to the peace of the world, but there was a deep seriousness in the call to all good men to co-operate earnestly and heartily in patriotic, conscientious and self-sacrificing devotion to duty.

We are glad that President Harding called attention to the fact that in any strike or labor difficulty there are three parties instead of two, as generally suggested. Not only the labor unions are involved and the capitalists, but the general public. This third element is much the largest of the three. It is entirely helpless in the matter. It is the class that must suffer. It should not be left to be imposed on and made to suffer. It has a right to demand protection from the harassment and suffering caused by a general disturbance of traffic and travel and food distribution, and it must be protected.

THE BABE OF BETHLEHEM.

BY REV. W. R. REYNOLDS.

O, little babe of Bethlehem,
How sweet we see thee lie
In stable low and manger rude,
Thy virgin mother by!
What wondrous love from heav'n above
Thou bringest now to earth!
What mysteries new and sweet and true,
Revealed by thy birth!

O, little babe of Bethlehem,
Who art some day to be
The lowly Man of Nazareth,
This day we honor thee!
And gladly praise God's wondrous ways,
And magnify the love
That sent thee here our sin and fear
Forever to remove.

O, little babe of Bethlehem,
Accept our homage true;
We bow the knee and kiss the Son,
And tender service new.
Help us to send to farthest end
Of earth the news of thee,
Till peace and joy without alloy
Men everywhere shall see.

BETHLEHEM, THE HOUSE OF BREAD.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

O, little town of Bethlehem,
How still we see thee lie;
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep,
The silent stars go by;
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The everlasting light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are met in thee tonight.

"Well-named is Bethlehem, the House of Bread, the birthplace of the Savior of mankind, who said:

"I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." (John 6: 35.)

As Jesus fed the hungry multitudes on the lake shore in the long ago, multiplying wondrously the loaves and fishes for that beneficent purpose, so he has been feeding with the heavenly bread of everlasting life all the hungry millions of mankind who came to him in penitence and faith. And still the satisfying soul nourishment is being dealt out. Whosoever will may come! The divine banquet table is spread with the bounties of Christ's rich grace. "Wherefore," then, O sinner, "do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." (Isa. 55: 2.)

Shall we name the articles of food in the celestial menu? Can we catalogue the wealth with which heaven endows the needy and receptive soul? How can we measure the heat of the sun? Astronomers, indeed, have calculated that there is enough heat radiating continually from the sun to supply the needs of two billion, two hundred million planets of the same size as our earth, which is the same as saying that the heat of the sun is immeasurable and inexhaustible.

"The Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory; no good thing will he withhold from him that walketh uprightly." (Ps. 84: 11.)

1. God's forgiveness is exhaustless.

"In Christ we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins, ac-ording to the riches of his grace." (Eph. 1: 7.)

"I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins." (Isa. 43: 25.) He is ready to pardon the repentant sinner seventy times seven.

2. Think also of the daily strength, the daily comfort, the daily guidance which are the meat and drink of Christian hearts—these are exhaustless. They are sufficient, as he assured Saint Paul (II Cor. 12: 9), and efficient. They nourish, fortify, stimulate, exalt and enrich the needy soul that appropriates them through faith in the life-giving word of his grace. Aptly and beautifully does Dr. J. R. Miller write:

"A verse of scripture in the morning may become a benediction for all the day. It may sing in the heart as a snatch of sweet song from morning till evening. It may become a liturgy of prayer, in which the soul shall voice its deepest wants and hungers amid toils, struggles and cares. It may be a guide through perplexing tangles, an angel whispering cheer, a comforter breathing peace in sorrow."

3. And oh, that satisfying bread to the hungry heart, the hope of immortality and heaven! "Christ has abolished death and brought life and immortality to light." (II Tim. 1: 10.) Think of heaven's revelation of earth's problems; its emancipation of smitten, burdened souls from all that hinders, harasses, hurts us here below; its sinlessness, rest, peace, joy eternal; its lifting veil from the face of our Divine Lord, so that we shall see him as he is, in all the charm of his gentleness and grace, as well as in all his awe-inspiring majesty and glory; its reunions with the happy departed and all its other unspeakably precious rewards. Earthly eye hath not seen, earthly ear hath not heard them, but they are reserved for those who love God, and are being kept by his power through faith unto salvation. Feed daily, Christian, upon the satisfying bread of such bright hopes, for they are great, rich realities.

These are just glimpses of the celestial menu in the banquet house of divine grace into which the loving Savior welcomes the believer; just a suggestion of what Christmas means to the humble and contrite heart. Therefore, "let us," with the shepherds, "now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is to come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us." (Luke 2: 15.) For our Divine Child-King invites us into his banqueting house and his banner over us is love. He will give us of his royal bounty (I Kings 10: 13), will fill us with the finest of the wheat, (Ps. 147: 14), and will open unto us his good treasure. (Deut. 28: 12.)

"But thy feast, O Lord, is nothing to me without an appetite. Thou hast set the dainties of heaven before me; but, alas, I am blind and can not see them! I am sick and can not relish them! I am so benumbed that I can not put forth a hand to take them! I therefore beg this grace, that, as thou hast opened heaven to me in thy Word, so thou wouldst open mine eyes to see it, and my heart to delight in it; else heaven will be no heaven to me. O thou Spirit of Life! breathe upon thy graces in me; take me by the hand and lift me from the earth, that I may see what glory thou hast prepared for them that love thee!"—(Richard Baxter, in "Saints' Rest," Chapter 16. )

CHRISTMAS AND A STORMY WORLD.

BY REV. DWIGHT MALLORY PRATT, D.D.

Christmas is like a note of harmony in the midst of almost universal discord. The natal day of Jesus is more than a historic anniversary; it stands for a spirit, a principle, a quality of life. Its message is one of peace, and love, and universal brotherhood. It is the coming down of heaven to earth in the form and spirit of a little child. In the beauty and potentialities of his own life this divine child was a prophecy of the possibility of a redeemed world. It was this foregleam of a renewed humanity that inspired the angels to sing, the shepherds to rejoice, and the Wise Men to adore.

Today men of clear vision and mature judgment, everywhere, are turning back to the manger cradle of Bethlehem as the only birthplace of the world's hope. All else has failed to bring peace to a distracted race. The wisdom of the world has proved to be folly. Science and invention have become the handmaids of cruelty and crime, and have lent their skill to the arts of destruction. Scholarship has not stayed the tides of human selfishness, nor material prosperity contributed to the coming of universal peace. Man's inhumanity to man has never been more satanic than it is today. Not for a thousand years has war, famine and pestilence so scourged and devastated the nations as during these latest years of the twentieth century. Man has demonstrated his capacity for self-destruction, but no inherent capacity for self-recovery and redemption. However much the law of evolution may have had to do with the origin and development of his physical being, it has never invaded the realm of his moral personality and moral freedom, nor added one iota to the uplift and renewal of his spiritual life.

In the light of these evident facts, men of vision are turning back to an intense longing, and with new faith and hope to the birthplace of Jesus. This is as true of statesmen and scholars as of those humbler folk in whom devotion and piety are more wont to dwell. It was a mighty international confession, as well as a marvelous tribute to the fundamental and eternal verities of the Christian faith when the premiers of Great Britain, Canada, South Africa and Australia addressed a memorial to the English people, saying they saw no hope for the future of civilization except in the application of the principles of Jesus Christ to human society. Business men, individually, and collectively in their Chambers of Commerce, are saying the same. They affirm with a new seriousness and conviction that back of all business enterprise and success there must be "the background of a religious life." Before the cataclysm of the great war men were saying that the Sermon on the Mount and the Golden Rule were too idealistic for such a world as this, and were wholly impracticable in ordinary human relationships. Now they are affirming that Christ's program for men and nations is the only one that will save civilization, and guarantee human security and happiness, and the future prosperity and brotherhood of the race. This is fundamentally the significance of the Washington Conference. The nations have, at last, begun the process of trying to "learn war no more." Notwithstanding all the distress and distraction of the world, the passing days are full of prophetic promise and Messianic hope. We can still believe in the coming of "Peace on earth, and goodwill among men."

Professor William Lyon Phelps, of Yale University, recently declared that the best thing the Pilgrims brought over in the Mayflower was the Bible. This is only another way of saying that the success of the Puritan commonwealth, and of our national democracy with its ideals of human brotherhood and human worth, are due to the Christianity made known and expounded in this sacred book. The Bible, with its good news of redemption, and its fascinating and wondrous story of the Redeemer, has been the source of all that is constructive and beneficent in modern history.

Christmas, this year, as in no former year in the life-time of this generation, is calling the world back to the source of its true life. Its best celebration can not be made by material gifts, however expressive of family love and friendly regard they may be, but by the incorporation of the Christ spirit and Christ life in all our relations with men. During recent years our professed Christianity has been increasingly superficial, formal and impotent. It has not gripped our souls with great convictions, warmed them with the glow of a great passion, or made them serious in the work of saving men. People spend ten or twenty dollars for momentary pleasure in the movies, where they give one dollar to missions, or the Church, or the redemption of the world. The disproportion indicates the defect of our modern life. Side by side with the world's greatest sorrow and agony of pain, we give ourselves to the greatest extravagance, self-indulgence, and unbridled eagerness for pleasure and gain.

Only the Christ of Bethlehem and Calvary can bring us back to sanity of thought and security of condition. His Spirit can change the very atmosphere in which the present generation lives. He can calm and soothe the restlessness of the nations. He is able to reproduce in human hearts and on human lips the angelic song of peace and universal goodwill. He has power to open men's eyes to the profound and blessed realities of the spiritual life. He can work a miracle of transformation in shallow and trivial lives, until they are deepened, enriched and made profound in the possession of permanent happiness, and self-conscious worth. It was heartening to hear an eminent scholar say recently, that "some of us would have been glad, before the days of the war, if the miracle stories of the New Testament could have been eliminated, but now we have come to feel that if they were not there, we should want to invent some to take their place." And he went on to say that the latest specialists of note in medical science had come to recognize psychotherapy as the most important and fundamental department in the art or science of healing. This is only another way of saying that the physician, as well as the Church and the minister, must get at the secret of Christ's healing power if they would remedy the ills and cure the sicknesses of the world.

Again we say that Christmas is the natal day of humanity's hope. To fathom its divine secret is to find the joy of Bethlehem possessing us as it mastered the very angels, and the shepherds, and Wise Men of that first Christmas, on the hill-tops of Judea, so many centuries ago.

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS.

BY REV. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

Christmas should be a great time for giving—giving of our means for missions—for the world's salvation. We must give or die. Only by giving do we live.

Some one tells the story of an artist who was once asked to paint a picture of a decaying church. To the astonishment of many, instead of putting on the canvas an old, tottering ruin, the artist painted a stately edifice of modern grandeur. Through the open portals could be seen the richly-carved pulpit, the magnificent organ and the beautiful stained-glass windows. Within the grand entrance was an offering plate of elaborate design for the offerings of fashionable worshippers. But—and here the artist's idea of a decaying church was made known—right above the offering plate there hung a square box bearing the legend, "For Foreign Missions," and right over the slot through which contributions ought to have gone he had painted a huge cobweb!

"Let us conclude our meeting by uniting in singing Hymn 102, omitting the fourth stanza," announced the presiding officer, with an effort not to appear hurried. No. 102 was a favorite hymn, and the society sang heartily:

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to thee;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise."

"Madam President," said a voice when the third verse had been sung, "I am opposed to omitting the fourth stanza." People looked in amazement, for Miss Sparkman had never opposed anything in the society before. Almost unconsciously the women opened the hymn-books they had just closed, to see the fourth stanza. Miss Sparkman read aloud the words of the omitted verse:

"Take my silver and my gold,
Not a mite would I withhold."

"I'm opposed to omitting the fourth stanza," said the little lady. "If it were just in our singing it wouldn't be so bad, but we are omitting it in the life of our society. The amount of money that has come into our treasury this year is shamefully small. The appeals from our mission fields are read and we listen to them and say placidly, 'How interesting!' but we omit the fourth stanza."

Shall we sing the fourth stanza? Shall we learn it anew and sing it with new zest at this Christmas season?

Give of your means. But, all-important, do not forget to give yourself.

A story is told of an Indian man, to whom the Gospel was given—the message of the love of Christ for us. As he listened, his heart was touched, and he said, "I must give Jesus something. I will give him my dog." This was much for a poor Indian hunter to give. His dog was his companion and helper on the hunt, and he loved him. Because he loved him, and because of his helpfulness, he placed a high value upon him. And this possession, worth so much, he wanted to give to Jesus.

He listened more about the wonderful love of the more wonderful Savior, and he said, "I must give him my gun." The gun meant his living; but he was willing to give it to the One who had given so much for him.

A little while passed, and he said, "I give Jesus myself." Now the Indian had reached the place where God wanted him—the condition of mind and heart in which he was ready to give all, even self, to the Son of God. Have we reached this place? The meaning of Christmas is giving.

O, STAR, SHINING AFAR.

BY FRED SCOTT SHEPARD.

O, Star, shining afar,
Sign of the coming of Christ, the King,
What is the message to us you bring?

God's love, poured from above,
Gift of all giving, wouldst thou bestow
Joy and rich blessing on all below.

Then, heart, let him impart
What in his wisdom he deemeth best,
And thus confiding in him find rest.

O, Christ, with me keep tryst—
Enter my heart to be born again,
There as my Lord, forever to reign.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS.

BY REV. WILLIAM BARNES LOWER.

Have you caught the Christmas spirit? Your Christmas will be a merry one only as it is a holy one. The Christmas spirit is the spirit of love. As the Bible is God's great love story to man, so it seems to me Christmas is God's great love day. All the love of the eternal godhead was gathered up and let down from heaven on that first Christmas day, in the form of the manger babe. We can show our appreciation of God's great gift to the world, and can show the Christmas spirit by opening the soul's door and letting all the graces of the soul be bathed in the pure air of heaven. Christmas is the time when you should let faith, hope and love have just a little more freedom in the parlor of your soul. Too many of us live down in the cellar of the soul. Faith, hope, charity may grow down in the damp, dark cellar, but their life, like the mushroom, is only for a day. These graces to live must be exercised. The glorious thing about Christmas, God's great love day, is that many who open their souls to the sweet influences of Christian benevolence and charity keep the rooms open all the year. Christmas day is a starting day with many. It is a day when many begin to shovel back what God has shoveled on to them. God has shoveled so much benevolence on many that they are simply buried under it, and do not know. The stingy person is often the one who is buried in benevolence. What you give away at Christmas time will come back to you in part every day of the year. As you measure out to others they will measure back to you. God gives you the best, why give him back the worst, if you give at all? When you give, give the best. If you give a sheep, give the one without a blemish. If you give a prayer, give it before you are asleep. If you give a contribution, do not give a clipping of a dollar when you can give a whole bill. Remember that God has no bargain counter. He gives you from the counter on the main aisle. How many you find at the bargain counter trying to buy some cheap and soiled and handled thing to give back to God. But, my friend, don't forget that the best gifts can not be valued in dollars and cents. Have you an enemy? Give him forgiveness. Have you an opponent? Give him tolerance. Have you a friend? Give him your heart. Have you a child? Give him your best example. Have you a wife? Give her your love. Have you a father? Give him deference. Have you a soul? Give it your respect. Make Christmas time a happy time.

THY WILL, NOT MINE.

A Legend.

BY REV. W. T. REYNOLDS.

Where the fierce heat beat down upon a weary way, a spring rose to within a foot of the surface sands. The Master Potter looked with compassion on the multitudes who passed, and with cupped hands drank precious drops. Because he loved, he sought to make a vessel with which they could draw abundantly. But when he was about to mold the clay, it lifted up its voice and wept; "Oh, Master! Make me not a humble vessel of clay, to hang beside the spring in the desert. I would be a costly vase of matchless form and beauty, to ornament a home of wealth, and hold fair roses of delicate beauty and perfume." The Master sighed, but granted its request. Soon it stood, a costly vase of rare fashion; the pride of a luxurious home. But a frost nipped to death the opening rose buds of the spring. The summer rains came not. The rose bushes were dry and withering. A careless maid, in dusting, swept the precious vase from its resting place; and its shattered fragments were thrown upon a pile of refuse. The Master found a lump of clay of more humble mind; and made of it a vessel to do his will. Through all the heat of that drought it ministered. Countless multitudes drank from its dripping brim, and blessed it for its ministry; and blessed the loving hand that had fashioned it and placed it there.

Oh Master! I am the clay; thou art the Potter. Fashion me as thou wilt, and appoint me as it pleaseth thee. For thy way is the way of blessing.

THE ALL GLORIOUS BOOK.

BY REV. W. H. JORDAN.

The wind fluttered the leaves of my Bible and the Book began to speak:

"How I would like to have a real opportunity in this old world. I could solve the problems of the day. I could settle the quarrels of neighborhoods and nations. I am the key to the whole situation.

"Here I am, truth translated into the wonderful English language, nicely printed, well bound, available to millions, yet to multitudes I seem to be sealed with seven seals. When will men learn that I am Revelation?

"Worst of all, I am often attacked in the house of my friends. I am too often touched with irreverent hands. I am counted an ornament along with the parlor bric-a-brac, antiquated and obsolete rather than modern, fitting into the life of today.

"When I am given the opportunity in a heart or a home, in a church or a community, I work wonderful transformations. Were I but given right of way I would put legions of devils to flight. Armies would be disbanded, political life would be purified, and this starving, staggering world would see the dawn of a new day.

"And you preachers, you call yourselves ministers of the Word, yet hardly know the A B C of truth. When I think of the long and bloody struggle to get into the English language the streams of blessings that have poured in upon the English-speaking people when once they knew the Scriptures, I am grieved, sorely grieved that so many would-be teachers neglect, belittle and misinterpret me."

Out of the vague somewhere came the voice of the venerable Bede, for it seemed as though the spirit of the past had invaded my sanctum: "I was a life-long friend of the Book. My happiest day was that last hour when I had finished the Saxon version."

The big clock in the corner seemed to tick off centuries when I heard a voice breaking the silence: "I saw the awful ignorance and determined the plowboy should know the Scriptures as well as the priest." It was John Wickliffe, the Morning Star of the Reformation. "I labored for years," he continued "to translate the holy Book from the Latin Vulgate into the language of my people." The printing press was yet unknown and a single copy of the New Testament cost two hundred dollars.

"Yes," said the restless Book, "I have been condemned; I have been burned; but those bonfires in England become pillars of fire. I have been hidden for years; I have been chained in the churches where souls hungry for the Word have crowded about to see and to hear.

"Just when I might have reached and lifted the people, church officials seemed most cold, indifferent and careless. They merely mumbled the message of the King who ordered them to read the Scripture. Yet all over England the common people befriended me. White-haired people learned to read that they might know me better, and many a cottager counted the Book its greatest treasure."

Coverdale and Tindall interrupted with the wonderful story of their efforts to give the people the Word of God, I recalled my history, how that Henry the Eighth "believed his subjects should be nursed in Christ" by reading the Scriptures. The spirit of Edward the Sixth surprised me, as he told of his enthusiasm for the Book, how in his brief reign "eleven editions were published and six of the English New Testament."

And even while he spoke the exiled Reformers in Geneva in the days of "bloody Mary," all zealous Calvinists, told how the "Geneva Bible" appeared, some thirty editions being published from 1560 to 1616.

As each century and each year came near, the friends of the Word of God were eager to give their testimony. The procession filed by, out of oblivion and back again. I saw the worthies who had labored unceasingly to keep the Word pure and to give it to the common people. I saw the fires where books were burned, and gloating priests were enraged, and enraging the people. I saw prisons filled with faithful witnesses, and martyrs burning at the stake. I saw the splendid company of scholars, fifty-four of them, who graced the days of James the First, men "pre-eminent for piety and for profound learning in the original languages of the sacred writings."

I spied the learned Doctor Launcelot Andrews, Dean of Westminster, familiar with fifteen languages; Doctor Robert Tighe, "an excellent textuary and profound linguist"; William Bedwell, "the best Arabic scholar of his days, industrious and thrice-learned"; Dr. John Rainolds, who petitioned King James for the new version. "The learning of that man," said Bishop Hall, "was near to a miracle, and all Europe at that time could not have produced three men superior to Rainalds, Jewel and Usher, all of Corpus Christi College."

Dr. Thomas Holland was "another Apollos, mighty in the Scriptures." Dr. Miles Smith was a Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac and Arabic scholar, who is said to have written the preface to the King James version.

The English-speaking people owe these worthies an immeasurable debt of gratitude for their scholarly seven years' service to all mankind. In 1611 the long-looked-for translation appeared, and began its mighty ministry to men. The recent death of Dr. C. I. Scofield recalls the publication, ten years ago, of the "Tercentenary Bible," commemorating the epoch-making event. It was Dr. Scofield who assembled the Bible scholars for the 1911 revision.

Of course, the 1611 version came only gradually to first place in the people's estimate. The greatest care was exercised to eliminate errors. Succeeding editions included the summaries of chapters, running titles at the head of each page, and more than thirty thousand references in the margin. The great Bible Societies have given wings to the Word, until all kindreds, peoples, and tongues, now have the Sacred Word. Faithful colporteurs and missionaries have girdled the globe with the Book.

We never can cease to admire the works of art, the products of the press. They can not be excelled for beauty and convenience—the "Bagster Bible," for instance. How some of those grand old Nonconformist preachers would have valued the latest copies of the Word.

I could not wonder that the Book of books, the breath of the living God, victorious in ten thousand conflicts, should claim the throne of the heart.

"I am the message of the Age, to teach age," exclaimed the Restless Book; "I am sealed only to those who reject me. To the millions who give me pre-eminence, I have unfolded the truth. I have fed them and have led them. I point the way. I give wisdom. I strengthen purpose. I reveal Redemption's plan for the Ages. All I ask is opportunity to speak to, and to speak through, men. God has woven the story of things eternal into the warp and woof of time. My work is incomplete. I can not wait. The whole world needs me. I could help the highest and the lowest.

"Ages come and go, but I remain, impregnable to all assaults. Men may reject me, but rejection means destruction.

"And when the cycling ages have unfolded the Will of God, I shall stand fulfilled, complete, without the loss of jot or title.

"You ministers of the Word are here so brief a time, and your brief day is yours only to give me voice and wings, go not before your people until you have filled your very being with the truth; until you really know the mind of God. Hide me in your heart, for I am the "more sure Word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day star arise in your heart."

I started. Had I only half known the Book? Had I only half preached it? Had I fallen into a rut, preaching mere common-places, unconcerned that my hearers sat unconcerned? One word alone answered my agitated thought: "Guilty! guilty!" And it seemed to me the worthies of the past pointed the finger of scorn and condemnation, crying: "Unworthy! unworthy!" I fell upon my knees and cried the publican's prayer: "God be merciful to me a sinner!" Never more shall my message be cheap and commonplace. I will wait like the prophets of old, I will hear what God the Lord will speak. I will feed upon the Word, that I may feed my people. I will be voice and wings to the Book. I will exalt thy Word above all thy name.

"NO ROOM IN THE INN."

(Luke 2: 7.)

BY REV. BENJAMIN F. PAIST.

In Bethlehem there was to see
The ancient kahn or hostelry,
Where, on the first-named Christmas day,
The holy pair were turned away.
Oh, what is all our boasted bloom,
If for the Christ there is no room?

No room for him who bore the pain
That turns our human loss to gain?
For whom angelic choirs sing,
And Magi worship as their King?
Oh, can there be a greater sin
Than that which will not let him in?

Here are the strivings of our race,
The ceaseless dash for meed and place,
The sinful will, the sullen doubt,
The selfishness that crowds him out.
O, soul, by time and sense beguiled,
Receive tonight the Holy Child!

Though many times thy light be dim,
If it but clearly point to him,
Though in thy heart the fire burn low,
To something grander it will grow.
Oh, then dispel the deepening gloom,
For Christ of Bethlehem make room!

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. E. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

Word comes from Idaho and Montana saying that the people have good crops, and cattle and hogs, but have no money, and can get none, because of prohibitive expense in getting their produce to market.

Word comes from some of the missionaries that they are not receiving the salary promised by the fields, not because the people are unwilling, but because they are unable to pay. I am suggesting to these people in this stricken region, that this would be a good time to call the people to confession and prayer. They and all the rest must not forget that the conditions which face them are, in a more acute way, facing the Boards of the Church, and by reason of this, we are not able to do what is in our hearts to do, for fields that need the help of the Board.

Again, we are hearing that other parts of the Church are enjoying a good measure of prosperity, and it seems to me that this is a good time to enforce the doctrine of altruism, and appeal to the strong to support the weak and not to please themselves.

Dr. McLean, who has charge of our Spanish speaking work, writes a very interesting story in the "Spotlight," about the effect on the Spanish speaking people the closing of copper mines in Arizona had. When the people could get no work to do for themselves, the minister, at Douglass, called their attention to the fact that the Lord's work never shut down, and a good many people were drawn into the fellowship of the Church by reason of his courage and the hope he held out to them.

These experiences show that the days of self-denial are not past, nor all the heroes those who have been dead many years. A very interesting story of one of our noble men has reached my desk. For eight years he has given himself without stint to the mountain section of Kentucky, going to a country where, at the time, he was the only educated minister of any denomination, in the county, and where the destitution was exceedingly great, and where there were only two organized churches of our name, and now after these years has the rare privilege of seeing how the Lord has given prosperity to his work, and instead of the two, there are now six, making the largest number of churches in that county, of any mountain county in the state. These mountain counties of the South offer a real missionary opportunity to the man who is hunting for it. This man considered that he was the minister to the people for all that was good and noble for them to have and do; so he became a leader in Liberty Loan drives, good roads, Red Cross, schools, and all else that would make the people rise up in all that section of the state to call him blessed. He could have taken a larger field, as men count large, but here he felt he must go, and the results have made manifest that his choice was the Lord's for him, and now he turns to this mountain country with a joy and pride justifiable.

The purpose of calling attention to such cases is not to glorify any man, but to call attention of young people who are looking to a life service in the Lord's work to the fact that great things are often found in unsuspected places, and all of us should hear the voice of the great Captain, and go where he directs, with the assurance that much will be accomplished in any field to which he may direct us, if we are faithful to him.

Just this day a young man has been in my office, on his way East to present the claims of the particular field which he serves, to the church which is supporting him in it, and I am sure that no one would have thought that the field which he serves is one that offers great opportunity to the man who looks on the outside, but to this man it is the garden of the Lord, and in it he has found great delight. At a time like this, with doors opening on every hand for service, why is it that more of our young, strong men are not coming forward, saying: "Here am I; send me."

Hundreds of young men are in our colleges and universities preparing for the work of life, but how few of them turn to the ministry as a life calling? Yet here is a field that waits for young men and women to enter and gather sheaves for the Master of the harvest.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

The National Bible Institute has secured a row of former Astor-estate dwellings on West Fifty-fifth Street for $350,000, and will build a new home for itself, as the present quarters on West Thirty-fourth Street are inadequate.

One of the largest churches for negroes is to be built on 138th Street, near the College of the City of New York, at a cost of $400,000.

The New York Evangelistic Committee has arranged to supply to smaller churches, unable to secure the proper men, evangelists of note and ability who will conduct services in these churches during the winter months.

Mr. William T. Ellis, writer of international reputation, will address the New York Presbyterian Union at its thirty-fourth annual dinner, Friday evening, December 16, at the Hotel Astor. Dr. Ellis is reporting the Washington Armament Conference for the Chicago Daily News, the New York Globe and many publications which come under the Associated papers. Dr. Ellis will address the Union on the Conference, giving a "Broad View of Its Significance" and "Intimate Views of the Discussions." It is doubtful if any of the accredited newspaper representatives at the Conference have a more intimate knowledge and understanding of the purposes of the Conference than Dr. Ellis. Hon. Frederick A. Wallis is president of the Union.

There is every reason to believe that New Year's Eve will be the driest New York restaurants have had ever before. The prohibition law will be strictly enforced. If any one doubts that prohibition is not prohibiting, let him read the last issue of Moral Welfare, published by our Presbyterian Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare. The General Secretary of the Board, Rev. Dr. Scanlon, is accomplishing a much-needed work, as he carries on the activities that give the Board the right to be called "The Board of Applied Christianity," or even a better name, "The Cup of Cold Water Board." In our hospital work in New York City we find that the number of those who are suffering from alcoholism is greatly decreased. The drug addicts are driven to seek their narcotics in other places than the saloons, many of which have been transformed into stores of various kinds.

Rev. Dr. Walter D. Buchanan, pastor of the Broadway Presbyterian Church, is in his pulpit after an absence of several weeks on account of an operation and an injury to one of his eyes.

Through the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America an appeal is made for the starving children in Russia. It is urged that "For every Christmas dinner a gift of equal value be given to the starving children, and that gifts to the home circle be duplicated in value by gifts to the Russian children."

A farewell rally will be held at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, Dec. 27, for Captain Gypsy Pat Smith, under the auspices of the New York Evangelistic Committee. The Billy Sunday chorus will sing.

Rev. Frank B. Gliotti, who spoke at the Presbyterian Ministers' Meeting Dec. 5, on "Finding God by the Wayside," told of his experience as an orphan boy compelled to make his own way, being a famous jockey at the time of his conversion. Since that time he has been doing mission work in New York on the East Side, and has been the means of the conversion of some of the worst and lowest. He goes to Schenectady, N. Y., to become pastor of the Italian Church. He is leaving New York for lack of financial support in his mission work. The ministers were mightily stirred by the address and several expressed their purpose to be more diligent in seeking and saving the lost than they have been heretofore. Prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Arthur H. Allen, who is at the head of Home Mission work in the Synod of New York.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

Subject to the permission of presbytery, Rev. R. L. Van Buskirk has resigned the pastorate of the First Church, Coraopolis, Pa., and accepted a call to be assistant pastor at the First Church of this city, recently called to the Westminster Church Steubenville, O.

The annual dinner of the Young Men's Society of the Third Church, on the evening of Dec. 12th, was addressed by Rev. Percival H. Barker, pastor of the Point Breeze Church, taking as his subject "Theodore Roosevelt." Mr. Barker delivered the same address on Nov. 25th before the Pittsburgh Teachers' Institute and Educational Association of Western Pennsylvania.

Prof. D. R. Breed, D.D., who is now in California, has rented a bungalow near Los Angeles, and may remain a year on the Pacific Coast.

At a dinner given by the Second Church, Rev. G. W. Shelton, D.D., pastor, in honor of the Gypsy Smith choir, which assists so finely the Sabbath afternoon services in the Alvin Theater, much excitement was created by a large woman rushing in and announcing herself as a Bolshevik, and also bitterly arraigning the meetings as they are conducted. Her harangue had scarcely been finished when a man started a criticism of the Gypsy Smith choir, complaining there were too many female voices in the choir. He was followed by a sharp criticism of Dr. Shelton's last Sabbath sermon, and the excitement did not lessen when a young man rushed to the platform and vociferated in French, till led out by an usher. The pastor sat speechless. But all's well that ends well, and it was soon discovered that this was part of the entertainment, and pre-arranged, and rehearsed for the occasion. Enthusiasm, laughter, refreshments and movie pictures followed.

At the Shady Avenue Church, Rev. Dr. David Lang preached last Sabbath on "Why I am a Protestant," in the morning and in the evening on "Protestantism and Roman Catholic Advertisements."

The ten advertisements on Protestantism prepared by Prof. D. S. Schaff and printed in the Dispatch are now finished and in the form of a circular are ready for distribution at the Presbyterian Book Store in this city. R. J. Gibson, manager. They are well written, and endorsed by a number of our ministers, and should result in a much clearer conception of why we are Protestants, and what the Reformation had to reform. The last of the Roman Catholic advertisements will, also, soon be issued, as the newspapers wish to avoid controversy. One of the latest may be mentioned as it is characteristic, and it is an assertion of the doctrine of the immaculate Conception, and also denies that Mary is ever worshiped. Any truthful and worthy Church history will show that Mary has been worshiped as "Queen of Heaven." As of Mary's immaculate conception and consequent sinlessness, Erasmus, who never left the Roman Catholic Church, though his play depicting Sixtus in hell, as given in Froude's Erasmus, is one of the most terrible indictments of the Papacy, says the mediaeval churchman must have been more knowing than the Apostles, for the Apostles never regarded Mary as sinless. This advertisement contains the astounding remark, following the declaration of Mary's sinlessness, that she is redeemed by Christ as He redeems us. If sinless, Mary needed no redemption. It is more than likely that Protestantism and its true purpose are better understood hereabout than for some time. On the other hand nothing would give us greater pleasure than to fellowship and work with Romanists if they would act on the New Testament, and not regard themselves as compelled, as an English Cardinal of late years declared, to root out Protestantism, and, as heretics, physically destroy them. Unfortunately Romanism is not to be judged or measured by the attitude of its representatives when in a minority, but by the view given us in Farley, Iowa, where, the public school being burned, the majority being Romanists refused to let the town rebuild. The reader of Lee's History of the Spanish Inquisition is compelled to estimate Romanism differently from what he sees in Pittsburgh, or under the courteous approach of Gibbons.

In Coatesville, Pa., there is a vigorous mission school carried on by Elder Ridgeway, whose evangelical faith is only equaled by his large common-sense, good judgment and knowledge of the Bible. His off-hand comments on the Sabbath-school lessons are enjoyed and appreciated by many teachers, and I have a special admiration for him, because he believes in the capacity of all men white and black, and black as well as white, to profit by Christ, and reach true Christian manhood. I find this remark of his in a letter to the dramatic editor of the New York Times: "You may be interested to know I have been investigating big business for years, and have not up to now been able to find a single large business of any long standing but in it, somewhere and responsible for its success, is to be found a godly man." Mr. Babson is telling us something like this.

I am glad to refer, again, to Mr. E. S. Martin, editor of Life and Harper's Magazine, and quote from an article of his, which, in a publication like Life, reverses the old line "from grave to gay," and amid the wit and humor and jibes, touches the high note of religion. Mr. Martin, commenting on an article in the North American Review, by a retired business man, Herbert E. Miles, who wants a reconstruction of the Bible, says: "He thinks the Bible is a great book, but somewhat out of date, and if some competent hands took hold of it, and cleared some of the junk out of it, a proper book might be made of it that no sensible person could object to. Mr. Miles is a funny man. His intentions are obviously good, but his understanding is more obviously limited. There is no objection to his doing about the Bible what he wants to do, to rearrange what he understands and leave out what he does not understand. The trouble will be that when he has done it, he won't be able to sell the product. There is more known and suspected about religion than Mr. Miles thinks. The great body of people who are interested in the Bible at all will know that this book as it is, is vastly more valuable than the book Mr. Miles would produce. Some things were more familiar and better understood when the Bible was put together than they are now. We know more about many things than men did 2,000 years ago, but some things well known then have been almost crowded out of knowledge, and are only now coming back. The Bible is valuable not only for those parts which people, like Mr. Miles, understand, but also, and even more so, for what they don't understand today, but may with good luck understand today, but they keep on trying. The job of assembling and editing the Bible was remarkably well done. No group of contemporary men, such as Mr. Miles suggests, seems fit to better it." Thank you, Mr. Martin, for saying what so many of us have come to realize and could not so well express. Shortened Bibles are never so good as this little yet complete book, whose wonderful variety, and even its mysteries, are a delight, truly "wells of salvation," and never dry.

A recent editorial in the New York Times is of point and suggestion in many ways. It says: "The conference called by the Illiteracy Commission of the National Education Association was opened with the singing of a slightly modified version of 'America.' Instead of the line 'Protect us by thy might,' the copies furnished the representatives of the eleven States participating contained the line, 'Teach all to read and write.' The plain inference is that before seeking the protection of a might from without we ought to do for ourselves all that we can to insure the protection of an intelligence from within. Prospero in 'The Tempest' tells how he had endowed the purposes of Caliban, who could but 'gabbe,' with words that made these purposes known; and Caliban replied that the profit of all his language teaching was that he 'knew how to curse.' The literacy teaching must not stop with pains to make the illiterate read and write. They might say with Caliban, 'if that were all 'The red plague rid you for learning me your language!' Is not that delightfully suggestive? What does Americanization amount to, if it has no moral and religious base? And this, the fundamental principle of our Church in its Freedman's Board work is to teach first the fear of the Lord, to show that the greatest commandment is to love God, and their education is a blessing, a helpful, not a harmful weapon. An educated lawyer, or mechanic, or laundress, or farmer, is probably an advance, but not certainly. There are teachers in all our schools and universities who would do well to ponder Prospero and Caliban. May God turn the cursings of our modern Balaam to blessing. (vide Numbers 24.)

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

"Field Day" for Chicago and vicinity was an occasion of unusual interest. Chicago Presbytery met as per announcement in the Fourth Church, and, after transacting some routine business, took recess to meet in the auditorium of the Y. M. C. A. A large attendance of the Presbytery was augmented by a generous showing of visiting brethren from nearby presbyteries. Moderator H. C. Swearingen spoke freely and convincingly of "Some things left over." Among those mentioned were the Inter-Church debt and the New Era deficit, the debts of the Home and Foreign Boards. The task ahead looms so large and important that these things, weights, ought to be cast off, so that the Church may press forward. Dr. J. A. Marquis, of the Home Board; Dr. W. P. Schell, of the Foreign Board, and Dr. W. H. Foulkes, of the New Era Committee, were the other "Field Day" speakers. Each one had a virile message.

Mrs. Parley Zartman, who has been ill with a lingering disease, at the Presbyterian Hospital, died on Monday, December 5th.

In connection with the campaign of evangelism which is being conducted under the direction of the Church Federation, the ministers of the North Shore district are making a concerted effort to reach the non-going church members who have moved into the district and have not connected themselves with any particular church. It is said there are enough of them to double the membership of the North Shore churches, if they can be interested.

Edgewater Church gave a reception to its pastor, Dr. Asa J. Ferry, and his bride, on last Thursday evening at the church. Dr. Ferry has been married since his induction into the Edgewater pastorate. He and Mrs. Ferry will occupy the manse which stands next door to the church.

Wilmette Church, Dr. G. P. Magill, pastor, has received forty-five new members in the last two months.

A SABBATH IN NEW YORK.

BY REV. CLARENCE EDWARD MACARTNEY, D.D.

My vacation period drew to a close when I was at Craigville on the Cape Cod coast. The last free Sabbath I resolved to spend in New York, hearing the doctors, if not asking them questions.

Dr. John Hutton was to preach at the Fifth Avenue Church morning and afternoon. The Fifth Avenue Church is a large one, but no one ever called it a beautiful church. The galleries were swept and garnished, but the main body of the church was well filled. The choir loft is absurdly high and the singers seemed to belong to another world as they poured forth their melody. Dr. Hutton is a short and stoutish man, with black and thinning hair. He has an extraordinary elocution, and is heard with great difficulty, rarely looking his people in the eye, but rolling his head about from one side to another. In contrast with ninety-nine out of a hundred speakers, Dr. Hutton directs his speech and inclines towards the left rather than the right. His text was from the 16th verse of the 90th Psalm, "Let thy work appear unto thy servants." There was a brief introduction about the problem of life as occasioned by the vastness, the silence, and the mastery of nature and her forces, in contrast with the fragility and transiency of man's life. Then the preacher launched forth into his theme—"Life and How to Face It." He said there are three ways in which a man can face life: First, he can face life with a laugh. Whatever man thinks or does not think, says or does not say, nature is supremely indifferent to him and sweeps him in successive generations from the stage. The thing, then, to do, some think, is to laugh at life. This, Dr. Hutton declared, was the unpardonable sin. Woe to him who sitteth in the seat of the scorner!

Second, a man can curse life, fight against its decrees, revile it, boast of his stoicism as Henley did, "head bloody and unbowed," "unconquerable soul," and all that. Yet all the time that he struggles with life and curses it, life is tearing him inexorably away, deaf to his revilings and his idle boasts of self-mastery.

Third, a man can face life with a prayer. He can say, "Lord, I believe in the greatness and the goodness of life; I know not thy plans nor the coming of thy kingdom, but I believe in thee, and I believe in life and the greatness of it. Therefore, Lord, teach me what my work is and let me do it to thy glory. 'Lord, let thy work appear unto thy servants and thy glory upon their children.'"

It was great preaching, no doubt of that. A splendid vindication, too, of the tried and trusted homiletic method of stating your proposition and then advancing against it in orderly assault, one, two, three. There is a great deal of preaching which is not preaching at all, but mere rhapsodizing, because the preacher states no objective and starting for no where in particular, gets no where. He is like the drunken man who asked for a ticket and being angrily called upon by the ticket seller to state the destination responded, "Hic—what—hic—tickets have you?"

In the afternoon I went forth again to hear Dr. Hutton. This time the text was "Finally, brethren," or The Last Things that the New Testament has to say to the Church. He dwelt chiefly on two. First, endure hardness. We have made Christianity too easy in our churches. It ought to be made harder. True Christianity is hard. Are ye able to drink my cup? Second, I will come again. The great promise of Christ to come the second time. This passage was spoiled to a certain extent by Dr. Hutton pouring vials of scorn upon the disputants in the unhappy controversy between premillennarians and postmillennarians. The whole thing he thought was of the devil. It was plain that his scorn was meant for premillennarians. Perhaps they invite these bitter assaults; but with so many agnostics, rationalists, humanitarians now abroad in our churches and pulpits, it behooves us not to throw too many rocks at the premillennarian, though he sometimes is a tempting target. But whatever he is, he is a friend of Christ.

Dr. Hutton concluded with a magnificent paragraph in which he referred to Christ's words about his coming in the first, the second or the third watch; how the first watch was easy; the second, until midnight, a little harder to hold than the first; but the real test was the third watch, when all nature was at its lowest ebb, and when a cold and dreary wind blew upon men and things, aging them. Now, in the third watch, let the Church be faithful to her Lord.

At the close of the morning sermon Dr. Hutton employed with great effect a passage from Othello. He was speaking of Christ and our love for him as the only hope of the soul, the only thing between it and horror and darkness and despair. Here he used the words of Othello:

"Perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee and when I love thee not, chaos is come again. (Act 3: Scene 3.)

One of Dr. Hutton's illuminating flashes was when he was speaking of hardness in the Christian life. He referred to the popular thought of Jesus as the gentle Jesus, meek and mild, and showed how this was by no means a complete description of Jesus. What did Herod think of Jesus? When he heard of his works and words, Herod said, "It is John whom I beheaded." Think of John the Baptist and his rugged character and you get some idea of the moral grandeur of Christ.

I sat on Sabbath evening in the Fort Washington Presbyterian Church and heard Dr. F. B. Meyer. Benignity sat upon his countenance and grace poured into his lips. The lesson was the story of the Prodigal Son. How sweet was the music of the familiar sentences as they fell from the lips of this venerable preacher. Indeed, as he stood there and read the matchless tale, it was impossible not to think that here, in the preacher himself, was a likeness to the father of the parable.

The pastor of the Fort Washington Church is Dr. John McNeill. We used to think of America as producing the starting in the way of pulpit and pastoral method. But this erstwhile Scot evidently is not bound by any traditions of what used to be done in Scottish kirks, for in the pew I picked up a card with the following message:

"Dear Friend: This little card put into your hand, is to wish you well, and to ask in the kindest way, about the best welfare of you and yours. The Bible way of saying it, fits exactly my intention: 'Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with the child?' For it can not be well, if the Sabbath, and the Lord of the Sabbath, and the best blessings of the Sabbath, are set aside. My church stands near, with its open door, and hearty welcome. If you think I'm dull, and my people stiff, you don't need to come back. But try us first. The winter is over, and the good weather has come. We are expecting you and yours. Kind regards, John McNeill."

From what I could observe in this one visit to Fort Washington, Dr. McNeill's big and friendly spirit has proved contagious, and those who come do not find him dull nor his people stiff.

Dr. Meyer's text was: "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine." The introduction dealt with the general proposition that man was created for a life of harmony with God, and that out of God there is only despair and discord. Hell is a fact, not a theory. Wherever a soul is in willful discord with God, there is hell. The sermon had a natural three-fold division. First, community of nature. The Holy Spirit makes the believer a partaker of the Divine nature. The rhythm of the prodigal with the father was broken by the sins of passion. Dr. Meyer paused to observe that, after what he has seen in thirty years' labor in London, he felt that we did the beasts an injustice when we spoke of evil men being beast-like, for the man can far outdo the brute. Sins of passion, thought Dr. Meyer, (and evidently our Savior thought so to,) are less heinous than sins of pride and hatred and malice and envy. Dr. Meyer wished that when he came to a city like New York, instead of being besieged and dined by the honest, respectable Christian people, all the bad people would resort to him as the publicans and sinners came about Jesus. His last fine touch on the younger brother was to represent him as asking permission of his father, after he had repented and returned home, to go back to Alexandria and preach to his former companions in dissipation and sin and vice.

Second, Community of Interests: "Thou art ever with me." The words used suggested two men sitting about the same table and discussing their common affairs. Here Dr. Meyer made a personal testimony to the good he had received through often talking with God in quiet hours, as friend talks with friend.

Third, Community of Property. All the properties of God's nature are open to us. In temptation our defense is not merely to get strength to fight temptation, but to secure from God our Father the opposite graces; if tempted to anger, peace; to hate, love; to impurity, high thinking. God's nature has a "give and take" in it. Saturate yourself in the words of God as Gideon's fleece was wet with the dew. Let your life be hid with Christ in God.

The rhythm of the elder brother was broken by Pharisaism. Men leading lives of "moral" rectitude may be further from God than the publican and the harlot, because they have no sympathy with the outflowing love of God. Dr. Meyer thought that the elder brother's reference to a kid for himself showed his selfishness, a kid being large enough to serve only a little coterie of his own friends. It is easier to get prodigals back into the Kingdom of Heaven than to persuade respectable men to enter in.

In the closing prayer Dr. Meyer asked in beautiful sentences, and with vibrant, glowing voice and tongue, for the harmony of the whole creation with God, the Creator. "Come to our discordant natures as winds to aeolian harps placed in the windows. So may we record in our hearts all the movements of thy spirit."

Dr. Meyer's sermon was a benediction. He gave one a glimpse into the higher, and not oft frequented, places of the Christian life. And what is more important, he left one with a secret yearning to go thither one's self.

PHILADELPHIA NEWS.

BY REV. W. P. FULTON, D.D.

Rev. Ralph E. Wallis has accepted a call to the Southwestern Church and entered upon his work the first Sabbath of December. The Southwestern Church has moved to a new location at Seventieth Street and Buist Avenue, and has just completed the erection of its Sabbath-school building at a cost of over $30,000. The outlook is very hopeful.

Rev. Charles F. Deminger, of Mays Landing, N. J., has accepted a call to the Glendon Church, Presbytery of Chester.

Rev. Clarence H. Woolston addressed the Presbyterian Ministers' Meeting, Dec. 12, on "Jesus and the Children." Prof. J. Gresham Machen, of Princeton Theological Seminary, will deliver his "Lectures on the Gospels" the four Mondays in January at the ministers' meetings.

Haddonfield Church, Rev. Robert Hugh Morris, D.D., pastor, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary last week, and the First Church of Woodbury will celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of Presbyterianism next week. Rev. Herbert Ure, D.D., is pastor of the Woodbury Church.

Rev. W. F. McMillin, of St. Louis, delivered a course of sermons on "The Seven Churches of Revelation" in the Central North Broad Street Church recently.

The trustees of the Presbytery of Philadelphia will celebrate the thirtieth anniversary of their organization on Jan. 5, 9 and 15.

Jan. 15 has been designated by presbytery as "City Mission Sabbath," when all pastors are requested to preach on the subject of "City Missions."

The congregation of the West Green Street Church, at a recent meeting of the congregation, decided to turn over their property to the trustees of presbytery to be sold, and the net proceeds used as an Endowment Fund, the income to be used for city mission and church extension work.

The following churches in Philadelphia Presbytery are vacant: Bethany Temple, Mutchmore Memorial, Trinity, Richmond, Calvary, Central-North Broad Street.

Presbytery's evangelistic campaign is going forward with encouraging results. Two evangelists, Rev. Messrs. Hendricks and Oakley, have been at work since September, conducting evangelistic services in a number of the churches. The simultaneous campaign, when more than forty ministers will come to Philadelphia to conduct evangelistic services, will be held Feb. 12 to 26. A great ingathering is anticipated.

CLEVELAND LETTER.

BY REV. GEORGE A. MACKINTOSH, D.D.

The First Church of Ashtabula has just concluded eight days of interesting meetings, commemorating a century of church life just closed. There have been sixteen pastors, the last four of whom are Rev. J. N. McGiffert, D.D., Rev. C. L. Chalfant, Rev. W. F. Weir, D.D., Rev. C. H. McDonald, D.D., and the present pastor, Rev. H. D. Borley. The centennial exercises began Sabbath, Dec. 4, when Dr. Weir and Dr. McDonald preached. On Monday night the Brotherhood of the church entertained the members of Cleveland Presbytery, who were to hold their winter meeting with this church. The speakers following the dinner were Dr. Weir and Dr. McDonald, secretaries of the Men's Work of the Presbyterian Church. Their subjects were: "The Call to Service—Men Will Answer," and "The Church Must Not Fail." Tuesday was observed as home-coming day. The three "daughter churches" of the city were the special guests. Dr. Henry B. Master, secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, was the speaker. Wednesday was Missionary Day, when Dr. and Mrs. Ludlow, of Korea, were the speakers at the noon luncheon, and Dr. and Mrs. Wiley, of India, were the speakers following the Guild supper. Friday was observed as Sabbath-school and Young People's Day, with Rev. Clarence S. Gee, of Hudson, O., and Mr. A. T. Arnold, state superintendent of Sabbath-school Work, as the speakers. Sabbath, Dec. 11, witnessed the closing exercises of the celebration. Rev. A. C. McGiffert, D.D., and Rev. C. L. Chalfant, D.D., were the speakers. The present pastor, Rev. H. D. Borley, began his work two years ago, and has won a large place in the hearts of the people. The church has 720 members and a Sabbath school of 520. An elder in the church, Mr. S. R. Harris, has been instrumental in the organizing of three daughter churches, the West Prospect Street Church, Harris Memorial, and the East Side Church. The first of these is a strong self-supporting church, with a membership of 325.

Windermere Church, Rev. L. F. Ruf, pastor, is proud of its Sabbath school, that has more boys than girls in its membership. Its attendance is 90 per cent of its enrollment. This church has recently had two celebrations of golden weddings in its families. One of the most highly honored members of the church, Mr. James Pilcher, who has been clerk of session for many years, with his wife, recently reached the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. The present and former members of the session, and trustees, with their wives, gave Mr. and Mrs. Pilcher a dinner at the church that was in the nature of a surprise. All the children and grandchildren were present. The present and former pastors, Rev. L. F. Ruf and Dr. Charles L. Zorbaugh, were present and spoke. A purse of gold was presented to Mr. and Mrs. Pilcher. The other golden wedding anniversary in this church was that of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Burr, who at a family gathering celebrated the important event.

Rev. Charles G. Darling, pastor of Boulevard Church, was the essayist of the Presbyterian Ministers' Club at the December meeting at Hotel Winton, with the theme, "The Poetry of the Bible."

Rev. Robert G. Hutchins, D.D., formerly pastor of Woodland Avenue Church, and often a supply in vacant churches, passed away recently at Berea, Ky., where he was college pastor in Berea College, of which his son, Dr. W. J. Hutchins, is president.

Cleveland Presbyterians were delighted with the address of Moderator Swearingen at the banquet of the Presbyterian Union at Hotel Winton. Dr. R. H. H. Goheen, from India, was also heard on this occasion. Old Stone Church is giving almost a week to the welcome of Dr. and Mrs. Goheen, who are supported by this church. Dr. Goheen preached on Sabbath morning. Dr. Meldrum addressed the annual service of the Scottish Clans at night.

"A Week of Stewardship," under the lead of Rev. A. F. McGarrah, is under way in Cleveland churches, in preparation for two months of study of the subject during January and February.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

Probably it is true that in these days very few people take the time to read published sermons, but it is very certain that all who have the opportunity should read the sermon preached by Rev. Samuel H. Forrer, Ph.D., pastor of Jefferson Ave. Church of Detroit, on "The Philosophy of History." It not only shows a vast amount of study and research, but it is absolutely evangelical in its conclusions.

The most costly experimental work that the Presbytery of Detroit has conducted in this generation has been that among the Italians; and unfortunately it has produced the smallest apparent results. Recently, with a view to placing the work on a more satisfactory foundation, a Commission of Detroit Presbytery of which Dr. Joseph W. Cochran is the chairman, purchased a costly plant on Gratiot Ave., which is to be dedicated on Sabbath, Dec. 11th. Among the distinguished men and women who are to have a part in the ceremonies are Drs. H. C. Swearingen, W. H. Foulkes, J. W. Cochran and W. B. Gantz and Mrs. Charles R. Roys and Miss Lucy H. Dawson. On Monday evening there is to be a "mass meeting" in the auditorium, addressed by "prominent American and Italian speakers, representing the Church, the City and the Italian colony." We are all hoping that this is the beginning of a successful work for our Italian brethren, who are so numerous in Detroit.

In addition to the meetings already announced for the New Era Committee to be in Detroit on Dec. 10 and 11, there is to be a reception at Grosse Pointe on Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Schlotman, at which, of course, there will be no appeal for money.

That suggests the remarkable work that is being carried on at Grosse Pointe, under the ministry of Dr. George Brewer. Possibly the best thing about it is that in so many ways the people rather than the pastor are taking the initiative, which is after all the finest kind of testimony as to the work of a pastor. Quite recently a set of young business men, engaged in large business, surprised Dr. Brewer by coming to him with plans they had for the evening service, all the plans being in distinctively spiritual lines. There are various kinds of revivals, but no one will find fault with the sort of revival that is now going on at Grosse Pointe, which incidentally includes a new church building worthy of the community.

The writer, whose field work lies just outside of the Detroit city limits, in an entirely new work, has had the privilege of receiving forty-five new members who were publicly received on Dec. 11th. One third of these are men, heads of families. They were from many Churches, Episcopalians, Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, Lutheran, Catholic and Presbyterian; but who heartily accept the Presbyterian Church as their spiritual home. Every one of the forty-five had previously been baptized in some communion.

On Monday, Dec. 5th, by request, Dr. Lewis S. Brooke gave an admirable paper on "The Problem of the Country Church," giving facts, conclusions and suggestions so practical that the Ministers' Association unanimously requested that it be sent to the Board of Home Missions, in order that it might be used in some larger way.

At the same meeting we had addresses by Rev. I. A. Good of West Africa, who preached on Sabbath for Rev. P. T. Anstutz at the Church of the Covenant; and Rev. R. A. Elwood of Atlantic City board walk fame, who occupied the pulpit of Central Church.

On Monday evening, Dec. 5th, the ministers of Detroit Presbytery, by invitation of Kenjockety Club, an association of the wives, met at the home of Dr. Minot C. Morgan for a Christmas party, an annual affair, at which very inexpensive presents are exchanged and a fine program enjoyed. If there is any presbytery in the United States, where the ministers and wives have as happy social relations as in Detroit Presbytery, we should be glad to learn of it.

Presbytery of Detroit met at the First Church on Dec. 5th. Rev. A. A. Acton was received from the Presbytery of Ottawa, Canada, and arrangements were made for his installation at St. Andrews Church on Dec. 18. The pastoral relation between Rev. Robert Hillis and Marston Avenue Church was dissolved, at the request of the pastor, who is planning to remove to California. There is in contemplation a plan for uniting St. Andrews and Marston Avenue Churches, as their territory overlaps. Rev. Egbert M. Hayes was dismissed to the Presbytery of Foo Choo, China, where he is engaged in educational work. Permission was given to Grace Church to dispose of its property to a Lutheran organization, and apply the proceeds to the new lot on Glendale Avenue. Rev. W. J. C. Belch resigned as moderator of the session of Highland Park Church, so as not to embarrass the plans for calling a new minister; he having declined the call.

INAUGURATION AT OMAHA.

The inauguration of Rev. James Marquis Wilson, D.D., as President of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Omaha, Neb., brought together a large concourse of friends of the Seminary, and the services were of a high character. A reception was held from 5 to 6 P. M., and the banquet at 6, the speakers being Mr. Thomas E. D. Bradley of Chicago. Greetings were given by representatives of other seminaries and colleges and numbers of letters of congratulation were read. Dr. Vanorden, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Council Bluffs, presided at the banquet and the choir of the First Church of Omaha furnished the music as it also did for the inaugural service.

Rev. Henry C. Swearingen, D.D., Moderator of the General Assembly, delivered an address at the inaugural service on "Ambassadors of God;" Rev. Benjamin M. Nyce, D.D., pastor of the First Church of Lincoln, invoked the divine blessing; and Dr. Theodore Morning, D.D., Synodical Superintendent of Iowa, led in the inauguration prayer. Rev. A. B. Marshall, D.D., President of the Board of Directors, presided and gave the charge to the President.

The subject of Dr. Wilson's address was "An Ancient Portrait of a Twentieth Century Minister." The pen portrait given by St. Paul to the elders of Ephesus in Acts 20 was the one referred to, and in his address Dr. Wilson emphasized the fidelity of Paul as a minister, his humility of mind and his tenderness. He spoke of his thorough training for his task and his system of doctrine, "The whole counsel of God," the great exposition of Christianity, the sovereignty of God and all the teachings of grace and service radiating from him through the one and only mediator. He described his watchfulness against false teachers, ravenous wolves and perverse men, who are now, and have always been, assaulting the flock of God. He spoke of the spirit of love which was and is manifested in the sovereign God and was embodied in Paul and must move every true minister and servant of Christ. "Always," said the speaker, "the struggle has been between the natural and the supernatural, and the supernatural working through the natural, and above the natural, will ultimately triumph. Science is more and more recognizing the facts of Christian experience and the Christian consciousness and approaching the embodiment of the spiritual and the divine as a necessary factor in its conception."

The Moderator in speaking for Macalaster College, as its representative, emphasized the strategic situation of the Seminary; and spoke of the necessity for and authority of God's ambassadors. Mr. Bradley stood for the support of our seminaries by the General Assembly; and Dr. Marshall exalted the Holy Spirit as the guide in ministerial education and service.

THE LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE.

BY REV. H. L. BOWLBY, D.D.

Stressing the importance of every pastor being wide awake in his community respecting a recurrence of the "Blue law" propaganda put on by certain powerful commercial institutions for the purpose of breaking down the State Sunday laws throughout the country, and a readiness on the part of every pastor and church to respond to appeals for help against such bold and dangerous attacks upon the American Christian Sabbath, a most interesting and successful series of meetings were held by the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States, in New York, in connection with its Thirty-third Anniversary exercises, Nov. 13, and Nov. 20-21.

Among the features of the convention was an address by United States Senator William M. Calder, of New York, in which he made the statement that, while Senators and Members of the House of Representatives at Washington had done what they could to aid the postal men in securing Sunday rest, "It was not until the Lord's Day Alliance and the splendid gentleman who was secretary of it became interested in our cause, that we were able to actually bring about the desired results. I think in all fairness it ought to be said in this presence we would never have succeeded in have the postoffices closed on Sunday, except for out-of-town mails, unless this organization had turned in and helped us."

Senator Calder also emphasized a number of other things which had been done by the Alliance through its former and present general secretaries, and the joy and blessing that had come to 100,000 letter carriers and postoffice clerks, besides many other men and women in various departments of the Federal Government, as well as in many other occupations throughout the country. The meeting at which the Senator spoke was one attended by a large body of letter carriers and postoffice clerks in the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Rev. E. Work, D.D., pastor, New York City, Sabbath night, Nov. 13th. Representatives of the Letter Carriers' and Postoffice Clerks' Association also spoke of the great blessing that had come to them and their companions in the service, and expressed their gratitude to the Alliance and the sixteen denominations which it officially represents for bringing about so desirable a reform.

A number of pastors of Greater New York and vicinity preached on the theme of the Christian Sabbath, its problems and possibilities, Nov. 20, and, on the following day, Nov. 21st, services, continued throughout the day, were held in the Madison Avenue Baptist Church. The ministers' associations of the city merged their meetings into the morning service. A large number of ministers and others made up the attendance, and addresses by prominent clergymen and laymen, including a member of the New Jersey legislature, the President of the New Jersey Letter Carriers' Association, and Rev. Herbert E. Blair, Korea, on the spiritual, social, physical, moral, industrial, economical and the political aspects of the Christian Sabbath and the American Sunday, made up the program.

Dr. H. H. McQuilkin, Chairman of the Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, was one of the speakers. The proceedings of the convention will be published in a special edition of the Lord's Day Leader, which will appear the latter part of this month and may be had on application to the Alliance, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

At the annual meeting in the afternoon the 1924 Class of the Board of Managers was elected, as was a vice president from each of the States in the Union. At the Board of Managers' meeting which followed, Mr. James Yereance was re-elected President, Rev. H. L. Bowlby, D.D., General Secretary, and Mr. George M. Thomson, Treasurer. Field and other secretaries were also elected, and a report of the General Secretary was given, in which the interesting fact was noted that not a single commercial Sunday movie or Sunday sports bill had gotten through any legislature last winter and secured the signature of any governor; a remarkable victory for the Alliance and its associated helpers, auxiliaries and affiliated societies. In view of the propaganda to discredit the Alliance, and which was put on at an expense estimated anywhere between one and five million dollars, the need for far greater support to this worthy cause ought to be seen in the citation of this outstanding expense of the work that is being done and the victories that are being won.

The Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance of the Presbyterian General Assembly has rendered great services in the cause of the Sabbath, and is heartily co-operating with the Alliance in a number of the new fields that are being opened throughout the country, and is supplementing in a co-operative way the work of the Alliance in the field where auxiliaries and affiliated societies are already organized. The Permanent Committee on Sabbath Observance in the Southern Presbyterian Church is doing likewise and several other denominations are making plans to help in a similar way. There is more of a united front today on the part of the Churches than ever before. As the outstanding problems have become so pronounced, it is seen that the most effective service can only be rendered by such unity of action and the fullest possible reinforcement of the Alliance, the intermediary of the Church, in this department of service so fundamental to all the other causes of the Church.

SAVING IMMIGRANT CHILDREN.

BY REV. J. W. DUNBAR, D.D., PRESIDENT.

The Institute of Practical Arts at Old Concord, Pa., is doing a wonderful work in establishing a school, unique in its character, for the sons and daughters of our new Americans, for their Christian education.

Lincoln McConnell, who on Thanksgiving evening lectured to this school and community, wrote back saying: "You are laying the foundations of an institution of which the nation one day will be proud. May God keep and cheer you."

To have the endorsement of such an eye witness is indeed encouraging. Yet the very greatest encouragement we receive is from the boys and girls themselves who are now, many of them, pursuing their second year of study with us. They are earnest, zealous, and teachable. Subscriptions and donations seem so hard to secure. There seems to be no money. Everywhere we go people seem anxious and willing to give, but say they have no money.

Today's mail brings a letter of cheer from The King's Helpers' Mission Circle, of Waynesburg, Pa., saying: "It was voted by the Circle to send a check to pay for a scholarship in the school. We want to help."

There are many mission circles, Endeavor societies, Sabbath schools and men's classes and societies which would if they only knew of our needs, and the wonderful work here being done, send their checks to help buy bread and sustain this infant institution.

Here is Home and Foreign Mission work combined. We take the foreign boy and girl, some of them in their twenties, who know no English and less of our American ways of life, and train them in the most thorough manner to become leaders of their own people.

As Major Armstrong trained Booker T. Washington to become a leader of his people and ultimately a founder of Tuskegee, so we hope to train in head, hand and heart, the choice spirits of our polyglot foreign nationalities who may likewise become leaders and saviors of their own people.

Mr. John C. Bain, a leading attorney of Pittsburg, Pa., said recently: "Go home and tell your trustees and architect to build for expansion, for Christian education alone will save America."

Are there not individuals with a surplus amount of money who are willing to erect monuments to their memory, or the memory of loved ones, by helping to found this much needed institution?

More than a third of our population is now made up of the immigrant and his children. Where could money be better used than to give training to those who "hunger and thirst" for it? He who gives now gives doubly.

Please send contributions to Rev. J. W. Dunbar, D.D., President, Old Concord, Pa., or to Prof. O. F. H. Bert, Treasurer, Washington, Pa.

CHURCH UNION IN KENTUCKY.

The two branches of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. and U. S., in Lebanon, were united Dec. 6, with the approval of both Transylvania Presbyteries. This step is seen by leaders as foreshadowing the merger of both branches in Kentucky. For fifty years the Presbyterian Church in Lebanon has been divided into two branches. Recently the two branches voted to unite and adopted a plan of union.

The two Transylvania Presbyteries convened in Lebanon to consider the petition of the local churches. By unanimous action both presbyteries approved the basis of union which the churches had agreed on, and by formal action made them one church.

The main points in the basis are that the church is to be known as the United Presbyterian Church of Lebanon, that all property owned by both churches is to be deeded to the United Church, that the officers in the two churches are to be officers in the United Church, that all benevolences are to be divided equally between the two General Assemblies, and that connection with and representation in both branches of the church courts is to be maintained.

Another object of the meeting of the presbyteries was to receive and consider an overture from the Laymen's Association of Transylvania Presbytery, asking for union of the two presbyteries. This overture was referred to a committee from each body, consisting of four ministers and three laymen, who are to hold joint meetings to consider the matter and report at the next meeting of the presbyteries. The joint committees will meet at Harrodsburg Jan. 5.

Both presbyteries sat together in business session and both moderators occupied the platform. Rev. Dr. J. M. Vander Meulen, Louisville, delivered the closing address.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

Upon invitation of the Cincinnati Church, in Arkansas Presbytery, I visited that church and held a service on the evening of Dec. 1. On the morning of Dec. 2 I had a conference with the officials and the new minister, Rev. M. L. Womack. The purpose was to impart information concerning the budget, both for the local church and the boards of the Church. Since the coming of Mr. Womack to this field the church has taken on new life. Mr. Womack has a Bible class with over forty enrolled, and the Christian Endeavor Society is one of the best in Northwestern Arkansas. The entire budget of this church will be secured.

I was taken from Cincinnati to Siloam Springs, where another conference was held with Rev. Dr. D. T. Waynick. The budget of this church will be secured in full. The attendance on divine service is large. Dr. Waynick is doing excellent work and is held in high esteem by the entire city.

I was driven from Siloam Springs to Gravett, to hold a service on the night of Dec. 1. A conference was held with the officials on the morning of Dec. 2. The budget for this church will also be secured. I hope to be able to arrange for regular services for them soon.

I went from Gravett to Southwest City and held a conference with the officials of that church on the night of Dec. 2, and had a conference with the young people.

I was then taken fourteen miles to Noble, Mo., and was at Cove on Dec. 3. I had a conference with the church officials. The budget for this church will be paid. I held services here on the night of Dec. 4. Rev.

W. A. Sausseman is supplying this church two Sabbaths each month.

A delightful service was held at Grannis on Sabbath morning, Dec. 4. The clerk of the session, T. J. Wilbanks, declared his purpose to enter the ministry of our Church at an early date. Mr. Wilbanks is a young business man, a college graduate, a graduate of law, and, until recently, cashier of the bank of Grannis. He is held in high esteem by every one in this town. A meeting of the Fort Smith Presbytery will be called on Dec. 15 to receive Mr. Wilbanks under the care of the presbytery. The meeting will be held in Fort Smith.

Judge J. W. Wade, an elder in the Little Rock Church, has been invited by the men's Bible class at Clarksville to speak to them on the evening of Dec. 14.

Rev. T. N. Threlkeld, the new minister on the Ravenden Springs group, has arranged to hold a revival meeting at Wirth during December.

W. N. Wilkinson, clerk of the Greenwood Church, writes me that services are now being held in the new church building and they are anxiously looking for a minister. I would be glad to correspond with any minister who might wish to consider this work.

I have been advised of the death of Squire Luceford, an elder in the Macy Church of the Jonesboro Presbytery. His death is a severe loss.

A CALL TO PRAYER

The Executive Commission of the General Assembly believe themselves warranted in suggesting to all our churches that a day be set apart for special prayer. Accordingly, it is recommended that Sabbath, December 18th, be so observed, and that the services of this day be devoted to an explanation of the work, the needs, and the opportunities of our Missionary and Benevolent Boards and Agencies, accompanied by earnest and united supplication that God would reveal to our Church, as his witness in the world, its enlarging and irresistible obligation, and would make it by his grace both worthy and willing to perform this lofty duty.

True prayer in this behalf will begin with confession and repentance; it will deplore neglected failure and search our hearts for the causes; it will put behind us dependence on plans and powers which are not of God; it will seek to cast out the evil spirits of selfishness and unkindness, and of engrossment with things that hinder allegiance to the Kingdom of God; it will claim the divine promise of forgiveness; it will vow a new obedience, a new adherence to the saving Gospel of God's dear Son, and a new fidelity in proclaiming it; it will offer adoring gratitude for all that God has accomplished through us and for his unchanging faithfulness; it will plead for grace truly to love all men, to understand all their needs, and, in the spirit of Christ, to supply them. Such prayer will come to crave courage of self-denial, and, finally the heroism of fellowship in a Redeemer's sufferings, until, to the devotion it awakens, these proposals of our Boards and Agencies will grow petty, the least we may offer, and nothing will satisfy it except a full share in the world-wide triumph of the Savior's power. Prayer which brings Christ near, enlarging his figure and the dimensions of his cross makes these tasks small.

We ask the churches to regard this day of prayer as merely the beginning of a protracted period of inquiry and intercession lasting throughout the winter, and that at every Sabbath service, at the prayer meeting, and in family devotions, there be repeated an importunate prayer that God Spirit would lead our people to consecrate to him their lives and their possessions, so that the needy fields may be supplied with willing servants and the Lord's treasury may overflow with holy gifts.

We are straitened only in ourselves. Our tasks, however they may appear to us, lay but a light tax on God's resources. Let us stir up ourselves to take hold of his strength.

"Ask and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."

On behalf of the Executive Commission,
Henry Chapman Swearingen, Chairman.
Lewis Seymour Mudge, Secretary.

MISSION WORK

ICHOWFU, SHANTUNG, CHINA.

BY REV. T. N. THOMPSON.

"Mr. Thompson, will you let this school girl go with you one day's journey across country to her home?" Thus Mrs. Winter, of the Girls' School, addressed me one day recently. I was then at Yih sien preparing to make the two-days journey by wheelbarrow from that station in here to Ichow, when I was asked to take care of this girl. I told Mrs. Winter that I had only a wheel barrow for my goods and my own seat on the wheel barrow was not very likely to be used by me, as the men were even then complaining that the barrow was too heavy. I also said that I could not be responsible for her safety either, as the roads were known to be full of robbers. But two weeks before I had taken some of the foreign ladies of the mission and three children across that way, and had an escort of forty-five soldiers, which incidentally cost me $40 for fees, etc. This time I was traveling alone and relying on the prestige of the foreigner and the name of the church to get me through. The girl was about eighteen and plenty able to walk the twenty-five miles to her home. She had been in school for several years, had but few people at home, who were poor, and she had made no progress in her school work. It seemed best to get her out and somebody else to take her place; so Mrs. Winter said: "We will send her home and her people can marry her off, as they will soon do, rather than support her." This may seem heartless and strange to you, but we have no special schools here for such cases as hers, and when a girl stops school, the door of matrimony is about the only one left. So the girl followed my barrow all day, with an old man to take care of her, carrying her little bit of clothing, etc. We made the last five miles of the trip that first day over a road infested by robbers, and after night we picked our way into our little chapel, where I was received by the Christians as a man of great bravery, because I had come through that region just where, a night before, two villages had been pillaged. Also a few weeks before that, two of our students, enroute to the University at Tsinan, had been taken by robbers and were even then still in their hands, held for a great ransom. Captives who had escaped from these robbers had said there were almost 2,000 in the band of thieves. One Chinese who had just returned from France had joined himself to our party. He put up a rather prosperous appearance with his new leather shoes, which only the newly rich wear in China, and he also carried a watch, which the robbers take great fancy to out here these days. He tramped on with us and was also glad to get the protection of the foreigner.

When I was itinerating a day or so ago, with my camp bed of a rather unique pattern spread out and prepared for rest, one of the countrymen remarked that such a cot would be a nice thing for a farmer when he had to sleep out in the fields to watch his crops. I said yes, why do you not buy one, tellin him that the cot would cost about $5. "Why," he said, "who would pay five dollars for a little bed like that?" The farmer saves his money and buys more land. "But," I said, "why save your money all the time; why not use a little of it to keep you comfortable as you go on?" Then one of the older Christians said, "Why, even our rich men would not spend five dollars for such a bed." The other day several of them from this district, electors, went up to Ichow to help elect the representatives to the Provincial Assembly. The right of suffrage is very much restricted here, and so only these few went. They received, so the Christian said, $1,500 each for their votes, had spent $500 in the city on riotous living while in at the elections, but some of them, while on the way home had been taken by robbers and had to spend the $1,000 and more as ransoms, in order to get away with their lives. "Now," said the Christians, "if that-sort of men would only spend their money rightly, they could buy such things as foreign beds." They did not say anything about the virtues of selling your vote for $1,500. Perhaps one reason suffrage is so restricted here is that too much voting would send the price of votes down, so there would be no profit in it.

Not long ago a certain lot of voters were going to a neighboring city to exercise their new rights as citizens of this great Republic. They were riding on a local train on a small railroad not far from here. They had a local guard of country militia. The train stopped at a small station and the robbers swarmed out on all sides. They seem to have appeared just as the train was to start. One jumped on the engine and the engineer went off the other side. The fireman proved the hero of the occasion, as he started the train and then, when ordered by the robbers to stop it, replied by giving the engine more speed. The robber then shot him and the fireman, wounded and dying, persisted in opening the engine throttle wide open. As the engine gathered speed, the robber jumped, falling and breaking his leg. The farmers gathered him up and took him to the city, where the official finished him off, as they do with all highway robbers here in China when they catch them. This trouble caused me some inconvenience the other day, as I meant to take that train farther up the line, and barely caught it, by missing my supper, as they were running the train forty minutes earlier than usual, and not stopping at that station at all. Without any announcement, they had speeded the train up forty minutes so they would not need to go through that robber infested region so late in the evening.

Since writing the first part of this letter, I have a letter from one of the boys mentioned above who was taken by robbers on his way to school. He has been released without ransom. He tells me that, being a Christian, he was not injured, and that the robbers, 2,000 in all, liked to have the boys sing and preach to them. We have had four Christians thus taken by robbers, and in every case incessant prayer was made for them, and not one suffered any indignities, and were all released in due course of time, without paying any ransom. This has strengthened the faith of our Christians quite a deal.

Pray for China, for she is in bad shape. Rebellion is found throughout the whole land. Bandits abound, and the 1,600,000 soldiers are continually deserting and adding themselves to the number of robbers. There have been three major and several minor mutinies during the year. Two of the military governors have been killed, and another has committed suicide. Last year's famine, caused by drought, is now giving place to another great famine in the South, caused by great rains and floods. In the midst of all this the work of the Church goes on, blessed by God. The people see the Church perhaps the only thing secure in the midst of changing and disturbed conditions out here.

CINCINNATI PRESBYTERIAL.

The women's meeting on Presbyterian Day, Dec. 8, attended by fifty women, was held in the Church of the Covenant. Mrs. J. Shane Nicholls, president of the Women's Missionary Society, presiding. Mrs. A. L. Whitaker conducted the devotional service.

The Moderator of General Assembly, Dr. H. H. Swearingen, made the first address, and gave the women of the church praise for their part in the great missionary enterprise. He said that the budget system was borrowed from the women. Mrs. C. K. Roys, speaker, representing the Foreign Missions Board, had served as missionary in China. She said that our own Presbyterian missionary physicians were the first to undertake work for the blind, the deaf, and insane, in China, establishing schools and hospitals for these afflicted ones. "Had a missionary physician been stationed on the border of Afghanistan, the world would not have suffered from the ravages of influenza, which spread from there. Government schools employed men from America, many of whom scoffed at religion. All this must be overcome by missionary education." In closing she said in missionary enterprise alone was the hope of our homes and our children. Miss Lucy Dawson, representing the Home Missions Board, impressed her hearers with the needs of the homeland not yet met. She said that "the greatest hindrance which the Christian religion has in the Orient is the lack of religion in some areas in America. Our immigrant problem is still unsolved and the racial situation is still to be settled. Sixty millions in America are outside the membership of any church. The hope of the world is via America."

A dinner was served at the Y. W. C. A., attended by some forty women, where Secretary Schell of the Foreign Board gave an address on "The Women of the Orient."

NEAR FAMINE IN HUNAN, CHINA.

BY REV. GEORGE L. GELWICKS.

Serious crop failures, owing to drought this summer, have produced almost famine conditions, calling loudly for relief in Hunan Province, and the situation will undoubtedly become worse during the winter and next spring, before the new rice crop can be harvested, as the shortage is very severe in many sections. The Delhi Chapel is located in Hunan.

There will be much need of relief. It also had to be given during the summer. I am the responsible agent of the Hunan Relief Committee for seven counties, two of which center in Hengchow.

We had a very good annual convention, but the severe drought and high price of rice prevented us making any progress in the self-support contributions. We have cause to be thankful, not chiefly for money received, but for education in giving, and the spirit it manifested. The contributions were not enough and we were facing a serious deficit. An appeal was made for special contributions, to prevent a retreat and a falling back in the hopes of self-support. The response with little special urging was very encouraging, showing their hearts are centered in their church and they really care for its well being. The subscription secured three-fourths or more of the deficit we would have had, and enabled the Chinese church to pay all the salaries of its Chinese evangelists, that is, its share of the same.

Several years ago we sent out evangelist bands to Li Yang county, entirely without Christian work. We were unable to follow it up, but one chapel town was opened in the northern part. Two years ago we were able to open this field as our newest circuit. Now I find three chapels, one built by our Church Election loan funds. All have had members baptized and there is a good nucleus of woman believers. Mrs. Gelwicks is busy with the school work for women in the city and goes out to a different center every afternoon and has much encouragement.

Hengchow, Hunan, China.

ILLINOIS SYNOD WORK.

The New Era Committee of Illinois Synod and the seven field men working under the synod's Church Extension Committee and the presbyteries of the synod held a joint meeting in Chicago Dec. 6. The work in each of the presbyteries was taken up and the entire day was given to the needs of the field. This meeting was called by Dr. George P. Magill, chairman of the New Era Committee, and Dr. J. W. McDonald, chairman of the Church Extension Committee, following the action taken at the recent meeting of synod requesting these two chairmen to work out a plan of co-operation with would more effectively serve the churches of the state. Detailed plans for serving all the churches will be worked out through the co-operation of the Church Extension office at Decatur and the New Era office in Chicago. It is to be understood that Dr. J. N. Elliott, state superintendent of Presbyterian Church Extension, and all the field men of the synod, instead of representing one committee, hope to represent in their visits to churches, all the interests of Presbyterianism.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Kyle, president of the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, of St. Louis, died on Dec. 8, after an illness of only two hours, from heart disease. He was seventy-two years of age. He was a strong and good man and his loss to the Church will be very great.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago announces its Annual Founder's Week Conference to be held February 1 to 5 inclusive, with a strong program of Bible teaching, addresses, and meetings for prayer and consideration of present day problems.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

First Fruits in Korea. By Charles Allen Clark. Cloth. $1.75. Fleming A Revell Company, New York.

Dr. Clark has been a devoted and successful missionary of our Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Board since 1902. The story here presented throws much light on the interesting work that has been done in that land, in the first flush of acceptance of the Gospel by multitudes, and in their steadfast adherence to their faith in the face of the brutal treatment that many of them have received at the hands of the authorities of Japan. It is a story that deserves to be read. Dr. Clark knows of the conditions and facts and his presentations of the work in the form of fiction is only in order that the truth may be more effective. It is a book well worth-while.

The Collected Poems of Amos R. Wells. Cloth. $2.00. Christian Endeavor World, Boston.

One is amazed as he investigates this closely-printed, friendly-appearing volume to find how many verses have flowed from the pen of one living man, and especially when he is known to be one of the most prolific writers and workers of the age. And these poems are full of a good, sweet and earnest purpose, the expressions of a Christly love and life. The author of Pe-loubet's Notes carries into these pages of verses the same spirit that elsewhere expresses itself in scholarly exposition and loyalty to the Scriptures of God. We have enjoyed reading what Mr. Wells has written on these pages. We have seen many of the verses before and are glad that they are now assembled in this permanent form. The author has made himself, as well as his poetry and his prose, a contribution to the Christian cause, and there are many who, loving him, will, all the more love what he has written.

New Paths Through Old Palestine. By Margaret Slattery. Cloth. $1.50. The Pilgrim Press, Boston.

This is a well-written description of Palestine as it appears today, and as seen by the author in her recent experiences there and in the Far East. The volume is profusely illustrated and is an interesting presentation of present-day conditions.

The Hope of the Future. By Edward E. Eagle. Cloth. $2.00. Cornhill Publishing Company, Boston.

The author has made a special study of international commerce and here writes in regard to the relations of the United States to other parts of the world and the lessons that it may and should learn from them for its own good. It is a thoroughly loyal book but it is out-spoken in many matters of criticism and warning, and is, consequently, really valuable. There are short forewords by, and portraits of, many prominent men, as President Harding, David Lloyd George, Sir James Craig, Hon. William Massey, Hon. W. M. Hughes, and Hon. Arthur Meighan.

An Introduction to the History of Christianity, A. D. 590-1314. By Professor F. J. Foakes Jackson. Cloth. $5.00. The Macmillan Company, New York.

The object of this work is to present an introduction to the history of the Middle Ages. The outstanding facts of the period are given, in a way to stimulate interest in a period which does not awaken general popular concern at the present time. The work culminates in interest in the delineation of the occurrences and characters of the thirteenth century. In regard to this century opinions are held that are most divergent, some holding that this was a most wonderful century for human and religious achievement, while others think of it as a time of crowning wickedness. The author hopes to continue his work in subsequent volumes. In this he has shown great enterprise and zeal in the handling of vast stores of fact and opinion, and has manifested a laudable industry and love for historical research that only few are capable of in these later days. While there is room for differing judgment on various points, it is sufficient to speak of the book as an interesting and valuable repository of facts.

The Gift of Tongues. By Rev. Alexander Mackie. Cloth. $2.00. George H. Doran Company, New York.

Under the divine inspiration, according to Christ's promise, the gift of tongues was imparted to the apostles, to that degree and measure that was necessary, at the time for the spread of the Gospel. In later times, among ignorant people, and especially among those who have had immoral practices in connection with their profession and propaganda of religion, there has been occasional, or frequent, claim to this "gift of tongues," or use of other languages without learning them. These shallow and immoral conditions, that blossom out in these claims, are exposed here in a very careful and exact way, giving facts and dates and names, guardedly, so that the book is not a mere inveigment, but an authoritative exposure. It is a serious and reliable discussion of conditions that have given much pain to thinking and reliable Christians.

The Joyous Guests. By Maud Lindsay and Emilie Poulson. Cloth. $2. Lathrop, Lee & Shepard Company, New York.

This is a beautiful book in story, illustrations and all external qualities and conditions. It is by the authors of "The Joyous Travelers," which some time ago was a great favorite on account of the remarkable story-telling gift and poetic ability of its authors, the quaintness of its old-time characters, and its artistic beauty. The present volume has the same qualities of excellence. A squire opens his spacious halls to Christmas guests, old and young, and insists that all tell tales. So for each of the twelve nights of Christmas-tide they make merry with good cheer and a good story. A beautiful picture for each night completes the season's finest book for children. For boys and girls from eight to fifteen it should be a great pleasure.

S. S. Peter and Paul. Illustrations by H. J. Ford. Notes on the Pictures by W. K. Lowther Clarke. Society for Promoting Religious Knowledge, London. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a very beautiful illustrated volume, going through with the main events in the life of the apostles in the Book of Acts. The pictures are full-page and the text is descriptive of the occasions that called for the pictures. There are many beautiful books with pictures illustrating the Gospels, but fewer on the Book of the Acts, and so this is all the more welcome.

The Monday Club Sermons for 1922. Cloth. $2.00. The Pilgrim Press, Boston.

For forty-six years this volume has appear annually. It is a collection of sermons on the Sabbath-school lessons for the year, one for each lesson. Congregational ministers, as a general rule, are the contributors, one or two sermons from each preacher on the list. The value of each sermon is dependent on the individual preacher. Some of them, as the ones from Dr. C. E. Jefferson and Dr. F. E. Clark, are excellent.

Building a Successful Sunday School. By Rev. P. E. Burroughs, D.D. Cloth. $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Out of a large experience comes this volume of well-prepared and well-arranged suggestions for the management and development of a Sabbath school. Any one who is worthy of the office of superintendent is anxious for counsel and instruction for doing his work in the best possible manner. There is much of real value on the pages of this volume and many will give it a hearty welcome.

The Boy with the U. S. Secret Service. By Dr. Francis Rolt-Wheeler. Cloth. $1.75. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, Boston.

This is a valuable book, giving much valuable information as to the purposes and accomplishments of the Secret Service department, and impressing the fact of the extreme carefulness with which its work is carried on and guarded. The book shows how our Government watches the doings of criminals in order to frustrate them. The author has produced a careful and valuable book for boys and others, the complete manuscript having been read by W. H. Moran, Chief of the U. S. Secret Service, before being offered for publication, and illumines a side of our Government which is a closed book to the general reader.

The Future of the Churches. By Roger W. Babson. Cloth. $1.00. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

Mr. Babson has had the ear of the country, in recent years, in his oft-repeated assertions that religion is the essential need of the country and of the world, and that there can be no stability or assurance for society except as men accept the great principles of religion. He has not really attempted to define the sort of religion that men must accept, but has insisted upon the general principle. In this volume, however, he calls upon the churches to take up certain lines of influence and work if they are to retain their hold on the people. Of course what he says is interesting, but his judgments are not so authoritative in this department as they are in the realm of business. However, it will be well to listen to what he suggests. It is stimulating, at least, and may be considered with profit.

The Animal Mother Goose. By Harry Whittier Frees. Cloth. $2.00. Lothrop, Lee and Shepard Company, Boston.

This is a very charming version of Mother Goose, many of these familiar old verses being illustrated by specially posed and costumed living animals, as cats and kittens, dogs and puppies and pigs, photographed in a most successful way. It must have taken wonderful kindness and patience to induce these little animals to submit to all this posturing and costuming, and it speaks volumes for the patience and skill of those who arranged the contents of this beautiful volume. It is a bright, clean and delightful book and is calculated to charm all who love these old jingles and who love to see fine little animals.

Prodigal Daughters. By Joseph Hocking. Cloth. $1.75. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

This is a remarkably attractive, and yet painful story, undertaking to reveal, as it does, the lengths to which modern young women are tempted to go in the assertion of their own independence. It is of course laid in England, and sets forth the conditions which a Colonel finds in his home on his return from the war. It is to be hoped that the rebellion against the authority of parents and of religion and of ordinary social restraints here portrayed does not exist in many families, and yet there is the fear that it may be widely spread. In this story some of the prodigals come home.

The Story of Creation. By E. B. Trist. Boards. 75 cents. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, London. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a beautifully illustrated story of the beginnings of the world, as told in the Bible, including the Ark and the Flood, and is well adapted to the needs of children, and their parents who would read to them.

PAMPHLETS.

Synod of Colorado. Minutes of 1921. Rev. George R. Edmundson, D.D., Byers, Col., Stated Clerk.

Synod of Indiana. Minutes of 1921. Rev. William F. Padgett, D. D., 801 Lincoln Avenue, Evansville, Ind., Stated Clerk.

Synod of Illinois. Minutes of 1921. Rev. C. Harmon Johnson, Clinton, Ill., Stated Clerk.

The Union Lesson Guide and Golden Text Book. Five cents. American Sunday-School Union, Philadelphia. Contains a list of the lessons and texts for the year.

The Superintendent's Guide for 1922. By Harry Edwards Bartow. 30 cents. Suggestions for each lesson and Sabbath of the year.

Twenty Years in Porto Rico. By Rev. Arthur James. A record of Presbyterian Missionary work since the American occupation. By one of our Presbyterian Missionaries. Published by the Board of Home Missions, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York.

RELIGIOUS NEWS

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Rev. Frank H. Boleyn, from Centerville, Wash., to Kinde, Mich.

Rev. Walter H. Hicks, from Tacoma, Wash., to Rochester, Minn.

Rev. Curtis H. Page, from Kent, La., to Prestonburg, Ky.

Rev. S. R. Reid, from Prairie Grove, to Clyde, Ark.

Rev. H. E. Marshall, from Marshall to Milan, Mo.

Rev. John William Turner, from Lawton, Ia., to Lyndon, Kan.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The Wyoming Church, Rev. David Garrett Smith, pastor, is carrying on a delightful series of Wednesday evening prayer meetings, under the auspices of various organizations of the church. The meetings opened with the session in charge, with the subject, "The Session and the Rest of the Church." The Sabbath school has for its subject, "Religious Education and the Home;" the Westminster Guild, "Tired of Missions;" the trustees, "Profit and Loss;" the Young People's Society, "Our Definite Aims;" the Missionary Society, "Christmas in All Lands;" the Ladies' Aid Society, "Mary and Martha—Which or Both?" the congregation, "The Kind of Preaching We Like." The Missionary Society reports that as a result of the thank-offering taken on Nov. 27, $150 were raised, the largest annual thank-offering that has been made for this cause in the church.

Elmwood Place Church, Rev. Reginald Coleman, pastor, is in the way of being electrically lighted within a few weeks, the young people having raised $175 for this purpose. The building is now in very attractive condition and the church is prospering in every way.

Pleasant Run Church, Rev. W. M. Reese, pastor, received four members recently. A well-attended and attractive banquet for fathers and sons was held at the church last week.

The Presbyterian Men of Cincinnati and vicinity made the visit of Moderator Swearingen the occasion of their anniversary business meeting. About three hundred men attended the supper and listened to a fine and stimulating address. Mr. Ren Mulford presided. The following were elected for the coming year: President, Guy B. Roush; Vice-President, Harry McGowan; Secretary, Lawrence K. Slabach; Treasurer, Standish Meacham; Directors, Rev. Mulford, Rev. J. W. Christie, Rev. W. T. Paterson, T. E. Wallingford, E. T. Lovett, Walter Geyer and Fred Otto.

The local Federation of Churches, at its meeting on Jan. 18, expects to arrange the pre-Easter program of evangelistic work in the churches, and will have an address on the subject by Dr. Charles Goodell.

An illustrated lecture on Missions in Alaska was given in the Third Church, Rev. William Gross, pastor, last Sabbath evening.

Rev. Henry Pearce Atkins, D.D., preached last Sabbath evening for Rev. J. V. Stephens, Jr., in Clifford Church.

Last Sabbath evening, in the Walnut Hills First Church, Dr. F. N. McMillin, pastor, an illustrated address on Porto Rico was given by Rev. Arthur James.

Dr. George P. Fisher, a former secretary of the Cincinnati Y. M. C. A., spoke in the Poplar Street Church last Sabbath evening, where Rev. D. A. Greene is pastor.

A stereopticon lecture on Mexico was given last Sabbath evening in the College Hill Church by the pastor, Rev. C. A. Austin.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

Rev. John W. MacIvor, D.D., pastor of the Second Church, was elected President of the St. Louis Church Federation, Tuesday night, Dec. 6, at the annual meeting at the City Club, succeeding Rev. Ivan Lee Holt, D.D. Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D.D., Dr. Gunsaulus' successor in Chicago, was the annual speaker, giving an address on "The Modern Man's Religion." A resolution concerning the Conference on Limitation of Armaments was passed, rejoicing over the stand taken by this country and the apparent willingness of other nations to co-operate.

Eighty-seven new members were added to the West Church, Dr. W. B. Lampe, pastor, on Sabbath, Dec. 4, following the three weeks' evangelistic services there. The congregation on this day was extremely large. It was estimated that 850 were present, and 700 in the Sabbath-school.

Four co-operating missionary societies at the Washington and Compton Avenue Church held their annual praise and prayer service, Wednesday evening of last week. Four missionaries were fortunately available as speakers at this service. These were Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Strother, members of the Washington and Compton Avenue Church, who have been for more than ten years in China; Miss Chiles of China; and Miss Jane Thompson, of India.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Tyler Place Church is being celebrated this week. Last Sabbath was "Homecoming Day." Wednesday night will have anniversary addresses, and on Friday night there will be an "anniversary party" at which Charles Hoke, one of the charter members, will give a sketch of the church's history. Eight of the fifty original members are still actively associated with the church. It was first organized in the home of the late Rev. John B. Brandt, D.D., the "church-builder," at 3809 Flad Avenue. The return, even in dollars and cents, which an investment of this sort may bring, is shown by one of the incidents in this history. The First Church advanced $10,000 of the money necessary, which was about $20,000, for the first Tyler Place church building. The congregation's gifts to the church since then aggregate nearly $100,000, and Tyler Place ranks as one of the most prosperous in St. Louis. Rev. Robert C. Williamson, D.D., is pastor. One of the members is George W. Sutherland, who is on the Executive Commission of the General Assembly.

"The Lambeth Appeal" was discussed, before our Ministers' Association, Monday morning of last week, in an address by Rev. D. C. MacLeod, D.D., of the Central Church.

Dr. F. R. Crawford, a missionary from Kashing, China, was the preacher at the Central Church, Sabbath morning, Dec. 4.

Rev. Frank H. Magill has begun, at the Oak Hill Church, two series of sermons to continue through December; one on Sabbath mornings on "God," with the opening sermon on, "The Being and Sovereignty of God"; and on Sabbath evenings on "The Deity of Jesus Christ."

The young people of the Second Church are received at a semi-social meeting, early in the Sabbath evenings, during the winter season. Tea and a light supper are served at 6.30 o'clock. A recent address was by Mr. Alfred Sihler, of the congregation, on "Playing the Game."

"The Seven Cardinal Virtues" is the title of a Sabbath evening series of sermons which Rev. James Hardin Smith, D.D., is giving at the North Church.

At Cote Brillante Church, communion was held on Sabbath, Dec. 4, with preparatory services in the preceding week. On Friday night, the speaker at the preparatory service was Rev. H. H. McConnell, pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church.

OHIO.

The fine new Welsh Presbyterian Church building at Columbus, at 108 Miami Avenue, Rev. E. Edwin Jones, pastor, was dedicated on Sabbath, Dec. 4. Rev. J. W. Matthews, of Jackson, O., preaching in the morning, Dr. S. S. Palmer in the afternoon, and Dr. John Hammond at night. Special exercises were also held on the three preceding evenings, with sermons by Dr. D. J. Williams, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and Rev. S. W. Griffith, of Cleveland, O. The building is very commodious and beautiful, and cost, including its $8,000 organ, and its complete furnishings, $125,000. On dedication day $15,000 was needed to complete all payments, and $23,000 was raised. The church was organized in 1849, and has had ten pastors. Its present membership is 504.

INDIANA.

Rev. Paul Rader, pastor of the Moody Tabernacle of Chicago, preached in the Cadle Tabernacle of Indianapolis last Sabbath afternoon and night. It is said of Mr. Rader that he has preached every night for two years.

Rev. Dr. J. C. Garritt, of China, preached last Sabbath evening for Rev. H. T. Graham in Westminster Church, Indianapolis.

Hon. J. C. Chaney, of Sullivan, presided at the New Era meetings, Tuesday morning, at the Second Church, following meetings on Monday afternoon and evening, addressed by Dr. Swearingen and Dr. W. H. Foulkes.

The Lawrenceburg Church, Rev. Forest C. Taylor, pastor, has recently rejuvenated its church building, putting a metal ceiling in its auditorium, installing a new lighting system, and redecorating the entire interior. Rededicatory services were held on Sabbath, Dec. 4th, with sermons, morning and evening, by Dr. J. J. Rae, of Richmond, Ind., and with congregations that taxed the entire capacity of the building.

ILLINOIS.

Fourteen new members were received on Dec. 4 at Monmouth, Rev. Paul Arnold Peterson, pastor. The pageant, "The Lifting Hands," was given last Sabbath evening, the house being crowded.

The church at Cartersville has made substantial progress under the pastorate of Rev. E. J. Sabin. The manse has just been refitted throughout, and a garage built, and church building improvements are contemplated. A successful young people's work conference was held Dec. 4, by Sabbath-school field worker, Rev. W. D. Vater.

At the First Church of Oak Park, Rev. R. E. Vale, D.D., seventy-seven members were received Dec. 4th. Mr. Harold F. Branch, a senior in McCormick Seminary, is acting as assistant, and it is expected that he will give full time in this capacity immediately upon his graduation.

The pastorate of Rev. John C. McElroy at Witt has been dissolved, and he has been dismissed by the Presbytery of Aiton to the Presbytery of Butler. His address will be Bruin, Pa.—James R. Sager, S. C.

The Missionary Society at Hillsboro, Rev. J. R. Sager, pastor, held its forty-fourth annual praise service on Dec. 4. Five of the charter members are still members of the church, and one of them, Mrs. Sophia Rolston, on Sept. 24th celebrated her 70th anniversary as a member of this church. Evangelist J. M. Beadles will begin special meetings here with the New Year.

The First Church of Urbana received ten members on Dec. 4th. Rev. John J. Wilson, D.D., begins his eighth year here under auspicious circumstances. During the seven years, 375 have been received into the church, the Sabbath-school has doubled, as has also the Endeavor Society; the local church budget has doubled and the benevolences have increased six hundred per cent. A men's club has just been organized and the church is well organized and united. A largely attended reception was tendered the pastor and his wife on the occasion of the seventh anniversary of the pastorate.

Rev. W. B. Hindman left his pastorate in the Second Church of Bloomington for that of the First Church of Aurora, in an ideal manner. Not only were his people sorry to lose him, but the whole city seemed to regret his going. The people of the Second Church presented him with a handsome gold watch and showered other presents on him and his family. The American Legion of which he is Chaplain attended his last service in a body. The church at Aurora is one of the largest and most active in the state, numbering some 1,200 members. He enters upon his work with great promise.

For the last ten Sabbaths the children of the Ipava Church were invited to note the text preached on by the pastor, and upon reaching home to find and write out the text in full. At the end of ten weeks a New Testament was given to the best set of texts handed in. At the same time members of the Endeavor Society had a contests in which, during twelve Sabbaths, they were to write out twelve texts with outlines to each, not over fifty words long. Besides stimulating the attendance of the youth at the church services, the parents became very much interested. Christian Endeavorers wanted to be at church and young folk desired to belong to Endeavor. Many learned the value of close attention and analysis. Finally the preacher himself was compelled to watch his own sermon analysis more carefully.

The Ipava Church has finished up completely the basement under their church building. The people recently bought an automobile for their minister, Rev. Nelson Dalenberg.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Summit Church, Germantown, Philadelphia, Rev. Francis M. Fox, D.D., pastor, received ten members at the December communion. The work is going on with constant encouragement.

NEW YORK.

Announcement by Auburn Theological Seminary of the short course to be given in its School of Religious Education, Jan. 23 to Feb. 24, shows that there are to be seventeen distinct courses. Instruction in the Old Testament, New Testament, church history, educational and adolescent psychology, principles of teaching, child study, story telling, graded Sabbath-school departmental work, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, recreational activities, music, are among the subjects. There is to be a faculty of eleven, under the leadership of Edward P. St. John, dean of the school. The charges are fifty dollars for the five weeks, which cover the entire expense for board, lodging and tuition.

NEW JERSEY.

The Presbytery of Newton met in the First Church of Phillipsburg on Nov. 30. Rev. Hugh Miller was released from Harmony, and given leave to labor without bounds of the presbytery. The vacant church is under the committee on Vacancy and Supply.—Robert Robinson, S. C.

The Presbytery of West Jersey met at Salem, Nov. 15. The pastoral relation existing between Rev. Ralph E. Wallis and Pittsgrove was dissolved and Mr. Wallis was dismissed to Philadelphia Presbytery. The overture on women was answered in the affirmative, and the one on commissioners in the negative. Rev. Joseph H. Hunsberger was received from the Presbytery of Baltimore. At the evening session presbytery joined with Salem Church in the celebration of its Centennial Anniversary. Addresses were made by Rev. O. G. Morton, acting Moderator of presbytery, the Rev. R. Hilliard Gage, D.D., Moderator of the synod, and Rev. Addison B. Collins, D.D., Stated Clerk of the presbytery. Rev. Joseph Vitale, pastor of the Vineland Italian Presbyterian Church, died on Nov. 21.—A. B. Collins, S. C.

RHODE ISLAND.

Providence Presbytery met in the First Church of Providence, R. I. Rev. J. Edward Grant, Ph.D., was released from New Bedford Church to accept a call to Churchville, Md. The New Bedford Church is under the Committee on Vacancy and Supply, Rev. Charles A. Fisher, Worcester, Mass., chairman.—Robert L. Barbor, S. C.

WEST VIRGINIA.

The Church of Allen Grove, Limestone and Wolf Run have called Rev. S. C. Elder of Grove City, Pa.

After a pastorate of six years, Rev. Edgar P. Carson has resigned at Richland Church, Wheeling. The work has greatly prospered and he leaves a well-founded work in this suburb. He will make his home in the South on account of the health of his family.

VIRGINIA.

Rev. John Steele of Pittsburgh, of our Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare, recently visited the First Presbyterian Church of Richmond, Va., and put in a busy Sabbath with Rev. A. A. Hector, the successful and enterprising pastor of our denomination's only church in that city. account of it is given elsewhere.

GEORGIA.

With 108 accessions during the past year, the Harris Street Church of Atlanta now has a membership of 235. The morning attendance has grown from fifty to over 200 and the evening attendance from thirty to about 200. Frequently the evening service attendance exceeds that of the morning. The average prayer-meeting attendance has been sixty of late, but a special effort is now bringing this up to ninety. The Endeavor Society has an attendance of fifty to seventy-five. This church takes in new members every other Sabbath, and the evangelistic note sounded at each service results in many public confessions of Christ. The pastor is Rev. Roy Talmage Brumbaugh.

MISSOURI.

Evangelist B. Frank White closed a successful evangelistic campaign at Wells-ville, Mo., Nov. 27. The entire community was moved by the practical and powerful preaching of the evangelist. The Presbyterian Church in which the meetings were held was aroused with new enthusiasm and earnestness. Large accessions have already been made to the local church. From here Mr. White went to Holton, Kan., after which he will spend his holiday vacation at his home in Bellefontaine, O. He is ably assisted by Rev. A. L. Carter, soloist and choir director, himself likewise an ordained Presbyterian minister.

IOWA.

The First Church, Waterloo, has finished laying the foundations for its new edifice. Work will proceed April 1st. Dr. John Robertson Macartney, the pastor, has been using screen services Sunday nights since Sept. 1st, making use of the excellent material provided by our Home and Foreign Boards; also the great set of slides entitled "Back to God," by William Jennings Bryan. Throngs attended these services. The hymns are thrown upon the screen and also the Scripture to read in unison. A great fight has been for the closing of the Sunday theaters, a vote to be taken on Dec. 6. Many Bible Study classes are in progress in this church.

The First Church of Bedford, Rev. M. E. Lumbar, pastor, is building a new manse, to cost about $7,000. This is made possible by a generous initial gift from Mrs. Hattie Y. Crum. Last year about $2,500 was spent in improving the church building. The union Thanksgiving service was held in the M. E. Church and the sermon was by the Presbyterian pastor.

The church of Manning received four members on Nov. 27, making seventeen since the coming of Rev. W. W. Tait, D.D., as pastor. Two new elders were recently ordained and installed.

Rev. Curtis H. Page, of Kent, Ia., has accepted a call to Prestonburg, to succeed Rev. E. N. Hart. Mr. Page has had a very successful pastorate at Kent, and the people were very sorry to part with him and his wife, but they held a parting reception, presented them with valuable tokens of affection, and lovingly sent them on their way to their new work.

Rev. John E. Reese, of Panora, Ia., has been called as assistant minister by the First Church of Council Bluffs, Ia., to assist Dr. A. E. Vanorden. Mr. Reese was chaplain of the 188th Depot Brigade during the war. Ground has been broken and the erection of a chapel has begun in the west section of Council Bluffs, Ia., by the First Church. The building is to cost $12,000, and will seat 210 people in the auditorium, besides a commodious basement for other meetings.

The Home Mission Committee, Rev. J. P. Linn, D.D., chairman, of Council Bluffs Presbytery, has surveyed the district around Lake Manawa, in Council Bluffs, and the people have petitioned for the organization of a Presbyterian church. Steps have been taken to secure lots for a building.

As a result of two weeks' services in Bethany Church at Council Bluffs, conducted by Rev. John W. Todd, presbyterial evangelist, seventy-two professed faith and fifty-six were received into the church, while ten children were presented for baptism. Rev. T. G. Nethery is pastor.

Rev. John W. Todd, presbyterial evangelist, has held a two weeks' meeting in Bethany Church, Council Bluffs, Rev. T. G. Nethery, pastor. Seventy-two have professed faith and fifty-six have been received into the church, fifty-one being on profession. Ten infants have been baptized. The Willing Workers class of Bethany Sabbath school have taken charge of the cradle roll, and by a thorough search of the neighborhood, have enrolled 127 babies in the school. The class teacher, Mrs. W. F. Page, acts as cradle roll superintendent, and each member of the class is her assistant.

The First Church of Council Bluffs has called as assistant minister, Rev. John E. Reese, of Panora, Ia., former chaplain of the 168th Depot Brigade, to aid Dr. A. E. Vanorden. This church is erecting a chapel on the west side of town to cost $12,000.

OREGON.

After over two years of successful work as pastor of the La Grande Church and a large increase in membership, Rev. James Aikin Smith has received a call to Hope Church, Portland. Grande Ronde Presbytery, at his request, has dissolved his pastoral relationship, and dismissed him to Portland Presbytery.

W. J. Hughes, Stated Clerk.

WISCONSIN.

Ministers and members of all the Presbyterian churches in Milwaukee Presbytery, thronged Calvary Church on Sabbath evening, Dec. 4, for the Rally service. Rev. Paul B. Jenkins, Rev. W. R. Schriver, Rev. B. G. Jackson and Rev. James Oastler took part.

The December meeting of the Woman's Synodical Missionary Society was held at Neenah, Rev. D. C. Jones, D.D., pastor, Dec. 7.

At the meeting of Milwaukee Presbytery Dec. 5, Rev. L. A. Axt was made supply of Cambridge. Rev. C. E. Franz, secretary of the Administrative Council, reported good meetings at Calvary Church.

Rev. F. G. Rehner, secretary of the Federation of Churches, reported a plan for the winter work. Presbytery adopted a course of study for three years for those men who have not been able to take a college or seminary course. The plan was presented by Dr. James Oastler. Rev. Wm. J. Semelroth was dismissed to the Presbytery of Winnebago and goes to the church in Westfield.

Dr. Gerritt Verkuyl preached at Oconto on Dec. 4, and told of the encouraging work of the Sabbath school in Wisconsin.

Rev. George E. Griffith has been greatly blessed in his work in Stanley and in the mission stations around, during the past four years. At Eidswoold, four miles out, they have now fifty-four active members. Besides Stanley and Eidswoold, Mr. Griffith goes to Brownville schoolhouse where he has a church of thirty members, to Huron, Coburn and Hobbs schoolhouse. These outstations all have Sabbath schools and regular Sabbath services. Here is a Home Mission field where six communities are served.

The church at Winter, near Rice Lake, has about sixty members. A beautiful new home of worship was dedicated Oct. 16. Rev. Carl E. Franz, synodical field worker; Rev. J. S. Wilson of the Home Mission committee, Rev. R. A. Carnahan and Rev. E. Iverson conducted the dedication service. Five new members were received. Large congregations assembled and it was an occasion of great rejoicing.

Rev. E. W. Wright, of Oconto, has accepted a call to Appleton.

Rev. Carl F. Bruhn and wife, of Phillips, recently found a finely equipped automobile at the door with this inscription: "I am your assistant in the Master's work." This help enables the missionary to serve four outstations besides the church in Phillips. The new car was made possible by many friends and the help of the Home Mission Committee. This enables the missionary to reach the little settlements remote from the large towns. There is a large foreign population in the country around. Rev. E. J. Koukol, who has been serving the Bohemian people for several years, has been called to Omaha, and Mr. Bruhn will take up the missionary work for a while.

Rev. Norman Barr, of Chicago, spoke at the third Forum Supper Conference of Milwaukee Presbytery at Calvary Church on "What Does the City Ask of the Church?" The Island Avenue Church presented an illustrated story on the growth of a seed, showing the progress of the church from its start, twenty years ago.—A good start in the work among our foreign population has begun, and about 12,000 Bohemians have been located, and many of them enrolled in our mission stations. Rev. M. Filipi has been faithfully working during the past year in connection with the Perseverance Church, and last summer the daily Bible schools enrolled 175 children. Forty-nine Bohemians are members of Perseverance Church, fourteen of whom united last summer.

MINNESOTA.

The Presbytery of Minnesota through the Men's Work Committee recently arranged a banquet for Life Recruits, for the Presbyterian High School boys. Mr. Geo. B. Dayton, an outstanding business man and elder, appealed to the boys for their dedication to the call for definite Christian service. About 300 boys attended Dec. 12 at the Westminister Church. The Evangelistic Committee of Presbytery offer to help every church hold a series of special meeting during the winter. Ministers of the Presbytery are volunteering in sufficient numbers to supply all churches, asking help.

Oliver Church, Minneapolis, Rev. Raymond J. Rutt, pastor, has three musical organizations under the leadership of Prof. G. Everett Williams, Music Director. A choral club of sixty-five voices, a men's choir of 25 voices and a girls' choir of forty-five members from twelve to sixteen years of age. The pastor has three Bible classes that meet each week. Fourteen new members have recently been added to the church.

NEBRASKA.

Ten members were received into the church of Hansen, Neb., Rev. J. G. Russel, pastor, on Nov. 6, and one infant was baptized.

In the Church of Grand Island, Rev. A. A. Smith, pastor, ninety-five men and boys sat down to a dinner served by the ladies on Tuesday night, Dec. 6th. After dinner Mr. R. V. Clark, of the State Industrial School for Boys at Kearney, Neb., gave an address on "The Diligent Boy." He said that the chief causes for delinquency among boys are "the cigarette, the immoral movie, loitering places like the pool hall or smoking room, the misuse of the automobile and the failure of parents to properly guide and instruct their boys."

KANSAS.

Since the coming of Rev. M. Brooks to Delia, encouraging progress has been made in the life and work of the church. The Dorcas Society has been organized and has been active. Repairs have been made on the buildings, sidewalks, belfry and bell, and lighting fixtures, all at a cost of about $500. The people are encouraged.

The church at Liberty recently concluded a series of evangelistic services, during which eight adults confessed Christ. Three were added to the church on confession. Rev. Clarence Almon, of Oskaloosa, who regularly supplies the church, conducted the services.

Perhaps the greatest evangelistic campaign ever held by the five churches of La Crosse, Kansas, was recently conducted by Evangelist Elmer P. Loose, and party of Waukesha, Wis., in the large auditorium, with several hundred confessions and a remarkable awakening of religion in the home.

As the result of a series of meetings at Peabody, conducted by the pastor, Rev. N. S. Metfessel, twenty-one members have been added to the church, of whom fifteen received baptism. The present pastor came a few months ago.

Caney has called Rev. Claude Davis of Wichita, and he is now at work on the field. Rev. H. W. Curtis is to leave Altoona, Kan., Jan. 1, and Rev. Bradner E. Wells of Emporia has been asked to succeed him as stated supply.

Rev. Geo. McNab is at McCune and Osage and the work is going on actively.

Rev. Chester Birch, evangelist, begins a Gospel campaign at Cherryvale, Jan. 1.

The Kircher evangelistic party of Emporia, Kan., recently closed a union meeting in Sylvan Grove, Kan., where Rev. H. C. McMican, is pastor. There were conversions and reclamations as well as re-consecrations. Quite a few of the most prominent people of the community are affiliated with the churches there. The Kirchers are now in Wakarusa, Kan., where Rev. George Jackman is pastor.

Rev. C. M. Robb was installed at Neodesha, Kan., Nov. 8.

COLORADO.

Rev. Albert H. Saunders of Decatur, Ind., has accepted a call to the Corona Church of Denver.

December 11th was "Church Extension Field Day" for the Presbytery of Denver. In thirty-seven churches the work done by the Church Extension Board since its organization in April was reviewed and the plans and purposes of the Board for the future presented. In Denver the pastors of the churches exchanged pulpits for the day and a "Flying Squadron" of ministers and laymen carried the message to the churches in the outlying districts.

The "Centennial State University of Denver" which recently announced its supposed existence by bestowing, promiscuously, honorary degrees upon unsuspecting ministers and lawyers, and then attempted to collect a fee of $25 from each, has had its charter revoked by the state authorities.

The Presbytery of Pueblo met in Colorado Springs, Nov. 28. Rev. D. G. MacLennan was released from the Lamar Church and was dismissed to the Presbytery of Larned, to accept the pastorate of the First Church of Hutchinson, Kan. Rev. D. Diamond Mitchell was received from the Presbytery of Wichita, and Rev. L. J. Albert from Highland. Mr. Mitchell is to become pastor of Pueblo Park Avenue Church, and Mr. Albert is the pastor-elect of the Pueblo-Mesa Church. Rev. Robert J. Black was received from the Rock River Association of Congregational Churches in Illinois.—William Gordon Keiry, Stated Clerk.

At the December Communion at Salida five adults were received, all on confession. During the present pastorate, no communion has passed without the reception of new members. Rev. L. Harold Forde is pastor.

The First Church of Boulder, Rev. Robert Karr, pastor, has just completed a campaign of personal evangelism, covering sixty days. The church was divided into twenty-one groups, and when the campaign came to a culmination, Nov. 27, 104 new members were received into the church, forty-two of them coming on profession. This makes 263 new members received in about one year, bringing the total membership to 820. A goal of fifty more is set for the Christmas service.

The First Church of Sterling, Rev. Harry B. Vail, pastor, received eight members on Nov. 27. A school of missions has been held in the church with excellent attendance, closing on Sabbath evening, Dec. 11, with the pageant, "The Open Door." The Westminister Society of the church recently held a bazaar from which $612 was realized.

OKLAHOMA.

The Presbyterian Church of Alva, Rev. LeRoy Thompson, pastor, has just closed a School of Missions. The Foreign Missions books were used. There was a lunch each Wednesday evening and the men came directly from their places of work to the church. After lunch the devotional and study period began. There were five classes, using "The Why and How of Foreign Missions," "World Friendship," "A Noble Army," "Under Many Flags" and "Stories for the Small Children." There was an average attendance of sixty-five in the classes.

TEXAS.

Hemphill Church, Fort Worth, Rev. Dr. M. E. Chappell, pastor, received twenty-four members on Dec. 4th, making fifty since Oct. 1st, and 101 since April 1st. The entire membership now is over 600. On Dec. 4th a large offering was made to Albany Orphanage and the money was raised for building a gymnasium adjoining the church building.

CALIFORNIA.

At the December communion in the First Church, Long Beach, Rev. George M. Rourke, D.D., pastor, twenty-eight new members were welcomed. Preparations are completed for beginning an annex to the church for Sabbath school requirements, which is greatly needed. A School of Missions has just closed, which was largely attended. The church has four flourishing Endeavor Societies.

Rev. C. S. Tanner was installed as pastor at Downey, Los Angeles Presbytery, Dec. 4, by Rev. W. W. Choate, Rev. Campbell Coyle, D.D., Rev. R. Logan and Rev. H. C. Buell.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

Evangelist John M. Linden, Madison, Wis., has held eleven campaigns through 1921, closing the year in meetings at Centerville, Iowa, and Nebraska City, Neb. He opens the new year in Indiana at Owensville and Mentone.

LAW ENFORCEMENT.

BY ASSISTANT ATTORNEY-GENERAL GOFF.

To have good government, we must have good citizens, and always, continuously, a warfare without truce or quarter against those who violate the law. It is strange but true, that bad men are combined and good citizens are divided, and that therein lies the cause of law breaking. If the good would join hands, the lawless could do nothing.

We must legislate and prosecute, and drastically punish, but principally we must educate, and practice what we preach.

It is not for an executive, State or Federal, to say whether a law is good or bad. He should enforce it, or confess failure and resign.

We may bite our chains as we will, but we shall be made to know that man is born to be governed by law, and he that puts his own will in the place of it is an enemy of God.

Prohibition is not the only law which is difficult to enforce.

Any new law which interferes with the so-called personal liberty of the community must pass through the stages of open violation, secret violation, passive enforcement, and then universal observance throughout the land.

The man who can not obey the law, the man who can not fearlessly enforce the law, and with the courage of his convictions bring before our judicial tribunals every dastardly and contemptible crook no matter how high his rank, has no place in our system.

The law stands, proclaiming "Thou shalt not break," and when that commandment is broken the Nation should bend its efforts to see that atonement is made. The quickest and surest way of setting any law at naught is to relax its enforcement; while the quickest and surest way of instilling respect for the law in the hearts of a people is to vigorously press its enforcement.

Our Government and our Constitution are not to be overthrown by the whims or the depravity of those who speculate in public justice and view it as an article of personal favor. The parasites that fatten on crime and live on human sin shall not be permitted to traffic in our liberties and, vulture-like, sink their gorging beaks into our laws.

Today all mankind is suspicious, doing nothing, playing safe. America must not and will not yield to this condition. Instead, she must be the positive nation. She will. And she will, I am sure, be positively good.

We have no room for those who would have us exchange our liberty and freedom for isms and licentious license. Such people should go to a country which gives them their peculiar liberty.

The law must be and it shall be enforced as it is conceived and written, and always without fear or favor. I bring the pledge that in so far as it lies within the power of the Department of Justice to execute and enforce the law of the land, there will be no backward step, no retreat, in preserving the Constitution and carrying out the mandate of the people.

A CHRISTMAS THOUGHT

Oh, Christmas is coming again, you say,
And you long for the things he is bringing;

But the costliest gift may not gladden
the day,

Nor help on the merry bells ringing.
Some getting is losing, you understand;
Some hoarding is far from saving,
What you hold in your hand may slip from your hand;

There is something better than having.
We are richer for what we give,
And only by giving we live.

Your last year's presents are scattered and gone,

You have almost forgot who gave them;
But the loving thoughts you bestow live on

As long as you choose to have them.
Love, love is your riches, though ever so poor;

No money can buy that treasure:
Yours always, from robber and rust secure,
Your own without stint or measure.
It is only love that we can give;
It is only by loving we live.

For who is it smiles through the Christmas morn—

The Light of the wide creation?
A dear little child in a stable born,
Whose love is the world's salvation.
He was poor on earth, but he gave us all
That can make our life worth living;
And happy the Christmas Day we call
That is spent for his sake in giving.
He shows us the way to live;
Like him, let us love and give.

"Miss November" And the Pink Silk Dress

By MARY McCRAE CULTER

(Copyright, 1921, by Monfort & Co.)

CHAPTER V.

After her caller left her, Nancy Varden sank weakly and wearily back into her chair and gazed at the vacant chair across the hearth with almost horrified eyes. Was this the thing toward which she had been drifting? Was this what people thought of her—that she was a fitting mate for a man as old, as pompous, as cold, as Professor Darker? What would Aunt Elizabeth—what would Bettie say—if they could know?

The more she considered the proposal that had been made to her, the more insulted she felt herself. What was it he had said? "In spirit, in habits, in inclinations in manners and dress, they were one at heart?"

She wanted to scream out her indignation so that even the retreating, crestfallen professor could hear. Was it possible that, as he had asserted, other people beside himself considered her a "settled and elderly character?" Had she really "left the frivolities of youth behind her?" Then she remembered the name which the merry college students had bestowed upon her, and which she had chanced to overhear more than once—"Miss November."

It was true, then! It was really true! And she was barely thirty years of age! Why, Bettie had been thirty also!—Bettie whose birthday was the same as her own! Bettie, who "was more like a girl of twenty than like a matured woman." Bettie, whose "exquisite taste" had selected the pink silk dress that lay upon the bed upstairs and which her "dainty self had worn with such a distinguished air!"

Nancy felt suddenly weary and worn. she looked down at her somber grey gown claiming three score year and ten. She gazed at the vacant chair across the hearth and her mental vision beheld the grey-haired suitor who had occupied it for so many times that it seemed to belong to him, and who had, insensibly to herself, made himself a part of her home life for so long that he had dared to address her with the assured, proprietary air which had so startled her.

The weariness with which she had dragged herself home from the college that very evening swept down upon her once more, bearing upon its leaden wings the unhappy, unwelcome assurance that old age was upon her and that youth had indeed been "left behind." She rose from her chair, sick at heart and benumbed of soul, with a wild desire to flee away from the dreariness of life that surrounded her and to hide away in some secluded spot where no one would ever be able to taunt her with her misery.

At that moment, Mammy Lou appeared, her face beaming with satisfaction.

"Am dat ole man done gone, Honey Chile? Seemed lak he gwine stay fo'ebber, amen. Am yo' plum fohgot dat heavenly dress upstahs? I'se jes' a-honin' to see you wif it on."

In a sudden revulsion of feeling, Nancy whirled away from the couch upon which she had been about to throw herself, and exclaimed excitedly:

"O yes! Come on, Mammy Lou."

She was out of the room like a young whirlwind, and ran up the stairs as Mammy Lou had not seen her do since the days of her childhood.

The upper room was warm and light and bright. Heaps of girlish things were everywhere, inviting inspection. Mammy Lou tarried below stairs long enough to make sure that doors and windows were fastened, and the fire made secure for the night. When she entered the upper room she was greeted by a vision in Hunter's green—a girl with excited eyes and glowing cheeks, and with golden-brown hair pulled into a fluffy mass beneath a cap of soft brown fur.

"Oh," Mammy Lou exclaimed as she circled admiringly around the girl. "Am dis you'sef, Honey Chile, or am it some fly-away college gal? Ef dat ole dictionary-diggah of a puhfessah could see you now, he'd nevah say yo' olde as he is."

"Mammy Lou!" cried Nancy, whirling angrily upon her, "You were eavesdropping all the time—now weren't you?"

"No! Honey Chile," she replied with hands lifted deprecatingly.

"Mammy Lou knows bettah dan to do sech a low-down t'ing as dat. I was jes' a-waitin' in de dinin'room tell you call me to bring moah wood, or tea, or somepin, an' Ijes' couldn't he'p but hear dat ole man's drawly voice bossin' you 'roun' about gettin' mahried to him. Huh! All he want am dat chahia by de fiah, an' all dem books of youah Pa's, an' you an' me to slave for him. How do I know? Hain't I watch him lookin' 'round' dat room an' smilin' to himse'f, an' sippin' his tea lak a bumblebee tastin' ob honey, an' lookin' at you as ef you plum belong to him, an' scowlin' at Mammy Lou evah time she doan't please him? Huh! Guess I know."

"O, Mammy Lou!" cried the girl with such unhappiness in her voice that the old negress hastened to add:

"Dar now, Honey Chile. Jes' fohgit aif about it an' play lak nuffin evah happen, an dat yo' jes' a little young gal lak Miss Bettie, wif all dese pretty clo'es to mek yo' look lak a l'il young college gal. Come on, Honey Chile," she coaxed.

Nancy laughed, a little nervous laugh, and turned back to her mirror. She could hardly believe that the youthful picture that confronted her was really a reflection of her own transformed self, and gazed and gazed in amazement at it. Then a glad realization swept over her, and she exclaimed:

"I have burst my chrysalis, I do believe!"

"Laws, Chile, remonstrated Mammy Lou with anxiety, "Doan't yo' worry ef yo' have bust it. Mammy Lou'll men' it foh you tomorrow. Heah. Yo' gwine try on dis pink dress?"

"No," answered the girl as she laid aside the cap and slipped out of the stylish walking dress, "I believe I am too tired for any more tonight. My head aches dreadfully."

"Heah. Put on dis kimona an' set down befoah de fiah, an' Mammy Lou'll rub dat headache away in no time. Dese t'ings gwine to keep ovah tell nex' week when youah Christmas vacation come 'roun', an' dar ain't no school no no—no—nuffin"—with tardy remembrance that the subject was an unpleasant one—"no nuffin to bovah you."

The weary girl gladly obeyed the kindly command and sank gratefully into the big chair which her faithful servitor pushed before the fire. She leaned back with closed eyes while Mammy Lou's soft hands brushed the pain from her aching brows and soothed the turmoil of her disturbed heart and banished the unpleasant experiences of the evening from her overwrought brain. When at last she crept away to bed, it was only to fall into a heavy sleep that was broken with dreams of childish pranks that were being condemned by severely pompous professors, and of being unduly impenitent and defiant.

The next morning she rose unrefreshed by her night's sleep, and with accustomed dreaminess donned the plain grey suit. drew her hair back into its customary smooth plainness, and after a glance out of the window at the bleakness of the December morning, went down stairs to where Mammy Lou waited with her inviting breakfast and her warm smile and her honeyed words to lift a little gloom from the young life which she idolized. She hung uneasily about as the girl put on raincoat and rubbers, preparing for her walk to the college, until, at the very last moment, her anxiety could no longer be restrained and she said coaxingly:

"Now, Honey Chile, ef dat ole puhfessah"—

Nancy lifted her chin with proud impatience and authority:

"We will not talk about him, Mammy Lou. We will never talk about him any more.

You may put those dresses and other things into proper places while I am gone. I will have no more time for them this week." Then she went away, and the old servant went back to her work grumbling to herself as she did so, and laying all sorts of plans for the future of her adored mistress.

Professor Darker had spent a most unhappy evening in the noisy, stuffy parlor of his boarding house, after leaving the quiet luxury of Miss Varden's home. A number of students made this same place their home; but instead of going to their own rooms for earnest study, as he considered all real students should do, they elected to remain downstairs where they wasted their precious hours in foolish conversation and idle jesting and riotous "music" as they presumed to name the hilarious singing of college songs to the accompaniment of a much-tortured piano. Even in the narrow confines of his own room upstairs, the injured professor could not escape from the echoes of their unseemingly mirth. He frowned crossly as he dragged his wooden rocking chair in front of his small gas heater and sat down to ruminate upon his defeat of the evening. This marriage which he had proposed was so desirable a matter from every angle of his viewpoint, that he could not understand Miss Varden's opposition to it. She had seemed so perfectly content in his companionship, so amenable to his advice, so properly respectful, so solicitous for his comfort, that he could not but be amazed at her sudden rejection of his marriage proposal. He had an idea that in some occult way that sinister old negro woman had intervened between him and his much desired comforts, and had managed to influence her mistress against himself. Perhaps if he could renew his suit away from such an obnoxious presence, he would be more successful. It was a delightfully hopeful and cheering thought, and served to send him to bed with restored confidence in his own ability and redoubled determination to secure Nancy Varden for his wife.

So it came to pass that when the girl entered the Dean's office that morning, Professor Darker was waiting for her, a pile of papers in his hands, a welcoming smile upon his face, an air of assurance pervading his presence.

"O—ah—good morning, my dear Miss Nancy," he said. "I trust you are feeling quite yourself in spite of the rain and chilliness of the day.

"Yes, thank you," replied Nancy coolly, seating herself at her desk, unlocking the drawers, and swinging the typewriter into position. "You have some work you wish to have done?" she asked in her most impersonal tone.

"Well—no—ah—I merely dropped in to wish you a good-morning. And to say—ah—that—ah—if at any time you desire to reconsider your decision of last night, I shall be glad to give you the opportunity. I could not help but feel that after a night's consideration of what I said to you, that you would discover the desirability."

"Professor Darker," Nancy interrupted with a vigor that startled him from his self-complacency, "I did not give one moment's 'consideration' to your proposal after you left me. I had more important things to engage my attention. Let us consider the incident forever closed.

"O, good morning, Dean Burton," with a disengaged manner and an uncommonly bright smile as the Dean entered the office. "You see I am ahead of you, and am all ready for work. Have you the usual load on your hands?"

WHAT I GOT FOR CHRISTMAS.

BY PALMER HARTSOUGH.

I was wishing when 'twas May
For Christmas.

I've been wishing ev'ry day
For Christmas.

May, it took so long to go,
June came on, and just as slow,
Then July—the Fourth, you know—
'Twasn't Christmas.

So the months went slowly round
Till Christmas.

Then the snow fell on the ground
For Christmas.

Then the bells began to ring,
Folks their gifts began to bring;
Ev'ry one began to sing,
'Twas Christmas.

Ev'rybody got things nice
For Christmas.

Ev'rybody had the price
For Christmas.

Some got fruits, the year's increase,
Some got chickens, turkeys, geese,
But I got to speak a piece
For Christmas.

DAISY'S MERRY CHRISTMAS.

BY FLORENCE M. ALLEN.

"O dear! I'm afraid we won't have a merry Christmas this year," groaned Mr. Hill as he tossed restlessly on his pillow.

His wife gently bathed his feverish brow, as she answered, "Now, George, you mustn't worry this way; it is making you so much worse."

"Worry," repeated Mr. Hill. "How can I help worrying? It's hard enough to feel that we can't get even a little present for Daisy when she's always had so many things before, but it's worse to think that Mr. Short could be so cruel as to take away our cow for debt and refuse to let us have anything more on time, just because I'm flat on my back, and he doesn't see any prospect of my getting up again. But if I die—"

Just then Daisy came in and kissing her father's hot cheek said, "Don't talk so, papa. Please don't! We will have a merry Christmas, I know we will. Good old Santa Claus won't desert us just because you are sick and we haven't any money, I know he won't. Now you just go to sleep, and don't worry any more," and she slipped softly out of the room.

"It's strange what faith Daisy has in Santa Claus," Mr. Hill said after she had left. "But I believe you and the child are right, Mary. It doesn't mend matters any for me to worry this way, and the worry only retards my recovery. If you and Daisy can be so patient I will try to do my part," and he turned over and was soon asleep.

After Daisy had left the room she said to herself, "Perhaps Santa Claus doesn't know how sick papa is and will bring me only toys and books like he did last year, so I am going to write him a letter and ask him not to bring me any toys, but to bring some nice things for papa instead."

She got a pencil and paper and after writing for some time put on her hood and cloak and started for the postoffice.

In the small town there was only one store and the postoffice was in one part of it.

Mr. Short was both storekeeper and postmaster. He smiled as he took the letter and read the address, "Santa Claus, North Pole," but the smile faded as he looked down into the earnest little face before.

"Will you please be sure that Santa Claus gets the letter?" Daisy pleaded. Perhaps he doesn't know papa is sick and I don't want him to bring me toys this year, because there are so many things we need so badly," and her lips trembled although she tried to smile bravely.

"Yes, I'll see that the old gentleman gets it," Mr. Short said, and Daisy thanked him and started home.

After she had left the store Mr. Short tore open the envelope. "I suppose I'll have to act as Santa Claus myself now that I have given her my promise to see that he gets the letter."

After he had read the letter he blew his nose vigorously, took off his spectacles and wiped them and then said aloud, "Well, I hadn't any idea matters were so bad. I didn't know before that Mr. Hill had such a sweet loving little girl. Of course, I knew that he had a little girl, but I never took much notice of her before.

She shall have everything she wants for Christmas, or at least everything that I am able to get for her. Why if she'd look at Santa Claus with those big, brown pleading eyes of hers he'd be willing to give her his whole pack, and throw in his reindeer and his sleigh besides.

Well, I can't throw in any reindeer, because I haven't any, but I can throw in their cow; it's theirs by rights anyway. And he blew his nose and wiped his spectacles again.

Here I am a stingy cross old bachelor with never a relative in the world depending on me, hoarding up more money than I can use in a lifetime, and for what? Just so I can die a rich man. And then I suppose my money will be used for some charitable institution. Why can't I use some of it for charitable purposes while I am living and get some pleasure out of it myself. I'll do it! And if I don't make a handsome old Santa Claus it won't be my fault, and he chuckled softly to himself.

It was Christmas eve. Mr. Hill, with a hopeless look on his pale, thin face, lay gazing at his wife and little daughter as they huddled close to the stove in which were a few dying embers.

"O, why," he said, "must I be so helpless? It seems as if I can't bear it!"

In an instant Daisy had her arms about his neck and was whispering in his ear, "I'll tell you a secret, papa. I didn't tell you before, because I wanted to surprise you, but I've written to Santa Claus to bring some wood and other things, and I know he'll do it, because I told him about your sickness and—O, there he is now!" she exclaimed.

The sick man turned on his pillow, and listened eagerly. A moment later the door opened and a jolly old man with long white whiskers and dressed in fur from head to foot came in.

"O Santa Claus," Daisy cried, "I'm so glad you've come because papa was so discouraged." "I'm glad I've come, too," Santa Claus answered heartily as he unstrapped an enormous pack from his shoulders and placed it in the middle of the room. And as my pack is heavy and I don't care to make any more calls tonight I'll just leave it here for you. In it you'll find everything you asked me for in your letter, and a number of things besides. I have a load of wood for you out in the yard, and as I passed by Mr. Short's house he asked me to bring back your cow so I tied it on behind, and Santa Claus chuckled as if he thought it a great joke.

Then before anyone could speak he made them an elaborate bow, and left the room.

"O, see how many, many things he has brought!" Daisy exclaimed, dancing up and down and clapping her hands with delight. "An I am so glad Mr. Short sent back Bossy. He must be a better man than we thought he was. Don't you see, papa, that I was right when I said I knew we would have a merry Christmas?"

KITH AND KIN.

A Yuletide Meditation.

BY REV. H. G. DENISON.

Kith—One's acquaintances and friends.
Kin—One's relatives by birth or marriage.—Definition.

How lonesome he at Christmas cheer,
Who has no folks—afar or near,
To send a gift or care a pin;—
For hopeless has nor kith nor kin.

Though mountains high or prairies wide
Their tasks and homes from ours divide,—
We hear, amid our noise and din,
The undertone of kith and kin.

If chance, o'ertaken by distress.
We send the signal S. O. S.,
The friends that hear at once begin
The prompt reply of kith and kin.

With richest wrappings, we should roll
In jewel caskets of the soul,
This gentle topaz (worth to win)
Our Christmas love of kith and kin.

These friends in Christ will never fade,
Though sod and flowers are o'er them laid.
For they are now redeemed—from sin—
Our gone-before of kith and kin.

How good, when shade of evening slants,
To muse awhile with revenants,
Who were, in years that erst have been,
Our flesh and blood of kith and kin.

Their spirit lives do ours impress,
And quiet comforts still address,
From realms where they have entered in—
Our intimates of kith and kin.

'Tis thus of Christmas ties we sing,
Both those of blood and marriage ring—
For they make up, through thick and thin,
Our rosary of kith and kin.

At Christmas, earth and heaven meet,
And gather round the hearth-stone seat,
To watch the twisting flames that spin
The Yuletide bonds of kith and kin.

The whiles, we sing the Virgin birth,
By which our Savior came to earth;
That he might be (who knew no sin),
Our lamb of God, for kith and kin.

OUTSIDE THE WINDOW.

BY KATE W. HAMILTON.

The new tea set had come on the Christmas tree, and so, too, had the pretty baby doll that sat in a chair at the little table. It seemed as if almost everything that children could want has been on that tree. Jamie sat on the floor trying one new toy after another, while the little girls at the piano were picking out some of the new music that has been on their Santa Claus list.

"Oh-o, my!" said a soft little voice outside the window, as Mary Ellen, standing tiptoe in the snow tried to peep in at the pretty room that looked to her like fairyland. She forgot that her little bare hands were cold or that anyone might see her standing there when she raised her head above the window sill. "Oh, my-y!"

"Here, have a good look while you're at it, chicken!" said a quick voice behind her, and a pair of strong young arms lifted her so high that she could see the whole room. But Mary Ellen was so frightened that she only struggled to get down.

"Don't, Don't!" she begged. "I didn't mean any hurt."

"Of course not, and I didn't mean to frighten you," said the big boy's laughing voice. "There, don't cry! This is where I live. Come right in with me and see all the things."

And before she really knew what had happened, Mary Ellen found herself right in the middle of that bright, warm room, and the little girls were showing her the tree and all the beautiful gifts.

"Didn't Christmas come to your house?" they asked.

Mary Ellen shook her head.

"It doesn't ever come—very much," she said timidly. "But Joey and I—Joey's my brother—we go round and see all the store windows. This year Joey hurt his foot, so he can't get out for a while, and I had to look all alone, and then I'll go home and tell him. It looked so nice in here I wanted to tell him 'bout that, too. That's all."

But it wasn't all, for Richard, the big boy who had brought her in, was looking at the little girls making signs that they understood, and then he went out of the room to find his mother. By the time Mary Ellen was ready to go there was a basket packed with all sorts of good things to take with her.

"Too heavy a basket for such a chicken to carry," said Richard, "so I'm going to carry it. Maybe I'll peep in at your window as you did at ours, and then I'll see Joey."

"Joey would like that!" said Mary Ellen. "Oh, you are all so kind!"

"Why, that's what Christmas is for—to make folks kind," laughed the little girls. "Good-bye, Mary Ellen."—Ex.

CHARLEY WILLY'S CHRISTMAS.

BY GENE BURNS.

It was Christmas morning at Charley Willy's home. He and his brothers had emptied their stockings, eaten all they could comfortably hold of candy, nuts and fruit. Running to the Christmas tree, they peeked at the mysterious packages secured to the branches.

When their father awoke, permission was given to open the bundles on the tree. There was a scramble, followed by the rustling of paper, and then shouts of joy.

"Hurrah!" cried Fred, aged twelve, as he held aloft a shinning Boy Scouts' hatchet. "I'll make use of this, all right!"

"Hurrah!" cried Bennie, two years younger, as he displayed a glistening pocket-knife on the end of a silvered chain. And, "Hurrah!" chimed in Charley Willy, as he held up for examination two brightly painted picture books.

Their father came in then, and was happy to behold the beaming faces of the boys. They crowded around him, boasted of the merits of their particular gift. Charley Willy listened to his brothers explaining what they could do with hatchet or knife to help about the farm, but said nothing.

"Well, boys," said the father, when the boys had finished of their boatsings, "we'll see at the end of the day whose gift has been the greatest help. I shall give a silver dollar to the one that does the most good with his present."

A shout of still greater joy rose from the older boys' lips, they dashed out of the house to search about the farmyard for a task requiring knife or hatchet for its execution. But the father's words only tended to cause Charley Willy's spirits to lower still more. The flaring pictures before him seemed to cry out and mock him. He had asked for picture-books, gotten them; but of what use were they other than to afford pleasure for himself only?

Charley Willy was not a selfish boy. The thought that the books were of no value but to himself took away his happiness. He brushed aside the tears that gathered in his eyes, pulled on his hat, coat and mittens, left the farmhouse.

Thinking to himself, the small boy trudged down the road. He had no object in view except to hide himself until he could calm his emotions. He stopped in front of the farmhouse of Jean Blanchard, watched the good-natured Frenchman splitting logs into stove lengths. The lad walked slowly into the yard, fascinated by the crashing of the axe on the wood and the flying of chips.

"Merry Christmas!" he called to the chopper, and smiled, forgetful of his troubles.

The Frenchman glanced up, nodded recognition to the boy before him.

"Yep, it's Christmas," he admitted, "but dunno's it's a very 'merry' one."

"Why," Charley Willy cried in surprise, "didn't Santa Claus come to your house?" The man shook his head.

"Mrs. Blanchard and little Peter and Nell are sick in bed; today the youngsters sat up for the first time in a week. I clean forgot it was Christmas, an' they never said a word."

Charley Willy's eyes opened wide. No Christmas! No presents! His heart went out to the little sick children, the tears started again from his eyes. He turned from the chopper, stumbled homeward.

When he reached the barnyard, heard the yelling and shouting of his brothers, the hack of a hatchet, his own troubles of the morning came back with a rush. He stopped short, gazed blankly ahead of him, a new thought in his mind. For a few moments, the emotions of evil and good struggled in the lines of his face, he remained motionless. Then the light of goodly triumph suffused his tearful countenance, he dashed into the house. A few minutes later he burst from the doorway, a parcel under his arm, and raced down the roadway. He was soon a speck in the distance.

After supper that evening, the Charley Willy family gathered in the front room of the farmhouse. The two older boys whispered and chuckled among themselves in the enjoyment of a secret. Charley Willy sat upon a low stool near the fireplace, his father beside him.

"Well, boys," began his father, after he had squirmed his feet into the slippers. Charley Willy held for him, "who gets the silver dollar? Who has put his present to the most use?" He looked at his oldest son. "Show what you have done, Fred."

The lad spoken to dived out of the room, to return a moment later with a huge basket.

"Fi-ewood!" he cried boastfully, as he set the receptacle on the floor. "By the help of my trusty axe!" He waved the gleaming hatchet above his head majestically while he spoke these words.

His father smiled.

"Now Bennie!" he said, nodding to the next younger of the boys, "What have you accomplished with your knife?"

From a large card-board box, Bennie proudly displayed a number of articles carved from wood; a small bread-board, a crumber and tray, a match-box, and a little bank. He held each piece singly in his hand; explained the uses of all. Triumph gleamed in his eyes.

"Well done," his father praised. Then placing his hand upon Charley Willy's curly head, he said: "Now, what did sonny do with his gift?"

There was no cry of exultation this time. The little lad at his father's feet sat very still, gazing soberly, rather sadly, into the blazing fireplace. His parent looked down at the boy, jostled his frowsy head. He was about to urge the lad to speak when his mind recalled the nature of Charley Willy's Christmas present. He started to change the trend of the matter when the small boy spoke.

"I gave my things away—" Charley Willy began, then choked. "And I ain't sorry, either," he added, as the tears coursed down his cheeks.

"Eh? What's that?" his father spoke up eagerly. He had caught the meaning of the lad's words. Reaching down, he lifted the small boy to his knees, coaxed the story from him

A hush settled over the room as Charley Willey stammered out how he had made a Christmas-less home happy with his two bright picture-books, and two stockings of candies.

That night, a small lad of a certain farmhouse dropped into slumberland with something clutched tightly in his little fingers. Who do you suppose he was? And what was that something he clutched in his hand?—Ex.

SEVEN CHRISTMAS TREES.

BY J. L. GLOVER.

It is very trying when your birthday comes on Christmas, because you can not expect two sets of presents. Elizabeth was a reasonable little girl and she saw this, but she did wish that her birthday came in the summer like Molly's.

When she was seven years old, the family suddenly realized that never in her life had Elizabeth had a birthday present that was not also a Christmas present, and Aunt Margaret declared that she should have a birthday Christmas for once.

For two days Elizabeth was shut out of the library, but when Christmas morning came the door was thrown open, and Elizabeth stood amazed at what she saw. On the big table in the middle of the room stood a perfect grove of Christmas trees—seven of them, one for each year of her age—all blazing with candles and hung with gifts.

"There!" said Aunt Margaret, "do you like it, Elizabeth?"

"Oh!" sighed Elizabeth, clasping her hands in rapture, "but it's too much for one, auntie. I want to share it with somebody."

"Bless her heart," laughed Aunt Margaret. "I might have known she would say that! Who will you share it with, dearie?"

"There's the Murphy's," said Elizabeth thoughtfully. "They never have birthdays, or trees, or anything. Couldn't they come and see mine, auntie?"

"Of course," assented Auntie, and Elizabeth ran joyfully to call the little Murphys, who were very poor, and had never seen such a sight as those seven blazing trees.

There were seven little Murphys, of all ages and sizes, and when they had admired to their hearts' content, and the candles were burning down, each received a gift from one of the little trees, and all the candy oranges they could carry, and went away beaming. Then Elizabeth remembered Grandma Lane, who lived on the way to school, and was a special friend of hers; and nothing would satisfy her but to take one pair of the trees, with a warm shawl and a pair of pink slippers and a bag of candy, all done up with plenty of holly paper and red ribbon, because she was sick and couldn't go out on Christmas.

In the evening Aunt Margaret took her little niece in her arms and kissed the glowing face. "Well, darling, did you like your birthday Christmas?"

"It was the very nicest I ever had," said Elizabeth, happily, "and the best part was the sharing it."—Gem.

UNDER THE MISTLETOE.

BY A LITTLE GIRL.

My papa's coming in the door;
What fun! He does not know
That I am hiding in the hall
Under the mistletoe!
It's hung so high in all the rooms
He might not notice me,
I'd be so little under it—
'Tis high as any tree.

And so I hold a little piece,
Just for a new surprise;
My papa'll laugh, and look at me
With twinkles in his eyes.
Of course I'd get a kiss without,
But Christmas eve, you know,
It's much more fun to have it come
Under the mistletoe!
—Youth's Companion.

THE CALL OF CHRISTMAS.

The call of Christmas is not to a period of selfish pleasure and enjoyment; not to a time of indiscriminate giving and receiving of gifts; but it is a call to a new appreciation of the true meaning of sacrifice and the splendid nobility of service to other people. We must let our sympathies go out of ourselves and beyond our own immediate needs if we would reap the richest blessings of the Christmas time.

It would be extremely fitting and Christian that some of the lavish expenditure in gifts to friends, who do not really need them, should be turned in the direction of the starving millions of other lands. The poor and the needy always have the first claim upon us—at Christmas and all other seasons of the year.

May your Christmas days be merry
And your wishes all come true,
May the holidays bring happiness
And many pleasures too.

PUBLISHERS' NOTES

Many subscribers pay their subscriptions at this season, and some are interested in securing new subscribers, and make inquiry as to terms, commissions, etc.

We do not give the paper for less than the price to subscribers, new or old, but we do give to any old subscriber a commission for securing new subscribers. We give this commission in money, $1 for each new subscriber, or in books or other articles at what is practically the wholesale price, being about half the regular retail price.

Among the books which have proved popular with our readers are a number of practical discussions of Christian doctrine and stories. Some of them have appeared in the paper and afterwards been issued in book form.

We will send to any subscriber who sends a new subscription at the price, $2.50, any two of the following books:

Victorious Manhood. By Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston.

A Seed Thought. By Leigh Younge. An interesting and useful story.

Golden Grain. Another good story by Leigh Younge.

The Story of the Four Gospels, for Boys and Girls. By Martha A. Hunter.

Pastoral Memories. By Dr. E. P. Whallon.

The Girl in Jeopardy. By Glenroie MacQueen.

A Prodigal Daughter. A story by Mary McCrea Culter.

At the Foot of No-Man. By Mrs. Droke. A thrilling and useful story.

The Rose Parlor. An Endeavor story. By Mrs. Emma C. Campbell.

The Heir of Barachah. By Jean K. Baird.

Or any subscriber when paying for the paper, can add 50 cents and receive any one of those books postpaid.

Any subscriber sending a new name with the cash, $2.50, can have any two of these books postpaid as a commission.

The Famine and the Bread. By Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston.

Applied Theology. By Rev. F. C. Monfort, D.D.

C. E. B.

These initials will be recognized by our older readers. Dr. C. E. Babb, for many years one of our editors, was a popular and instructive writer. A volume of his writings with the title C. E. B., price $1.50, had a wide sale. We still have calls for it. We have secured a few copies, handsomely bound and only slightly shopworn, which we will send postpaid to any subscriber for $1, or give it as a commission to any subscriber who secures a new subscriber at $2.50.

Lesson XIII—December 25.

THE VISIT OF THE WISE MEN: (Christmas Lesson.) (Matt. 2:1-12.)

1. Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judaea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem.
2. Saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him.
3. When Herod the king had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.
4. And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born.
5. And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judaea: for thus it is written by the prophet,
6. And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel.
7. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, enquired of them diligently what time the star appeared.
8. And he sent them to Bethlehem, and said, Go and search diligently for the young child; and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship him also.
9. When they had heard the king, they departed: and, lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was.
10. When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.
11. And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshiped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh.
12. And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way.

Golden Text: "And when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh" (Matt. 2:11).

INTRODUCTORY.

Because today is Christmas we have this beautiful lesson of the birth of our Savior as a little child for our lesson today. Let us study it carefully. We are not simply to have a good time on Christmas, but are especially to honor Jesus Christ. It is his birthday. Let us be sure that we accept him as our Savior and honor him by our faith and love and obedience. If we have not yet done so let us do it today. "Now is the accepted time. Behold, now is the day of salvation." A good many things connected with the birth of Jesus are not told us by Matthew. He does not tell us about the shepherds in the field; nor of their visit to the stable where the child was found; nor of the visit to the temple, where he was seen by Anna and Simeon. But Luke, who tells us all those things, does not tell us about this visit of the wise men from the East, nor of the star.

EXPOSITORY.

1. In the preceding chapter we are told of Mary as the mother of Jesus. God was his father. Joseph was the reputed father, but he was not really. Jesus was born of the Virgin Mary, coming into our earthly life, from God and heaven, as no other child ever did. He was born as a little babe, so that, in becoming our Savior who should die for us on the cross, he might go through all the stages of infancy, youth and manhood, and thus that we might be assured that he understands us and is able to sympathize with us. Bethlehem was a little city a few miles from Jerusalem, in which David was born, and though one of the smaller towns of the country, it was honored by being the birthplace of the two great kings of Israel. Herod, the king here named, was afterward known as "the Great," because he had, by various devices, many of them very dishonorable.

succeeded in making his kingdom more prominent than ever it had been before, and even more so than it ever was after him. The term, "the East," meant, in those days, the country along the Euphrates Valley, or even farther to the eastward; some would say Persia. These men are called "magi," a term from which our words magic, magician, come. It is understood that they were men who strove to discern the signs of the times by studying the stars, and they had seen a star which seemed to indicate a wonderful event, even the birth of the great king.

2. The Jews had long been talking about a king who was to arise among them, under whose reign they would win back more than they had lost of power and glory. Those Jews, scattered among the nations of the East, had talked such things, and those who had traveled abroad had also talked them; so that there was a general feeling among the nations that, some day or another, a great king was to arise in Palestine. Now, these star-gazers had seen a star which they had never noticed before, and it was shining in the west toward Jerusalem, and they said among themselves. "That is the star of that wonderful king of whom we have been told. See it yonder in the west, hovering over the western country, Palestine, where it has been said he was to appear." The star was not in the east; but the wise men in the east saw the star as they looked toward the west, and they followed the star when they traveled westward. When they reached Jerusalem they began to make inquiries, supposing that every one there would know about the new-born King. They came in to the city and asked one and another; but no one seemed to know anything about such a king. Some went and told Herod about the wise men and their inquiry, and so he was aroused.

3. The reported birth of one who should be king of the Jews was dangerous to his rulership. He knew that the people hated him, and that, if they could find any excuse for revolting and setting up some other king, they would do so, very soon. Besides, the Jerusalem Jews saw in such a rumor a possibility of trouble, a revolt, possibly a revolution, and, of course, a great overturning. So they were "troubled."

4. Herod was very shrewd. He relied upon the priests and scribes, the men who best understood Jewish law and the Hebrew Bible, and he kept on good terms with them. He inquired of them where he was to be born of whose coming the Jews had always been talking, and whose kingdom was to be so much superior to his own. His object now was to find the child, if there was such a one; and if the prophets had said anything about it, he wanted to know it. So he inquired of the priests and scribes. He immediately thought of him whom the Jews called Messiah, the anointed of God; or as it was in the Greek language, Christ, "the Christ."

5. These priests and scribes were quite familiar with their own Bible, and they had been studying the prophecies for this very thing, that they might watch the signs of the coming of Messiah. So they were soon able to tell King Herod that the prophet Micah had written it.

6. This prophecy is found in Micah 5: 2. The Jews generally understood that the Messiah was to be born in Bethlehem, because he was to be of the seed of David, the great king, so that, on one occasion, years after, (John 7: 42), some of them made a special point that Jesus came out of Galilee, instead of out of Bethlehem. They said that he could not be Messiah, because he did not come from Bethlehem, as he would have done had he been Messiah. But they did not remember that this had occurred thirty years before.

7. Having found out the place by inquiry of the priests and scribes, Herod now turned to the magi to find out the time of the first appearance of the star. The theory of both Herod and the magi was that the star appeared at the same time with the birth of the child. This had been some months before, so that since its appearance they had made the long journey. Herod put these things together, and he concluded that it could not have been more than two years since the birth of the child, and that if he killed all the children under two years old, he would certainly kill the king-child. He did not dare to let the magi know what was in his mind, but sent them away, as though he was delighted with what he had learned.

8. Of course, he would have liked to find the individual babe, if he could; but if he could not, he could kill all the babies. But he pretended that he was in perfect sympathy with the wise men, and wanted to worship the royal child which they had come so far to see. It was just like Herod. He was a treacherous, cruel, selfish, unscrupulous man.

9. The star had led them to Jerusalem, and still it went before them to the southward, to Bethlehem, where it seemed to stop. These magi saw the same star shining over Bethlehem, and they did not hesitate to go to the place where it seemed to stand.

10. When they set out from Jerusalem, and saw the star in the south, over Bethlehem, and seeming to lead them to the place to which Herod had sent them, they were exceeding glad, for they felt sure they would find the child. And when the star seemed to stop and stand over a certain locality, they were still the more glad.

11. It is not here said that they found him in a stable; for it is now several months since the baby was born, and the crowd having got away from Bethlehem, the parents were able to find a place elsewhere than in the stable. Those pictures which represent the magi in a stable are not good. The shepherds came to a stable, but the magi did not. These men recognized the divine kingship of the child. They bowed down before him, and worshiped him, more humbly than they would have worshiped a human king. They were proud men, and probably would have refused to bow down to one whom they regarded as only human. Tradition says that there were three of these men—one giving gold, another frankincense, and the third myrrh. Some have seen in this presentation a providence of God, in that thus Mary and Joseph had wherewith to bear their expenses, and especially that of the journey into Egypt which immediately followed. We are sure that God was in it all, directing everything according to infinite wisdom. Our hearts are made glad as we read the story.

12. These men did not, at first, understand why Herod was so anxious to know about the child. But God came to them in a dream, and then they came to understand. They did not return to Herod and tell him where they had found the child, as he had requested them to do. They saw that instead of worshiping him, Herod would seek to get rid of one born to be king of the Jews. So they went directly back to their eastern home, without informing Herod as to what they had found.

WHAT COULD A MOTHER DO?

BY E. R. FORSYTH.

What could a mother do, upon whose breast Lay smiling sweet the Christ child's perfection?
The child foretold by angel visitant
Declared to be Messiah, Israel's King, Whose coming here all joy and peace should bring,
Yet in whose infant helplessness so lowly laid
A manager for his cradle, and no homage paid
Upon his advent by a heedless world.
What could a mother do?

Well might she ponder thus, is this the way
Messiah comes? Does God above send forth his son
Out of the heavenly glory to the earth
So unattended, in such lowly guise
None heeding, but rude shepherds come to gaze?
Still might she say, "Though elsewhere all forgot
The more is he to me, my sweet, my son."

Many have wondered at their lot and said,
"God doth not love, God doth not know, Else why should I be left to suffer so."
Take heart and wait, 'tis sign of grace
A sign of trust, that, lacking care
The face of peace thou mayest wear.

Peace, peace, O, mother heart, quiet thy fear
The pledge, the proof of grace divine is here
Upon thy knees. To thee, God given
And, being given, grace for his care
And every need is pledged from heaven.

Like Mary then be still, let come what will
For "life is more than meat" and lowly ways,
With love, are the true riches. Count thy store
And let no fear or dread oppress thee more.

THE MAGI.

The Magi were astrologers. Their business was the study of the sky and its wonders. They believed themselves able to interpret and foretell events from the movements and relations of stars. They were on this night beholding the greatest wonder of all—a new star moving and guiding them toward the object of their quest.

An old prophecy had long before come to their ears. They had heard that a King was to be born to the Jews, and that his was to be a reign of righteousness and peace. They had also been told at his coming a new star should appear in the sky to indicate the place of his birth.

To them the prophecy was a great commanding hope. This promise of such an event had moved the souls of men for centuries. When a strange star appeared these men had taken it as the herald of the King, and had set out to follow its leading. They had gone to Jerusalem to visit the man then on the throne.

With smooth-tongued manifestations of interest Herod had sent the Magi on their way. Still the star led them, and still they followed. At length they reached Bethlehem. They saw no reason why a king could not be born in a manger, because they saw that kingliness is a quality which is not determined by its surroundings or its privileges. They accorded their worship and left their gifts as willingly as though they had found the child in a palace. The ages have not been mistaken, therefore, in calling them wise men.

THE NEW TEACHER.

School opened later in the year than usual, and when Louis at last heard the bell ringing out its call the sound was very welcome. "I'm going now, mother," he called. And he hurried eagerly away. He felt very proud and important with his new book in his hand, for he was promoted to the second room.

There was, however, one matter that troubled him a little, and that was that Miss Avery would no longer be his teacher. "I don't see," he complained to himself, "why the teacher can't get a promotion card and go to the second room too."

But the second room was a disappointment to Louis. Miss Brooke, the teacher, was very busy with her big, new class and had little time to get acquainted with each pupil. And she was certainly very different from Miss Avery.

"I don't like her one bit," Louis declared at home that noon.

"I've noticed that when a boy doesn't like his teacher there is usually something wrong with the boy," said his mother quietly.

"But she doesn't do things right," argued Louis. "She doesn't teach a bit like Miss Avery."

Louis had only had one teacher, and he had felt all morning that everything that was not done as Miss Avery did it was done wrong. Why, Miss Brooke didn't even gather up the crayons, and she ought to know that bad boys sometimes carried them off and marked up walls and fences. And they hadn't marched once that morning or sung a single song. What troubled Louis most, however, was that Miss Brooke had seated him opposite Jack Elkins, with whom he had a quarrel. And Jack had made trouble for him all forenoon.

"I most wish I hadn't been promoted," he complained as he trudged back to school. "Then I'd have a teacher I like."

When he reached his room Miss Brooke was standing in the doorway, looking rather troubled. "I forgot a book I have to have this afternoon," she explained. "I wonder, Louis, if you would run down to my home and get it for me. It's not far."

"Yes, of course," answered Louis. And he hurried off for the book, for which Miss Brooke thanked him warmly on his return.

"Would you like to have me gather up the chalk?" he ventured.

"Why, yes, if you will," Miss Brooke answered. "What a help you are to me! You see, there's so much to do the first day that I can't crowd it all in."

"I learned a lot this afternoon," Louis announced at home that evening. "We had a good nature lesson, and we learned a new song, and—oh, so many other things! I like the new teacher, too, now." Then, after a moment's thought, he added, "I guess you're pretty sure to like a teacher better after you've done something to help her."

"That's the biggest lesson you've learned today, Louis," answered his mother. "But there is more to it. You are pretty sure to like anyone better after you've done something for that person."

"It wouldn't make me like Jack Elkins," Louis declared.

"I am not so sure of that."

"It might make him like me better, but I don't see how it could make me like him."

"Try it and see."

And Louis did try it and found that the plan worked almost as well as it had done with the new teacher.—Gem.

O, Lord I pray
That for this day
I may not swerve
By foot or hand
From thy command,
Not to be served, but to serve.

MODERN PRAGMATISM.

The word is from "pragma," which means pertaining to the accomplishment of business. The temptation of the times is to make so-called efficiency "a test of life, especially its moral phases."

The virus is abroad in the church, its vocabulary is resplendent with such gems as "pep," "over the top," "drive" and other overworked phrases. It fathers world movements overnight, world leaders are born in a jiffy, mossbackism is its favorite term for the wary who are fed up and burned out on this superficial bunk.

It is impatient of restraint, it defies tradition, its presumption has carried it into the holy of holies and has produced a shorter Bible which is short on every fundamental which has produced the faith.

The real principles of efficiency are not hard to find in the Book Divine, the fountain head of promises which rests in the great declaration that "not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."

One is reminded of Horace Greeley, who received a letter from a woman who said that her church was in distressing straits, they had tried every device they could think of—fairs, donkey parties, mock marriages, etc. "Would Mr. Greeley be so kind as to suggest some new device to keep the church alive." The old man replied: "Try religion."—Ex.

MY RELIGION.

BY JOHN FLEMING ROGUE.

My religion is in living, not dying,
My religion is in laughing, not crying,
It's in telling the truth not in lying,
Nor in truth of an other denying.

My religion is in helping, not harming,
My religion is in hatred disarming,
It's in strengthening faith, ne'er alarming,
And to life's charm it addeth its charming.

My religion is in trusting, not fearing,
My religion is in ceaseless endearing
The heart of another and clearing
Such clouds as I can with my cheering.

My religion is in doing, not showing,
My religion is in constantly going
Its road, leading forward, and knowing
That the essence of growth is in growing.

My religion is in feasting, not fasting,
My religion is a doubt never casting—
It's in binding more fast—not in blasting,
And thus is its peace everlasting.

PRAYER MEETING, DECEMBER 25.

EMPHATIC TOPIC: Following the Star: What Do Men Find? Matt. 2:12.

The wise men in the East who saw the Star and followed its light in their journey to the western city of Jerusalem, and then to Bethlehem, found him who was worthy of their quest, worthy of their worship, worthy of their loyalty and obedience, as King, not simply of the Jews, but of the whole race and world. Following that divinely appointed guidance, in seeking the one whom they believed to have appeared from heaven as a great King, they found him, and history tells through all the ages past of how their reverent search was gloriously rewarded.

And still we are to follow the Star of divine revelation, and find the Savior who is made known to us upon its pages. Each one of us, for ourselves, is to follow the heavenly guidance, and come to Jesus Christ whom we are to worship as our Lord and our God. The Bible is still a lamp to our feet and a light to our path. There is no question as to the value and certainty of its teachings. If we but follow as it leads us on, we shall certainly come to where God is manifested in the flesh, in Jesus Christ.

We have many conjectures as to the Wise Men from the East; as to who they were, and from whom they had learned the truth as to the coming King; as to the Star they saw and how it guided them; as to how they were attracted by it and how they knew it to be different from the other stars in the sky; and as to how they were able to follow it. But we know that they were led to the new-born Christ, and were led to worship him and to present to him their gifts. Whatever of mystery there was about them, there is the certainty that they found and worshiped Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Lord and Savior.

So should every one of us be led by the holy Word of God to the feet of Jesus Christ. We have a sure word of Prophecy. We have a sure word of Gospel History. We have a sure word of divine Revelation. It leads safely and securely all who will accept its shining guidance. We find in the Scriptures the clear light of the truth of God. It is given to guide us in the way of faith and knowledge. If we accept its guidance we come to the feet of Jesus Christ and worship him as our divine Lord and Savior.

There are those today who insist that they do not believe that Christ is God. They are not clear in their minds as to many of the facts as to the life and death and resurrection and ascension of Christ. It is because they have not been willing to be guided by the Star of the Holy Scriptures. Those who accept the divine teaching as found in the Bible must invariably, and unquestionably come to believe in the deity and atonement of Christ. The Star of divine truth leads always and only to the certain facts about our Savior.

We read anew, this Christmas time, of those Wise Men taking their long and patient pilgrimage to Bethlehem, to the Infant Jesus, and to the attitude before him of love and adoration. We sometimes think that we would be glad to have such guidance, as questions arise in our minds about our own existence, and about God, and about the future. But we need have no such longings. We have a more sure light in the Holy Scriptures than had any, at any time, in any land, who did not have in its complete and perfect fullness this Word of God.

We have the Bible. It shines with more brightness and clearness and accuracy than any constellation in the material heavens. Let us be content to follow the guidance of this holy Word of God, and we shall find all we need to know. It reveals to us God. It tells us of our Savior. It tells us how to be saved through faith in him. It tells us of salvation from guilt through the atoning blood, and of cleansing from the defilement of sin by the Spirit of God, making our hearts new and clean by his indwelling. It tells us of heaven and of a holy and happy immortality. The Bible is more than a star. It is the very Word of God.

Let us be sure, at this Christmas time, that we are worshipers of our Lord; that we have accepted all that the Holy Scriptures tell about him, and that we have welcomed him into our own hearts as our Lord and Savior.

A GOOD PLAN.

The Indiana Christian Endeavor Union has an arrangement with the head of the State Reform School whereby the name and address of every boy discharged from the school is sent to the State Field Secretary. He communicates with the society in the boy's home town. The society looks the boy up and helps him in every way possible to get the right sort of start in life.

BETTER THAN SANTA OR THE FAIRIES.

When the secret of Santa Claus is out, the happiness of the Christmas season is not at an end; when the fairies can not be believed in any longer in the first simple way, the enchantment of life is not exhausted. Youth has its brook—the undertaking of the life-task, the spirit of planning and designing, the delight of love, the outflowing passion, the feeling that life can be lived entirely for another, and, connected with this, the power of religious idealism—to these God's words direct the soul of youth for sustenance. There is ample compensation for the loss of childish dreams.

THE JOY OF THE LORD.

My thoughts go back to my girlhood. I remember a young dressmaker who used to sew for us "by the day." Bright, cheerful and pleasant to all, she was a dear friend to the children. She always sang over her work, and I can recall now many quaint bits of old songs learned from her.

She was a devoted member of her church, always, in spite of her busy week, attending both services, and teaching in Sunday school. So, on Monday, her mind was full of high thoughts. She was "glad" with the remembrance of what she had heard in "the House of the Lord." All day, over her needle-work, she sang the hymns of yesterday, and told us of the sermons she had heard. We used to say that her Sunday lasted all through Monday; and never was her face happier than that day.

Was it not the joy of the Lord that made her face shine and her voice glad? It seems to me as if the strength and help which is gained by starting the week with drawing near to God more than compensates for losing the hours of Sunday for our own occupations, "doing" our "own ways" and "finding" our "own measure." I like the old name which our church used to use—The Lord's day—and would that we could keep the thought that that day is the Lord's.

CERTAINLY NOT.

A youth was lecturing against the existence of God. He said he was an agnostic. He took nothing for granted, he must be convinced. He said, "I see the mountains, I smell the roses, I hear the wind, therefore, I believe that mountains, roses and wind exist. But I can not see, smell or hear God. Therefore—" A grizzled old cattle-raiser glanced over his spectacles at the boy. "Did you ever try to smell with your eyes?" he said quietly. "No." "Or hear with your tongue or taste with your ears?" "Certainly not." "Then why do you try to apprehend God with faculties which are only meant for material things?"

AN IDEAL MAN.

Into a college community there came at commencement time a man of splendid presence and fine oratorical gifts. When, with one accord, the boys exclaimed, "That is the man I want to be," an old professor said to them: "Boys, that is a fine ambition. There isn't a nobler man in the country than Mr. R——, God bless him! But before you make up your minds to be like him let us count the cost. I have known your man from boyhood; he has suffered privations, thwartings, misunderstandings, losses, crosses, disappointments, and many failures. Boys, are you willing to pay the price for such a manhood? If you are, it is yours."—Moulton.

A GREETING.

BY DR. E. A. COLLIER.

What shall I wish for you on Christmas day?

What word of cheer or comfort can I give?

How help you cast your doubts and fears away,

And in a troublous time serenely live? Would that my song to joyful view might bring

A star to guide you to the new-born King.

THE SONG.

I heard one sing—The Lord is good,
And blest are they who in him trust;
His pity, that of fatherhood,
Remembers well that we are dust.
The song was sweet; but I unmoved
By truth experience had not proved.

Again he sang—God hath prepared
Of his great goodness for the poor;
And mercy that for them hath cared
Doth ever and for all endure.
The song was as the dawn of light;
But faithless fear brought back the night.

I bowed before the cross of Christ,
Where love divine, our love to win,
Its very utmost sacrificed,
And bore the burden of our sin.
Such love hath neither mete nor bound;
And yet my heart no comfort found.

But now that I have understood
This only way to end my quest—
O taste and see that he is good—
My doubts are gone, my heart at rest.
One thing I know with certainty—
The Lord is good indeed to me.

Thus finding peace, my Christmas wish shall be,

For that and all your few or many days,
That you and yours may also "taste and see"

That God is ever good beyond all praise.
Then shall his love in Christ, our faithful Friend,
Enrich and gladden life, and crown its end.

PRAYER MEETING

DECEMBER 21.

THE GIFT THAT TRANSFORMS THE WORLD.
II Cor. 9:16; Luke 1:46-55.

Christmas is a great time for the bestowing of gifts. It has come to be a well-nigh universal custom in all Christian lands to give presents on this day. Friends give to friends in a sort of pleasant delightful interchange. Children are the recipients of gifts from those who love them, and it is a remarkable oversight if this is neglected. Special efforts are made in an organized way to reach all the poor upon this day.

And this is not confined to Christian people. All classes of people fall in with this custom. Even the elements who do not believe in Christ take advantage of Christmas as a great day for good cheer and good will, and realize the advantage it gives to business during the preceding weeks. A general spirit of social cheer and gladness is apparent everywhere at this season. If all people could and would act as agreeably, all the year, as they do at the Christmas time, this would be a very delightful world in which to live.

It is generally acknowledged that Christmas is the most widely observed, and the cheeriest holiday, in all the year and in all the world. Back of it lies the fact of the birth of Christ, God's expression of love to the world. This day is the supposed anniversary of that sublime and wonderful event. Because Christ was born, we have Christmas. Because God loved the world and gave his Son, we have the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ. Because of this great gift, the world has been changed as nothing ever, before or since, has been able to change it. Because of this gift, we celebrate the anniversary of his birth with gifts to others. This has been the great transforming fact of all the influences that have ever come into the life of the world.

While the Gospel has not succeeded perfectly in changing the world into the condition in which it should exist, there has been a change that is most marvelous. Christianity has been preached throughout all the world. The Bible has been translated into more than five hundred languages and given to the people of all these nations in their own tongues, so that everywhere men and women have been able to read about Christ who came to seek and save those who are lost. The Gospel has been made known to vast multitudes, if not to all. It has come as the voice of God's love, making known his desire that none shall perish, but that all should believe and come to salvation.

Suppose that all the influences that have been exerted, and that are being exerted, by the Gospel, should be removed from the world, or suppose they had never been felt, and we should have a world today vastly different from what it is. There would be appalling ignorance, almost everywhere, instead of measurable enlightenment; hatred and cruelty and oppression everywhere, instead of the growing forbearance and kindness and love which are the results of Christianity. We should go back and down into a gloomy pit, as a world, instead of remaining in the increasing light and gladness that the Gospel is bringing Distressing as conditions, in many ways, are in the world today, we live a life that is absolutely different from what it would have been if Christ had not come to us. If all would receive him and love him and obey him, this would be a completely transformed world. All would love one another. There would be universal holiness and goodness and kindness. Cruelty and selfishness and war and oppression would disappear. This would be a completely new world, in which would dwell righteousness and justice and goodness and love.

If the change has not yet become complete and perfect, it has been great enough already to be called a transformation. We expect the change some day to be complete. Jesus Christ is yet to win this whole world. The blessings which appear so beautiful even when incomplete, this Christmas, will, some day be perfectly accepted, and all our earth will be like heaven.

Let joyous songs rise loud and clear
This merry Christmas time.
The angel's song brought love and cheer
To hearts in every clime.
Let songs on earth—in Heaven above—
This day proclaim God's wondrous love!

HALLOWING THE HOME CHRISTMAS.

As a North Carolina Family Tried It.
Somehow we wanted this Christmas to be a very special one. The brother, whose first Christmas at home it was after his two years' service overseas, would be a missionary in a foreign land when the season came again. And then perhaps the gray-haired grandfather might not be here another year. So for these reasons, and for the sake of a little maid of nine, the only child, we kept Christmas all the week before. Every evening the old loved carols and Christmas hymns were played on the Victrola and the beautiful old legends and stories read and told by the fireside.

On Christmas Eve's morning the child and her grandfather went to the butcher's for suet, and the birds' Christmas tree was hung with apples and with suet.

When the wreaths were in the windows, the tree in its place, and the mistletoe above the door, a tiny red stocking was hung from the banked holly and pine on the mantle above the fireplace—for the famine children of the world, Armenia, China, Central Europe.

Then twilight came, and while strains of "Holy Night" were filling the night with music, the little girl set a candle in the window, "as in ye olden time," to show the Christ-Child that there was room in our home and hearts for him.

Christmas began very early, with the traditional stocking, a joyous burst of music as the family came downstairs, and then breakfast and prayers. With the family and the colored cook assembled, the child stood in the midst and recited the verses from Luke, beginning: "And there were in the same country, shepherds abiding," followed by a beautiful, tender prayer from the old minister grandfather. Then came the Christmas tree and the all but frantic joy of the little girl, the joy of the others in her joy, and in their own remembrances from distant friends. When the happy day had come to eventide, the child took down the little red stocking. No one had seen the gifts go in, but it held thirty dollars—given out of tender happy hearts for our little "invisible guests."

As we went upstairs that night leaving the tree to glow and glitter in the glancing firelight, some one said, not with regret but in deep content: "The end of a perfect day."

And somehow all of us think it was perfect because it was hallowed.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE GROWS MISSIONARIES

Young people go to an Agricultural College to learn how to grow crops successfully, or to develop physical resources.

Often they learn while in college that a nation's greatest undeveloped resource is in its boys and girls, and they go forth as missionaries to develop lives for the Kingdom of God.

Recently from a single state agricultural college, a young man went to India, another to China, a third to Syria, and a fourth to Burma—all missionaries. A fifth turned to the theological seminary for further training. No, the college alone did not turn them to the service of Christ. It was largely due to the influence of a

SELECT READINGS

Glory to God—from the angel throng,
Glory to God was their joyous song—
Glory to God on high—and then—
Peace on earth, good will to men!

To all our readers we send a Christmas greeting.

Character of the divinest sort can always be built with tools right at hand.

There can be no doubt that Christmas stands for the era of good will. It is a good time to forgive your enemies, and to learn to love them.

God fixed the star of Bethlehem in the brow of earth's night, that men might find the "sun of Righteousness," who should rise upon a world with "healing in His wings."

Just as the wise men deemed it meet
To offer him gold and perfumes sweet
We lay our gifts at his holy feet,
Our gifts on the Christmas morning.

The way we treat men is the surest test of the state of our hearts toward God.

Money can not buy a real Christmas gift. It is the love and thought behind the gift that makes its worth. Trading gifts, and estimating their commercial value, is no Christmas giving.

Only things to eat, drink and wear are high in price. Happiness is at the same old figure.

List to the bells, they are ringing still;
Glory to God, and to man good will;
Gladly we echo their joyful lay,
Hailing the light of the Christmas Day.

Sin either robs men of their inheritance, or despoils it.

Any weapon is good enough to fight with if God bids us use it, and he is on our side. The best human equipment is of no use if he is against us.

CAN NOT BE DONE.

To destroy the spirit of Christmas we would have to destroy, in a wholesale way, the world's libraries, for the books are full of it. We would have to destroy the art galleries, which are resplendent with the Madonna idea. We would have to smash all the sculpture, for the chisel has made marble slabs like unto his angels and our ~~our~~ phs. Then we would have to silence the orators and make them take from their finest productions all references to Christ; then, how flat would their efforts be! Then we would have to paralyze human hearts and dry them up as though a deadly sirocco had passed over them. As for me, I'd rather pray in the language of Tiny Tim—"God bless us, every one."

BE YE RECONCILED TO GOD.

Sin and guilt result in hopeless alienation between God and man. The effect of Christ's work is two-fold; first, it makes possible in God the reconciliation with man by the satisfaction made to a broken law and dishonored government; and second, it makes possible man's reconciliation with God by the regeneration of his sinful nature. As alienation is mutual, so reconciliation must be mutual. Paul represents the reconciliation between man and God as already partial; i. e., on God's side, in Christ, the attitude of reconciliation has been taken. "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself." And so all that remains is for man to turn toward God. He therefore adds, "We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—Arthur T. Pierson.

DAY BY DAY.

The occupations of every day seem trifling, yet they are by God for you and me. Nothing comes by accident, not even the interruptions in our busy day. And such as follow on to know God's will see in all events what may lead to good, and so trust grows into a habit, as habit grows by perpetual use, till every circumstance may be seen to be but a fresh manifestation of the will of God working itself out in us. T. T. Carter.

NEEDLESS ANXIETY.

"The things that make us fume and fret,
And the things that make us groan and sweat;

Are the things that haven't happened yet."

Most of life's worries and trouble are caused by undue anxiety. We shy at shadows, make mountains of molehills, and take counsel of ill-founded fears. We hope for the best, yet seem constantly to dread the worst and by our gloom darken the passing days.

The Master would have us learn from nature the lesson of rest, repose. Look at the lily. It neither toils nor spins, yet in beauty it surpasses the wealthiest and wisest. It blooms in unsurpassed loveliness, sustained by the bountiful hand of God.

The fowls neither reap nor gather into barns, yet the Heavenly Father feeds them; and the same God will give us food if we only trust him. He who clothes the grass of the field will clothe his children if they will look in faith to him. If he hears the cry of the ravens, surely he will heed the cry of his children. If we trust in the Lord, we shall lack no good thing. O, that we might live as we profess to believe, that we really have a Heavenly Father who is able and willing to supply our needs!

GENERAL NEWS

FOUR-POWER AGREEMENT REACHED BY ARMS CONFERENCE.

Terms of a treaty entered into by the United States, Great Britain, Japan and France for the mutual protection of their respective interests in the Pacific were proclaimed formally at the fourth plenary session of the International Conference on Saturday.

The announcement was made by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, member of the American delegation, who is also chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate.

Following Senator Lodge's presentation, formal acceptance of the treaty was acknowledged by Rene Viviani, A. J. Balfour and Prince Tokugawa, on behalf of the Governments of France, Great Britain and Japan, respectively. Chief delegates of the lesser Powers represented at the conference followed with expressions of satisfaction with the new arrangement.

Before it can become binding upon the United States, however, the treaty must be ratified by the United States Senate.

The text of the four-Power agreement is as follows:

"The United States of America, the British Empire, France and Japan.

"With a view to the preservation of the general peace and the maintenance of their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the regions of the Pacific Ocean.

"Have determined to conclude a treaty to this effect, and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

"1. The high contracting parties agree as between themselves to respect their rights in relation to their insular possessions and insular dominions in the regions of the Pacific Ocean.

"If there should develop between any of the high contracting parties a controversy arising out of any Pacific question and involving their said rights which is not satisfactorily settled by diplomacy and is likely to affect the harmonious accord now happily subsisting between them, they shall invite the high contracting parties to a joint conference, to which the whole subject will be referred for consideration and adjustment.

"2. If the said rights are threatened by the aggressive action of any other Power, the high contracting parties shall communicate with one another fully and frankly in order to arrive at an understanding as to the most efficient measures to be taken, jointly and separately, to meet the exigencies of the particular situation.

"3. This agreement shall remain in force for ten years from the time it shall take effect, and after the expiration of said period it shall continue to be in force, subject to the right of any of the high contracting parties to terminate it upon twelve months' notice.

"4. This agreement shall be ratified as soon as possible, in accordance with the constitutional methods of the high contracting parties, and shall take effect on the deposit of ratifications, which shall take place at Washington, and thereupon the agreement between Great Britain and Japan, which was concluded at London on July 13, 1911, shall terminate."

With the four-Power treaty in final form and an agreement on naval ratio regarded as being practically certain, the Armament Limitation Conference will go into its fifth week with its principals confident they can complete all their major tasks here by the end of the year.

The problems of the Far East and details of the naval reduction program, including the question of Pacific-island fortifications and naval bases, now are to become the subjects of primary consideration.

IRELAND TO BE A DOMINION.

On Tuesday of last week the leaders of the British government and the heads of the Sinn Fein government of Ireland reached an agreement, under which Ireland is to have a dominion form of government, similar to that of Canada. The agreement consists of eighteen articles providing for the tion of the present provincial government for one year, after which the parliament, to be elected, will become the governing body.

Two days after the agreement was signed Eamonn DeValera, President of the Irish Republic, announced his personal opposition to it.

With the signing of the British-Irish agreement, King George issued a proclamation releasing all political prisoners interned in Ireland.

Approximately 3,400 interned persons are affected by the release order, which related to all persons under internment as distinguished from those who have been tried and convicted, it was stated at the Irish Office.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

President Harding's first annual message to the new Congress was delivered, in person, last Tuesday. The chief points in the President's address are:

1. The prospect of permanent peace.
2. The new place in the world for the United States.
3. The relation of Congress to the President.
4. A tariff equitable to the world.
5. More co-operative marketing by tillers of the soil.
6. Settlement of disputes between capital and labor by quasi-judicial courts.
7. A general transportation policy.
8. Government aid for starving Russians.
9. Reclamation of arid and swamp lands for soldiers.
10. A constitutional bar against non-taxable securities.

In the field of domestic policies the President stepped out boldly and trod on many toes.

"Greatest progress toward solution of our problem of capital and labor," he asserted, "will come with the recognition of the right of labor to organize, to deal collectively, their organizations to be held to be responsible as organized capital—corporations—are held to be accountable.

"The right of labor to organize is quite as fundamental and necessary as is the right of capital to organize," the President declared.

"The right of labor to negotiate to deal with and solve its particular problems in an organized way, through its chosen agents, is as essential as is the right of capital to organize, to maintain corporations, to limit the liabilities of stockholders."

"Indeed," he added, "we have come to recognize that the limited liability of the citizen as a member of a labor organization closely parallels the limitation of liability of the citizen as a stockholder in a corporation for profit."

A CHRISTMAS WARNING.

A plea to merchants to exercise caution during the Christmas shopping season, in order to prevent fire, was issued last week by the chief of the Fire Department Prevention Bureau. Realizing that merchants will be stocked to the limit, thereby increasing fire hazards, and well aware of the fact that many lives might be jeopardized during the season by wanton neglect, the fire department officials have set down a list of orders which they expect merchants to observe.

The plea follows: "Merchants, we are asking your hearty cooperation during the holiday season by keeping in mind that true slogan, 'Safety First.'"

"A large number of holiday fires are caused by salesrooms and packing rooms being littered with paper, excelsior and other inflammable packing materials. This hazard should be eliminated immediately and properly disposed of; also the improperly ventilated show windows contribute their share to holiday fires, these tightly enclosed show boxes after the lights are turned on frequently acquire a temperature higher than blood heat.

"Post in conspicuous places 'No smoking' signs, and see that this order is strictly enforced.

"Be sure that all fire extinguishers have been inspected and are in serviceable condition, handy and free from obstructions.

"Decorations of straw, leaves or paper are highly inflammable and should never be used unless flameproofed.

"Eliminate cotton representing snow for your decorations; the use of abestos makes it more realistic, and by far safer.

"Never hang anything on the electric light wires or place any inflammable decorations on or around the electric light bulbs. Be sure that bulbs are screened, or covered with globes.

"Metallic or wire decorations oftentimes are the cause of short circuits when coming in contact with electric wires.

"Celluloid articles should not be exposed to open flame lights or close to electric light bulbs.

"Open flame lights should never be used where ribbons, paper goods or articles of light fabric are displayed.

"Keep the aisles and exits free from obstructions, thereby decreasing the chances of a fire panic."

Parts of the same warning apply equally to Christmas house decorations.

PROHIBITION AGAIN UNDER FIRE.

Two plans to liberalize the Volstead prohibition enforcement act by providing for the manufacture and sale of light wines and beers were projected from widely separated sources when Congress reconvened, bringing prohibition again into the spotlight in an organized effort to make it an issue in the 1922 and succeeding campaign.

The first would provide for local option in congressional districts by leaving to popular referendum the issue of whether beer and light wines should be legalized for the communities desiring them. This plan is contained in an amendment to the tax law introduced by Representative John Philip Hill, of Baltimore, Md., Republican.

The second plan is in embryo. It emanated from a St. Louis (Mo.) company owning what formerly was one of the world's largest breweries, whose owners became converted to prohibition when they saw its inevitableness and changed their plant into a cereal beverage or "near beer" factory.

In order to prevent embarrassment of the American delegates to the Armament Limitation Conference that might follow senatorial discussion of the Government's guests, Republican leaders plan to pass the foreign debt refunding bill without debate.

Any Democrats who are opposed to the bill, as well as Republicans, will be asked to go before the Senate Finance Committee and state there, behind closed doors, what they think of England or France or Italy, then agree on the form of the measure.

The death list as a result of a collision of Philadelphia and Reading Railway passenger trains at Bryn Athyn, Pa., last week, stands at twenty-seven. Thirteen of the victims have been identified positively and fourteen others known to have been on one or the other of the trains still are missing and believed to have been killed.

Efforts are being made to constitute a "legal congress" to carry on the government in Guatemala, following the overthrow of the regime of President Carlos Herrera, according to advices from Guatemala City, received by Francisco Sanchez Latour, formerly national Treasurer of Guatemala and representative in America of the Liberal party which accomplished the revolt against Rerrera.

Definite assurance has been sent to the Senate by administration leaders and members of the American delegation to the international conference that no alliance, no guarantees, nor any pledge to go to war to enforce decisions reached at the conference are involved in the several international agreements about to be evolved from the Washington parleys.

Two more bandits, attempting to rob a railway mail car, were shot last week.

Complete abandonment of all forms of chemical warfare is understood to have been recommended to the American arms conference delegation by its official Advisory Committee.

The Advisory Committee report was drawn by General John J. Pershing, and there is intimation that it does not reflect views of all other high army officials. In general, army officers are inclined to believe that poison gas or any other form of chemical warfare should be treated as any other military weapon should be treated.

American army policy under Woodrow Wilson prescribed gas warfare after the armistice was signed.

It formally was stated that the American army would not develop gas for offensive use, but would confine itself to the thorough study of chemical warfare in preparation for adequate defense against any enemy who might resort to its use.

Trapped in a sunken submarine for twelve hours, fighting chlorine gas in addition to the natural hazards of suffocation, fifty-one men were rescued on Long Island Sound, off Bridgeport, Conn. The men crawled perilously through a twenty-one-inch torpedo tube and flashed distress signals to a passing tug by burning mattresses on the deck of their disabled craft, after they had raised an end above the surface by lightening the ship's ballast.

The submarine was the S-48, which was being prepared for the United States Navy by the Lake Torpedo Company, of Bridgeport.

Pointing to continuing deficits in his department, Will H. Hays, Postmaster-General, in his first annual report to the President, declares that "if the present gauge of expenditures shall continue there should be such a readjustment of postage rates as together with the effects of increasing volume of business will produce sufficient revenue approximately to meet it."

A special cable dispatch to the Paris Journal reports that the commander of the submarine which sank the Lusitania has been hamstrung, whipped and drowned at sea by the mutinous crew of a Paraguayan warship, the Adolfe Riquelme.

He received command of the warship by the Paraguayan government following his naturalization there after the war.

The mutiny was due to the iron discipline inflicted on the ship, the crew taking advantage of the Paraguayan revolution to rise against the officers.

Emma Goldman, who was deported to Russia from the United States in December, 1919, as a result of her anarchistic activities, has left Moscow, it is stated. She is believed to be in Riga, with the intention of seeking permission to return to the United States.

Government expenses for vocational training of world-war veterans increased by $2,000,000 between the months of September and November, according to a statement issued by Charles R. Forbes, Director of the Veterans' Bureau.

September 1, he said, there were 82,738 men receiving training, and their maintenance pay amounted to $10,329,016.

In October the enrollment jumped to 87,208 men, and the maintenance cost to $11,554,539, while by Nov. 1 there were 91,805 men in training and the maintenance cost was $12,736,631.

The first move to carry into effect the recommendations of the President for greater flexibility in the proposed Fordney permanent tariff law was made by Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, Republican, who introduced amendments to the bill, under consideration by the Senate Finance Committee, embodying in detail the suggestions outlined by Mr. Harding.

One of Senator Smoot's amendments would empower the President to proclaim American valuation to be the basis for assessing duties at such times and on such articles as was deemed to be necessary.

The other amendment offered by the Utah Senator would give to the President power to increase or decrease import taxes as conditions, after a survey ordered by the Executive, should show to be warranted. Both propositions, Mr. Smoot said, would be called before the Senate immediately the tariff bill was reported to that body.

Picketing in connection with a labor strike would be unjustifiable if carried to the point of "importunity and dogging," the Supreme Court ruled last week.

Decision as to whether or not specific instances of picketing came within the Court's inhibition had to be left for determination on the facts in each such case, it was declared, but the Court suggested that pickets should have the right of "observation, communication and persuasion," and further might be limited to "one representative for each point of ingress and egress."

"G-7," a big, irregular shaped navy "blimp," proved the value of helium, the new nonflammable gas discovered during the war.

The great gas bag, with its pendant car, droned its way to Washington from Hampton Roads, Va., and back again, making an actual demonstration of the lifting power of the new gas. She was the first "ship" of the air to be inflated with it and she met every test, her officers reported.

Not only was the ship sufficiently buoyant throughout her long double journey and safe from any danger of fire or explosion in air, but she carried back to Hampton Roads exactly the same amount of gas she brought away.

According to the Zwölf Uhrblatt, Dutch paper, former Emperor William has decided to re-marry.

The woman of his choice, the newspaper says, is the widow of a high officer from Danzig, who was killed in the war.

The newspaper professes to have received the information from a trustworthy source.

Anthony Spair, international representative of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shop Laborers, announced last week that his organization would repudiate acceptance by the unions' Pennsylvania system division of rules proposed at a conference in August with officials of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

He asserted that three officers of the divisional unions had been expelled for accepting the rules, which failed to recognize the union, and for leading a secessionist movement to the Pennsylvania system fraternity, created under the road's plan for employes' organization, he charged.

Former Turkish Grand Vizier Said Ali Pasha was wounded fatally while he was taking a walk through the city of Rome. He was rushed to a hospital, but was dead when the ambulance arrived. His assailant is unknown.

WHEN CHRISTMAS COMES ON SABBATH OR SATURDAY.

In the middle ages it was considered that when Christmas Day fell on Sabbath it augured good fortune, but if on Saturday it boded no good.

Here are some lines preserved in the British Museum—probably composed more than seven hundred years ago:

Lordinges, I warne you al beforne
Yet that day that Chryste was borne,
Falle uppon a Sunday;
That wynter shall be good par fay,
But grete wyndes aloft shall be,
The sooner shall be fayre and drye.

If Chrystmas on the Saterdag falle,
That wynter ys to be dredden alle,
Hyt shall be so fulle of grete tempests
That hyt shall slee bothe man and beste.
Frute and corne shal fayle grete won
And odle folke dyen many on.

When Christmas Day comes on Sabbath, things will be about the same as when it comes on Saturday. Friday is as good a day to be born on, or to die on, as Sabbath. There are no always lucky days and no always unlucky days. In the same regions each day, in the same week, in the long run, has the same portion of what we call good or bad luck.

CHRISTMAS CANDIES.

Christmas Creams.—Three tablespoonfuls of cream, one tablespoonful of melted butter, and one teaspoonful of vanilla, or other preferred flavoring, must be put into a large mixing bowl, then sugar is stirred in until it becomes of a dough-like consistency, when it can be kneaded with the hand. You now have a "fondant" that can not be distinguished from the cooked cream. Have ready nut kernels, figs, dates, or any other filling you may prefer. Pinch off small pieces of the cream, mold to proper size and shape with the fingers, and press the dates or figs with it; or press half an English walnut on it. A great variety of creams may be made by this recipe, which requires no cooking.

* * *

Seafoam.—This is another sweet that may be easily made; all that is needed is care. In a gallon crock beat the whites of two eggs: Boil four cups of brown sugar, with one cup of water, until it hardens in cold water. Be sure the egg is beaten until quite dry, then slowly pour the candy on the egg, whipping all the time, until the mass creams; then dip out by teaspoonfuls onto a platter. No butter or flavoring. It tastes like maple cream.

* * *

Fudge.—Two cups brown sugar, one cup granulated sugar, one cup of milk, and butter size of walnut. Stir occasionally to prevent sticking. Test: When it stiffens in water, pour on buttered tins, cool, and cut in squares. If chocolate is liked, add a small quantity of grated chocolate or cocoa, before taking up.

Pulled Cream.—Four teacups granulated sugar, one cup of water, stir until it begins to boil, then stop. Test by dropping a little in cold water. When it will stiffen sufficiently to pull, pour into buttered tins or platters to cool. When cool enough to pull, add to each platter a teaspoonful of flavoring, vanilla, peppermint, wintergreen, etc., then pull until quite white and creamy looking. Next draw it out into a long piece, lay it on a clean biscuit board or table, and with the scissors cut into bits. If it has been properly cooked and pulled, it will soon become quite creamy.

Christmas Cake.—Beat to a cream two-thirds of a teacupful of butter and two teacupfuls of sugar; add three beaten eggs, a teacupful of sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder twice sifted with three teacupfuls of flour, and flavor with a teaspoonful of vanilla. Put one-half of the mixture into two pie tins of equal size, and bake. To the rest of the mixture add a tablespoonful of molasses, a teacupful of seeded chopped raisins, half a teacupful of currants, a teaspoonful of cinnamon, half a teaspoonful each of cloves and grated nutmeg, and a slightly heaped tablespoonful of flour. Bake in the same pans as before, and alternate the dark and light layers, placing, if liked, a little currant jelly between the layers, and ice the top.

Plum Pudding.—Pour a cupful of milk over a cupful of bread crumbs. When milk becomes cold, add three-quarters of a cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt, yolks of four eggs, one-half pound each of raisins and currants, one-half pound of suet, spices to taste. Steam six hours. Serve with whipped cream sweetened with maple sugar.

Christmas Tree.—White and silver is a novel scheme for a tree. Festoon with strings of popped corn, and silver tinsel should be in evidence. White tarlatan bags shaped like a stocking and filled with white confectionery; egg cradles, painted silver, enclosing a tiny china doll; walnut shells covered with tinfoil, an abundance of silver paper stars, balls of cotton batting brushed over with gum arabic solution and dusted with diamond powder, are all effective decorations. The candies should be white, and the gifts enclosed in white boxes or tissue paper tied with white ribbon.

Ginger Souffle.—Four ounces of cornstarch, three ounces of powdered sugar, four ounces of preserved ginger, one pint of new milk, four ounces of butter, six eggs, rind of one lemon. Cream the butter and sugar; add chopped ginger, grated lemon peel and cornstarch. Stir over the fire until quite smooth, adding the milk, which should be hot, but not boiling. Remove from the fire; beat in, one at a time, six yolks of eggs. Beat the whites to a stiff froth and mix carefully with the batter. Fill one large, or several small, well-buttered and heated baking dishes; set in a quick oven; bake about twenty minutes and serve immediately before it falls.

Ginger Snaps.—Cream half a cup each of butter and brown sugar, add a cup of molasses, a teaspoon of ginger, a teaspoon of soda dissolved in warm water and enough sifted flour to make a stiff dough. Roll very thin, cut out and bake in a quick oven.

Ginger Cream.—Chop fine half a cup of preserved ginger, mix with half a cup of sirup and add half a package of gelatine, which has been soaked and dissolved. Add a pint of cream, whipped solid, and a little more sugar if required. Mold, chill and serve with whipped cream flavored with ginger sirup.

AS TO CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

Christmas is the greatest day in all the year. Is there a feeling that there is getting to be too much of it? Not too much of it in the way of kindness and brotherly love, but in the way of worry and expense. The weeks before it are full of feverish excitement, of nervous expectation, of perplexity; the days following of exhaustion.

Childhood is on tiptoe in two hemispheres, and childhood has become so conscious of its deserts that it is next to impossible to surprise it, except by too small gifts. The day has to carry a tremendous load. The obesity which might be distributed in healthful streams throughout the year is poured out in prodigal waste by some, who seem glad to relieve themselves of obligation by a single act. In point of cost, it is equal to half a dozen weddings. Year by year the expense of gifts increases. Is this the dictate of fashion, or owing to the growth of kindly feeling? Is it a spontaneous response to the spirit of the day, or do many people make gifts because everybody else does, and because there has grown up of late years a rivalry in this matter?

Since the Puritan distrust of this great feast day abated, the American people, who are the most generous people in the world, have taken up Christmas with the same enthusiasm that lately almost buried funerals under a weight of floral tributes. At the rate we are now rushing Christmas, we are in danger of wearing it out in a from which too many people date nervous prostration. Let us ease up a little on the money and cost of Christmas, and keep the best holiday of the ages in the old spirit of unostentatious charity and the exercise of mirth and good will which refreshes and does not weary.—Charles Dudley Warner.

A LEAF FROM A LIFE.

BY LILLIE RICE STAHL.

I recently spent an afternoon with an elderly friend. She was born in Ireland, seventy-seven years ago. Her mother was the daughter of an Irish lord, but displeased her father by marrying his overseer, and she was disinherited.

They lived happily for some years, but the young husband died. His widow had nothing to hold her there as her family ties had been loosened. She sold her little possessions and came to America, hoping to give her children a better chance in life.

Places were found where the older ones earned a scant living. The youngest daughter had obtained a Bible which she studied secretly and kept it hidden in the straw tick on her bed. By some means this was learned by her mother, who at once reported her "conduct" to the ever-watchful priest. He came in his wrath and denounced her heresy. He was about to whip this girl, when her blue Irish eyes blazed and she defied him and his deceptive religion. Already she saw the deception and rottenness in the mummeries of the Church of Rome. That night in the darkness and rain her unfeeling mother drove her out—alone in her bare feet. She said, "I will not allow a Protestant to sleep under my roof." She drew a threadbare little shawl over her head and found her way to a neighbor's house. Alice told her story. The family sympathized. The angry Irish had threatened to burn the barn any one who "harbored" this eleven year old little girl. It was about the time the railroad was made through this region. Many tents and shacks sheltered these working men and their families, and riots were prevalent, for whisky flowed freely, and these sons of Erin were excitable and believed whatever the priest taught them.

A kind family sent word for this despairing child to come to them and their home should be hers.

There she lived for years, amid piety and the refinement of a Christian home. After she had shaken off the shackles of Catholicism she was free to go where her heart led her. I was present when she presented herself to the church and stood on the grassy bank of the pool in the woodland, where she was buried with the Lord in baptism. A good man sought her love, and she became his bosom flower. Alice is now alone. She lived a most useful life, her home was the center of hospitality and people loved to tarry there. Sorrow did not embitter her, but enriched her nature. She was the friend of young people, and the "little chamber in the wall" was a welcome rest for a tired minister. She visited her mother on her death-bed and was kindly received, all the bitterness had vanished. Occasionally she visits her Catholic relations, where she is welcomed. Her nieces escort her to the Protestant church, and as a matter of courtesy, she accompanies them to their cathedral. Their respectful priest calls on her. The black robed sisters also pay their respects to her. In the sunset of life she sits and thinks and marvels how gently her feet have been led over thorny paths into paths of peace.

SUGGESTIONS FOR CHRISTMAS.

I keep a small stock of scribbling paper and a lead pencil in my work-basket, and each on a separate leaf, I write the names of the members of my immediate family and the near friends to whom I wish to send substantial gifts; following these I make a list of those to whom I would send simple remembrances. Whenever anything occurs to me as desirable for any one of these, I write it under the proper name. In this way I often accumulate impossible lists, but I buy, from time to time, as convenient, some listed article, and I never have to take time to think what is needed or appropriate. Then I always try to write some rhymes or gift. For instance, to pair of gloves for a little son, this verse was attached:

"Christmas wishes go with one glove,
New Year's wishes with the other,
And they both are for my true love,
And the giver—why, 'tis mother."

To some handkerchiefs, this:

"When Santa Claus his pack did view,
He found these kerchiefs marked for you."

With a white silk muffler, went this motto:

"I know you have mufflers galore,
And by them you set little store;
But white is so becoming—
In fact, makes you perfectly stunning—
That I venture to send you one more."

To a half a dozen knit washcloths these verses were tied:

"Christmas gifts and Christmas wishes
Mind one oft of China dishes,
Fine to use at special function,
Locked up, then, by strict injunction.

"Common porcelain, I'm choosing—
Not too good for daily using,
When you bring them into action,
May you glow with satisfaction."

To a young mother, these verses went with a pretty knitted baby blanket:

"Cuddle ze babee,
Wrap 'im wi' care.
Dear 'ittle babee,
Face and hand bare.

"Little red babee,
'Sleep on your breast,
Knowing no evil,
Cared for and blest.

"Sweet 'ittle babee,
Sweet as can be,
Dear 'ittle babee,
Kiss 'im for me."

These will do for samples; the verses do not need to be profound, you see, merely personal and loving. To my other friends I send a visiting card with some personal inscription, even if it be only "Christmas wishes." I once wrote on a visiting card a few lines and sent them to a dear friend of mine who has everything which money and social position can bring, and you can imagine my surprised satisfaction at her assurance that they gave her more pleasure than anything else which she received. Here they are:

"If this could be a daily greeting,
The whole year through, the whole year through,
Then o'er and o'er twould keep repeating,
'Dear, I love you; dear, I love you.'"

The verses are made just as the lists are, from time to time, as I sit sewing and let my thoughts dwell upon one or another friend; and they, too, are confided to the little stock of paper in my work basket, to be ready when wanted.—Ex.

PROVISIONS OF MATERNITY BILL, NOW A LAW, ACCEPTED IN ADVANCE BY SIX STATES.

On the day before Thanksgiving, President Harding signed the "Maternity Bill," providing for Federal co-operation with the states in promoting the welfare of maternity and infancy. After more than three years of struggle, the bill was passed by both houses of Congress by overwhelming votes. The Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor is given the administration of the act, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau is made executive officer. A Board of Maternity and Infant Hygiene, consisting of the Chief of the Children's Bureau, the Surgeon-General of the U. S. Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education, is given certain powers to review and approval. A total appropriation of $1,480,000 is authorized for the current fiscal year, and an appropriation of $1,240,000 for each of five years thereafter. Except for a very small percentage to be used for administrative purposes, the money is to be divided among the states accepting the provisions of the act, to be used, together with state funds, for promoting the welfare and hygiene of maternity and infancy.

So eagerly was the passage of this bill awaited that at least six states in the 1921 sessions of their legislatures passed laws accepting the act, if it should become a law, and authorizing a state board or division to co-operate with the Federal Government. These states include Delaware, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Pennsylvania and South Dakota. The rest of the states will not have to wait until the next regular session of their legislatures, for the law provides that if the legislature has not acted, the Governor may, in so far as the laws of his state permit, accept the provisions of the act and authorize a state agency to co-operate with the Children's Bureau until the legislature has had opportunity to act. More than thirty states have child welfare or child hygiene divisions in their state boards of health, and in these states the law provides that its administration shall be in the hands of these divisions. Any state desiring to benefit from the act must submit to the Children's Bureau detailed plans for its administration, and these plans are subject to approval of the Federal Board of Maternity and Infant Hygiene.

How much money will a state accepting the act receive from the Federal Government to be used in making maternity and infancy more safe? In the first place, $10,000 the first year, and $5,000 a year thereafter will be paid each state indicating its desire to co-operate. An additional $5,000 will be paid providing the state appropriates $5,000 of its own for the same purpose. That makes a total of $15,000 the first year and $10,000 a year for each year thereafter available from Federal funds to each state regardless of its size. In addition, $710,000 a year is provided to be distributed among the states on the basis of population, providing the amounts thus apportioned are matched by state appropriations.

The act contains specific clauses protecting parents in their right to liberty of action, and providing that the states shall take the initiative in preparing and carrying out plans.

"The best Xmas gift for these boys is a school scholarship."

Share Your Christmas Joys

TWO girls attending one of our Seminaries, have become unable to pay their tuition. Their father rents land, and pays six bales of cotton, usually producing fifteen bales. This year, because of the boll-weavel, he has only five. All goes for rent. He hopes to pay something for his daughters, by cottonseed and wood-cutting, and the sister who teaches three months, will give half her wages. Our school has continued them. But we appeal to you for a scholarship, $96.00, or half scholarship, $45.00, for these worthy girls and others. Fill their Christmas stockings, brighten their eyes, cheer their hearts and their father's.

LOST HIS ENTHUSIASM.

"I've been in camp," said one of a group in the local grocer's who were exchanging stories of adventure, "and only came down yesterday. One morning last week I struck the trail of a bear and followed it till about half past four that afternoon, before giving it up."

"What made you quit after putting in a whole day's work?" asked one of his listeners.

"Well, to tell the truth," replied the first speaker, shifting his weight ponderously from one leg to the other, "it seemed to me the trail was getting altogether too fresh."

MODERN DISCIPLINE.

In a certain public school very advanced ideas are put into practice. No pupil is ever punished in any way, for the individuality of every child is considered too sacred for repression.

One day, soon after her enrollment at this school, little Grace arrived home, her face streaked with tears and her mouth covered with blood.

"My precious! What happened?" cried her mother.

The little girl was soon pouring out her story in her mother's arms. Sammy Gates, it appeared, had struck her and knocked out two teeth.

When Grace had been kissed, comforted, and washed, her father wanted to know how the teacher had dealt with Sammy.

"She didn't do anything," said Grace.

"Well, what did she say?"

"She called Sammy up to the desk and said, 'Sammy, don't you know that was very anti-social?'"

A GOOD CATCH.

An old man with a soft, daft look used to sit on a park bench in the sun, with rod and line, as if he were fishing; but the line, with a worm on the hook, dangled over a bed of bright primroses.

"Crazy!" the passer-by was sure to say to himself, "absolutely crazy! Nice-looking old chap, too. It's a pity." Then with a gentle smile, the passer-by would approach the old man and ask, "What are you doing, uncle?"

"Fishing," came the solemn answer.

"Fishing, eh? Well, uncle, come now and have something with me."

Whereupon the old man shouldered his rod and followed the kindly stranger to the corner cafe. There he would be regaled with food and drink. His host, contemplating him in a friendly, protecting way, as he sipped an smoked, would say:

"So you were fishing, uncle? And how many have you caught this morning?"

The old man would blow a smoke cloud toward the ceiling and, after a pause, reply:

"You are the seventh, sir."

A LOGICAL DEDUCTION.

"Mr. Smith," a man asked his tailor, how is it you have not called on me for your account?"

"Oh, I never ask a gentleman for money."

"Indeed! How, then, do you get on if he doesn't pay?"

"Why," replied the tailor, after a momentary hesitation, "after a certain time I conclude he is not a gentleman, and then I ask him."

Christmas Bells

Christmas bells are ringing! If there were no church buildings there would be no Christmas bells ringing from steeples.

The work of the Board of Church Erection is to aid in the building of church edifices which make possible the ringing of Christmas bells, and all that these imply—the preaching of the Gospel, the peal of the organ, the singing of the Choir, praise, the instruction of children and young people, the incense of prayer, the sanctification of human life, the fostering of patriotism, the promotion of brotherhood, the building up of the kingdom of God.

It is admitted by all that adequate church buildings are fundamental to Christian progress and success.

The Presbyterian Church should pour into the Treasury of the Board large sums in contributions and legacies in order that the building program of the Church may be realized.

There is another way of helping to build churches—annuities. Annuity Funds deposited with the Board are at once loaned to churches, the Board guaranteeing liberal interest to annuitants.

The Board's aid has been extended to congregations in the erection of church buildings and manses in every Synod of the denomination. In many Synods every existing church has been aided by the Board.

OUR EXCHANGES

THE SPIRIT OF CHRISTMAS.

The real Santa Claus is the spirit of giving, and those who accept his control are careful to observe his fundamental rule of invisibility. The full flavor of the high delight of giving is only tasted when the giver conceals himself, asks nothing, wants nothing—not even thanks—in return—Boston Globe.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE.

It is the period of resolution, but each good resolution, is based upon the recognition of either a fault or a failure, and is to be judged accordingly. If we are wise, and if we are asking help from the Lord of our being, we will pledge ourselves to better work, more faithful attention, a steadier purpose, and a greater patience in the months of the new year—Christian Intelligencer.

PEACE.

The armament delegates are anxious to get home for Christmas. They want to see a little of this "peace on earth" business in effect.—Minneapolis Journal.

NOTHING DOING!

"Nothing Doing!" The gentle suggestion by some of the railroad employees' leaders that the government may be obliged to take over the roads, is not going to hit any responsive chord with the public, which remembers that a good deal of the tangle that gave rise to the present troubles grew out of the last experiment in government control.—Detroit Free Press.

DENMARK WANTS TARIFF.

The council of industry of Denmark has just presented a report, at the invitation of the Danish Government, upon the industrial depression in their country. There has been a decline of more than fifty per cent in the number of persons employed in several leading industries. Even the Social Democrats are in favor of high protective duties, which they think will assure more employment for the idle.—Living Age.

ONE VIEW OF THE MONROE DOCTRINE.

We trust no Latin-American State will butt in and send marines to West Virginia for the purpose of restoring order.—New York Sun.

CHURCH AND STATE.

It is the province of the State to maintain a public school system which will provide such training free from sectarian control, whether Catholic, Jewish or Protestant, and equally free from the control of non-Christian and anti-Christian forces, whether infidel, atheistic or agnostic.—Christian Statesman.

THE NEW YEAR.

What will we do with it? Surely it is a time for high resolve and heroic action. Shall we not strive to make the new year the best of all years. It may be true that our pathway is strewn with wrecked resolutions, yet this should not prevent us from making new ones for the coming days. However it may seem, he who resolves and re-resolves never dies quite the same. Even the shattered purpose served and helped us while it lasted. Better resolve and fall than never to have resolved. Only good can come from a good resolution.

The pitfalls of the past are now known and hence more easily shunned. The sins of the past should serve as a safeguard for the future. Let us not repeat its failures.—Western Recorder.

DANGEROUS BUSINESS.

Home-brewing grows more perilous all the time. If the man who "makes his own" avoids blowing up the house or getting into trouble with the local police, Uncle Sam is likely to catch him sooner or later.—Lima Gazette.

A NEW KIND OF BIBLE FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"What is it? Where can I get a copy? Take the Bible you have, and read it carefully, thoughtfully, prayerfully—every day, and you will know. For the New kind of Bible, the only kind worth while for the New Year, is the "used" Bible, the "read-every-day" Bible, the "prayed-over" Bible. This is the only kind of Bible that can light life's pathway.—Presbyterian Record.

ON THE FARM.

In the first place, one-third of the people of the United States actually live on farms, and in the second place the productivity and buying power of this one-third of our population determines more than any other one thing the prosperity of the remaining two-thirds of our population.—Wallace Farmer.

PUNCTUALITY.

In going the rounds of the churches we find so many places where the service is announced for one hour and begins at another. It may make no difference whether we meet at 11 or 10:55 or 11:15 so far as having the time on our hands is concerned, but when we are conducting an enterprise and making an appeal to the world to sustain it, it seems to us as much a duty to live up to our word as in any other enterprise of life.—Methodist Protestant.

THE PASSING YEARS.

Years bring a tender satisfaction to one who has lived a good life. The good deeds one has done will be so many song birds to make sweet melody in his heart. The association of friends will be more precious the longer we cherish them. The consciousness of growth in grace, the assurance that we are becoming master of ourselves with the passing years, will add to our peace when we realize that we are growing old, and that our span of life is becoming narrower.—Methodist Protestant.

LIMITATIONS OF PLEASURE.

Within proper measure pleasure is recreative. Beyond that measure it exhausts. Pleasure wears men out sooner than work, and the consequences of its excesses are less easily repaired than the exhaustion of work. Many pleasures are like drugs that first afford ease and then give pain, the headache after the spree. In order to continue to experience pleasure, there must be rational direction of it and conscientious restraint within the bounds of moderation.—Methodist Advocate-Herald.

RELIGION A WORLD NECESSITY.

Throughout our world there is a great longing for peace, and a growing hope that peace may soon be a world-wide experience. There are disturbers and marauders and desperadoes, of course, who, like wild beasts, know only how to snarl and to rend, but, for the most part, people are tired of these things and agonized over their sufferings, and are anxious for quiet and rest and security and peace.

There are hopeful signs, too, from the conferences and agreements of public men and nations, that we are entering upon a period of tranquillity. Most heartily is it desired. Most earnestly has it been prayed for. Most sincerely will it be appreciated if it comes.

But we all know, as well as we know anything, that there can be peace only as men have good will in their hearts for one another. This is the point of true religion wrought in the souls of men by the Holy Spirit. Resolutions and treaties and leagues and associations and conferences are effectual only as the hearts of men are made right within them by yielding themselves to God.

True religion is the most practical power for good there is in the world. Nothing can take its place. If it be lost sight of, our world will be in a desperate condition. All the material forces can not secure ideal conditions among men. Education and culture can not harmonize and pacify human nature. Philosophy is powerless to tranquilize our earth. If we wish peace we must have it in God's way, and that way is the way of true religion.

Let this Christmas time, and the times to which we shall come as Christmas passes by, be a time of earnest prayer. We believe that God can bring to bear upon the hearts of the people, in our land and in all lands, the influences that are needed to advance harmony and good will. Let us not simply say that we believe in prayer, and simply promise that we will pray, but let us actually pray. Let us send out the deep longings of our souls in the way of petition to God, and let us all join in this praying till the hearts of all are moving in earnest and united accord.

Let this be a time for the emphasizing of true religion. We are not to be ashamed of religion, or timid and shrinking and voiceless about it. It is a mighty power and should be employed as a tremendous agency. It is not for a few modest women and children, but for every man who knows how to be manly, who is ready to be a worker together with God. We are not going to get war out of the councils of the nations, and the crime wave out of the hearts of men, until the mighty power of true religion asserts itself as the expulsive power that shall drive out the devils, and set up the beautiful and glorious Kingdom of God in the territory of our world.

It is a time, too, to emphasize the practical power of foreign missions. Some warped and undeveloped people think that foreign missions is a sort of a dream or a fancy for visionary, well-intentioned, but rather weak-going men and women. This is all a misconception. Until we get this false notion out of the heads of people, we shall be impeded by them in getting the results that we should have in winning this world into a great brotherhood. Foreign missionaries have done more to move and awaken and win to friendship and to fraternal relationships the nations of the world than all the statesmen and diplomats and generals and admirals. China and Japan and India and Persia and Hawaii and Korea have been touched by the Gospel, and as the Gospel has its triumphs more completely in these and other lands, a feeling of friendship and trustfulness will come, as from no other possible source.

We need a genuine revival of true religion and godliness, in our own land and in all the whole world. With it there will be a readiness for peace and righteousness, law-enforcement and the abatement of every evil and hateful condition. Let the Church of Jesus Christ arise and shine. Here is its divinely opened opportunity. Here is its plain task. Let it gird itself for its plain duty, of guiding our whole world, at home and abroad, into the ways of peace and salvation.

A REGRETFUL FAREWELL.

We are sorry to see in the Intelligencer, the old and able paper of the Reformed Church in America, a notice that with the issue of Dec. 28, it will cease publication. It says: "The events of the years since 1914 have involved all publications, and especially religious ones, in difficulties which in numerous instances have proved insuperable, and many papers have long since ceased publication. In the case of the Intelligencer the external difficulties,—questions of finance, labor, material costs, etc.—were complicated by internal crises."

There is something pathetic in the statement of the editors that "the hardest part to bear was the withdrawal of friends because the paper did not always commend itself to their standards of excellence." It came out in smaller form and with fewer pages. This was a necessity. It says: "Conservative estimates would show that the weekly cost of issuing the Intelligencer is treble that which it averaged ten years ago. Increased cost of production, together with the greatly advanced price of paper, is responsible for the difficulties which so closely beset the path of religious publications today."

We note that the Boards of the Reformed Church are considering this question of a medium of communication with the churches, and shall await with interest the result of their deliberations.

A QUESTION AS TO AUTHORITY.

Federal Councils and other union combinations are getting into the habit, through their executive committees or otherwise, of taking various actions, and announcing them as the actions of all the bodies having a place in the organizations, when in reality these actions have never been submitted to and would not be approved by some of the bodies. Thus the Church Council of Pittsburgh recently announced that, in the future, financial support or encouragement will not be given to evangelistic campaigns of the Billy Sunday type or Gypsy Smith type. Pittsburgh Presbytery has since then adopted a resolution assuming no responsibility for the actions of the Council until the Presbytery formally considers and approved the matter.

This is getting to be a dangerous condition, and will militate against such unions. Presbyterians are not in the habit of being spoken for by those who have not the authority to do so. Even the General Assembly realizes that in new matters it must have the judgment of the presbyteries before it can decide on the measures to be taken. Federal Councils and other such bodies must learn that they have no right to speak for the Presbyterian Church, except on those subjects for which they had express authority and in regard to which they have information as to the mind of the Church.

CHURCH UNION.

The committee on closer relations of the Northern, Southern and United Presbyterian and Reformed Churches met in conference at Richmond, Va., Nov. 30. The fact that the proposed "constitution for the Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in America," presented to the Assemblies last spring, had not found favor was recognized.

Various amendments and suggestions were considered, and it was apparent that agreement could not be reached, and that if it could the result would be no improvement over the present fraternity and cooperation.

The Conference came to the conclusion that one group would be satisfied with nothing short of a complete union of all churches into one church, and that the other group, while desiring closer relations, did not think it best for the several churches to surrender their autonomy.

It was agreed that as the churches are already co-operating heartily under the Articles of Agreement of the Council of Reformed Churches, and as some of the committees felt that the proposed Constitution for Federal Union is no advance on the Articles of Agreement, that the proposed Constitution be referred to the separate committees for such action as they might deem wise, and that meanwhile the churches continue to co-operate under the plan of the Council of Reformed Churches.

DANGEROUS POPULARITY.

A man may be very good looking and eloquent and popular and yet be an unsafe leader. A professor may have taking ways and pleasing personality, and be a hale fellow well met with his pupils, and yet be unfit for his position.

The Word and Way has an article on "Theology and Mesmerism," showing how popular gifts combined with loose views as to morality and religion are peculiarly dangerous. It says:

"There is a nebulous notion in the heads of many modern religious teachers that it doesn't make any difference what man's theology may be, just so he has a good stock of approved 'personality' to dispense to the people. According to this ethereal notion, doctrine doesn't count for much, if anything at all, but appearance, voice, bearing, 'experience,' or some such thing, is the power that is to move this old world.

"The only power to be depended upon, according to this conception, for successful religious propaganda is found, not in the principles and potency of divine truth, but in the mesmeric influences that radiate and scintillate from some glowing 'personality.'

"To boil this notion down to its essential essence, it is nothing more nor less than that the mesmerism of man is more potent than the truth of God."

FRANK ADMISSIONS.

Episcopalians are not a unit in favor of the Lambeth plan of Christian unity. The Churchman says: "We shall get nowhere while a minority, who sit in every commission on unity, are permitted to inject into the discussion as the sine qua non of unity a certain rigid doctrine of apostolic succession which Protestantism will never accept, and acceptance of which by the Protestant Church would be nothing short of a calamity."

This recognizes the fact that the claim of Episcopacy to furnish the only valid ministry and sacraments makes union impossible.

Protestant denominations can not admit such a claim. The editor sees also that one obstacle to union with Protestant Churches is Episcopal zeal for union with Roman Catholicism. One party would unite with Rome and the other with Protestantism. It says: "Nothing must be done, say a minority, which shall imperil our efforts towards unity with Rome." Nothing must be done, say others, and The Churchman is of the number, which shall make impossible unity with other Protestant Communions.

This is in harmony with our expressed opinion when the Lambeth Council announced its program. Protestant Churches are not seeking union with Rome, and they will not consider any plan of union with Episcopacy which involve the doctrine of Apostolic succession and denies the validity of Protestant ordination and sacraments.

PEACE, PEACE, BUT NOT PEACE.

There are those who imagine that the recognition of the "Irish Free State" is a satisfactory solution of the question as to Ireland and Great Britain. In this we think they are greatly mistaken. It is satisfactory only to the enemies of Great Britain, Protestantism, and the Protestants of Ulster. Great Britain has been humiliated in her own eyes and before all the world. Ulster, which has stood loyally for Great Britain, has been essentially deserted and left to the mercies of South Ireland. Irish Roman Catholicism has won a triumph, and, although it accepts it with a snarl, it realizes that it will be in a better position to go on intriguing and fighting for complete separation from Great Britain than it has been heretofore. So it accepts, and it will make more trouble in the future than it has in the past.

We presume that Ulster and all of North Ireland will retain its relation to Great Britain, and will refuse to become a part of the "Irish Free State." We presume that it will do this, not because it has been treated by Great Britain in a way to win and hold its respect and love, but because, as a loyal Protestant province, it will, for very safety and from real principle, stay where it belongs.

We do not anticipate either political or religious advantage to result from this arrangement. The papacy will now rule the "Irish Free State," and will be in a condition to harry Ulster and to harass England. We do not like to be pessimistic about anything, but we see nothing good in the concessions that have been made, and very much of a threatening menace to the whole Protestant world.

MONISM.

Monism means oneness. It is a philosophical theory or system, which refers all existence, physical, mental and spiritual, to one ultimate principle or substance.

It is opposed to dualism, which recognizes the difference between mind and matter, and to creationism, which distinguishes between the divine personality and the universe which is created.

Modern Monism is a recrudescence of Hinduism. It may not believe in reincarnation and Nirvana, or accept the imagery and marvels of Hindu books, but its fundamental propositions are pantheistic, and judging the future by the past, its influence will be evil and only evil.

Some who espouse it, or who carelessly use its phraseology, talk of following the light that is in man, and of the "God consciousness," and of the service of humanity. This has a pious ring, but is deceptive. The light that is in man is only his own reason or purpose or desire, and the consciousness that ignores the Word and Spirit of God is not God consciousness. Christ is the light of the world, and the Scriptures are a light to our feet and a lamp to our path; and he who makes anything less than these his supreme standard of authority will not serve and bless, but only curse humanity.

The influence of any system of thought is determined not by those who adopt and teach it, but by those who are taught in it. One brought up under Scriptural influences with a Scriptural code of morals may fall into infidelity. He may, through early conviction or sheer force of habit, maintain the Scriptural standard of morality while teaching error, but the results or his system will be seen in the lives of those who are brought up under it.

The result of Hinduism is India, with its fatalism, its caste system, its utter carelessness as to humanity, its licentiousness, its degradation of women, its pessimism and hopelessness.

The fruit of Christianity is a Christian civilization which, in spite of all human weakness and failure, is love and faith and righteousness, and the perfection of which is to be the establishment of God's kingdom over all the earth.

We are very near the Christmas time just now. May the day be full of Christmas joy and blessing, and our hearts full of the love of God.

"If the churches fail in their high and holy task, there is small hope for our civilization." So said President Harding a few weeks ago, and his words are true. The great task of the Churches is the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, so that man may become converted and live in loving obedience to the laws of God.

It is a time for prayer. Let us pray as the old year goes out and as the New Year comes in. The year begins with the Week of Prayer. Let every week of the year be a week of prayer. Let us pray for the power and love and life of God in the souls of all men, until war and sin of every sort shall cease, and the blessed Kingdom of Christ come and the will of God be done.

Leading men in all the leading nations are insisting that the world is sure to profit greatly as a result of the agreements already made as to the limitation of armaments. It is to be hoped that there will be real and lasting benefits and genuine relief. It will make this a Christmas long to remember with gladness and gratitude.

The Federal Council of Churches urges that contributions be made at this Christmas time for the suffering, and is thus in line with the general feelings of sympathetic and good people all over the country. Money for the Near East Relief should be sent to 1 Madison Avenue, New York City; and for the Children of Russia to the Federal Council Relief, 105 East 22nd St., New York City.

The great mass of the saloon-keepers, brewers and distillers always were criminals, breaking all the laws that were made for the regulation of the liquor-traffic. They are still showing the same criminal character, trying to break the prohibitory laws in every possible way. With all their crime they are spreading the Bolshevik propaganda that the prohibitory laws can not be enforced. Let the truth be hurled back that they can be enforced, they are being enforced, and they will be enforced, and that these criminals can not prevent their enforcement.

In another year, if the peace program goes into effect, and the energies of the nations are directed from the warships to the farm-wagon, and from the spear to the pruning-hook, there will be enough food raised to provide for all who are now hungry, and famine and starvation will largely be things of the past. In the meanwhile, as we ourselves love and hope for mercy, let us give to those who are hungry.

Hanover College has been making its plea for months in the columns of our paper. We hope that the words have been read by all, and that many have been inclined to help this grand and good institution in this the time of critical need. If it gains a few thousands of dollars more this winter, it will come into possession of half a million dollars and be placed upon a solid foundation, to do its beneficent work for Christ and the Church. If it fails to receive this amount, most of which is conditioned upon the raising of the whole amount, it will be a sore disappointment to its friends and to the lovers of Christian education.

A saloon-keeper, or, rather, one who used to be a saloon-keeper and who would like to be one again, begs that the law be not enforced so strictly, saying that "the good-will of the people can not be retained if they are treated too harshly." Of course, any criminal feels displeased when he is caught and punished, and would be much better satisfied if he were just let alone. The plea of the devils to Christ was, "Let us alone," and that is what they have always asked. But it is not to the interest of organized society to make criminals happy and satisfied. The good-will of the people has been expressed in good laws, and it is not possible for those who break those laws to be permanently comfortable and at their ease.

THE STAR.

BY REV. CAMPBELL COYLE, D.D.

The Star is in the sky again,
The Star that shone of old,
And led the Wise Men to the Child
With incense, myrrh, and gold.

It's shining in the laughing eyes
Of happy boys and girls,
And in the tangled silver threads
Of little babies' curls.

It's shining in the smiles that gleam
Amid life's throng and press;
It's shining where tall mountains rise
And in the wilderness.

It's shining, too, in prison cells.
Where many hearts are sad,
And points them to the better way
Wherein they may be glad.

It's shining in the haunts of sin,
Where burn the fires of hell,
And gives them gleams of Paradise
Where only saints can dwell.

It's shining far in heathen lands,
Where souls in darkness grope,
And gently melts the snows away
From buried flow'rs of hope.

It's shining where the river runs.
The river made of tears,
And seeks to dry the river up
Wherever it appears.

The Star is in the sky again,
The Star that shone of old,
And led the Wise Men to the Child
With incense, myrrh, and gold.

THE GREAT UNSEEN FUTURE.

A New Year Message.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

A wise man will lay plans for the future. Only fools rush headlong through life without looking ahead. We plan for winter by supplying ourselves with fuel. We plan our journeys, our work for the day, the year. We will be wise if, so far as possible, we make plans for our whole earthly life.

But why limit our plans to our earthly life, as many do? Can not we look through the thin veil which separates time from eternity? Have we nobody's word to depend upon as to the future condition of the soul after death? And if the soul will live forever, is it not important to know where and how? Should we not look into the possibilities of the case? And what about duty in so vital a matter? Our first question will be: What authority have we, what reliable knowledge can we now get, as to the condition of life when this mortal shall put on immortality? Has anybody made a journey into these unseen realms and returned to tell us about them?

Yes, dear soul, we have light in the darkness. The surgeon is an expert in surgery, the lawyer in legal lore. Each has studied his own department and can give you authoritative counsel, because he has familiarized himself with what has been taught and written thereon. But when we come to religion our only authoritative text-book is the Word of God. In this volume God speaks to us the words of Eternal Life. His divine Son, our Savior, revealed therein, has gone down into the grave and has come up out of it again to tell us what there is and what there is thereafter. He only hath immortality. He has brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. (I Tim. 6: 16; 2 Tim. 1: 10.)

The study of the Word of God is profitable both for the life that now is and for the life that is to come. The knowledge of Jesus Christ as revealed in the Word is of vital importance to every soul. For "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; but he that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him." (Jno. 3: 36.)

The Bible, therefore, should be the one book with whose teachings we should study to become familiar. The Christ, the central and most glorious character revealed therein, is the One above all others in whom we should put our trust, whose commands should be our law, and into the spirit of whose life we should ever seek to be assimilated.

A docile pupil will always find in the Holy Spirit, Christ's other self, a willing and competent teacher. "He shall teach you all things, he will show you things to come, he will glorify me, for he shall receive of mine and shall show it unto you." says Jesus about the ministry of the Holy Spirit to every listening, waiting, receptive soul. (Jno. 14: 26; 15: 13-14.)

Jesus said of himself: "I am he that liveth and was dead; and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." (Rev. 1: 18.) He said to Martha, mourning the death of her beloved brother: "I am the Resurrection and the Life: he that believeth in me shall never die. Believest thou this? (John 11: 25-26.)

Here then we have an authoritative Voice, here we have reliable knowledge as to the realms beyond the grave. Nineteen centuries of wonderful growth and glorious victory for the Church which he purchased with his precious blood, and of which he has foretold that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it—the Church which he indwells, for which he ever lives to intercede and to perfect, which is dear to him as the apple of his eye, and which he will one day present to himself in glory "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband"—The Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth—is proof of the authority of Christ's claims to unbar for mortal men the gates of light and inform them as to the tremendous issues of the eternal future. Let us listen to him. And as we approach his Word may the prayer of the blind Milton be our prayer:

"What in me is dark, illumine;
What is low, raise and support."

For man will never rouse himself to give attention to eternal realities. By nature he is too thoroughly absorbed in the things of sense and time. He must be aroused by some superior power. Some visitant from out the realms of eternity must startle him and awaken him from spiritual sleep. "We are not speaking," says Rev. Dr. W. G. T. Shedd (in a masterly sermon on "The Necessity of Divine Influences") "of a few serious thoughts that now and then fleet across the human mind, like meteors at midnight, and are seen no more. We are speaking of that everlasting dawning of eternity, with its terrors and its splendors, upon the human soul, which allows it no more repose, until it is prepared for eternity upon good grounds and foundations. The awakening must proceed from some Being who is far more alive to the solemnity of eternity than earthly man is. Never, until God interferes to disturb his dreams and break up his slumber does he profoundly and permanently feel that he was made for another world, and is fast going into it." Hence the necessity of the operation of the Holy Spirit, the revealer of the spiritual world, our indispensable Guide as we explore "that unknown country" from whose bourne no traveler returns."

"Come, blessed Spirit, Source of light,
Whose power and grace are unconfined,
Dispel the gloomy shades of night,
The thicker darkness of the mind.
"While through this dubious maze I stray,
Spread like the sun thy beams abroad,
To show the dangers of the way,
And guide my feeble steps to God."

UNBELIEF IS UNSCIENTIFIC.

BY REV. W. S. PRYSE, D.D.

The assault on the Christian religion in the name of science, which raged a generation ago, has largely subsided. Many eminent scientists have found no difficulty in holding to their Christian faith. Science itself has helped to a better understanding of certain portions of Scripture, with the result that not only have apparent contradictions disappeared, but impressive agreements have emerged. It can now in turn be shown that the real contradiction is not between science and Christianity, but between unbelief and science. It is not Christian faith, but unbelief in every form that is in conflict with science. It is not belief, but unbelief that is unscientific.

The truth of this statement may be shown very clearly and in short order. We begin with the basic principle of all science, the fixed postulate of all scientific research. What is that? It is the universal law of causation, the relation of cause and effect running as an unbroken chain through all the operations of nature. The universe itself in its entirety and in all its parts, is such an unbroken chain of cause and effect. This relation is the very law of the existence of the universe, infinite in its complexities and unceasing in its operations. Every phenomenon is at once an effect and a cause, having had its cause and becoming in turn a cause.

The one purpose of science is to trace out this connection of cause and effect. Regarding every phenomenon as an effect, it searches out its cause and never considers that it has achieved knowledge until it has found that cause. So universal and inviolable does science regard this law of causation, that some object to the Scriptural miracles on the ground that they involve no such break, but only the intervention of a higher force, as when man intervenes in the law of gravitation by lifting a heavy object from the ground. All science is thus a search for causes, and all additions to it are discoveries of causes.

Unbelief violates this basic principle of science by denying or ignoring causes, or by insisting upon asserted causes which are wholly inadequate, that is, which are not real causes at all. The universe is an effect which must have had a cause. The human mind has never been able to get away from that proposition, and never will. Such a marvelous, interworking system could not exist without a cause. As every part of it is an effect having a cause, so it must be with the system as a whole. But what explanation does unbelief give as to the cause of the universe? None whatever. Various theories are proposed, but not one of them gives any answer to the question, not one affords any real solution of the problem. Every non-theistic theory is but a pretense, a futility, as an explanation of the origin of the universe. Not one presents a cause that is at all adequate. The law of causation requires that the cause shall be entirely adequate to produce the effect, but no non-theistic theory does or can propose such an adequate cause.

Every such theory is a nullification or an evasion of the law of causation. But that law can not be nullified or evaded. It remains not only the basic law of the universe, but the basic law also of human thought and knowledge. Some assert that the universe has always existed, a plain absurdity in view of the fact that science, in its search for causes, traces every part of the universe back to a beginning and onward toward an end. If every part has a beginning, so must the whole. Materialism assumes that atoms are eternal and have evolved themselves into the universal system; that is, the universe has made itself. Primeval, unconscious dust has evolved itself into all things, including human and all intelligence. And they suppose they are assigning a cause for the universe. Could insanity of thought go farther?

Pantheism asserts that the intelligence visible in the universe is impersonally inherent in all parts of it, an equally absurd way of saying that the universe has made itself. It would be as rational to assert that the intelligence seen in a house is inherent in the wood and its other materials. Agnosticism declares that we can know nothing about it, ignoring the fact that we do know that an ordered and purposeful system can not possibly come into existence in any other way than as the work of intelligence, which in itself constitutes personality. These theories, one and all are denials of the scientific law of causation. They are only attempts to becloud the whole question with meaningless words, and to camouflage their failure to assign any real cause whatever.

There is no possible cause that can be given for the universe but infinite, conscious, personal intelligence. The intelligence which alone can be such a cause must be conscious, and is inseparable from personality. God of course must be eternal, and that is incomprehensible to us, just as all the ultimate facts of existence are incomprehensible to us. Something must be eternal, and as between cause and effect the cause must be first. Therefore, personal intelligence, the only possible cause, must be first and eternal.

Passing on to the Bible and the Gospel of Christ, it may be shown in the same way and for the same reason that unbelief concerning these is also unscientific. Such unbelief violates the law of causation. There are parts of the Bible that it might be claimed were of human composition solely, but not so with the Bible as a whole, or with particular portions of it. The creation story could not possibly have had its origin in human knowledge, in the age when it appeared. The Mosaic ceremonial system centering in the tabernacle, seen in the light of Gospel teaching in the New Testament, was entirely beyond the invention of the human mind. All this can be demonstrated to any candid person.

Centering our thought on the life, character and teaching of Jesus, there is no possibility of accounting for him on any human basis of explanation. Even as a man, his human nature can not be so explained. Here is a fact that sets him apart from every other human being who has ever lived. Every other, including the best and noblest and wisest of them, we can account for from human nature and conditions, as these were brought to bear upon them. We can thus account for every other religious leader or founder of a religion. In fact, we are inhibited by what they were and did from accounting for them in any other way. The character and teaching of Buddha, Confucius and Mohammed are humanly explained, and exclude any higher origin.

In the case of Christ alone this can not be done. He has never had a rival among men, and it has become a settled conviction that he never will have. He presents the only example of human perfection, and yet nothing in his earthly origin or environment will account for him. It is amazing that learned men should suppose that they can dispose of the person of Christ, as merely the highest outworking of human nature that has appeared on the earth. It can not be done. The problem is left unsettled and untouched by such a method.

Take the Sermon on the Mount. Clearly analyzed, its structure alone, as well as its teaching and spirit, shows it to be beyond any possible human composition. The Lord's Prayer itself is beyond human origin. So with other teachings of Jesus. There are those who suppose they may wave aside the miracles of the New Testament by merely declaring them to be impossible. But the discerning mind perceives in them, especially as compared with all other purported miracles, precisely that which distinguishes the genuine from the false.

Nor is it possible to account for the Gospel narratives of our Lord's life as mainly or largely legendary, the result of a traditional growth among his followers. Nothing can be more certain than that his character, teachings, acts, miracles are beyond all human invention, conscious or unconscious. Nothing can be more certain than that such human invention would have made any and all of these radically different from and inferior to the accounts as we have them. There is no possible accounting for these narratives, except as the records of reality. Take the accounts of the Lord's resurrection. No human mind would or could have conceived it as it is actually given. No such conception of a resurrection into eternal life had ever entered the mind of man.

To assert that the accounts of Christ's character, teachings and acts, as given in the four Gospels, could have come from any merely human mind or minds, is but to display mental blindness and an utter lack of spiritual discernment. Unbelief here is therefore unscientific, in that it leaves the person and Gospel of Christ without cause or explanation. It is not that no cause or explanation can be found, but that the evident explanation and the only possible cause are rejected. And so far as attempt is made to give an explanation or cause, that cause is utterly inadequate, that explanation is wholly futile.

All deniers of the supernatural and Divine, place themselves in this irrational position. They reject the law of causation. They assert for the greatest of all facts in human life an explanation that does not explain. They might as well deny that light and heat come from the sun, that rain comes by evaporation from the sea. The Bible and Christ and his Gospel are beyond all human origin or invention or explanation. They can not be waved aside or explained away by any such futile assumption. Their Divine origin is impregnable. They will stand invincible and invulnerable, because the presence and power of God are in them, and can never be eliminated.

A VISIT FROM AN ARKANSAS MISSIONARY.

BY REV. G. B. F. HALLOCK, D.D.

The Brick Church of Rochester, N. Y., has been having a week of joyful privilege. The occasion has been a visit from Rev. Elmer J. Bouher, D.D., of Kingston, Arkansas, a live wire home missionary supported by that church. Learning to count Dr. Bouher as an additional pastor representing them on the field, the church wanted to see him face to face. The joint boards of Elders, Trustees and Service Men invited him to come from Arkansas as their guest and spend a week in the congregation.

And a busy week it has been for him. He spoke morning and evening in the church on Sabbath, December 11th, and during his stay also to the Ladies' Missionary Society, the New Era Missionary Society, the large Men's Class of the Sabbath school, to every department of the school, to the Wednesday evening prayer meeting, the Mission Study Classes and to other church groups. Some of his lectures were with lantern slides, some without. He attended the monthly Church Social and was there given a reception. On Monday morning he spoke to the Presbyterian ministers of Rochester and vicinity. He was entertained at luncheons and dinners in as many homes as the days would permit, where he met groups of the leading men and women of the church, all becoming intensely interested in his work. It was not simply a round of social pleasures, but a week of intensive mission study. He awakened new interest in all classes of our people.

Dr. Bouher did no begging. He was blamed for not telling more of his needs. But he did tell of his work, and in such a way as to arouse the enthusiastic interest of every one of his hearers. He is a man of warm heart, winsome personality, of Southern eloquence and of deep spirituality. The results of his visits are sure to be manifest in a greatly quickened interest in missions in general and in larger gifts during days to come.

In a gap of the Ozark mountains lies the village of Kingston, with two stores, a bank, a spoke plant, a flour mill, three blacksmith shops, and two churches. Dr. Bouher's parish includes a district sixty by forty miles. In all that region there is not another trained minister, few schools worthy of the name, and the inhabitants all "purely American," are among the most illiterate of white people in the whole United States. In the district are more than twenty-five hundred people, many of them living and farming just as they did fifty or more years ago, and all needing the message of the Gospel.

Dr. Bouher is a man of strong frame, his Holland blood showing in his face, without fear, a lover of children, and with a passion for service of his fellow men.

He came to these mountains to fulfill the mission of his life. When he "got religion" in a revival meeting and made up his mind that he would be a Presbyterian preacher, he was working in his father's blacksmith shop in Indiana and had little education. He learned the trade of painter and decorator, and with that worked his way through college.

Graduating from the seminary, he preached in different rural villages, but wanted to get out where there was no church, into a community that most needed ministering to. He wrote to the Board of Home Missions, and they sent him to take charge of the mission which had been started at Kingston, but abandoned. After seeing the place Mr. Bouher decided that he could not make better use of his life anywhere else in the world, and so settled down to stay and work out his ideas. Here he started a Sabbath school, and also began to preach in the whole district the Gospel of Christ, and the Gospel of better living, of cleanliness, of education for children, of good roads, of service and brotherly love, along with a definite and decisive Christianity. He is teaching the people how to farm better, how to live better, how to keep well, how to have better homes, and has awakened a wonderful community spirit.

Each summer he brings in an evangelist and a singer and a revival is held in the tent on the hill. Summer a year ago fifty persons were added to the church as a result of the revival.

Though he has been at Kingston now less than six years, his field is ranked as one of the "Demonstration Parishes" of the Presbyterian Church. In his mission today he has a church and school and community house, with a staff of five assistants; a school principal, a teacher of agriculture, a teacher of domestic science, a teacher of music and a Red Cross nurse. He sees ahead as part of his work a hospital and clubhouse on the hill, with gymnasium, shower baths, a shop and library, a greatly enlarged church work and a school of higher grade capable of preparing the young men and young women of these mountains for college.

All of Dr. Bouher's work is instinct with evangelism. He is training the young men and young women of this left-behind mountain region to be the ministers and teachers and Christian leaders of the future.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

BY REV. EDWIN DUNTON BAILEY, D.D.

I address you in this letter because I am profoundly convinced that conditions at home and abroad in reference to the Roman Catholic Church call for earnest and prayerful attention and for energetic action.

I do not need to remind you of the fundamental differences between the Roman Catholic faith and the faith of the Protestant Churches. Your familiarity with the Reformation of the Sixteenth Century makes such a reminder unnecessary.

Nor do I need to remind you of the fundamental difference between the autocracy of Rome and the democracy which Jesus Christ sets forth in his Gospel. We Americans are jealous of the liberty which has come to us through the application of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and if necessary we would fly to arms rather than return to the oppressions of autocracy.

But many of us are resting quietly in the belief that our fathers won such a notable and complete victory over Rome in the conflicts of past centuries that there is no longer a Roman peril and that nothing remains for us except to wait patiently the final end of our ancient enemy. Our fancied safety is our present peril. While we have been lulled into inactivity and silence Rome has been busy.

I am one of those who believe Rome was more to blame for the late war than Berlin was. But whether this be so or not, Rome has profited more by the war than any other Government, Church or Institution, and she is following up her advantage with all of her historic skill and energy and with all the cunning and intrigue which characterized her work in her palmiest days.

The recognition given to the Knights of Columbus during the war, the important positions accorded to Roman Catholics as the price of their loyalty while the fight was on, the large sums of money made available for propaganda, the Irish question as a weapon for making trouble between the United States and Great Britain, not to mention the intrigues against the peace program in Europe, have emboldened Rome to adopt an aggressive program for its own rehabilitation and for the recovery of the civil power which long ago it forfeited.

The new propaganda involves such features as the following: Undermine Protestantism by constantly affirming its failure; laud the Roman Catholic Church as the oldest Church, dating back to the apostolic days; affirm that the Roman Church is the only true Church and that Protestantism is a modern revolt against divine authority; claim for Romanism the credit for Magna Charta, the winning of our American Revolution, the authorship of religious liberty and every other blessing which has come to humanity; rewrite history so as to blot out the bad record of the Roman Church, and substitute for it the credit for measures which have become popular; break down the public school system and substitute the parochial schools; under the plea of Americanizing the foreign population, in fact Romanize them; work the sympathy for Ireland so as to create hatred for Great Britain; by a discreet and cunning use of the "balance of power" in American politics, capture as many of the strategic positions in Government as possible and turn them to the advantage of Rome; in short, "make America Catholic."

The American doctrine of religious toleration, reinforced by the cry of "bigotry," which is worked for all it is worth by Rome herself, has silenced our Protestantism and given Rome a free hand for her propaganda. A generation of Americans has grown up quite ignorant of past history, of the struggles of our forefathers for liberty, and unwarned of the perils which beset our religion and our institutions. Our silence is the opportunity of Rome and she is taking advantage of it.

I therefore plead for a campaign of enlightenment, for sermons and magazine articles and editorials and books, which will revive the history of Rome, expose her false claims, refute her propaganda, deny her deceptive representations, arouse a sentiment to prevent her movements, dispute her return to civil or religious supremacy and prevent her intrigues in this and other countries.

I fully believe that the final great battle of the world will be over the question whether the Vatican, with its system of autocracy and false worship, shall rule the world, or whether Jesus Christ, with his system of truth, righteousness, liberty and salvation, as set forth in the Word of God, shall be the supreme power of the world. To meet this issue our Protestantism must gird itself anew for the struggle. Our lethargy and fancied security must give place to energetic and courageous activity and the faith of our fathers must again assert itself. For this I earnestly plead, for this I daily pray, and to this I solemnly dedicate my best efforts. Will you join in the great battle?

THE FOLLY OF FRET.

BY REV. WILLIAM S. JEROME.

These words are found in that most interesting and instructive book, "The Education of Henry Adams." The uselessness of worry has been often impressed upon us. "The Folly of Fret" is simply a variation on the same theme. And well would it be for us if we thoroughly learned the lesson. If Mr. Adam's education included this, it was much more complete than that of most people.

We all admit that to worry does no good, help no condition, solves no problem. And yet we keep on fretting. It would seem as if we would in time learn the lesson. If worry helped us to meet our tasks, and overcome difficulties, there might be some justification for it. But we know very well that it actually unfits us to do the things we worry about. When the call to duty comes, or the crises arrives, the fact that we have worried about it, does not help us. It simply weakens us and prevents us from bravely and successfully meeting the conditions that arise.

Doctors tell us that worry really kills. Many cases of insanity and suicide result from over anxiety and worry. It is foolish to say that we can not help worrying. A firm faith in God's providence and goodness is the real antidote to worry. If we really believe what we profess—that all things were working together for our good, we would not worry. It is because of our lack of faith, our fear and our weakness, that we let care invade our hearts and rule our lives.

Some people worry about all that has ever happened, all that happens, and all that may ever happen. Yet a little thought will show us the foolishness and futility of such anxiety. How foolish to worry over the past! What is past is past forever. The last hour can no more be brought back than the last year. What's done is done, and no after regrets or wishes can change the fact. It must be made the best of; its lesson laid to heart, and then forgotten for the new new tasks and duties that confront us. If at the time we did our best, with the light we had, we must believe the result was for the best and in accordance with God's will. And even if we did not do our best, it is useless to mourn over it now. We must not let a past mistake hinder our progress, nor blight our future. And so with worry about future evils. Here again, no amount of worry can change the facts, and it simply unfits us to meet the troubles that may come. Then we do not know what the morrow shall bring forth, and how will worrying about it help us? The evils we dread may never come, and then what use was our worrying?

"If evils come not, then our fears are vain.

And if they do, fear but augments the pain."

And why worry about what may never come? Is anything more foolish. For "Some of your griefs you have cured, And the sharpest you will have survived, But what torments of pain you endured From evils that never arrived!"

And so with worry about fearful conditions. It is equally foolish. For those conditions can either be remedied, or they can not be. If they can be, go to work to change them. If they can not be, why worry about the matter?

So much for the folly of fret. But it is not only foolish to worry, it is also harmful and wicked. It is distrust of God, unbelief of his word and promise. "Our worries always come from our weaknesses." "I dare no more worry," said John Wesley, "than curse and swear." Worry, says Booker T. Washington, "consumes to no purpose, just so much physical and mental strength that otherwise might be given to effective work."

Gladstone said as one the secrets of his long and laborious life, "I never allow business of any kind to enter my chamber door. In all my political life, I have never been kept awake five minutes by any debate in Parliament."

It is said that in his bedroom was the text: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee." It was this trust in God, this calmness and confidence, which enabled him to successfully carry on the complete affairs of a great nation.

How greatly we need to gain the victory over worry and fear!

"It is not the work but the worry,
That makes the world grow old;
That number the years of its children
Ere half their story is told;
That weakens their faith in heaven
And the wisdom of God's great plan.
Ah, 'tis not the work, but the worry,
That breaks the heart of man!"

Work is healthfulness and happiness; worry is misery and weakness. Due care and proper foresight are right and profitable. But worry is always wrong, always useless, always harmful. "Where anxiety begins, faith ends; and where faith begins, anxiety ends." The victory can only be gained through faith—faith in God, faith in his goodness, faith in his government, faith in his love and his power. This alone can free us from fear and anxiety, and enable us to rise into the clean light of perfect trust and loving confidence.

We are all familiar with Dr. Van Dyke's "Footpath to Peace." And his words have brought help and healing to many. But Paul has also given us a "Footpath to Peace," which we have perhaps overlooked. It is found in Phil. 4: 4-7, as follows:

"Rejoice in the Lord, Let your forbearance be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. In nothing be anxious. In everything with prayer and thanksgiving let your requests be made known to God. And the peace of God, which surpasseth understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus."

CHRISTMAS GIFTS OR CHRIST HIMSELF?

BY REV. J. GIBSON LOWRIE, D.D.

What do we most want at this Christmas time? The gifts of our friends, the enjoyments of festivity, the entertainment of music and song and merry making; or the presence of Christ in our hearts?

Hear a modern parable. There was a certain family that had a rich uncle. Every Christmas there came a box from Uncle Joe. There were tops and books and pictures and candies and furs and laces and jewelry and many other delights; and always something unexpected. Uncle Joe's box was one of the great events of the year. But, before a certain Christmas there came a letter from Uncle Joe saying that he had a new surprise in store for them. He lived a long way off, and travel was difficult and expensive, but he had concluded that instead of sending them a box this year, he would come himself and be their Christmas gift. And there arose in that family no small stir. Mother wondered if Uncle Joe would really be comfortable in their little house. Father thought that railroad traveling, what with Pullman rates and the war tax, was pretty high. Arabella said, "He'll have to have the blue room, and I can't invite my school chum." Tom said, "I wanted a pair of new skates." Susan said, "Well, our Christmas is spoiled!" But Mary, the youngest, said, "Oh, I am so happy! Uncle Joe is coming himself! I would rather have Uncle Joe than all the dolls and toys and goodies in the world. This will be the very best Christmas we have ever had! Dear, dear uncle Joe!"

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

In all the churches the Christmas services will be unusually elaborate, as the day is in a double sense the Lord's day. The spirit of the Christ Child is in the air. His Star will never set.

In Brooklyn the Arlington Avenue Church, Rev. John H. Kerr, D.D., pastor, welcomed into the membership of the main church the members of the Linwood Branch, which was during the past sixteen years affiliated with the mother church. At the communion service Dec. 4, nine new members were received. At the evening service Rev. W. Reginald Wheeler, professor in Peking University, temporarily Assistant Secretary of the Foreign Board, gave an illustrated lecture on China. The following Wednesday evening there was an illustrated lecture on "The Menace of Mohammedanism." The Arlington Avenue Church is very much alive, and the pastor, Dr. Kerr, is to be heartily congratulated. He steadfastly preaches the Gospel of the cross.

The Church of the Puritans, Manhattan, Rev. George J. Russell, pastor, received twenty-two members at the communion Dec. 4. The annual Every Member Canvass was made Dec. 11, the morning sermon being preached by Rev. U. L. Mackey, D.D., of the Synodical Board of Home Missions.

The Central Church people secured $95,000 in their Every Member Canvass and will raise $19,000 more to make up the amount set as the goal, $114,000. By invitation of the trustees of Robert College, the Constantinople Womans' College, and the American University of Beirut, a meeting will be held in the town hall, Friday evening, Jan. 6. Addresses will be made by Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip and Hon. Henry Morgenthau, former American Ambassador to Turkey. Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge will preside. The purpose of the meeting is to interpret American influence in the Near East, through education, as a factor of world peace, and to consider the relation of these institutions to the future problem of reconstruction.

Dr. John H. Finley, editor of the New York Times and a prominent Presbyterian, recently wrote: "In my judgment the church influence of this country is responsible for the great program announced by our Government today. It is the greatest step toward permanent peace ever taken by any nation. If Great Britain and Japan agree, it means that hereafter any nation that indulges in war preparation becomes an outlaw nation. . . . The United States has certainly taken the moral leadership of the world." Dr. Finley, who is Secretary of the Commission on International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in a recent letter urges the churches to put forth every effort to sustain popular interest and hold moral leadership. He says: "The churches have a supreme opportunity and responsibility. For them to slacken their efforts now would be an irreparable loss, both to themselves and to the whole world." The Federal Council of Churches working toward a warless world has sent out a call for 150,000 churches suggesting a persistent educational campaign, public services, study groups and a stream of letters to representatives in Washington.

Mrs. James Talcott, prominent in Presbyterian circles, died last week. One of her monuments is the beautiful new building which she gave to the New York Bible Society, which was awarded the prize of the Fifth Avenue Association as being the most beautiful building erected in that zone during the past year.

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. FULLERTON, D.D.

Crowded stores, display windows, signs on delivery wagons, saying "Do your shopping early," and many other things remind me that we are near that time when we are giving to our friends the hearty Christmas greeting. How many of us give sober thought to the event which has called all the world to a season of good cheer? To how many of us is the announcement, that to us "is born in the City of David, a Savior," meaningless and rather a surprise? The frightened shepherds have a large lineage these days.

The world is asking for a Savior, but not the one born in the City of David, but this longing for a Savior teaches the important fact that we need one. It takes no great wisdom to show us that the world is lost. The simple story in Luke, by its very simplicity, does not hold the attention of men long at a time, and in it there is a charm that eludes the ordinary individual.

The divine truth is that he came, and that he came to do for the world what no one else could do and never attempted. Men have arisen who attempted to save a race or a people, but no one has come, with the announced purpose, to make a way for the salvation of the whole world, without regard to race, color or condition. He is a world redeemer. The clinching argument for him is he. See him and all doubts disappear. Feel him and the earth is transformed into heaven. We do not bring heaven down, we open the door and bid it enter, and when it enters, a new world is born, and we see not men walking as trees, but men walking as sons of God and brothers to Christ and to one another.

This is the season of the year when we think of the past, forgive our enemies and deepen our love for our friends, and as we grow older this spirit of reverie, becomes a common thing especially at this season. Most of those with whom we started our life's journey, have come to its close. Their record is made, and they are now a sweet memory, but it is of the living toward whom my thoughts go out from my office this day. In 1906, on the last day of July I made my first official visit down South, and saw Birmingham, when it was not the Pittsburg of the South, and from that on to this, this whole South and Southwest have been in my thoughts and have been remembered in my daily prayers. Here I found sweet fellowship, and, sometimes, sharp criticisms, which I trust made me more careful of my words and work. I saw the North and the South forget the hell of war, and become brothers again in Christ. I sat with their committees and carried their needs to a board that was most sympathetic, and I have seen these people, to whom generous help was extended, turn back to the hand that gave the blessing, grateful thanksgiving.

I should be less than man, if, after five teen years of this close fellowship, I did not love the men and women who labored with me to bring in a better day for the kingdom, and to all these, old and new, this day I send loving thoughts and cheerful hope for their future.

For seven years now it has been my happy privilege to extend my service to the great West, as well as to continue it to the South and Southwest, and here I have found that men are not so different, whether you find them North, East, South or West. They are folks whom you can love and with whom you can have fellowship.

Here I found helpful counsel, with these pioneers in the kingdom; have entered into fellowship with them as they faced the problems common to us all, and those peculiar to a new and growing country where individualism is rankest, and found them true to those things that are best for the Church. God bless all these co-laborers, whether they be old or new friends of the cause, is the prayer that goes up from my desk this day in the Arcade Building, St. Louis.

For two years and over, I have been receiving the estimates of need from all these aid-receiving presbyteries and synods, and have been urging upon the Board an appropriation to cover them, and when the appropriation was made, and had been distributed by them, I have been charged with approving or corresponding with the presbyteries to learn more of the reason for the distribution, and thus I have been brought into a larger fellowship, and even closer than ever, and this has enlarged my love and given greater reason for my prayers for this entire fellowship.

To all these I am sending in this my heartiest Christmas greetings and earnest prayers for a happy and blessed New Year. These are great days for the Kingdom of God and the men who labor for its growth and permanency, and they are days that will try the faith of us all, and shall we not, therefore, these days face this task, with a faith that knows no failure, and that leaps over all obstacles, and stands face to face with our great Captain, and distinctly hears his loving words: "Lo! I am with you always even unto the end."

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

On Monday, Dec. 12th, an interesting address was made by Rev. J. D. Nutting, giving a vivid impression of his field, especially the great extent and distance of 800 miles by 200, and the time consumed in giving the scattered population even an occasional preaching service. The land of Utah is a moral battleground, and such earnest warriors or soldiers of the Cross as this speaker, march to ultimate victory.

At the meeting of Pittsburgh Presbytery, on Dec. 13th, the pastoral relations existing between Rev. W. M. Van Buskirk, and the First Church, Coraopolis, were dissolved, so he might accept the call to become an assistant pastor at the First Church of this city; and those between Rev. A. L. Hail and Montours Church. Mr. Hail has accepted a call to another suburban church, Allison Park.

Last Sabbath the Bellevue Church celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of its organization. Former pastors Rev. Drs. Little and Ralston were present, and, with appropriate and congratulatory services, the second half of the century was begun. Under the pastor who succeeded Rev. John M. Waddell, now of Blairstown, N. J., Rev. Robert F. Galbreath, the Bellevue Church is using all its resources and its attractive buildings to meet the needs of this populous community.

At the December meeting of presbytery a committee was appointed to consider the desirability of establishing a Home for Aged Persons, and also for little children. There are several such organizations, but pastors and others find that they are so crowded that the needy cases which come up to our church can not be arranged for. That such provision should be made is very evident, but the assumption of such enterprises by presbytery will call for expenditures which must be considered. Ten acres of land at Zelionople have been presented presbytery by Mr. William T. Wilson for such purposes, and as it is pleasantly located, it may be wise for presbytery to utilize this site. The expenditures of presbytery are increasing, as it is estimated the evangelistic campaign to be carried on here this winter will call for $20,000.

On Sabbath, Dec. 18th, in the afternoon, the First Church of Carnegie, Pa., Rev. George W. Brown, pastor, unveiled, with appropriate ceremonies, a bronze tablet commemorative of the forty years' pastorate of Rev. J. M. Duff, D.D. As Dr. Duff's bow still abides in strength, the emphasis placed upon a continued pastorate, when so indicated by God, will be made strong, and lookers on may learn the value of patience and the perseverance of the saints.

The First Church, McKeesport, was the scene on Dec. 15th, of the installation of the new pastor, Rev. D. C. Whitmarsh, recently of Barnesville, O. Rev. D. D. Kiehle, of East McKeesport, presided, and in the exercises Rev. E. S. Wallace, D.D., Rev. P. S. Kohler, of Glassport, Pa., and Rev. L. R. Lawther, of Central Church, McKeesport, took part.

Rev. Dr. V. Losa is rejoicing that his efforts in behalf of Czecho-Slovakia, especially through our Hussite Society, have aroused considerable interest and proffers of aid. His statement that the support of a pastor in that uplifted land, where the light is piercing the darkness of papistical ignorance, requires $175, has called out one offer from a devoted Christian in Baltimore of this amount, and several others also. The difference in exchange and reduction in prices account for this low stipend. When Dr. Losa read a letter from a pastor out there, reciting the possible withdrawal of an organ the church had been using, as the owner could not spare the 2,000 kronen, at which it was valued, there was a moment's surprise on the part of a listener, followed by a gasp, when he learned that this meant an American expense of $29. The humor of the situation and the surprise quickly brought the $29.

It is not surprising that even welfare work has to meet some criticism, but it is interesting to read of an address by a consulting engineer, Walter N. Polokov, at the annual meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, last week in New York. His subject was "Making work fascinating as the first step toward reduction of waste." He thinks there is too much stress laid upon the idea that work is without pleasure, and is to be escaped from. He said: "Instinctively feeling that at the bottom of many labor troubles the monotony of animal-like work is to be found, a large number of manufacturing concerns have adopted a policy of diverting the attention of workers from the shortcomings of working conditions to the refreshing activities of 'welfare' work. While a measure of success has been recorded in several instances, this movement is obviously directed along the wrong course. It attempts to divert the attention from work to recreation. The material effect of this attempt to administer 'spiritual cocaine' to help endure a painful operation was sometimes temporarily expedient, yet the moral effect was decidedly degrading because of the silent admission that work is a curse, that no attention should be fixed on production, that there is no interest or satisfaction to be found in industry, and that special reward and entertainment is to be looked for outside of one's vocation. Such a practice eventually ruins the spirit of industry and breeds further demoralization."

Is there not in Mr. Polokov's opinion a very true philosophy? We stress labor until we regard it as a curse, and yet many a man finds happiness in useful work, and does not sigh over his occupation. There is food for thought here for parents, teachers and ministers.

It should seem that a biography is one of the most difficult forms of literature, or that few persons are qualified to write one. It is to be expected that some biographers will err on the side of praise, and conceal the faults, but it is strange to observe that some recent biographers take delight in revealing the gravest defects and accentuating the shortcomings of even their closest friends. I have heretofore noted the distinctness with which Messrs. Howell and Paine, in writing the biography of Mark Twain, described his descent to abject atheism in his last years and his energy in destroying his wife's belief. And recently the son of Robert Louis Stevenson, Lloyd Osbourne, who owes much of his literary success to Stevenson, has written some memoirs in which he asserts Stevenson had no regard for Christianity, and no reverence for or belief in Christ. Not content with placing Stevenson in the ranks of unbelievers, he also declares him to have lived an immoral youth, and with great indifference. Certainly this does not make for the higher reputation of Stevenson, or emphasis upon his teachings or prayers. One would think personal regard, or family affection, would beget a spirit equal to that of Shem and Japheth, when they veiled their father's shame.

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

It is interesting at least, if not particularly profitable, to analyze a church collection. Here is a sample, taken from a plate collection at the late Sabbath School Michigan State Convention held at Kalamazoo. It was estimated that there were 2,500 persons present and probably 2,201 contributors, as follows: 14 one-dollar bills, 33 half-dollars, 216 quarters, 694 dimes, 644 nickels and 600 pennies. Some one suggested that there were probably 600 "poor widows" in the audience. Another quoted the text: "Alexander, the copper-smith, did me much harm." There is the suggestion that possibly some people present had been for some weeks saving their pennies for this occasion. But explanations do not explain. Facts are stubborn things.

At the recent meeting of the Synod of Michigan the matter was discussed of having at the meeting of 1922 a whole week of meetings for study, with some great Bible teacher in charge. Judging by the crowded meetings held in Immanuel Church of Detroit, by Rev. Dr. William Evans, where the English Bible is taught in a wonderful manner, and where many people find it impossible to be seated, there is a real hungering for such courses of study. We are wondering whether, supposing the necessary financial support could be secured, and we could get Dr. Evans, or some one equally qualified for leadership to take charge, ministers and elders could be induced to spend a whole week away from their homes for such instruction. There is no question that it would be a good investment of time and money. But do we generally realize that fact?

The committee appointed to prepare a platform for the "Michigan State Sunday School Association" prepared such a platform as could be easily understood by ordinary minds, and that was definite and clear as to its meaning. When it appeared in print, from the hands of the "redactor," it was so marvelously rhetorized and embellished that we had to read it over three times carefully to grasp its import, and then we only exclaimed, "Beautiful language; but what does it mean?" Probably somebody knows.

It is a startling fact, as revealed by the illuminating paper prepared by Dr. Lewis S. Brooke, for the Detroit Presbyterian Ministers' Association, that in twenty years over twenty churches have been disbanded in one Michigan Presbytery, that of Flint. He gave as the reasons that some over-zealous ministers had too generously located small churches, that some of them had been too easily abandoned; but that there was a serious and unavoidable drift from country to city.

The parlor conference held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Schlotman at Grosse Pointe on Saturday evening, Dec. 10th, in the interests of the New Era Work, was not only one of the most enjoyable social occasions ever afforded to Detroit Presbyterians, but one of the most profitable, because of the illuminating and strong addresses given by Drs. H. C. Swearingen, J. A. Marquis, W. P. Schell and W. T. Jaquess. They all spoke, also, as did Dr. W. H. Foulkes, at the very largely attended luncheon that day at noon. On the following Sabbath they all spoke, as did Mrs. Roys and Miss Dawson, at the various churches. Rev. J. R. Van Wyck, Rev. A. W. Johnstone, Rev. G. W. Simon, and other ministers from various parts of the synod were here to attend the Synodical New Era Committee, and incidentally to occupy the pulpits. How the New Era deputation can stand the strain of these daily meetings and deliver such excellent addresses is a mystery. They are certainly accomplishing a great work.

We have with us at this time, representing the Waldensian Church in Italy, Dr. Carlo Alberto Tron, who is doubly welcome here, for his own delightful personality and the great cause he represents.

The Detroit Pastors' Union, last Monday, adopted resolutions, asking the Council of the city not to license any more pool-rooms within half a mile of a high school or a quarter of a mile of a church. This only partially affects the situation, for it does not interfere with the innumerable pool-rooms already established all over the city. We are also in the midst of a campaign for more rigorous supervision of the dance houses, perhaps even a greater curse to the morals of our young people.

We are hoping to retain the valuable services of Dr. M. C. Pearson, the Executive Secretary of our Federal Council of Churches, although Brooklyn is pulling very hard to take him from us.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

Rev. Cliff Helm preached in his old home church, at Bellefonte, in Arkansas Presbytery, on a recent Sabbath. The Bellefonte Church has been served by Rev. W. T. Nicholson for more than twenty-five years. He is now giving this church one-half time service. Mr. Nicholson is serving the Capps Church one-fourth time. He received seven members into this church on a recent Sabbath. Mr. Nicholson is giving Olney a Sabbath afternoon service once each month, and the Bains Church one-fourth time service.

Rev. B. Berryhill, pastor at Berryville, for three-fourths his time, and at Batavia one-fourth time, has lost heavily at both places in members moving to other places. Mr. Berryhill is now in a meeting at Batavia.

Elder Caldwell of Benton Church writes: "Our revival meeting has closed with good results. Dr. Lewis is the best evangelist Benton has had for many years. At the meeting for children, there were 700 present and sixty professions. There were sixteen additions to our church. Our pastor, Rev. H. Heinecke, is doing fine work."

Rev. M. E. Lane, who is teaching school at Huntington, has been requested to serve the Huntington Church until a minister can be secured. Mr. Lane is a Methodist Episcopal minister.

Rev. J. W. Caldwell of Kampsville, Ill., supplied the pulpit at Greenwood on Dec. 11th.

Rev. Theron Alexander, pastor at Springdale, has lost many members during the past several months. He has received several good families into the church. He now has 120 members on the church roll. The Welch Grape Juice Co., is putting a plant at Springdale which is costing over $40,000.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Grace Church, Little Rock, has arranged to send the two children of Rev. and Mrs. Preston home to spend Christmas with their parents. The children are in school in Little Rock. This is a very kind act. Mr. Preston moved to Dumas in July and took charge of a group of churches. He came from California. Mr. Preston has not been well for several weeks.

Rev. Geo. L. Clark, pastor at Hartford, has just closed a series of revival meeting in his church. Former pastor Rev. W. P. Hail, who lives in Hartford, led in the music. Mr. Clark did all the preaching. There were three who united with the church.

Dean Crawford, of the College of the Ozarks, preached in the Presbyterian Church at Ozarks, on Dec. 11th.

The Van Buren Church, Dr. W. B. Miller, pastor, has purchased a moving picture machine and it is proving quite helpful in the services.

Rev. T. E. Spadden, pastor at Rogers, preaches for the Lowell Church, one Sabbath afternoon each month. Recently he received three families into that church.

Rev. W. D. Orr, who has charge of the Amity group of churches, received two members in the Am'ty Church, one into the Hickory Grove Church, and five into the Shady Grove Church. He is also serving Woodson one-fourth time and preaches at Redfield on Saturday night, once a month.

Rev. J. W. Wilson, whose home is near Pine Bluff, is very sick.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

Preparations have been consummated by the Committee on Religious Education for three simultaneous institutes in the third week of January: one on the north side, one on the west side, and one on the south side of the city, to be held in Buena Memorial, Central, and Crerar Memorial churches. The keynote of these institutes will be "Presbyterian Loyalty." The first period classes will be in Pageantry; Devotional Leadership; the Church in Service; Foreign Missions. The second period teaches: Story Telling; Home Missions; Bible; Sabbath-school Management. Sessions will close with addresses, in which the meaning of the Presbyterian Church in the kingdom of God will be emphasized. Dr. Robert H. Beattie is the chairman of the committee.

The communion service in the First Church, Oak Park, on Dec. 4, established a new record for interest and attendance and new members. The attendance taxed the utmost capacity of the large auditorium, and the Sabbath-school room, which adjoins the main auditorium, needed to be thrown open, and extra sittings were put in the rear of the main room. Seventy-seven new members were received. In many instances entire families came in the church together. In the evening, Dr. Roy Ewing Vale, pastor, began a series of sermons on "The Four Christmas Bells," as follows: "The Promise of Jesus' Coming;" "The Preparation for Jesus;" "The Reception of Jesus;" "The Inheritance of Jesus." On Dec. 11, at the morning service, the new assistant to Dr. Vale, Mr. Harold Francis Branch, preached his initial sermon on the theme, "Children of God."

Rev. John Rhind, who is teaching the English Bible in Lake Forest College, was received by the Chicago Presbytery at its adjourned meeting, Dec. 12, from the Presbytery of Logansport.

Mr. Harold A. Dalzell, for several years assisting Dr. Stone at the Fourth Church as secretary of the Men's Club, was licensed by the presbytery, with a view to ordination at an early date.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

Rev. R. E. Reeves has been getting some valuable members into the First Church, of Hopkinsville.

Rev. J. F. Claycomb had delightful services at Kuttawa the first Sabbath in December. At night the house was packed. Many expressions of regret were made over the fact that he was no longer to serve them.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Fredonia Church held an all-day Praise and Thanksgiving service at the home of Mrs. H. C. Rice, Sr., on November 18th, that being their regular meeting nearest Thanksgiving. Everything was in thanksgiving dress, even to the program that was artistically gotten up by the leader, Mrs. Edward Rice. Mrs. Dr. Spickard led the devotional exercises. Siam being the foreign topic, quite a number told of the work in the schools, in medical work, and in the leper asylums; also the vast need for more and better work. The story, "How a Governor found Christ," was told by Mrs. John Loyd, proving the power of the Gospel anywhere. The Home Mission topic was "The Southern Mountaineers." The interest grew as point after point in the mountains of Kentucky, Tennessee and the Carolinas was taken up and discussed, until "The Highlander of our Southland" was proven a hero instead of a bandit. "Thanksgiving Day in the Mountains" was described by Mrs. Gettys, who was for a number of years a missionary in the Kentucky mountains, and as her story was taken from experience, it made it more interesting. The morning session was then closed by repeating the 23rd Psalm, after which we were invited into the dining room, which also had on its Thanksgiving dress, and were served a most delicious lunch consisting of all the good things of the season. At 2 p. m. after a song, a responsive service, "The King's Highway," was rendered. The story, "Lindy's Chance," was told by Mrs. Reginald Rice. The program was interspersed with singing. Every one went away with Thanksgiving in his heart, thankful to the great Creator for the many blessings during the past year, and to the women for the fine program and delightful day.

Rev. E. N. Hart is now at Marion. He had excellent services at Marion the second Sabbath in December. His brother, Rev. L. B. Hart, preached at Marion Monday night, Dec. 12th. Mr. Hart will observe the Week of Prayer, inviting pastors from various churches in the presbytery to preach, each one a night.

EAST TENNESSEE NOTES.

BY REV. ROBERT I. GAMON, D.D.

Union Presbytery will be held on Jan. 3, in the Knoxville Second Church, at 10 a. m.

Rev. W. T. Bartlett concluded a series of meetings in St. Paul Church, Dec. 4. Six members were received. Rev. L. F. Smith is pastor.

The Harris Street Church, Atlanta, Ga., has an aggressive pastor in Rev. R. T. Brumbaugh. The Sabbath night service is evangelistic. There were approximately forty conversions during November. Fourteen united with the church. The New Era quota for benevolences to the amount of $600 is guaranteed. Part of it has already been sent to the central agency.

The Forest Hill Church, close to Maryville, has been sold for $1,250. The members attend the New Providence Church in Maryville, and had no further use for the building. Over $900 of the amount received was returned to the Board of Church Erection to cover a grant made when the church was erected. The balance is in the hands of the treasurer of presbytery.

Six members were received at Philadelphia on Dec. 4 by Rev. W. C. Clemens. Rev. J. C. Cline conducted meetings there during the preceding week.

Mr. P. E. Green and Miss Mae Lynn have been holding institutes in the churches of Knoxville, looking toward better organization and greater efficiency in the Sabbath schools.

The second annual Educational and Leadership Training Conference for Union Presbytery will be held Jan. 9 to 13, in the Knoxville Second Church. Mr. Frank Getty will be in charge as director. It will be well for churches to select delegates to this conference. It will hold one session daily, beginning at 6 p. m. with a supper. The registration fee is $1. The committee in charge is Rev. W. R. Dawson, D.D., Mrs. A. H. Daily and Mrs. F. L. Fisher.

Up to Nov. 1, Chattanooga Presbytery had forwarded to the central receiving agency and through the Women's Boards a total of $4,146 on the benevolent quota of $10,200. Holston Presbytery had sent in $1,546 on a quota of $6,000. Union Presbytery had sent in $5,447 on a quota of $25,000. It is not asking too much of the churches to send at once, or as soon as possible, any funds in the hands of the treasurers, as the Boards are compelled to pay interest on money borrowed to keep the missionaries supplied.

Knoxville, Tenn.

THE DISCIPLES.

The Disciple Churches at the Regional Congress in Louisville gave attention to the controversy with the United Society, which represents their benevolent and missionary activities. A strong party in the Church and a majority in the Congress, feel that this organization is centralizing and ruling the churches. As one speaker put it: "It would have us accept the society as the nominative case with which we, like the verb, must agree in person and number." Other speakers made similar statements. One said: "If present tendencies persist, some Hildebrand may, in the future, hold the reins of power and drive us to our doom. This statement will seem to some as impossible as a prophecy of the rise of the Papacy would have seemed to the apostolic church." The Christian Standard says: "The great question before the loyal brethren has been: If we withdraw our support from the United Society, where shall we put it? This Committee on Recommendations will render conscientious advice, which will enable all to see clearly where they can safely invest their money in the Christian cause."

NEW PUBLICATIONS

A Cruise To The Orient. By Rev. Andrew W. Archibald, D.D. Cloth. $3.50. With 4 Maps and 64 Illustrations. The Stratford Company, Boston.

This is an elegantly written, printed and illustrated volume, in which descriptions are given of many places visited, as Rome, Athens, Cairo, Karnak, Constantinople and Jerusalem. A vivid description is given of the dramatic ending of the world war, including the atrocities of the Huns and the sufferings inflicted upon France and Belgium. There are many fine pictures of important and interesting scenes, and the volume is one that is of interest and value throughout.

A Book of Remembrance. Writings of Rev. David Gregg, D.D. Compiled by Frank Dilnot. Cloth. $2.00. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

This is a very interesting book of comments, notes and short expressions on a vast variety of subjects, personal, literary, religious and critical, by Dr. Gregg, prominent as Brooklyn pastor and as president of the Western Theological Seminary. He was author of many books; a thinker, a scholar and a man of affairs. The volume before us is one of great interest, especially to his personal friends and to all who knew and admired him.

The New Testament To-day. By Prof. E. F. Scott. Cloth. $1.00. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This volume undertakes to show "the changed attitude toward the Scriptures" of our times. The author is a professor in Union Theological Seminary, and he has a great interest in those who are cramped and in bondage to the letter of the New Testament. He admits that the New Testament has real spiritual value, but he is very unwilling to accept it as final authority, or to accept any final authority in religion. Those who have views in accord with him will be satisfied with his book. Others will feel that he trifles with the New Testament.

The Glands Regulating Personality. By Louis Berman, M. D. Cloth, 8vo. $4.00. The Macmillan Company, New York.

There has come in recent years a new knowledge as to the real meaning of the bodily glands and of their internal secretion, in relation to the varying types of human nature, or of personality. A special exposition of the thyroid, pituitary, adrenal and other glands is presented on the pages of this volume in a way that is within the comprehension of even the ordinary reader. Such untrained readers will find great pleasure in becoming acquainted with some of these underlying facts, and will realize the importance of the mysterious glands that lie in various parts of the body, in relation to health and to the traits of personality. The author is an associate professor in biological chemistry at Columbia University, and is physician to the special health clinic at Lenox Hill Hospital. He has had special opportunities for becoming acquainted with the facts which are here presented.

Boys' Home Book of Science and Construction. By Alfred P. Morgan. Cloth. $2.50. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company, Boston.

A finer book for an ingenious and clever boy could hardly be imagined than this, and the interesting thing about it is that almost any boy becomes ingenious and clever under its influence and guidance. It shows how to make, at slight cost, a great variety of mechanical appliances that do the work that is done by costly machinery. It explains how electrical machines may be made and set to work. It instructs in the ways of science, and makes the reader familiar with many processes that have belonged to the realm of mystery heretofore, for many. It has 9 full-page illustrations and 365 smaller pictures. It furnishes much information and is so written as to be very entertaining. It gives boys something to do.

The Copper Urn. By Amy Pendrey-Boards. $1.00. Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, London. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is a story of adventure and of mystery, in which some good people have trying experiences, out of which they are rescued, in the divine providence, to their great gladness. It is a very interesting and gratifying story.

Kevin and the Cats. By K. F. Purdon. Cloth. $1.20. Society for Promoting Religious Knowledge, London. The Macmillan Company, New York.

This is one of those very delightful little books which depict life from the standpoint of the domestic animals and, so, tend to awaken feelings of sympathy with them and kindness for them. This is well written and the children and young people and old ones, too, who read it, will have a new impulse and argument for kindness to animals.

The Presbyterian Handbook for 1922 is just from the press. It is a larger, handsomer and more complete compendium of Presbyterian information than ever before, of constant value to every Presbyterian. It gives American Presbyterian facts from 1630 to 1921, lists special days in 1922, Sabbath-school lessons, golden texts, prayer meeting topics, Christian Endeavor topics and monthly concert of missions topics, as well as the topics for the Week of Prayer. Detailed information is given concerning every Presbyterian board. The statistics concerning various denominations are the most complete and accurate obtainable. The price is ten cents or $5.00 per hundred.

Crannell's Pocket Lessons for 1922. 40 cents. The Judson Press, Philadelphia. By Dr. P. W. Crannell, of the Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary.

MISSION WORK

MOHAMMEDAN UNIVERSITY AT CAIRO, EGYPT.

A letter has just come from Rev. and Mrs. Merrel Marker who, on their way to Teheoran, Persia, as newly outgoing missionaries, visited Cairo.

"Of all the interesting sights in Cairo, the magnificent mosques, the native bazar with its quaint shops, the lofty pyramids, the mysterious Sphinx, the most interesting of them was the great Mohammedan University.

"This university is one large building with its court and many alcoves and runic opening into it. Here, the guide said, are 15,000 students enrolled. As the tourists approached they had to put on leather shoes over their own so as not to pollute the holy ground of the institution.

"Entering the court a strange sight greeted the travelers. There were small groups of students in all sorts of conditions and occupations. Some were asleep, some were eating, others studying aloud, repeating parts of the one text book, the Koran, to one another. I could not tell when the lesson began or when it was finished. Students were everywhere. Some were old men, some little children. The collegiate course takes seventeen years. But some stay as long as forty years before being able to pass their examinations on the Koran.

"My future meals in Cairo were almost spoiled by what I saw here. The students lounged everywhere in the court and the one room where class work was done. Even the teachers were lying around. Flies were everywhere. Some children were eating bread while a multitude of flies scrapped for a place on the meal or on the lips and faces of the hungry child. I saw children with eyes and lips and hands literally covered with these pests as the helpless little tots lay asleep. It was awful. "On the sides of the court the foreign students have rooms or booths. Here are the Persian students, here those from other Mohammedan countries. Practically every country is represented. The wealthy students have a room to themselves which is furnished with rugs and marble and beautiful decorations. These pupils, like the rest, study and recite in groups of from three to nine or ten, as they sit on the mats on the floor. They eat, study sleep and recite on the same spot day after day. Such a university is unworthy of the name."

CINCINNATI PRESBYTERIAL.

The monthly executive meeting was held Dec. 13, Mrs. J. Shané Nicholls presiding. Mrs. W. W. White reported that eight boxes had been sent to the Freedmen since Sept. 1. Mrs. H. A. Wilson, Christian Social Service Secretary, asked that we pray every day for the colored work in our own city, as it afforded a wonderful opportunity for service. A much-needed kindergarten, being planned, will soon be realized. The Italian Church, aided by other organizations, had served a free Thanksgiving dinner to eighty. Three hundred and thirty-five dollars was placed to the credit of the Building Fund as the result of the bazaar given Dec. 2, besides many more persons are interested in the work. Mrs. A. M. Worcester, Box Work Secretary, reported that two boxes had been sent for overseas hospital work, valued at $398, and to the Tucson Training School another, valued at $476. Mrs. Martin, Treasurer, reported that at the close of the third quarter $13,668 had been sent to the New York Home and Foreign Boards, leaving over half of our apportionment to be met by March 10. Mrs. Nicholls announced that $1,000 had been sent in legacies to each of the New York Boards. Mrs. E. E. Lester, Synodical President, recently returned from a meeting of the financial committee, reported that Ohio's apportionment for the coming year would be the same as last year. We have doubled our amount in the last few years. Dr. C. D. Wilson, of Glendale, gave a comprehensive review of the first chapter of the new International Study Book, subject Japan, tracing the growth of Christianity from the beginning to the present time. Miss Marie Crouse, who is doing work among the Chinese and Japanese of our own city, made an appeal for these students to be invited into our homes.

E. K. Dickson.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Church Union negotiations in South Africa have failed. The Assembly of the Congregational Union decided in sorrow and without discussion to discontinue all negotiations with the Presbyterian Church for the proposed union of the two bodies."

It expresses its regret that the Presbyterian Assembly had withdrawn from the negotiations and that it did so because of the revival of charges by certain members of the Congregational Union against the Presbyterian Church, which had been carefully considered and decisively refuted on former occasions.

FRENCH PROTESTANTISM.

Very encouraging statistics of the Protestant Churches in France have appeared in the press. Outside Alsace-Lorraine there are 776 congregations. In Alsace-Lorraine there are 265, of which 169 are Lutheran. Most of these congregations in France belong to the Huguenots, and two-thirds are in the evangelical group.

BIBLE CONFERENCE IN IOWA.

The Eighth Annual Bible Conference in the First Church, Waterloo, will be Jan. 8 to 13, Rev. J. R. McCartney, D.D., pastor. Dr. James M. Gray of the Moody Bible Institute will have charge. The afternoon sessions will take up the book of Hebrews. The evening services will be as follows: "When Christ Made Himself Equal with God"; "Salvation from Start to Finish"; "Two Natures in the Believer"; "Service and Reward"; "What is meant by the Second Coming of Christ."

The Sixteenth Quadrennial Convention of the International Sunday-school Association is to be held in Kansas City, Mo., June 21-27, 1922, Dr. W. O. Thompson, of Ohio State University, is president.

RELIGIOUS NEWS

CHANGES OF ADDRESS.

Rev. K. J. Foreman, from Chesapeake City, Md., to Princeton, N. J., 95 Mercer Street.

Rev. B. F. Lawrence, from Arapahoe, Colo., to Troy, Ill.

Rev. A. M. Reynolds, from St. Joseph, Mo., to Fort Myers, Fla.

Rev. R. M. Wimmell, from Bowling Green to Lutesville, Mo.

DEATHS IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. Robert G. Hutchins, D.D., died at Berea, Ky., at the home of his son, Rev. W. J. Hutchins, D.D., President of Berea College. He was born at Killingly, Mass., graduated at Williams College and Andover Seminary, and was ordained in 1865 as a Congregational minister, nearly all his life serving prominent churches of that denomination, but was pastor of Woodland Avenue Presbyterian Church of Cleveland for a period. He was a useful and earnest minister.

Rev. Abram W. Long, of Upper Darby, Pa., a member of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, North, died on Dec. 3d, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. He was born at Tinicum, Pa., Sept. 27, 1845, graduated at Lafayette College and Princeton Seminary, and was ordained by Philadelphia North Presbytery in 1877. For nine years he was pastor at Merion Square, Pa., and at Springfield Church, Flourtown, Pa., from 1886 until about a year ago. His wife survives him.

Rev. Walter W. Hicks, of Peking, China, missionary of the Foreign Board since 1902, died at Rochester, Minn., Dec. 15, following an operation. He was in the forty-ninth year of his age. A faithful preacher of the Word that he loved, he made his life count for the furtherance of the Gospel. His wife survives him. He was born in Wamego, Kan., graduated at Emporia College and McCormick Seminary, and was ordained in 1902 by the Presbytery of Topeka. His death is a great loss.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

Rev. E. M. Martin was installed as pastor in Westminster Church, Price Hill, last Sabbath afternoon, Rev. Jesse Herrmann, Ph.D., Rev. Jesse Halsey, Rev. C. A. Austin, Rev. M. W. Brown, Rev. J. V. Stephens, D.D., and Rev. W. D. Malcolm, D.D., participating.

The choir of the Hartwell Church, Dr. C. E. Walker, pastor, rendered the Christmas cantata "The Coming of the Anointed" last Sabbath afternoon very effectively, a very large congregation being present.

Clifford Church, Rev. J. V. Stephens, Jr., pastor, had the Christmas cantata "Christmas" last Sabbath evening, delightfully rendered by a large choir.

A missionary meeting in Norwood Church, Rev. W. T. Paterson, pastor, last Sabbath afternoon, was addressed by Miss Alice Nickels, on "Christmas in Syria," illustrated by costumes and many curios.

The Presbytery of Cincinnati, on Monday, received Dr. Frank Granstaff from the Presbytery of Dayton, and dismissed Rev. R. M. Fox to Dayton Presbytery, after dissolving his pastoral relation to the Madeira Church. It also appointed as moderator of sessions: Cleves, Dr. A. G. Yount; Westwood, Dr. Frank Granstaff; Elberon, Dr. McMillin.

Norwood Church, Rev. W. T. Paterson, pastor, had 11 o'clock prayer meeting on Dec. 7th, the Sunshine class coming in a body to celebrate the birthday of the teacher, Mr. Ren Mulford, Jr. The church received five at the communion on the 11th.

The Men's Class of the Harrison Church, Rev. George H. Mitchell, pastor, entertained the Beecher Club of the church of Lawrenceburg, Ind., Rev. Forest C. Taylor, pastor, Thursday, Dec. 15th. The clubs were given an illustrated address on a trip down the Albany River in the Hudson Bay country, by Mr. Thomas Green, president of the Matthew Addy Company, of Cincinnati.

The "Back to the Bible" Bureau of Cincinnati furnishes selected texts from the Bible to over 400 papers, all over the United States, without charge, so that millions of these texts are printed every week, papers carrying them in prominent places, many of them on the editorial page. We hope the time is near at hand when every paper will print, every day, in every copy, a text from the Bible. All papers are offered this service. Mr. A. Y. Reid, 222 W. Fourth Street, Cincinnati, is secretary.

Cincinnati Presbytery met in the Walnut Hills First Church last Monday morning, and enjoyed a luncheon served by the ladies at 35 cents a plate.

The Fenton Company will call for any clothing or shoes that the public wish to give to the poor of our city, before Christmas. All such articles will be turned over to the Council of Social Agencies, and the Mayor's Unemployment Committee. The need is very great. Call any Fenton store.

The Flying Squadron, a group of speakers engaged in a nation-wide campaign, under the auspices of the Flying Squadron Foundation, Indianapolis, Ind., will be in the city for a series of six meetings, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 13, 14 and 15. The meetings will be held in the First Presbyterian Church on Friday at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m., in the Ninth Street Baptist Church on Saturday at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m., and in the First Presbyterian Church on Sunday at 3:00 and 7:30 p. m. The topics to be discussed are Law Enforcement, Civic Righteousness and Social and Industrial Justice. The fundamental cause of high taxes will also be considered. Everybody invited.

The Third Church, Rev. William Gross, pastor, has its own printing office, in which the printing for the church is done, in the way of its church paper and bulletins and local notices. We have just received from them a beautifully printed calendar for the year. This spirit of enterprise runs all through the church and its work.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

"Presbyterian Field Day" met with a good response from churches of the city and surrounding country. The program, with Dr. Swearingen, Dr. Hill, Dr. McAfee, and Dr. Foulkes as speakers, was carried out as expected, with morning, afternoon and evening sessions at the Second Church, and a well-attended luncheon at Hotel Statler. There were women's conferences also, with Mrs. C. G. Roys and Miss Lucy Dawson as speakers. Facts essential to progress were touched upon, such as the church's budget of $14,500,000 for missions and benevolences, the need of a building campaign at home and abroad, and the encouraging spiritual condition of the Church. Dr. Swearingen asserted that not in fifty years has the outlook of the Presbyterian Church been more encouraging. Part of Dr. Swearingen's program was an address in the early morning, at the Xenia United Presbyterian Theological Seminary. A meeting of the New Era chairmen for ten presbyteries was held in the afternoon.

"Echoes" from the recent young people's institute at the West Church was the subject of the evening service at Cote Brillante Church, on Sabbath, Dec. 11th.

Large congregations filled the Webster Groves Church every night last week, to hear Gypsy Pat Smith, who closed his meetings on last Sabbath evening. He spoke in the local theater on Sabbath evening, and last Sabbath afternoon conducted a meeting for men only. Friday evening his topic was, "Is There a Hell?" In his lecture, "Three Years in the Firing Line," which he gave to an immense audience, he told with thrilling effect the wonderful experience of a Christian man facing death in the fiercest battle of the war.

The Presbyterian Orphanage at Farmington, Mo., is receiving special attention from several classes in different Sabbath schools here. Among these is a class of fifty young women at the First Church, taught by Mrs. William R. King, wife of Dr. King, of the Home Mission Board.

A number of our churches here are interesting themselves through the women, in the financial campaign for $1,500,000 for union Christian colleges for women in the Orient. A speaker from China, Miss Katherine Crane, and one from Chicago, Miss Ida A. Green, addressed an interdenominational luncheon for women, at the American Annex, Monday of last week. The sum of $25,000 for a building at one of the seven institutions, is asked of St. Louis. Kansas City has promised to attempt the same amount, naming its building the Kansas City Peace Building. "The Missouri Centennial" has been suggested as the name for St. Louis' building.

The West Church has agreed to raise $1,000, and announcement was made that Second Church expects to do as much, or more. Episcopalians, as well as the other various Protestant denominations, are represented in the movement.

Rev. N. J. Moring, of the Presbytery of Ewing, was received into the St. Louis Presbytery, Dec. 12th, as prospective pastor of the Northminster Church, and the date of his installation was set for Jan. 12th. Rev. W. A. Clemmer will preach; Rev. R. Calvin Dobson, D.D., will give the charge to the pastor, and Rev. F. C. Reiner, the charge to the people.

A call was voted unanimously, Wednesday evening, by the Washington and Compton Avenue Church, to Rev. Frank W. Sneed, D. D., asking him to return as pastor to the church where he served nineteen years ago. In the interval, until a year ago, Dr. Sneed has been pastor of East Liberty Church in Pittsburgh. He has recently preached here and it is believed that he will accept. He is now at Atlantic City. Dr. Gauss moderated the meeting.

OHIO.

The church of Rushsylvania will be vacant Jan. 1st. Rev. G. A. Schartz having accepted a call to Erie, Pa., J. C. Blinn, M.D., is clerk of the session.

The Dillonvale Church, Rev. J. F. Wilson, pastor, received two members on Dec. 11. The church recently installed and paid for a new furnace at a cost of $250. The outlook is bright for the Church.

As a result of Union evangelistic meetings in McComb, Ohio, conducted for three weeks by local pastors with Rev. Arthur Lynn, of Dayton, as evangelistic singer and chorus leader, sixteen members have been received at the First Presbyterian Church, and the church greatly revived. Rev. L. F. Cooper is pastor.

On Sabbath, Dec. 11, at Cadiz, Rev. R. P. Lippincott preached his tenth anniversary sermon. During the ten years more than four hundred members have been received. The membership is now six hundred and nineteen. The benevolences have grown from $1,773 to $8,437. Every department is in a flourishing condition, and three weeks' evangelistic meetings are planned, to begin Jan. 24. The relation of the pastor and people is most cordial, and all are looking forward to still better things.

The Presbytery of Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 12, received from the Presbyteries of Philadelphia (R. P.), and Peoria, Rev. James L. Chestnut and Rev. J. Rodger Sillars, respectively, and arranged for their installation at Covington and Springfield-Oakland, respectively; promised assistance to the Western College in connection with its endowment; dismissed Rev. Frank Granstaff, D.D., to the Presbytery of Cincinnati; and adjourned to meet in the Y. M. C. A. Dayton Jan. 10th, at 6 p. m.—J. King Gibson, S. C.

Lima Presbytery met in the Market Street Church of Lima Dec. 12. Dr. Clarence G. Miller, of Wooster, addressed the presbytery in the interests of Wooster College. A call from Celina for Rev. R. H. Waltz was presented, and held until Mr. Waltz becomes a member of this presbytery. The overturn of Crawfordsville Presbytery on legalizing the installing of ministers as "Pastors Abroad" in the churches which support them as missionaries was concurred in. Lime Olivet was chosen as the place of the spring meeting. Rev. Morley S. Pettit was elected moderator to take office in the spring.—Ralph W. Kohr, S. C.

Dr. E. L. House is conducting union services in Zanesville, giving lectures twice each day, intensely evangelical, Biblical and valuable, in advancing the cause of true religion and strengthening all Christian believers.

ILLINOIS.

The Greenville Church, Rev. J. G. Reynolds, pastor, a meeting of the State Student Volunteer Union brought many delegates, the Presbyterians among them holding conferences with Rev. W. M. Cleveland, D.D., Dr. L. M. Hemburger, of China, and Sabbath-school Field Worker Rev. W. D. Vater. Worship is largely attended in Greenville, and over half the population is often seen in the Sabbath schools. Dr. Reynolds is an experienced Sabbath-school man, and his work is thoroughly organized and well supported. Messages from the mission fields were brought by the visitors, who occupied his pulpit Dec. 11th, and by John Elder, under appointment to Persia. Mr. Elder was in charge of the heroic Armenian relief party that carried food to the starving during the war.

INDIANA.

In going to the pastorate at Attica, Rev. B. H. Rankin of Aurora leaves a warmly appreciative people at Aurora, who have learned to love him and "his exceptional family" during their five years life and work in the church. The church passed hearty resolutions of affections and honor, saying that the church has never been in better condition than it is today as a result of this work.

NEW JERSEY.

The First Church of Orange, Rev. Dr. H. H. McQuilkin, pastor, received twenty-four members on Dec. 4, of whom fifteen were by confession, and four infants were baptized.

NEW YORK.

The Presbyterian Educational Exhibit in Classon Avenue Church, Brooklyn, was conducted for about a week with much that was interesting and valuable. Motion picture were shown describing the work of the Presbyterian Church in many lands; many booths were operated, missionaries described their work, and many interesting articles from mission lands were shown. A striking pageant was presented.

Grace Church, Brooklyn, has burned its mortgage. Six years ago the church was carrying a mortgage of $47,000. Rev. Robert H. Carson, led his people in a determined effort to wipe out the debt. The consummation was marked by a service of thanksgiving and rejoicing, Dec. 6.

The people of Flatbush Church have visions of a new church edifice. One year ago they made subscriptions amounting to $21,000, most of which has now been paid. On Dec. 11, they made pledges for another $21,000, thus giving them a building fund of $42,000. Building operations will begin in the spring. The new building will have a seating capacity of 600. The plans include the remodeling of the present structure for the purposes of religious education. Rev. H. H. Field is the pastor.

Dr. John F. Carson, pastor of Central Church, Brooklyn, and president of the Stony Brook School for Boys, Long Island, announced that Prof. Frank E. Gaebelein had been appointed principal of the school, which is designed to give a Christian education to American youth. Stony Brook Assembly is a Presbyterian institution.

PENNSYLVANIA.

At a meeting of the Presbytery of Erie in Park Church, Erie, the recently organized Immanuel Church of Erie was enrolled. Rev. Paul G. Miller was received from the Presbytery of Pittsburgh; Rev. Joseph Lindsay from New Albany; Rev. Thomas Lambert from the Baptist Church; and Rev. George Applegate from Cleveland. Mr. Miller is pastor-elect of the Bradford East End Church. Arrangements were made for the installation of Mr. Lindsay at Edinboro on Dec. 17th; Mr. Applegate at Waterloo, on Jan. 3rd; and Mr. Lambert at Tidioute, on Jan. 5th. —Joseph M. Ross, S. C.

The Presbytery of Shenango, at New Castle, Dec. 13th, was favored with two strong addresses; Rev. Dr. Charles Scanlon speaking of our Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare, and Mrs. Frances J. Diefenderfer showing the insidious perils of Mormonism. The overture on women was affirmed; that on commissioners was negated action. The Crawfordsville overture for the installation of "Pastors Abroad" was concurred in. The installation of Rev. Francis E. Reese at the Central Church of New Castle, was reported, with the added fact of a fund of more than $3,000 raised for renewing the pipe organ. Rev. A. B. Elliott of Portersville, Pa., has received calls from Princeton and Hermon. The budget for 1922-23 was received as a goal. A spiritual conference to be held Jan. 23rd at New Castle, was proposed. The ejection of Rev. S. A. Kirkbride, D.D., who for more than twenty years has held the pastorate of the Neshannock Church of New Wilmington, as pastor-at-large for the Presbyteries of Beaver and Shenango, was ratified. He expects to begin the new work Feb. 1st. Presbytery will meet at the Central Church of New Castle on Jan. 23rd at 10:30 a. m.—Sherman A. Kirkbride, S. C.

The Presbytery of Blairsville met in Ligonier, Dec. 13. Presbytery was addressed by Rev. G. G. Mahy, D.D., and Rev. Wm. F. Klein, D.D. An evangelistic campaign is under consideration. Presbytery adopted resolutions on the death of Rev. F. H. Dickinson, D.D. Rev. J. P. McDonald was released from Fairfield. Fairfield is now to be grouped with the Pleasant Grove Church, left vacant by the death of Dr. Dickinson.—J. C. McCracken, S. C.

MISSOURI.

The Park-Westminster College Campaign in Missouri has taken on the University Presbyterian Student Pastor work for $35,000, making a total campaign of $1,035,000. About one half of this amount is now subscribed. The joining of these campaigns is meeting with hearty approval. Headquarters have been opened in St. Louis and Kansas City, and the campaign is being carried on in these two cities first. Later it will be carried over the state.

St. Joseph's Presbytery met in St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 13th. Rev. William White was dismissed to the Presbytery of Neosho. Rev. Kenneth R. Anderson was received from the Presbytery of Monmouth of the U. P. Church. Arrangements were made for his installation at Oregon, Mo., and for the installation of Rev. Victor K. Aubrey at the Third Street Church of St. Joseph. Rev. R. R. Murphy has been called to Hope Church, St. Joseph, and will begin his work there in anuary.—E. E. Stringfield, S. C.

OKLAHOMA.

Rev. William A. Rolle, pastor of Poteau, and chairman of the Presbyterial Committee on evangelism, with the help and co-operation of the Presbyterial School Missionary, Rev. Geo. B. Spangler, recently held good meetings at Bokoshe and Stigler. These two towns are twenty-six miles apart on the same railroads. The two churches are vacant and need a good minister. At Bokoshe every part of the town was touched by the meeting, and the Church is greatly revived and in a position for a pastor for half-time. Mr. Rolle received one member, ordained and installed two new elders, and will give the church one or two week nights each month until a pastor is secured. At Stigler the church was greatly revived and strengthened and is now anxious for a pastor. One new elder was ordained and installed. Sixteen united with the church on profession and two by letter. Stigler is a good town of 2,500, and the county seat of Haskell County. Any active minister desiring a change by spring can get information about the Stigler-Bokoshe field by writing to Rev. William A. Rolle, Poteau, Okla.

Helpful Home Mission Group Institutes were held Nov. 28th at McAlester, and Nov. 29th at Poteau. Dr. W. R. King and Dr. Geo. H. Mack were the principal speakers.

The McAlester Church, Rev. H. C. Shiffler, pastor, is expecting to begin in the near future the building of the fine new church toward which they have been looking for some years.

At the First Church of McAlester on the evening of Dec. 8th, a good-fellowship supper was enjoyed by about 150 men. Rev. Harry C. Shiffler is pastor and Rev. Geo. W. Barr made the address of the evening. A committee was appointed to act in conjunction with Mr. Barr, who is Presbyterial chairman of Men's Work, looking to some form of organization among the laymen of the Presbytery of McAlester.

KANSAS.

At the union meeting conducted by Rev. Carl E. Kricher and party at Sylvan Grove, where Rev. H. C. McMican is pastor, there were scores of reclamations and conversions. It was a great meeting. Some of the most prominent people of the community were received into the churches at the close of the meeting among many others.

The Bala Church, Rev. J. C. Morgan, pastor, welcomed fifteen new members on Dec. 4th. The pastor was assisted in evangelistic services during October by Dr. Graham, the presbyterial evangelist.

College Hill Church, Hope, Kan., spent two weeks in special services recently. Rev. Russell Jones, the pastor, conducted these meetings and received fourteen members, all on profession of faith except one, and baptized ten adults.

Rev. Jay Carroll Everett, D.D., of Topeka, Stated Clerk of the Synod of Kansas, has accepted a call to the First Church of Larned, Kansas.

NEBRASKA.

Dr. B. M. Long, of Lincoln, closed a two-weeks' meeting Dec. 2d, with the Clontibret Church at Primrose, where Rev. J. M. Norris is pastor. The church received twenty-seven members, making forty-five since Oct. 2d. This was one of the best meetings held here for years.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of Rev. Julius F. Schwarz, D.D., and Mrs. Schwarz, of Hickman, was fittingly observed by the people of the church on the evening of Thanksgiving Day, after the service and sermon by the pastor, in an appreciative address by one of the elders and the presentation of 126 silver dollars and other silver presents. A social hour, with refreshments, followed.

IOWA.

At the November communion at Lawton, Iowa, six members were received and one infant was baptized. The work is left harmonious and in fine shape, as Rev. C. W. Turner goes from here to accept a call to the First Church of Lyndon, Kansas.

COLORADO.

Three calls have recently been made by three of Denver Presbytery Churches; one to Rev. D. D. Mitchell, a second to Rev. Louis J. Albert, the third to Rev. R. C. Black. The Victor Church calls Mr. Black, the Mesa Church calls Mr. Albert, and Park Avenue Church calls Rev. D. D. Mitchell. Arrangements for the installation of each of these were made at a meeting of Presbytery, Dec. 14.

Rev. D. G. MacLennan, who has just removed to Hutchinson, Kansas, served the Lamar Church over three years. Unusual progress was made along all lines. One hundred and thirteen new members were added on confession and ninety-four by letter. The local budget was increased two hundred per cent, and the benevolence budget three hundred per cent. A School of Missions was held the last three years with one-third of the membership enrolled. A Daily Vacation Bible School has been held for two years, with an enrollment, this year, of two hundred and fifty. Mr. MacLennan began his work at Lamar with one hundred and fifty members and last spring three hundred and two members were reported to the General Assembly, the membership being more than doubled. The young people of the church during that time were represented at Presbyterian Young People's Conferences by the largest delegations from any church in the state. The Woman's Society has reached the standard of excellence each year and has increased its gifts fourfold.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Just at the turn of the midnight,
When the children are fast asleep,
The tired Old Year slips out by himself,
Glad of a chance to be laid on the shelf,
And the New Year takes a peep

At the beautiful world that is waiting
For the hours that he will bring;
For the wonderful things in his peddler's pack
Weather, all sorts, there will be no lack,
And many a marvelous thing.

When the children wake in the morning,
Shouting their "Happy New Year,"
The year will be started well on his way,
Swinging along through his first white
day,
With the path before him clear.

Twelve long months for his journey;
Fifty-two weeks of a spell;
At the end of it all he'll slip out by himself,
Glad of a chance to be laid on the shelf,
At the stroke of the midnight bell.

"Miss November" And the Pink Silk Dress

By MARY McCRAE CULTER

(Copyright, 1921, by Monfort & Co.)

CHAPTER VI.

Ever since the previous Christmas when Mammy Lou had been the recipient of several presents whose gorgeousness had been the delight of her heart, she had been racking her brains and studying show windows to determine upon something good enough to bestow upon her beloved "Honey Child" at the next season of Christmas giving. She had listened to catch any expression of desire or need on the part of her mistress, and as the holiday season drew near had frantically thrown out perfectly evident hints which had amused Miss Nancy and had given that young lady a chance to save herself from having to accept barbaric strings of beads or impossible jewelry, and at the same time to discover what was dearest to Mammy Lou's heart and to make mental note of the same.

The advent of the trunk with its fascinating array of dainty and fashionable clothes had turned the thoughts of the old negress in a different direction for the time being, and had also given her some new ideas as to what was most fitting and becoming to her mistress. The delicate pink silk dress suddenly became the yardstick by which all other articles and qualities were to be measured, and replaced her former standards of taste, so far as Miss Nancy was concerned.

Therefore, it was a much puzzled Mammy Lou who wandered through the department stores that week before Christmas, and the longer she wandered the more puzzled she became. Windows and counters and shelves were crowded with all sorts of potential gifts, none of which seemed to meet the requirements of the case, for that rose-colored silk dress must not be disgraced by cheap jewelry or cotton laces: so what was a poor ignorant negro woman to do?

She chanced to drift up to the window of a store one day, where several college girls were exclaiming over a display of the latest ideas in sweaters—garments dear to the heart of every girl.

"Isn't that peacock-blue one perfectly gorgeous?" one girl cried rapturously. "I'd buy that one in a minute if I had not already spent every dollar of my allowance for Christmas presents. What do you say, Aileen? Isn't that prettier than Bessie's 'golden sunshine' one?"

"Well," answered Aileen deliberately, "they are both pretty, and each one of you has chosen the one which is best suited to your style of beauty. For myself, I prefer that dainty pink one with the soft grey revers and pockets and sash."

So they talked, while Mammy Lou watched and listened. She studied the girl whom her companions called Aileen and noted that her eyes and hair were very much like those of Miss Nancy Varden. She looked at the pink of the dainty sweater and compared it with the color of the pink silk gown, while the soft grey angora reminded her of Miss Varden's regulation office costume.

"Dar's jes' what I wants foh mah Honey Chile," she told herself as the gay college trio moved away. "Ef she jes' rumple up sweatah on she'd look sho' nuff lak one of dose college gals. Dar now, Mammy Lou. sweatah on she'd look so' nuff one of dose college gals. Dar now, Mammy Lou. You know what you done gwine to buy. Go right in an' git it, 'fore any more of dem college ladies comes along heah. Fifteen dollahs' ain' much to gib to youah Honey Chile."

And so Mammy Lou's important purchase was made, with only two days to spare, after a whole year's search. She could hardly wait until Christmas morning to present her important purchase, and when she did give it, she was much disturbed by Miss Nancy's involuntary breath of dismay at sight of it.

"Why, Mammy Lou! Pink sweaters are only for gay young college girls—not for old maids like myself. It is pretty—it is very pretty—and soft and fine and warm; but—how would I look in it?"

"You'd look young 'nuff, an' sweet 'nuff to mek dat ole puhfessah look lak Noah's gran'fathah," rejoined Mammy Lou emphatically. "Jes' put it on an' rumple up yo' haiah a li'l, an' see ef dat ain' so."

Just to please the old woman, Nancy complied, loosening her hair so that it fluffed over her shapely head; then, at Mammy Lou's cry of pleasure, she turned to the mirror and was fairly startled by the change in her appearance. Truly, she did look like a typical college girl. How shocked the professor would be if he could see her in such gay clothing. She laughed aloud at the thought, and a daring wish to try the effect upon him caused her to say:

"I believe you are right, Mammy Lou. These lovely grey revers exactly match my dress and they tone down the brightness of the rest of the sweater until it is not so gorgeous after all. It is just what I really need to wear in that draughty office. Yes, after all, now that I take a good look at it I like it very much and will be glad to wear it for your sake. Thank you, very very much. I shall just keep it on to celebrate Christmas," she ended, much to the old woman's delight.

The sweater was worn every day during the holidays, at first to please Mammy Lou, then because it was so very comfortable and cheery looking. Life could not appear so grey when the pink sweater was there to remind her that there was brightness if she would but look for it. Also, to please Mammy Lou, she experimented with ways of arranging her hair until she found one which was not only becoming but also stole ten years from her apparent age and put her where dear Cousin Bettie would have seemed to be a sister if she had been beside her.

The first morning after vacation, when she stepped into the Dean's office that gentleman exclaimed:

"Why—Miss Nancy! is this really you? I almost need an introduction. You must have had a joyous Christmas for you look ten years younger. What have you been doing to yourself?"

Nancy laughed as she could not possibly have done a month previous.

"Just been frivolous," she said, "and— and have learned to look more on the bright side of life."

"Which we would all be better for doing," replied the Dean. "Keep it up, young lady. It is becoming."

Nancy turned to her desk with glowing eyes and smiling lips, a faint pink tinging her cheek because of this first bit of compliment that had come her way for years. She wondered whether the Dean had noticed the pink sweater and the fluffy hair and had given them due credit for her changed appearance.

Then Professor Darker came in. Christmas holidays had been a decided bore to him, for they meant nothing except enforced days of idleness in his dreary boarding-house, so that he was glad to return to work once more.

He had told himself during those dreary days that Miss Varden would be feeling a like depression and that perhaps she would be glad to have a renewal of his companionship: so at the first opportunity he sought her presence. Her back was toward the door when he entered the office, so that he glimpsed only a girl in a jaunty pink sweater, her head crowned with a fluffy wealth of golden-brown hair, evidently "one of those silly college girls." Then she turned, and at sight of his amazement she laughed aloud.

"Happy New Year, Professor," she said. "Did you have a Merry Christmas?"

For a moment the professor was too astounded and dismayed to answer. "The unbridgable chasm" of which Nancy had spoken suddenly yawned between his white-haired age and this smiling, jauntily-dressed young girl.

"I—ah—yes, Miss Varden, it is a very pleasant New Year. I wish you the same. I—ah—I was looking for Dean Burton." he ended lamely, looking around the office.

"He stepped into the manager's office a moment ago. You will find him there." Nancy said as she placed a sheet of paper in her typewriter and turned back to her work.

The defeated professor went slowly away, closing the door behind him. As soon as she was sure she was alone, Nancy sprang nimbly to her feet and hastened to take a peep at her transformed self in the little mirror that hung in a corner across the room.

She laughed aloud as she remembered the professor's disconcerted face and his very evident disapproval of her appearance.

"My very dress evidences my age," she quoted merrily, and ran her fingers through her hair to add to its fluffiness.

Truly, the combined effect of the professor's words and a pink silk dress had made an entirely different person out of "Miss November." She realized it and exulted in it.

She had barely returned to her desk when the door from the corridor opened and a couple of stranger entered the room. The first was a girl, pretty, bright-eyed, alert, stylish from the tassel on her jaunty Tam to the French heels on her high shoes. Her companion was a gentleman considerably older than herself, evidently a business man, and some where near the age of forty. Nancy went forward to meet them, the smile still lingering on her lips and the unwonted color in her cheeks.

"You wish to see Dean Burton?" she inquired.

"Yes," answered the gentleman.

"He just stepped into the manager's office a few minutes ago. Will you have seats, while I tell him that you are here?"

The two strangers looked after Miss Varden as, leaving them comfortably seater, she disappeared.

"My first college acquaintance!" sighed the girl rapturously. I like her. Don't you' Uncle Ned? She has such a sweet smile."

The other college girls, treading the long corridors of the various college buildings, would have been perfectly amazed if they had heard such things said about their "dreary Miss November"; but then, you see, they were quite excusable, for they had not yet glimpsed the pink sweater and the transformed face above it.

CHRISTMAS—LOVE.

BY KATE C. GRINSTEAD.

Christmas doesn't mean just giving,
Any more than life is just living.
Christmas-time is loving-time,
And loving-time is all the time
So, if my Christmas wish comes true,
Streams of love will flow to you,
And never stop the whole year through!
'Cause Christmas-love doesn't last one
day,
Christmas-love has come to stay
With you!

A QUEER LITTLE SANTA CLAUS.

BY ALICE E. ALLEN.

"I'm going to have some Christmas if I have to make it myself, mother," cried Nannie.

Nannie had lived ten years and in each year there had been a Christmas tree or stockings in it. It wasn't any use telling her you could get through a year with no Christmas whatever. She knew you couldn't.

Mother smiled at her.

"All right, dear," she said. "But you'll have to make it out of nothing. I haven't any money."

"Guess I can have a Christmas without any old money," cried Nannie. "When there's popcorn to begin on."

But that very night when Nannie went to the attic to get the popcorn, there were only three ears left. It had all been used for Ben's party Halloween. They had called it a popcorn party, because there wasn't much else, and they'd had the best time, doing all sorts of things with it.

Now there wasn't even popcorn. Ben had been sick. Then Nannie had been sick. Now mother was sick. And there were doctor's bills and you have to eat and keep warm and have some clothes

"I've got three ears," cried Nannie. Ben came in just then, and wanted to know where she got the extra ear. And by the time Nannie had explained that she meant popcorn ears—not ears to hear with—everyone was laughing.

And did you ever notice how much better things seem when you begin laughing about them. If not, just try it and see.

"We're going to have some Christmas," Nannie told Ben later, "even if it's only the leastest bit."

"Wish I could write that story," said Ben gloomily. "I'd get five dollars, maybe."

"I wish you could," said Nannie. Old Mrs. Thorn had offered a prize of five dollars for the best story written in Ben's grade at school. But it must be about an animal, and it must be a Christmas story, and it must be true, and it wasn't any easy thing to do.

Next morning, Nannie began her Christmasing. She went alone into the woods and cut down a small tree. It was very small. But she fastened it up securely on a little stand in the parlor. Then she hunted up some scraps of bright paper, and made pretty things to hang on it—silver stars and golden bells and red and blue and green balls. And she found the odds and ends of candles left from last year's tree and cut them all the same length and put them on the little branches. And then she shelled the corn and popped it carefully and strung it and draped it prettily on the green boughs.

"Who said I couldn't have some Christmas?" she said.

The tree stood all alone in the little parlor. Next morning, when Nannie peeped in at it, there it was all glistening and green and fragrant in the morning sunlight. But one end of popcorn was trailing down from a branch of and there were bits of corn on the floor near by.

"I must have caught it on something," thought Nanny, as she fastened the trailing end back in place. "I must be careful—popcorn's precious this year."

Nannie couldn't go to school while mother was sick. That noon one of the girls sent her some pretty candy hearts. Ben bored little holes in them and Nannie strung them on red ribbons and hung them on the tree.

The next morning, she peeped in at the tree again. This time a long end of popcorn lay across the stand, reaching almost to the floor. And tiny kernels were scattered all the way to the door leading into the hall. While Nannie was wondering about it, she found marks of tiny teeth in one of the candy-hearts.

"It must be a mouse," said mother when Nannie told her.

That night was Christmas Eve. About twelve o'clock, just as they had done once years before, looking for Santa Claus, Ben and Nannie stole down stairs. Outside the parlor door they paused to listen. At first all was still. Then all at once they heard a soft little scurry, and the rattle of paper covering the little table.

Softly, Ben pushed the door open. The fire was bright in the coal-stove. And there on the stand under the tree, sitting on a broken candy-heart, was a wee gray-brown mouse.

Above his head rose the red ribbon bow of the candy-heart, giving just the prettiest Christmas touch. And even as they watched, the mouse tugged at a popcorn string. Down it came, so suddenly that the little mouse jumped and fell of the stand. Then, with a scurry, holding the string in his mouth, away he went toward the hall door.

"Oh, Nannie," cried Ben. "The story!" Then and there, Nannie and Ben sat down by the stove. And Ben told Nannie his Christmas story. It was to be about a poor little mouse who had a lot of children and no Christmas to give them, and of how he found fresh popcorn growing on a beautiful Christmas tree and carried it home to them, and of what a merry Christmas the whole family had.

The first of the winter term, when the prizes were announced, you won't be surprised to know that the first one, of five dollars, was awarded to "The Mouse Who Played Santa Claus": A True Story, by Ben Reed.—Ex.

A NEW YEAR PRAYER.

BY SUSIE M. BEST.

The New Year stands before me,
Its scroll is spotless white;
Let me no soiling record
Upon those pages write.

The New Year stands before me,
With opportunities,
Let me not idly loiter
Unreckoning of these

The New Year stands before me,
Another gift from God;
Let me accept the guerdon
And tread the way he trod.

A CRACKED NEW YEAR RESOLUTION.

"Make me one, too, Will." Ned watched his brother while he lettered a large card with New Year resolutions. They were written in gold, with a great many ornamental flourishes.

Will held it up admiringly.

"Make me one, please," Ned repeated. "You don't need any. You don't have to get up at six o'clock every morning and study an hour before breakfast; you can cuddle down and snooze till mother calls you. Besides, you'd break them all to smash before night," he added.

"No, I wouldn't. You try me, and see if I do," Ned said. He brought a card and gave it to his brother.

"What shall I put on it?" asked Will.

"O, something about remembering. I want to remember that I promised to shovel off Aunt Tyson's porch and make her a path to the gate every time it snows this winter. I wish it would hurry up and snow again, for she gives me ten cents every time. I've got thirty already."

"That's a lot. What are you going to do with it—buy an automobile?" Will asked, teasingly.

"I'm going to buy Tommy Dixon a sled, so he and his sister can coast."

"There! How does that suit you?" Will asked, holding up the card on which was printed in large golden letters, with an elaborate border of holly leaves and berries: "Resolved, That I will not forget to shovel off Aunt Tyson's porch and make her a nice path to the gate every time it snows this winter, because she is too old to do it herself, and because I promised. New Darding."

"O, that is just grand! Now there isn't any danger of my forgetting," Ned said, gleefully.

"Shan't I put on anything more—something about putting your sled away nights and hanging up your cap, for instance?"

But Ned shook his head.

"I'd better not try to remember too much at once," he said.

It snowed again Friday night, and next morning the snow lay in great heaps and!

drifts. Ned ran for the snow-shovel, but Will was already using it to make paths about the house. While he was waiting Charlie came along with his new sled.

"Get your sled and come on down to the hill, Ned; the big boys have got it all cleared off already," he said. And Ned ran for his sled. It was fine coasting, and the sled flew down the hill like the wind. The time flew by, too, and presently a bell rang.

"Twelve o'clock!" called Charlie Logan, starting for home.

"Hello, Ned! Seems to me I heard something crack, didn't I?" called a familiar voice, and there stood Will. Ned looked hastily at his sled and will laughed. "No, it wasn't your sled. I guess Aunt Tyson must have heard it, too, because I saw her looking anxiously out the door as I came by!" he exclaimed.

"O!" It was all Ned said, but he took his sled and ran hastily away. He stopped at Tommy Dixon's, and Tommy came out to meet him.

"Don't you want to take my sled this afternoon? The hill is smooth as glass," he said.

"Don't you want it?" asked Tommy, eagerly, but Ned shook his head.

"O, thank you!" cried Tommy, delightedly.

After dinner Ned took the snow shovel and went to Aunt Tyson's.

"I thought you had forgotten me, Ned," she said.

"I did, pretty near; but I'm going to make up for it," he told her.

He could hear the boys and girls over on the hill, but he kept bravely at work until the snow was cleared away and a nice, wide path made around the house.

Aunt Tyson said he had earned double wages, and gave him twenty cents.

"That resolution wasn't truly broken, Will—just cracked a little; and I've mended it 'most as good as ever. I'm going to watch it closer after this, too," he told Will that night, as he took pains to hang up the card where he would be sure to see it as soon as he woke up every morning.

Ned did not forget again, and before the new year was a month old he had earned money enough for the new sled, which Tommy accepted joyfully.—Sel.

SELECT READINGS

O, I am the little new year, O. O!
Here I come tripping over the snow,
Shaking my bells with a merry din;
So open your doors and let me in!—Ex.

Every man ought to have three homes, an earthly home, a church home, and a home in heaven. Resolve this New Year, that you will make your earthly home a dwelling place of Christ, and that your church shall be the resting place of your spirit, dear as the apple of your eye, and and that you will claim the mansion your Lord has prepared for you in heaven.

"Whadda you want for Christmas?" If you ask me friend, I'll say
Some little sign of thoughtfulness that you can send my way;
Some word of recollection in the good old-fashioned style.
Just wrap it in kind wishes and then tie it with a smile.

Life is a fabric woven upon the loom of time by the shuttle of the days with thoughts and deeds for thread. We ourselves are the weavers and God is above it all. Each new year sees some pattern set, each year concluded is measured by the breadth we have woven—Gaius Glenn Atkins.

May the New Year hold a generous share
Of wholesome wealth and cheer,
And pleasant days with leisure hours
And many friends sincere.

Christmas license is not worthy of the Christmas idea. How can we celebrate the Birthday of our Savior, by doing things that are out of harmony with the ideals of Jesus. Christmas pleasures that are displeasing to Christ ought not to mar the Christmas season. We ought to honor Jesus in the celebration of his birthday.

"I see not a step before me
As I tread on another year,
But the past is still in God's keeping,
The future his mercy shall clear,
And what looks dark in the distance
May brighten as I draw near."

Christmas is the love season of the year. It was because of love that Father gave His Son. It was because of love the angels sang their song of good-will. Let Christmas see hate die out of your heart, and love take the throne.

"It is good to speak out our thankfulness to God; it is better to live it out."

The year lies before us like a path untrod, a book unread, a flower unblown, a tree not yet in bloom. "This is the year that before us waits beyond tomorrow's mystic gates."

NEW YEAR GREETING.

A few days more and the year will be gone! Not another scratch shall we make upon its pages. Every door of opportunity it offered will be closed forever. If we have any duty to do before it dies we must hurry. Have we knowingly wronged another? Let us be strong enough to right the wrong before the New Year dawns. Have we consciously turned our back upon the heavenly vision? Let us right about and enjoy the luxury of being true to the highest we know before the Old Year dies.—Thomas Knox.

CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

The fact is, that we can only really know, in spiritual things, that realm that we have traversed with our own feet. The father may send the son to college, but he will only get so much of that college in him as he will be diligent enough to appropriate. The earth is full of precious things that God has given to man, but he must dig, and work and fight for their possession. God gave the earth to Adam, but he commanded him to "subdue it."

TRUST IN GOD.

Many commands that come to us from God seem to us impossible in the light of human experience; but we must bear in mind that "God's ways are not our ways." He sees things from an entirely different viewpoint from ours. We look at things from the viewpoint of the finite, but God looks at them from the viewpoint of the infinite. We tremble and are afraid because we are weak—God is bold and confident because he is omnipotent.

CHRISTIAN IDEALS.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the only religion that demands perfection. Other religions are either concessions to human nature or expressions of it. Some go so far, in their adjustment to human infirmity and passion, as to make immortality a part of their worship. This was true of the religion of the ancient Sidonians, as it is of the worship in India today.

Jesus gave the world an entirely new conception of morality and of vital religion. The Sermon on the Mount is an exposition of the heart element in true piety, and of the spiritual nature of all genuine righteousness. It turns thought from the externals of religion to its innermost and inherent quality. It brings its lofty ideals and demands to a climax by saying, "Ye therefore shall be perfect, as your heavenly Father is perfect."—Christian Advocate.

LIVING AMONG THE POTS.

In the loftiest speech of the Psalter is this wonderful gem of comfort,—"though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove, covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold." It is a reference to the women in the kitchens of Pharaoh.

Though we are just now in the lowliest conditions of life, the Lord will exalt us to the higher; though we may even be as scorned scullions in the kitchens of Pharaoh, the Lord will give us beauty for blackness and glory for grime. That is to say, when we are about the common duties of life, in the very doing of our common round of daily tasks, our lives will be transfigured and beautified so that even a humble toiler will have about him a splendor and grace comparable with the beauty of the dove's pinions, shimmering in the golden sunshine.—Intelligencer.

NEW YEAR'S.

My times are in thy hand.—Psa. 31. 15.
A happy thought for New Year's Day
Is that God's love has found a way
To tell us time is of the earth,
For not in heaven it had its birth.
God's love in Christ—eternity!
'Tis heaven on earth—felicity!
And naught of this world's strife can mar.
Since in God's changeless love we are.

Lesson I — January 1.

THE REVOLT OF JEROBOAM.

(I Kings 12:19-17, 26-30.)

12. So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, saying, Come to me again the third day.

13. And the king answered the people roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him:

14. And spake to him after the counsel of the young men, saying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15. Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was from the Lord, that he might perform his saying, which the Lord spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16. So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: to your tents, O Israel: now see to thine own house, David. So Israel departed unto their tents.

17. But as for the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

26. And Jeroboam said in his heart, Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

27. If this people go up to do sacrifice in the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28. Whereupon the king took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29. And he set the one in Bethel, and the other put he in Dan.

30. And this thing became a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

Golden Text: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them" (Exodus 20: 4, 5).

Catechism—Q. 53. Which is the Third Commandment? A. The Third Commandment is, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

Q. 54. What is required in the Third Commandment? A. The Third Commandment requireth the holy and reverent use of God's names, titles, attributes, ordinances, Word, and works.

INTRODUCTORY.

We now go back to the Old Testament and for nine months will study the history of the Jewish people. For three months the lessons are about the Northern Kingdom of the ten tribes, or Israel as it is usually called. The next three months' lessons are about the Southern or Lower Kingdom of the two tribes, or Judah as it is known. We then spend three months on the Exile and the Restoration, leading on up to the time of Christ. After Moses and Joshua and the Judges the people insisted on having a king, and the nation became a kingdom, with Saul as the first king, David as the second, and Solomon as the third. By an interesting coincidence each reigned forty years, and at the death of Solomon the kingdom had reached its greatest height of power and riches and territorial extent. It was now to be divided and to lose much of its importance. It is divided into two kingdoms in this lesson, ten of the tribes seceding, and after a few centuries going into captivity and becoming the ten "lost tribes," so effectually do they drop out of sight. The Southern Kingdom of Judah also suffered a seventy years captivity, but was restored and continued until the time of Christ. The Jews that we know belong for the most part to the tribe of Judah, although some of them may be of Benjamin or of Levi. Our lesson today tells of the division by secession of the ten tribes, just after the death of Solomon.

EXPOSITORY.

12-15. Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, had become king by inheritance, but he was not a wise young man, and indeed was very foolish. Solomon had made the city of Jerusalem magnificent, with the Temple, the palaces, and many great public buildings and improvements. All of these had cost a great deal of money, and the people had been compelled to furnish much money and much labor. This had become a great burden. Now, at the death of Solomon, they thought it would be a good time to make a change. So they came to Rehoboam asking him to make it easier for them. We read that he asked time for deliberation and consultation. He called together the old men as counsellors, and they urged him to be patient and kind, and to promise leniency, assuring them that this course would produce good results and that the people would gladly serve him if he would do so. But he advised with his young associates and they told him not to yield a hair's breadth, but to be strong and severe and threatening, and compel the people to obey him. This was very bad counsel, as results proved. On the third day Rehoboam told the people what the young men had advised him to say. He answered them roughly, as a conceited and ignorant young king might. It was, after all, according to God's threatening, that the kingdom should be torn to pieces for its wickedness. Affairs reached their culmination in the conduct of this foolish young king.

16, 17. The result was what might have been expected. The Israelites were not brute beasts. They rebelled against Rehoboam. They could not and would not endure his arrogance and supercilious threatenings, and the ten tribes went in hot anger to set up their own kingdom. Of course they did not show the right sort of spirit either, and many troubles were before them. Reasonableness and kindness would have averted the evils that came to Rehoboam. It has always been true that goodness and patience pay. Our lesson teaches us that it pays to use good sense and amiability in the treatment of others. The two tribes of Judah and Benjamin remained with Rehoboam. They could not very well get away from Jerusalem and the Temple.

26, 27. The intervening verses should be read, which tell of the fruitless efforts made by Rehoboam to reunite the two divided parts of the kingdom. He was unable to do so. It was too late. He had thrown away his opportunity. Henceforth there were two rival and unfriendly kingdoms. Jeroboam set up the kingdom of Israel, of ten tribes, and had the possibility before him of a great and successful career. But his heart was not right with God, and we read here of his great mistake and his great sin. He built Shechem for his capital city, and he also built Peniel and yet, he realized, he and his people had left Jerusalem and the great Temple in which they all had taken so great pride, and to which all the male members of the tribes were expected to go for worship, three times a year. Jeroboam was afraid to permit his people to go to the Temple any more, for fear that their hearts might draw them back into the old associations and they should desert and dethrone him. What should Jeroboam do to prevent this?

28-30. He took a bold, God-defying course, in order to cut off the people from having anything to do with the old religious services at Jerusalem. He made two calves of gold, similar to the one they had worshiped at one time in the desert, and for doing so had been severely punished. He defied the Commandment which said they should make no graven image for worship. He thought he could set up a new religion, with new places of worship, and a new set of priests and new sacred days, and win the people entirely away from the true-worship of God. He succeeded in a way. It has always been possible to set up new forms of religion, and no matter how false and evil, they will always have a following, as Mormonism and Spiritualism and Mary Eddyism and others. It is more easy to mislead people than it is to save them. Almost any one can roll a stone down hill, but it takes strength to get it back. It takes only a coarse criminal to murder a man or to poison a baby. It takes an intelligent physician to counteract disease and save life. Jeroboam and those like him can break down religion in the hearts of some people, and win them away from God and Salvation. Yes, we see how it became a "sin." It was meant to be a sinful thing. It was done with the eyes open and the heart thoroughly set to do evil. Jeroboam not only did wickedly, in inciting the people to idolatry, but his wickedness was fixed on him, and he is spoken of, again and again, in the historical books of the Old Testament, as "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin." He stands as one of the awful characters of history. It is bad enough for one to sin for himself, but to tempt others to sin, or to cause them to sin, is so monstrous that it allies him to Satan himself. There Jeroboam stands, and there we ourselves shall stand if we tempt and mislead others into sin against God.

RETURN OF CHRISTMAS.

The happy Christmas comes once more,
The heavenly Guest is at the door;
The blessed words the shepherds thrill,
The joyous tidings: Peace, good will!

To David's city let us fly,
Where angels sing beneath the sky;
Through plain and village pressing near,
And news from God with shepherds hear.

Oh! let us go with quiet mind,
The gentle Babe with shepherds find,
To gaze on him who gladdens them,
The loveliest Flower of Jesse's stem.

The lowly Savior meekly lies,
Laid off the splendor of the skies;
No crown bedecks his forehead fair,
No pearl nor gem nor silk is there.

No human glory, might, and gold,
The lovely infant's form enfold;
The manger and the swaddlings poor
Are his whom angels' songs adore.

O holy Child! Thy manger streams
Till earth and heaven glow with its beams,
Till midnight noon's broad light has won,
And Jacob's star outshines the sun.

The Patriarch's joy, thou Prophet's song,
Thou heavenly Day-spring, looked for long,
Thou Son of Man, Incarnate Word,
Great David's Son great David's Lord!

Come, Jesus glorious, heavenly Guest,
Keep thine own Christmas in our breast!
Then David's harp-strings, hushed so long,
Shall swell our jubilee of song.

—Translated from the Danish by Charles P. Krauth.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

At each Christmas time we open the Bible and turn to the inspired account of the Savior's birth, and read it over and

"THE BRICKS ARE FALLEN, BUT WE WILL BUILD"

—(Cant., 9:10)

The first is true of Barber Seminary, burned November 7th. Help us with the second.

The education and development of these Barber girls are checked. They can not go hundreds of miles to other schools, and if they could, there is no room. In many homes these girls, whose pictures we give, are anxious. They do not wish to waste these years. They hope to return to a rebuilt Barber next school year. Help us raise the $60,000 necessary to restore and furnish. Gifts small or large, and prayers will be welcomed.

over, with the prayer, and wonder at the great simplicity of God's greatest miracle. This short story is the greatest birth announcement ever made; it is the fulfillment of the most wonderful promise of God—that of the coming Messiah—and it is freighted with the assurance of eternal hope. It records the greatest event and the greatest day in the history of the world.

Our eyes can not be satisfied
With seeing, nor our ears be filled
With hearing; yet we plant and build
And buy and make our borders wide;
We gather wealth, we gather care,
But know not who shall be our heir.

NEW YEAR'S THOUGHTS.

BY JANET GREY.

As the bells ring the Old Year out and the New Year in no one has moralized more fully on their music than Charles Lamb. "Of all sounds," he says, "most solemn and touching is the peal which rings out the Old Year. I never hear it without a gathering up of my mind to a concentration of all the images that have been diffused over the past twelve months; all I have done or suffered, performed or neglected, in that regretted time. I began to know its worth, as when a person dies."

During some of the years in the last decade it has been with hearts almost breaking that we have wished each other "A Happy New Year." Now all has changed and today, all over the world, we may wish each other "A Happy New Year" with honest lips and cheery hearts.

Few persons begin a New Year without some sort of hope or determination that it shall be a happier year than the preceding one, but most men and women come to the close of the year disappointed and discouraged. Is there any sure way by which the year to come may be a happier one than any of its predecessors? What is the secret of a Happy Year?

The New Year is a door of opportunity. When the Children of Israel were just going to cross the Jordan the message came to them, "Ye have not passed this way heretofore," and we have not passed this New Year's way heretofore. It was a new path to them, but the Ark, the symbol of God's presence, was carried before them. We are constantly coming to experiences that are altogether new to us. Every day's path is an untried one. The New Year's path is also, in a sense, new and strange. As God was Israel's Leader, he must be ours.

Then there is the opportunity for service, for the performance of unfulfilled resolutions which have blossomed only to fade. Should we not seek for power to turn our poor sickly promises into robust action, to try again, with the hope of doing better, as the chances of life open up anew?

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.

It is quite common to ridicule the good resolutions made on New Year's Day, because men are said to forget them, or ignore them so soon after they are made. The only way for a man to do better when he has done wrong, is to resolve to do better. No man ever changed his life without resolving to do so. He must make up his mind to do it. He must settle in his will to do it. All this is very true and commonplace. You have heard it many times, and there is certainly nothing original about it. It is the devil's ruse to make light of good resolutions, and the people who repeat the stale joke are only doing the devil's work, albeit sometimes unconsciously. We ought to make good resolutions on New Year's Day, and we ought to keep on making good resolutions to the end of our days.

But even if we do not keep these good resolutions, it is no reason why we should make no more. If we fail, we do not have to wait for another New Year to make more. Any day is good to make good resolutions. Many a man has broken a thousand good resolutions, and afterward resolved again, and become a good man.

MY NEW YEAR'S PRAYER.

I do not ask that either wealth or fame
Shall be my portion down life's troubled
way;
I only ask that there be given me
The needful strength for work from day to day.
Just strength, that with the morning's fresh, sweet dawn
I may arise, and fully rested be,
Renewed in mind and body so that I
May do the waiting day's work cheerily;
The strength to meet the fretting little cares
And trials, so prone to vex, with sunny smile,
And grace to say the gentle, kindly word
To those I love and patient be the while;
The grace to let the hasty, angry tone
Go by unheeded, and to ever be
So strong that in confusion and distress
I may be helpful, yet go quietly.

—Mother's Magazine.

YOUNG PEOPLE

JANUARY 1.

ENDEAVOR TOPIC: Better Societies. I Corinthians 15:57, 58.

The goal of all good and earnest-minded persons should be that of doing the very best that is possible. It should be our aim today, and tomorrow, and all the days of the future. We are, as the apostle urged, to "go on unto perfection." We are to try to make advances on what we have been and what we have done. We must not be satisfied with past achievements. If we are older now, and with more experience, we should be able to do better work, and, if we are able to do it, there is an imperative demand that we shall do it.

Competition sometimes has a stimulating effect upon us. If we are striving to equal or excel, some other person or some other organization, we see, right along, what we must do, and we feel stirred up to do at least as much as our competitor. But we may be in competition with ourselves, or with our past record, and strive each year to do more work, or better work than during the preceding years. There is nothing wrong or unwholesome in such endeavors.

For instance here is a church. It is right for it to try, as a body, to do more each year than during the preceding year. If it is gaining in numbers and in experience it should realize that more should be accomplished by it in the things that a church is expected to accomplish. Some one may say that we should not set goals, but should be willing to go on and do the best that can be done all the time. This is good, in one way, but it is apt to regenerate into sleepiness, and laziness, and into losing ground. We should have definite aims.

How shall we know what is the best we can do, except by the record of what we have done? Why not determine to do as much as this, or more, this year? Let the goal be an increase in members, for one thing. This is good. We should get hold of all the young people we can reach, and win them to work with us and worship with us, and have them enlisted with us in the service of Christ. This is vital work. It deals with living beings. It is work that tells.

Let us make our societies better this year by increasing the attendance at our meetings. If a meeting is good it is a benefit to those who attend it and get the good from it. Let us not be content with less than a hundred per cent attendance. A high, conscientious effort to be present, on the part of every member will result in a great advantage to the society and to all its members.

Especially are we to strive to raise the spiritual standard in our meetings. There are few societies in which there might not be an improvement in this matter. For this let there be a growth of devoutness and reverence; of thoughtfulness and attention; of prayerfulness and attentiveness to the Word of God. There is a great difference among groups of young people. In one church the meeting is characterized by a devout and elevated and serious spirit; in another it seems impossible to have the minds and hearts fixed on the real purpose of the meeting. It is not a social gathering. It is a meeting for worship, and study of God's Word, and growth in Christian character.

There should be an improvement, nearly everywhere, in the matter of missionary interests. If we have spiritual privileges in this land we should have an unselfish and consecrated desire to see the Gospel given to the people of other lands.

We should make our society better in what it is doing to build up the Church and its services. No society amounts to much in which there is not the growing desire to do as much as possible to honor Jesus Christ through the regular services of the Church. Let us work to encourage the pastor, to bring young people to believe in Christ and become members of the Church, and in every way we can make ourselves felt as a devoted band of working young Christian people.

WATCH NIGHT.

While winds of winter shake the door
And fumble at the lock,
I sit and watch the hands go round
The blossom bordered clock.
Along the narrow path of Time
The year is going west;
The minutes mark his final steps,
God speed him to his rest!
Tick, tock! it speaks, the quaint old clock,
A language of its own;
It tells us how we wasted half
The months forever flown;
How many things we left undone,
How many duties shirked,
And how we passed in idleness
The hours we should have worked.
Hark! All the bells begin to ring;
I lift my nodding head;
The fire is out, the room is cold,
The poor old year is dead.
The hands upon the timepiece with
The painted floral band
Are both erect at twelve o'clock,
And at attention stand.
Another year is at the door,
Upon his arm behold
A basket full of seeds and bulbs
And cuttings manifold,
And in his hand, with rake and hoe,
A spade all clean and bright,
For us to bury past mistakes
And start the New Year right.—Ex.

SPIRITS vs. SPIRITS.

Paul's cure for drunkenness is the best that has ever been discovered. Here it is: "Be not drunken with wine, wherein is excess, but be ye filled with the Spirit." No science of philosophy or of medicine can improve upon it.

To the artificial and degrading excitement of drunkenness the apostle boldly opposes the divine enthusiasm and the impelling influence of the filling of the Holy Spirit. The antithesis is startling but profoundly instructive for when men are "filled with the Spirit" they will have no desire for the degrading influence of alcoholic stimulants. "Nay," he further says, "in all these things we are more than conquerors through him who loved us." Yes, thank God! men can be victors over every temptation and sin, in and through the name of the divine Victor!—F. S. Shepard.

THE SPIRITUAL SOLUTION.

It is becoming more and more the fashion to drag vexing issues to the doors of the churches with a demand for instant and infallible judgment. In spite of all the criticism of the Church, it is still recognized as a mighty power for the stabilizing of society. It is noticeable that even those who ridicule the Church's spiritual service, will, when material conditions become intolerable or when their peace or their property is endangered, promptly set up the cry, "why doesn't the Church do something?"

It is significant that Jesus held distinctly aloof from the legal activities of his day. When the people wanted to make him a judge he answered them with a point blank refusal. He declined to become their political leader. He refused to make himself a social reformer.

Religion was the one solvent of the world's desperate distress, because it alone could change the world's poor human material. God's mercy and grace in forgiving sinners made them new creatures, capable of eternal possibilities as children of God, and through whom God would make the beginnings of his new kingdom on earth, where his will should be done on earth as it is done in heaven.—Ex.

MEDITATIONS FOR THE NEW YEAR.

May this day and all the days of the New Year bring to you and all those who are dear to you the sunshine of happiness.—Richard Brooks.

To work to help and to be helped, to learn sympathy through suffering, to learn faith by perplexity, to reach truth through wonder—behold! this is what it is to prosper, this is what it is to live.—Phillips Brooks.

Put out of your thought the past whatever it may be; let go even the future with its golden dream and its high ideal; and concentrate your soul in this burning, present moment. For the man who is true to the present is true to his best; and the soul that wins the ground immediately before it, makes life a triumph.—Ozora Stearns Davis.

Resolved, to live with all my might while I do live; resolved never to lose one moment of time, but to improve it in the most profitable way I possibly can! Resolved, never to do anything which I should despise or think meanly of in another; resolved, never to do anything which I should be afraid to do if it were the last hour of my life.—Jonathan Edwards.

PRAYER MEETING

DECEMBER 28.
RENEWING VOWS.
Psalm 61.

We come to the end of the year, not to throw off our sense of responsibility, in the thought that we have done another full year's work, but to thank God for his protection and keeping grace, and to make new promises of faithfulness for the days that are to come.

We may call it renewing our vows. We do not need to make new ones if we have already given ourselves to the Lord in a covenant for life and for eternity, in all things well ordered and sure. That is the sort of covenant God made with us. It is forever, and he does not need to make a new one. He does, however, from time to time, give assurances to us that he remembers it, and that he intends to keep it unbrokenly and forever.

It is right to make vows, or promises, to God, to love him and serve him and be obedient to him. This is what Jacob did when he was starting out in life, and when he had the vision of the ladder and the angels at Bethel. He asked God to take care of him and to guide him, and he promised that he would be his and that he would serve him in the use of the means that God should put in his hands. This agreement of Jacob with God may well be called a covenant, when two persons come together and make their mutual pledges. God is well pleased to have his trusting people thus make mutual pledges with him, and he makes even stronger pledges than he asks us to make.

We make our pledges to God when we first commit ourselves to him in becoming Christians. That is the secret, personal vow that we make to him, to be his forever. Then we make this vow publicly when we make public profession of our faith, and become members of the Church. And we renew that vow each time we bow before God in prayer, or come as worshipers into the sanctuary, or come to the communion service at the Lord's table.

A man said to a minister: "I do not see why I should make a public profession of faith in Christ. That is my own concern. I do not tell the world that I love my wife. Why should I publicly profess to love and trust in Christ?" The minister answered him: "You have used an illustration that is most fatal to your position. You never had the right to claim your wife as your wife until you had made a public profession of your love for her before the legal authorities, and had been thus united to her in marriage. If you had attempted to live with her without this public profession you would have been adjudged a criminal. So you are to profess Christ, as he has directed, and be an outspoken Christian."

A good husband renews his vows to his wife, privately and publicly, day after day, in acts and words of affection and tenderness and honor, and if this were the rule in every family and home, there would be few cases where the divorce court would have anything to do.

So the professed Christian is to renew his vows, day by day and moment by moment, to his Savior. He is to live near to him, holding communion with him in prayer and worship, in attendance upon the means of grace, in reading his word, in living a good and true life, and in honoring him by his words and actions, in real Christian service among his fellow-men.

It is an impressive time to do this now for the coming year. Let us be determined to live close to God during this year. Let us pledge anew to God our loving loyalty and true obedience. The Sixty-first Psalm is a happy expression of gratitude and faith and love. In it the Psalmist renews his pledges of loyalty, and says: "I will sing praise unto thy name forever, that I may daily perform my vows." The best way to renew our vows is to keep on performing them, every day of every year of all the life.

A GRACE FOR THE NEW YEAR.

BY E. F. HOWARD.

Lord, for what we have received,
Learned and loved, unlearned, achieved;
For our measure of success,
Failures, cares and fears no less;
For the joy and stress and strife,
All that truly counts as life,
For the kindness and the grace
On each friendly human face:
For a larger trust in thee—
May we truly thankful be!
And for what, if we should live . . .
We are going to receive;
For the rapture and the pain
Certain to be ours again;
For the future, still unseen,
And the veil that hangs between,
For the knowledge all is right,
Though the darkness hide the light,
Though Death himself should draw his sword—
Make us truly thankful, Lord.

GENERAL NEWS

NAVAL LIMITATION AGREED UPON.

The United States, Great Britain and Japan have reached an agreement with respect to the construction of capital war-ships.

This was announced officially at the State Department last Thursday in the form of a statement containing the full details of the agreement.

As has been predicted all along, the American proposal of 5-5-3 has been accepted by the two other Powers. Japan obtained a concession in being permitted to retain the Mutsu, her newest and greatest dreadnought, which was listed in the original American proposal among the ships to be scrapped.

In return the United States is to be permitted to complete the Colorado and Washington, now almost ninety per cent completed, and to scrap in their stead two of her older ships, the North Dakota and the Delaware, which were in the original list to be retained.

Great Britain, in turn, is to be permitted to construct two new ships not to exceed 35,000 legend tons, or figured according to American calculation, the equivalent of 37,000 tons each.

Upon their completion, the British will be required to scrap four of their ships of the King George V type. This reduces the number of British capital ships from twenty-two, as stipulated in the American proposal, to twenty.

The agreement maintains the principle of the ten-year naval holiday set forth in the American proposal, but its literal observance by the United States and Great Britain, of course, is impossible under the provisions of the modifications agreed upon to make possible the retention of the Mutsu by Japan. Japan, however, can undertake no new construction during the ten-year period, as the Mutsu is a completed ship, and now is in commission.

With regard to fortifications and naval bases in the Pacific region the agreement maintains the status quo. This restriction, however, is not to apply to the Hawaiian Islands, Australia, New Zealand and the islands composing Japan proper, nor to the coasts of the United States and Canada.

* * *

Shortly after the naval program had been agreed to, France threw a bombshell into the conference by proposing that she build a capital ship fleet of 370,000 tons, or ten new post-Jutland vessels, during the ten years following the year 1925.

This plan was contested by Secretary Charles E. Hughes and Arthur J. Balfour. Senator Schanzer, for Italy, added his indirect criticism by proposing a parity of strength for France and Italy of 175,000 tons each.

The proposition already agreed to provided for capital fleets for France and Italy of 300,000 tons each.

CHINA PROPOSES TO PAY CASH FOR FORMER GERMAN ROAD.

Subject to Tokyo's approval, the Japanese delegation to the Washington conference has accepted the Chinese offer to pay 53,000,000 gold German marks for the Kiaochow-Tsinanfu Railroad in Shantung, plus what Japan has made in permanent improvements, but less deterioration.

When the conversation between the two delegations was renewed after a lapse of several days the Chinese offered to buy the railroad outright in cash, but the Japanese, it was said, raised questions as to why this course was proposed, pointing out that all other railroads in China had been built with the aid of foreign loans.

The Chinese delegates replied that the Chinese consortium was ready to finance the restoration of the railroad, and China's desire was to make use of this in order to do away with "foreign control."

The amount agreed upon virtually is the valuation placed on the road, exclusive of the adjacent mines, by the Reparations Commission set up under the treaty of Versailles, and which Japan is to pay to Germany.

The question of coal mines and certain iron ore fields involved in the disputed railroad remains to be settled, but, according to the Chinese, probably will not be reached until the method of payment of the road proper is agreed upon.

GERMANY UNABLE TO PAY.

Germany will not be able to meet in full her reparations payments of 1,000,000,000 gold marks, falling due January 15 and February 15, and has so informed the Allied Reparations Commission.

A moratorium is not asked for by the German Government in its note, which merely places Germany's financial situation before the Reparations Commission as evidence of Germany's inability to meet the forthcoming installments, each of 500,000,000 gold marks.

Neither is any release from her obligations requested by Germany, which apparently has left the matter in the hands of the Reparations Commission.

The concluding paragraph of the brief note, however, gives a strong intimation that Germany sees no way out of her financial difficulties, except through the so-called "reparations holiday," or a delay of two or three years.

The announcement contains a definite warning to the allies that similar difficulties will arise in connection with subsequent payments. This is interpreted in reparations circles as meaning that Germany will seek further delays and attempt to force the Powers to revise the present reparations agreement.

PLAN TO REORGANIZE GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS.

Complete reorganization of the executive departments of the Federal Government upon a new basis that will make for economy, as well as efficiency, is to be accomplished, with the approval of congress, within the next four months, it is stated.

This is the hope of the joint Congressional Reorganization Committee, of which Walter F. Brown, of Ohio, is Chairman. This committee expects to have its report in shape to submit to the President by the middle of next week.

President Harding thereupon is to smooth out any differences that may arise between the committee and the heads of the various departments, after which the report is to be returned to the committee with recommendations.

The committee then will draft a bill for submission to Congress by the President.

Members of the committee virtually have completed their investigation and conferences with department heads.

Under the plan of reorganization to be suggested in the report, the War and Navy Departments are to be consolidated into one department, to be known as the Department of National Defense, with a Secretary at its head and Under Secretaries for the army and navy.

A Department of Public Welfare is to take over a number of bureaus and divisions now under the Department of the Interior and independent branches of the Government service, while the Department of Agriculture and the Interior Departments, as well as the Department of Commerce, will gain or lose various functions.

A million dollars a day, it is estimated will be saved to the Federal Government by the reorganization, the elimination of duplication, standardization of methods and property and general economy to be practiced, an argument which, it is thought, Congress can not oppose.

NEW YORK BOMBER CAPTURED.

A man registered as Wolfe Lindenfeld, alias William Linde, has been arrested by Warsaw, Poland, police as a suspect in connection with the Wall Street explosion in New York, Sept. 16, 1920.

Warsaw police said they made the arrest at the request of the American Department of Justice.

They contended that they had in their possession the man's full confession of having been connected with the disaster.

Lindenfeld is described as a cousin of Rosa Luxembourg, the German Communist leader, who was shot to death in Berlin early in 1919 after having been beaten by a mob. His confession, the police state, gives the names of the ringleaders and the New York City addresses where the bomb was manufactured, and says, also, that the bomb was intended for J. P. Morgan, but exploded prematurely.

EVERYBODY TO USE GAS.

Artificial gas for heating requirements of the nation, both in homes and industry, is an impending reality, and a revolutionary change in heating, as sweeping as that which abolished the coal cook stove from the city kitchen, is under way and will come just as soon as the gas industry can overcome existing problems, according to the Industrial Fuel Committee of the American Gas Association, in its report to the annual convention of that body at Chicago last week.

The report predicted that the gas industry will become the biggest public service institution, and coupled this with the statement that the companies serving the nation must prepare themselves for a gigantic building program, such as will permit it to take on a billion dollars of new business resulting from the great task of providing heat for American homes and for industry. Complete disuse of solid fuel in cities, doing away with smoke and grime and the annual fuel problems, were declared by the committee to be in the offing.

With proper revision of rate and service standards, coupled with the rapid progress in the gas-making art now under way, these things will be possible, the committee reports:

"Entrance of gas in all competitive fuel markets, with its possible complete utilization for heating purposes by all industries of the nation.

"Its complete use for city heating, doing entirely away with furnaces and stoves in the home or office building, just as the kitchen gas range did away with the coal stove, eliminating the worries attendant to coal supplies or those resultant from dirt, smoke, or ashes.

"Conservation of the nation's poorer grades of coal, now largely wasted, and their transformation into gaseous heat units."

THEY GET UP TOO LATE.

A cup of hot coffee or hot milk is to be served free every forenoon to any Massachusetts Institute of Technology student who wishes it. Dr. G. G. Morse, head of the medical department of the institute, has discovered through a system of physical examinations that 40 per cent of the students are nourished improperly.

"Many of them," he said, "are commuters and have to leave home early, with only a hurried bite of breakfast or a cake of chocolate eaten on the way in. They stand in the laboratory or sit in lectures all the morning and between 11 and 12 o'clock they become dizzy or faint."

Whether the naval program as agreed to will prove successful became a question late in the week, when the French delegation entered a demand that her allotment be increased to allow her to commence a building program to produce capital ships to the extent of 350,000 tons.

Receipts from the Dec. 15 installment of income and profits taxes are expected to reach $500,000,000, according to preliminary reports. While it was too early to estimate accurately the total for the quarter, officials said, early reports indicated that the Treasury's original estimate of $500,000,000 would be realized.

Although soft-coal production normally is at a maximum at this season, it has fallen back to the level of last April, ordinarily the lowest month in the year, the Geological Survey points out in its weekly report.

For two weeks, it remarks, production has hung around 1,200,000 tons a day, whereas the smallest daily output in any December of the preceding eight years was 1,379,000 tons.

Energetic pursuit and punishment of the more than one hundred thousand men who evaded the draft during the world war is urgently recommended by Major-General Peter C. Harris, Adjutant-General of the Army, in his annual report, made public by the Secretary of War. To bring those guilty to trial, he recommends that Congress appropriate $250,000 to pay rewards of $50 for each draft deserter delivered to the military authorities.

"It is imperative," he declares, "that the Government exhibit the greatest possible energy in pursuing these men and in punishing all who are found to be guilty. If the Government permits these deserters to escape the punishment provided for their offense, consequences of the gravest import certainly will ensue.

H. Clay Evans, former United States Commissioner of Pensions and Consul-General in London, 1902-1905, died suddenly at his home in Chattanooga, last week. He was seventy-eight years old.

Mr. Evans served in the Fifty-first Congress as member from the Third Tennessee District.

In the state elections of 1894 he was returned as Governor, on the face of the returns, but after a recount by the Legislature, the result was overturned. He was delegate at large to all Republican National Conventions between 1892 and 1916.

A ninety-five-mile-an-hour gale which swept Lake Erie last Sunday lowered the water at the west end six feet and raised the level at Niagara by eight feet.

The British Official Gazette published the formal revocation of the naturalization of Sir Edward Speyer. An order removing him from the Privy Council also is gazetted.

The Gazette gives the reasons for the revocation as follows:

"First, that he had shown himself by act and speech to be disloyal to His Majesty.

"Second, that during the world war he unlawfully communicated with the subjects of an enemy state and associated with them in business."

Wireless warnings relayed from the City of Mexico stated that "Popocatepetl is in violent eruption, and all towns in the vicinity of the volcano have been warned that the eruptions are the most serious since the volcano suddenly started to spout lava and ashes."

Charles W. Morse, of New York, who was recalled to this country from France by Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty, was served, upon his arrival, with a warrant alleging conspiracy to defraud the Government and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, in which the United States is a stockholder.

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has been asked by the American Game Protective Association to forbid its members wearing elks' teeth as emblems.

This request was made in a resolution adopted after photographs had been shown picturing elks shot for their teeth alone, with never any use made of their flesh or hides.

The resolution suggested that Elks be enlightened regarding "wanton destruction of elk for the sole purpose of obtaining their teeth for use as ornaments by members of the order," and that a ban on their use be provided in the form of a constitutional amendment adopted at the next Grand Lodge Convention.

Rapid progress in the rebuilding of the nation's second line of defense—the national guard—was made during the last fiscal year, says the annual report of the Chief of the Militia Bureau, under signature of Brigadier-General Jesse McI. Carter, retired. Last June 30, the report says, the guard numbered 113,630, with 331 organizations allotted, but not organized.

On the basis of expansion during last year, General Carter estimated that before the end of the current fiscal year the guard would number 160,000 men or 10,000 more than in the regular army.

Debate was precipitated in the House upon it reconvening for the regular session on the question of improving the St. Lawrence River, as proposed in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway project. Representatives W. W. Chalmers of Ohio, and A. P. Nelson of Wisconsin, Republicans, favoring the development, while Representatives A. J. Griffin, Democrat, and Fredrick C. Hicks, Republican, both of New York, opposed it.

CHRISTMAS LEFT-OVERS

Christmas has come and gone, and we all have enjoyed the blessed day. Our families have clustered around the family board for the festive meal. Now the mistress and housewife must utilize the left-overs so that there may be no waste and yet, at the same time, not bore the family with too much of the same thing.

The turkey is usually the hardest to utilize, particularly if the family is small. The best thing to do is to strip off all the meat from the carcass and break it up. Place in a soup kettle, cover with cold water and add: two onions, faggot of soup herbs, one carrot, cut in-tiny dice.

Simmer on the simmering burner for one and one-half hours and then strain. Now to plan dinner or supper, utilizing the left-overs from the Christmas dinner.

MENU.

Noodle Soup
Cheese Cutlets	Celery	Parsley Sauce
	Potato Balls
	Turkey Potpie
Creamed Corn	Lettuce	Mashed Turnips
	Reheated Mince Tarts	Coffee
	For supper:
	Turkey Sandwiches
	Macaroni and Cheese
Plum Pudding	Fruit Sauce	Tea

Noodle Soup.—Place six cups of stock from the carcass in a saucepan and add one-half small package of noodles, one onion grated, one-half teaspoon of white pepper, one teaspoon of salt, three teaspoons of finely minced parsley. Simmer slowly for one-half hour.

Turkey Potpie.—Place a piece of the turkey in the baking dish and then season. Make balls of left-over filling and then roll in flour and brown quickly in hot fat. Lift in the dish. Season and pour two and one-half cups of thick gravy over the turkey. Cover with a crust of plain pastry and then bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour.

Turkey Sandwiches.—Mince the left-over turkey very fine and then in a mixing bowl and add, three-quarters cup of mayonnaise, one-half cup of finely chopped parsley, one small onion, grated. Mix and then use between the slices of buttered bread. Cut each sandwich into triangles and then pile on plate covered with a napkin. Garnish each sandwich with a thin slice of pickle.

Left-over turkey may also be used in many other dishes.

Potted Turkey.—Put sufficient cold-cooked turkey through the food chopper to measure two cups and then use a fine knife to cut the turkey as fine as sausage meat. Add one-half cup of melted butter. Mix well and then pack into small jar and set the jar in a pan of water. Place in a slow oven for twenty-five minutes. Cook and then chill and use by cutting in slices.

Turkey Salad.—In the South this dish is greatly esteemed. Cut the turkey meat in one-inch pieces and then turn into bowl and add to every two cups of turkey meat, one cup of finely chopped celery, one hard-boiled egg, one cup of mayonnaise, three tablespoons vinegar, four tablespoons of finely minced parsley. Toss gently to mix and then let marinate for two hours. Now turn into a nest of crisp lettuce leaves and mask with mayonnaise dressing.

Turkey Biscuits.—Place in a mixing bowl, three and one-half cups of flour, one teaspoon of salt, three level tablespoons of baking powder, one-half teaspoon of pepper.

Sift to mix and then rub in three tablespoons of shortening and use one cup of water or milk to mix to a dough. Roll or pat out one-half inch thick and then spread with the following mixture, one and one-quarter cups of finely minced turkey meat, one tablespoon of finely minced onion, three tablespoons of finely minced parsley.

Mix and then spread between the prepared dough. Cut into oblongs or squares with a sharp knife and then bake in a hot oven for twenty minutes. Serve with cheese sauce.

Turkey Fritters.—Place in a mixing bowl, one and one-half cups of milk or water, one egg. Beat to mix and then add two cups of flour, four level teaspoons of baking powder, one level teaspoon of salt, one-half level teaspoon of pepper, three tablespoons of finely minced parsley, one tablespoon of finely minced onion, one cup of finely minced turkey meat. Beat hard to mix and then cook in hot fat and drain on soft paper.

Turkey Croquettes.—Place in a saucepan one and one-half cups of milk, one cup of flour. Stir to dissolve, then bring to a boil and cook very slowly for three minutes. Now add two grated onions, one-half cup of finely minced parsley, one and three-quarters cups of finely minced turkey meat.

Mix and then form into croquettes. Roll each croquette in flour and then dip in egg and milk mixture, roll in fine crumbs and fry until golden brown in hot fat. The picking from the carcass of the meat and skin through the food chopper can be utilized for these dishes. The filling can be made into croquettes and dipped in egg and milk mixture and then fried a golden brown.

Thin slices of turkey meat may be dipped in a thin batter and fried until a golden brown. Serve on slices of toast, garnish with parsley and cover with cream sauce.

GINGER FOR FLAVOR.

Ginger Ice Cream.—Sweeten two cups of cream or milk, add half a cup of chopped preserved ginger and two or three tablespoons of ginger sirup. Freeze. A few chopped nuts may be added if desired.

Ginger Bread.—Two cups of molasses; ground ginger and cloves to taste; three and one half cups of sifted flour; one teaspoon of cream of tartar, one teaspoon of soda, dissolved in warm water, one cup of butter, one cup of milk, four eggs.

Mix all together, adding soda last. Beat well; pour into pans lined with greased paper and bake in a slow oven. Do not fill the pans more than one inch deep, and bake twenty to thirty minutes. Test with a broom whip. Two teaspoons of baking powder may be substituted for the cream of tartar and soda.

Oysters in a Bread Case.—Take a round loaf of baker's bread at least two days old and scoop out the center. Do not break the crust and leave it at least an inch and a half thick. Dry the crumbs in a slow oven and roll very fine. Measure three cups and fry a light brown in hot butter. Make a sauce from one quart of rich milk, or half milk and cream, and three tablespoons of flour. Season with salt, pepper and a tablespoon of onion juice. Fill the hollowed loaf first with a layer of the sauce, then one of oysters, salted and peppered moderately, a layer of the sauce, and lastly one of the browned crumbs. Fill the shell in this order and bake slowly for thirty minutes. One quart of oysters is sufficient. Garnish with parsley and slices of lemon.

Panned and Deviled Oysters.—For informal suppers and chafing dish cookery, nothing is better than panned oysters with sherry or deviled oysters. If the oysters are to be panned heat two tablespoons of butter in the blazer and lay in as many oysters as you can conveniently. When the edges begin to curl add two tablespoons of sherry, cook a minute longer and serve on crisp toast.

For deviled oysters mix a pinch of cayenne, half a teaspoon of salt, a quarter to a half teaspoon of curry powder, a dessertspoon of Worcestershire sauce, and a tablespoon of batter. Put this in your dish, and when it is hot add one-fourth pint of oyster liquor and twenty-five oysters. Turn several times and cook until the oysters plump.

THE BEST STORY TELLER IN THE WORLD.

BY ANNA MAE BRADY.

Memories mean much to us, especially as we grow older and who is there among us who does not count the early home pictures treasured in the back of one's mind as its dearest possession? Can't you remember those happy, joyous, care-free times when Mother used to gather us around her knee in the evening after the day's work was done and tell us the most wonderful stories it has even been our privilege to hear? Many of us have studied the art of story telling since then and have heard the world's greatest story-tellers, yet to us Mother surpassed them all.

We never knew what story she was going to tell, that was always a surprise, and how we did like to guess which one was coming! Wasn't it strange the very night Brother Jack did not wash his hands and said he and Jim Thomas were never going to wash their hands again, wasn't it strange that Mother should tell us the story of the Pig Brother? Jack and Jim Thomas changed their minds even before she had finished. When Ruth Elizabeth told the most impossible things Mother always "just happened" to tell us a wonderfully imaginative fairy tale. And every evening we had Mother Goose rhymes for the baby, but I think we older ones enjoyed them as much as the baby did. Although we began these rhymes before she could talk, she used to laugh and clap her hands when we would say them. Sometimes we used to make up tunes and sing them for her. Those were very happy times, come to think of it they were the very happiest I've ever known.

When we went to the Kindergarten it seemed just like home because there we heard the same stories Mother had told us. And wasn't it fun when the teacher allowed us to tell them to the other children? In the primary our first reading books contained so many of these stories we knew and liked that we read it through in no time.

Mother is gone now but I can shut my eyes and see her in that old rocker, and nearly every day of my life something from those stories she told comes to me. I guess I listened so intently and loved them so much to the end of time for me Mother will always be the very best story-teller in the world.

THE TWILIGHT STORY HOUR.

BY NELIA GARDNER WHITE.

There is, to my mind, nothing more potent to discipline or for creating confidence between a mother and her child than a "twilight story hour."

A daily story time may sound like romance, but it is very practical and accomplishes more good than a thousand scoldings. There is a story somewhere for every phase of character growth, and any librarian will help a mother to find these stories. If there is no library available, there can be no better investment for the character-building of your child than the purchase of a few good story books. The child lives in a world of fiction. Do not deprive him of your companionship in that legitimate, fascinating realm.

There come in every day, small vexations, irritations because a child does not comprehend grown-up standards or is mischievous or wilful. Never let your boy or girl go to bed with the day's tangle unsmoothed. I have heard mothers say "I'm too tired when night comes!" or "I'm going out tonight,—I can't be bothered." The one who "can't be bothered" perhaps does not realize that a man or woman with breadth of vision and an imagination to accomplish great things may be in the making during that few minutes of every evening. The mother who is "too tired,"—and there are so many of them,—perhaps does not know what a blessed restfulness it is to have the children on her lap or about the fire with her, quiet after the day's excitement, listening with wide eyes to the twilight story. It is as soothing to the mother as to the children, and there is an intimacy growing out of that time which never ceases to be a blessing in after years.

You may say you have not the time to learn stories; would reading them do as well? For a score of reasons it would not. If you are really desirous of the best for your children and are looking for some way to make a beautiful harmony out of your lives together, you will find the time. It does not take more than a few minutes to read a story, and you can go over it in your mind while you are washing the dishes or preparing the vegetables for dinner. Perhaps the longest time required is in choosing the right story to tell at the right time.

As you study these stories, you will find that your own character is expanding, too. There is a lesson for grown-ups in all the old fairy tales and in many of the new ones. The story hour will keep your imagination from becoming dulled, it will quicken your sense of humor, it will make you young with your children and better able to enter into every nook and cranny of their child life.

Do not think that this method of disciplining is too indirect, that the moral of the story will be lost in the interest of the story itself. It has been proved repeatedly that this is not true, even when it may seem so at first.

Be consistent in the story-telling if you undertake it. Do not do it one night and neglect it the next. Make it a part of every day and it will soon come to be the sweetest, most restful and helpful time both to yourself and your children.

An Emergency Appeal

This is a critical time in the mountain community of Alpine, Tennessee. Here is located a Practical Life School, supported by the Board of Home Missions, which last year enrolled over 170 pupils. Its sessions were held in two old, dilapidated buildings, a church and a school. The church burned and the school building became unsafe and unfit for use.

The community purchased a 150-acre farm as site for an enterprise which would include church, teacherage, school and community building and a model farm—a great religious and practical life center. The men of the community quarried the stone for the buildings. Construction was begun.

At the present time the teacherage is nearly finished and one story of the school building is up and provided with a temporary roof. But building funds have become exhausted and certain expected resources have not materialized. While construction can not be completed at this time, funds are being sought to make the buildings as they stand usable through this winter.

The opening of the school was delayed until November 28th. It is now in operation, using two rooms in the incomplete school building, having five grades in the one room of the old school building, one class meeting in the shop and other classes using the manse.

Three hundred children will be reached this winter if circumstances permit. $1,400 is still needed for emergency construction.

Use the coupon for remittance.

WIT AND WISDOM

IN GOOD SEASON.

The town officers had just installed fire extinguishers in their big buildings. One day one of the buildings caught fire and the extinguishers failed to do their work. A few days later the town council tried to discover the reason. After they had freely discussed the subject, one of them said, "Mr. Chairman, I make a motion that the fire extinguishers be examined ten days before every fire."

RETURNING THE FAVOR.

On the death of her excellent cook—one quite superior to the ordinary run of servants, the kind-hearted mistress felt that the least she could do would be to send flowers to the funeral. As they happened to be the only ones which graced the solemn occasion, the family were quite impressed.

Two of the sisters of the deceased called a few days later and were ushered into the presence of the donor, who asked what she could do for them. They looked at each other seemingly much embarrassed, neither capable of properly expressing herself, and each wanting the other to make what apparently was to be an acknowledgment. Finally the elder sister said:

"We came to thank you for those beautiful flowers that you sent for sister," and then, with a little stutter, she added, "and we hope soon to be able to return the favor."

A PROUD DIPLOMAT.

A small boy was asked to dine at the home of a distinguished professor, and his mother, fearing he might commit some breach of etiquette, gave him repeated directions as to what he should and should not do.

Upon his return from the great occasion she questioned, "Richard, did you get along at the table all right?"

"Oh yes, mother, well enough."
"You are sure you didn't do anything that was not perfectly polite and gentlemanly?"
"Why, no—nothing to speak of."
"Then something did happen. Tell me at once," she demanded.
"Why, while I was trying to cut the meat it slipped off on to the floor. But I made it all right."
"What did you do?"
"Oh, I just said, sort of carelessly, 'That's always the way with tough meat!'"

VOL. XCII.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, DECEMBER 28, 1921.

NUMBER 52.

A PRESBYTERIAN FAMILY PAPER.

OUR EXCHANGES

A YEAR OF GRACE.

In religious parlance, "grace" signifies the free extension of divine favor and aid to the children of men. I like to think that the things I might not be able to do in my own strength are possible, even rational, when we think how the forces of nature co-operate with us on the material side of his life. Why should not the forces of the spiritual realm co-operate with him in his fight for character.—Evangelist.

A RESOLUTION.

Let this resolution take the foremost place of all, that, when this day of next year comes, and we look once more at the irrevocable past, there shall be fewer things to wish undone, or words to wish unsaid, and more spots where memory shall love to linger still, more steps which, when retraced in thought, will fill the heart with praise.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

ACTION ON PRESBYTERIAN UNION.

Committees on closer relations among Presbyterian Churches met at Richmond, Virginia. They found that while these churches were dwelling together in the most friendly way, yet owing to different views as to the method of consolidation, they were not prepared for organic consolidation. Thus another agitation sinks to rest and another channel of expense is closed, while the churches abide in cordial fellowship and effective labor, maintaining a Christian spirit and an honest and fraternal comity. The Big Church idea is not so exuberant as it once was.—Presbyterian.

OUTLOOK AND UPLOOK.

Throughout the new year there are two looks that are vital—the outlook and the uplook. Sometimes the outlook makes us afraid, but the uplook will give us courage. When the outlook is dark and dreary, the uplook will reveal a ray of heavenly light that will lead us over experiences that would make our hearts afraid.—Christian Observer.

BACKFIRE.

A current yarn about a liquor-loving Irishman has a smile in it. "Father," said he, on meeting the parish priest one day, "phwat is lumbago?" Seeing an opportunity for needed reproof, the good father replied: "'Tis a terrible disease which comes from drinking up booze and chasing around night."

"Is that so?" said Pat. "It says in the paper that the Pope has lumbago."—Journal of Commerce.

A BETTER YEAR.

The New Year is most likely to be as the old unless by your desire and effort it will be made into something finer and better, nobler and grander, than you have heretofore experienced. "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature. Old things are passed away, and behold all things are become new."—Evangelical Messenger.

MODESTY.

If Tumulty had written a book about the Wilson administration, it would have been gladly received. But the current installments being printed of the Tumulty output have to do with Tumulty for the most part.—Los Angeles Times.

TAUGHT OR CAUGHT?

Generally speaking, Christianity is spread only by Christians. It can not be taught like arithmetic or a language; but, by the beauty of the life hidden with Christ in God. It must be caught like the measles. Only, what we catch in this case is radiant health. Do others catch it from us?—Lutheran Youth.

INDUSTRY VS. THE BLUES.

It was a mistake for people to imagine that high prices and the silk-shirt days would last forever; but we can make just as big a mistake now, in forgetting that the present depression will have to give way, sooner or later, to prosperous times; perhaps not the elusive, delusive, dishonest brand of seeming prosperity that followed the war, but to the substantial, honest business success that America will command, if we are industrious and honest.—Wathena (Kan.) Times.

OUR DUTY.

The world is only an aggregation of individuals, and it is most important that we as individuals deal justly, love mercy and walk humbly with our God. As we face the new year, let it be with trust in God, and determination to bring our individual contributions to the making of a world in which dwelleth righteousness.—Baptist.

AT THE TURN OF THE YEAR.

Probably there is no time when we are so prone to pause for a little meditation, to "take stock" of the present, to recall the past and to dream of the future, as when the old calendar must be replaced by the new. We are inevitably, though perhaps unconsciously, affected by the consciousness that the new involves something of uncertainty; so we naturally stop at the turn of the year to take a look backward and a look forward.—Presbyterian Advance.

IDEALISM.

Our former allies and our former enemies alike look to America as their hope of a new and better order of things. Peoples that have groaned under the heel of militarism are asking America to save them—and to save herself. They make their appeal to American idealism. We wish that their appeals were in every instance as idealistic as the idealism they so generously impute to us.—Christian World.

THE ARMAMENT CONFERENCE.

The Armament Limitation Conference is promulgated on the principle of the less preparation for war the less likelihood of war, which is an exceedingly solid foundation upon which to build the permanent structure of peace.—Commercial Tribune.

ON EARTH PEACE.

No one dreams that peace on earth can be assured until these interests and policies are more nearly harmonized than is the case at present. Disarmament is dependent not upon treaties, nor upon any possible international league of alliance, but upon the attitude of heart and mind of the various governments on the question of international dealing.—Lutheran.

A New Year's Resolve Concerning BLACKBURN COLLEGE

Each week, throughout the coming year, there will be some brief item about this unique self-help school in these columns. Resolve to keep yourself informed on the progress at Blackburn by reading these short notes.

In addition to that, right now make the resolve and put it into effect to write at once, asking that your name be added to the mailing list. Then during the year you will receive some interesting letters from a few of the prominent men who compose the Board of Trustees and also occasional bulletins telling more about this work than can be said in these columns. This will involve no obligation on your part, though we are always glad to add friends to the list of those who help Blackburn with money.

PRAYER AND THE NEW YEAR.

We stand at the threshold of the new year. We pray that it may be a year of peace and good will and spiritual advancement. We pray that the presence and power of God may be manifest in the advance of the spiritual life of the Church and in the triumph of the Kingdom of God. Let it be a year of faith and courage, of prayer and effort, of spiritual living and of consecrated giving. If we live through it, may we become not simply a year older, but let us be a year wiser and better and more useful and more joyous in the service of our Savior and King.

Let the year be begun in prayer. The churches have been called to the observance of the Week of Prayer, and we hope that it may be for many of them the beginning of a time of great revival. Many a wide-spreading revival has begun in the earnest, fervent prayer of God's people in some particular church, and has extended from church to church, as the Spirit of God has carried it, as the strong winds of the material world sometimes blow in power that sweeps from coast to coast.

There have been many times in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ when a revival was apparently needed as greatly as it is today. The conditions have been trying. God's people have been made to tremble over the spiritual decline, and the prevalence of wickedness, and have cried out for fear. There have been times when infidelity has asserted itself boldly, and indifference has rested appallingly upon the people, and there has been a craze for amusement, and the love of many has grown cold, and faith has grown heedless, but in answer to the prayers of some the blessing of God has come, the evils have been dissipated, and the Church of God has come to victorious life, full of hope and warmth and prayer.

So may it be now. There is need for it. There has been almost a paralysis resting on the life of the people. There has been neglect and indifference. There have been many vacant places in the sanctuaries. All of this may be changed. The house of God may be thronged everywhere. Prayer and praise may everywhere abound. Souls may turn in multitudes to the Savior. The world may soon turn to him in faith and the isles may soon wait for his law. When Christians pray in united faith, God answers in infinite love and grace.

In many ways, the Church of God has experienced the mighty power of God during the past year. There have been many revivals and many conversions. The Church has had a great stirring of its life. That it has not lost ground has been a great triumph of divine grace. With all the tide of interest and effort, there has been no noticeable relaxation of effort in the life and work and benevolences of the Church. Congregations have attended the preaching of the Gospel; evangelistic work has led multitudes in almost undiminished numbers into the membership of the churches; missionary and benevolent agencies have been sustained by consecrated givers, and the Church has had more than its usual influence upon the life of the people of the nation. The tide seems to have turned and there are indications of a gracious time for the Church this year.

THIS YEAR ALSO.

A young girl described a very wearisome walk by saying that she had been able to take only one step at a time. But that is the way in which even the most exhilarating walks are taken. Our years are lived only one day at a time, and divine grace and help are promised by the Lord to his people in the gracious assurance that "as thy day so shall thy strength be." So as we enter upon another year, untried and unknown, let it be by committing the life to the Lord who is alone able to lead us and keep us all along the way.

This year will pass day by day, and they who walk through it will take but one step at a time. There is much plodding in a good and useful life. They who have patience to walk and not faint show more of real grit and character, and accomplish more, than they who mount up on wings as eagles, or who run without growing weary. It does not take so much grace for doing the work that is exciting and exhilarating. But to do the work that calls for the steady pull and the constant repetition and the ceaseless grind, demands grace from on high and a heart that is receptive of the grace.

Especially is this patient, persistent, persevering spirit to be desired in those who are doing the Lord's work in his Church. How often a pastor has groaned because his workers became tired of their duty and turned out to be quitters. The mother of the Wesleys, in answer to the petulant query why she said the same thing over twenty times to her children, said that she did so because nineteen times was not enough. An advertising firm that has won a foremost place in the business world insists that "keeping everlastingly at it brings success." A solid and substantial plodder said he had found out that "dogged" was the word that kept one from failing. Many a pastor has wished that he could find teachers for his boys and girls in the Sabbath school who would take classes and hold on to them until all the members were grown and in the Kingdom. There are some teachers who do that very glorious thing.

We need persistency in the work of the Church. There are men and women who begin the year and go through the year by being at every service of the Church, and who can be depended on to come wherever the Lord makes an appointment. There are those who pray and who do not faint. There are those who run well and will not permit themselves to be hindered. There are those who fight the good fight, and who finish their course, and who keep the faith.

May this be a year in which a great many shall keep the faith, and who, steadfast and immovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, do not grow weary in well-doing.

This is a great year that is just closing. There has been much work done for the glory of God and for the uplift and salvation of men. There have been great revivals with large additions to the Churches and there have been large plans for carrying on this work with increasing activity. The great Disarmament Conference, which has been held, promises a mighty advance toward peace and good will among the nations of the world. The year has left its mark upon the world. We believe there has been a perceptible forward movement to better and happier things. Let this work and this spirit be carried forward into the coming year, and let us, by the grace of God, make it the best and most satisfactory year that we possibly can. God gives us successive years that we may improve on each of them as they come.

A DIVERSION OF ENERGY.

The promoters of the World Conference on Faith and Order, which always is to be, but never is held, sends out a circular letter proposing that it be held in 1925, and appealing for funds. This letter is signed by about thirty persons, among them Dr. Arthur Brown, of our Foreign Board, and Drs. Wm. Adams Brown, Henry Sloane Coffin and Harry E. Fosdick, of Union Seminary. It makes this broad, positive statement:

"Until the churches emerge from sectarianism and speak with a united voice, the message of the Gospel can not be effectively delivered. Men who have no organic connection with any church are interested in Jesus Christ, but say that they can not find him in the multiplicity of the sects."

We do not believe that this statement is true. Moreover, such statements do more to hinder the work of the churches than denominational division. Money given to our Foreign or Home Board will do more to make the message of the Gospel effective than the same money given to men who do not believe that it can be made effective until all denominations are united in one organization. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. To substitute anything else, however good, for it, or to make its effectiveness depend on anything else, ignores the great commission given by our Lord to his Church, with his assurance, "Lo, I am with you always."

The proposed Conference on Faith and Order is an Episcopal proposition. Its literature shows it to be practically in line with the Lambeth Conference, and that one of its conditions is the doctrine of Apostolic Succession, which implies that a direct line of episcopal ordinations can be traced back to Peter, and that unless a preacher is ordained by bishops of the Anglican or Catholic Churches, he has not full rights to administer the sacraments. This is a denial of the validity of the ordination and sacraments of Protestant Churches.

The reply of the Methodist bishops to the Lambeth Proposals is a fit reply to the call of the Conference on Faith and Order. In this they say:

We recognize the desirability of a visible expression of the spiritual unity of all who confess the Lord Jesus Christ as the only Mediator between God and man. In furtherance of the spirit of unity we have gladly entered into fellowship with our brethren of the various religious communions, engaging with them in frequent interchange of pulpit ministrations and other forms of Christian service; recognizing freely the ministerial credentials of worthy men who come to us from other branches of the church of Christ; and seeking in all ways to promote that spiritual oneness for which our Savior prayed.

In matters of faith and practice we find ourselves, as our Articles of Religion, our ritual, and the teachings of Methodism show, in close accord with the Lambeth Conference.

But respecting the condition of union laid down in the appeal with reference to ministerial orders, we are compelled, with all due regard for the earnestness of the proposal, and in full view of the tremendous issues at stake, to register our dissent.

We are fully aware that the Lambeth Appeal denies any intention of questioning our ministerial orders, and proposes that reordination shall not be deemed as a repudiation of a former ordination, but solely as a qualification for officiating in the churches of the Anglican communion. None the less, we see in the demand for reordination, as well as in the present canonical laws of the Church of England and of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, and in the customs of both which make for exclusiveness, a theory of orders which we can not in conscience acknowledge. The fact that our Anglican brethren feel that they can recognize the orders of priests from the Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox Churches, but demand reordination for the ministers of Protestantism, would indicate that they hold a theory of the "Historic Episcopate" which we could not accept for ourselves and which we could not consent to demand from the ministers of our honored sister communions in the United States and elsewhere.

We believe that the Methodist Bishops express the conviction of Protestant Churches generally, and that any union movement involving a denial of Protestant ordination simply diverts the attention of the Churches from their work of proclaiming the Gospel, and itself is doomed to failure.

GOSPEL TRACTS.

The Presbytery of Southern Oregon, as we noted at the time, recently requested the Board of Publication and Sabbath-school work to furnish tracts free to Presbyterian ministers for distribution among the people. The Secretary of the Board, Dr. H. M. Robinson, D.D., informs us that he at once wrote the Stated Clerk of the Presbytery that for years the Board had furnished free tracts to Presbyterian ministers and was still doing so. The secretary also incloses to us a "Select list of tracts and booklets," which is "drawn up for the use of Sabbath-school missionaries," all of which "are available for free distribution upon request from any Presbyterian minister." It contains the regular list prices of the tracts, but it is stated that "all the tracts listed are available for free distribution, and may be secured for that purpose by all Presbyterian ministers."

The list is a very attractive one for all who wish to see their people provided with short, terse, valuable statements as to Gospel truth. There are tracts and booklets by good writers on "Presbyterians and the Standards; Family Worship; Baptism; Church Membership; Christian Stewardship; The Sabbath; Mormonism; Christian Science; Russellism; and Temperance;" besides a long list of devotional and evangelistic and practical tracts, suited for almost any situation or condition or class or age.

We would suggest that every minister in the Church write at once and request this list from the Board, Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, and acquaint himself with the titles and make such calls for these publications that the printing presses shall be soon set to work reproducing them in large numbers. We take it that the call is not so much for having them free as for having them at all, that they may help in the evangelization and instruction of the people of every congregation and community. Each pastor might well spend several dollars in having these tracts and booklets furnished his young people and his older people for their indoctrination.

We need a revival of religious reading, and of the distribution and reading of tracts. With a proper emphasis upon it there will be an increase in the results of evangelism and a decrease in the suspended roll.

"OUTLINES OF HISTORY, ETC."

A French writer expresses his amazement that the writings of H. G. Wells, and particularly his history and comments on the Armament Conference and other international matters should be taken seriously in the United States. He regards him "an unbalanced disturber who rewrites religious and secular history in the interest of his own schemes."

An English critic, Henry Arthur Jones, says: "In skimming the vast floods of language that Mr. Wells has poured out over the Washington conference, I ask whether any writer has ever used so many words to expose his own blindness to the essential facts of the situation he is professing to illuminate for other people."

A Canadian writer, George Hanson, says that his statements "have to be repeatedly checked," and that he assumes to settle all "unsolved problems by the stroke of his autocratic and facile pen." He says: "Mr. Wells himself, despite his self-assurance, has apparently a faint idea that his performance may be regarded by some as exasperatingly impudent and superficial. He's perfectly right in his suspicion. How can you pass over without comment his thirtieth chapter, headed 'The Beginnings of Christianity'? He professes to be neutral in his treatment of the Christian records, and yet nothing more partisan and rationalistic could be penned than his account of Christ's life, character and mission. Christ's miraculous birth is, according to Wells, a 'legend'; Christ 'never claimed' Deity; his disciples, 'after their first dismay', imagined an 'amazing miracle by which he would become undead and return again.' These are but specimens of what I personally can only regard as a caricature of Christianity."

PROHIBITION ASSAILED.

An attempt is being made by the liquor interests to degrade and debauch the nation by restoring the manufacture and sale of wine and beer. Of course, the object of the move is to permit the object to get drunk and the avaricious to make easy money. The specious plea is made that the tax on these drinks would bring in a great deal of money, hypocritically and viciously suggesting that this could be employed in providing for the soldier bonus. The bill has been introduced by a liquor Congressman from New York, but Congress is not so devoid of common-sense and virtue as to pass it. They know too well the sentiment of the nation. Nor can a Congress be elected next fall that would pass it. But it will be well for all responsible and respectable people to be on their guard. Evil elements are conspiring to break down all prohibitory restraints. They will if they can. Let them be watched and opposed everywhere.

There is, without question, a deepening interest in evangelistic work, and the systematic effort along the lines of thorough organization is bringing great results. Every church, large or small, supplied or vacant, should have a special series of meetings this winter, and many presbyteries are determined that no one of their churches shall be neglected in this important matter.

The appropriation of $20,000,000 by Congress for the relief of the starving in Russia will not only relieve much distress and suffering there, but will add to the pleasure of our Christmas in this country. Job said that he would be very undeserving "if I have eaten my morsel myself alone." How much worse for us, in our abundance, to withhold food from the perishing. But America is full of sympathy and generosity, and tries to be a friend to all the world.

Many of our colleges, among them many of our very finest and best, are making special efforts, in view of conditional offers of important amounts of money, to increase their endowments at this time. It would be a great advantage to the cause of Christian Education if, during these passing years, these institutions succeed in securing their needed substantial endowments.

It will not do to forget the needs of the people of Armenia in our own experiences of comfort. We are hoping that the world may soon be lifted out of its conditions of misery in many lands. While we are in peace and plenty let us continue to send help to the Near East Relief, the Ohio Division of which is at 318 Schofield Building, Cleveland.

Christian Work prints a letter from a missionary in China which, as it intimates, has a bearing on questions raised by the China Bible Union as to unsound teaching. The missionary says: "Few have made such an impression at Kuling as Dr. Fosdick. Our good friend, Dr. Griffith Thomas, being so keen for his own view of truth, seemed to break down in Christian charity and nearly rent the camp in twain. Fosdick has united the factions again. As usual, it was the view held of Scripture that was dividing people, the literal party holding to inspiration and the old reputed authorships, and the others weighing every passage, discarding some things, showing how two accounts had been woven together in many cases, and how different authors had worked on one book." This letter seems to confirm the charges that there are among the missionaries some who do not hold to the inspiration of the Scriptures.

Dr. Hyslop, of the West Riding Asylum, in England, said to the British Medical Association that the best which his practice had revealed to him, was prayer. "I say this," he added: "The exercise of prayer, in those who habitually practice it, must be regarded by us doctors as the most adequate and normal of all the pacifiers of the mind and calmers of the nerves."

"LET THE REDEEMED OF THE LORD SAY SO," (Ps. 107: 2.)

BY W. J. MASON.

If you've put your trust in God,
Say so;
If you're anchored on his word,
Say so.
If the Savior is your friend,
And on Jesus you depend;
If you trust him to the end,
Say so.
If you're sure you're in the right,
Say so;
If you've courage for the fight,
Say so.
When your faith is good and strong
And you're fighting 'gainst the wrong;
When the Gospel is your song,
Say so.
Tell with earnestness your tale,
Say so;
Show the world you never fail,
Say so.
Never waver to the side
As with vigor on you stride;
Say your say with honest pride—
Say so.

THE MINISTER.

BY REV. JOHN Y. EWART, D.D.

I have, in a previous article, emphasized the vital importance of an exemplary life in any man who aspires after ministerial usefulness.

Add to this, as essential:

1. A life of prayer.
2. A life of Bible study.
3. A life of intensive cultivation of the spiritual garden of which he is, for the time being, the under-gardener, or, if you prefer to put it that way, a life of sincere devotion to the flock of which he is for the time the under-shepherd.

1. True prayer is, indeed, one of the very highest acts of which the soul of man is capable. Samuel Taylor Coleridge, when upon his death-bed, as one who was with him in his last hours tells us, used this language:

"Believe me, to pray with all your heart and strength, with the reason and the will, to believe vividly that God will listen to your voice through Christ, and verily do the thing he pleaseth, thereupon, this is the last, the greatest achievement of the Christian's warfare upon earth."

Wisely has Dr. Wm. G. T. Shedd said:

"The degree of our religion will depend upon the depth and heartiness of our prayers. It does not depend upon the length as much as upon the intensity of the mental activity."

"I made it a practice," writes one of the pastors of Newton Presbytery, "which I kept up for over a year, to pray every day for every person of my two parishes by name upon my knees. It took over an hour to go over the list. My body would often be tired when I finished. I told the people this at the close of the meetings." God answered his prayers. Thirty-nine were added to one church and thirty-three to the other. (From "The Story of a Year of Evangelistic Effort in Newton Presbytery," published by the Assembly's Committee on Evangelism.)

2. The story of the Word of God is vitally important to the minister. We would be more spiritually minded men and, therefore, more efficient ministers of the Gospel, if we sought, first of all, in the study of the Bible, to satisfy our own minds and put them at rest in respect to the great themes of salvation, perdition, God's purpose, and man's destiny. Suppose a minister's mind wavers, for example, in regard to the necessity of Divine Regeneration, or the malignity of sin, or the efficacy of the atonement, or future punishment, he can not preach any of these great fundamental doctrines to his congregation with clearness, conviction and power. He must first establish his own mind in the truth before he can preach that truth savingly to others.

Bible truth should be pondered over, and meditated upon. "It is not what a man eats, but what he assimilates that nourishes him," writes President James G. K. McClure, of McCormick Theological Seminary. "Many readers are no stronger after reading than before. Jonathan Edwards read with pencil in hand, not to make record of other men's sentiments, but of the sentiments aroused by the reading in his own mind. One of the beautiful possibilities of a pastor's life is that he can take a thought, go out calling with it, turn it over and over in his mind, apply it here and apply it there, let it ramify in all the directions which the needs about him suggest, and then come home with a heart crowded with new ideas. No, it is not the amount of reading that a man does that gives him intellectual resources, but the amount of pondering he does on worthy ideas; ideas that, brooded over, hatch out; ideas that grow in grandeur, beauty and power the longer they are considered." ("The Growing Pastor," p. 29).

3. There must be real devotion in the minister's heart to the work to which he has been called and to the people for whose souls he is responsible, under God. A young pastor was complaining to an old pastor, of the smallness of his congregations. "You have as many in attendance upon your services as you will be able to give account for on the Day of Judgment" was the sensible reply.

Upon almost every page of the Gospels we are impressed with the intense passion of Jesus Christ for the souls of men. He loved them with an everlasting love. Ever he was eager to be about his Father's business. He allowed nothing, whether man or angel or demon, to interfere with the doing of his duty as revealed to him by the Father. He was compassion incarnate in dealing with the unfortunate. The fifteenth chapter of St. Luke reveals in three parables his great heart as it goes out in strong, tender love toward the lost sons and daughters of men. And in the twenty-third chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel we read the expression of his intense indignation and stern condemnation of the Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, who shut up the Kingdom of Heaven against men; "for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." (v. 13.) And then he said: "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." (Matt. 20: 28.)

And:

"The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19:10.)

And:

"Joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance." (Luke 15: 7.)

How can we, brother ministers, be other than diligent, earnest and devoted, when we are following in the footsteps of such a Savior?

"Wherever he went," says Dr. E. F. Hallenbeck, "whatever he did, he was seeking the lone weary sheep that had gone astray, listening for the faintest cry of need, looking for the slightest symptom of distress. Even while he hung upon the cross, his body tormented with excruciating pain, his soul burdened with the sins of a guilty world, he had time and strength to reach out and pluck a sin-scarred soul for Paradise. If we call him Master and Lord, by all that is true we are bound to make his mission ours." ("The Passion for Souls," p. 59.)

FROM THE WESTERN OFFICE.

BY REV. B. P. MULLERTON, D.D.

Dr. King has returned from the conferences he and others conducted in Oklahoma, beginning Oct. 27, and closing Dec. 13, and reports items of interest to the readers of this paper. I have plead for a long time the need of fuller information on the task of the Church in this country, and what is required in the way of men, organization, effort and money, believing that if the people were informed, they would furnish the men and the money, and the conferences in Oklahoma and Texas, convince me that I am more nearly correct than I at first thought.

One deputation had Dr. King, Dr. Mack, and Dr. Moody, part time each, that is to say Dr. Mack and Dr. A. E. Moody divided the time while Dr. King went the whole round, as did Mr. Shaub, the field man for the territory covered by this deputation. The other deputation consisted of Dr. Montgomery, Dr. Overstreet and Dr. Lamb the field man for the territory covered by this deputation. Dr. King and Dr. Montgomery represented the Home Board, Dr. Overstreet and Dr. Mack and Dr. Moody represented the New Era, while Mr. Shaub and Dr. Lamb represented the local interests.

The plan was to hold an afternoon conference, when the real work of the Church was talked over, and then men and women present had an opportunity to ask questions upon the whole task. Then at a dinner prepared by the women and attended by the men and women, items of interests were presented by members of the deputation, and later a popular meeting was held to which the whole community was invited, when other addresses were made and the evening closed with a stereopticon address. In this an appeal was made to the eye as well as to the ear, and the work of the Church was forcefully visualized. These men return with a deepened conviction that this is one of the best ways to awake the Church to the importance of the task the Church has in this country, and how important it is now at this particular time that we overtake it.

The whole number of conferences held were twenty-three, at which there were seventy-five churches represented, and an attendance of 8,580. Think of what this means not simply to these 8,580 people, but to all those whom they will reach with the messages they heard. We may expect that in Oklahoma we shall have an enthusiasm that will tell on the work for the years to come.

In addition to the conferences there were one hundred and sixty addresses made, and further interest engendered. Then the people were shown not only the task, but given the sources from which they could get other information, and the plans by which they might impart this information to other people.

On the three Sabbaths embraced in the series the deputation would reach two, three and more churches with information. One of the members reports that he received eight people into the church he served on one Sabbath, baptizing six of them and also baptizing four infants, as the minister in charge was not ordained. Then we must not forget the help these visitors gave to ministers serving small and unresponsive churches, and who have felt that it was a small service they were rendering the kingdom, but when these men laid before their people the great task of the Church it made it easier for them to push forward their part of a great enterprise. Letters are already coming to the office telling of the good imparted where these men have gone, and no doubt there are others who could tell of an equal service rendered them. One member of a church visited, writes that they are still encouraged by the messages brought.

Dr. Montfomery has not returned, as he went from his last engagement in Oklahoma to San Antonio, Texas, to take part in the conference of those who are doing work among our Spanish speaking neighbors, but hopes to reach the office soon.

Men are beginning to see that business must wait on the services of the Church if it is to be prosperous and permanent, and over and over again are men saying that the only hope of the country is the Church of Christ, and yet, it is hard to get these same men to back up their theories with the money necessary to meet the insistent demands of the time, but I believe that in such conferences as these to which reference is made in this letter, we will find one way by which the means and men will be supplied.

CHICAGO LETTER.

BY REV. E. N. WARE, D.D.

In our city on Dec. 21 there were two men ordained bishops: one with all the pomp and formality of the Roman Catholic Church attended by hundreds of dignitaries in robe and gown; the other a licentiate of the Chicago Presbytery with all the simplicity and spiritual atmosphere, the dignity and fellowship of the "laying on of the hands of the presbytery." In the Fourth Church Mr. Harold A. Dalzell was ordained to the work of an evangelist. Mr. Dalzell has been identified with the work of the Fourth Church as related with the Men's Club for several years. His ordination will greatly enlarge his usefulness. Dr. Stone, the pastor, gave the charge to the evangelist, which was full of sound advice and personal appreciation, wholesome and gracious. Mr. Dalzell is a graduate of the Oregon University and was engaged as Y. M. C. A. Secretary for the Northwest when Dr. Stone called him to the work in the Fourth Church. He is especially gifted to work with young men and there is a large field for his gift in the Fourth Church. Dr. Stone now has four ordained assistants in the work of this great and ever-enlarging parish.

The Oak Park First Church, Rev. Roy Ewing Vale, D.D., pastor, takes on another foreign missionary in the roster of missionary workers supported by the church, in the person of Mrs. Ross Stoddard (nee Georgia Luccock, daughter of the former pastor, Dr. G. N. Luccock, and a sister of Rev. Emory Luccock, of Nanking, China), who will serve at Peking, China, as a special missionary of the Woman's Society.

The unemployment situation has brought into activity the Chicago Christian Industrial League, of which Rev. George A. Kilbey is superintendent. During the war the League simply marked time as an organization. Now the call for help on the part of men out of work is such that the League has rallied its forces under Mr. Kilbey's superb leadership, and preparations are being made for the most active winter in the League's long years of service. A new industrial home and workshop has been opened at 1043-45 West Monroe Street, in the heart of the West Side "down-and-out" district. The superintendent is calling on the church homes for old and worn clothing, cast-off furniture and old papers and magazines as a means of keeping men at work.

The "Torch," which is the monthly organ of the Church Extension Board, gives the following account of the splendid work which Rev. W. M. Morrison is doing with the Gardner Church, which is in the village of Gardner, on the Alton Railroad. "The church at Gardner for many years has been under student care, the population from a thousand to fifteen hundred people, with two banks and a generally prosperous condition. The three churches have long been feeble. The Baptist Church is closed, the Methodist has a part-time service. In order to get Mr. Morrison to take charge, live on the field, giving his full time to it, the Board contributed at the rate of $400 toward the $1,600 salary. After nine months the church assumes the entire salary. The building, which was sadly dilapidated, has been put in perfect conditions. Something over a thousand dollars has been raised as a special fund for church repairs."

Dr. Robert H. Beattie, for more than two years superintendent of the Presbyterian Training School located at 1823 Prairie Avenue, has resigned. His resignation was accepted at a special meeting of the Board of Directors which was held at the school on Dec. 22. Mrs. Kerswill, dean of the school, has been put in charge ad interim. Several new scholars have enrolled for the next semester. A committee was appointed to look for a new superintendent.

Chicago Presbytery, at its adjourned meeting on Dec. 19, voted a resolution especially commending the public officials of Chicago and Cook County in their endeavor to command stricter enforcement of law, and of the prohibition laws in particular. Also it passed a resolution of congratulation to Chaplain James L. Griffes upon his promotion to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel upon the completion of the number of years required by army rules and regulations. Chaplain Griffes is now located at Ft. Sheridan with the U. S. army.

Rev. Ralph M. Davis, D.D., of St. Louis, has accepted the call of the Hyde Park Church, and is expected to take charge the first of the year.

Rev. Ward Klopp, who is a student in McCormick Seminary, will be installed in the Braidwood Church at an early date.

President James K. McClure, of McCormick Seminary, preached in the Third Church on Christmas Sabbath in the absence of the pastor, Dr. C. S. Stevens, on account of sickness. The annual offering for the Presbyterian Hospital was taken.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. CLARENCE G. REYNOLDS, D.D.

There was a wealth of Christmas songs and sermons in the churches. The choir of the Episcopal Church of the Heavenly Rest sang Christmas carols in front of the church on Fifth Avenue Saturday afternoon. We note that the ministers in their Christmas sermons exalted Jesus as the Divine Redeemer, the King of kings and Lord of lords. A great deal was said concerning the hope of continued world peace, and prayers were offered that the nations may hear and heed the great Prince of Peace. At the Fourth Presbyterian Church Rev. Dr. Hugh Black was the preacher on Sabbath evening.

At the West End Presbyterian Church the pastor, Rev. Dr. A. E. Keigwin, presented Bibles to the children of the church who were baptized seven years ago. At the evening service Captain Gipsy Pat Smith, the Scotch evangelist, preached. The church sent 400 dinners to as many needy families.

Saturday, Dec. 17, Rev. Dr. D. Stuart Dodge, for nearly sixty years an active force in our Presbyterian Church in this country and in the Near East, died at his residence in New York City after an illness of several weeks. The funeral service was held in the Brick Presbyterian Church Tuesday, Dec. 20, the pastor, Rev. Dr. William P. Merrill, officiating. Dr. Dodge was the last of seven sons of William E. Dodge, the first of the name, the late William E. Dodge, the second, being an older brother of Dr. Stuart Dodge. In 1857 Dr. Dodge was graduated from Yale. In 1864 he was ordained following his graduation from Union Theological Seminary. In addition to extending the educational and missionary work of the Presbyterian Church, Dr. Dodge was an ardent temperance worker and was president of the American Temperance Society. He also was the founder of the Chester Crest Home in Mount Vernon, N. Y., for inebriates. For many years he had been president of the Board of Trustees of the American College at Beirut, Syria, of which members of his family have been liberal supporters. He also was from 1899 until 1915 president of the Home Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church. He also, like other members of his family, was deeply interested in extending the Young Men's Christian Association. The wife of Dr. Dodge, who died many years ago, was a daughter of John Phelps, of New York. The surviving children are Walter Phelps Dodge, who lives in London; Clarence Phelps Dodge, of Colorado Springs, Colo.; Francis Phelps Dodge, who also lives abroad, and Guy Phelps Dodge, of Woodstock, N. Y.

WASHINGTON CITY LETTER.

BY REV. WALTER F. EAGLESON, D.D.

Christmas time brings to light some very beautiful customs, by which different localities celebrate the great occasion. The Christian Endeavor societies of Washington City have long celebrated Christmas Eve by singing Christmas carols. They go from home to home of members of a given church and sing at the midnight hour. To be awakened by fifty or a hundred voices at midnight is a worthy treat; but to hear their voices rendering the rich music which ages have produced for Christmas time brings a rich joy.

Dr. Henry E. Brundage, who has been sick for a long time, was able to attend the ministers' meeting last week. The brethren arose to signify their delight at his return. Through the years he has been rendering a good account of himself as pastor of the Eckington Church.

Rev. Adolas Allen, D.D., formerly associate pastor of the First Church, was a welcome visitor among the brethren last week. He has just finished serving the First Church of Stamford, while they were looking for a pastor. The Stamford Church says: "We have found him to be first and always a man of God, who, out of a broad experience in the ministry, has brought into his work a high Christian character." Such testimonies are treasured by the ministry, more than the salary received.

One of the very beautiful suburbs of Washington City is Takoma Park. It lies partly in the District and partly in Maryland. It is the fourteenth city in size in Maryland, and has many beautiful buildings, such as Walter Reed Army and Navy Hospital, Seventh Day Adventists National Publishing House and National Sanitorium, and the Bliss Electrical School. The Presbyterian church, Dr. Thomas C. Clark, pastor, is the leading church. The Methodists are about to erect a very beautiful church, of which a large part of the cost is borne by the Methodists at large by their Centenary Fund. The Baptist church is also about to erect a building which will be a credit to Baptist work in the Capital. The Church Aid Fund of the Southern Baptist Association is furnishing large financial assistance. The Presbyterian church also needs a modern plant, but will scarcely be able to compete with the other new churches, unless aided as they are aided. The Sabbath school overflows everywhere. Extra chairs fill every available place, three classes occupying the pulpit; and during eight months of the year classes occupy the lawn. One large adult class has been abandoned for want of room. The Sabbath school and church have doubled in membership in the past ten years, while finances have trebled. Dr. Clark has kept the church in the lead in its service to the community. But that leadership will be seriously challenged when the new churches near at hand are completed. A new plant is most earnestly needed at Takoma Park for the Presbyterians.

The Conference on Limitation of Armaments is making splendid progress, to the very great satisfaction of the Church. It was a gratification to have the Conference opened with prayer, thus recognizing the King of kings. Some dangerous places have been passed, and there is every reason to believe, at this writing, that this Conference is to be one of the longest strides forward ever taken toward the ideals of the Church. Much credit is given here to the President and the Secretary of State for following in general the diplomacy of "open covenants openly arrived at." While there have been closed sessions of the Conference, the mooted questions which would endanger the success of the Conference have been placed before the public. The result is that nations which have taken untenable positions in the closed sessions have quickly reversed their positions with the aid of a world looking on. We run better when we know we are surrounded by a cloud of witnesses. The time seems literally to be here when that which was done in secret shall be proclaimed from the housetop.

"America's most distinguished private citizen" has been giving many lectures in Washington (during the Conference), to the great delight of the citizens and legislators. Even ambassadors, envoys and foreign potentates through to his meetings. His hold upon the people of Washington City is greater than ever before. There is always a throng to hear the Presbyterian elder, Hon. William Jennings Bryan.

PITTSBURGH LETTER.

BY REV. S. J. FISHER, D.D.

Our Ministerial Association listened, on Dec. 19th, to an exceedingly suggestive and well-written paper, by Rev. Grant E. Fisher, D.D., pastor of the Turtle Creek Church, on "A Preacher's Study of Conscience in Literature." It was the fruit of wide and studious reading, and gave many illustrations of this faculty as described by dramatist, poet and novelist.

As Rev. Percy H. Gordon, D.D., of the First Church, Braddock, has accepted a call to the First Church, Salem, Ohio, it is probable our presbytery and city will lose an efficient and faithful worker and preacher. He will find in Mahoning Presbytery appreciative and worthy associates, and be of large usefulness.

At this communion, on Dec. 11th, which occurs each two months, the First Church, Rev. Maitland Alexander, D.D., pastor, received sixteen on profession and twenty-two by letter.

On Dec. 18th the Third Church, Rev. W. L. McEwan, D.D., pastor, received thirteen on profession and eight by letter. Dr. McEwan conducted both preparatory and communion services.

Rev. W. A. Kinter, D.D., of the Banner, has been trying to escape the peril of winter winds, on account of a delicate throat, by musing on theological problems while following the elusive golf ball across the sandy links of Southern Pinerias, and now has gone to Florida for the remainder of the season. His colleague, Rev. J. T. Gibson, D.D., will shortly make one of a party sailing Feb. 11th, on a European and Oriental cruise. While we shall send them forth with every good wish, we are somewhat troubled with the absence of theological and social pilots which this arrangement seems to foretell.

The unveiling of the tablet commemorative of the pastorate of Rev. Dr. J. M. Duff, in the Carnegie Church, of forty years, went off successfully on Dec. 18th, as it might be presumed would be the case, with Rev. Dr. J. Kinsey Smith delivering the address, and Rev. A. T. Schleich offering the prayer, and Dr. Duff's grandson removing the veil. Dr. Duff's brief response, though difficult for one whose modesty is marked, was couched in admirable terms, and marked by the simplicity and good taste which must be characteristic of a minister who abides in one pastorate for so many years.

The First Church, Oakmont, Rev. C. A. McCrea, D.D., pastor, have purchased a new organ at a cost of $2,000.

The Herron Avenue Church, Rev. H. V. Baker, pastor, have purchased a narrow lot alongside of their edifice, and will enlarge and furnish the basement for use as a gymnasium and social rooms. The cost will be about $6,000, which they will raise by a loan from the Board of Church Erection, and a mortgage on the church building, the old debt on the property having been liquidated.

Both the presbytery of our church and that of the United Presbyterian, in this region, have adopted a resolution calling upon our City Council of Churches that they will be responsible for no action of the Federal Council which has not been presented to the presbytery. The action arose from the the action taken by the Council, antagonistic to professional evangelists. These presbyteries, while not altogether favorable of some evangelists and their methods, regarded the Federal Council as too radical in its action, or likely to convey a wrong impression.

Stepping into the library, it may not be inappropriate, even to this season, to note some comments on religion, and some signs of the times. Apropos of the paper on Conscience, I could not help feeling an incident in New York City was suggestive. The Times of that city editorially criticised a corporation for sending its messenger along the crowded street with a large sum of money as a pay roll, where he was met by four men and easily robbed. The frequency of such robberies gave the editor the opportunity to call in question the prudence and common-sense of a business firm which so carelessly exposed its messenger and property. The business firm, disputing the criticism, seemed to think it was entirely irresponsible, because the money in the hands of the messenger was insured. Such logic, or such reasoning, seems to me absolutely conscienceless. What about the insuring company and its stockholders? Have they no right to consideration, to proper care on the part of those taking out the insurance? There is a moral responsibility here. If I have my house insured, and it takes fire, shall I make no effort to extinguish it, or to call the fire department, because I am fully insured, and perhaps am not unwilling to rebuild? Such a spirit is immoral, and I would not trust such a firm or individual across the street. There is no bed-rock of principle in such characters.

Here also, is another of the illustrations that some modern-day writers of fiction carry fiction into all their writings. Some of these novelists enjoy a chance of tilting at the windmills of their own religious construction. Thus Meredith Nicholson, in an article in Harper's, vigorously dilates on the enormity of preaching fire and brimstone, and says, though he came of a Christian family, he would not teach such doctrines to his children. I am so doubtful of Mr. Nicholson's ever having heard a sermon exploiting fire and brimstone, he can not be a Presbyterian, that I could wish him to dine at my expense in this city, if he prove his point. I feel sure he never was so disturbed in Indianapolis. If he thinks the ideas underlying fire and brimstone are repellant and should not be preached, then he parts company with Jesus Christ. If he dislikes to believe in a judgment to come, whatever be its form, let him decide as Margaret Fuller finally did about the universe: "I accept the universe." "Gad! she'd better," said Carlyle. In the same article Mr. Nicholson sounds the same note in regard to prohibition that a number of thoughtless people do, condemning it as exciting lawlessness. It is merely his opinion, and some of his assertions I should challenge, and their inference. One of the most difficult things to obtain along this line is the actual fact. Recently Senator Wadsworth of New York said: "I personally know of appeals made by reputable physicians in Washington to their friends to help them in securing liquor for medicinal purposes to administer to their patients, and hundreds and hundreds of poor people, who otherwise could not be helped in the way that many reputable physicians insist is the best way, would have been without recourse to those remedies had it not been for the efforts of physicians who went about this city asking private citizens to donate liquor for use in hospitals." Quoting Senator Wadsworth, John P. Davis, M.D., Executive Secretary, New York Medical Association, says: "With all due credit and respect to those physicians for acting in this way, there is the oft-repeated charge of Wayne B. Wheeler, counsel of the Anti-Saloon League, that the passage of the bill supplementary to the Volstead act, which prohibited instead of regulating the prescribing of alcoholic beverages, was protested by a single physician of these United States. This is absolutely true, and but for this protest this bill would have gone to the Senate with no recorded opposition to its passage. It is true that nine physicians of New York recorded a protest of the same kind at a later date, in the Journal of the American Medical Association. Neither at Washington, before Congress, nor in their medical societies, however, have any of those physicians publicly advocated the cause of those patients whose lives would have been sacrificed but for the efforts privately made to save them in the manner described by Senator Wadsworth." Dr. Davis' indictment is very direct. If there is any sincerity and principle in those "reputable physicians" who are authority for Senator Wadsworth's heart-rending description of Washington Hospital and the invalid poor, it is not apparent.

CHURCH ERECTION BOARD.

To realize how greatly help is needed in church building, and how much it is appreciated, is shown by the following letter just received by Rev. David G. Wylie, D.D., General Secretary of the Board of Church Erection: "We are so glad and thankful for the grant of $600. We need a church so badly. We are not able to have services or Sabbath school for want of a house, and the children coming from day to day want to know how soon we will have Sabbath school. We will have our house completed in another week. We have collected all our funds that have been subscribed except a small sum, and we will get that as soon as it is called for. We are paying for the house as it is built. We thank you and the Board for favors, and pray that God's blessing may rest on you and all the churches."

MICHIGAN LETTER.

BY REV. WILLIAM BRYANT, D.D.

It is becoming remarkable for boys and girls in our Presbyterian Sabbath schools to be able to recite the Shorter Catechism? The Detroit Daily News in its Saturday edition published a picture of a class of seven girls and one boy in the Gratiot Avenue Presbyterian Sabbath school, who had recited to the pastor, Rev. S. Forest Stitt, faultlessly, the Shorter Catechism. They will receive the valuable Bible given by our Board of Publication, and also have their pictures in the "Educator." The writer treasures as one of the valuable books in his library a prize received when he was eleven years old for reciting the catechism, question and answer, without missing a word, and the most cherished thing in the book is the inscription written by his old pastor, afterwards elected to a theological professorship. How many times young men under examination for licensure have found a safe refuge for a difficult question in the 107 answers in the catechism.

Whether the Synod of Michigan will so radically change the character of its annual meetings as to hold them in June for an entire week will depend in the first place as to whether the committee to report on the matter can present an attractive proposition as to time, place and program; and, in the second place, as to whether the eight presbyteries at their Spring meetings will vote as presbyteries for such an arrangement. There are of course, difficulties to overcome. We are not accustomed to do things as deliberately as they do in California. It will mean many readjustments. Then it is true that it will mean a different basis of financial plans, not as simple as might at first be supposed. The advantages are many, but especially in the spiritual objective. We unmercifully hurry our ecclesiastical business, largely because it does not make a sufficient appeal to busy men. We could not unduly hurry courses of Biblical study, or seasons of devotion. But the committee can do nothing without the endorsement of the presbyteries.

The New Era Committee of the synod, in session at Detroit last week, did not find it an easy task to fairly adjust the quota to be raised by each presbytery. Of the total amount, $452,645, to be raised, Detroit Presbytery is to have the privilege of raising $264,428. This is about $37,000 more than last year. The amount is not staggering, but it does call for a big united effort, which is just as true in regard to the synod at large.

The Central Presbyterian Church of Detroit can not be accused of being over-hasty in securing a pastor to take the place of Dr. Hugh Jack, removed to Newark, N. J. They have not been actually hearing candidates, but they have done a great deal of "sermon-tasting" of which they are naturally adepts. Just at present they are, by way of variety, planning for a Bible Conference, to be held Jan. 6 to 11, at which Rev. French E. Oliver, D.D., is to deliver twenty-one lectures "in testimony of the Lord Jesus Christ." Whoever is elected as the pastor must be absolutely sound as to the fundamental of Bible truth. This is not an Athenian congregation looking for some new religious exploration.

The other prominent Detroit Presbyterian church vacant at present is the Highland Park Church, but they are not ready to hear candidates until some matters are adjusted that are now in the hands of the Administration committee of presbytery, of which Rev. M. E. Anderson is the efficient chairman.

The best answer to the various onslaughts on prohibition Detroit is a pamphlet issued by the police department, showing that crime has decreased sixty per cent since prohibition went into effect in the city. One department of convictions has of course increased, that in regard to violations of the liquor law. But that is not an argument against prohibition.

CHURCH LIFE IN CALIFORNIA.

The Presbyterian Building Fellowship of San Francisco Presbytery is in its campaign to help erect worth-while churches for growing Presbyterian congregations in the San Francisco Bay region. The Fellowship is composed of persons taking shares for a period of three years. Already it has made $800 worth of repairs at Newark, cleared off a debt of $5,000 at Concord, built a $3,400 annex at Rodeo, built the first unit of a new church at Northbrae, the unit costing $60,000; spent $10,000 in improving and equipping the Union Street Church; built a $25,000 church for Calvary at Berkeley, and built a new $27,000 church for the united Bethany-Glen-side Church on Ocean Avenue. The Fellowship plans a neighborhood house for Russians and other nationalities on Potrero Hill, a neighborhood church on High Street, Oakland; a residential church at Lincoln Park; a modern building for St. James Church, Oakland; a better building for the Park Side Church, San Francisco; an outstanding young people's ministry at Golden Gate, Oakland; a new building for St. James Church, San Francisco; and a new building for St. Paul's Church, San Francisco.

The Presbyterian Board of Church Erection reports through its General Secretary, Dr. David G. Wylie, a total of more than $53,000 expended thus far this year in behalf of churches in California in loans and grants as follows: Clearwater, $800; Berkeley, Calvary, $2,000; Planada, $750; Escalon, First, $1,000; Weed, Mount Shasta, $4,100; Los Angeles, Mexican, $1,500; Azusa, Mexican, $2,000; San Gabriel, Mexican, $700; Los Angeles, Grace, $1,500; Belvidere, Los Angeles, $500; Bell Memorial, $3,700; East San Diego, $2,000; Terra Bella, First, $4,000; Blue Lake, $500; Los Angeles, Euclid Heights, $4,000; Southgate, Garden Community, $3,000; Lometa, First, $4,000; San Juan, Capistrano, $1,000; San Francisco, Lincoln Park, $8,000; Oakland, St. James, $8,000.

Rev. Ng Poon Chew, a member of Los Angeles Presbytery and former pastor of the Chinese Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles, is now editor of the Chinese daily paper of San Francisco, "Chung Sai Yat Po," and is called the most brilliant Chinaman in America. He delivered a lecture at the banquet in the First Church of San Diego on Dec. 12, and at the Y. M. C. A. of Los Angeles on Dec. 13, for the Presbyterian Social Union.

Dr. Swearingen, Moderator of the General Assembly, is to be in Los Angeles on Jan. 20 for addresses, and in other California cities on the same tour.

Wilshire Church, Los Angeles, was dedicated on Dec. 4, with sermons that day and during the following week by Dr. J. A. Eby, pastor, and Dr. Briegleb, Dr. Hugh K. Walker, Dr. Robert Freeman, Dr. Herbert B. Smith, Dr. Campbell Coyle, Dr. J. A. Stevenson and Dr. Mark A. Matthews.

Dr. David R. Breed, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has been making a protracted tour in Southern California, delivering Bible addresses on the fundamental doctrines.

IDAHO LETTER.

BY REV. J. H. BARTON, D.D.

Eighteen members were recently received into the Jerome Church, Rev. R. Lloyd Roberts, pastor. This church is greatly handicapped for want of adequate equipment. The foundation of a new building has been completed, but owing to the financial stringency, the superstructure will not be built until next summer.

Rev. E. W. Hollowell, Sabbath-school missionary for the presbyteries of Boise and Twin Falls, has spent most of the past three months holding evangelistic meetings in home mission churches and outstations. His work has been fruitful of much good.

Two members were recently received into the Lake View Church. This church is located in the country, nine miles from Caldwell, and is supplied by Rev. H. H. Hayman, a professor in the College of Idaho.

Rev. J. C. F. Dillon, of Bancroft, is seriously ill. He is undergoing treatment, but with little evidence of improvement.

Evangelist Bruce Evans held a series of meetings in Caldwell in November, in which four churches united. A deep spiritual impression was made on the community. Over 300 professed conversion and many Christians reconsecrated themselves to their Master. The basis of Mr. Evans' work is the preaching of the gospel of salvation through faith in Christ, the crucified, risen and exalted Redeemer. The Presbyterian church received seventy-seven members as a result of the meetings, sixty-five by profession.

Rev. A. G. Pearson, formerly of Kansas City, was installed pastor of the Twin Falls Church on Dec. 6. Rev. Charles H. Evans, moderator of presbytery, presided and preached. Rev. Samuel Harris charged the pastor and Rev. Arthur C. Evans the people. The installation prayer was by Rev. E. W. Hollowell.

Rev. Charles L. Chalfant, D.D., who for the past four years has been vice-president and financial secretary of the College of Idaho, has resigned, to accept the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Hospital of Pittsburgh, Pa. Dr. Chalfant came to Idaho, as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Boise, in 1908. After serving in that capacity seven years, he became secretary of the Idaho Children's Home Finding Society, which position he filled for two years. Since that time he has given his time and effort to securing funds for the college, with gratifying results.

ARKANSAS LETTER.

BY REV. C. E. HAYES, D.D.

A joint meeting of the New Era Committee of the Synod of Arkansas and the Executive Committee of the Woman's Synodical Missionary Society was held in the office of Dr. C. E. Hayes, the Synodical chairman, December 13. The amount of the National New Era budget is $14,500,000. The churches are to raise out of the total amount $12,115,000 and the Woman's Missionary Societies to raise $2,385,000. The amount allocated to Arkansas Synod is $21,122; the Woman's Missionary Societies $4,300 or a total of $25,482. The joint committee accepted the amount apportioned for Arkansas and apportioned that amount to the presbyteries and presbyterial societies as follows: Arkansas Presbytery $10,025; Presbyterial $1,700. Ft. Smith Presbytery $8,052; Presbyterial $1,700. Little Rock Presbytery $2,233; Presbyterial $460. Jonesboro Presbytery $1,200; Presbyterial $500. March 12th next, was adopted as the day for the every member canvass in all our churches. The presbyterial committees will have a meeting early in January at which time allocations will be made to every church.

It is the request of the New Era Committee that every church pay in the money on the budget which has been sent down for the year closing with March 31, next, at the earliest possible date. Then begin with April first, 1922, with the determination of sending in a part of the budget at least every quarter. Some churches are remitting each quarter and I trust this number will enlarge speedily. Not until the membership of our churches learn that they are stewards of the Lord, and that at least a tithe is his, will there be the placing of the Lord's money on the altar. Our churches have never given to the extent of their ability. "Uncle Henry" Caldwell says, "I have never seen any one go to the poor house because they gave too much money to the cause of the Lord." It is my observation that those who object to giving money are those who give little or nothing. If our budget for next year is paid, it will be about $3.75 per member. This is small. One almost feels ashamed of it. The amount is far below the average for the denomination and far below the amount given by other denominations per capita. Brethren, let us arise and place our synod where it should be. We can do it if we will.

Rev. T. N. Threlkeld and his wife, of the Ravenden Spring group, are now in a meeting at Wirth. The church house was partly blown from the foundation recently. Under the supervision and help of Mr. Threlkeld it has been placed back and repairs made on building.

The Van Buren Church recently ordained and installed three elders and five deacons, Rev. Dr. W. B. Millers is pastor.

The Men's Bible Class of the Clarksville Church, celebrated its third anniversary by giving a banquet recently, Judge

J. W. Wade, an elder in Grace Church, Little Rock, was the speaker. Recently nineteen young men were organized into a Bible class in the Clarksville Church.

On a recent Sabbath, one elder and one deacon were ordained and installed in the Grace Church, Little Rock.

At a meeting in Ft. Smith of the Ft. Smith Presbytery on Dec. 15th, Rev. F. Sanders was received from the Presbytery of Jefferson. Mr. T. J. Williams, an elder in the Grannis Church, was received under the care of presbytery as a candidate for the ministry.

KENTUCKY LETTER.

BY REV. JAMES F. PRICE, D.D.

The Field Day, Dec. 14th, for Presbyterians in Kentucky, held in Louisville, was indeed a great day. The Chairmen of the New Era Committees and representatives, both of the men's and women's work, were present from every Presbytery in the state. Rev. W. A. Eisenhart, of Bowling Green, chairman of the New Era work in the state, led in that work. Rev. Geo. H. Mack, D.D., Superintendent in the South, was present. Rev. W. H. Foulkes, D.D., Executive Secretary of the New Era work of the Church, made two excellent addresses. Rev. Cleland B. McAfee, D.D., of McCormick Seminary, ably represented the foreign work of our Church. Rev. Edgar P. Hill, D.D., Secretary of the Board of Education, delivered able addresses on Christian education. Our Moderator, Dr. H. C. Swearingen, made three great addresses. The services were held in the Fourth Avenue Church, Rev. C. W. Welch, D.D., pastor. This church and Warren Memorial did a great part in entertaining the visitors. It was a great day, and we believe the effects of it will be felt throughout the Synod of Kentucky.

The Executive Committee of the State Sunday-school Association of Kentucky met in the Watterson Hotel, Louisville, Tuesday, Dec. 13th. At this meeting the officers of the Executive Committee, the secretaries and the field workers were elected. The reports from the office and from the field workers showed a great year's work done. Rev. Geo. A. Joplin, D.D., was re-elected as general secretary; Mrs. Geo. A. Joplin as office secretary; and W. J. Vaughn and Miss Mary Virginia Howard as field workers. The work of the ensuing year will be entered on with renewed vigor. Three out of these four workers are Presbyterians.

The Presbytery of Princeton met in Princeton, Dec. 15th. Rev. E. N. Hart was received from Ebenezer Presbytery and Rev. F. P. Flaniken, D.D., was dismissed to Neosho Presbytery. On request the pastoral relationship between Rev. J. F. Claycomb and the Central Church, Princeton, Ky., was dissolved. Rev. James F. Price was appointed moderator of the church session. Rev. F. Claycomb was granted permission to serve the Providence group, and was appointed moderator of the sessions of Providence, Dixon and Shiloth. Rev. E. N. Hart was granted permission to serve the Marion group, and was appointed moderator of the sessions of Marion, Chapel Hill and Crayneville. A group of churches was formed, consisting of Dawson Springs, Kuttawa and Water Valley. Rev. James F. Price, synoical evangelist, was appointed moderator of these sessions, and was requested by the Presbytery to supply Dawson Springs and Kuttawa each one Sabbath a month until the next meeting of Presbytery.

WELSH SYNOD OF OHIO.

The Welsh Synod of Ohio and Western Pennsylvania met at Columbus, Dec. 1, and took part in the dedication of the new Welsh Presbyterian Church, costing $121,000, free of debt. Rev. E. Edwin Jones is pastor. There were many services, with sermons by Rev. John Hammond, D.D., Rev. D. J. Williams, D.D., Rev. John Rhys Roberts, Rev. S. W. Griffith, Rev. J. W. Matthews, Rev. S. S. Palmer, D.D., and Rev. R. J. Williams. There was much singing and many fine musical services. Rev. John Rhys Roberts, of Johnstown, Pa., was elected moderator for the coming year, to take his seat at the next meeting. There are two synodical meetings a year. At each meeting there are six sessions of public meetings, and two sermons at many of these. The next meeting of synod will be at Oak Hill, Ohio, June 1-4. The Welsh Presbyterian Church is an integral part of the Presbyterian Church since the union, but it retains its own synods and presbyteries for the present.

THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

BY REV. JOHN S. EAKIN, D.D.

It is a truism that back of every good man there is a good mother. Mr. Lincoln declared "All that I am I owe to my mother." Phillips Brooks said, "My mother made me a minister." James A. Garfield, at his inaugural, looked down at a little woman in the crowd and said, "Mother, you put me here." Such illustrations could be multiplied.

It is also true that along side nearly every good minister there stands his good wife, his helper in every good work. A good wife is heaven's best gift to man. She is his good angel of graces innumerable. Her voice is his music, and her smile the balm of his life. Her lips are his counselors, her economy is his safest steward, and her intercessions are ladders of the angels of God. Many a minister owes his success as pastor and preacher under God's blessing to his devoted wife.

HER PLACE IN THE HOME.

(1) She makes the home. The minister's wife is a member of his congregation like any other Christian woman. Her first place is in the home. The minister wants and needs a home. God established the family as the unit of society; and if there be a little bit of heaven on earth it is a Christian home. Here the wife reigns supreme. "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her." In her love and understanding he finds rest for body and soul. Home is the place of the minister's safety and protection. There his weaknesses are safeguarded and strengthened, his worries are smoothed away, and new hope is implanted in his heart.

(2) She is a wise counselor. Her woman's intuition often enables her to see a way through a situation which is hidden from man's reasoning. Her judgment, in most cases, may be depended upon to suggest the wise course. There will come to her sympathetic ears the story of conditions and needs in the congregation which it would be well nigh impossible for the minister otherwise to discover. She does not fall into the heresy that she must carry the whole burden of the home. Rather she believes in Gladstone's rule that change of occupation is the finest rest, and so she gives her husband domestic occupation as a rest from parish occupation. She applies Chalmers' doctrine of the "Expulsive Power of a New Affection," and entrusts the children at times to his clumsy masculine management as a necessary diversion. "She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

(3) She is a kind critic. Socrates, who stands in history as head of the tribe of the henpecked, acknowledged that he owed a large part of his virtue to the exercise which Xantippe constantly gave it. If the ancient stoic and philosopher could profit by the continual fault-findings of a quarrelsome spouse, surely we can profit by the loving corrections of our "better halves." For most of us are creatures of habit. Some habits are like an ornament of gold, and to be much valued; but too often they are like an iron chain fastened upon us, and we are not conscious of the fetters. These habits are seldom morally wrong, and yet may hinder our usefulness. They are, perhaps, mere mannerisms of speech or conduct of which we have grown unconsciously, but which may cause offense or be the occasion of unfavorable criticism. And yet any member of the congregation would, probably, hesitate to call to our attention this defect. But the minister's wife can and does help him to lop off these eccentricities, and puts him on guard against himself.

(4) She will have some special friends. She has a right to them. It is natural and human to want some kindred spirits. Our blessed Lord had an inner circle among his disciples, and they were favored above the others. But the minister's wife is showing no more favoritism, nor is she violating any social convention when she has a few special ones whom she makes her confidants, and in whose friendship she finds strength and courage. She will be friendly with all, because she is truly interested in all. The rich do not awe her by their wealth, nor do the poor repel her by their poverty. She is in touch with all classes and conditions; and because her mind is open to all, the hearts of all go out to her in respect and confidence. But if she and a few intimate friends want to have a little party or meet somewhere for a luncheon, or see a picture, simply because they are special friends, she is altogether within her rights. She craves fun and relaxation like any one else, and will be stronger physically, more alert mentally, and more earnest spiritually, if she has her special friends.

HER PLACE IN THE CONGREGATION.

(1) She has no official position. The attitude of the average congregation is that, having called the minister at a certain salary, they have also called his wife, who is to serve without salary. Yet the minister's wife is not related officially to the congregation any more than any other member of the church. But just because she is the minister's wife she has come to be regarded as having official position.

(2) She is willing to do her part and more. Her accomplishments are supposed to be as varied as the requirements made by a man who was expecting to buy a horse. He went to a liveryman with a list of specifications like the following: the horse he wanted was to be sound in wind and limb, good looking, high spirited but safe for a lady to handle, speedy as a driver and well gaited under the saddle, not high priced, and gentle enough for the children to drive to the lawn mower. The liveryman listened courteously, leisurely lighted his pipe, and then gravely inquired, "Would you also want him to act as waiter in the dining room?" In short, the man was looking for an impossible combination. So the congregation sometimes expects the ministers' wife to be and to do the impossible. She is just human, sometimes very timid, and on occasions discouraged. But within all reasonable limits she is willing to give and does give wholeheartedly of her time, strength, interest, ability and prayer for her local church and for the kingdom. She labors and prays and sacrifices. She is like a ministering angel to many that are poor and discouraged and sick and shut-in. Hands are constantly stretched out toward her on every side, and virtue goes out of her consecrated personality to help them. She truly and sympathetically enters into the lives of other wives and mothers. Women will bring to her their problems which they can not and will not bring to the minister. Sometimes family discords can be removed and reconciliation effected because of her friendship and interest. She is quick to discover the beginnings of strife, and often succeeds in quenching a flame before it becomes a conflagration. She enters the work of the parish not merely from sense of duty, but from a sincere desire to be serviceable. She regards the work in and for the church as one of her blessed opportunities. She is called to leadership because she is the pastor's wife; she retains leadership in many instances because of her unusual qualifications. Dr. Hastings of New York was once visited by a committee who sought information concerning a certain minister whom they had in view for their pulpit. The doctor gave the man a fine recommendation, and then added, "He has a most excellent wife." The spokesman said, "We are not calling his wife." Doctor replied, "But you will find that she will be with him if he comes." And in most instances it is exceedingly fortunate for the church that the minister's wife is with him when he comes and while he stays.

SOME THINGS NOT TO BE EXPECTED.

(1) She should not be expected to neglect her home. In a way the manse must be kept continually as an open house for the congregation, and people be made to feel welcome to come and go at all hours. Now it takes just as much time and strength and ability to keep the housekeeping machinery of the manse in good running order as in any other house. Sewing, mending, baking, laundry, dusting, scrubbing, marketing, telephoning, writing, getting the children off to school, helping with the lessons, receiving callers, etc., have to go on in the manse just as in any other establishment. No house runs itself, and the burden of its care falls upon the wife. It is an injustice to ask of her so many outside engagements that she has not the time needed in her own home. She will probably be criticised, some saying that she does not make enough calls, others that she misses some of the regular services. The fact is that what some call neglect means not lack of interest, but lack of time and strength. As a minister's income is fixed, and he can do little to add to it, she is trying constantly to keep expenses within the income; and usually she succeeds unless the poverty or parsimony of the church make this an impossible and heart-breaking task.

(2) She should not have to lead all the activities of the women. Mr. Moody was a prodigious worker. He seemed to do more than it was possible for one man to accomplish. But he was also a great organizer. His rule was: "It is better to put ten men to work than to let one man do ten men's work." To distribute the work not only increases the output, but enlists the interest of more workers, so that the work will be constantly enlarged. Even if the minister's wife could head all the women's organizations it would not be wise for her to do so. The Scripture rule is: "To every one his work." There is need for leaders to be in process of training all the time, so that in case one is providentially taken out some one else is ready to take up the task and go forward with it. When responsibility for the various lines of church activity is distributed, the workers come to have increased respect for the abilities of the preachers' wife, who when necessity arises can step in and make things go. It may sometimes be much harder for her to get some one else to do things capably than to do it herself, but in the long run it is better for the work that others should lead.

TO SUM UP BRIEFLY.

Under average and normal conditions the place of the minister's wife is as a home builder for her husband and children. Then she will be a pastoral helper in co-operation with her husband, doing such work as her own qualifications and the opportunities of the parish make possible. And every true minister to whom the Lord has given a good wife feels in his heart that much of what he is and has done he owes to her. "Her children arise up and call her blessed. Her husband also, and he praiseth her."

VOCATIONAL EVANGELISTS.

In these days of specialists, we show our inconsistency in the work of the evangelist. The trained evangelist as he goes about can give valuable counsel on many points.

Many fields need men trained in the field of survey, such training as comes from actual work in the field. Many church buildings were constructed by architects who had no practical knowledge of acoustics, nor even as to seating. Many a minister has his "blue Monday" because no attention was given to ventilation, and he was charged with dull pulpit work, when it was the architects' fault, and often the janitor's.

The singing in many churches needs suggestion from trained men whose business it has been to work with congregations, and no class of men know this ministry better than the musical evangelist.

Finances lag, because the spirit of awakening has gone from the church, and no department is more assisted, than the business of the church, when revival awakening lays hold of a community.

Much of the training of personal workers goes for naught, because some promoters of this sort of so-called "education" attempt to formulate what is called a "program," without securing an atmosphere for the workers in their program. No personal work is effectively done until some sort of revival awakening takes place. Much of this is like attempting to weld iron on a cold anvil with a cold hammer.

The psychology of strange audiences is a matter of personal contact. Printed words can not describe the touch of Ole Bull's powerful bow across his violin. Only work in the field, under the Holy Spirit, will teach men this unwritten language.

In many a field pastors should have better publicity. Wonderful men are in small fields, not appreciated because of stinginess, often, on the part of church officers, who fear a few dollars invested in printers' ink.

Meetings on the basis of the membership roll are needed, when groups will be worked out, and overseers of these groups appointed, according to their social and commercial standing, as well as spiritual attainments. This is an important measure in the "follow-up program."

After thirty years in the field as a "Vocational Evangelist," I never felt more convinced than I do now of the need of more trained men, under the direction of our Assembly's Committee, to assist pastors whose heavy load of duties seem almost sufficient to drive them into insanity. Chester Birch.

MISSION WORK

MISSION STUDY CLASSES IN EVERY CHURCH.

Work along educational lines is to be vigorously promoted by the Women's Presbyterian Societies of the Pittsburgh Presbytery during the coming months. It will be the aim of both the Home and Foreign Missionary Societies to establish mission study classes in every church of the presbytery. A "School of Missions" is also urged, in which the following departments of the Church may take part: The Church Organization as a whole, the Sabbath school, the Young People's Society, the Women's Missionary Society and the Westminster Guild. The plan is to have a continuous study for at least six or eight weeks. The plan is suggestive for other presbyteries and their churches.

The study books for this year in connection with foreign work are: "The Why and How of Foreign Missions," by Dr. Arthur J. Brown, and "The Kingdom Nations," by Eric M. North. The Home Mission books are of special interest. "Unfinished Business of the Presbyterian Church in America," by Fred Eastman, which deals exclusively with the task of the Church in the evangelization of our own country, and draws its illustrations from the work of the Presbyterian denomination, and "Survey to Service," by Paul Douglass, are two that should be included among the study courses.

It is important that ministers and members of missionary societies get into communication at once with Mrs. A. W. Hepler, 1124 Jancey Street, E. Pittsburgh, Educational Secretary, and get full information concerning the organization of classes.

A graded curriculum is now being prepared for presentation or missions in Sabbath schools, which will prove of value to those having that department of the work in charge. Books, specially-adapted pageants, monologues, impersonations, etc., may be secured from the Presbyterian Book Store. Special costumes to be used in the pageants and missionary entertainments can be secured through Mrs. John Gillespie, Western Avenue, North Side, Pittsburgh.

Prominent business men, educational and mission workers feel that the one way to solve the problem of world reconstruction is to put forth every effort to revive interest in missions, and to do this no better way has been found than through the mission study class. M. A. M.

CZECHO-SLOVAKIA.

BY REV. C. E. EDWARDS.

Years ago Europe was included in the topics of the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Missions. Our Foreign Board restores it, adding it to the topic for January, 1922. One of the most interesting countries, in the heart of Europe, is Czecho-Slovakia, where the greatest movement since the Reformation is progressing in Bohemia and Moravia. The "Czech Brethren" have tried to meet the emergency by sending a hundred laymen to places where there are from three hundred to three thousand recent converts. They need help. The expenses for these workers are at least 20,000 Czecho-Slovak crowns a month, or 240,000 a year. Add to this 7,000 crowns a month to aid pastors who are willing to give their vacations to supply these spiritually hungry multitudes, and the total will be 350,000 yearly; but at present rates of exchange only $4,500 altogether, or less than the annual expenditure of many American congregations.

"Victory" is the appropriate name of the new church in Ziskov, a suburb of Prague, containing 70,000 inhabitants. Several converts, added about six months ago, each brought in a hundred or more new accessions. The church was organized Aug. 1, 1920, and in the opening months of 1921 had about five thousand accessions. They enlarged the chapel, but can make no further progress without an adequate building. Their many organizations have only one auditorium, and "their wings are bound." Eleven hundred children are under this pastor's care. In addition to his regular work he delivered 165 lectures on religion in 180 days. He asks if any in America can help this overwhelming need of a new building.

Reports from pastors who visited needy regions in Bohemia and Moravia reveal the depth and power of this revival. More than one refers to the singing of the people, their meetings for practice, sometimes drilled by a schoolmaster, for Bohemians are a musical race. They were encouraged by the attention of audiences. They were touched by the eagerness of the children for instruction, sometimes begging for another hour, often asking for more books, especially Testaments or Bibles, which are difficult to get and more costly than before. Some children went a mile to welcome the pastor. People are giving up profanity and quarrels, and exhort one another as to the proper character and conduct of real "Czech Brethren." Instances are given where they bore the expenses of funerals of poor people, supporting orphans, helping young women to get an education. Some audiences could meet in woods in summer, but now almost everywhere proper buildings are needed for the growing multitudes, unable to provide them. One pastor believes that the whole southern part of Bohemia, if properly evangelized, would welcome the Gospel.

And Bohemia, having more evangelical Slavs than any Slav country, is the key to evangelization of all Slav nations across Europe to the Pacific Ocean, nearly two hundred millions of souls. Rev. Dr. V. Losa, of Pittsburgh Presbytery, can arrange to support one of these Bohemian workers at present exchange for $175 a year. His address is Fulton Building, Pittsburgh, Pa. May this January Monthly Concert in America be a blessing to Europe.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

The Garden by the Sea, and Other Poems. By George W. Harrington. Cloth. $1.50. The Cornhill Publishing Company, Boston.

This is a collection of pleasing poems on a wide variety of subjects, and with many styles of expression. The reader finds much to please him on the pages of this very pretty book.

Tree-Top Mornings. By Ethelwyn Wetherald. Cloth. $1.50. The Cornhill Publishing Company, Boston.

This is a very cheerful and interesting collection of verses written with great variety of metre and subject, showing a happy spirit and a real aptitude for versification. There is much that pleases among the many poems that fill its pages.

An Optimistic Outlook. By Rev. J. H. Carpenter, D.D. A paper read before the Ministerial Association of Lincoln, Neb., showing that the times in which we live are full of promise of good and gracious things from God. The paper is full of bright views and hopeful facts.

The Church in the Present Crisis. By William Allen Harper, LL.D., President of Elon College. Cloth. $1.75. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

The author of this vigorous book is a member of the "Christian" Church, and writes from that stand-point. He is anxious for the world-wide spread and success of Christianity and considers the means best adapted for its advance. He has many excellent things to say, but interspersed are many words and expressions that can not be endorsed by those who believe, for instance in the absolute authority of the Word of God as the only rule of faith and practice. He thinks that division among Churches, even for the maintenance of purity of faith, is a horrible evil, and thinks that the faith could be maintained in some other way. He puts unity thus above the purity of faith. It is a pity that so many good things in the book should thus be put to foil. The preface is by Rev. Peter Ainslie.

PAMPHLET.

Synod of Ohio. Minutes of 1921. Rev. E. T. Swiggett, D.D., 2132 St. James Avenue, Cincinnati, Stated Clerk.

Enclosed please find check for $2.50 to pay another year's subscription to the Herald and Presbyter, which I consider the best paper money can buy. My father took the paper when I was a boy, and said his father took it when it was called by another name. Since coming West I have been taking it myself, and would not do without it. I have always admired the firm stand you take on all vital questions. R. E. D.

Enclosed find M. O. for $2.50 for renewal subscription to your paper for another year; feel that I can not get along without it, as I have read it all my life and have taken it myself for over forty years. M. E. W.

Please find enclosed money order for $2.50 for the Herald and Presbyter. Please give us a little more paper; not as large as of former years by quite a good deal. Respectfully. Mrs. T. P.

JOHN WANAMAKER'S MESSAGE.

Dr. Percival H. Barker of the Point Breeze Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., spoke Sabbath evening, Dec. 18, on "John Wanamaker's Message to the American Youth of Today." This sermon was broadcasted by the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company; and was heard by Mr. Wanamaker at his private wireless receiving set in Philadelphia. The sermon was based on Mr. Wanamaker's reply to Dr. Barker's letter asking him how he got his start in life. Mr. Wanamaker's letter is as follows:

"My dear Doctor Barker:

"When I first came, a country boy, to Philadelphia, I went on an errand to the office of an insurance man who was a Christian. A small white card with small black letters on it was fastened upon the end of the desk, where I read, 'He is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek him.'

"As I look back today upon that card and remember its influence upon me, it still seems to be the greatest thing that I ever saw in Philadelphia, because it spoke to me; I believe the statement; and I trusted myself to lean back upon the Word of God. Everybody told me to be honest, and truthful, an energetic, but not even the strongest of men could make me an absolutely sure promise. The promises of God have behind them his knowledge and power, and if he rewards a man that diligently seek him, we shall find out the meaning of the Savior's words when he said: 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of Heaven and all these things shall be added unto you.' As the days go by I find my Bible my best company, and the closer I get to it, the more strength I have in believing that the God that made me means to help me through his Word.

"Benjamin Franklin said: 'He that keeps his shop, the shop will keep him,' which causes to me to say I believe that the man that keeps the Sabbath will find the Sabbath keeping him. It will draw him closer to the house of God, and God's message will reveal to him the Book of Books, the Holy Bible.

"Very sincerely yours,
"John Wanamaker."

BETTER CITIES CAMPAIGN.

Dr. William A. McKeever, of the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare of the Presbyterian Church, has just concluded his Better Cities Campaign in Oklahoma, and the judges have awarded the prize of $2,500 to Shawnee.

Two years ago Dr. McKeever induced the Rotary Club of Shawnee to offer a prize of $2,500 for the best city in that State in which to rear the young, and to place their own city in the contest. Following that he visited thirty-five other cities of Oklahoma, lectured at mass meetings, organized the central committees, representing Home, School, Church and Community, and started these in the contest.

This campaign proved to be a most exciting and hotly-contested affair. Upon a plan as suggested by the score sheet every church, club and organization of the competing cities worked together upon clean-up of every kind. The increase of Sabbath school attendance alone was about 50 per cent. Ill health, insanitation and immorality were driven out in marked degree, while the civic, moral and religious welfare were quickened.

Dr. McKeever appointed to make the rounds with him, and to spend a day in each place, Dr. J. W. Searson, of Nebraska, publicity director of National Education Association; Dr. C. C. Carstens, of New York, director of Child Welfare League of America, and Mrs. Fred Dick, of Colorado, vice-president National Congress of Mothers. At some places large crowds met Dr. McKeever and the judges at the train with bands, banners and the marching processions of all the larger clubs of men and women and children. Some of the local dailies brought out two-page to eight-page special editions featuring their work on the score sheet for the year. One small city gave the campaign during the year 517 columns of publicity.

At each place the leaders of every department gave oral accounts of the work and handed in typewritten reports on every point. The twelve cities served by the judges are: Enid, Blackwell, Ardmore, Edmond, Lawton, Sapulpa, Shawnee, Claremore, Miami, Durant, Bartlesville, Pryor.

The ten points of the score sheet are: Play, industry, health, schools, scoutcraft, moral safeguards, social direction, religion, service clubs, housing.

Six other States have asked for the Better Cities Campaign.

It is a healthful rivalry when the cities of a State engage in a contest to decide which is the best and safest city for young people.

DEATH IN THE MINISTRY.

Rev. James A. Gehrett, D.D., died at Newberg, Ind., Dec. 20th in the 72nd year of his age. He was born in Huntingdon County, Pa., and was ordained in 1875. He was President of Avalon College for several years, and was pastor at Avalon, Mo.; Bethel, Mo.; Mt. Vernon, Mo.; Nokomis, Ill, and Homer, Ill. His wife and daughter survive him. For some years, he had been in feeble health.

Rev. Mack G. Johnson, D.D., of Colum-bia, S. C., Senior Member of Fairfield Presbytery, and one of the most prominent colored Presbyterian ministers in the Church, died on Dec. 2. He was an exceedingly useful, devoted and successful minister, deeply beloved by all his people. For forty-five years he had been pastor of the Ladson Memorial Church. He is survived by his wife and seven children, all useful and good, several of them being professors and teachers in institutions for higher education.

Rev. J. W. McKay, D.D., of Waynes-burg, Pa., President of the College of Waynesburg, and a member of the Pres-bytery of Washington, died on Dec. 17. His death and burial were at Grove City, Pa.

Rev. David Stuart Dodge, D.D., of New York City died last week in the eighty-sixth year of his age. He was born in New York City Sept. 22, 1836, graduated at Yale College and Union Seminary, and was ordained in 1864 by the Third Pres-bytery of New York. A sketch of his life and activities may be found in the New York Letter in this paper. He was Pres-ident of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions for about twenty years, and had a life of great usefulness.

CINCINNATI AND SUBURBS.

The Church of the Covenant has so many meetings, there being nine on Sabbath and fifteen during the week, that all the notices can not be printed on its bulletin, and people are requested to ask the officers about the meetings that they would like to attend.

The churches of the city generally had impressive Christmas services last Sabbath, and on Thursday and Friday evenings of last week Christmas exercises were held for the children of the Sabbath schools.

Eleven of the young men of the Church of the Covenant have voiced their desire to take the earliest preparatory steps to enter the ministry.

The Delhi Church is to have evangelistic services during the Week of Prayer, in which, on successive evenings, Jan. 3d to 6th, the pastor, Dr. A. G. Yount, is to have the assistance of Dr. Frank Marston, Rev. E. M. Martin, Dr. J. V. Stephens and Rev. W. T. Paterson.

A bronze honor roll, containing the names of those who served in the world war from the Glendale Presbyterian Church, was unveiled in that church last Sabbath morning by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Calvin Dill Wilson.

"No bed-time or wishing fairy stories were ever more interesting than the story-sermons that Rev. William Tait Paterson gives to the youngsters every Sabbath morning. An increasingly large number of Sabbath school little folk are staying to hear them." Thus says one of the elders of the church.

A very delightful and largely attended reception was held by the people of West-minster Church, on Tuesday evening, Dec. 27th, for their new pastor, Rev. E. M. Martin, and his family. The installation occurred on Sabbath afternoon, Dec. 18th.

Without exception, so far as reported, the pastors of the churches were in their own pulpits last Sabbath, and there was joyful Christmas services in all the churches. On Christmas Eve hundreds of young people sang the familiar Christmas carols in the regions adjoining their own churches, all over the city, and at 9:30 p. m., assembled for massed singing at Fountain Square.

ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY.

The First Church Bible School presented a beautiful Christmas pageant, last Friday evening, in the main auditorium. There was also given at this time a cantata which had been rendered at the Missouri State Sabbath-school Convention.

Rev. S. C. Palmer, D.D., emergency pastor of the St. Louis Presbytery, spoke at one of the celebrations last week, in connection with the Tyler Place Church's twenty-fifth anniversary. Dr. Palmer assisted in the organization of the church. The three living ex-pastors of Tyler Place are now all serving in educational work. Rev. Dean R. Leland (1900-'04) is student pastor of the University of Nebraska; Rev. John L. Roemer, D.D. (1905-'14), is president of Lindenwood College, St. Charles, Mo.; and Rev. Richard A. Montgomery, D.D. (1914-'17), is president of Parsons College, Fairfield, Ia. The first pastor, Rev. John B. Brandt, D.D., died in 1910. Dr. Williamson has served since 1917.

Captain Gypsy Pat Smith concluded two weeks of services in the Webster Groves Church and the Ozark Theater, Sabbath evening, Dec. 18, with satisfactory results. The church has been gell filled, and the evangelist was also in request for several noon addresses in the city before clubs of business men. On the last Sabbath afternoon, at a theater service for men, he donned his Scotch captain's uniform and gave his reminiscences of "The Firing Line." Since his visit to St. Louis, two years ago, Captain Smith has married a New York young woman, who was with him on this trip.

Among pageants of the season, "The Light of the World" was given at Kingshighway Church. This is the pageant that was presented last year at the World's Sabbath-school Convention at Tokyo, Japan.

Rev. Charles Sutton, of Girard, Kan., preached on Sabbath, Dec. 18, at the Richmond Heights Church.

In the death of Mrs. Virginia Royall Henderson, Dec. 16, West Church loses one of its older members. She was eighty-one years of age, and the widow of the late Judge James A. Henderson, the family having lived for many years at Bridgeton, near St. Louis. She was a niece of General Sterling Price, of the Confederacy, and the granddaughter of Captain Royall, of the War of 1812. Two sons, one a physician and the other a lawyer, survive her.

Rev. W. M. Cleaveland, D.D., of the foreign missions office, preached at Markham Memorial Church, Sabbath evening, Dec. 18, addressing a meeting under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society, and the church service an hour later.

A memorial service for the late Dr. Joseph Kyle, former president of Xenia Theological Seminary, was held at the Third United Presbyterian Church, Sabbath evening, Dec. 18. Rev. Prof. Jesse Johnson, who attended the funeral at Xenia, O., was among the speakers. Addresses were made on, "Dr. Kyle as a Teacher," by one of the students, Mr. E. E. Grice; "Dr. Kyle as a Preacher," Rev. Willis Crafts; "Dr. Kyle as a Colleague," Rev. Prof. J. H. Webster; "Dr. Kyle as a Man of God," Rev. Dr. J. E. Wishart; and "Dr. Kyle as a Friend," Rev. H. H. McConnell. Prayers were offered by Rev. H. S. Nesbitt, of India, and by Rev. F. G. Kyle, of the seminary.

Rev. H. H. McConnell, of the First United Presbyterian Church, addressed our ministers' meeting Monday of last week, reviewing "Pratt's Psychology."

The Christian Endeavor Congress of the city met at the McCausland Avenue Church on the evening of Dec. 19, holding an oratorical contest.

A special effort was made by the Church Federation, acting through the various churches, to have a record church attendance in St. Louis last Sabbath, Christmas day. Co-operation was had through the ministerial meetings of different denominations.

A special campaign for local church extension interests was recently inaugurated. The goal is $50,000 for church erection purposes, more than half of which has been subscribed to date. A large building campaign is planned for the spring and many of the younger churches are being strengthened for their work.

OHIO.

Rev. Charles F. Irwin of Eaton will preach a series of sermons in January on Sabbath mornings, on "The Master: His Advent, Ministry, Death, Exaltation, and Church." A series of practical questions will be taken up in the evenings, with various speakers, as: "Does the World owe you a Living?" "Are There Any Sinners in the world?" "Am I Responsible to Any Supernatural Being?"

The First Church of Canton, Rev. Alfred Lee Wilson, pastor, invited the foreigners in the "Americanization Classes" of the night school to be their guests when the Sabbath school presented its Christmas pageant, "The Light of the World." About 400 hundred foreigners accepted the invitation, and after the pageant, were served to light refreshments by a committee of hostesses from the missionary societies of the church. It was an interesting event.

A successful revival of two weeks closed Dec. 11, at the Sardinia Church, Portsmouth Presbytery. The pastor-elect, Rev. Wm. S. Martin, was his own evangelist, the church was revived and has taken on new life. Eight members were received on the last day of the campaign. Ten members have been received on examination and one by letter in a little more than two months, since Mr. Martin came.

Dr. W. L. Whallon has completed eleven years in Central Church, Zanesville. Mr. Fred Few, Clerk of Session, writes: "The anniversary was happily celebrated Sabbath evening, Dec. 18, with a sermon by the pastor and with reports of progress and expressions of affection from all the organizations of the church by arrangement of the session, assurance being given from every element that the pastor has the unanimous support of the church with all its auxiliaries. The membership which was 600 eleven years ago has been increased by over 1,100 additions so that the net membership now is more than 1,100, and every department of the church has shown a corresponding advance."

At Franklin Church, Rev. Earl McKinney, pastor, the young people of the Sabbath school presented the play, "Christmas at Golden Gulch," on last Friday evening, and Christmas exercises were enjoyed by all.

Rev. Moses Breeze, D.D., of Columbus, addressed the Brotherhood of Bremen Church, Rev. Gibson Wilson, pastor, Dec. 16, giving a most helpful address on "Building Up the Four Walls of Your Life." This church pledged $735 to Wooster endowment Dec. 11.

At the winter meeting of Columbus Presbytery, in Central Church, Rev. B. F. Brundage, D.D., presented the report on Evangelism, and the committee was instructed to take steps toward securing a Presbyterian evangelist, to begin work in the fall of 1922. Rev. William A. Perrins, D.D., presented a report on Men's Work. Rev. Joseph T. Britan, D.D., reported on New Era. The budget for 1922 was received and arrangements made for its distribution among the churches of presbytery. The Home Mission Committee, Rev. Walter H. Houston, D.D., reported that the new Bethany church building is rapidly being completed. Rev. George N. Luccock, D.D., addressed presbytery on the work at Wooster. Rev. Floyd E. Logee was requested to secure a complete survey of the Scioto church community. Rev. R. W. Illingworth, the new pastor at Reynoldsburg, was made moderator of the session at Black Lick.—Gibson Wilson, S. C.

Rev. R. M. Fox, of Madeira, has taken up his new work as pastor of the Fourth Church of Dayton, O., from which Rev. Julian Price Love came to the professorship in Lane Seminary.

KENTUCKY.

The First Church of Ashland had a very gracious revival service in December, conducted by the pastor, Rev. H. V. Carson. As a result there were about seventy additions. Mr. Carson is just beginning his pastorate and this is very encouraging.

ILLINOIS.

The church at Troy, Ill., of which Rev. Frank L. Eversole, now of Chicago, was pastor for six years, has invited Rev. B. F. Lawrence, of Arapahoe, Col., to fill its pulpit, and he assumes charge Jan. 1. He preached to them on Christmas.

The church of Paw Paw has called Rev. W. J. Bray, of Cooksville, Ill.

The Grandview Church, Rev. S. F. Wenger, pastor, recently held a three weeks' evangelistic service. Rev. Charles F. Record, of Decatur, assisted in the work, and much good was done.

Rev. R. L. Macwherter, pastor of the Irving Church, held two weeks' evangelistic meetings, and on Dec. 18 received five new members, of whom four were on profession. The life of the church has been quickened. The pastor is greatly beloved.

INDIANA.

Mrs. Victoria S. Hill, of Decatur, Ind., the mother of Mrs. Dr. Clarence G. Reynolds of New York City, died last week. The sympathy of a wide circle of friends is with the bereaved family.

Westminster Church, Terra Haute, Rev. A. R. Brown, pastor, recently held ten days special meetings, Rev. J. B. Miller D.D., of Vincennes doing the preaching. There were seven professions. This congregation is planning a new building which is fast becoming an absolute necessity. Terra Haute is in the midst of a real revival. Ora Davis, the newly elected mayor, was elected on an openly announced moral platform and gives positive assurance that law violations and vice of every form shall have no quarter in the city. A school of Religious Education for the training of leaders will be opened Jan. 16. Rev. A. R. Brown represents the Presbyterians on the Board of Control. A three years course is being put on. Through the direction of the superintendent of schools, J. M. Tilley, a Presbyterian elder, the Bible is now being taught in all the city schools.

The Foreign Missions contributions from Fort Wayne Presbytery as found in the Minutes of 1921, should read $17,718 instead of $7,918.

Rev. A. H. Saunders has resigned at Decatur, Ind., to accept a call to Corona Church of Denver, Colo.

The Tabernacle Church of Indianapolis, at the communion on Dec. 18, received 118 members, sixty of the number being on confession. Over half of these were baptized. It was the largest communion held during the pastorate of Dr. J. Ambrose Dunkel.

The First Presbyterian Church, Elkhart, Rev. Campbell L. Mackay, pastor, received twelve members at the December communion. The men's Bible class averaged 637 in its attendance during the Sabbaths of November and December. The collection on Dec. 11 was $255, to be used in purchasing Christmas toys for unprovided children of the community. A beautiful pedestal reading lamp was presented to the teacher of the class, Judge W. B. Hile.

The new Presbyterian church of Paoli, erected at a cost of $25,000, was dedicated on Dec. 4, the exercises being conducted by Dr. W. W. Logan, of Madison, Ind., Dr. F. W. Backemeyer, of Indianapolis, and President Millis, of Hanover College. The building is very complete in all its appointments, with pipe organ, gymnasium, social rooms and all modern appliances. The old church building had been in use for nearly one hundred years.

The Tabernacle Church, Indianapolis, Rev. J. A. Dunkel, D.D., pastor, received 118 members on Dec. 18, of whom sixty were on profession, and over half of these were baptized. The chapel was filled to its capacity for the service.

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Presbytery of Beaver met in Rochester Dec. 13. The presbytery concurred in the overture from the Presbytery of Crawfordsville. A new manual is to be printed. Dr. S. A. Kirkbride has been elected pastor-at-large. The April meeting will be in New Brighton. In the evening the men of the presbytery met at a dinner under the auspices of the Committee on Men's Work, Mr. Chas. N. Ramsay, of Beaver Falls, chairman, to review the condition of men's work throughout the presbytery. The principal speaker was Dr. W. R. Craig, of Butler, the moderator of synod.—J. C. Steele, S. C.

The First Church of McKeesport has as its pastor, since Nov. 20, Rev. David C. Whitmarsh, recently of Barnesville, O. The church tendered a very cordial reception, on Dec. 6, to the pastor-elect and his wife. The installation was on Dec. 15, in charge of Rev. D. D. Kiehl, East McKeesport Church; Rev. B. S. Wallace, D.D., of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Rev. LeRoy Lawther, of Central Church, McKeesport, and Rev. P. S. Kohler, Ph.D., of Glassport, Pa. The first communion, under the new pastor, was held Dec. 18 and over six hundred partook of the sacrament. The pastor baptized three infants and received fifteen members, eleven of these being on profession. Everything promises a happy and spiritual pastorate.

Union evangelistic services of six weeks' duration have just closed at Lewisburg, Pa., where Rev. F. B. Everett is pastor of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. H. N. Faulconer, of Hillsboro, O., was the evangelist, and his preaching had universal appreciation and commendation. There were many conversions and additions, and great good was done.

NEW YORK.

Throop Avenue Church, Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. William Carter, pastor, received twenty-one members on Sabbath, Dec. 11. The pastor received presents of pulpit gown, cap and calling book with 1,842 names and addresses written out in full on its pages.

Rev. Dr. J. O. Buswell held his first communion, as pastor, with the Spencer Memorial Church, Brooklyn, on Dec. 4, and ten members were welcomed. In the evening the Hunter Memorial organ, given by Mrs. William R. Hunter in memory of her husband, was dedicated with a delightful service of praise.

Rev. Elmer J. Stuart, First Church, Corning, has been elected Stated Clerk of Steuben Presbytery, to succeed Rev. C. C. MacLean, who goes to Batavia in the Presbytery of Genesee.

The church at Canisteo has extended a call to Rev. Harry L. Somers of Bergen.

Rev. C. C. MacLean, First Church, Hornell has accepted a call to the First Church, Batavia, and will begin his pastorate there the first of January.

Rev. R. E. MacGowand of Auburn has accepted a call to the church at Andover and will be installed there Jan. 20.

The Presbytery of Brooklyn-Nassau met in the First Church of Huntington, Dec. 14, and ordained Mr. Thomas McIntyre. He is a graduate of Union Seminary and is in charge of Huntington Station, Dix Hills and Melville. Rev. J. Jeffrey Johnstone, Ph.D. was dismissed to the Presbytery of Bristol, England, where he is now pastor.

MISSOURI.

Evangelist Chester Birch conducted a two weeks' campaign in the Empire Prairie Church, Andrew County, Mo., the early part of December. A very profitable meeting was had, and not only our own church has been strengthened, but also other near-by churches. Rev. R. W. Crichton, pastor, writes: "This is the third time I have been with Mr. Birch in special efforts, and find him stronger each time. He avoids sensational methods and secures the confidence and co-operation of the people. We were fortunate to secure his services."

Ninety-seven conversions and Christians greatly encouraged is the report of Rev. F. A. Geisenheiner, of Chicago, who has been laboring with Rev. J. W. Nelson in and near Linn Creek, Mo.

Rev. Chester Birch recently held a successful meeting at Union Star, Mo., going from there to St. Joseph, Mo. He was then to hold meetings at Cherryvale, Kan., and at Hamilton, O.

KANSAS.

Rev. J. F. Thompson, of Wamego, has been conducting special services in Mount Olive Church, where they have been without preaching for three years, and on Dec. 11 he received eleven members on profession, and four others united with other churches.

ARKANSAS.

The interest of the people of Clarksville in the College of the Ozarks was a banquet, on Dec. 19, given to the football team, at which beautiful, heavy, white wool sweaters, bearing the numerals "21" in gold on a purple shield, were given to the coach and fifteen members of the teams. The college closed a successful term on Dec. 21, and will open Jan. 3 with an increased enrollment.

TEXAS.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Claggett, of St. Louis, preached at Forney, Tex., on Dec. 4 and Dec. 11, and spent the following week there, delivering on successive evenings his lectures on "The Martyr Heroes of Scotland," "The Four Wise Men from the West" and other lectures. Mrs. Claggett gave her two great lectures on "The Mosaic Tabernacle" on two evenings of the week. The church greatly enjoyed these distinguished services.

NEBRASKA.

The First Church of Beaver City, Nebraska, Rev. J. E. Clark, pastor, received forty-two new members on Dec. 18. They came as a result of a four weeks union evangelistic campaign, under Evangelist French E. Oliver and party, which closed Dec. 11. The meetings were held in the new Community Auditorium, which seats a thousand, but which proved inadequate to hold the crowds. Dr. Oliver preached the Gospel so faithfully and with such power that the entire community was stirred as it has never been before. There were 228 professed conversions. The churches were all greatly stimulated.

Rev. O. O. St. John was installed pastor at Bushnell, Nov. 29, by Rev. Samuel light, D.D., of Sydney and Dr. Thos. K. Hunter of Kimball. There are four Presbyterian churches in Kimball county and, in turn, Mr. St. John has served them all, doing good work in each of them.

At Scottsbluff, Neb. Dec. 6, occurred the installation of Rev. Mowry S. Axtell, recently called from Manitowac, Wis., Rev. S. H. King of Bridgeport, presided, and preached. Rev. R. W. Taylor, D.D., delivered the charge to the pastor, and Rev. E. H. Sayre of Gering the charge to the people.

There are a few vacant churches in Box Butte Presbytery which offer fine opportunities for service and information concerning these may be had from Rev. W. H. Kearns, D.D., Peters Trust Building, Omaha, Neb., or Rev. Robt. W. Taylor, D.D., Scottsbluff, Neb. To any minister needing life in the open, this superb climate offers superior inducements.—Thos. K. Hunter, S. C.

The First Presbyterian Church of Hastings, is in a flourishing condition. Recently the men of the church organized themselves into four groups for the bringing up of the evening attendance. In addition, these groups each headed by its colonel, are at the disposal of the pastor for any work that may need their attention. In Mission Study, 120 persons are now signed for the different courses on Home and Foreign Missions and Young People's and Children's work. The Young People's societies are well attended. The church is supporting its own foreign missionary. The young women of the church are loyally supporting a Westminster Guild. The boys of the church are organized in regular scout work. The Ladies Aid Society recently raised $1,000 for furnishing of the new dining hall of Hastings College, the synodical college for Nebraska, which is located here.

OKLAHOMA.

The Community Presbyterian Church in the new town of Slick has passed through a wonderful revival. The eighteen members without a church building were worshipping in a schoolhouse. At the call of the pastor, Rev. Pierre Dannis, nineteen men, women and children met for deliberation and prayer and without a dollar in sight, decided to build a tabernacle for a revival service. Evangelist Rev. Wm. H. Thompson of Des Moines Presbytery was called to conduct an evangelistic campaign and as a result of his faithful preaching there were sixty-five decisions for Christ and thirty-five reconsiderations. Plans are already under way to erect a church building and manse. The pastor writes: "Those desiring to make an investment in the Lord's work in a rapidly growing oil town, where our church must secure immediately her present advantage, please communicate with Rev. Pierre Dannis pastor, Slick, Okla."

OREGON.

Special and strenuous efforts are being made to build up the endowment fund of Albany College, our Presbyterian college of Oregon, Dr. A. M. Williams, president.

COLORADO.

The North and Immanuel Presbyterian churches of Denver, of which Rev. P. V. Jenness, D.D., is pastor, have decided to build the Sabbath-school and lecture room unit of the proposed building. It will cost about $30,000. The lots on which the buildings will be erected have been purchased.

Rev. Robert T. Caldwell, D.D., has resigned the pastorate of the Montview Boulevard Church of Denver, but has not yet announced his future work.

Evangelist J. F. Elder, D.D., has just closed a very successful series of evangelistic meetings in the Otis-Bethany field, Rev. J. S. Dapp, pastor. The evangelist, in company with the pastor, visited over two hundred and fifty homes for prayer and conference. About fifty members were received and there were twenty adult baptisms.

The Capitol Heights Church of Denver, Rev. Leon C. Hills, D.D., pastor, has secured the services of a full-time director of religious education and social activities. This follows the demonstration work of Miss Elsa von Ruecau, director of demonstration parish work for the Presbytery of Denver.

The mission study class of the Central Church of Denver, having finished the course of study for the year, has taken up practical mission work in providing for the furnishing of the living and social room in the new manse about to be constructed for the home mission field of South Park, Col. This parish is forty miles square.

Ground was broken on Dec. 18 for the new community house and social center for the Valverde Community Church of Denver, under the auspices of the Church Extension Board of the Presbytery of Denver.

CALIFORNIA.

Seattle Presbytery's committee on Evangelism and New Era Promotion has had two successful meetings and is planning a third for December 26, at which time Dr. R. S. Donaldson of San Francisco will be principal speaker. Rev. A. B. Keeler, superintendent of Home Missions, is chairman of this committee.

Thirty-two new members were received into the church at Modesto on Dec. 4, Rev. Marcus P. McClure, pastor.

Rev. George H. Whiteman, after seventeen years of successful service in the pastorate of Valona Church at Rodes, Calif., has resigned, to accept the pastorate of the Federated churches at Middletown, Calif.

Evangelist Frank A. Miller, formerly of Elgin, Ill., who has given his chalk talks at Winona Lake for many years, has purchased a home at 125 East Avenue 60, Los Angeles, and moved there permanently. He has just completed his second year on the coast, working especially among the children, and nearly four thousand have openly confessed Christ during this time. Under the direction of the Los Angeles School Board, he has been given admission to all the public schools, where he has addressed thousands, in addition to his work among the churches. The Children's Evangelistic Union, which he has organized in Los Angeles, is the outgrowth of the work of Dr. E. Payson Hammond in this country and England, which resulted in the organization of the Children's Special Service Mission of London, which has spread over the British Empire. The Scripture Union, giving selections of Scripture for the children, for every day in the year, has been placed in the hands of the boys and girls who have confessed Christ. Los Angeles Presbytery has given its hearty indorsement to the work. They expect the coming year to prove a blessing to the throngs of children in Southern California, who are overflowing all the school buildings.

WASHINGTON.

Dr. W. J. Johnson, Associate Secretary of the Board of Temperance and Moral Welfare, will make public addresses as follows: Jan. 1, Olympia, Wash.; Jan. 8, Seattle, Wash.; Jan. 10, Everett, Wash.; Jan. 11, Bellingham, Wash.; Jan. 13, Woodland Park Church, Seattle, and First Church, Tacoma.

CHURCH AT LARGE.

Rev. C. M. Alford, D.D., of Jacksonville, Fla., died on Nov. 10. He was a minister of the Southern Presbyterian Church, but had formerly been a pastor of the Presbyterian Church, in the Third Church of Wheeling, W. Va., and the Westminster Church of Philadelphia. His early ministry was in the Reformed Presbyterian Church.

The American Bible Society is making a new departure in issuing a Concordance in addition to the Bible. For a century this society, which exists to publish and circulate the Bible "without note or comment," has printed the Scriptures without a Concordance; but since a Concordance is purely a key to the location of important words and passages, it is not in any way considered to be a note or comment; and, in response to requests covering many years, the society has marked the first part of its second century of service by taking this forward step. The work has taken over two years and has been done at very great cost.

This makes 42 times I have renewed for the Herald and Presbyter. It never grows old.

J. K.

If you please you may send me 10 or 12 sample copies and I will make effort for subscribers. . . . The paper is good, and I think it one of the best services a minister can perform to place it in a home.

Rev. C. M. L.

Some day I'll write a word of appreciation of the Herald. I am proud to have for our Church paper one that has such a high standard for our Church, and the workers; and though liberal, not seeking popularity by a wrong liberality. Yours in the work.

Mrs. C. M. C.

WHY NOT?

I've plenty of paste and sticks, all right, And strings are easy enough to find, But I need some paper to make my kite— Why wouldn't fly paper be just the kind?

RAHMES—WOODRUFF—At the home of the bride's parents, Wyoming, O., Dec. 21, 1921, by Rev. E. P. Whallon, D.D., Mr. Ralph E. Rahmes, of Crescentville, O., and Miss Gladys Mae Woodruff.

HOME CIRCLE

THE LITTLE NEW YEAR.

The calendar-makers have made a mistake

In picturing Time as a man,
A withered old grayhead who carries a scythe,

With a forehead all wrinkles and tan;
For Time is a rotund and motherly dame,
Not the least bit unkind or austere,
And every twelvemonth she gives to the world

A sweet little baby New Year.

See the dainty white baby-clothes hung on the wall

And piled up in heaps on the ground,
Of a texture so fine that if touched they will melt,

And nothing but dewdrops are found.
They are trimmed with the lace that is made by the frost

In the long winter nights, dark and drear,
And bothered with swan'sdown to warmly enfold

The dear little baby New Year.

Hear the silvery music of bells on the air
Ringing merrily over the snow;
With a joyous succession of rapturous notes

They toss the glad news to and fro.
For the north wind is rocking a cradle tonight

By the light of stars burning clear,
And Time, a proud mother, rejoices again
O'er the birth of a baby New Year.

"Miss November" And the Pink Silk Dress

By MARY McCRAE CULTER

(Copyright, 1921, by Monfort & Co.)

CHAPTER VII.

Miss Nadine Ellis was enthusiastic over everything that pertained to life and work in the college of her choice. All through the Preparatory Schools she had looked ahead to the time when she might be numbered among the happy students of that institution and be privileged to share in their duties and also in their social activities. "College" was the "open sesame" with which she expected to swing open wide the doors of joy and opportunity; and now—now at last!—she was doing it.

The death of both parents when she was but a child had left her to the care of her grandparents and to the guardian-companionship of her "Brother-uncle Ned," as she chose to name the young man who had helped to make life both safe and happy for her as she grew into young womanhood. It was he who had accompanied her to Belmont, and who now took a most active interest in the details of the course which Miss Varden, at Dean Burton's direction, mapped out with accurate skill and trained judgment. "That girl knows her business to the smallest detail," Mr. Ellis told himself as he listened to the pertinent questions concerning credentials, athletic training, majors and minors, and educational preferences, and watched while the secretary made out a carefully-balanced course which was nicely calculated to train both the mind and the body of his beloved niece.

"I very much approve of the course you suggest, Miss Varden," he said when Nancy turned to him with a question concerning the matter in hand. "You certainly are in a position to know far better than I can, what is advisable for this very energetic young lady to take. I am also sure that you can make her understand that she must not try to finish the entire four years' course in one—which she is rash enough to want to do," he ended with a smile at the eager girl beside him.

"Uncle Ned thinks I am too much of a whiz," Nadine retorted with a merry nod in his direction. "You see"—confidentially to Nancy—"I can beat him at tennis, and keep stroke with him when we row on Lake Loma, and he thinks that is quite 'the limit.'"

Nancy laughed as she could not possibly have done three weeks previous.

"We will try to prove to him, then, that Belmont's 'limit' lies yet ahead of all that. However, when you become fairly acquainted with the college, its privileges, its interests and its social activities, I predict that you will be hunting excuses for additional post-graduate courses to protract your stay within its fascinating environments.

"You have no need to worry, Mr. Ellis.

"Now the next question concerns a boarding place. It is hard to obtain desirable accommodations at this time of year. Did you send in an application for reservations? I do not remember your name," and Nancy turned to a card catalogue on the desk beside her.

"No," answered Nadine. "I was quite ill with flu this last Fall—that is why I did not enter in September—and the folks were not right sure that I would be strong enough to take up the college work now. Any way, we supposed there would be room in the dormitories."

"There never has been lack of room until this year," Nancy replied. "Belmont always, heretofore, has been abundantly able to care for her large enrollment; but this year the attendance is unprecedented, not only here but at all colleges, and everywhere resources are being taxed to the utmost to supply the needs of the rush of students. I do not know where to send you," she said hesitatingly as she ran through the cards of her catalogue. "Every boarding-house seems to be crowded to the limit."

"Is there no desirable private home that might be opened to a girl in such a case?" Mr. Ellis inquired.

"I do not know," began Nancy, when Dean Burton interrupted:

"You have a large house, Miss Varden, and surely you can not occupy all of it yourself. Perhaps you would be willing to give Miss Ellis shelter until some other arrangement can be made. I think that if you are willing to do so, we can find a permanent home for her within a short time."

Nancy almost gasped with surprise over this startling suggestion. Her house a boarding-house? Why, that was unthinkable. What would Mammy Lou say to such a thing? Mammy Lou's opinion meant much in such a case as this, even though she was only a negro servant who was expected to do as she was bid without question. "Oh, no! Oh, no!" Then she looked up at the glowing face of the girl, and encountered the gravely pleading eyes of the gentleman, and answered, much to her own surprise,

"Why—I don't know—I believe that I might make room for Miss Ellis for a short time. We can hardly send her to the police station to seek shelter, as I have heard some of the university students have been obliged to do. Yes, Miss Ellis, I will give you a place in my house until more desirable quarters can be obtained. Will that be satisfactory?" with a glance at Mr. Ellis.

"I am sure that nothing would please both of us any better, and I accept your kind hospitality for my niece with most sincere thanks," the gentleman answered heartily.

"Good" ejaculated the relieved Dean.

"And now, Miss Varden, if you will accompany these people to your home and make the necessary arrangements for Miss Ellis' accommodation, I will gladly spare you from the office until noon."

So it came about, that Nancy Varden walked out into the sunshine of that bright January day, her mind excited by this sudden turn of events in her quiet life, her spirits cheered by the merry chatter of the girl who walked beside her, the color rising becomingly into her cheeks as she met the gravely approving glances of the gentleman who walked beside them. Gay groups of students who met the party on campus or street stopped their chatter long enough to look after the trio and exclaim:

"Look at that! What has happened to 'Miss November'!"

"Get onto the pink sweater!" cried one young fellow slangily.

"And to all that fluffy hair!" added another.

"She must have found the 'fountain of immortal youth' during the holidays," murmured a classical fourth.

"What is all this about 'Miss November'?" questioned another. "I was too busy looking at the pretty girl to see anybody else. Do you suppose she is a new student?"

His fellows howled with light-hearted mirth.

"Fred's eyes follow a pretty girl as the needle seeks the magnetic pole. Label him 'Victim Number One' for the new girl, whoever she may be."

If Nancy had any doubts as to Mammy Lou's approval of this surprising disturbance of their quiet home routine, they all vanished as soon as she had explained affairs to the worthy negress who opened the Varden front door for them.

"Sho'ly! sho'ly! Yo' am jes' e'zackly right, Honey Chile, jes' lak yo' always am. Dah's oceans ob room, an' yo' can jes' 'pend on it Mammy Lou'd ravver cook foh two dan foh one. Seems so much socialabler," and she beamed upon the newcomer.

THE NEW YEAR.

May the New Year bring you gladness
May it bring you gifts of love:
Which will brighten all the future
And the Father's goodness prove.

A BRAVE LAD.

The teacher in a country school was giving a general lesson in geography. The lesson was about Switzerland, and the teacher told the story of William Tell.

She told how the cruel Gessler compelled William Tell to shoot an apple from the head of his little son with his arrow, and when the father hesitated, the little son said, "Shoot father, I am not afraid." The father shot the apple and the boy was unhurt.

Before the teacher had finished the lesson a terrible storm came up. The wind blew and shook the little school-house, the rain poured down, the lightning flashed and the thunder rolled and made the windows rattle. The children all ran to the teacher for protection, except one little boy, Willie Hawthorne, who sat quietly in his seat.

When the storm was over the teacher asked him why he was not afraid like the rest of them.

"Why," he said, "I knew that the lightning was only like an arrow sent by the hand of my Heavenly Father, why should I be afraid?"

THE OLD YEAR.

Of its words of comfort spoken,
Of its joys, give we no token

To the swiftly dying year?
While we sorrow o'er its sadness,
Shall we pass by all its gladness,

All remembrance of its cheer?
Nay; the sorrows we have know,
And the winds that chill have blown,

Only make it the more dear,

And we, weeping, say adieu,
As we welcome in the new.

AN OLD STORY REPRINTED BY REQUEST.

Prissy Baker was in Oscar Miller's store early New Year's morning, buying matches, when her Uncle, Richard Baker, came in. He did not look at Prissy, nor did she wish him a happy New Year; she would not have dared. Uncle Richard had not been on speaking terms with her or her father, his only brother, for eight years.

He was a big, ruddy, prosperous-looking man—an uncle to be proud of, Prissy thought wistfully, if only he were like other people's uncles, or, indeed, like what he used to be himself. He was the only uncle Prissy had, and when she had been a little girl they had been great friends; but that was before the quarrel, in which Prissy had no share, to be sure, although Uncle Richard seemed to include her in his rancor.

Richard Baker, so he informed Mr. Miller, was on his way to Navare with a load of pork.

"I didn't intend going over until the afternoon," he said, "but Joe Hemming sent word yesterday he wouldn't be buying pork later than twelve today. So I have to tote my hogs over at once. I don't care about doing business on New Year's morning."

"Should think New Year's would be pretty much the same as any other day to you," said Mr. Miller, for Richard was a bachelor, with only old Mrs. Janeway to keep house for him.

"Well, I always like a good dinner on New Year," said Richard Baker. "It's about the only way I can celebrate. Mrs. Janeway wanted to spend the day with her son's family over at Oriental, so I was laying out to cook my own dinner. I got everything ready last night. I won't get back before one o'clock, so I reckon I'll have to put up with a cold bite."

After her Uncle Richard had driven away Prissy walked thoughtfully home. She had planned to spend a nice, lazy holiday with her new book her father had given her at Christmas and a box of candy. She did not even mean to cook a dinner, for her father had had to go to town that morning to meet a friend, and would be gone the whole day. There was nobody else to cook dinner for. Prissy's mother had died when Prissy was a baby. She was her father's housekeeper, and they had jolly times together.

But as she walked home she could not help thinking about Uncle Richard. He would certainly have but cold New Year cheer, enough to chill the whole coming year. She felt sorry for him, picturing him returning from Navare, cold and hungry, to find a fireless house and an uncooked dinner in the pantry.

Suddenly an idea popped into Prissy's head. Dared she? Oh, she never could! But he would never know—there would be plenty of time—she would!

Prissy, hurried home, put her matches away, took a regretful peep at her unopened book, then locked the door and started up the road to Uncle Richard's house half a mile away. She meant to go and cook Uncle Richard's dinner, then slip away before he came home. He would never suspect her of it. Prissy would not have him suspect for the world; she thought he would be more likely to throw a dinner of her cooking out of doors than it.

Eight years before this, when Prissy had been nine years old, Richard and Irving Baker had quarreled over the division of a piece of property. The fault had been mainly on Richard's side, and that very fact made him all the more unrelenting and stubborn, so that he had never spoken to his brother since, and he declared he never would. Prissy and her father felt very badly over it, but Uncle Richard did not seem to feel badly at all. To all appearances he had completely forgotten that there were such a people in the world as his brother Irving and his niece Prissy.

Prissy had no trouble in getting into Uncle Richard's house, for the woodshed door was unfastened. She tripped into the hostile kitchen with rosy cheeks and mischief sparkling in her eyes. This was an adventure—this was fun! She would tell her father all about it when he came home at night, and what a laugh they would have!

There was still a good fire in the stove and in the pantry Prissy found the dinner in its raw state—a fine roast of fresh pork, potatoes, cabbage, turnips and the ingredients of a raisin pudding. She could cook them as well as Mrs. Janeway could, if that was anything to boast of.

In a short time the kitchen was full of bubblings and hissings and appetizing odors. Prissy enjoyed herself hugely, and the raising pudding, which she rather doubtfully mixed up, behaved itself beautifully.

"Uncle Richard said he'd be home at one," said Prissy to herself, as the clock struck twelve, "so I'll set the table now, dish up the dinner, and leave it where it will keep warm until he gets here. Then I'll slip away home. I'd like to see his face when he steps in. I suppose he'll think one of the Jenner girls across the street has cooked his dinner."

Prissy soon had the table set and she was just peppering the turnips when a gruff voice behind her said:

"Well, well, what does this mean?"

Prissy whirled around as if she had been shot, and there stood Uncle Richard in the woodshed door!

Poor Prissy! She could not have looked or felt more guilty if Uncle Richard had caught her robbing his desk. She did not drop the turnips, for a wonder; but she was too confused to set them down, so she stood there holding them, her face crimson, her heart thumping, and a horrible choking in her throat.

"I—I came up to cook your dinner for you, Uncle Ricard," she stammered. "I heard you say—in the store—that Mrs. Janeway had gone home, and that you had nobody to cook your New Year's dinner for you. So I thought I'd come and do it, but I meant to slip away before you came home."

Poor Prissy felt that she would never get to the end of her explanation. Would Uncle Richard be angry? Would he order her from the house?

"It was very kind of you," said Uncle Richard dryly. "It's a wonder your father let you come."

"Father was not home, but I am sure he would not have prevented me if he had been. Father has no hard feelings against you, Uncle Richard."

"Humph!" said Uncle Richard. "Well, stop and help me eat it. It smells good, I must say. Mrs. Janeway always burns pork when she roasts it. Sit down, Prissy, I'm hungry."

They sat down. Prissy felt quite giddy and breathless, and could hardly eat for excitement, but Uncle Richard had evidently brought home a good appetite from Navare, and he did full justice to his New Year's dinner. He talked to Prissy, too, quite kindly and politely, and when the meal was over he said slowly. I'm much obliged to you, Prissy, and I don't mind owing to you that I'm sorry for my share in the quarrel, and have wanted for a long time to be friendly with your father again, but I was too ashamed and proud to make the first advance. You can tell him so for me, if you like. And if he's willing to let bygones be bygones, tell him I'd like him to come up here with you tonight when he gets home and spend the evening with me."

"Oh, he will come, I know!" cried Prissy joyfully. "He has felt so badly about not being friendly with you, Uncle Richard, I'm as glad as can be."

Prissy ran impulsively around the table and kissed Uncle Richard. He looked up at his tall, girlish niece with a smile of pleasure.

"You're a good girl, Prissy, and kind-hearted one, too, or you'd never have come up here to cook a dinner for a crabbed old uncle who deserved to eat cold dinners for his stubbornness. It made me cross today when folks wished me a happy New Year. It seemed like a mockery when I hadn't a soul belonging to me to make it happy. But it has brought me happiness already, and I believe it will be a happy year all the way through."

"Indeed it will!" laughed Prissy. "I'm so happy now I could sing. I believe it was an inspiration—my idea of coming up here to cook your dinner for you."

"You must promise to come and cook my New Year's dinner for me every New Year we live near enough together," said Uncle Richard.

And Prissy promised.—Leader.

HURRY AND WORRY.

The world is wide
In time and tide
And God is quick;
Then do not hurry.

That man is blest,
Who does his best,
And leaves the rest;
Then do not worry.

FREELY YE HAVE RECEIVED.

"For giving is living," the angel said.
 "Go feed to the hungry sweet charity's bread."
 "And must I keep giving again and again?"
 My selfish and querulous answer came.
 "Ah, Nol!" said the angel, piercing me through.
 "Just give till the Master stops giving to you."

STUDY THE BIBLE.

Among the good resolutions for the New Year there should be a definite determination to read and study the Word of God more systematically and regularly than ever before. Daily devotional reading of the Bible and daily communion with God are essential to spiritual growth and development of robust spiritual characters.

NEW YEAR IN JAPAN.

The Japanese celebrate the coming of the new year for seven days, and commence to prepare for it weeks in advance.

Large and small white flags, with red suns in the center, fly everywhere, says the "Mother's Magazine," and tall bamboo poles are topped with great gilt balls, from which float long streamers with "Good wishes" written on them, and "Better luck for the new year."

"Mochi," the New Year's dainty that everyone eats, is made of a sort of dumpling dough in great quantities, beaten and pounded with big mallets, wielded by strong men. They swing these clubs in rhythm to a Japanese song about New Year's Day.

This day of all the year is a great gift-giving time. Everyone who had done the least service through the year is remembered with a gift from his mistress. Around each gift, besides a piece of cloth, must be a piece of white paper, ends uncreased, and the package tied with a white and red string in a peculiar style of knot which means that it calls down blessings of their gods, an equivalent of "God bless you" in our language. Always tucked in one corner will be found a bit of dried fish for luck.

The pine tree enters importantly into the observances of New Year's Day. If pine trees are not growing at the gateposts, the dwarf variety are set out in tubs. These are known as Kado Matsu pine decorations, and the new year is supposed to pass through them. The origin of this interesting custom dates back more than a thousand years.

The pine tree on one side of the gate has finer needles than that on the other, and is meant to represent the woman in her purity and virtue. The prickly variety, representing the man, signifies long life and health.

The New Year's souvenir gift is a bit of salted salmon wrapped in a piece of paper and tied in the national colors, red and white, with a bit of pine run through the knot of the ribbon bow.

Everybody makes calls, and there is a great general feasting time.—Fx.

SELECT READINGS

Only a new purpose can made a new year.

A year of self-surrender will bring larger blessings than fourscore years of selfishness.

In all our plans God should be the preferred creditor.

O Lord, pinch me into the remembrance of my promise, that so I may re-enforce my old vows with new resolutions.

What we need is not a new compass every year, but a new determination to steer straight by the old compass, which is the Word of God in Christ.

For what God is doing in and through us, and is willing to do, we thank him and continue to pray that,

"As on the river's rising tide,
 Flow strength and coolness from the sea,

So, through the ways our hands provide,
 May quickening life flow in from thee."

Every year in its coming enlarges our opportunities for service. This age in its multitudinous needs has a great call for us.

THINKETH NO EVIL.

The wise man puts the best possible construction upon all words and actions. He thinketh no evil. That is, he does not discover evil where none actually exists; he does not construct evil by his own thinking; he does not take exceptions to the unintentional blunders of his friends and enemies; he does not accept every general thrust as being intended for him; he does not carelessly impute bad motives to actions which might, possibly, be neutral.

WRITE "BIGGER" AND "BETTER" OVER EVERYTHING.

"So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." We have never done our best; we can always do a little better. The most wonderful thing about life is growth; in fact, growth is the law of life. There is no standing still. "Holding you own" is falling behind.

To "make next year better than this" we will have to think over our work this year and wherein we have failed. What have been our weak points? Where could we have done better work? What particular work have we been slighting? Is the fault in our work or ourselves?

The writer has kept two mottoes over his desk for many years, "Do It Now" and "Don't Worry." A good motto is a great guide in doing good work well. System and planning is a good way to do effective work.

FAITH.

Each day man launches out into the unknown. Each day he comes face to face with problems which require solution; and such solutions oftentimes do not seem to bring him closer to his ideal, but the reverse. Yet the man who attains does not become baffled by adversity, but, with his eyes on the goal, presses on and on until he has achieved.

We discover behind each and every step on the ladder of fame the small but all-powerful word "Faith." We agree that a task without a purpose is irksome and is an inevitable failure. So likewise a life that has no goal is a failure because there is no basis of faith.

IN THY HAND, LORD.

My times are in thy hand, O, Lord! And surely, that is the best. Were I to choose, they should be in no other hands, neither mine own, nor any others. When he withholds mercies or comforts for a season, it is but till the due season. Therefore it is our wisdom and our peace to resign all things into his hands, to have no will nor desires, but only this, that we may still wait for him. Never was any one who waited for him miserable with disappointment.—Robert Leighton.

BELIEF IN GOD.

Belief is a mighty word. It seems to some of us such an abstraction. It does not appear to have any personality in it. And yet God says that it is belief in Jesus which is the irresistible power that overcomes the world. Many a man is a weakling today in the church, because he has no overwhelming and dominating faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God. No mere belief in Jesus as a man, however perfect, can give the Christian the power to overcome "this present, evil world."

HUMILITY.

"Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Unbelievable! Has not the short sword of the Roman Legion, has not the Senate in Rome, something to do with the inheritance of the earth?

How dare this Man say that great conquerors, Alexander and Caesar, who were many things but not meek, did not own the earth.

There is just that little word, "inherit," which makes all the difference in the world. The Goths might sack Rome; but where is the Gothic Empire of the Mediterranean today? "As proud as a Spaniard," was a proverb of the Middle Ages, but the Spaniard has not inherited the earth. Napoleon could say to his guardsman, standing as the sentinel at his door, "You are tall, but I am great." The descendants of Napoleon have not inherited the earth.

The strength of America come from her forefathers; people persecuted for their faith in the home countries, who in meekness crossed the sea to seek new homes in the wilderness of the New World.

Pride cometh before the fall—sometimes the way is long that leads to the fall, but the fall is inevitable. It is not only the Church that has grown from the strange seed, the blood of martyrs. When men are broken to their knees and heads are bowed, there is much hope for such.

THE CHANGELESS.

"I am the same forever;
 I change not," saith the Lord;
 "Ye that have lived for a moment,
 Will ye corrupt my word—
 That which was in the beginning
 And evermore shall be?
 Will ye excuse your sinning
 By claiming excuse from me?"

"Ye say the old order changeth
 And giveth place to the new.
 Ye may change from good to evil,
 Ye may change from the false to the true;
 But evil and good change never,
 And truth can never decay—
 The same today and forever;
 For I am the Truth, the Way.

Lesson II—January 8.

ELIJAH THE TISHBITE.

(I Kings 17:1-16.)

1. And Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.
2. And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying,
3. Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.
4. And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.
5. So he went and did according unto the word of the Lord: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.
6. And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.
7. And it came to pass after a while, that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.
8. And the word of the Lord came unto him, saying,
9. Arise, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee.
10. So he arose and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of sticks: and he called to her, and said, Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.
11. And as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread in thine hand.
12. And she said, As the Lord thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die.
13. And Elijah said unto her, Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but make me thereof a little cake first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.
14. For thus saith the Lord of Israel, The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth.
15. And she went and did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat many days.
16. And the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Elijah.

Golden Text: "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you" (Matt. 6:33).

Catechism—Q. 55. What is forbidden in the Third Commandment? A. The Third Commandment forbiddeth all profaning or abusing of anything whereby God maketh himself known.

INTRODUCTORY.

In our last lesson we had before us the secession of the ten tribes and the setting up of the Kingdom of Israel under the wicked reign of Jeroboam, who "made Israel to sin." The years go on. Jeroboam is succeeded by Nadab who was "evil in the sight of the Lord." He was killed by Baasha who took the throne and reigned for twenty-four years. His son Elah reigned for two years and Zimri was king for seven days. For a time there was a civil war, Zimri and Omri warring for the throne, the latter winning it and holding it for twelve years. At his death Ahab, his son, becomes king, and a very wicked king, with Jezebel, a heathen princess, as his wife. Of him we read that he did more to provoke the Lord than all the kings of Israel who had ever been before him. During all these years in the history of Israel there was little or nothing that was good. But in our lesson today there comes into view a great man, rugged, brave, loyal to God, and one of the mightiest characters among all the men of the Old Testament.

EXPOSITORY.

1. Very abruptly, and without previous introduction, the prophet Elijah, called the Tishbite, probably from the name of the village in which he lived, in the hill country of Gilead, comes to notice. He comes with a message of divine threatening and warning to the king. Ahab is wicked and he knows it. He misleads the people and defies God. But it does not pass unnoticed. God is just and he has judgment for the wicked. He does not send all the punishment to the wicked in this life that they deserve, but he does not pass them by entirely. He intends to call Ahab to account. Ahab will not heed and repent, but some of the people may be kept back from sin. When God's judgments are abroad in the land, the people learn righteousness. So the sentence is passed and delivered to Ahab, that on account of his great wickedness there should come a great drought upon the land. Elijah tells him that it is not to be by accident, or by mere natural law, but by God's personal ordering, and says: "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall be no dew nor rain, these years, but according to my word." Of course, the condition of repentance must have been laid down. Of course Elijah realized the anger of Ahab and knew that his own life would be endangered.

2-4. God, who had words of judgment for the wicked king, had, at the same time, compassionate regard for his servant, the prophet Elijah, and arranged for his personal safety. He told him to flee for his life to a sheltered spot, in a little valley of the brook Cherith, near where it emptied into the River Jordan. There he would have water to drink, during the drought. The promise was that the ravens would bring him food. God takes care of his servants. He who expects service expects, at the same time, to take care of those who are to do his work. This is a lesson in divine providence and care. God can command even the ravens, and can arrange that they shall bring to their stopping place more food than they need for themselves, so that Elijah shall have a share in what they bring.

5, 6. Elijah did what God told him to do. He was obedient, and he found a dwelling place, with water, by the brook Cherith. The ravens did, also, what the Lord commanded them to do. So this is a lesson in obedience. If there were universal obedience to God's laws and directions in this world, it would be a much better world in which to live.

7. But after a time, on account of the drought, the brook dried up and it became necessary for Elijah to move. It does not say that there was any failure on the part of the ravens, who no doubt brought the food from a long distance, from beyond the region of the prevailing drought.

8, 9. It was an emergency with the prophet, but not with the Lord, who always knows what to do at any time of need. The command now is for Elijah to go to Zarephath, near Zidon, outside Israel, and even outside Judah. He has a place of refuge for him there. God has commanded a widow there to take care of the prophet. She belongs to a heathen community, but she is not outside the jurisdiction of God, and she will do what God commands her to do.

10. Elijah obeys and goes to Zarephath, nothing doubting. As he approached he saw the woman. By some divine knowledge, imparted to him, he knew her, and by way of introduction, asks for a drink of water. This would be easy to give.

11. But, as she showed the willing disposition, and friendliness, he asks her for something that is harder for her to give. He asks her to bring to him a piece of bread. The famine was in that region apparently. At least God was intending to take care of Elijah and his entertainer until the famine should end in Israel and he could go back home safely.

12. The woman was herself in great straits. She had come to her last handful of meal and her last drop of oil, and she had not only herself but her child to provide for. She told him she had nothing to divide. Her heart was in great bitterness of despair. The prospect of death for herself and her son was just before her. But she did not know how much of blessing was coming to her from God by means of the man who asked help of her. God was planning not only to take care of Elijah but also of the widow and her child. Let us learn the lesson here of the great and wide providence of God, and let us never doubt his gracious goodness.

13, 14. The words of the prophet are very assuring to the woman. They begin with "Fear not," and then insist that she shall do just as she has been asked to do. God said he had commanded her. The command comes in a very gentle and reassuring way. He tells her to wait on him first, and then on herself and her son, and tells her that God said that there should be no falling short in her supply of food. It was a very glad message. But all of God's messages are good messages, if we are only trustful and obedient. God will take care of his people. It may not be in the way we are expecting, but he will be sure to do for us exceeding abundantly above all we can ask or think. It is especially so with the supplies of grace for our spiritual life.

15, 16. This is a lesson of obedience all the way through. The woman believed Elijah, and she believed God, and she went and did just as she had been directed. The promise was fulfilled. The meal held out. The oil was abundant. There was always enough. So God sends his supplies, always. There is a harvest each year, and it lasts for the year. There is a rain and it answers for a time. But in the case of the woman there was a miraculous care. God's word was fulfilled. Elijah was taken care of and he was made a blessing to those who took care of him. Those who take care of the house of God today, and the ministers of God today, find that the service they give is made a blessing to themselves.

AT THE GATE.

Lift up your heads, unfold, ye doors;
Be lifted up, ye gates!
Before the New Year's portal now
The King of Glory waits.
The gray dawn breaks; the new day
wakes;
The bells of New Year ring.
Throw wide the gateway of the year
And welcome in the King.
The hosts of Pride and Greed, and Hate,
The lords of Shame and Sin,
These all await the opening gate
And haste to enter in.
Nay! bar the threshold fast against
This rebel spawn of Cain.
The gates wide fling to hail the King
Whose right it is to reign.
No pomp and pageantry of power,
No glint of shield and lance,
But hope and joy and righteousness
Attend his meek advance.
Love is the banner over him,
Peace is his gift to men.
Lift high your heads, ye New Year's gates,
And let your King come in.

AN OLD MINISTER.

BY ALEXANDER LOUIS FRASER.

How many doors he opened, and with tread
Softened by gentleness he made his way
With heavy news or glad, or on the head
Of suffering his tender fingers lay,

How often when shore lights were growing dim
He helped souls o'er that river, bridgeless, dark;
How often dear last words were said to him,
As to the sea was pushed some fragile bark.

How oft baptismal dews upon the brows
Of youth he shed, who later found life's best;
How many hands he joined in sacred vows;
What long-locked secrets, carried in his breast.

Men knew not on what lure he turned his back—
Brave humble figure in the faded black!

LOYALTY.

BY BELLA MARGARET WALTERS.

The office was buzzing with a bit of gossip. Not a very bad bit, perhaps, but it was unfavorable enough that those who had any malicious feeling toward the "boss" took delight in repeating it. Among the last to hear was Alan, the youngest person in the office. Perhaps that was because he was so absorbed in his work. He had come from the high school business class straight to this large establishment, and he was more than eager to make good. For one thing, his teacher had recommended him highly and had been instrumental in getting him this place. He was loyal to that teacher.

The boy who worked at the desk with him told him the story at length. Perhaps Alan didn't look properly appreciative. At any length, Roy hastened to say: "Of course, it may not be true, but it sounds mighty like him. And, anyway, he's a mean old codger, isn't he?"

"No," said Alan, and turned to his work.

"Whew!" said Roy. "Here is the good little boy, who will stand in with the boss, and by and by he will rise to be the head of the firm."

Roy must have thought the matter over some time that afternoon, for he waited to walk home with Alan. "Say, would you mind telling me just why you said that 'No' this afternoon?" he said.

"Why, it's not fair. We're working for him and taking his money, and we owe him and the business something more than our time. We owe him our support, our loyalty. If he really should get so mean that we can't give him that, it's time for us to leave this place, and find another where we can be loyal. I think to talk about the people of the establishment of which you are a part is about as bad as to talk about your own family."

"Oh, no!" protested Roy. "Of course no decent fellow would say mean things about his folks. But I don't think this is the same."

"Well, that's the way it was taught to me," said Alan. "I remember when I was a tiny chap—hadn't started to school yet—my father punished me for something, and I went over to a neighbor that had petted me up a good deal, and told her what a bad man my father was. She thought it was funny, and went laughing to tell mother. But mother didn't find it so funny. I can remember plainly how she talked to me. She told me how mean

The Special Soldiers and Sailors Fund is Exhausted

It was used to help ex-service men to secure training for civilian occupations. About 400 were aided.

Now, with few chances for self-help, some thirty men, some of whom saw two years' service abroad, are appealing for help to secure an education. Funds are all gone. The Board can not help them unless you supply the money.

it was not to stand by your own folks, and that no man would ever do what I had done. She made it so emphatic that I never did such a thing again. When I started to school, I was warned that I ought to be loyal to the teachers and schoolmates, that there was something mean and underhand in saying ugly things about them. And when I went to work two weeks ago, we had a talk about that again. I came here with my mind made up not to carry away anything that I might happen to learn, and not to indulge in merely remarks about my superiors. As I look at it, we've no business to carry the news of anything that happens in working hours, and what the boss does out of working hours is none of our business."

"Well," said Roy, slowly, "I don't know but you are right. Some one told me lately that a boy would never make much of a man until he learned to keep a pretty close guard upon his tongue."—Ex.

INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION.

The work of the Sunday-school is vitally fundamental in the extension of the Kingdom of God in the world. Announcement has been made that the sixteenth International Sunday School Convention is to be held in Convention Hall, Kansas City, Missouri, June 21-27, 1922. The conventions of the International Sunday School Association are held every four years.

HELPED AND A HELPER.

The Russian refugees who were brought to Constantinople when the Bolsheviki took Odessa and the Crimea are to be pitied. Among these refugees were the most intelligent of the Russian people, representatives of her finest cultivation. In Constantinople they found a city almost dead industrially, where there was no opportunity for employment. Men who had been colonels and generals might be found selling papers on Constantinople streets. Among those who came was the finest harp player in Russia. He had not a cent on his arrival, but somehow he had managed to bring his harp with him. It was worth perhaps eight thousand dollars. Fortunately one of the Y. M. C. A. secretaries paid the duty on the harp, on condition that the Russian should repay him by giving concerts at the Association. The Russian has paid up his debt, and by reason of the talent of the Russians, Constantinople has a fine permanent orchestra and enjoys better music than ever before.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL ARMY.

The Sunday-school forces of America are now a mighty army, whose influence on the future of the United States and Canada is beyond computation. Canada reports about 1,000,000 pupils, teachers, and officers in her 10,335 Sunday-schools. The United States reports 16,131,733 pupils, 1,583,491 officers and teachers in her 145,957 Sunday-schools.

SOME NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS.

I will study the language of gentleness and refuse to use words that bite and tones that crush.

I will practice patience at home lest my temper break through unexpectedly and disgrace me.

I will remember that my neighbors have troubles enough without loading mine on them.

I will excuse others' faults and failures as often and fully as I expect others to be lenient with mine.

I will be a friend under trying tests and wear everywhere a good-will face unchilled by aloofness.

I will pray frequently, think good things, believe men, and do a full day's work without fear or favor.—The Farm and Fireside.

YOUNG PEOPLE

PRAYER MEETING, JANUARY 8.

ENDEAVOR TOPIC: Utilizing Opportunities. Genesis 41:14-40; II Corinthians 6:1, 2.

Each moment of life is important. We can not measure or compute how important it is. We know that the future is largely dependent upon the present. If we spend the passing moment wisely and well there may be many good results that are to be brought about as a consequence. If we do what is foolish and wrong, consequences may come that we shall have occasion to regret for life. Let us learn the lesson of the importance of spending each moment as we should.

Some people are called fortunate simply because they are always prepared for what comes. They have been studious and alert and wide-awake; they have tried to do their duty each passing moment; they can be depended on to be intelligent and enterprising and capable; and so, whatever comes on they are able to do the right thing, and success is theirs all through life. If more people had this sort of characteristics more people would be considered fortunate.

A great French General in the late World War, who rose to a place of great responsibility, and who achieved great success, was known as "Petain, the Prepared." He had all his work and duties done up to the present, all the time, and so he was always ready, or prepared, as much as any human being could be, for any emergency. This quality went far to carry him to the high places he came to occupy, in the army and in history.

It was said of a great commander that he lost a great battle, and his army, and his place and prospects, because of a broken buckle. A messenger, carrying an order for troops to come to an important position, in a crisis, was thrown and the order was not delivered. If he had been careful his outfit would have been in good repair. He threw away a great opportunity by carelessness.

Joseph is one of the most prominent and attractive characters in the Bible. He rose to a position of great power and importance in Egypt. He was thoughtful and observant and devoted. He was a deeply religious young man. He was devout before God, filial in his relations to his father, and kind and affectionate in relation to his brothers. He was pure and clean in his life. He was efficient in his work. It is not often spoken of, but the record shows that, when he was taken from prison to appear before Pharaoh, he shaved himself, showing that he was careful as to his personal appearance. He seemed to be careful about everything. He commended himself to all who knew him. He had been considerate in his treatment of the Chief Butler, and at the opportune time the Butler commended him to Pharaoh. His bearing and wisdom so commended him to Pharaoh that he was made second only to Pharaoh in Egypt. Jacob utilized his opportunities. He did not give up in despair, because he was a slave boy, or because he had been cast into prison. He put his trust in God and did his very best in every place and in every emergency.

Opportunities are coming to us all. We may say that such opportunities as came to Joseph never come to us. But there are opportunities for great usefulness coming to us all. Let us be ready for them. Let us utilize them as they come. Let us not be dreaming about opportunities, and gazing idly into the sky, and listless and unprepared, but let us be wide-awake, and full of hope and prayer and love and zeal.

We are just starting into another year. There are openings for usefulness and activity all around us, and there will be, every day of the whole year, if we live to see them. Many persons will be greatly useful. Many will achieve great successes. Let us enter upon the year with the spirit in our hearts that Paul speaks of in the sixth Chapter of Second Corinthians, where he urges that we may be workers together with God.

Especially may many who have not yet accepted salvation from God through Jesus Christ realize that "now is the accepted time," and take advantage of the great opportunity God affords them, and be saved now, and enter upon the greatest and happiest life that is possible for human beings.

A NEW CONSECRATION.

While we joyously welcome the New Year, let us not forget the earnest exhortation expressed by the poet Tennyson, in his prophetic poem, that was never more appropriate than at the present time:

"Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow;
The year is going, let him go,
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

"Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

"Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out, my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

"Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

"Ring in the valiant man and free,
The large heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

METHODS AND MEN.

Rev. Edward M. Bounds, in his book on "Preachers and Prayer," says "Men seek for better methods, God seeks better men. God's method is men." Probably we ought not to be less concerned for better methods, but it is quite evident we should be more deeply concerned for better men. The best of methods will be useless, if not even hurtful, without good men to use them.

THE BUDGET.

The word budget originally meant bag, or bag and its contents, a bag in which many articles could be placed for convenience during a journey. Later the word was used to denote the money bag. Later still it was used to denote the treasury or general fund from which many interests were to be financed. The budget is the total amount it is proposed to raise in a given time for all of the interests co-operating in a campaign or program.

Instead of a separate campaign for each interest, thus multiplying the campaigns and the field forces, the budget system provides for all co-operating interests in a single campaign.

PRESENT DAY MORMON DOCTRINES

The Home Missions Council, 156 Fifth Ave., New York, has recently issued a pamphlet giving a discussion of the leading Mormon doctrines. It is the reply of Brigham H. Roberts to the pamphlet, "Ten Reasons Why Christians Can Not Fellowship the Mormon Church." It contains a rejoinder to Mr. Roberts written by one who knows the Mormon Church.

This discussion makes it apparent that the Mormon Church is still a long way from being a Christian body and proves that the Mormon problem is still vital in Utah.

Westminster College, of Salt Lake City, which is training young people to be leaders who shall attract the Mormons to the true faith in Christ, will be glad to furnish the above pamphlet to anyone who requests it. Just drop a postal to President H. W. Reherd, D.D., Westminster College, Salt Lake City, Utah.

PRAYER MEETING

JANUARY 4.
CONCERT OF PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.

SOUTHERN AND CENTRAL CHINA.
Isaiah 55:6; Matt. 7:7; Phil. 4:6.

China is such an immense country that we are to consider only a part of it in our prayer service this month. Central and Southern regions are the subject of study and prayer at this time, including Kiangan, Hunan, and Hainan. In these five missions there has been much activity and earnest work.

CENTRAL CHINA.

The oldest mission of our Board in China is the Central China Mission. The City of Ningpo was one of the treaty ports opened in 1842. A church was organized in 1854. Among the founders of this station were some of China's most distinguished missionaries. In 1850 missionaries began their labors in Shanghai. In 1859 the first convert was baptized and a native church was organized in 1860. Hangchow was first occupied as a station by Rev. and Mrs. L. Nevius, but as the treaty did not then allow residence in the interior, they were not able to remain permanently. Work was begun at Soochow by Mr. Charles Schmidt, a German, who had been in the employ of the Chinese Government during the Taiping Rebellion. He was converted through hearing Rev. D. D. Green, of our mission in Ningpo. He went to Soochow in 1868, with an unofficial connection with our mission. Yu Yao was occupied in 1909, being an outstation of Ningpo.

SOUTHERN CHINA.

The first Presbyterians to settle in Canton were Revs. Happer, Speer, and French, who removed there from Macao in 1845. In 1846 a boarding school for boys was established. A dispensary was opened in 1851. The First Church was organized with thirteen members in January, 1862. Many churches have been cared for by the mission. Most of these were founded in the face of bitter opposition. Nearly all the Chinese in the United States have come from this region and many have gone back to carry the light to their friends at home. Others have sent large sums of money to build chapels and support teachers and pastors. During the troubled summer of 1900 almost all the chapels in the country districts were destroyed and the Christians persecuted. Now the people have themselves restored the buildings and the ingathering of converts has been unprecedented. Lienchou was long an outstation of Canton. During the outbreak of 1900 the station suffered heavily in the destruction of chapels and the homes of native Christians. On Oct. 28, 1905, the station was attacked by a mob, infuriated by anti-foreign feeling, all property was destroyed, and four missionaries and one little girl murdered. The station was rebuilt, since which time the work has prospered greatly.

HAINAN.

Hainan is a large island off the south-east coast of China, about 250 miles from Hongkong. It is in about the same latitude as Cuba and has about the same climate. In size it equals twice the area of the State of New Jersey. The first Protestant missionary effort was undertaken by Mr. C. C. Jeremiassen, an independent missionary, who came to the island in 1881. In 1893 Hainan was organized into a mission. In 1885, Kiungchow, the capital of the island, was occupied, large numbers of people being attracted by the medical work of the missionaries. In Kachek the door for missionary effort was opened largely by the skillful surgery and medical treatment of the physician at that place.

KIANGAN.

When in 1906 the stations of Nanking and Hwai-Yuen were set off into a separate mission, it was decided to invent a name. The name is made up from the names of two provinces in which the mission works—Kiangsu and Anhwei. Nanking is the principal city. The name means the "Southern Capital" in contradistinction to Peking or the "Northern Capital." A number of times in history it has been the seat of the reigning dynasty. It is the literary, political and geographical center of at least four provinces totaling over 100,000,000 population. Nanking is one of the great centers of Chinese life and history.

HUNAN.

The Province of Hunan is one of strategic importance to the commercial and political interests of the empire. Always hostile to foreigners, it is doubtful if, prior to 1880, a dozen foreigners had passed its frontier. This province bore a prominent part in the Boxer Uprising in 1900, and while few foreigners lost their lives, the destruction of property was great. Our Hunan Mission dates from 1899.

There are two other missions, known as North China and Shantung. They will be considered at another time. In all China we have in these seven missions thirty-three stations, with 896 outstations. We have 495 missionaries there, of whom 122 are ordained ministers; a native force of 2,099 of whom 82 are ordained ministers; 181 organized churches, with 39,203 communicants of whom 4,089 were added during the last year. There are many schools, hospitals, dispensaries, and other forms of missionary work, as a result of which many are being brought to an acceptance of Christ and to a place in his Church.

FOR THE NEW YEAR.

BY H. ISABEL GRAHAM.

My presence shall go with thee
So calm thy troubled fears;
My promise is unchanging
Throughout the changeful years.
Mid scenes of gloom or gladness,
When weary or distressed,
My presence shall go with thee.
And I will give thee rest.

My presence shall go with thee—
Most blest assurance here,
While in this lower valley
Beset by doubt and fear.
No evil shall befall thee,
Close sheltered to my breast;
My presence shall be with thee,
And I will give thee rest.

My presence shall go with thee—
Though in a foreign land,
Afar from home and kindred,
This covenant shall stand.
Nor time nor space can sever;
Love knows not East or West:
My presence shall go with thee,
And I will give thee rest.
—Presbyterian Witness.

BAPTIST MISSIONS.

The American Baptist Foreign Mission Society occupies ten pagan fields, besides doing work in several countries in Europe. It reports 833 missionaries, 7,000 native workers, 1,834 organized churches, 3,429 regular meeting places, 200,000 church members. 32 theological seminaries and training schools, four colleges, 2,737 schools of all grades with 89,752 pupils, 24 hospitals, 62 dispensaries, and a total of 11,000 baptisms last year.

He who suns and worlds upholdeth
Lends us his upholding hand;
He the ages who unfoldeth
Doth our times and ways command.
God is for us;
In his strength and stay we stand.

TOPIC CARDS.

In reply to inquiries in regard to topic cards we reply that our Prayer Meeting, Young People's and Sabbath-school topics are those approved by the Assembly and used by the Board of Publication in its helps. The lists of topics are printed in the Presbyterian Handbook which can be had from the Board in Philadelphia or any of its depositories.

GENERAL NEWS

ARMAMENT CONFERENCE AGAIN BLOCKED.

France and Japan will go into Wednesday's meeting of the Conference Committee on Limitation of Armament unswerving in their opposition to the Hughes proposal for limitation and reduction of its submarine fleets of the five big naval Powers.

This was indicated after the last meeting of the committee.

The Paris plenipotentiaries received word from their Government to hold their ground against any compromise, pending further instructions from home.

Italy's refusal to accept the Hughes submarine ratio likewise will stand, it is believed, until she receives an allotment equal to that of France.

The Japanese delegates are not expecting word from Tokyo for several days. Mr. Hanihara's statement Saturday that Japan would insist upon 54,000 tons as proposed in the original Hughes program, made no reference to a submission of a question to the home Government.

Even more important, from an American standpoint, than the French and Japanese opposition, is the division of the opinion now apparent between the American delegation and the official advisers appointed by President Harding. The Advisory Commission unanimously declares the United States must have a large submarine force for the protection of its interests.

In the face of this situation, the resumption of sittings will find the crisis in the affairs of the conference standing out even more sharply than last week, when the first reaction to the Hughes plan was revealed.

ANOTHER BUSINESS SESSION SOUGHT.

President Harding has directed that a general meeting of the business organization of the Government, to discuss administrative economy, be called during the latter part of January, according to an announcement made by Charles G. Dawes, director of the Budget.

President Harding will preside at the meeting. Director Dawes said it was the Executive's purpose to call these meetings semi-annually. They will be similar to the one of last June, attended by all government administrative officials from the President down to bureau chiefs.

Mr. Harding, Mr. Dawes stated, also would outline the method he desired to be followed in compliance with the provisions of the act of February 27, 1906, that provided for a penalty of the formation of a deficiency by a Government official.

PERU STILL OBJECTS TO OLD TACNA AND ARICA AWARD.

Peru's reply to Chile's last note proposing a plebescite to determine the sovereignty of the provinces of Tacna and Arica, was not favorably received by Peru, which rejects Chile's plan and urges instead that the dispute be again arbitrated by the United States.

Foreign Minister Barros Jarpa, commenting on the reply, said: "The Peruvian note emphasizes the alleged expulsion from Tacna and Arica of Peruvians. We declare that, if this is true, these can return without difficulties. Chile grants Peru all the guarantees she may require to insure the fairness of the plebescite, but we will not permit attempts by Peru to ignore the terms of the treaty, which solemnly binds the faith of both nations, or to mislead the world regarding our purposes by proposing arbitration by the United States on the results of the war liquidated through the treaty of 1883."

SHIP SUBSIDY AGAIN BEING CONSIDERED.

A final conference of officials of leading marine transportation companies with the Shipping's Boards Special Subsidy Committee has been called for January 5, to pass upon a tentative plan formulated by the committee providing for the subsidizing of the American merchant marine to insure its maintenance.

The committee was formed to study the question of subsidies at the suggestion of President Harding, who made special reference to this method of assisting American ship owners, in his message to the last Congress.

The plan, when finally approved, will be submitted to President Harding, who is expected to adapt a number of its provisions in a message to Congress.

In its present form, which, members of the committee stated was not official and is subject to changes in any one of its features, the plan proposes both direct and indirect aid, the former through diversion of ten per cent of import customs as bonuses to American ship operators, and the latter through establishment of a revolving loan fund of $100,000,000.

IRELAND HALTING BETWEEN TWO OPINIONS.

Although the British Parliament has ratified the agreement making Ireland a self-governing Dominion, the Dail Eireann or Irish Parliament, has not yet acted. But last week the Dail by a vote of seventy-seven to forty-four decided on a motion submitted by Michael Collins, to adjourn further debate on the Irish treaty until Tuesday, January 3.

It was not the motion itself, but an amendment to the motion, on which the vote actually was taken. The amendment, introduced and seconded by opponents of the treaty, called for continuous sittings, day and evening, until a division was taken on the treaty's ratification or rejection.

The defeat of the amendment automatically decided the motion. With few exceptions, the vote followed the party lines of those favoring or opposing the treaty.

GOVERNMENT FINANCE CORPORATION DOING A BIG BUSINESS.

The War Finance Corporation is doing business at the rate of several million dollars a day, according to the annual report of that organization, submitted to Congress. Up to Nov. 30, the date of the report, the corporation said, its advances for agricultural and live stock purposes totaled more than $82,000,000, of which the principal items were loans on cotton aggregating $22,000,000, on grain $16,000,000, live stock $13,000,000 and for general agricultural purposes $34,000,000.

Calling attention to the fact that its powers for financing farm credit relief were not broadened until last August the Corporation declared that it had perfected its organization of credit agencies in various sections of the country and by the latter part of October its machinery both in Washington and in the field was completed.

"Within the past few weeks," the report said, "the Corporation has been passing upon from forty to fifty applications daily ranging in the aggregate from one million to several million dollars."

ONLY A LITTLE MORE NEEDED TO MAKE PROHIBITION EFFECTIVE.

Employment of 750 additional prohibition agents would be possible if Congress appropriated $10,000,000 for enforcement of the Volstead law during the fiscal year, beginning next July 1, Prohibition Commissioner Roy A. Haynes told the House committee that will draft the annual supply bill for the Treasury Department.

An aggregate of $7,500,000 has been appropriated for enforcement of prohibition during the current fiscal year.

Urging an increase in the allowance Mr. Haynes said the additional force would be used in localities where the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment had proved to be most difficult. He expressed himself as being pleased at the progress made in curbing the activities of bootleggers, and declared the American public was showing that it favored rigid enforcement of the law.

Concentration into not more than a half dozen warehouses of the stock of liquor now stored in various localities under Federal guard was advocated by Mr. Haynes. This would permit the use of fewer guards and would check illegal withdrawals of liquor stocks, he said.

SOVIET RUSSIA CHANGING BELIEF TO GET FOOD FREE.

Abandonment of Socialism in Russia is predicted by recent changes in the economic policy of the Soviet Government, according to a review of the situation in that country on the basis of statements in the Soviet-controlled press, issued by the U. S. Commerce Department.

A new economic polity, the department said, is being evolved by Bolshevik leaders lightening the restrictions of communism and aiming at the part re-establishment of private trade and industry and at increasing the incentive to production.

Communist management of industry in Russia, it added, had resulted in a great decline of production and a general disorganization of economic life, which has been commented upon emphatically by Soviet newspapers, while the decline is admitted by Bolshevik leaders.

Nikolai Lenine, in a speech in October, recognizes the defeat of communism, according to the department.

PRESIDENT GRANTS CHRISTMAS PARDONS.

Eugene V. Debs, four times Socialist nominee for the Presidency, serving a sentence of ten years at Federal penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., for having violated the espionage act, and twenty-three other persons convicted on various charges or having hindered the Government during the World War, received from President Harding commutations of sentences, to become effective Christmas Day.

At the same time five former American soldiers, serving life sentences pronounced by a military court for the murder of George Lancefield, a British officer serving with the American army on the Rhine, received full pardons, effective Christmas Day.

The action was taken after the Department of Justice had studied the cases of 197 persons serving sentences for violation of war-time laws.

ARMOR PLATE GOING FOR JUNK.

What to do with 15,000 tons of steel armor plate, purchased at a cost of $7,500,000, and now stacked in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, is the problem facing officials of the plant in view of the expected decision of the Navy Department to scrap several war vessels in accordance with the terms of the armament conference treaty.

This huge amount of steel, said to be worth $500 a ton, was ordered for the two 43,000 ton dreadnaughts South Dakota and Indiana, which are almost one third completed.

Each piece of plate weighs from sixty to seventy-five tons and varies in thickness from five to twelve inches. It was purchased from the Bethlehem and Midvale plants and from the Navy Ordnance Armor plant at Charleston, W. Va.

MARSE HENRY DEAD.

Colonel Henry Watterson, for over fifty years editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, died at his winter home at Jacksonville, Fla., on Dec. 21.

For several years he had been practically retired from active work, but his occasional editorials still commanded wide attention.

The chances of Emma Goldman, Alexander Berkman and Alexander Shapiro, American anarchists, being sent back to Russia increased when the German Consulate at Riga informed Miss Goldman that it could grant to her a visa to enter Germany only in the event that it received the assurance that she would go from Germany to another country and would be in Germany only during the period of transit.

The Lettish authorities will permit the three anarchists to remain in Riga only a few days longer, it is stated.

Another steel merger is in the making, it was stated last week. According to statements given out representatives of the Donner Steel Company, of Buffalo; Otis Steel Company, of Cleveland; Trumbull Steel Company, of Warren, Ohio; Bourne and Fuller, of Cleveland, and Cleveland Cliffs Iron Company, of Cleveland, were in conference for the purpose of perfecting the new consolidation.

The first meeting of conferees was held last Saturday in Cleveland.

A Government bonus for veterans of the World War, to be paid out of revenue amounting to approximately $500,000,000, which would be collected by a tax on beer and light wines, will not be opposed by Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, it was declared officially at the Treasury Department last week.

Secretary Mellon has been asked to recommend the passage of legislation providing for the bonus, and at the same time embodying an amendment of the Volstead law, legalizing the sale of beers and wines.

The Secretary still has the suggestion under advisement.

Reports from Bariloche, in the Rio Negro territory, say that the eruption of the volcano Renihue, in Chilean territory in the Andes, is causing enormous damage to grazing lands on the Argentine side of the frontier in the vicinity of Lake Nahuelhuapi.

Masses of floating pumice stone are impeding navigation on the River Limay, which flows out of the lake.

To further complicate our monetary system, the Armament Conference is to have a new series of silver dollars in commemoration of its meeting.

The new dollars, which were designed by Anthony De Francisci, of New York, will have the usual head of Liberty on the obverse side, while the reverse will have a large figure of an eagle perched on a broken sword and clutching an olive branch bearing the word "Peace."

Further depicting the dawn of a new era the background will show rays of a rising sun. The usual "E Pluribus Unum" and "In God We Trust" also will be on the coin.

Satisfaction with conditions in Haiti and the Dominican Republic was expressed by Senator Atlee Pomerene, of Ohio, Democrat, a member of the special Senate Committee that visited the republics to investigate conditions, and which has returned after two weeks passed there.

General Hans Beseler, who captured Antwerp and who later was Govern-General of German occupied territory in Russia during the World War, died last week.

Purchase of American grain for the relief of the people of Russia, for which an appropriation of $20,000,000 is made in a bill on which congressional action was completed last week has been started.

Secretary Herbert C. Hoover, as Chairman of the American Relief Administration, made this announcement immediately following receipt of word of the conclusion of congressional action. He said that grain would be moving to Russia under the governmental appropriation within eight or ten days.

Steamship lines which have brought immigrants in excess of national quotas under the three per cent limitation law, to the United States, face imposition of fines aggregating $1,050,000, if Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty sustains the contention of the Department of Labor, of their liability under existing statutes, Secretary James G. Davis has announced. It was indicated that consideration of the question of whether there is Federal authority to impose fines already has been taken up.

Both from a humane and from an economic standpoint, the deliberate bringing of excess aliens to American ports is a "crime," Mr. Davis declared, adding that the would-be immigrants suffered discomfort and in many cases loss of their life savings as a result.

The giant dirigible, Roma, which was brought from Italy, proved its ability to take the air in any weather when it fought its way for five hours against gale from Langley Field to Washington to be formally placed in commission. The return run was made in a little less than three hours.

HOME AND FARM

FOOD FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

The United States Department in its investigations of proper feed for beast has paused to make public a statement on what it has found out to be good for the man—that is, the beginning of man—the young child.

Food for children between three and six years of age, says Miss Caroline L. Hunt, scientific assistant of the Office of Home Economics, should be chosen with reference to their bodily needs. A little child who is carefully fed in accordance with his bodily needs received every day at least one food from each of the following groups:

1. Milk and dishes made chiefly of milk (most important of the group as regards children's diet); meat, fish, poultry, eggs, and meat substitutes.
2. Bread and other cereal foods.
3. Butter and other wholesome fats.
4. Vegetables and fruits.
5. Simple sweets.

Milk is the natural food of babies and the most important food for young children. A quart of milk a day is a good allowance for a child. The greater part of this is usually given as a drink or served on cereals or in the form of bread and milk. Milk may also be served on fruits that are not very acid (baked apples or pears, berries, and others), in soups, gravies, custard, junket, and other puddings and may be used in place of water in cooking cereals.

Good whole milk is desirable, but if a mother is obliged to choose between clean milk and rich milk, she had better take the clean milk. Best of all, of course, is clean whole milk, but if that can not be obtained it is better to use clean fresh skim milk than dirty or questionable whole milk. A quart of skim milk, even separator skim milk, contains about a third of a cupful of solid food, which is nearly all there was in the whole milk, except the butter fat. Compared with most other foods milk contains much lime but very little iron. Spinach and other green vegetables and egg yolks and milk and of vegetables and milk are mentioned so often as fit food for children.

Cereal foods of some sort are used by children practically all over the world. Bread is the commonest cereal food in this country, though cereal mushes are also very generally used. Well-baked bread and thoroughly cooked breakfast cereals are both good for children and with milk should make up a large part of the diet. Bread may take the place, to a certain extent, of cereal mushes or vice versa, but neither can take the place of milk, meat, eggs, fruits and vegetables.

Fat is an important part of the food of children. Butter, which consists of separated milk fat, and cream, which is rich in milk fat and also in the other nourishing substances of milk, are both wholesome. Salad oils of various kinds may be given to children in small amounts. Bacon or salt pork, cut very thin and carefully cooked, may be given occasionally, but thick pieces with much lean are not desirable.

Vegetables, an important but often a neglected part of a child's diet, should be served at least once a day, as they help to keep the bowels in good condition. They may be used as flavoring for soups and stews, may be added to milk or meat stews or served with meat gravy. Young children may be given the young and tender parts of celery and lettuce, satisfactory way of serving being in the form of sandwiches.

Fruits are also very important in the child's diet. They supply mild acids and are important for their flavor, laxative effect is well recognized in the very general use of orange juice, prunes, and apples. Then, too, the fruits, like vegetables, have mineral elements which the body requires.

Simple sweets—lump sugar, maple sugar, sirups, honey, and plain candy—are a desirable part of the diet. Sweets should not be given between meals or during the first course of a meal. Careful mothers who forbid their children eating candy at odd times sometimes give one or two pieces of wholesome candy as a "treat" with dessert at dinner.

Chicken Puffs.—Place in a bowl one and one-half cup of cooked macaroni, cut in small pieces, one large soda cracker, rolled fine, one-half cup of chicken gravy, one-half cup of milk, yolk of one egg. Beat the yolk of egg in the milk. One teaspoon of finely chopped parsley. One-half green pepper, chopped fine, one and one-half cup of chicken, chopped fine, meat picked from neck and carcass.

Mix and then fold in the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Turn into well-beaten custard cups and set in a pan of warm water and bake for one-half hour. Turn out and serve with gravy prepared as follows:

One and one-half cup of chicken stock, seven tablespoons of flour. Dissolve the flour in cold stock and then bring to a boil and cook for five minutes. Season and then add the yolk of egg. Beat hard and serve.

Butterscotch Pie.—Melt and mix thoroughly together one cup of brown sugar, one tablespoon of butter, two tablespoons of milk. Cook slowly for five minutes, now have ready in a bowl.

Three tablespoons of flour blended with one cup of milk. Two egg yolks. Teaspoon of vanilla.

Combine the mixtures and cook until thick. Turn into a pieplate which has been lined with plain pastry and then bake in a slow oven for twenty-five minutes.

Use the whites of eggs for the meringue. Brown slightly.

It is true enough, that house work is hard on the hands, but there are any number of little ways of protecting the hands while working and treating them as soon as housework is finished. First of all, never touch a stove or furnace or ashes, unless you have gloves on. Cotton gloves used to be ten cents a pair, now they are twice as much at least. They are cheap at any reasonable price, however, since they do protect the hands when doing dirty, dusty work.

In fact most housework can be done with gloves on. Cotton or canvas gloves are for dusting and sweeping and for tending fires, rubber gloves, which are a little more expensive, for scrubbing and dish-washing. There are only two household duties I know of that can not be done with gloves on. One is making beds, which is not hard on the hands, and the other is laundry work, which is. But even in laundry work the amount of time the hands are immersed in water is reduced to a minimum by the aid of washing machines, wringers and other patent devices to eliminate the old-fashioned scrubbing board.

The new soap flakes and powders are so cleansing in their action that practically no rubbing is necessary, while long-handled mops and long-handled scrubbing brushes save both the back and the hands. If the hands suffer from housework, rub them with oil or lard, then wash this off with soap and water.—Ex.

A DAY DREAM.

Talk of nothing for a year but the great and glorious things of America. Talk of the thousand varieties of handy and cheap forms into which meats and fruits and vegetables, all edibles, are being put for men in all places and pursuits, from the day laborer to the North Pole explorer. Talk of the difference between kerosene at fifteen or twenty cents a gallon at that time might blow you into kingdom come. Talk of the by-products once thrown in the dump heaps that are adding hundreds of millions annually to our country's wealth and the comforts of the rich to the homes of the poor. Talk of unnumbered forms of manufacture, those most active agents of civilization, which must be credited up to our great land. Talk of the railways, which from opposition in their inception to persecution throughout their history have pushed on, opening up States, filling the nation with teeming millions, transporting us for a fraction of the cost of conveying ourselves in all directions, hurling our papers and letters off at every wayside village at a mile a minute, and taking to the tide-waters for the markets of the world the products of our fields and the work of our shops and factories. Talk about these great things a year, and see how few things there will be to complain about.—Chancellor Day.

THE GOSSIP BRIDLE.

An old English church, the parish church of Walton-on-Thames, preserves as one of its proudest possessions an authentic relic of mediaeval days, known as a "gossip bridle." The church at Hampstall, in Staffordshire, has another. At first sight, an American boy would take them for primitive baseball masks. They are made of thin bars of iron, and can be locked on the head. But the thing that distinguishes them from any baseball mask, and makes them "bridles," is a flat, leaf-shaped piece of iron so contrived as to enter the mouth, press down the tongue, and hold it motionless. The gossip brides, in the days of their use, antiquarians tell us, were not for women alone. They came in two sizes, one for men and one for women. With the gossip bridle once locked on, the loudest tongue was silent, and the wearer well punished by the scorn of the parish.

The gossip bridle is now only a relic. But that does not mean that the sin it used to punish has passed away, too. The world is just as full of unkind words and slanderous whispers as in mediaeval days. Sins of the tongue are just as raging, and every bit as dangerous, as when St. James wrote that "the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity." The air is afloat every day with unkind sayings, and ugly suggestions, and scandalous reports, and mean insinuations, and thoughtless criticisms, and mockery, and accusations made in the heat of temper and prejudiced repetitions of things that are better left to silence, and all the other dangerous products of unbridled talk. The gossip may insist that he or she means no harm—but the harm is done exactly the same, and the responsibility remains exactly where it belongs, and can not be evaded.—Ex.

STEPS TOWARDS AN APPRECIATION OF THE WORLD'S BEST LITERATURE.

Literature must be made a part of children's lives by being associated with their real interests. Then will it "enter their souls with the music of the game," and the love of books that we, as parents, helped to instil will abide. Concrete plans for the early study of literature should be worked out in the home. They should be such as will appeal to a child's constructive and play activities, and at the same time quicken his imagination and cultivate his love of literature.

Building a Children's Library is important. A child must own, see and handle good books. Let him have a shelf or a low book-case that is all his own. Let the library grow slowly. Prepare carefully for the addition of each new book-treasure so that its arrival shall be preceded by a period of intelligent and joyful anticipation. Relatives and friends usually provide enough surprises. Deal chiefly with the large, simple, permanent masterpieces of literature, because neither you, nor the children have time for much else. Children are the busiest people in the world and next to them come the mothers. As the years go on, a child's book-case may well contain Mother Goose, Aesop, Bible Stories, Fairy and Folk Tales and Nature Myths. Later will come stories of adventure such as the Iliad, Odyssey, and King Arthur. By this time the child will be able to help choose his own heroes of chivalry and romance, of science and discovery. Poetry should have a very honored place from the beginning. A child of five can appreciate Robert Louis Stevenson and Eugene Field.

Kate Greenaway and a host of successors have devoted artistic genius to illustrating children's books, making them a joy to young and old. It is probable that in the case of most children of today, their first interest and joy in books is associated with beautiful colored plates. Baby Sister, just two, adores them and expresses her appreciation with smiles, shouts and clapping of hands. When she points to the mantel shelf and clamors

"Goo! Goo!" (I want my Mother Goose) one feels that her career of literary appreciation is begun through the attraction of the pictures.

I should rather purchase only two or three children's books a year and have them illustrated by some of our best children's artists than to fill a book-shelf with a dozen cheap books, whose crude and gaudy illustrations can not help the child to fine appreciation.—Ex.

HOME OCCUPATION FOR CHILDREN.

BY ALICE WINGATE FRARY.

A woman who overheard her small daughter discussing mothers with her playmates was gratified to hear her triumphantly conclude the argument with the words, "Well, your mother isn't such a play mother as mine!" Being a "play mother" evidently meant one who did not permit household duties to crowd out companionship with her children. The "play mother" had not known before how fully her efforts were appreciated.

Grown people sometimes fail to realize how children delight in their companionship. Every mother should employ care and insight as well as love for her child when she selects his occupations. Given an eager desire to enter the child's world, he will welcome her with countless suggestions. It is often the mother's privilege to modify these ideas, to make a quiet occupation more attractive than a noisy one, to offer materials that are large and easily handled when little fingers shows signs of restlessness, or to direct active games when repression becomes unkind.

If limited to the simplest of materials with children, I should choose paper. Used with pencils, scissors and paste, it has limitless possibilities, and to adults who puzzle their way through toy departments, I should say, "When in doubt, buy paper." Colored paper, cut in various sizes, a large, plain tablet, the child's undisputed possession, the wrapping of a kodak film pack, or any colored advertisements, will all be hailed with joy. One four year old was made happy for days with sample coffee wrappers, bright colored and glazed. The little child should have the opportunity to experiment freely with new material, expressing his own ideas; he should also have suggestions from the mother as he needs them and her appreciation of every achievement. Child direction and adult suggestion should be wisely balanced in order that the child may make the greatest progress.

For more active play, there are games which can be carried on with only a little help while the mother is busy. The simple hiding or guessing games can be played by very young children. One game which trains in observation consists in placing different common household objects such as a pencil, a thimble, a spool, scissors, etc., on a tray, covering them, then allowing the guesser a brief glimpse after which he is to tell what he has seen. It is wiser to begin with two or three objects, increasing the number with each turn.

Physical feats also fascinate children. I recently saw a small girl amuse herself for an hour walking away from a full length mirror with a block balanced on her head. Each time it fell she marked the spot, then began at the mirror, watching the block as she backed away. The same little girl has her happiest play times being tossed and swung by her father, "walking wheelbarrow and various improvised feats being equally entertaining to both.

Why not substitute an extra fifteen minutes of games or stories for the more elaborate "treats" in offering rewards? Is it not an ideal worth striving for to be considered a good "play father or mother?"—Ex.

WIT AND WISDOM

WASTE NOT.

Near Tom Limkins's house was a swamp which was a breeding place for mosquitoes. Some enterprising neighbors, who had learned of the crude-oil treatment, went to Tom and tried to persuade him to exterminate the pests.

"Exterminate 'em?" cried Tom. "Not much. Why, the rissus an' I just paid forty-two dollars for screening the side piizzer that she's be'n pesterin' me about for years. How are we goin' to get any good of it, if we kill off the skeeters?"

PREPARED FOR THE WORST.

Robinson's enemies declare that there is nothing he enjoys so much as finding fault and putting other persons in the wrong. When thus engaged he loses all hold on a sense of humor which is none too keen at the best of times.

On one occasion when he and his wife were making a trip through the Vermont mountains they were to be called at half past five in the morning to take an early train. Robinson wakened first, and, after a glance at his watch, fell back on his pillow with a groan that frightened his wife out of her slumbers.

"Here it is on the tick of half past five," he grumbled, in response to her troubled questions, "and if they dont call us within five minutes we shan't have time enough to get dressed and eat breakfast!"

Theory and Practice.—"So you claim to be a literary man, eh?"

"Yes, sir; I wrote that book, 'A Dozen Ways to Make a Living.'"

"And yet you are begging?"

"Yes; that's one of the ways."

"How do you manage to make both ends meet," we said to the happy little housekeeper.

"Oh, but I don't make both ends meet," she corrected. "I keep house like the United States, and never make ends meet."

"Like the United States?" we queried, puzzled.

"Yes; I get what I want whether I can afford it or not, and then at the end of the year I give my husband a deficiency bill. You know; just like Congress does every session, to make the public think it has lived within its income." Whereat we were lost in admiration.—Leslie's.

Nature's Harmonies.—"Oh, what heavenly music," exclaimed that fair summer boarder. "I didn't know you had jazz bands out here in the country."

"We ain't got no kind of a band," replied the farmer. "That noise you hear is pigs calling for their supper."—New York Sun.

A Problem.—A tiny maid, held up to hear her father's voice on the telephone, burst into tears. "What are you crying for?" asked the mother. "Oh, mamma," sobbed the child, "however can we get dadda out of that little hole?"—Morning Post.

"I'M GOING HOME AT CHRISTMAS TIME"

The quoted sentence usually carries a joyous significance.

However, as it came from the lips of a college girl, there was a choke in her voice and a tear in her eye. And many others—both boys and girls—have used almost the same words with a tone of sadness, almost of heartbreak.

Gifts for scholarship aid which can be used to keep worthy and promising students in college, or additions to the Rotary Loan Fund, are greatly needed and beautifully manifest the Christmas spirit. Send such a gift.
